And (as we ſaid) one thing it is to be borne; another, to be ſo, to Inherit: So ſay we againe now; One thing, to be borne to an Inheritance; Another, to ſuch an Inheritance as this here. For, in Inheritances, there is great oddes; one much better than another, even here with us: But this, better, incomparably better; another manner Inheritance farre, than any with us here. We would know, what manner one, and Saint Peter gives us a little overture, how it is conditioned, that we may know, it is worth a Benedictus. E Theologiâ negativâ he doth it; there is no other way to deſcribe things to come, but by removing from them ſuch defects, as (we complaine) are incident and encomber all, we can Inherit here.

Three they are, 1 Corrumpi, 2 Contaminari, 3 Marceſcere; Corruption, Soile, and Fading; to which nos noſtraque, we and all ours are ſubject. Of which three 1 Corruption referres, to the very being it ſelfe: 2 Defiling, to the ſincere and true being, without all forren mixture: 3 Fading, to the beauty, the prime and flouriſhing eſtate, that each thing hath.

The Subſtance, that corrupts and comes to nothing: ſuppoſe, by death: (for, Corruption is contrary to generation.) The undefiled pure eſtate, that is ſoiled, and embaſed, by ſome bad thing comming to it from without: (as it might be, by infection or ſickneſſe.) And though both theſe hold, the beſt eſtate long will not; but loſe the luſtre by and by, and fade away of it ſelfe. Saint Peter enlarges this, after, in this Chapter: taking his theme from the voice in Eſay XL. All fleſh is graſſe, and all the glorie of it as the flower of the graſſe. The graſſe it ſelfe laſts not long; but, the flower of the graſſe, nothing ſo long, as the graſſe it ſelfe. Let there be no blaſting to corrupt it; no canker to defile it; yet, of it ſelfe, it falls off, and leaves the ſtalke ſtanding. 1 Incorruptible. Verſe 24. Eſay 40. 6.

It is (now) the time of flowers, and from flowers, doth the Apoſtle take his terme, of Marceſcere. It is properly the fading of the Roſe. Straight, of it ſelfe, doth the Roſe marcere, and the Violet livere, wax pale and wan. Their beſt, their flouriſhing eſtate they hold not long; neither the flowers, that are worne, nor they, that weare them neither: they, nor we: but decay we doe, (GOD wot) in a ſhort time.

And, as we, ſo they; as the heires, ſo the Inheritances themſelves. Their corruptible hath not put on incorruption neither. They corrupt daily (we ſee) from one to another. One mans Inheritance corrupts, by another mans purchaſe; To them, that had them, and have them not, they are corrupt. And, not that way alone: diverſe other eſcheat, for want of heires; confiſcate, for ſome offences; rioted and made away, by unthriftineſſe; the heire ſtripped, and turned cleane out: the Inheritance waſted, and quite brought to nothing. At leaſt, if not they, to us; We, to them, corrupt: which comes all to one. 1 Cor. 15. 53.

But ſay, they ſtand and corrupt not: another complaint there is: Their ſoile, 2 Vndefiled.

their μιασμῶ is but too evident. They ſoile us; their ſoile we bruſh off, wipe, rub, waſh off daily: in Summer, duſt; in Winter, dirt; Theſe, and ſundry like inquinamenta mundi: Nothing, in this region, but ſubject to ſoile. Why, the Inheritance it ſelfe, we call it ſoile; and how can it then, but ſoile us? or how can there be (here) any undefiled Inheritance?

3 That fadeth not. Ion. 4.7.

But, make them and keepe them as cleane as you can, take them even at the beſt, yet fade they doe ſenſibly: Iona's worme, once a yeare, bites them by the root, and they wither. Every yeare, at leaſt, they fall into a Maraſmus, loſe flowers and leaves and all; till they be regenerate by a reſurrection, or riſe againe, by a regeneration, as it were: Till this time, the time of the ſpring come about, and bring them forth new againe.

So, whatſoever, we (here) can inherit, is ſubject to one, nay, to all of theſe. It corrupts, takes ſoile, fades. Is it not ſo? finde we not, Saint Peter ſaith true? find we it not by proofe daily? One or other, are we not ſtil complaining of, ſpecially of the fading? For, though they fade not of themſelves; yet, to us, they fade. The fading, to us, even before themſelves fade. We are hungry, and we eat: Eat we not, till that fades, and we as weary of our fulneſſe, as we were of our faſting? We are weary, and we reſt; reſt we not, till that fades, and we as weary of our reſt, as ever we were of our wearineſſe?

Yes indeed, ſo it is: and that ſo it is, is the very faithfulneſſe of the creature to us. Thus by theſe defects, to tire us, and not ſuffer us to ſet up our reſt upon them, upon any Inheritance here; but to chaſe us from themſelves, and force us up to GOD the Creator, with whom, there is an Inheritance laid up, in danger of none of theſe. But uncorrupt, that ſhall hold the Being, and none ever diſherit or diſſeize us of it: 2 Vndefiled, that ſhall hold the aſſay, and never be embaſed, by any bad mixture: 3 And that ſhall never fade or fall into any Maraſmus, but hold out in the prime perfection, it ever had. And if there be, upon Earth, a ſtate like this, it is now at this time: Now, all things generate anew; the Soile of Winter is gone, and of Summer, is not yet come: Now, nothing fades; but all ſprings freſh and greene. At this time, here; but, at all times, there: A perpetuall ſpring; no other Seaſon, there, but that. For, ſuch an Inheritance, Bleſſed be GOD.

In Heaven.

But, where may this be? For, all this while, we know not that. Onely, this we know; where ever it is, it is not here; upon Earth, no ſuch ſeat. All (here) ſavour of the nature of the ſoile; corrumpi, contaminari, marceſcere, are the proper paſſions of Earth, and all earthly things: But, in Heaven, it may well be. There, is no contrary, to corrupt; Nihil inquinatum, nothing to defile, there. And there, all things keepe and continue, to this day, in their firſt eſtate, the originall beautie, they ever had. There then, it is: and we thither to lift up our hearts, whither the very frame of our bodies gives, as if there were ſomewhat remaining for us there.

It is thought, there is ſome further thing meant, by Saint Peter. He writes to the diſperſed Iewes. And that, by, in Cælo, he gives them an Item, this Inheritance is no new Canaan, here on earth; Nor CHRIST, any earthly Meſſias, to ſettle them in a new land of promiſe: No, that was for the Synagogue, ἥτις ἦν τὴν ἦν πᾶς ἐπηγγέλλετο ἦν τό, was it ſelfe mortall (is dead and buried ſince) and ſo had but mortall things, to promiſe to her children, whom ſhe did generate to mortalitie. The Church of CHRIST, the heavenly Ieruſalem, hath other manner of promiſes, to her children regenerate by the immortall ſeed of the Word, and Spirit of GOD: To them She holdeth forth things immortall, and heavenly; yea, heaven, and immortality it ſelfe.

Gal.4.26.

Reſerved in Heaven.

In Heaven, then. There, it is firſt; and there it is kept: the being there, one; the keeping, another. For, that there it is kept, is happie for us. Earth would not keepe it: Here, it would be in hazard, there is great oddes. For my part, I give it for loſt, if, in this State, wee were poſſeſſed of it. It would goe the ſame way, Paradiſe went. Since it would be loſt in Earth, it is kept in Heaven. And, a Benedictus for that, too: as, for the regenerating us to it here on Earth; ſo, ſo, for the keeping, the preſerving of it there, in Heaven.

Kept, and for us kept; Elſe, all were nothing: that, makes up all, that it is not onely preſerved, but reſerved for us, there. As Benedictus, the Alpha; ſo this the Omega of all. For us.

But reſerved (as the nature of the word is, and as the nature is, of things hoped for) yet under the veile: for, Spes quæ videtur non eſt ſpes. But, time ſhall come, when the veile ſhall be taken off, and of that, which is now within it, there ſhall be a revealing (as followeth in the next verſe.) And ſo, all begins and ends, as the Bible doth. As the Bible, with Geneſis; So this Text, with Regeneration: as the Bible ends, in the Apocalypſe; So, this here, with a Revelation. Rom.8.24. Verſe 5.

Onely, it ſtayeth, till the worke of regeneration be accompliſhed. Generation, and it, take end both together; and when generation doth, then ſhall corruption likewiſe, and with it, the ſtate of diſhonour, which is in foulneſſe, and the ſtate of weakneſſe, which is in fading; And in ſtead of them, incorruption comes in place with honour and power. And theſe three, 1 incorruption, 2 honour, and 3 power, make the perfect eſtate of bliſſe: To which, CHRIST this day aroſe; and which ſhall be our eſtate, at the Reſurrection. That, as all began with a reſurrection, ſo it ſhall end with one. Came to us, by CHRISTS riſing now, this firſt Eaſter; and we ſhall come to it, by our owne riſing, at the laſt and great Eaſter, the true Paſſe-over indeed: when, from death and miſery, we ſhall paſſe to life and felicitie.

Now, for this Inheritance, which is Bliſſe it ſelfe, and in the interim for the bleſſed hope ſet before us, Which we have as an Anchor of our ſoule, ſtedfaſt and ſure, Which entereth even within the veile, where CHRIST the fore-runner is alreadie ſeazed of it in our names and for our behoofes: For theſe, come we now, to our Benedictus. Heb.6.18 19, 20.

For, if GOD, according to His manifold mercy, have done all this for us; we alſo, according to our duty (as manifold as His mercy) are to doe (or ſay, at leaſt) ſomewhat againe. It accords well, that, for ſo many beneficia, one Benedictus, at leaſt. It accords well, that His riſing ſhould raiſe in us; and our regenerating beget, in us, ſome praiſe, thankes, bleſſing at leaſt: but, bleſſing fits beſt with Benedictus.

Firſt then, dictus, ſomewhat would be ſaid, by way of recognition, This hath GOD done for us, and more alſo: But, this, this very day. Then, Benè let it be: to ſpeake well of Him, for doing thus well by us; A verball Benedictus, for a reall bleſſing, is as little as may be. For the Inheritance, which is bleſſing; for the hope, which is bleſſed; for the bleſſed cauſe of both, GODS mercy, and the bleſſed meanes of both CHRISTS Reſurrection, this bleſſed day, Bleſſed be GOD.

But, to ſay Benedictus, any way, is not to content us; but, to ſay it, ſolemnely. How is that? Benedictus in our mouth, and the holy Euchariſt in our hands. So, to ſay it. To ſeale up, as He (in the old) His quid retribuam with calicem ſalutaris, the Cup of ſalvation: So we (in the new) our Benedictus, with Calix benedictionis, the Cup of bleſſing, which we bleſſe in His name. So, ſhall we ſay it, in kinde; ſay it, as it would be ſaid. The rather, ſo to doe, becauſe, by that Cup of bleſſing, we ſhall partake the bloud of the New Teſtament; by which, this Inheritance, as it was purchaſed for us, ſo it is paſſed to us. Alwayes making full account, that, from the Cup of bleſſing, wee cannot part, but with a bleſſing. Pſal.116.12,13. 1 Cor.10.16.

And yet, this is not all; We are not to ſtay here, but to aſpire farther; even to ſtrive to be like to GOD: and, be like GOD we ſhall not, unleſſe our dicere be facere as His is; unleſſe ſomewhat be done withall. In very deed, there is no bleſſing, but with levatâ and extenſâ manu, the hand ſtretched out; So, our SAVIOVR Himſelfe bleſſed, Luke 24. The vocall bleſſing alone is not full; nor the Sacramentall alone, without Benedictio manus, that is, the actuall bleſſing. To leave a bleſſing behinde us, to beſtow ſomewhat, for which the Church (the poore, in it, ſo) ſhall bleſſe us, and bleſſe GOD, for us. In which reſpect, the Apoſtle ſo calleth it expreſly (2 Cor. 9.) εὐλογίαν benedictionem, and by that name, commends it to the Corinthians. And, that is the bleſſing of bleſſings, when all is done: That is it, for which Venite benedicti ſhall be ſaid Luke 24.50. 2 Cor.9.5. Matth.25.33.

to us. Even, for parting with that here, which ſhall feed, cover, and ſet free the hungrie, naked, and them in priſon. That, ſhall prove the bleſsing reall, and ſticke by us, when all our verball benedictions ſhall be vaniſhed into aire.

So, for a treble bleſsing from GOD, 1 Our regenerating, 2 Our hope 3 Our Inheritance, we ſhall returne Him the ſame number; even three for three. 1 Benedictus of the voice and inſtrument, 2 Benedictus of the Signe and Sacrament, 3 and Benedictus, of ſome bleſſed deed done, for which, many bleſsings upon earth, and the bleſsing of GOD from heaven ſhall come upon us. So, as we ſay (here) Benedictus Deus, Bleſſed He: He ſhall ſay, Benedicti vos, Bleſſed Yee. The hearing of which words, in the end, ſhall make us bleſſed without end, in heavens bliſſe. To which, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE IN THE CATHEDRALL, Church at Durham, on the XX. of April, Anno Domini MDCXVII, being EASTER-DAY.

MATTH. Chap. XII. VER. XXXIX. VER. XL.

Qui reſpondens ait illis: Generatio, &c.

But He anſwered and ſaid unto them; An evill and adulterous generation ſeeketh a ſigne, but no ſigne ſhall be given unto it, ſave the ſigne of the Prophet Ionas.

For, as Ionas was three dayes and three nights in the Whales belly; ſo ſhall the Sonne of man be, three dayes and three nights, in the heart of the earth.

THE ſigne of the Prophet Ionas, is the ſigne of the Reſurrection: And, this is the Feaſt of the Reſurrection. Being then the ſigne of this Feaſt, at this Feaſt to be ſet up: Signum temporis, in tempore ſigni, The ſigne of the time, at the time of the ſigne, moſt properly, ever.

The Summe.

The words are an anſwer, of CHRIST'S (in this verſe) to a motion of the Phariſees (in the laſt) They would ſee a ſigne. The anſwer is negative, but qualified. There is in it, a Non, and a Niſi: Non dabitur, none ſhall be given them. Indeed none ſhould: They were worthy of none. Yet ſaith He not, Non ſimply. His, Non, is with a Niſi, Non dabitur, niſi; it is with a limitation, with a but: None, but, that. So, that: So, one ſhall be. In the Non, is their deſert: in the Niſi, His goodneſſe: that, though they were worthy none, yet gives them one, though.

Gives them one: and one, that is worth the giving. Put Non and Niſi together, it is a Non niſi. If you ſpeake of a Signe, None to it: a Signe, inſtar omnium.

This Signe, is the Signe of the Prophet Ionas. Of him, diverſe other wayes, and namely this: That as hee was in the Whales belly, ſo was CHRIST in the heart of the earth. There they were either.

And, that which makes up the Signe, Three dayes apeece: Three dayes, and no longer.

And then, as Ionas caſt up by the Whale; ſo CHRIST roſe againe from the dead, and both, the third day. So that, upon the matter, the Subſtance of this Signe, is CHRISTS Reſurrection; and the Circumſtance of it, is this very day.

The Diviſion We will divide it no otherwiſe, than already we have: 1 into the Non, Non dabitur: 2 the Niſi, Non dabitur niſi: 3 and the Non niſi, Non niſi Signum Ionæ.

I. The Non, the deniall firſt: Non dabitur eis. And the reaſon is, in Eis, in the parties. For, they 1 an evill, and 2 adultcrous, and a 3 generation of ſuch (three brands ſet upon them:) Eis, to them, to ſuch as them, no Signe to be given: none at all.

II. Then the Niſi: Non dabitur, Niſi. For, though they were ſuch, as little deſerved any, yet CHRIST, of His goodneſſe, will not caſt them quite off. None He will give, but. So, one He will give: A Signe they ſhall have.

III. And that, no triviall, or pettie Signe (to give it His due) but, in very deed, a Signum non niſi; Non niſi Signum Ionæ, that is, inſigne Signum, a Signe ſignall: marke them all, None like it.

And that is, the ſigne of the Prophet Ionas, comming forth of the Whales jawes, halfe out and halfe in. In which Signe, there are (upon the point) three Sicuts.

1. The Parties firſt; as Ionas, ſo the SONNE of man (that is) Himſelfe.

2. Wherein, the Place. That as the one was in the Whales belly; ſo was the other in the bowels of the earth.

3. Laſt, in time. Either, three dayes and three nights juſt, and but three dayes, and then forth againe. There they were, and there (both) the ſame time: the Places diverſe; the time, the ſame.

So, Ionas, the ſigne of CHRIST: and the Whales belly, the ſigne of CHRISTS grave. Iona's three dayes, the ſigne of CHRISTS three dayes, 1 Good-friday, 2 Yeſterday, 3 and to Day.

Which three dayes, when we ſhall come to calculate them, they will give us three ſtands, and make (as it were) three ſignes in one; each day, his ſeverall ſigne.

The letter of the Text ſaith, there they were; 1 we are carried then, to aske, how came they thither. The Text ſaith, there they were, but three dayes: 2 We are carried then to aske, how came they thence.

Iona's ſtate before he came into the Whale: 2 His ſtate while there: 3 His ſtate getting thence.

Conforme in CHRIST. 1 Good-friday, when, as Ionas went downe the Whales throat, ſo CHRIST laid in His grave: 2 Eaſter-eve, while there He lay: 3 And this (which is now the third day) when, as Ionas caſt up on drie land; So CHRIST riſen from death, to the life immortall.

So have you (as in a ſigne) ſet forth 1 CHRISTS death, by Iona's drowning: 2 CHRISTS buriall, by Iona's abode there: 3 CHRISTS reſurrection, by Iona's emerſion againe.

As Chriſtus ſepultus, by Ionas abſorptus: So Chriſtus reſurgens, by Ionas emergens. 1 Ionas going downe the Whales throat, of CHRIST put into His Sepulcher: 2 Iona's appearing againe, out of the Whales mouth, of CHRISTS ariſing out of His Sepulcher. All, in Ionas, ſhadowed: And, in CHRIST, fulfilled.

In theſe three dayes, theſe three Signes: And, in them, three Keyes of our faith, three Articles of our Creed, 1 Mortuus, 2 Sepultus, 3 and Reſurrexit, 1 CHRISTS death, 2 buriall, and 3 riſing againe.

And

And laſt, what this Signe portends, or ſignifies. That whatſoever it was, to them; to us, it is Signum in bonum, a Signe boding good to-us-ward: A ſigne of favour and good hope, which we have by the reſurrection of our SAVIOVR. Specially, if we have the true Signature of it, which is true repentance. Pſal. 86. 16.

TO aske a Signe, is (of it ſelfe) not evill; Good men, holy Saints have done it. Gedeon asked one of God and had it: He is painted with the fleece (that is, the Signe given him) in his hand. Ezechias asked one and had it too: In the Sun-diall of Ahaz, the ſhadow went ten degrees backe. Yet, this ſuit here is denied by CHRIST: and CHRIST denieth nothing that is good: Specially, not with hard termes as here (we ſee) He doth. The deniall of a Signe. Non dabitur. Iud. 6. 36. 2 King. 20 8.

Somewhat is amiſſe ſure: and it is not in the Signe, or in the ſuit, but in Eis, the men: the ſuit, was not evill, the Suitours were. In three words, three brands ſet upon them: 1 Evill, 2 adulterous, 3 a generation of evill and adulterous. The reaſon, in Eis, the men.

1 Evill. There bee markes of evill minded men, even in their very ſuit. They would ſee a Signe: If they had never ſeene any before, it had not beene evill: but, they came now, from a Signe; they had ſcarce wiped their eyes, ſince they ſaw one (the Signe of the blind and dumbe man, made to ſee and ſpeake) immediately before: It was Spirans adhuc, yet warme, as they ſay. That, they ſaw; and ſaw they not a Signe? A little before, even in this very Chapter, a withered hand was reſtored to another: What, could not they ſee a Signe, in that, neither? Goe backe to the Chapters before, ye ſhall have no leſſe than a dozen ſignes, one after another: and, come they now with a Volumus videre? They would have that ſhewed them, that, when it is ſhewed, they will not ſee: A bad minde this, certainely. They were Evill. Verſe 22. Verſe 10. Verſe 38.

2 Nay worſe yet: For yee ſhall note malice in them (which is the worſt kinde of evill.) For, if yee marke, this Volumus of theirs, is, with a kinde of ſpite, with a kinde of diſgrace, to thoſe he had ſhewed before. They would ſee one: as who ſhould ſay; thoſe were none, they had ſeene: that was none they ſaw, even now. Maliciouſly: If He ſhewed none, then He was no bodie; could not indeed ſhew any; and ſo vilifie Him with the people: If He ſhewed one, then carp and cavill at it, as they did at that even now: Say, it was done by the blacke art. So, cavill out one; and call for another, to deprave that too. Nay maliciouſly evill.

3 Nay (which is worſt of all) Evill and abſurd men (ſaith the Apoſtle.) When is that? Vidi iniquitatem & contra dictionem, ſaith the Pſalmiſt. Ye ſhall ſee, how abſurdly they contradict themſelves. But even now, they charged Him, to worke by the devill: and here now they come, and would have Him ſhew a miracle. The devill cannot ſhew a miracle; a tricke of Sorcerie he can: Such may be done by the claw of the devill: miracles not, but by the finger of God, by power divine. Him then, Him, whom they even now had pronounced, to deale with the devill; Him come they to now, for a miracle. So abſurdly malicious, as they cared not, in their malice, to contradict themſelves. To men, ſo evill, ſo maliciouſly evill, ſo abſurdly evill, Signum non dabitur eis. And abſurdly evill. 2 Tim. 3. 13. Pſal. 55. 9

Well: howſoever they might erre that way, the men otherwiſe to be reſpected, they were ſo vertuous men, ſo ſtreight livers. See ye not their phylacteries, how broad they weare them? Nor that neither (ſaith CHRIST;) but, evill, and adulterous too. As, of evill minds, ſo of evill lives, too. Ye ſhall come now, to the uncaſing of a Phariſee. For, CHRIST lifts up their phylacteries, and ſhewes what lurkes under them.

For, by adulterous, I underſtand not, as if He charged them, they were borne of adulterie, came into the world the wrong way: the ſeed of Canaan, and not of Iuda:

As, having nothing in them of the Patriarchs; So nothing leſſe, than their children, of whom they bare themſelves ſo much. This, is adulterina rather than adultera: children of the adulterers, rather than adulterous themſelves. And, that was no fault of theirs: And CHRIST upbraideth no man, but with his owne faults.

Nor, I underſtand it not, of ſpirituall adulterie; though, that way, they might bee charged, as leaving Him the true Spouſe, the true Meſſias; taking no notice of Him, paſſing by Him, went after ſuch as had adulterate the truth of GOD, by devices of their owne taking up: Not with Idolatrie (perhaps) but (which is an evill, and differs but a letter) with idolatrie: For, to worſhip images, and to worſhip mens owne imaginations, comes all to one. That, they were faulty of: (and I pray GOD we be free.) But this, is myſticall adulterie, and I would make, as no more miracles, ſo no more myſteries, than needs I muſt.

For my part, I ſee no harme, to take the word in the native ſenſe, without figure, for men given to commit that ſin, the ſin of adulterie. For (for all their deepe fringes) all was not well that way: as is plaine, by Iohn VIII. Where, not one of them durſt take up a ſtone, to caſt at the woman taken in adulterie: but ſlunck away one after another, till there was not one left. CHRIST toucheth upon that ſtring: to ſhew, what heavenly men theſe were, that would have a ſigne from heaven, and none elſe ſerve them. Were not theſe meet men, to ſue for a ſigne? Were not a ſigne even caſt away upon them?

Ioh. 8. 1.

A generation of ſuch.

But, this is not all. For, this they were (ſaith our SAVIOVR) not here and there a man of them; but the whole bunch was no better: not the perſons onely, but the Generation ſo: not a good, of them all. And ſuch, you ſhall obſerve, there be: Not onely, ſuch men, but ſuch Generations of men, and faults (ſuppoſe of lying, ſwearing, and ſuch like) rooted in a ſtocke; kept even in traduce (as it were) and derived downe ab avis ataviſque, from the father to the ſonne, by many deſcents, in a kinde of hereditarie propagation.

Pro. 30. 11. 11. 13. 14.

Salomon in his time noted foure of them: 1 One, a generation unkind to their parents, and their children, ſo to them for it: 2 Another, pure in their owne eyes: 3 A third of high eyebrowes: 4 A fourth, cruel hearted, whoſe teeth were as knives to ſhred the poore of the earth, ſhred them ſmall.

Such were theſe: and adulterie made way for ſuch. For, ubi corrupta ſunt ſemina, where a generall corruption that way, no good to be hoped for; the Countrie will not laſt long. By this, Chriſt had ſaid enough; and ſhewed, that non dabitur eis, is a fit anſwer for theſe.

Now, this ye ſhall marke; the worſe the men, the more importune ever, and the harder to ſatisfie. They muſt have ſignes, and ſignes upon ſignes, and nothing will ſerve them: As, no leſſe than foure ſeverall times were they at Chriſt. 1 Here: 2 in the XVI. Chapter: 3 Mar. VIII. 4 Luc. XI. And ſtill to ſee a ſigne. As oft as they came, this had been their right anſwere: to diſpatch them, with a Non dabitur, and no more adoe. Other anſwere let them have none: even abſolutely none at all: For none they ſhould have had.

Chap. 16. 4. Mar. 8. 11. Luc. 11. 29.

II. The deniall qualified Non, Niſi.

Yet ſaith He not, None they ſhall have. He wilbe better to them, than they deſerve: Chriſt wilbe Chriſt: Redit ad ingenium: Forgets now all, He had ſaid erewhile. And, an evill and an adulterous generation though they be, yet a ſigne they ſhall have, for all that. Not ſimply None then, but Non niſi, None ſave; the Negative is qualified: ſo qualified, as upon the matter it proves an Affirmative. The Niſi deſtroyes the Non: Non dabitur niſi (that is) dabitur. So, one they ſhall have: Though not now preſently, at their volumus, at their whiſtling (as it were) but after, when He ſaw the time: And, though (perhaps) not ſuch an one, as they would have phanſied, yet ſuch an one, as they rather need, and would doe them more good: (that is) one for their want, not for their wanton deſires.

And

And that is the reaſon, why none but it: For, no Signe needed, but it. For, without others, well they might be; without this, they or we, could not well be. For, oportuit CHRISTVM pati, It behooved CHRIST, CHRIST ought to dye, and riſe againe. Luc.24.26.

None but that? Why afterward, betweene this and His paſſion, He ſhewed diuerſe others: and how then ſaith He, none but it? Signes (indeed) Hee ſhewed: yet, not any of them ſo pregnant for the purpoſe, they ſought, as was this. They ſought a Signe of the ſeaſon, as by the XVI. Chapter is plaine: that this was the time, the Meſsias was to come. To put them out of doubt of that; to that point, none ſo forcible, as His death and riſing againe, figured in that of Ionas. That, and none but that. All Hee did elſe, the Prophets had done the like: Given Signes from heaven (which they here ſought;) yea, even raiſed the dead. But raiſe himſelfe being dead, get forth of the heart of the earth, when once he was in, that paſſed their skill: Never a Patriarch or Prophet of them all, could doe that: Non Niſi, None but Hee. So as, therein He ſhewed Himſelfe indeed, to be the true and undoubted Meſsias, and never ſo elſe, in any ſigne of them all. Chap.16.4.

For Signes being compounded of Power and Goodneſſe (not Power alone, but Power and Goodneſſe, that is, the benefit or good of them, they be done for:) Never ſo generall, ſo unuerſall, ſo great a Good, as by CHRIST's death, (as it might be Ionas caſting in:) Nor ever ſo great, ſo incomparably great a Power, as by raiſing Himſelfe from death to life (ſet forth in Ionas caſting up againe:) Thoſe twaine, by theſe twaine, more manifeſt, than by any another. The Signe of the greateſt Love and power (Love, to die; power, to riſe) that ever was wrought.

This Niſi then, is a Non niſi in a new ſenſe: A None ſuch, a Signe paramount. All elſe nothing in compariſon of it. I keepe you too long from it. This Signe. Signum non niſi a ſigne paramount.

The Signe is laid in the Prophet Ionas, Sicut Ionas: and we are much bound to God, for laying it in him: they, and we both. And Ionas is a Non niſi: ſuch a Signe, for us, and (beſides) ſo many peculiars of CHRIST, in him, as (in effect) no ſigne but hee.

Firſt, for them, for an evill and adulterous generation, no ſigne ſo meete to be given as hee. For, Ionas, and non niſi Ionas, was Propheta peccator, the treſpaſſer or Sinning Prophet, among them all. Sinners (I know) they were all: they confeſſe as much themſelves: But, for tranſgreſſing the expreſſe Commandement of GOD, in not obeying Gods immediate call; therein, none of the reſt to bee tainted: He onely was Propheta fugitivus, fled touch, was in the tranſgreſſion; ſent to Ninive and went to Ioppe; ſent Eaſt, and went flat Weſt: and was even taken with the manner (as we ſay) and arreſted in the very flight. For an evill and an adulterous generation, this was a good ſigne (ſay I:) and ſo might they, if they knew their owne good. For them, and for us, and (in a word) for all ſinners; for he is Propheta peccator, and ſo Propheta peccatorum. And CHRIST is pleaſed to picke out His fugitive Prophet, His runaway, and make him (a Sinner, and ſuch a Sinner) His Signe. As to come Himſelfe in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh; ſo, to make ſinfull fleſh His ſimilitude, to come into a ſicut with. All, that ſinfull fleſh might have hope in the Signatum, in Him, of whom this was the Signe. This, theirs, and ours. For them, Propheta peccator. Rom.8.3.

The next is ours, and we highly to bleſſe GOD for it: that being to ſet His ſigne in a Prophet, He would doe it in him; chooſe him out, to make him His patterne, who was Propheta Gentium, the Prophet of the Gentiles, ſent to propheſie to Ninive, that were Heathen, as we and our fathers were. And in that, a Non niſi too: For, none but he was ſo; never a Prophet of them all, ſent to the Heathen: the reſt, to the Iewes, all. This ſending of his, to the Gentiles, was, to us of the Gentiles, a gate of hope, that in former ages, and long before CHRIST came in the fleſh, we Gentiles were not forgotten. Even then, ſent GOD a Prophet to Ninive. And what was Ninive? the head Citie of the Aſſyrians, the greateſt Monarchie then in being, and ſo the principall For us Propheta gentium. Hoſ.2.4,5.

cipall place of all Paganiſme. That thus, in Signo, we were not forgotten, a ſigne it was, no more ſhould we be in ſignato; but CHRIST be to us, as Ionas to them, a Luk.2.32. Eſay 49.6. light to lighten the Gentiles; and His ſalvation to the uttermoſt parts of the earth.

Let me adde this yet more, to our comfort. This Ionas, whom He thus ſent on this errand to the Gentiles, what was he? Of all the Prophets, all, whoſe prophecies we have remaining on record in the Bible, the foure great, the twelve leſſe, of them all, all the ſixteene, He was the firſt in time, Senior to them all. Plaine by 2 Kings. 14. that he propheſied long before any of them. For, it is there ſaid, that his prophecie came to paſſe, in the daies of Ieroboam the Second, who lived the ſame time with Vzzia in Iuda. And, in VzZia's time, the eldeſt of all the reſt, did but begin to propheſie. So, his was done, before theirs was begun. Him, that was thus firſt in the ranke of them all, did GOD ſend to us Gentiles; to us firſt, before any, to the Iewes. A Signe; we were not laſt; nay firſt in His care: in that, viſited by Him firſt, as to whom He ſent the firſt of all the ſixteene. And, I may ſay to you, this was to them an Item, as if GOD were now to turne Gentile, as looking that way, having a minde to them then, even in Ionas time; they to come in ſhortly, and the Iewes to bee ſhut out: and that, as they had then prioritie in Signo, ſo ſhould they no leſſe, in Signato, and the fulneſſe

Rom.11.25. of the Gentiles came in before the converſion of the Iewes. This, to us Sinners, to us Gentiles, to us Sinners of the Gentiles, was Salutare Signum, a healthfull Signe, every way.

Theſe three are put, on the by. In the maine point of the Text, and of the time, two more.

1 Ionas Signum Non niſi, As piacularis hoſtia.

Hee, and non niſi, none but he, had the honour to be a piacularis hoſtia (as it were) for, the caſting him into the ſea, ſerved (in a ſort) as a kind of expiatorie ſacrifice, as farre, as to the temporall ſaving of the ſhip, he ſailed in. And therein, as a meet Signe he expreſſed Him, whoſe death was (after) the full and perfect expiation of the ſinnes of the whole world.

2 As Propheta redivivus.

Then againe Ionas, and non niſi, onely he was propheta redivivus; that, his peculiar, above them all. He the onely Prophet, that went downe into the deepe into the Whales bellie, and came forth againe alive. Dead hee was not, but (lege viventium) after the law of the living, one throwen overboard, into the Sea in a tempeſt, to all intents, may be given for dead; and ſo (I dare ſay) all the mariners in the ſhip gave Ionas. That he came out againe alive, it was by ſpeciall grace, not by courſe of nature. For from the Whales bellie he came (for all the world) as if one ſhould have come out of his grave; riſen againe.

Among the Iewes, it goes for currant, the Rabbines take it up one after another, that this Ionas was the Widow of Sarepta's ſonne; the child, whom Elias raiſed from 1 Reg. 17.23. death to life (1 Reg. 17.) If ſo: then well might he be a Signe; A Signe, dead in his cradle once: as good as dead in the Whales bellie, now againe: In both, reſembling Him, whoſe ſigne hee was, if both be true: But, one is moſt certaine; and, to that, wee hold us. And this is (indeed) the maine ſicut, the ſicut of the Text, and of the Day.

3 As three daies & three nights, in the Whales belly. a Gen.39 20. b Dan.6.16.

One more, and I have done; and that is, of the time: preciſe three dayes and three nights. For, in this a Non niſi. For, none but hee, ſo: juſt three, neither more nor leſſe. For, I aske, why not the ſigne of Ioſeph, or of Daniel? a Ioſeph was in the dungeon, among condemned perſons to die: b Daniel, in the lions den, as deadly a place, as the Whales bellie: yet neither of them, made the ſigne of CHRIST. Why? Ioſeph was in his dungeon too long: Daniel, too ſhort, but a night; not long enough, to repreſent CHRIST being in his grave. Onely onas time, juſt. And the time is it here. Elſe might the others have beene his ſigne well enough, for the matter, if that had beene all.

But, the time is ſtill ſtood on, and the daies numbred: that His Diſciples, that all might know, how long, He would be from them, and not a day longer. And this, not without good cauſe. This day, was but the third day: and, this day, they were at ſperabamus, rabamus, did hope; did, but (now) doe not; their hope was fallen into a tertian: that, it was time, He were up againe. This Signe ſet, that they might know for a ſurety, by this day at the furtheſt, they ſhould heare of Him againe. Luke 24.21.

Of which three. To verifie His being there three dayes, it is enough, if He were there but a part of every one of them: for, it is not three whole dayes. As, in common phraſe of ſpeech, we ſay, the Sunne ſhone, or it rained theſe three dayes paſt, though it did not ſo, all day long, but ſome part onely of each. And if it rained at all, in every of them, we ſay true: It is enough. And ſo here, the firſt day of the three, Ionas was in the ſhip, and CHRIST on the Croſſe, till friday, ſomewhat before the Sun-ſet. All the ſecond day, Ionas was in the Whale, CHRIST in His Sepulcher. The third day, Ionas came out of the Whale, and CHRIST out of His grave, as it might be about the Sun-riſing; for, this day, both Sunnes roſe together.

To verifie the three nights: that doe we, reckoning as did the Iewes (and that, by warrant out of the *Gen.*1.) the evening and the morning but for one; ſo, drawing ſtill the precedent night, and counting it with the ſucceeding day. So doe they ſtill the night paſt, with the day following, as (in Geneſis) they are taught; and we doing ſo, it will fall out right. Gen.1.5 8,&c.

To the Sicut then, of theſe three dayes. There is in each of them, ſet downe a ſeverall ſtate of Ionas; and ſo of CHRIST. 1 Their going thither: 2 Their being there: 3 And their comming thence. The Sicut of theſe three dayes.

Thus fell it the firſt day: Ionas was at ſea, in a ſhip: A great tempeſt came; ſo great, as the ſhip was upon caſting away. 1 In their going thither. Good-friday.

Of tempeſts, ſome are of courſe, have their cauſes in nature; and, in them, art and ſtrength will doe good. With Ionas (here) it did not prevaile a whit. Thereby, they knew it to be one out of courſe, of GODS immediate ſending. Ion. 1.4. 5. 7.

GOD ſends not ſuch tempeſts, but He is angry. He is not angrie, but with ſinne. Some great Sinner then, there is in the ſhip, and if the ſhip were well rid of him, all would be calme againe.

To lots they went: Ionas was found to be the partie.

Being found, rather than all ſhould be caſt away, he bid franckly, Tollite me, & projicite, Take me, caſt me into the Sea. Ion.1.12.

Caſt in he was, and the ſtorme ceaſed ſtraight, the ſhip came ſafe home. And the Evening and the morning were the firſt day. 15.

Will yee ſee now, what was acted in Ionas, actually fulfilled, in CHRIST? But (firſt) will yee note, that what is (in the Old Teſtament) written of Ionas, is not onely hiſtoria vera, but Sacramentum magnum, not a bare Story onely, but beſide the ſtory, pregnant alſo with a great Myſtery. Not onely, a deed done, but further, a Signe of a deed to be done, of a farre higher nature; Dico autem in CHRISTO, I ſpeake it as of CHRIST and His Reſurrection: Of that hiſtory, this the Myſtery, this, the Sacramentum magnum. Ephes.5.32.

Will yee note againe; it is on CHRISTS ſide with advantage. Sicut Ionas (ſaith this verſe.) But ecce plus quàm Ionas (ſaith the next;) and both may ſtand; There may be a Sicut, where yet there may be a plus quàm; a likeneſſe in qualitie, where an exceeding in degree, though. Indeed, Sicut makes not a non niſi; Plus quàm doth: and we then, ſo to remember the Sicut in this, as we forget not the plus quàm, in that. No more will we. Verſ.41.

And now, weigh them over well, and whither-ſoever yee looke, ye ſhall finde a plus quàm. Plus, in the ſhip, in the tempeſt, in the cauſe, in the danger, in the caſting in, in the comming out againe: In every one, a plus quàm. All that was, in Ionas, in CHRIST more conſpicuous, and after a more excellent manner; in Signato, than in Signo. That ſo, in this, as in all elſe, CHRIST may have the preeminence. Col 1.18.

To begin then. It is no new thing to reſemble the Church, the Common-wealth, yea, the World, to a Ship. A ſhip there was, not a ſmall Barke of Ioppe, but plus quàm, a Great Arke, or Argoſie, wherein were imbarked all Mankinde, having their courſe through through the Maine Ocean of the world, bound for the Port of Eternall blisse. And, in this great Carricke, among the sonnes of men, the Sonne of Man (as He termes Himselfe) became also a passenger, even as did Ionas, in his small Bottome of Ioppe.

Then rose there a tempest. A tempest it selfe, and the cause of all tempests (the heavie wrath of GOD, ready to seaze upon sinners) which made such a foule Sea, as this great Ship, and all in it were upon the point to be cast away. The plus (here) is plaine: take it, but as it was indeed litterally. For, what a tempest was there at CHRISTS death? It shooke the Temple, rent the veile, cleft the stones, opened the graves, put out the Sunnes light, was seene and felt all the world over; as if heaven and earth would have gone together. But, the miserable storme, then, who shall declare?

Chap. 27. 51, 52.

And, no marvell: there was a great Plus, in the cause. For, if the sinne of one poore passenger (of Ionas) made such a foule Sea: the sinnes of the great Hulke, that bore in it all Mankinde together in one bottome, what manner tempest (thinke you) were they like to raise? In what hazard, the vessell, that loaden with them all? But one fugitive, there: here, all runne-awayes, from GOD, Master, Marriners, Passengers and all.

Now, the greater the Vessell, the more ever the danger. With Ionas, but a handfull like to miscarry: In this, the whole masse of Mankinde like to perish. So, in the perill, Plus too.

The storme will not be stayed neither, till some be cast into the Sea: and, some great Sinner it would be: And here the Sicut seemes, as if it would not hold: here, the onely Non Sicut Ionas. For, Ionas there, was the onely sinner; all besides, in the ship, innocent poore men. Here, CHRIST onely, in the ship, innocent, no sinner; all the ship besides, full fraught with sinners: Mariners, and Passengers, grievous sinners, all. Here it seemes to halt.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither, for all that. For, in some sense, CHRIST was not unlike Ionas; no, not in this point: but, like Ionas, as in all other respects, so, in this too. Not, as considered in Himselfe; for so, He knew no sinne: But, Him that knew no sinne, for us made He sinne: How? by laying on Him the iniquities of us all, even of all the sonnes of men, upon this Sonne of Man. And, so considered, He is not onely Sicut, but Plus quàm Ionas here. More sinne on Him, than on Ionas: for, on Him, the sinnes of the whole Ship, yea, Iona's sinne and all.

2 Cor. 5. 22. Esay 53. 6.

For all that, here is another Plus, though. For what Ionas suffered, it was for his owne sinne, and meritò hæc patimur might he say (and we both) with the Theefe on the Crosse. But CHRIST, what had He done? It was not, for His owne; it was, for other mens sinnes, He suffered, He payed the things he never tooke. So much the more likely was Hee, to satisfie; the just, for the unjust, the LORD, for the Servant: Much more, than if one sinner or servant should doe it for another.

Luke 23. 41. Psal. 69. 4. 1 Pet. 3. 18.

Yet was CHRIST, as was Ionas, content to be throwne in. Tollite me, (said Ionas;) Sinite hos abire (said CHRIST) Let these goe. Take me, my life shall answer for theirs; as it did. As content (said I?) Nay, Plus more. For, with Ionas, there was no other way, to stay the storme, but over-boord with him. But, CHRIST had other wayes; could have stayed it with His word, with His Obmutesce, as He did (the VIII. Chapter, before.) Needed not to have beene cast in: Yet, to fulfill all righteousnesse, condescended to it (though;) and in He was throwne, not of necessitie (as Ionas) but, quia voluit: and Voluit, quia nos salvos voluit, would have us safe, and His Fathers justice safe, both.

Ion. 1. 12. Iohn 18. 8. Chap. 8. 26. Matth. 3. 15. Esay 53. 7.

Now to the effect. Therewith the storme stayed, GODS wrath was appeased, Mankinde saved: Here, the Plus is evident. That of Ionas was but Salus phaseli, no more: This, was Salus mundi, no lesse. A poore Boat, with the whole World, what comparison? And the evening and the morning were Good-friday, CHRISTS first day.

To Ionas, now, secundò: He was drowned by the meanes. Nay, not so: GOD (before, angry) was then pacified: Pacified, not only with the ship, but pacified with

2 Their being there. Easter-eve.

Ionas

Ionas too: provided a Whale, in ſhew, to devoure him; indeed not to devoure, but to preſerve him; downe he went into her belly.

There hee was; but tooke no hurt there. 1. As ſafe, nay more ſafe there, than in the beſt ſhip of Tharſis: no flaw of weather, no foule ſea could trouble him there. 2. As ſafe, and as ſafely carried to land: The ſhip could have done no more. So that upon the matter, he did but change his vehiculum; ſhifted but from one veſſell to another; went on his way ſtill. 3. On hee went, as well, nay better than the ſhip would have carried him; went into the ſhip, the ſhip carried him wrong, out of his way cleane, to Tharſis-ward: Went into the Whale, and the Whale carried him right, landed him on the next ſhore to Ninive; whither (in truth) hee was bound, and where his errand lay. 4. And all the while, at good eaſe, as in a cell or ſtudie; For, there, hee indited a Pſalme, expreſſing in it, his certaine hope of getting forth againe. So as, in effect, where hee ſeemed to be in moſt danger, hee was in greateſt ſafetie. Thus can GOD worke. And the evening and the morning, were Iona's ſecond day. Ion. 2. 2. 6.

The like now, in CHRIST: but ſtill with a plus quàm. Doe but compare the Whales belly, with the heart of the earth, and you ſhall finde, the Whale that ſwallowed CHRIST (that is, the grave) was another manner Whale, farre wider throated than that of Ionas. That Whale caught but one Prophet, but Ionas; This, hath ſwouped up Patriarkes, and Prophets and all; yea, and Ionas himſelfe too. None hath ſcaped the jawes of it.

And, more hard getting out (I am ſure;) witneſſe Ionas. Into the Whales belly he went, and thence he gate out againe. After he gate thence, into the heart of the earth he went, and thence he gate not: there he is ſtill.

The Signe lyes, in this, by the letter of the Text. And, in CHRIST, the Signe greater. For, though to ſee a Whale tumble with a Prophet in the belly, were a ſtrange ſight: yet, more ſtrange, to ſee the SONNE of GOD, lye dead in the earth: and, as ſtrange againe, to ſee the Sonne of man, to riſe from the grave againe, alone. A double ſigne in it.

The heart of the earth (with Iuſtine Martyr, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine) I take for the grave: though (I know) Origen, Nyſſen, Theodoret take it for hell, for the place, where the Spirits are (as, in the body, that is the place of them.) And, thither Hee went in Spirit, and triumphed over the powers and principalities there, in His owne perſon. Col 2. 15. But for His body, it was the day of reſt, the laſt Sabbath that ever was: and then His body did reſt, reſt in hope, hope of what? that neither His ſoule ſhould be left in hell, nor His fleſh ſuffered to ſee corruption. For, CHRIST had His Pſalme too, as well as Ionas. David compoſed it for Him long before (the XVI. Pſalme, the Pſalme of the Reſurrection.) And ſo the evening and the morning were CHRISTS ſecond day, Eaſter-eve. Pſal. 16. 10.

Now to Iona's ultimò. Ionas his hope failed him not; the Whales belly, that ſeemed his tombe, proved his wombe, or ſecond birth-place. There he was: not, as meat in the ſtomach; but, as an Embrio, in the matrice of his mother. Strange! the Whale to be as his mother, to be delivered of him, and bring him forth into the world againe. So, forth hee came, and to Ninive about his buſineſſe. Thither hee went, to bring them out of the Whales belly too. And the evening and the morning were Iona's third day. 3 In their comming thence: Eaſter-day. Ion. 2. 10. 33.

Now the Whale could not hold Ionas, no more could the grave CHRIST, longer than this morning; after breake of day: But, forth came He too. And with a plus quàm, in reſpect of Ionas. It was in ſtrict ſpeech, with Ionas, no reſurrection: For, the truth is, he was never dead: never he, but putativè. But, CHRIST was dead, ſtarke dead indeed, ſlaine out-right upon the croſſe, His heart pierced, His heart-bloud ranne out. And, for dead taken downe, laid in, ſealed up in His grave, a ſtone John 19. 34. Matth. 27. 66.

rolled on Him, a watch ſet over Him. Made ſure (I trow) and yet roſe for all that.

Another. Ionas riſing, the Whale gaped wide, and ſtrained hard, and up came Ionas. It was long of the Whale, not of him or any power of his. But, CHRIST, Act.2.24. by His owne power, broke the barres of death, and looſed the ſorrowes of hell, of which it is impoſsible He ſhould be holden.

A third. Ionas roſe but to the ſame ſtate, he was in before; but mortall Ionas ſtill: When hee ſcaped, hee drew his chaine after him, and by the end of it was plucked backe againe afterward. But, CHRIST left them, and linnen clothes and all, in the Rom.6.9. grave behinde Him; roſe to a better, to ultra non morietur, never to die more, He.

And (in a word) the great plus quàm. Ionas was but ejectus in aridam: But, CHRIST was receptus in gloriam. And, in ſigne of it, the place whereon Ionas was caſt, was drie land, or cliffes, where nothing growes. The place, wherein CHRIST roſe, was a well-watered garden, wherein, the ground was in all her glory, freſh and greene, and full of flowers, at the inſtant of His riſing, this time of the yeare. So, as He went lower, ſo He roſe higher, than ever did Ionas, with a great Ecce plus quàm.

And yet, behold a greater than all theſe. For, Ionas, when he came forth, came forth, and there was all; left the Whale, as he found it. But, Ecce plus quàm Ionas hîc, Verſe 41. plus quàm indeed. CHRIST ſlew the Whale that devoured Him, in the comming forth; was mors mortis: He left not the grave, as He found it, but altered the propertie, nay, changed the very nature of it, by His riſing.

Three changes He made in it, very plainly: 1. Of a pit of perdition, which it was before, He hath made it now an harbour of reſt, Reſt in hope. Hope of a new; not the ſame, it was before, but a better farre, with a great Plus quàm.

Act.2.26. 2. Made it againe (as the whale, to Ionas, was) a convoy, or paſſing boat, to a better Port, than any is in our Tharſis here; even, to the haven of happineſſe, and heavens bliſſe without end. This for the ſoule.

3. And, for the body, made the grave, as a wombe for a ſecond birth, to travell with us anew, and bring us forth to life everlaſting; Made cor terræ ventrem ceti, the heart of the earth, to us, as the belly of the Whale was to Ionas, which did not ſtill retaine him. That, did not him, nor this ſhall not us; ſhall not hold us ſtill, no more than the Whale did him, or the grave did CHRIST. There ſhall be a comming forth out of both. And, when GOD ſhall ſpeake to the earth (as to the Apoc.20.13. Whale He did) the Sea and Grave both ſhall yeeld up their dead, and deliver them up alive againe.

The very terme [of the heart of the earth] was well choſen. There is heart in it. For, if the earth have an heart, there is life in it; for, the heart is the fountaine of life, and the ſeat of the vitall ſpirits, that hold us in it. So, there is (wee ſee:) for, the earth, dead for a time (all the Winter) now, when the waters of heaven fall on it, ſhewes, it hath life, bringing forth herbs and flowers againe. And, even ſo, when the waters above the heavens, and namely the dew of this day diſtilling from CHRISTS Eſay 26.19. riſing, ſhall in like ſort drop upon it, it ſhall be (ſaith Eſay, Chap. XXVI.) as the dew of the herbs, and the earth ſhall give forth her dead. Dead men, as it doth dead plants now freſh and greene againe, in the ſpring of the yeare. And ſo, the evening and the morning were CHRISTS third day, this day, Eaſter-day morning.

Thus many wayes doth this ſicut hold, and hold with a plus quàm. Were it not great pitie now, that CHRIST, who is ſo many wayes plus quàm Ionas, for all this ſhould come to be minus quàm Ionas, in this laſt, the chiefe of all? For, this is the chiefe. Ionas, after he came out of the Whale, brought to paſſe that famous repen- Ion.3.5. tance, the repentance of Ninive. At Iona's preaching, they repented at Ninive; at CHRISTS they did not, in Ieruſalem.

We ſhall mend this, if we be as the Ninivites; repent as they. As they? Abſit ut ſic (ſaith Saint Auguſtine; but addes then) ſed utinam vel ſic. As they? GOD forbid we ſhould be but, as they: As CHRIST was more than Ionas, ſo Chriſtians ſhould ſhould be more than Ninivites. Well, in the meane time, I would we were, but as they; but ſo farre on-ward never plead for a plus, but be content with Sicut, and never ſeeke more: But, that, we muſt: For, leſſe (ſure) we cannot be. CHRIST to be plus quàm Ionas, we to be minus quàm Ninivitæ, it will not fit, it holds no proportion.

The Sicut (ye ſee) and the plus quàm, both. Now, what is the profit of this ſigne of the Prophet? This ſigne being of CHRISTS giving, CHRIST gives no ſigne, but it is ſignum in bonum, a ſigne for good, a good ſigne; and a good ſigne is a ſigne of ſome good. Of what good is this a ſigne? Of hope of comming forth (ſure.) Comming forth, whence? From a Whale. What is meant by the Whale? (the deliverance (moſt-what) is, as the whale is.) And, three whales wee finde here: 1 Iona's Whale: 2 CHRISTS Whale: 3 and a third: And, hope we have, to come forth of all three. What this ſigne portends: Pſal.86.16.

Firſt, Iona's Whale; death it was not, it was but danger; but, danger as neare death as could be; never man, in more danger to ſcape it, than he; if not in death, in Zalmaveth, in the vale of the ſhadow of death, it was. Pſal.23.4.

Of any, that hath beene in extreme perill, we uſe to ſay; he hath beene where Ionas was; By Iona's going downe the Whales throat, by Him againe comming forth of the Whales mouth, we expreſſe, we even point out the greateſt extremity, and the greateſt deliverance that can be. From any ſuch danger, a deliverance is a kinde of reſurrection, as the Apoſtle plainly ſpeakes of Iſaac, when the knife was at his throat, he was received from the dead ὡσεὶ ἐκ νεκρῶν, though yet he did not. This for the feaſt of the Reſurrection. Heb.11.19.

And thus, was Ionas a ſigne, to them of Ninive. As he eſcaped, ſo they: he his Whale, they theirs (deſtruction:) which even gaped for them, as wide as Iona's Whale. And, as to them a ſigne, this; ſo, to us. And, this uſe we have of it; When at any time, wee are hard beſtead, this ſigne then to be ſet up for a token. And there is no danger ſo deadly, but we may hold faſt our hope, if we ſet this ſigne before us, and ſay, What, we are not (yet) in the Whales belly; why, if wee were there, from thence can GOD bring us though, as Ionas He did.

Iona's Whale was but the ſhadow of death: CHRISTS was death. And, even there, in death, to be ſet up. And we, no not in death it ſelfe, to deſpaire, but (with Iob) to ſay, yea, though He kill me, yet will I truſt in Him. My breath, I may; my hope, I will not forgoe: expirare poſſum, deſperare non poſſum. Here now is our ſecond hope: to come forth, to be delivered, from CHRISTS Whale, from death it ſelfe. Iob 13.15.

But, if the Whale be, or betoken the death of the body; it doth much more, the death of the ſoule. So ſhall we finde another Whale yet, a third. And that Whale is the red Dragon, that great ſpirituall Leviathan, Satan. And ſinne, the very jawes of this Whale, that ſwoupeth downe the ſoule firſt, and then the bodie, and in the end both. Ionas had beene deepe downe this Whales throat, before ever he came in the others: The Land-whale had devoured him, before ever the Sea-whale medled with him. In his flight, hee fell into this Land-whales jawes, before ever the Sea-whale ſwallowed him up. And, when he had got out of the gorge of this ghoſtly Leviathan, the other bodily Whale could not long hold him. And, from this third Whale was Ionas ſent, to deliver the Ninivites: which when he had, the other (of their temporall deſtruction) could doe them no hurt. Their repentance rid them of both Whales, bodily and ghoſtly, at once. Apoc.12.3.

Here then is a third Cape of good hope: that, though one had beene downe as deepe in the entrailes of the ſpirituall great Leviathan, as ever was Ionas in the Sea-whales, yet, even there alſo, not to deſpaire. He that brought Ionas from the deepe of the Sea, and David from the deepe of the Earth (his body, ſo:) He alſo delivered his ſoule from the nethermoſt hell, where Ionas and He both were, while they were in the tranſgreſſion. Pſal.71.20. Pſal.86.13.

And now, by this, are we come to the very Signature of this ſigne, even to Repentance, which followeth in the very next words, for they repented, at the preaching of Verſe 41. Ionas. Ionas preached it: and (indeed) none ſo fit to preach on that theme (on repentance) as he, as one that hath beene in the Whales belly; in both the Whales, the ſpirituall Whales too (for Ionas had beene, in both.) One that hath ſtudied his ſermon there, beene in Satans ſieve, well winnowed (cribratus Theologus) he will handle the point beſt, as being, not only a Preacher, but a ſigne of repentance (as, Ionas was both) to the Ninivites.

And, as Ionas, ſo CHRIST: how ſoone He was riſen, He gave order ſtraight, that repentance (as the very vertue, the ſtampe of His Reſurrection) and, by it, remiſsion
Luke 24. 47. of ſinnes ſhould be preached in His name to all nations.

But (indeed) if you marke well, there is a neare alliance betweene the Reſurrection and Repentance; reciprocall, as betweene the Signe, and the Signature. Repentance
Epheſ. 2. 1. is nothing, but the ſoules reſurrection: Men are dead in ſinne (ſaith the Apoſtle:) their ſoules are. From that death, there is a riſing: Elſe were it wrong with us. That riſing, is repenting: And when one hath lien dead in ſinne long, and doth eluctari, wraſtle out of a ſinne, that hath long ſwallowed him up, he hath done as great a maſtery, as if (with Ionas) he had got out of the Whales belly; Nay, as if (with Lazarus) hee had come out of the heart of the earth. Ever holding this, that Mary Magdalen raiſed from ſinne, was no leſſe a miracle, than her brother raiſed from the dead.

And ſure, Repentance is the very vertue of CHRISTS Reſurrection. There, it is firſt ſeene, it firſt ſheweth it ſelfe, hath his firſt operation, in the ſoule, to raiſe it.

This firſt being once wrought on the ſoule, from the ghoſtly Leviathan, the like will not faile, but be accompliſhed on the body, from the other of death; of which Ionas is here, Myſterium magnum, dico autem in CHRISTO. For, in CHRIST, Epheſ. 5. 32. this ſigne is a ſigne, not betokening onely, but exhibiting alſo what it betokeneth, as the Sacraments doe. For, of ſignes, ſome ſhew onely, and worke nothing, ſuch was that of Ionas, in it ſelfe; Sed Ecce plus quàm Ionas hic: For, ſome other there be, that Verſe 42. ſhew and worke both; worke what they ſhew, preſent us, with what they repreſent; what they ſet before us, ſet or graft in us. Such is that of CHRIST. For, beſides that, it ſets before us, of His: it is further a ſeale or pledge, to us, of our owne, that, what we ſee in Him this day, ſhall be accompliſhed in our owne ſelves, at His good time.

And even ſo paſſe we to another Myſterie. For, one Myſterie leads us to another: this in the Text, to the holy Myſteries we are providing to partake, which doe worke like, and doe worke to this: Even to the raiſing of the ſoule with the firſt re-
Apoc. 20. 5. ſurrection. And, as they are a meanes for the raiſing of our ſoule, out of the ſoile of ſinne; (for, they are given us and we take them expreſly for the remiſsion of ſinnes:) ſo are they no leſſe a meanes alſo, for the raiſing our bodies out of the duſt of death. The ſigne of that Body, which was thus in the heart of the earth, to bring us from Iohn 6. 54. thence, at the laſt. Our SAVIOVR ſaith it totidem verbis, Who ſo eateth My Fleſh and drinketh My Bloud, I will raiſe him up at the laſt day: raiſe him, whither Hee hath raiſed Himſelfe. Not to life onely, but to life and glory, and both without end. To which, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at WHITE-HALL, on the V. of April, A. D. MDCXVIII. being EASTER-DAY.

I CORINTH. Chap. XI. Ver. XVI.

Siquis autem videtur contentioſus eſſe, nos talem conſuetudinem non habemus, neque Eccleſiæ DEI.

But if any man ſeeme to be contentious, we have no ſuch cuſtome, neither the Churches of GOD.

THIS is no Eaſter Text, as we are wont to have: Nothing of the Reſurrection in it. It is not for the day.

It is not, directly: But if it ſhould happen, there were any contention about Eaſter, that would bring it within the word [contentious] here. Specially, if that contention about Eaſter were, whether it hath beene ever a cuſtome in the Church of GOD, for that would bring it within the word [cuſtome] heere mentioned: And ſo would it both waies fall within the compaſſe of the Text. The Cuſtome of Eaſter, made a contention, would make it an Eaſter-day Text.

1 How the Text may ſerve for Eaſter.

I ſay not, any ſuch contention there is: I deſire to proceed (as the Apoſtle doth) without the leaſt offence. 1 He ſaith not, there be any contentious, but if any ſeeme to be. That any be contentious, it may not be ſaid. They will deeply proteſt, that from their hearts they abhorre all contentions, and deſire to walke peaceably. Be not, then: but, ſeeme to be.

The Text two wayes qualified.

1 Videtur Seemes.

2 Nay, not ſeeme to be, neither: Saint Paul ſayes not ſo much: ſayes only, ſi quis, if any; puts but a caſe (and there is no harme in that.) No more will wee: goe no further, further, than the Text: If any ſuch ſeeme to bee, this Text tells what to doe: If none be, none ſeeme to be, it is but a caſe put. And ſo, by way of ſuppoſition, be all ſaid, that ſhall be.

2 Si quis If any.

All upon ſuppoſition.

The Diviſion

Vpon the view, three points give forth themſelves: 1 Here are contentions; and 2 here are cuſtomes; and 3 cuſtomes, oppoſed to the contentious. Theſe the three heads.

I. Contentions.

To breake them yet further, into certaine Theſes or propoſitions; to proceed by. 1 Firſt, it ſhould ſeeme, there were contentions in the Apoſtles times. 2 Contentions, about what? About matter of circumſtance. So was this here, Whether men were to pray uncovered, and women veiled, or no? 3 And that there were, which did not onely contend, but (which is more) were even contentious about theſe. 4 For thoſe that were ſo, heere is a Si quis ſet up, If any ſeeme to be ſuch, what to doe to them.

II.

Not to paſſe them in ſilence, and ſay nothing to them: But this to ſay: Wee have no ſuch cuſtome, nor the Churches of GOD. And ſo oppoſe the Churches cuſtome to contention.

The Church, cuſtomes.

In which ſaying, there are theſe heads: 1 Firſt, that the Church hath her cuſtomes. 2 As ſhe hath them, ſo ſhe may, and doth alledge them. 3 And alledge them finally (as the Apoſtle here, we ſee, reſolveth the whole matter into them, as into a finall reſolution.) 4 And all this by Scripture confirmed: even by this Scripture: on which, the cuſtomes of the Church are grounded, and the power that ſhall be ever in them, to over-rule the contentious.

Non habemus talem, Matt. 12.39. The Text the laſt yeere. Negative in ſhew; Affirmative, in effect.

And let not this move you, that it ſeemes to be negative, Non habemus talem. As (this time twelve month) Non dabitur niſi (a negative in ſhew) proved an affirmative, Dabitur, ſed non niſi: So will this Non habemus talem, prove to Habemus, ſed non talem. Cuſtome we have, but none ſuch. To apply it to the Apoſtles purpoſe: None, to ſit covered at prayer, Non talem, None ſuch; But the contrary rather; To be un-covered then, talem, Such is our cuſtome; Such an one, the Church hath.

Where, becauſe the negative referres not to habemns, but to talem, And, a cuſtome is not therefore good, becauſe we have it, but becauſe it is talem, ſo qualified; The talem to bee: 1 Firſt, If we (that is) the Apoſtles have had it, if it were Apoſtolike: The non talem to be, if our new Maſters have taken it up the other day, and the Apoſtles never knew it. 2 The talem to be, if the Churches of GOD in generall have had it, if it be Catholike. The non talem to be, if the Church of Corinth, or ſome one Church perhaps had it, but the reſt never had any ſuch.

III. The Church cuſtome for keeping Eaſter

Then, will we deſcend to ſhew the keeping of Eaſter, to be ſuch: Ever in uſe with the Churches of GOD, from the time of the Apoſtles themſelves. Which, if we can make plaine, here is a plaine Text for it: That if one ſhould aske, What Scripture have you, why Eaſter may not be laid downe? It may well be anſwered, Non habemus talem conſuetudinem, nec Eccleſiæ Dei. Cuſtome to keepe it wee have; the Apoſtles, the Church had it: but to aboliſh it, ſuch cuſtome have we none; we depart from them both, if we doe.

There wants not Scripture for Eaſter. Epiſt. 119. cap. 14.

Proteſting yet, that we have no purpoſe to waive Scripture quite, for the keeping of Eaſter. Saint Auguſtine is plaine; Hoc ex authoritate divinarum Scripturarum, per anniverſarium Paſcha celebratur. Even by authority of divine Scripture it is, that everie yeere, Eaſter is kept ſolemnly. We have touched two Scriptures heretofore: The day, which the LORD hath made (118. Pſalme) applied ever to this Feaſt. That Text for the Old. And for the New Teſtament, that verſe in this Epiſtle, CHRIST our Paſſe-over is offered, let us therefore keepe a Feaſt.

1 Cor. 5.7,8.

But the Churches cuſtome is more kindly.

But every thing ſtandeth ſafeſt and ſureſt, upon his owne baſe: And the right baſe of this, I take to be Cuſtome. We doe but make our ſelves to be pitied otherwhile, when we ſtand wringing the Scriptures, to ſtraine that out of them, that is not in them, and ſo can never come liquidè from them: when yet we have for the ſame point, the Churches Cuſtome cleare enough. And that is enough, by vertue of this Text. There is, and ſhall bee enough ever in this Text, to avow any Cuſtome; The Apoſtles, the the Churches of GOD had it: to diſavow any; The Apoſtles, the Churches of GOD, had it not.

The fruit of our labour will be this (I hope) at leaſt, to confirme us in the keeping of it. We keepe Eaſter, many of us, we know not upon what ground. By this, we ſhall ſee, we have a ground for that we doe. We doe no more, than the Churches of GOD, than the Apoſtles have done before us. So, our eares ſhall heare the voice in Eſay behinde us, Hæc eſt via, This is the way: Ambulate in eâ, Walke in it, as you doe, you are in the right, and there hold you. The uſe of the third point about Eaſter. Eſay 30.21.

IF any. This (if) I take it, is no idle if, no vaine ſuppoſition; to ſay, if there be any, where there were none. No: contentions there were. When? when (we:) who be they? Saint Paul and his fellow Apoſtles, when they lived. And the Churches: what Churches? the Churches under them, of their times. In the very prime of the Primitive Church, then were there Contentions. I. 1 Contentions in the Apoſtles time.

And thoſe not with an enemie without (Iew or Gentile;) that, were πόλεμος, warre abroad: this is νεῖκος, but a jarre at home, among themſelves. That former (abroad) they repreſent by Iſmael and Iſaac, and they were of two venters. This latter (at home) by the two Twins in Rebecca's wombe. (I feare the time: elſe could I let you ſee this ſtrife, in every Church of them.) Gal.4.29. Gen.25.23.

This I note firſt, that we may not ξενίζεσθαι (to uſe Saint Peters terme) thinke it ſtrange, if there be contentions in our times. They ſhall be no ſtrangers with us, in ours: They were not with them, in theirs. Neither contentions (in this verſe:) Nor ſchiſmes (in the next, the 18.) Nor hereſies (in the 19. next to that.) It is of the firy triall, Saint Peter ſpeakes it (of perſecution:) It is as true, of the waterie triall (of contention.) As true it is of the laſt, as of the firſt Church: I proved thee alſo at the waters of ſtrife. Thoſe waters, the waters of Meriba, will hardly be dreined ever. 1 Pet.4.12. Pſal.81.7.

There were contentions then: About what? For, though peace be precious, yet of ſuch moment may the matters be, as they are to be contended for, yea, even to the death. For what then were theſe? for nothing, but a matter of Rite: Men praying, whether they ſhould be uncovered; women, whether veiled or no. For a Hat and a Veile, was all this adoe. It was not about any the high Myſteries, any of the vitall parts of Religion, Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: Onely, about the manner, how; the geſture and behaviour, wherewith; in what ſort, to carry themſelves, at Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: about matter of circumſtance meerely, and nothing elſe. 2 Contentions about matter of circumſtance. Verſe 4, 5.

And even theſe, even the meaneſt things would be done for the better, not for the worſe (ſaith the Apoſtle, in the next verſe.) And the more order, the better. So the Apoſtle had ſet order for them, and inter alia, for this too. Other his ordinances (hee ſaith) they remembred well, but not this: This was oppoſed. For, with ſome, all is not worth a ruſh, if they ſee not further than their fellowes, nay their betters, then: If they finde not ſomewhat to finde fault with, if it be but a ceremonie. And to picke a quarrell with a ceremonie, is eaſie. A plauſible theme, not to burthen the Church with ceremonies: the Church to be free: which hath almoſt freed the Church of all decencie. Verſe 2.

About ſuch points as theſe, were there, that did not only contend, but that grew contentious. Νεῖκος is one thing, to contend: φιλονεικεία another, to be contentious. The Apoſtle ſaith not, if any contend: but, ſi quis contentioſus. And (oſus) is full: φιλε is one that loves it, is given to it. Strange, any ſuch ſhould be: But the Apoſtles if, proves to be no if. Wee ſee it daily, in perſons but meanely qualified (God wot) 3 Yea, contentiouſneſſe, which is more than contention.

yet ſo peremptory, as if the word of GOD had come, if not from them, yet to them only, and none beſides. Good LORD! Why ſhould any love to be contentious? Why? It is the way to be ſome body. In time of peace, what reckoning is there of Wat Tiler, or Iacke Straw? Make a ſedition, and they will beare a braine with the beſt. Primianus and Maximianus were the heads of the two factions of Donatiſts in Saint Auguſtines time. He ſaith, it was well for them, that faction fell out: Elſe, Primianus might have beene Poſtremianus, and Maximianus be Minimianus, well enough. But now, in ſchiſme, either of them was a jolly fellow, head of a partie. This makes, we ſhall never want contentious perſons, and they will take order, we ſhall never want contentions.

1 Cor. 14. 26.

4 Such contention not to be neglected.

Well, if any ſuch ſhould happen to be, what is to be done in ſuch a caſe? What ſaith the Apoſtle? Saith he thus? Seeing it is no greater matter, it skils not greatly whether they doe it or no, covered or bare, ſit or kneele, all's one: ſets it light, and lets it goe. No: but calls them backe to the cuſtome of the Church, will not have them ſwerve from that; makes a matter of it. For (wee ſee) hee preſſes the point hard; ſpends many words, many verſes, even halfe the Chapter about it.

Not any contention.

Why doth he ſo? For two reaſons: 1. Firſt, he likes not contention at all. Why? If it be not taken at the firſt, within a while (within one verſe after) ye ſhall heare of a ſchiſme (looke the 18. verſe:) And within a little after that (looke but to the 19.) ye ſhall have a flat hereſie of it. The one drawes on the other: if the contentious humour be not let out, it will feſter ſtraight, and prove to an apoſtume.

No, not in theſe ſmall matters.

2. Nor, he likes not the matter, wherefore; (though it ſeeme but ſmall.) Saint Paul knew Satans method well: hee ſeemes ſomewhat ſhamefaſt at firſt, askes but ſome ſmall trifle: Give him but that, he will be ready for greater points. If he win ground in the Ceremonies, then have at the Sacrament: If he can diſgrace the one, it will not be long, but ye ſhall heare of him at the other.

For, from Ceremonies to Sacraments.

Speake I beſide the booke? was it not ſo here? At the very next verſe, there hee falls in hand with an abuſe of the Sacrament, and that takes up the reſt of the Chapter.

For, when they had ſit covered at Prayer awhile, they grew even as unreverent, as homely with the Sacrament: Eat and drunke there, as if they had beene at home, in triclinio; that the Apoſtle is faine to tell them (at the 22. verſe) They had homes to be homely at: the Church, the Houſe of GOD, they were to be uſed with greater reverence. He did not commend them for this their rude carriage, at the Sacrament. Did not commend them? you know what that meaneth (minus dicitur, plus intelligitur) He blamed them much for it.

Then, are we to make ſtay at theſe leſſe matters at firſt (as the Apoſtle doth.) To thinke the Wiſe-mans counſell worth the following, Ne ſit tibi minimum, non negligere minima, Count it no ſmall matter, not to neglect ſmall matters. What ſo ſmall as an haire? when theſe ſmall haires were gone from Samſon, his ſtrength left him. In it ſelfe, in his owne nature, a Rite is not ſo much: This is much; that by it, they learne to breake the Churches orders; and that thereby they are fleſhed, to goe on to greater matters.

Iudg. 16. 19.

II. To theſe contentions, the Church cuſtome oppoſeth.

Oppoſing then to theſe, what courſe takes he? Layes for his ground, this, Non habemus talem. The force of his reaſon is, If we, if the Churches of GOD, had any ſuch cuſtome, it were ſomewhat; that were warrant enough, for a Rite. But now, we and they both, have none ſuch; nay, we and they, have the quite contrary; therefore, let us heare no more of it.

I The Church hath her cuſtomes.

Where, it is plaine, the Apoſtle is for the Church-cuſtomes. 1 And firſt, that ſhe hath them. Every Societie, beſide their Lawes in bookes, have their cuſtomes alſo in practice: and thoſe, not to be taken up, or laid downe, at every mans pleaſure. The Civill Law ſaith this of Cuſtome, Imò magnæ authoritatis hoc jus habetur: quod in tantum probatum eſt, ut non fuerit ſcripto comprehendere neceſſe. Men (it ſeemes) had a great great good liking to their cuſtomes, that they remembred them without booke, that they never needed to be put in writing, as their Lawes and Statutes did. Now, as every Society, ſo the Church, beſides her habemus legem, hath her habemus conſuetudinem too. There is ſuch a thing, as mos populi Dei.

And feare not traditions a whit. Thoſe reſpect credenda, points of doctrine: Theſe, but agenda, matter of practice: And that, not in points of ſubſtance; reach onely to matter of circumſtance, goe no further. Nor doe wee even them with, much leſſe oppoſe them to, that which is written. Never any cuſtome, againſt that: No cuſtome, that comes from the will or wit of man, againſt Scripture, which comes from the wiſedome and will of GOD. But, hæc oportet facere, & illa non omittere. Mat 23.23. Onely ſo.

The Church then, hath her cuſtomes. I adde, theſe (wee) here (that is) the Apoſtles had them; and the Churches under them, had theirs. It was but early day then, yet had they their cuſtomes, even then. At the writing of this Epiſtle, it was not (at the moſt) thirty yeares from CHRISTS Aſcenſion. If that were time enough, to make a cuſtome: Now, after theſe twentie times thirty yeares, and thirty times thirty yeares, and a hundred yeares to ſpare, ſhall it not bee a cuſtome now, by much better right? A cuſtome is ſuſceptible of more and leſſe: The further it goeth, the longer it runneth, the more ſtrength it gathereth; the more gray haires it getteth, the more venerable it is: for indeede, the more a cuſtome it is.

The Apoſtles and their Churches had their cuſtomes.

Now then, as the Church hath them, ſo ſhe ſtands upon them: feares not (we ſee) to alledge them, to ſay habemus, or non habemus. Habemus, to uphold an ancient good one: Non habemus, to lay downe an evill one, new taken up.

2 The Church alledgeth her cuſtomes.

Here, negativè, Non habemus talem. As our SAVIOVR likewiſe, A principio non fuit ſic. And yet, by implication, this here is, One wee have, but not ſuch an one. And our SAVIOVRS there, A way there was from the beginning, but this was not it.

In the Negative. Matt. 19.8.

But otherwhere, it is poſitivè alſo, to affirme, and to maintaine a good: And men poſitively referred, to know, what hath beene the uſe in former times.

In the Affirmative.

Higher than Moſes, wee cannot goe. Moſes as a Law-giver, one would thinke, would be all for Law. He is poſitivè full, for cuſtome too. Enquire (ſaith he) of the dayes that be paſt, how it hath gone, ſince the day GOD created the earth. (And that, in the ſecond edition, or ſetting forth of the Law.)

Hath ever ſo alledged Moſes. Deut. 4.32.

Iob is for it too. Enquire, I pray you, of the former Age, and ſet your ſelves to aske after the Fathers (for we are but of yeſterday) ſhall not they tell you, thus, and thus it was, in their times?

Iob 8.8.

And, ſay not the Prophets the ſame? Stand upon the wayes (it is Ieremie) and there looke for the good old way, and that way take, it is the onely way to find reſt for your ſoules.

The Prophets. Ier. 6.16.

To all which agreeable is that wherewith I will ſhut up this point; which all the Fathers in the firſt Nicene Councell tooke up, and which, ever ſince, hath beene the Churches crie, τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἤθη κρατείτω, Mos antiquus obtineat: Let old cuſtomes prevaile, let them carrie it. By this you ſee, Habemus conſuetudinem, hath beene counted a ſound allegation, not onely from the Apoſtles, but even from MOSES time.

The Fathers.

And now, for the talem. For, it is not the habemus that binds, but the talem. Not becauſe we have it, but becauſe it is ſo qualified. It is not every cuſtome, hand over head, we may ſtand on. Why bindes not this? 1. Becauſe though it may be, it was at Corinth (Eccleſia Dei, a Church of GOD, one Church) yet Eccleſiæ Dei, the other Churches of GOD, had it not; the word is plurall. 2. Becauſe, though it hath liked ſome, not long ſince to like well of it; yet the Apoſtles never knew it: or (the other way) if it have liked them to diſlike it, and lay it downe; yet the Apoſtles liked it well enough.

3 The Badges of a right cuſtome, two.

Non talem (ſaith the Apoſtle) none ſuch. Qualem then? How ſhall wee doe to know knew the right talem? Thus. Non talem is here oppoſed, to two: To the Churches of GOD: To nos (that is) the Apoſtles.

If it be Eccleſiarum Dei.

If it be but of ſome one Church, but at Corinth alone, it is too narrow; not large, not generall enough. If it bee but taken up by ſome of our maſters of late, it is too freſh, it is not ancient enough: Non talem, No ſuch.

But by theſe two, wee know our right qualem. If it bee Eccleſiarium (that is) if it be generall: If nos come to it (that is) the Apoſtles, if it be ancient: then it is rightly qualified; then it is as it ſhould bee; then it may bee alledged, and ſtood upon, then it will binde: and then, if any oppoſe, videtur contentioſus eſſe.

I beginne with the Church (in the plurall.) Every Church hath power to beginne a cuſtome: and that cuſtome, power to binde her owne children, to it. Provided, her private cuſtome affront not the generall, received by all others: for then binds it not. By the Rule in the Mathematiques, Ever Totum eſt parte majus: And by the rule in the Morals, Ever turpis pars omnis, toti non congrua.

As neither is any particular Church bound to the private cuſtome of another, like particular, as it ſelfe is. But if the other Churches cuſtome, have alſo beene the generall cuſtome of the Church: then it binds, and may not be ſet light: For then ſaid it muſt bee, that Saint Auguſtine doth ſay, If the whole Church uſually have obſerved ought: to goe from that, or to queſtion, whether it bee to bee obſerved, inſolentiſſimæ inſaniæ eſt. It ſavours of a diſtemper comming of a heat, or humor of pride: For, onely by pride (ſaith Salomon) commeth contention. This for the Churches cuſtome.

Epiſt. 118. ca. 5.

Pro. 13. 10.

If nos (that is) the Apoſtles had it.

But if to this we adde, or rather, if before this wee ſet, this (nos) the Apoſtles had it too, that it is Apoſtolike: we have then ſaid as much, as in this point can bee ſaid, as much as may content any, that is not contentious, that is not more wedded to ſhew his wit, than to ſeeke the truth: and more ſet φυλάττειν τὴν δόξαν, to maintaine his owne poſition, than to regard the Churches peace. For ſure, if a cuſtome be to be eſteemed by antiquity; ſuch a cuſtome is ab heroicis uſque temporibus: for they be our Heroës. 2. If it be to be eſteemed by the author: what authors more worthy in themſelves, more worthy of our imitation, than they? Nothing can be deviſed more reaſonable, than that in the 118. queſt. ad Orthod. in Iuſtin Martyr, That, of and from whom we received τὸ εὔχεσθαι to pray: of and from them, we ſhould alſo receive τὸ πῶς εὔχεσθαι, how and when, at what time, at what feaſts to doe it. Their example (that is, the Apoſtles) the Church commended to her children to practiſe (a better She could not:) that practice, in time grew to a cuſtome. That cuſtome is talem, may ſafely be alledged.

4 The Vſe of this argument from cuſtome.

Laſtly, as this ſheweth it may be alledged for a good argument in Divinitie; So doth it, 1 what the men are againſt whom: 2 what the matters, wherein: 3 what the penaltie, whereupon it may be alledged.

Againſt what parties.

1. Whom againſt. This may be alledged againſt ſi quis videtur contentioſus eſſe, ſuch as are, or at leaſt ſeeme contentious. Habemus, or Non habemus conſuetudinem, is their proper anſwer. No reaſoning with ſuch, it will be to ſmall purpoſe, they will be ſine fine dicentes. Saint Auguſtine ſaith well, they cannot diſtinguiſh betweene reſpondere poſſe, and tacere nolle: They take them, for all one. So they crie lowdeſt, and have the laſt word, they take it they have anſwered ſufficiently. Againſt theſe it lieth moſt properly. None ſo ready a way, to ſtop their mouthes: for cuſtome is matter of fact, Habemus or Non habemus may be put to the twelve men, and there's an end. Saint Paul then uſing it here againſt theſe, teacheth us to uſe it againſt the like. Againſt ſuch parties; againſt ſi quis videtur contentioſus eſſe, to put it upon this; Is there a cuſtome, or is there none?

In what matters.

Specially, if the matter be of the nature of this here in the Text, where the queſtion ſeemed to concerne but matter of circumſtance, and outward order; there hath it his right uſe; that, the proper place of it. You will ſay; But had it not beene good though, to have uſed ſome reaſon for it? It had: And the Apoſtle uſed divers (if that would have ſerved:) from the ſignification, at the third verſe; from decencie, at the the thirteenth; from nature, at the fourteenth. But (to ſay the truth) ſuch, as (he ſaw) a wrangling wit would elude. The nature of the queſtion affoorded none other. It was well obſerved, and ſet downe for a rule by the Philoſopher, That in morall matters, men may not looke for Mathematicall proofes: The nature of the ſubject will not beare them. If not in morall, in rituall, much leſſe: they of all other, leaſt ſuſceptible of a demonſtrative reaſon.

The Apoſtle ſaw this, and therefore finally reſolves all, into the Churches practice by cuſtome confirmed in matters of this kinde, enough of it ſelfe, to ſuffice any that will ſapere ad ſobrietatem. In ſo doing, as he tooke the right courſe (we are ſure) ſo he taught us by his example, in points of this nature, of ceremonie or circumſtance, ever to pitch upon habemus or non habemus talem conſuetudinem. This to bee finall.

3. And then followes upon what penalty. Vpon no other paine, but to be pronounced to be fallen into the Apoſtles Siquis; to bee taken and declared, pro contentioſo. Then if any, for every point of rite that takes him in the head, will hazzard the Churches peace; will not acquieſcere, but ſet himſelfe againſt the Churches cuſtome; hee knoweth his doome here. For it turnes backe reciprocè. As, if any bee contentious, the Churches cuſtome is againſt him: So, if any turne upon the Churches cuſtome, bee againſt it, it is no good ſigne; videtur (ſaith Saint Paul) to the Apoſtle he ſeemes ſo (and he had his eyes in his head.) And what ſuch ſeemed to him, they may well ſeeme to us; and we take them for no leſſe, that are like ſtirring in matters of no more weight. And ſo an end of this matter. For the Apoſtle, when he had ſaid this, though he had ſaid enough, needed to ſay no more. The Churches cuſtome ſhall ever be of force, to over-rule ſuch as are contentious. And when Saint Paul had ſaid this, he had ſaid. And ſo have we.

Vpon what penaltie.

The argument finall.

III.

This then being ſet downe, That Cuſtomes ſo qualified are to be kept: Shall wee now goe on to the hypotheſis, that the keeping of Eaſter is ſuch? (And now I would the houre were to begin againe, ſo much is to be ſaid for it.)

The keeping Eaſter is ſuch a cuſtome.

One foot of our compaſſe we fix in the Apoſtles times. The other, where? They appoint us Gelaſius time, who was faſt upon the five hundredth yeare. Be it ſo.

The time to make this cuſtome.

From the Apoſtles Age (which ended with Saint Iohn, who ſurvived CHRIST ſixtie eight yeares, and dyed the yeare CII. under Trajan) to Gelaſius Age. Of theſe five hundred, the firſt hundred yeares are for (Nos) the Apoſtles time. From thence, the foure hundred yeares following, are for the Churches. Which foure hundred we may divide againe, into two even moities, two hundred under perſecution: two hundred under peace.

How long the Apoſtles. 100.

How long the Churches. 400.

To prove (then) our habemus conſuetudinem: We cannot better beginne, than with this in the Text, the contentions, that from the beginning roſe about it. Thoſe very contentions prove it. It muſt be, that muſt bee contended for: and then it muſt be, when it is contended for. Theſe three things in this one proofe. 1 The contentions that were about it, even preſently upon the Apoſtles times: 2 The great care had, and continuall paines taken, to lay them downe, that is, the Churches contending for the Feaſt: 3 The cenſuring of thoſe that tooke them up, with Saint Pauls contentioſus here, and with ſomewhat more: (Of Blaſtus, at Rome in Europe; Of Creſcentius in Ægypt, for Afrike: Of Audæus, in Syria, for Aſia:) Theſe were the principals, theſe were all written up in the blacke booke, by thoſe that regiſtred the Hereticks; by Tertullian, Epiphanius, Philaſtrius, Auguſtine, and Theodoret (all five.)

Proofes for the cuſtome of the Churches.
1 Proofe. From contentions about it.
2 The Church tooke part with Eaſter.
3 Cenſured ever for Hereticks, that againſt it.
Tert. de præſcr. c. 53.
Epiphan. Hereſ. 70.
Syn. Antioch. Can. 1.

But as GOD would have it, the queſtion never was of the Feaſt it ſelfe, but of the time of it onely. All kept Eaſter, though not all at one time. For the keeping, they had the Churches cuſtome: for the time of keeping, they had their owne: the Feaſt of the Chriſtians, the time of the Iewes.

The Contention not about the Feaſt, but the time onely.

And

How the contention firſt came.

And I will tell you how this came, firſt. From Saint Iames (who was the firſt) there were ſucceſſively one after another, fifteene Biſhops of Hieruſalem, all of them of the Circumciſion. Theſe (the ſooner to win their brethren the Iewes) condeſcended to keepe their Eaſter, XIIII°. Lunæ, as they did. That which was by them thus done by way of condeſcenſion, was after, by ſome, urged as a matter of neceſſitie, as if it were not lawfull, but on that day to hold it.

Hie. deſcr. 35. Epipha. hær. 50.

The firſt that it tooke thus in the head (Tertullian in the end of De præſcrip. ſaith) was one Blaſtus, about the dayes of Commodus. He began a ſchiſme. And Irenæus preſently wrote de ſchiſmate contra Blaſtum. But after, from ſchiſme Blaſtus fell to hereſie, and began that of the Quartodecimani: to whoſe manner of keeping it, for the moſt part, other Heretikes did cleave, leaving the Churches cuſtome of purpoſe, ſince they were departed from her.

Great pitie, ſome in our dayes had not beene then living, to have adviſed the Church to have ſaved her paines, and never have ſtriven ſo about it: the ſhorteſt way was, to have made no more adoe, but kept none at all. But, non habemus talem conſuetudinem, would have beene their anſwer. For you will eaſily gheſſe: if theſe, for not keeping it at the right time, were ſcored up for Heretikes; what would become of them, that had beene againſt the keeping of it at all.

None againſt Eaſter, but Aërius.

Epiphan. Hæreſ. 75.

1 Cor. 5. 7.

Till now in our dayes, there was never any ſuch, but Aërius; he tooke it away cleane, as Iewiſh. His reaſon was (ſaith Epiphanius, ſcorning it) becauſe CHRIST our Paſſeover is offered. CHRIST our Paſſeover is offered, let us therefore keepe a Feaſt (ſaith Saint Paul:) Let us therefore keepe none (ſaith Aërius) holden for ſo ſaying, for little better than crazed. There was never any Councell called about him: but as Aërius was his name, ſo was his opinion, and ſo it vaniſhed into aire, and was blowen over ſtraight. Otherwiſe, all Heretikes, an Eaſter they had: Not ſo much as the Novatians, that called themſelves Cathari (that is, the Puritans of the Primitive Church) but one they had: but like good fellowes (by their Canon adiaphorus) they left every one at libertie, ſo he kept one, to keepe it whether way he liſted; but keepe one he muſt. This contending about this cuſtome from the beginning, ſheweth, from the beginning, ſuch a cuſtome there was.

All elſe keepe Eaſter, the old Puritans, the Novatians, and all.

Socr. l. 5. c. 20.

2 Proofe from the Cycli Paſchales.

Next we avouch the Cycli Paſchales (for the keeping it right) which were indeed the Churches yearely Calendar (which to this day the Greeke Church call their πασχάλιον) made of purpoſe for the juſt keeping it, at the very time. A pregnant proofe for this cuſtome, if there were none but it. By Hippolytus firſt a famous Biſhop and holy Martyr (his was the ſixteene-yeare Canon) ſet forth by him ſo timely, as it ended in the firſt yeare of Alexander Severus.

2 And after him, that of eight yeares, deviſed by Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria, who was a Martyr alſo, and of high account ever in the Church. (And both theſe, under the perſecution.)

3 Then came Euſebius, whoſe device the Golden number was, or Cycle of nineteene

4 yeares. His held, till Theophilus of Alexandria's began. Now the time of the ſetting his, is recorded to have beene the yeare 380.

5 6 Proſper came after him, and he ſet another. And laſt came Victorinus of Aquitaine about the yeare 460. (not much before Gelaſius.) Two more came after theſe, before it was fully ſetled, (but we will not paſſe our bounds.) If no ſuch cuſtome were, what needed all theſe paines, all this adoe, in theſe Cycles ſetting, and calculation of times? It ſhewes the great eſteeme, the Church had the Feaſt in, that it was ſo carefull of the preciſe time of it, every yeare.

2 Dionyſ. Exiguus.

The uſe of the Cycli Paſchales.

And there was reaſon for it. Other-while they were at an after-deale, about the time. The yeare 454. (within a yeare or two, after the Councell of Chalcedon) all were at a ſtand. Eaſter fell ſo high in April, they were in a doubt, they had beene wrong: Yea, Leo himſelfe (that then lived) and all. Preſently fell Leo to writing of letters about, to all, reputed any thing ſeene that way. To the Biſhop of [a] Lilybæum in Sicil. To the Biſhop of the Iſle [b] Coos. To the [c] Emperour Martian himſelfe (and to the [d] Empreſſe to ſollicite him) that he would not faile, but ſend to Proterius

Biſhop

Biſhop of Alexandria to helpe them out: As hee did. And the like fell out in Saint Ambroſe's time. Damaſus and all, were to ſeeke about it, and he then faine to cleare it by his LXXXIII. Epiſtle, to the Biſhops of Æmylia.

Now, upon the conſulting of the Biſhop of Alexandria, there hangs a third proofe. The Paſchales epiſtolæ yearely ſent abroad by that See, to this end. Leo confeſſeth to the Emperour, That becauſe, they of Ægypt were held for the moſt skilfull in the Mathematikes, beſt at calculations; it was by the firſt Councell at Nice laid upon them (this truſt) yearely to calculate the day exactly, and to give notice of it in time to other Churches, yea, to Rome and all.

3 Proofe. From the Paſchales Epiſtolæ, of λόγοι ἑορτασικοὶ of the Biſhop of Alexandria.

And it was antiqua conſuetudo, ſaith Caſſian (who lived with Chryſoſtome, and was his Deacon) that every yeare, the morrow after their Epiphania, the Biſhop of Alexandria ſent abroad his Paſchales epiſtolæ, to warne Eaſter, over the world. And, when (after) by reaſon of warres in the ſpring time, in many places they were intercepted, that they came not time enough: Order was taken anew by the great Councell of Africke, that letters for warning Eaſter ſhould come forth ſooner, by the one and twentieth of Auguſt every yeare, that ſo they might have time to come, whither they were ſent ſoone enough.

Theſe Paſchales epiſtolæ were ever famous, and of high account, for other good matter contained in them. Three of them of Theophilus, we have extant, ſo highly eſteemed by Saint Hierom, as he tooke the paines to turne them into Latine, and to him we owe them. But, though by the Nicene Councell this was laid upon the Biſhop of Alexandria; I would not have you conceive, it began then. Ruffin ſaith, the Councell did but antiquum Canonem tradere, deliver the old Canon, that had beene before in uſe. For, long before, Euſebius mentioned thoſe Paſchales epiſtolæ ſent about, by Dionyſe Biſhop there, even under the perſecution.

Now if we will follow * Iob's advice, and ſet our ſelves to aske of the Fathers: we ſhall finde habemus talem conſuetudinem, cleere with them for it. [1] Thoſe firſt, that lived after the Churches peace: [2] Then thoſe, that during the perſecution. Thoſe in the Churches peace, foure wayes: 1. By the Homilies or Sermons made purpoſely by them, to be preached on this Day. We have a full Iury, Greeke and Latine, of them; and that of the moſt chiefe and eminent among them. Saint Baſil, Nazianzen, Chryſoſtome, Nyſſen, Theophilus Alexandrinus, Cyril, Chryſologus, Leo, &c. And yet I deale not with any of thoſe in Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Maximus, now extant; I know, they are queſtioned. I rely onely on the report of Saint Hierom and Gennadius, who ſaw the right copies, and what they ſaw, have reported.

4 Proofe. * Iob 8. 8. From the Fathers in the Churches peace, the latter 200. years. By the Homilies upon Eaſter-day.

I will give you a taſte of one. It ſhall be Nazianzen, ſurnamed the Divine, and ſo one that knew what belonged to Divinitie. Thus begins he a Sermon of his upon it. Eaſter-day is come, GODS owne Eaſter-day: and againe I ſay, Eaſter-day is come, in honour of the Trinitie: the Feaſt of Feaſts, the ſolemnitie of all ſolemnities, ſo farre paſſing all other Feaſts, holden not onely by or for men, but even in honour of CHRIST Himſelfe, as the Sunne doth the Starres.

1 In Paſchon.

And, in his funerall Sermon for his father, having occaſion but to name it by the way (for that his father once, brought to the laſt caſt, in a ſickneſſe of his, ſuddenly (as it were by a miracle) recovered upon an Eaſter-day morning.) It was (ſaith hee) Eaſter, the great and famous Feaſt of Eaſter, the Queene and the Soveraigne of all the dayes in the yeare. That, in his dayes they had (ſure) ſuch a cuſtome.

(And ſo it ſeemes they had in Ignatius dayes: for, from him borrowed he that terme of Lady and Queene of dayes, out of his Epiſtle ad Magneſianos.)

2. By the Hymnes ſet for this day, to be ſung on it. By Prudentius that lived in Saint Ambroſe's time. By Saint Ambroſe himſelfe. Before him by Saint Hilary. But, Paulinus I inſiſt on. Hee, in his Panegyrick for Fælix, ſets downe in particular all the Feaſts in the yeare, as they were then in uſe among them: Eaſter for a chiefe Feaſt. He lived with Saint Auguſtine. A pregnant Record, for the Churches cuſtome then.

By the Hymnes upon Eaſter-day.

3. By their Writings. [1] Some of them in their Commentaries (as Saint Hierom) and and namely on the Galatians, and on that place (yee obſerve dayes:) If that be a fault (ſaith he) we Chriſtians doe incurre that fault, all. For we keepe (by name) Eaſter, but not the Iewes Eaſter, of unlevened bread (which the Apoſtle excepts to) but the Chriſtian Eaſter of the Reſurrection of CHRIST. 2 Some, by way of Epiſtles and anſwers: as S. Ambroſe, LXXXIII. Epiſtle, full to it. S. Auguſt. CXVIII. CXIX. ſet Epiſtles concerning queſtions about it. 3 Some, by their πολεμικὰ: As Epiphanius (the Treaſure of antiquity) in his L. LXX. and LXXV. hereſie, ad oppoſitum. Poſitively in his Compendium of the true Churches orders, at the end of his Pannarium, whereof one is πανήγυεις μεγάλαι ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν πάσχα, The great ſolemnity upon Eaſter-day. 4 As S. Auguſtine expreſly contra Adimantum, the 16. Chap. and the 32. booke againſt Fauſtus (that found fault, the Church kept it, yet kept it not, as the Iewes:) confeſſeth the one, (the Churches keeping:) traverſes the other, that ſhee ought, neither at that time, nor in that manner to keepe it, as they did: and that at large. 4 Some, by ſhort Treatiſes, as Ambroſe de myſterio Paſchæ. And ſome by full bookes, as Euſebius, who wrote a booke of the whole order of the Churches Service then, dedicated it to Conſtantine, was by the Emperour highly commended for it.

Of Athanaſius. Apolog. ad Conſtantium.

4. Laſtly, as by writing, ſo by matter of fact. As Chryſoſtome, who when he was depoſed, and ſo injoyned not to come in any Church: yet Eaſter-day comming, ſo loth he was not to keepe it, as he got him in Thermas Conſtantini (a ſpacious great building, for the publike Bath of the Citie) and there held his Eaſter, with a very great company, that would not forſake him. As Athanaſius, who being accuſed to Conſtantius the Emperour, for keeping the Feaſt of Eaſter in the great Church at Alexandria (then but newly finiſhed, and as yet not dedicate) he layes the blame from himſelfe upon the people, that would have it kept there, doe what hee could, the other Churches were ſo narrow, and the concourſe to the Feaſt ſo great, as he ſaith, it would have done the Emperours heart good, to have ſeene it.

And in his Epiſtle ad Africanos; with open mouth, he cryeth out upon the Arrians, that came in military manner to inſtall their new Biſhop, and the many outrages by them done. Above all, that not onely they did thoſe outrages, but did them (of all dayes) upon Eaſter-day, Et ne ipſum quidem Dominicum diem ſanctiſſimi feſti ullâ in reverentiâ habuere, And had not in any reverence, not the very Sunday of that moſt holy Feaſt.

Cuſtome for the three Holy-dayes at Eaſter. Cap. 8. Hom. 1. in Paſch.

Not the Sunday: for we are to know, the cuſtome that is continued with us ſtill, they then had, to keepe two dayes beſide the Sunday, three in all: For the Latine Church, plaine, by Saint Auguſtine de Civitate Dei, 22. In 3^um^ Feſti diem. For the Greeke, by Nyſſen, who expreſly termeth it, τριήμερον παράθεσιν.

Thus, all theſe wayes, by ſinging, by ſaying, by writing, by doing, all beare witneſſe to it: and I may ſafely ſay, there is not one of them, but one of theſe wayes or other, he hath his hand in it, and among them they make up a full proofe, of this habemus conſuetudinem.

5 Proofe. From the Councels. The Nicene.

From the Fathers, I paſſe to the Councels, and plead it by all the foure. The Nicene firſt.

Theod. l. 1. c. 9. Socrat. l. 1. c. 9.

1. Two cauſes there were (ſaith Athanaſius de Syn. Arim. & Sel.) of the aſſembling that Councell. Nam & claudicabant circa Feſtum (and he makes that the firſt cauſe) They halted about the Feaſt, kept it not uniformely: and that was ſet ſtraight, againſt Creſcentius. And, the Deitie of the SONNE of GOD was queſtioned, and that was put into the Nicene Creed, againſt Arrius. You have the Councels Epiſtle for the ſetling it: you have the Emperours Sacra for the ratifying it, directed ad omnes Eccleſias (in the third booke of his life, by Euſebius.)

The 2. of Conſtant.

2. For the two Generall at Conſtantinople. As Conſtantine in the firſt; ſo Theodoſius at this, was not behinde. His Law remaines, whereby he provided, that for fifteene dayes, from the Sunday before the day, till the Sunday after, no proceſſe ſhould goe forth, none ſhould be arreſted; a generall ceſſation of all both proceſſes and proceedings, in honour of the High Feaſt. That you have Eaſter-day, and the cuſtome of holding it ſolemnely, in the body of the Law too, in Theodoſius Code.

3. A

3. At the third of Epheſus, there have you (in the 2. Tom. c. 32.) Rudius, Heſychius, and Ruffin, three Quartodecimani heretikes, publikely in the face of the Councell, recanting their errour, ſubſcribing, and promiſing ever after to conforme and keepe their Eaſter, after the cuſtome of the Churches of GOD. At Epheſus.

4. And at the fourth of Chalcedon, the ſixt Seſſion (the Emperour being there then preſent in perſon) the whole Councell with one voice made this acclamation, Vnum Paſcha orbi terrarum: Thankes be to GOD, one Eaſter now, and but one, all the world over. At Chalcedon.

But before all theſe (the Nicene and all) by a dozen yeares at leaſt, was the Councell of Arles, and in it, this cuſtome proclaimed. I mention it, not ſo much for the antiquitie, as that by it appeareth, how the cuſtome of Eaſter went here with us in this Realme; for, at it was preſent and ſubſcribed, the Biſhop of London, Reſtitutus. A plaine argument, We had ſuch a cuſtome then. Cuſtome in England.

And for the other Realme, Gelaſius ſhall ſpeake. In a Synod of ſeventy Biſhops, where he and they decreed, what bookes were to be read, what not: they ſay, there was then a Poeme of venerable Sedulius (who had the addition of Scotus for his nation) which they doe inſigni laude præferre, (that is) very highly commend. Sedulius intitles it, his Opus Paſchale, and begins it, with Paſchales quicunque dapes---as it were inviting his Readers (his countrey-men, I dare ſay, ſpecially, if they will come to it) to a Feaſt, upon Eaſter-day. Cuſtome in Scotland. Sedulius.

But for both, none ſo worthy a witneſſe, as the Emperour Conſtantine, who in his Reſcript about Eaſter, directed to all Churches, expreſly nameth this Iſle, the Iſle of Britannie, among thoſe places, where this cuſtome was duly and orderly obſerved. Cuſtome in both. Conſtantine.

All this while the Church had reſt: during the perſecution, how went it? Two we will take in, in the paſſage betweene the times of peace, and perſecution. 6. Proofe. From the Fathers in the firſt 200. yeares of perſecution. Two, between peace and perſecution. Lactantius. Pierius. Hier. de Scr. 76.

1 Lactantius, the moſt part of his life, lived under the perſecution, but dyed in the Churches peace. 2 So did Pierius of Alexandria (for his excellent learning, called Origen the younger.) In Lactantius ſeventh booke, and nineteenth Chapter, there is a plaine teſtimony for the ſolemne keeping of Eaſter-eve. And Pierius (ſaith Saint Hierom) hath a long Sermon upon the Prophet Hoſee, made by him and preached at the ſolemne aſſembly on Eaſter-eve. And if the Eve were ſo held, we make no doubt of the day.

1. Now in the middeſt of the perſecution, there fell out a ſpeciall caſe of Philip the Emperour, (ſuppoſed to have given his owne and his ſonnes name to the Chriſtian profeſſion, as Euſebius reporteth:) in ſigne thereof, He, on Eaſter-eve offered to joyne himſelfe at the Church-ſervice, as knowing that to be their chiefeſt ſolemnitie: which they failed not to keepe, no not then, when their caſe was at the hardeſt. Vnder the perſecution. The fact of Philip the Emperour. L. 6. c. 34.

2. And even then at Alexandria, Dionyſius the Biſhop there, held this cuſtome. Thus writes hee to Hierax (a Biſhop too) and to others: out of priſon, That, though the perſecution then raged much, and the plague more; yet were the Chriſtians, even then, ſo carefull not to breake this cuſtome, as they kept their Eaſter, ſome in woods, ſome on ſhip-board, ſome in barnes and ſtables; yea, they in the very goale, keepe it they did even then, perſecution and plague both notwithſtanding. Euſeb. l. 7. c. 22. Dionyſ. Alex.

3. Cyprian held this cuſtome: Not by his Homily (I wave it, as doubtfull:) but in foure of his Epiſtles I finde it. I name but one, his LIII. Some had conſulted him, in a queſtion of ſome difficultie. Hee writes backe, It was now Eaſter, his brethren were from him, every one at his owne charge, ſolemnizing the Feaſt with their people. So ſoone as the Feaſt was over, and they met againe, they ſhould heare from him, he would take their opinions, and returne them a ſound anſwer. Cyprian. Epiſt. 21. 24. 40.

4. Origen had this cuſtome. In his VIII. againſt Celſus, frankely he confeſſeth, That other Feaſts, Eaſter by name, the Chriſtians held them; and that (as he ſaith) πεμνότερον, in more ſolemne manner, than Celſus, or any heathen-men of them all, held theirs. Origen.

* Tertullianus de coronâ mil. c. 3. ad uxorem l. 2. c. 4. contr. Marc. 4. 3. 5. 4.

5. Tertullian had this cuſtome. * Many places in him. Onely one I cite, in the fourteenth chapter, de Ieiunio: Quod ſi omnem in totum devotionem dierum eraſit Apoſtolus, cur Paſcha celebramus annuo circulo? If it were the Apoſtles minde, to race out all devout obſerving of dayes quite, how comes it to paſſe, we celebrate Eaſter yearely, at the circle of the yeare turning about?

Irenæus.

6. Irenæus had this cuſtome: His Epiſtle to Victor ſheweth it: to Victor, and to many more (ſaith Euſebius) about that queſtion, (underſtand ſtill the queſtion of the time, not of the Feaſt.) A booke alſo (we finde) he wrote de Paſchate, in the 115. quæſt. in Iuſtin Martyr. So, he will be for it, certainly. Euſeb. l. 5. c. 26.

Seven bookes then written for it. Euſeb. l. 7. c. 32. Hier. de Scrip. 43. Hieron. de Scriptor. 44. Ibidem 61. Ibidem 38. Ibidem 24.

7. And it is ſtrange, even during the perſecution, how many bookes we finde written, to deduce the cuſtome by. [1] Beſide that of Irenæus, [2] One by Anatolius the great learned Biſhop of Laodicea: [3] By Theophilus Biſhop of Cæſarea, and [4] by Bacchyllus Biſhop of Corinth, either of them one. [5] Another by Hyppolitus, that made up the firſt cycle. Yet, [6] another by Clemens Alexandrinus. And laſt, which indeed was firſt in time of all, two bookes, [7] by the holy Martyr and Prophet Melito Biſhop of Sardis, (in the next Age to the Apoſtles themſelves) ſet forth by him (as he ſaith) at the time of the Feaſt, and in the very holy-dayes of it.

7. Proofe. From Councels in the perſecutim.
1 Paleſtine.
2 Pontus.
3 Oſrhoena.
4 Italy.
5 France.
6 Græcia.
7 Aſia minor.
Euſeb. l. 5. c. 23.

Nay, there wanted not Councels then neither, and that in ſeven ſeverall parts of the world at once: all in the midſt of the fervour of the firy triall, when the Church (GOD wot) could but evill intend it. It was no time to contend then. But it ſhewes, they made a matter of it, and no ſlight reckoning of the retaining it. Elſe might they have ſlipt it, without any more adoe.

Enough (I trow) to ſhew, ſuch a cuſtome there was in all the Churches, theſe parties lived in, which were all the Churches GOD then had. They muſt needs ſeeme contentious, that will contend againſt all theſe. I ſee not how they can ſcape the Apoſtles Si quis, that doe. And this I ſay, if ſome one example of ſome eminent man of worth, will ſerve to make an authoritie: If, that: Then this cloud of witneſſes, and thoſe [1] not perſons, but whole Councels and Churches: [2] not in ſome one Region, but in divers, all the world over: [3] and that not for one time, but ſo many ages ſucceſſively continued, from generation to generation: what manner of authoritie ought that to be? the greateſt ſure, and none greater, but of GOD Himſelfe.

Proofes. That this cuſtome was Apoſtolike. 1. Proofe by teſtimony. Auguſtine.

Now to (Nos) that is, to the Apoſtles themſelves. Firſt, that it was a cuſtome Apoſtolike and ſo taken, Saint Auguſtine is direct in his CXVIII. Epiſtle to Ianuarius, who had purpoſely ſent to him, to know his opinion touching certaine queſtions, all of them about Eaſter. Thus ſaith he there. For ſuch things as come to us not by writing, but by practice (and yet ſuch as are obſerved quite thorow the world) we are given to underſtand, they come commended to us, and were inſtituted either by the Apoſtles themſelves, or by generall Councels, whoſe authoritie hath ever beene accounted of, as wholeſome in the Church. Now what be thoſe things ſo generally obſerved toto orbe terrarum? Theſe: that the Paſſion, the Reſurrection, the Aſcenſion of CHRIST, and the comming of the HOLY GHOST from heaven, anniverſariâ ſolennitate celebrantur, are yearely in ſolemne manner celebrated. And (ſaith he) if there be any beſide theſe: for theſe, are moſt cleere.

Firſt, he is cleere, It was the cuſtome of the Church, farre and wide the world thorow. Then, that it muſt either by the Apoſtles be inſtitute, or by ſome Councell. Not by any Councell: Many met about the time: about the Feaſt never any: that, not queſtioned at all: taken pro confeſſo ever, and ſo, Apoſtolike. They be his owne words (lib. 4. de Bapt. contra Donat. cap. 24.) If the whole Church obſerve any thing, not having beene ordained by ſome generall Councell, rectiſſimè creditur, we are to beleeve, rectiſſimè, by as good right as any can be, right in the ſuperlative, that it came to us, non niſi ab Apoſtolis, from the Apoſtles, and from none elſe, nor by any other way. So Saint Auguſtine is for nos habemus talem. So he held it.

Conſtantine. Euſeb. l. 3. vita Conſtantin.

An hundred yeares before him, Conſtantine is as direct in his Epiſtle ad omnes Eccleſias. Many remarkable things there are in that Epiſtle. [1] The moſt holy Feaſt of Eaſter, foure times he calleth it. That is the good Emperours ſtyle, In ſo great a matter, matter, in so High a feast of our Religion to disagree ἀθεμίτον utterly unlawfull. And 3 τί καλλιον, τί σεμνότερον, what more honest, what more seemely, than that this Feast should bee inviolably kept, by which, we hold our hopes of immortalitie? (Marke that reason well.)

But, for Apostolike: Be it lawfull for us Christians (saith hee) rejecting the Iewish manner, That day, ἀφ' ἧς τὰ πάθη ἡμέρας ἄρχει τὸ παρόντος ἐπιλαξάμην, which day ever since the very first day of His passion, we have to this present kept; to transmit the due observing of it, to all ages to come. Marke the words, 1 They had kept Easter from the first day of Christs passion, till that present time. 2 And after that, We have received it of our Saviour. 3 And yet againe, which our SAVIOVR delivered to us. And concludes, that 4 accordingly, when he came among them, he and they would keepe their Easter together. Nothing can bee more full, that in his time this custome was, and that it was reputed to have come from the Apostles, as begun from the very day of CHRISTS Passion. Which, Leo shortly, but fully expresseth, Legalis quippe festivitas dum mutatur, impletur. The legall Feast of the Passeover, at the fulfilling of it, was changed both at once. Fulfilled and changed, at one time, both. No distance betweene. And fulfilled (I am sure) it was in the Apostles time, and so changed then also.

Leo Hom. 7. de Passione.

If you will see it deduced in storie, that may you too. Thus, Of himselfe Irenæus writeth, that he was brought up in Asia under Polycarpus; and that he (yong though he were) observed and remembred well all his course of life. And namely, how comming to Rome in Anicetus time, he kept his Easter there. Not when Anicetus kept it, but keepe it he did though. In the keeping they agreed: in the time they differed. Either held his owne.

2 Proofe, by storie. Euseb. 4 c. 14.

Iren. l. 3. c. 3. Tertul. de præscript. c. 32. Polycarpus kept Easter with S. Iohn and the rest of the Apostles.

Polycarpus then kept Easter. Now Polycarpus, had lived and conversed with the Apostles, was made Bishop by them, Bishop of Smyrna, (Irenæus and Tertullian say it directly) and he is supposed to be the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, Revel. 2. 8. And Polycarpus (as saith Irenæus) kept Easter with S. IOHN, and with the rest of the Apostles, totidem verbis. Euseb. lib. 5. c. 26.

Μετὰ Ἰωάννου τοῦ μαθητοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν, καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν Ἀποστόλων τοῖς συνδιέτριβεν ἀεὶ τετηρηκώς. Euseb. l. 5. 14.

Polycrates in his Epistle there (in Eusebius) expresly saith, that S. Philip the Apostle kept it. If S. Philip and S. Iohn (by name) If the rest of the Apostles had it, then nos habemus is true; then it is Apostolike.

S. Philip the Apostle kept it

But yet we have a more sure ground than all these: The LORDS Day hath testimonie in Scripture, I insist upon that; that Easter-day must needs be as ancient as it. For how came it to be the Lords Day? but that, as it is in the Psalme, the Lord made it? And why made He it? but because on it, the Stone cast aside (that is CHRIST) was made the Head-stone of the corner? that is, becaus then the LORD rose, becaus his Resurrection fell upon it?

3 Proofe from the Lords Day. Apoc. 1. 10. Psal. 1. 88. Aug. Ep. 119. 13. Dies dominicus Christianis Resurrectione Domini declaratus est, & ex illo habere cæpit festivitatem suam.

Now what a thing were it, that all the Sundayes in the yeere that are but abstracts (as it were) of this day, (the very day of the Resurrection) that they should be kept: and this day, the day it selfe, the prototype and archetype of them all, should not be kept, but laid aside quite, and be cleane forgotten? That, the day in the weeke we should keepe; and the day in the moneth it selfe, and returne of the yeere, we should not keepe? Even of every congruitie, it is to be as they, and somewhat more.

Take example by our selves. For His Majesties deliverance the fift of August: for His Majesties, and ours, the fift of November (being Tuesday both:) for these a kinde of remembrance we keepe, one Tuesday every weeke in the yeare. But when by course of the yeere in their severall moneths, the very originall dayes themselves come about; shall we not, do we not celebrate them in much more solemne manner? what question is there? weigh them well you will finde the case alike. One cannot be, but the other also must be Apostolike.

4 Proofe of the Churches custome for Easter. 1 The custome of Baptisme. 2 The custome of the censures then determining.

1 For the last proofe I have yet reserved, one: or rather, three in one. 1 The custome of Baptisme, knowne to have beene ministred as upon that day, all the Primitive Church through. A thing so knowne, as their Homilies de Baptismo were most upon that day. Saint Basils I name. In his upon Easter-day, he shewes the custome of baptizing then, and the reason for it.

2 The use of the keyes, at that time specially. Then, were the censures inflicted: then then were they releaſed. 1 Inflicted. Againſt that time, did Saint Paul cut off the inceſtuous perſon, that a little leven might not ſowre them all. Even againſt the time that CHRIST our Paſſeover was offered, and they therefore to hold this Feaſt. 2 Releaſed. So you ſhall finde the Councell of Ancyra (elder than that of Nice) order, the cenſures ſhould determine all, endure no longer than the Great Day (ſo, in their common ſpeech they termed Eaſter) and then, all to be reſtored. 3 To which purpoſe the Councell of Nice tooke order, there ſhould be in Lent, a Synode yearely to this end: that by it, all quarrels being taken up, and all things ſet ſtraight, they might be in better caſe, to come with their oblation at Eaſter to the Sacrament.

Can. 5.

3 The cuſtome of a Communion.

And laſt, by the never broken cuſtome of a ſolemne Euchariſt, ever upon this day. Origen in his ſeventh upon Exodus, he ſaith, Our Eaſter-day farre paſſeth the Iewiſh Eaſter. They had no Manna on theirs: (The Paſſeover was eaten in Ægypt: Manna, came not till they were in the wilderneſſe:) But we (ſaith hee) we never keepe our Paſſeover, but we are ſure of Manna upon it, the true Manna, the Bread of life that came downe from Heaven. For they had no Eaſter then, without a Communion.

Iohn 6. 50, 58.

Hom. 6. de Quadrag.

Leo joynes both; (he might well all three.) Paſchalis quippe ſolennitatis hoc eſt proprium, This is a peculiar that Eaſter-day hath, ut in eâ tota Eccleſia, remiſſione gaudeat peccatorum: That on it, all the whole Church obtaineth remiſſion of their ſinnes. One part, qui ſacro Baptiſmate renaſcuntur, by vertue of the ſolemne Baptiſme then miniſtred: The reſt, by benefit of the Euchariſt they then receive; ad rubiginem mortalitatis (it is his terme) to the ſcouring off the ruſt, which our mortality gathereth by the ſinnes and errours of the whole yeare.

I will conclude all, with the words which S. Ambroſe concludes his LXXXIII. (his Paſchall Epiſtle, with) to the Biſhops of Æmilia: Ergo, cum tot veritatis indicia concurrant, juxta majorum exemplum, Feſtum hoc publicæ ſalutis, lætiexultanteſque celebremus. Since then there be ſo many proofes for this truth that thus meet: according to the example of our fore-fathers, let us with joy and gladneſſe keepe this Feaſt of our common ſalvation. How? Sumamus ſpiritu ferventi Sacramentum in azymis ſinceritatis. Let us receive the holy Sacrament, with the ſweet-bread of ſincerity. Poſtes noſtros, ubi eſt oſtium verbi, ſanguine CHRISTI, in fide paſſionis, coloremus. The poſtes of the doore of our mouth (that is, our lips) let us dye them with the Bloud of CHRIST, in the faith of His bleſſed Paſſion. Enſuing the ſteps of the Apoſtles and the Churches of GOD (all:) with whom joyning in both, let us expect the bleſſing of GOD upon us, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at WHITE-HALL, on the XVI. of April, A. D. MDCXX. being EASTER-DAY.

IOHN Chap. XX.

VERSE 11 But Mary, ſtood by the Sepulcher, weeping: and as ſhee wept, ſhee ſtooped, and looked into the Sepulcher.

12. And ſaw two Angels, in white, ſitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet, where the Body of IESVS had lyen.

13. And they ſaid to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? Shee ſaid to them, They have taken away my LORD, and I know not where they have laid Him.

14. When ſhee had thus ſaid, ſhee turned her ſelfe about, and ſaw IESVS ſtanding, and knew not, that it was IESVS.

15. IESVS ſaith to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? Whom ſeekeſt thou? She (ſuppoſing He had beene the gardiner) ſaid to Him, Sir, if thou have borne Him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid Him, and I will take Him thence.

16. IESVS ſaith to her, Mary: She turned her ſelfe, and ſaid to Him, Rabboni; that is to ſay, Maſter.

17. IESVS ſaid to her, Touch Me not, for I am not yet aſcended to my Father: But, goe to my brethren, and ſay to them, I aſcend to my Father and to your Father, and to my GOD and your GOD.

This laſt verſe was not touched.

IT is Eaſter-day abroad: And it is ſo in the Text. We keepe Salomons rule, Verbum diei in die ſuo: For, all this (I have read) is nothing elſe, but a report of CHRISTS riſing, and of His appearing this Eaſter-day morning, His very firſt appearing of all. Saint Marke is expreſſe for it, that CHRIST was no ſooner riſen this day, but, He appeared firſt of all to Mary Magdalen: which firſt appearing of His, is here by Saint Iohn extended, and ſet downe at large. 1 Reg. 8. 59. Mark. 16. 9.

The ſumme of it is, 1. The ſeeking CHRIST dead; 2. The finding Him alive.

The manner of it is, That Mary Magdalen ſtaying ſtill by the Sepulcher, firſt ſhe ſaw a viſion of Angels: and after, ſhee ſaw CHRIST Himſelfe. Saw Him, and was her ſelfe made an Angell by Him; a good Angell, to carry the Evangell, the firſt good and joyfull tidings of His riſing againe from the dead. And this was a great Act. 13. 33. honour (all conſidered) to ſerve in an Angels place. To doe that at His Reſurrection (His ſecond birth) that, at His firſt birth an Angell did. An Angell firſt publiſhed that; Mary Magdalen brought firſt notice of this. As he, to the Shepherds; ſo ſhe, to the Apoſtles, the Paſtours of CHRISTS flocke; by them to be ſpread abroad to the ends of the world.

To looke a little into it. 1. Mary is the name of a woman: 2. Mary Magdalen, of a ſinfull woman.

That, to a woman firſt; it agreeth well, to make even with Eve; that as by a woman came the firſt newes of death; ſo, by a woman alſo might come the firſt notice of the Reſurrection from the dead. And the place fits well: for, in a garden, they came, both.

That, to a ſinfull woman firſt; that alſo agrees well. To her firſt that moſt needed it: moſt needed it, and ſo firſt ſought it. And it agrees well, He be firſt found of her, that firſt ſought Him: Even in that reſpect ſhe was to be reſpected.

Hoſ. 2. 15. In which two, there is opened unto us a gate of hope, two great leaves (as it were:) one, that no infirmitie of ſex (for a woman we ſee:) the other, that no enormitie of ſinne (for a ſinfull woman, one that had the blemiſh, that ſhe went under the com-Luke 7. 37. mon name of peccatrix, as notorious and famous in that kinde:) That, neither of theſe, ſhall debarre any to have their part in CHRIST, and in His Reſurrection; any, that ſhall ſeeke Him in ſuch ſort, as ſhe did. For, either of theſe non obſtante, nay notwithſtanding both theſe, ſhe had the happineſſe; To ſee His Angels (and that was no ſmall favour:) to ſee CHRIST Himſelfe: And that, firſt of all, before all others, to ſee and ſalute Him: And, to receive a commiſſion from Him of Vade & dic, to goe and tell (that is, as it were) to be an Apoſtle, and that to the Apoſtles themſelves, to bring them the firſt good newes of CHRISTS riſing againe.

There are three Parties that take up the whole Text: and if I ſhould divide it, I would make thoſe three Parties the three parts; 1 Mary Magdalen, 2 the Angels, 3 and CHRIST our SAVIOVR.

I. Mary Magdalen begins her part in the firſt verſe, but ſhee goes along thorow them all.

II. Then the Angels part in the two verſes next: 1 Their appearing, 2 and their ſpeech to her: Appearing, in the twelth; Speech, in the thirteenth.

III. And laſt, CHRISTS part in all the reſt. 1 His appearing, 2 and Speech likewiſe. Appearing, firſt, unknowne, in the fourteenth, and His ſpeech then, in the fifteenth.

After, His appearing, and ſpeech againe, being knowne, in the ſixteenth and ſeventeenth. 1 Forbidding her, mane & tange, to ſtay and to touch; 2 and bidding her, Vade & dic, to get her quickly to His brethren, and tell them, His Reſurrection was paſt, for (aſcendo) He was taking thought for His Aſcenſion, and preparing for that. Thus lieth the order, and the parts.

The uſe will be, that we, in our ſeeking, carry our ſelves as ſhee did: and ſo may we have the happineſſe, that ſhe had, to finde CHRIST, as He is now to be found in the vertue of His Reſurrection.

Of

VER. XI.

But Marie ſtood by the Sepulcher, weeping: and as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped, and looked into the Sepulcher.

OF the favours vouchſafed this ſame felix peccatrix (as the Fathers terme her) this day, 1 To ſee but CHRISTS Angells, 2 To ſee CHRIST at all, 3 To ſee him firſt of all, 4 But, more than all theſe, to be imployed by him in ſo heavenly an errand; reaſon we can render none, that helped her to theſe, but that, which in a place Chriſt Himſelfe renders, Quiâ dilexit multùm, becauſe ſhe loved much. Luc. 7. 47.

She loved much: we cannot ſay, She beleeved much. For, by her ſuſtulerunt thrice repeated (the ſecond, thirteenth, fifteenth verſes) it ſeemes, ſhe beleeved no more, than juſt as much as the High Prieſts would have had the world beleeve, that he was taken away by night.

Defectus fidei non eſt negandus, affectus amoris non eſt vituperandus: It is Origen. Wee cannot commend her faith; her love, we cannot but commend; and ſo doe: Commend it in her, commend it to you. Much it was, and much good proofe gave ſhe of it. Before, to him living: now, to Him dead. To Him dead, there are diverſe: 1 She was laſt at His croſſe, and firſt at His grave: 2 Staied longeſt there, was ſooneſt here: 3 Could not reſt, till ſhe were up to ſeeke Him: 4 Sought Him, while it was yet darke, before ſhe had light to ſeeke Him by. Matt. 28. 1.

But, to take her as we finde her in the Text, and to looke no whither elſe. There are, in the Text, no leſſe than ten, all arguments of her great love: all, as it were a commentarie upon dilexit multùm. And even in this firſt verſe, there are five of them.

The firſt in theſe words; ſtabat juxta monumentum, that ſhe ſtood by the grave. 1
A place, where faint love loves not to ſtand. Bring Him to the grave, and lay Him in the grave, and there leave Him: but come no more at it, nor ſtand not long by it. Stand by Him, while He is alive, ſo did many; ſtand, and goe, and ſit by Him. But, ſtans juxta monumentum, ſtand by Him dead; Marie Magdalen, ſhe did it, and ſhe onely did it, and none but ſhe. Amor ſtans juxta mouumentum.

The next in theſe, Maria autem ſtabat. But Marie ſtood. In the autem, the but 2
(that helpes us to another.) But Marie ſtood (that is as much to ſay, as) others did not, But, ſhe did. Peter and Iohn were there but even now. Thither they came, Verſe 8.
but not finding Him, away they went. They went: But Marie went not, ſhe ſtood ſtill. Their going away commends her ſtaying behinde. To the grave ſhee came before them, from the grave ſhe went to tell them, to the grave ſhe returnes with them, at the grave ſhe ſtayes behinde them. Fortior eam figebat affectus, ſaith Auguſtine a ſtronger affection fixed her; ſo fixed her, that ſhe had not the power to remove thence. Goe who would, ſhe would not, but ſtay ſtill. To ſtay, while others doe ſo, while companie ſtayes, that is the worlds love: But Peter is gone, and Iohn too: all are gone, and wee left alone; then to ſtay, is love, and conſtant Love. Amor manens, aliis recedentibus, Love, that when others ſhrinke and give over, holds out ſtill.

The third in theſe, ſhee ſtood, and ſhe wept: and, not a teare or two; but ſhe wept 3 a good (as we ſay;) that the Angells, that CHRIST Himſelfe pitie her, and both of them, the firſt thing they doe, they aske her, why ſhe wept ſo? Both of them begin with that queſtion. And, in this, is love. For, if, when CHRIST ſtood at Lazarus's Ioh. 11. 36.
graves ſide and wept, the Iewes ſaid, See how He loved him: may not we ſay the very ſame; ſame, when Marie ſtood at Chriſts grave and wept: See, how ſhe loved Him? Whoſe preſence ſhe wiſhed for, His miſſe ſhe wept for; whom ſhe dearely loved, while ſhe had Him, ſhe bitterly bewailed, when ſhe loſt Him. Amor amarè flens, Love running downe the cheekes.

4 The fourth in theſe, And as ſhe wept, ſhee ſtooped, and looked in, ever and anon. That is, ſhe did ſo weepe, as, ſhe did ſeeke withall. Weeping without ſeeking, is but to ſmall purpoſe. But, her weeping hindred not her ſeeking; Her ſorrow dulled not her diligence. And, diligence is a character of love, comes from the ſame roote, dilectio and diligentia from diligo, both. Amor diligentiam diligens.

5 To ſeeke, is one thing: not to give over ſeeking, is another. For, I aske, why ſhould ſhee now looke in? Peter and Iohn had looked there before; nay, had beene in the grave (they.) It makes no matter: ſhe will not truſt Peters eyes, nor Iohns, neither. But, ſhe her ſelfe had before this, looked in (too.) No force, ſhe will not truſt her ſelfe, ſhe will ſuſpect her owne eyes, ſhe will rather thinke, ſhe looked not well before, than leave off her looking. It is not enough for love, to looke in once. Thus we uſe, this is our manner when we ſeeke a thing ſeriouſly; where we have ſought already, there to ſeeke againe, thinking we did it not well, but, if we now looke againe, better we ſhall ſurely finde it, then. Amor quærens ubi quæſivit: Love, that never thinkes, it hath looked enough. Theſe five.

And, by theſe five, we may take meaſure of our love, and of the true multum of it. Vt proſit nobis ejus ſtare, ejus plorare, & quærere (ſaith Origen) that her ſtanding, her weeping, and ſeeking, we may take ſome good by them.

I doubt, ours will fall ſhort. Stay by Him alive, that we can, juxta menſam: but juxta monumentum, who takes up His ſtanding there? And our love it is dry-eyed, it cannot weepe: it is ſtiffe-joynted, it cannot ſtoope to ſeeke. If it doe, and we hit not on Him at firſt, away we goe, with Peter and Iohn; we ſtay it not out with Mary Magdalen. A ſigne, our love is little, and light, and our ſeeking ſutable, and ſo, it is without ſucceſſe. We finde not Chriſt, no mervaile: but, ſeeke Him as ſhe ſought Him, and we ſhall ſpeede, as ſhe ſped.

And ſaw two Angells, in white, ſitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet, where the bodie of Ieſus had lien.

For what came of this? Thus ſtaying by it, and thus looking in, againe and again, though ſhe ſaw not Chriſt at firſt, ſhe ſees His Angells. For ſo it pleaſed Chriſt to come by degrees: His Angells, before Him. And, it is no vulgar honour, this, to ſee but an Angell: what would one of us give to ſee but the like ſight?

We are now at the Angells Part. Their appearing, in this verſe. There are foure points in it: 1 Their place, 2 Their habit, 3 Their ſite, 4 and their order. 1 Place, in the grave, 2 Habit, in white, 3 ſite, they were ſitting, 4 and their order in ſitting, one at the head, the other at the feet.

1 The Place, In the grave ſhe ſaw them: and Angells in a grave, is a ſtrange ſight, a ſight never ſeene before; not till Chriſts body had beene there, never, till this day; this the firſt newes of Angells in that place. For, a grave, is no place for Angells (one would thinke;) for wormes rather: Bleſſed Angells, not but in a bleſſed place. But ſince CHRIST lay there, that place is bleſſed. There was a voice heard from heaven, Bleſſed be the dead: Precious the death, Glorious the memorie now, of them that die in the Lord. And, even this, that the Angells diſdained not now to come thither, and to ſit there, is an auſpicium of a great change to enſue in the ſtate of that place. Quid glorioſius Angelo? quid vilius vermiculo? ſaith Auguſtine. Qui fuit vermiculorum locus, eſt & Angelorum. That which was the place for wormes, is become a place for Angells.

Rev. 14. 13. Pſal. 116. 15.

Their

Their Habit, In white. So were there diverſe of them, diverſe times, this day, ſeene, in white, all; in that colour. It ſeemes to be their Eaſter-day colour, for at this Feaſt, they all doe their ſervice in it. Their Eaſter-day colour, for it is the colour of the Reſurrection. The ſtate whereof when Chriſt would repreſent upon the Mount, His raiment was all white, no Fuller in the earth could come neere it. And our colour it ſhall be, when riſing againe, we ſhall walke in white robes, and follow the Lambe whitherſoever He goeth. 2 Revel. 7. 9.

Heaven mourned on Good-friday; the Eclipſe made all then in blacke. Eaſter-day, it rejoyceth, Heaven and Angells, all in white. Salomon tells us, it is the colour of joy. And that is the ſtate of joy, and this the day of the firſt joyfull tydings of it, with joy ever celebrated, even in albis, eight dayes together, by them that found CHRIST. Eccleſ. 9. 8.

In white, and ſitting: As the colour, of joy; ſo, the ſituation, of reſt. So wee ſay, Sit downe, and reſt. And ſo, is the grave made by this mornings worke, a place of reſt. Reſt, not from our labours onely, ſo doe the beaſts reſt when they die: But as it is in the XVI. Pſalme (a Pſalme of the reſurrection) a reſt in hope; hope, of riſing againe, the members in the vertue of their head, who this day is riſen. So, to enter into the reſt, which yet remaineth for the people of GOD, even the Sabbath eternall. 3 Pſal. 16. 9. Heb. 4. 9.

Sitting, and in this order ſitting, at the head, one; at the feet, another, where His bodie had lien. 4

1 Which order may well referre to CHRIST Himſelfe, whoſe body was the true Arke indeed, In which it pleaſed the GOD-head to dwell bodily; and is therefore here betweene two Angells, as was the Arke (the type of it) betweene the two Cherubims. Col. 2. 9. Exod. 25. 19.

2 May alſo referre to Marie Magdalen. She had annointed His head, She had annointed His feete: at theſe two places, ſit the two Angells, as it were to acknowledge ſo much for her ſake. Mat. 26. 7. Ioh. 11. 3.

3 In myſterie, they referre it thus. Becauſe Caput Chriſti Deus, the God-head is the head of CHRIST, and His feete (which the Serpent did bruiſe) His manhood; that either of theſe hath his Angell. That, to CHRIST man, no leſſe than to CHRIST God, the Angels doe now their ſervice. In principio erat verbum, His God-head; there, an Angell: Verbum caro factum, His man-hood; there, another. And let all the Angells of GOD worſhip Him in both. Even in His man-hood, at His cradle (the head of it) a queere of Angells; at His grave (the feete of it) Angells likewiſe. 1 Cor. 11. 3. Gen. 3. 15. Heb. 1. 6. Luc. 2. 13.

4. And laſtly, for our comfort (thus.) That, henceforth even ſuch ſhall our graves be, if we be ſo happy as to have our parts in the firſt reſurrection, which is of the ſoule from ſinne. We ſhall goe to our graves in white (in the comfort, and colour of hope) lie betweene two Angels, there: they guard our bodies dead, and preſent them alive againe at the Reſurrection. Revel. 20. 6.

1. Yet before we leave them, to learne ſomewhat of the Angels: ſpecially, of the Angell that ſate at the feete. That, betweene them there was no ſtriving for places. He that ſate at the feete, as well content with his place, as he that at the head. We, to be ſo, by their example. For, with us, both the Angels would have beene at the head, never an one at the feet: with us, none would be at the feet by his good will; Head-Angels all.

2. Againe, from them both. That, inaſmuch, as the head ever ſtands for the beginning, and the feet for the end, that we be carefull, that our beginnings only be not glorious (O an Angel at the head in any wiſe;) but that we looke to the feet, there be another there, too. Ne turpiter atrum Deſinat, that it end not in a blacke Angel, that began in a white. And this for the Angels appearing.

VER.

VER. 13

And they ſaid to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? She ſaid to them, They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him.

Their queſtion.

Now to their ſpeech. It was not a dumbe ſhew, this, a bare apparition, and ſo vaniſhed away. It was viſio & vox, a vocall viſion. Here is a dialogue, too: The Angells ſpeake to her.

And they aske her, Quid ploras? Why ſhee wept? what cauſe ſhee had to weepe. They meane, ſhe had none (as indeed, no more ſhe had.) All was in error, piæ lachrymæ, ſed cæcæ, teares of griefe, but falſe griefe, imagining that to be, that was not, Him to be dead, that was alive. She weepes, becauſe ſhe found the grave empty, which GOD forbid ſhe ſhould have found full, for then CHRIST muſt have beene dead ſtill, and ſo, no Reſurrection.

Gregorie.

And this caſe of Mary Magdalen is our caſe oftentimes. In the error of our conceit to weepe, where wee have no cauſe; to joy, where wee have as little. Where we ſhould, where we have cauſe to joy, we weepe: and, where to weepe, we joy. Our ploras hath never a quid. Falſe joyes, and falſe ſorrowes, falſe hopes, and falſe feares this life of ours is full of, GOD helpe us.

Now becauſe ſhe erred, they aske her the cauſe, that ſhe alledging it, they may take it away, and ſhew it to bee no cauſe. As the elench, à non cauſâ pro cauſâ makes foule rule among us, beguiles us, all our life long.

Her anſwer.

Will yee heare her anſwer to, Why weepe you? Why? ſuſtulerunt, that was the cauſe, Her Lord was gone, was taken away.

1 And a good cauſe it had beene, if it had beene true. Any have cauſe to grieve, that have loſt, loſt a good Lord, ſo good and gracious a Lord, as Hee had beene to her.

2 But that is not all: a worſe matter, a greater griefe than that. When one dieth, we reckon him taken away, that is one kind of taking away. But His dead body is left; ſo, all is not taken from us; That was not her caſe. For, in ſaying (her Lord) ſhe means not, Her Lord alive, that is not it: ſhe meanes not, they had ſlaine Him, they had taken away His life (ſhe had wept her fill for that, already.) But, her Lord, that is, His dead body. For, though His life was gone, yet His body was left. And, that was all, ſhe now had left of Him (that, ſhe cals Her Lord) and, that, they had taken away from her, too. A poore one it was, yet ſome comfort it was to her, to have even that left her, to viſite, to annoint, to doe other offices of love, even to that. Etiam viſo cadavere recaleſcit amor, at the ſight, even of that, will love revive, it will fetch life of love againe. But now, here is her caſe; that, is gone, and all, and nothing, but an empty grave, now left to ſtand by. That S. Auguſtine ſaith well, ſublatus de monumento, grieved her more, than occiſus in ligno, for, then ſomething yet was left; now, nothing at all. Right ſuſtulerunt, taken away quite and cleane.

Ambroſ.

3 And thirdly, her neſcio ubi. For though He be taken away, it is ſome comfort yet, if we know where to fetch Him againe. But here, He is gone without all hope of recovery, or getting againe. For they (but ſhe knew not who) had carryed Him (ſhe knew not whither) laide Him (ſhe knew not where) there to do to Him (ſhe knew not what.) So that now ſhe knew not, whither to goe, to finde any comfort. It was neſcio ubi, with her right. Put all theſe together, His life taken away, His body taken away, and carried no man knowes whither; and doe they aske, why ſhee wept? or, can any blame her for it?

Her errour.

The truth is, none had taken away Her Lord, for all this: for, all this while Her Lord was well, was, as ſhe would have had Him, alive and ſafe. He went away of him.

Himſelfe, none carried Him thence. What of that? Non credens ſuſcitatum, credidit ſublatum, for want of beleefe He was riſen, ſhee beleeved, He was carried away. Shee erred in ſo beleeving, there was errour in her love, but there was love in her errour too.

And, give me leave to lay out three more arguments of her love, out of this verſe (to make up eight, towards the making up of her multum.) Yet, her love.

The very title ſhe gives Him, of Dominum meum, is one, My LORD, that ſhee gives Him that terme. For, it ſhewes, her love and reſpect was no whit abated, by the ſcandall of His death. It was a moſt opprobrious, ignominious, ſhamefull death He ſuffered; ſuch, as in the eyes of the world, any would have beene aſhamed to owne Him (or ſay of Him, Meum:) but, any would have beene afraid to honour Him with that title, to ſtile Him, Dominum. She was neither. Meum, for hers; Dominum meum, for her LORD ſhe acknowledgeth Him, is neither aſhamed, nor afraid to continue that title ſtill. Amor ſcandalo non ſcandalizatus. 1

Another (which I take to be farre beyond this) That, ſhe having looked into the grave a little before, and ſeene never an Angell there; and of a ſudden looking in now, and ſeeing two, (a ſight, able to have amazed any; any, but her) It moves not her at all. The ſuddenneſſe, the ſtrangeneſſe, the glorioufneſſe of the ſight, yea, even of Angels, move her not at all. Shee ſeemes to have no ſenſe of it, and ſo to be in a kinde of extaſie all the while. Domine, propter te eſt extra ſe, ſaith Bernard. Amor extaſin patiens. 2

And thirdly, as that ſtrange ſight affected her not a whit: ſo neither did their comfortable ſpeech worke with her at all. Comfortable, I call it, for they that aske the cauſe, why, (why weepe you?) ſhew, they would remove it, if it lay in them. Neither of theſe did, or could move her; or make her once leave her weeping: ſhee wept on, ſtill (CHRIST will aske her, quid ploras? by and by againe.) If ſhee finde an Angell, if ſhe finde not her LORD, it will not ſerve. Shee had rather finde His dead body, than them in all their glory. No man in earth, no Angell in heaven can comfort her, none but He that is taken away, CHRIST, and none but CHRIST; and, till ſhe finde Him againe, her ſoule refuſeth all manner comfort: yea, even from Heaven, even from the Angels themſelves: Theſe three. Amor ſuper amiſſum renuens conſolari. 3

Thus ſhee, in her love, for her ſuppoſed loſſe, or taking away. And what ſhall become of us, in ours then? That loſe Him 1 not once, but oft; 2 And not in ſuppoſe, as ſhe did, but in very deed; 3 And that, by ſinne (the worſt loſſe of all;) 4 And that, not by any others taking away, but by our owne act, and wilfull default; and are not grieved, nay not moved a whit, breake none of our wonted ſports for it, as if we reckoned Him, as good loſt, as found. Yea, when CHRIST and the HOLY GHOST, and the favour of GOD, and all is gone, how ſoone, how eaſily are we comforted againe for all this? that, none ſhall need to ſay, quid ploras? to us, rather, quid non ploras? aske us, why we weepe not, having ſo good cauſe to doe it, as we then have? This for the Angels part.

When ſhee had thus ſaid, ſhee turned her ſelfe about, and ſaw IESVS ſtanding, and knew not that it was IESVS.

Alwayes the Angels, (we ſee) touched the right ſtring, and ſhee tells them the wrong cauſe, but yet the right, if it had beene right.

Now, to this anſwer of hers, they would have replyed, and taken away her errour touching her LORDS taking away; that if ſhee knew all, ſhee would have left her ſeeking, and ſet her downe by them: and left her weeping, and beene in white as well as they.

But, here is a Superſedeas to them: The LORD Himſelfe comes in place. (Now come we from the ſeeking Him dead, to the finding Him alive.) For, when He ſaw, no Angels, no ſight, no ſpeech of theirs would ſerve, none but her LORD could give her any comfort; Her LORD comes. CHRISTVS adeſt.

Adeſt CHRISTVS, nec ab eis unquam abeſt, à quibus quæritur, ſaith Auguſtine, CHRIST is found, found by her; And this caſe of hers, ſhall be the caſe of all that ſeriouſly ſeeke Him. This woman here, for one, ſhe ſought Him (we ſee.) They that went to Emmaus to day, they but talked of Him ſadly, and they both found Him. Why, Hee is found of them that ſeeke Him not, Eſay 65.1. but, of them that ſeeke Him, never but found. For, Thou LORD never faileſt them that ſeeke Thee, Pſalme 9.10. GOD is not unrighteous, to forget the worke and labour of their love that ſeeke Him, Heb.6.10.

So, finde Him they ſhall, but happily not all ſo fully at firſt, no more than ſhee did. For, firſt (to try her yet a little further) He comes unknowne, ſtands by her, and ſhe little thought it had beene He.

A caſe that likewiſe falls out full oft. Doubtleſſe, He is not farre from every one of Act.17.27. us, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Athenians. But He is neerer us many times than wee thinke; Iob 9.11. even hard by us, and we not aware of it, ſaith Iob. And, O ſi cognoviſſes & tu, O if we Luke 19.42. did know (and it ſtandeth us in hand to pray that we may know) when He is ſo, for, Luke 19.44. that is the time of our viſitation.

Saint Iohn ſaith here, the Angels were ſitting: Saint Luke ſaith, they ſtood, Luke 24.4. They are thus reconciled. That, CHRIST comming in preſence, the Angels which before were ſitting, ſtood up. Their ſtanding up, made Mary Magdalen turne her to ſee who it was they roſe to. And ſo, CHRIST ſhe ſaw, but knew Him not.

Not onely not knew Him, but mis-knew Him, tooke Him for the Gardiner. Teares will dimme the ſight, and it was yet ſcarce day, and ſhe, ſeeing one, and not knowing what any one ſhould make in the ground ſo early, but hee that dreſſed it, ſhee might well miſtake. But it was more than ſo: Her eyes were not holden only, that ſhe did not Luke 24.16. Marke 16.12. know Him, but over and beſide, He did appeare ἐτέρᾳ μορφῇ, in ſome ſuch ſhape, as might reſemble the Gardiner, whom ſhee tooke Him for.

Proper enough it was, it fitted well the time and place (this perſon.) The time, It was the Spring: the place, It was a garden (that place is moſt in requeſt at that time) for that place and time, a Gardiner doth well.

Of which her ſo taking Him, Saint Gregory ſaith well, Profectò errando non erravit. She did not miſtake in taking Him for a Gardiner: though ſhee might ſeeme to erre in ſome ſenſe, yet in ſome other ſhe was in the right. For, in a ſenſe, and a good ſenſe, CHRIST may well be ſaid to be a Gardiner, and indeed is one. For, our rule is, CHRIST, as He appeares, ſo He is, ever: No falſe ſemblant in Him.

1. A Gardiner He is then. The firſt, the faireſt garden that ever was (Paradiſe) He was the Gardiner, it was of His planting. So, a Gardiner.

2. And ever ſince it is He that (as GOD) makes all our gardens greene, ſends us yearely the Spring, and all the herbs and flowers we then gather; and neither Paul with his planting, nor Apollo with his watering, could doe any good without Him. So a Gardiner in that ſenſe.

3. But not in that alone; but Hee it is that gardens our ſoules too, and makes Ierem.31.12. them, as the Prophet ſaith, Like a well-watered Garden, weeds out of them whatſoever is noyſome or unſavoury, ſowes and plants them with true roots and ſeeds of righteouſneſſe, waters them with the dew of His grace, and makes them bring forth fruit to eternall life.

But it is none of all theſe, but beſides all theſe, nay over and above all theſe, this day (if ever) moſt properly He was a Gardiner. Was one, and ſo after a more peculiar manner, might take this likeneſſe on Him. CHRIST riſing was indeed a Gardiner, and that a ſtrange one, who made ſuch an herbe grow out of the ground this day, as the like was never ſeene before, a dead body, to ſhoot forth alive out of the grave.

I aske, was He ſo this day alone? No, but this profeſſion of His, this day begun, He will follow to the end. For, He it is, that by vertue of this mornings act, ſhall garden our bodies, too: turne all our graves into garden-plots: Yea, ſhall one day turne land and ſea and all into a great garden, and ſo husband them, as they ſhall in due time bring forth live bodies, even all our bodies alive againe.

Long before did Eſay ſee this and ſing of it, in his ſong Eſay 26. 19. reſembling the reſurrection to a Spring-garden. Awake and ſing (ſaith he) ye that dwell for a time are as it were ſowen in the duſt, for His dew ſhall be as the dew of herbs, and the earth ſhall ſhoot forth her dead. So then: He appeared no other, than Hee was: A Gardiner Hee was, not in ſhew alone, but opere & veritate, and ſo came in His owne likeneſſe. This for CHRISTS appearing. Now to His ſpeech (but, as unknowne ſtill.)

VER. 15.

IESVS ſaith to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? whom ſeekeſt thou? She (ſuppoſing He had been the Gardiner) ſaid to Him; Sir, if thou have borne Him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid Him, and I will take Him thence.

CHRISTS queſtion unknowne.

Still ſhe weepes: So He begins with quid ploras? askes the ſame queſtion the Angels had before; onely quickens it a little with Quem quæris, Whom ſeeke you? So, quem quæris, quærit à te quem quæris, whom ſhe ſought, He askes her whom ſhe ſought? Si quæris, cur non cognoſcis? ſi cognoſcis, cur quæris? ſaith Auguſtine. If ſhe ſeeke Him, why knowes ſhe Him not? If ſhe know Him, why ſeekes ſhe Him ſtill? A common thing with us (this alſo.) To ſeeke a thing, and when we have found it, not to know, we have ſo; but even CHRISTVM à CHRISTO quærere, to aske CHRIST for CHRIST. Which how-ever it fall in other matters, in this ſeeking of CHRIST, it is ſafe. Even when we ſeeke CHRIST, to pray to CHRIST, to helpe us to finde CHRIST; we ſhall doe it full evill without Him. Auguſtine.

This quid ploras? it comes now twice. The Angels asked it, we ſtood not on it then. Now, ſeeing CHRIST askes it againe, the ſecond time, we will thinke there is ſomething in it, and ſtay a little at it. The rather, for that it is the very opening of His mouth, the very firſt words that ever came from Him, that he ſpake firſt of all, after His riſing againe from death. There is ſure ſome more than ordinary matter in this quid ploras? if it be, but even for that.

Thus ſay the Fathers; [1] That Mary Magdalen ſtanding by the graves ſide, and there weeping; is thus brought in, to repreſent unto us, the ſtate of all mankinde before this day, the day of CHRISTS riſing againe, Weeping over the dead, as doe the heathen that have no hope: comes CHRIST with His quid ploras, Why doe you weepe? As much to ſay, as ne plores; Weepe not, why ſhould you weepe? There is no cauſe of weeping now. Hence-forth none ſhall need to ſtand by the grave to weepe there any more. A queſtion very proper for Eaſter-day, for the day of the Reſurrection. For, if there be a riſing againe, quid ploras? is right, why ſhould ſhe, why ſhould any weepe then? 1 Theſſ. 4. 13.

So that this quid ploras of CHRISTS, wipes away teares from all eyes, and as we ſing in the thirtieth Pſalme (whoſe title is, the Pſalme of the Reſurrection) puts off our ſackcloth, that is our mourning weeds, girds us with gladneſſe, puts us all in white with the Angels.

Ploras then, leave that for Good-friday, for His Paſſion: Weepe then, and ſpare not. But, quid ploras? for Eaſter-day, is in kinde (the Feaſt of the Reſurrection) why ſhould there be any weeping upon it? Is not CHRIST riſen? Shall not He raiſe us with Him? Is He not a Gardiner, to make our bodies ſowne, to grow againe? Ploras, leave that to the heathen, that are without all hope; but to the Chriſtian man, quid ploras? Why ſhould he weepe? he hath hopes; the Head is already riſen, the members ſhall, in their due time follow Him.

I obſerve, that foure times this day, at foure ſeverall appearings, [1] at the firſt (at this here) He asked her, quid ploras? Why she wept? 2 Of them that went to Emmaus, Luke 24.17. quid tristes estis? Why are ye sad? 3 Within a verse following (the 19.) He saith to the Eleven, Pax vobis, Peace be to them: 4 And to the women that met Him on the Matth. 28.9. way, χαίρετε, that is, Rejoyce, be glad. So, no weeping, no being sad: now; nothing this day, but peace and joy: they doe properly belong to this Feast.

And, this I note the more willingly, now, this yeare; becauſe the laſt Eaſter we could not ſo well have noted it. Some wept then; all were ſad, little joy there was; and there was a quid, a good cauſe for it. But bleſſed be GOD that hath now ſent us a more kindly Eaſter, of this, by taking away the cauſe of our ſorrow then, that we may preach of Quid ploras? and be far from it. So much for quid ploras? CHRISTS queſtion. Now to her anſwer.

Her anſwer. She is ſtill where ſhe was; at ſuſtulerunt before, at ſuſtuliſti, now: ſi tu ſuſtuliſti: we ſhall never get that word from her.

But, to CHRIST ſhe ſeemes ſomewhat more harſh, than to the Angels. To them ſhe complaines of others, They have taken. CHRIST ſhe ſeemes to charge, at leaſt to ſuſpect of the fact, as if Hee looked like one that had beene a breaker up of graves, a carrier away of Corſes out of their place of reſt. Her (if) implies as much. But pardon love: as it feares where it needs not, ſo it ſuſpects oft, where it hath no cauſe. Hee, or any that comes in our way, hath done it, hath taken Him away, when love is at a loſſe. But Bernard ſpeakes to CHRIST for her; Domine, amor quem habebat in Te, & dolor quem habebat de Te, excuſet eam apud Te, ſi fortè erravit circa Te; That the love ſhee bare to Him, the ſorrow ſhee had for Him, may excuſe her with Him, if ſhe were in any errour concerning Him, in her ſaying, Si Tu ſuſtuliſti.

Origen. And yet, ſee how GOD ſhall direct the tongue! In thus charging Him, Prophetat & neſcit, She ſayes truer than ſhe was aware. For indeed, if any tooke Him away, it was He did it. So, ſhee was not much amiſſe. Her ſi tu, was true, though not in her ſenſe. For, quod de ipſo factum eſt, ipſe fecit. All that was done to Him, He did Chryſologus. it Himſelfe. His taking away, virtus fuit, non facinus, was by His owne power, not by the act of any other: Et gloria, non injuria, No other mans injury it was, but His owne glory, that ſhe found Him not there. This was true, but this was no part of her meaning.

I cannot here paſſe over two more Characters of her love, that ſo you may have the full ten I promiſed.

1 One, in ſi tu ſuſtuliſti Eum, in her Eum, in her [Him.] Him? Which Him? Her affections ſeeme ſo to tranſport her, as ſhe ſayes no man knows what. To one, a meere ſtranger to her, and ſhe to him, ſhe talkes of one thrice under the terme of Him, If thou haſt taken Him away, tell me where thou haſt laid Him, and I will fetch Him; Him, Him, and Him, and never names Him, or tells who He is. This is Solæciſmus amoris, an irregular ſpeech, but love's owne dialect. Him, is enough with love, who knowes not who that is? It ſuppoſes every body, all the world bound to take notice of Him whom we looke for, onely by ſaying, Him; though we never tell His name, nor ſay a word more. Amor, quem ipſe cogitat, neminem putans ignorare.

2 The other is in her ego tollam; If He would tell her where He had laid Him, ſhe would goe fetch Him (that ſhe would.) Alaſſe poore woman, ſhe was not able to lift Him. There are more than one, or two either, allowed to the carrying of a corps.

John 9.39. As for His, it had more than an hundred pound weight of myrrhe and other odours upon it, beſide the poiſe of a dead body. She could not doe it. Well, yet ſhe would doe it, though. O mulier, non mulier (ſaith Origen) for ego tollam ſeemes rather the ſpeech of a Porter, or of ſome luſty ſtrong fellow at leaſt, than of a ſilly weake woman. But love makes women more than women, at leaſt it makes them have τὴν ἰσχὺν the courage above the ſtrength, farre. Never meaſures her owne forces, no burden too heavie, no aſſay too hard for love, & nihil erubeſcit niſi nomen difficultatis; and is not aſhamed of any thing, but that any thing ſhould be too hard or too heavie for it. Affectus ſine menſurâ virium propriarum. Both theſe argue dilexit multum. And ſo now, you have the full number of ten.

VER.

VER. 16.

IESVS ſaith to her, Mary: She turned her ſelfe, and ſaid to Him, Rabboni; that is to ſay, Maſter.

Now magnes amoris amor. Nothing ſo allures, ſo drawes love to it, as doth love it ſelfe. In CHRIST ſpecially, and in ſuch, in whom the ſame minde is. For, when her LORD ſaw, there was no taking away His taking away from her, all was in vaine, neither men, nor Angels, nor Himſelfe (ſo long as He kept Himſelfe Gardiner) could get any thing of her, but her LORD was gone, He was taken away; and that for the want of IESVS, nothing but IESVS could yeeld her any comfort: He is no longer able to containe, but even diſcloſes Himſelfe; And diſcloſes Himſelfe by His voice. CHRISTS ſecond ſpeech.

For, it ſhould ſeeme, before, with His ſhape, He had changed that alſo. But now, He ſpeakes to her in His knowne voice, in the wonted accent of it, does but name her name, Mary, no more, and that was enough. That was as much to ſay, Recognoſce à quo recognoſceris, ſhe would at leaſt take notice of Him, that ſhewed He was no ſtranger, by calling her by her name. For, whom we call by their names, we take particular notice of. So GOD ſayes to Moſes, Te autem cognovi de nomine, Thou, haſt found grace in My ſight, and I know thee by thy name. As GOD, Moſes; So CHRIST Mary Magdalen. Auguſtine. Exod. 33. 17.

And this indeed is the right way to know CHRIST; to be knowne of Him firſt. Gal. 4. 9. the Apoſtle ſaith, Now we have knowne GOD (and then correcteth himſelfe) or rather have beene knowne of GOD. For, till he know us, we ſhall never know Him aright.

And now, loe, CHRIST is found; found alive that was ſought dead. A cloud may be ſo thicke, we ſhall not ſee the Sunne thorow it. The Sunne muſt ſcatter that cloud, and then we may. Here is an example of it. It is ſtrange, a thicke cloud of heavineſſe had ſo covered her, as, ſee Him ſhe could not, thorow it: this one word, theſe two ſyllables [Mary] from His mouth, ſcatters it, all. No ſooner had His voice ſounded in her eares, but it drives away all the miſt, dries up her teares, lightens her eyes, that ſhe knew Him ſtraight, and anſwers Him with her wonted ſalutation, Rabboni. If it had lien in her power to have raiſed Him from the dead, ſhe would not have failed, but done it (I dare ſay.) Now, it is done to her hands. Her anſwer.

And with this, all is turned out and in. A new world, now. Away with ſuſtulerunt; His taking away, is taken away quite. For, if His taking away were her ſorrow; Contrariorum contraria conſequentia. Si de ſublato ploravit, de ſuſcitato exultavit, wee may be ſure: If ſad for His death, for His taking away; then glad for His riſing, for His reſtoring againe. Surely, if ſhe would have beene glad but to have found but His dead body; now ſhe findes it, and Him, alive, what was her joy, how great may we thinke? So that, by this ſhe ſaw, Quid ploras was not asked her for nought, that it was no impertinent queſtion, as it fell out. Well now, He that was thought loſt, is found againe: and found, not, as He was ſought for, not a dead body, but a living ſoule; nay, a quickening Spirit, then. And that might Mary Magdalen well ſay. He ſhewed it, for He quickned her and her Spirits, that were as good as dead. You thought you ſhould have come to CHRISTS Reſurrection to day, and ſo you doe. But not to His alone, but even to Mary Magdalens reſurrection, too. For, in very deed, a kinde of reſurrection it was, was wrought in her; revived, as it were, and raiſed from a dead and drooping, to a lively and chearefull eſtate. The Gardiner had done his part, made her all greene on the ſudden. Auguſtine. 2 Cor. 15. 45.

And all this, by a word of His mouth. Such power is there in every word of His; ſo eaſily are they called, whom CHRIST will but ſpeake to.

But, by this we ſee, when He would be made knowne to her after His riſing, He did chooſe to be made knowne by the eare rather than by the eye. By hearing rather than

Luc. 24. 16. Psal. 40. 6. than by appearing. Opens her eares first, and her eyes after. Her eyes were holden, till her eares were opened; comes aures autem aperuisti mihi, and that opens them.

With the Philosophers, hearing is the sense of wisdome. With us, in divinitie, it is the sense of faith. So, most meet. CHRIST is the Word, hearing then (that sense) is CHRISTS sense; voce quàm visu, more proper to the Word. So, sicut audivimus goes before, and then, sic vidimus comes after. In matters of faith the eare goes first, ever, and is of more use, and to be trusted before the eye. For, in many cases faith holdeth, where sight faileth.

Psal. 48. 8.

Psal. 95. 7. This then is a good way to come to the knowledge of CHRIST, by Hodiè si vocem, to heare His voice. Howbeit, it is not the onely way. There is another way to take notice of Him by, besides, and we to take notice of it. On this very day we have them both.

For, twice this day came CHRIST; unknowne first, and then knowne, after. To Mary Magdalen, here; and to them at Emmaus. Luc. Chap. 24. To Mary Magdalen unknowne, in the shape of a Gardiner. To those that went to Emmaus unknowne, in the likenesse of a Traveller by the way side. Come to be knowne to her by His voice, by the word of His mouth. Not so, to them. For, many words He spake to them, and they felt them warme at their hearts, but, knew Him not for all that. But, He was knowne to them in the breaking of the bread. Her eyes opened by speaking a word: their eyes opened by the breaking of bread. There is the one and the other way, and so now you have both. And now you have them, I pray you make use of them. (I see, I shall not be able to goe further than this verse.)

Luc 24. 32. 35.

It were a folly to fall to comparisons, committere inter se, to set them at oddes together, these two wayes: as the fond fashion now adayes is, whether is better, Prayer or Preaching: the Word, or the Sacraments. What needs this? Seeing wee have both, both are ready for us; the one now, the other by and by. We may end this question, soone. And this is the best and surest way to end it, to esteeme of them both, to thanke Him for both, to make use of both, having now done with one, to make triall of the other. It may be (who knowes) if the one will not worke, the other may. And if by the one or by the other, by either, if it be wrought, what harme have we? In case it be not; yet have wee offered to GOD our service in both, and committed the successe of both to Him. He will see they shall have successe, and in His good time (as shall be expedient for us) vouchsafe every one of us, as He did Mary Magdalen in the Text, to know Him and the vertue of His Resurrection; and make us partakers of both, by both the meanes before remembred, by His blessed Word, by His holy Mysteries; the meanes to raise our soules here, the pledges of the raising up of our bodies hereafter. Of both which Hee make us partakers, who is the Author of both, IESVS CHRIST the Righteous, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at WHITE-HALL, on the I. of April, A. D. MDCXXI. being EASTER-DAY.

IOHN XX. VER. XVII.

Dicit ei IESVS, Noli me tangere.

IESVS ſaith unto her, Touch me not.

Ary Magdalen, becauſe ſhee loved much, and gave divers good proofes of it, had this morning divers favours vouchſafed her: To ſee a vi- Verſe 12.
ſion of Angells: To ſee CHRIST Himſelfe: Verſe 14.
To ſee Him before any other, firſt of all: Hee Verſe 16.
ſpake to her, Mary; ſhee ſpake to Him, Rabboni: Hitherto all was well. Now, here, after all this love, after all theſe favours, even in the necke of them (as it were) comes an unkind word or two, a Noli me tangere, and marres all; turnes all out and in. Make the beſt of it, a repulſe it is: but a cold ſalutation for an Eaſter-day morning.

A little before Hee asked, Why ſhee wept? Verſe 15.
This is enough to ſet her on weeping afreſh. For if ſhe wept for ſuſtulerunt Dominum, that others had taken away her LORD: Much more, now, when her LORD takes away Himſelfe from her, that ſhee may not ſo much as touch Him.

We obſerved, that (this morning) CHRIST came in two ſhapes; and at either of them ſpake a ſpeech. At firſt, He came unknowne, taken for a Gardiner: the latter He ſpake in His owne voyce, and became knowne to her. I know not how; but, unknowne, CHRIST proves better to her, than when He came to be knowne: better for her, He had kept Himſelfe unknown ſtill. For, then unknown, He asked her kindly, Why ſhe wept? as much to ſay as, weepe not, Noli te angere, noli me plangere: there is ſome comfort in that. But knowne, He growes ſomewhat ſtrange on the ſodaine, and askes her, what ſhe meanes to come ſo neere Him, or offer to touch Him; which muſt needs be much to her diſcomfort, to be forbidden, once to come neere or touch her SAVIOVR: and to be forbidden by His owne mouth.

But there is a good uſe of noli me plangere, and noli me tangere, both. One, we have touched already: of the other, now. One would little thinke it, but they ſort well: Quid ploras? and Noli me tangere. Quid ploras? To rejoyce at his riſing: Noli me tangere, to doe it with reverence. They amount to exultate in tremore.

Pſal. 2. 11.

The Diviſion The verſe of it ſelfe, falls into two parts. We may divide it (as the Iewes do the Law) into Doe not, and Doe: ſomewhat forbidden there is, and ſomewhat bidden. Forbidden, doe not, not touch me: Bidden, but doe, Goe your wayes and tell. The forbidding part ſtands of two points: 1 a Reſtraint; and 2 a Reaſon, I. The Reſtraint in theſe: Noli me tangere, &c. 2. The Reaſon in theſe: Nondum enim, &c. for I am not yet aſcended, &c.

I.
II.

The Bidding part, of three, 1. a Miſſion or Commiſſion, to goe doe a meſſage, Vade & dic. 2. The Parties to whom: to my Brethren, that is, to His Diſciples. 3. The Meſſage it ſelfe; I aſcend to my Father, &c. And this latter is as it were an amends for the former: That the text is like the time of the yeare: the morning ſomewhat freſh, but a faire day after: Noli me tangere, the Repulſe, is the ſharpe morning: Vade & dic, the welcome Meſſage, the faire day (we ſpake of) that makes all well againe.

Either of theſe will ſerve for a ſermon, the former Noli me tangere, &c. it is ſo full of difficulties: but withall, of good and needfull caution. The latter of the Meſſage, it is ſo fraught with high Myſteries, and beſide, with much heavenly comfort. They call it Marie Magdalens Goſpell: (for, glad tydings it containes; and what is the Goſpell elſe?) The firſt Goſpell or glad tydings after Chriſts Reſurrection. The very Goſpell of the Goſpell it ſelfe, and a Compendium of all the foure. Of which (if GOD will) at ſome other time. Now, I will trouble you no further, but with Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended to the Father.

I.

The Reſtraint. Noli me tangere

No ſooner had CHRISTS voyce ſounded in her eares, but ſhee knew ſtraight Rabboni, it was He; and withall (as it may be gathered by this Noli me, &c.) ſhe did that which amounted to a Nolo te tangere: that is, ſhe made toward Him, ſtretched forth her hand, and offered, would have touched Him, but for this Touch me not. Touch not? why not? What harme hath there beene, if He had ſuffered her to touch Him? The ſpeech is ſtrange to be ſpoken either by Him, or to her: the reaſon, the For, yet more ſtrange: Many difficulties in both, GOD ſend us well through them. There be but three words, 1 Noli, 2 me, and 3 tangere; touch, at which of theſe three you will, tangere the thing; noli and me, the two Parties: Me, Him, CHRIST; Noli, her, Mary Magdalen: you will finde ſomewhat ſtrange this ſpeech of His.

1 Tangere the thing forbidden. Matt. 9. 21.

Tangere, the thing. Not touch? Why, it is nothing, to touch; and becauſe it is nothing might have beene yeelded to. And yet to touch CHRIST, is not nothing. Many deſired, yea ſtrove, to touch Him: there went vertue from Him, even while He was mortall: But, now He is immortall, by all likelihood, much more. That was not her caſe; to draw ought from Him: it was for pure love, and nothing elſe, ſhe deſired it. To love, it is not enough, to heare, or ſee; it is carried farther, to touch and take hold: It is affectus unionis; and the neereſt union is per contactum.

2 The parties.

Secondly the Parties. Me: not Me, not CHRIST. Why not Him? CHRIST was not wont to be ſo dainty of it. Diverſe times, and in diverſe places, He ſuffered the rude rude multitude to throng and to thruſt Him. What ſpeake we of that? when, not three daies ſince, He ſuffered other manner of touches and twitches both. Then, Noli me tangere would have come in good time; would have done well on Good-friday. Why ſuffered He them then? why ſuffered He not her, now? She (I dare ſay for her) would have done Him no hurt, ſhe. Noli, is to her: Not ſhe: Not Mary Magdalen. She had touched Him before now; touched His head, touched His feet; anoynted them both: what was done, ſhe might not, now? She hath even now, this morning, brought odors in her hand to embalme Him: and with theſe, and with no other hands, doth ſhe offer to touch Him at this time: ſhe might have beene borne with. It was early: as early as it was, ſhe had this morning given many good proofes of her love. 1 That ſhe was ſo early up; 2 came to the Grave firſt: 3 ſtayed there laſt: 4 had beene at ſuch coſt: 5 had taken ſuch paines: 6 had wept ſo many teares: 7 would not be comforted, no not by Angells, till ſhee had found Him; And, now ſhe hath found Him, not to touch Him? All theſe might have pleaded for as much as this comes to. For all theſe, one poore touch had beene but an eaſie recompenſe. Of all other, this prohibition lay not againſt her: of all times, not at this. The more we looke into it, the further off we finde it, to be ſpoken either by Him, or to her.

II. The Reaſon.

But if we goe further, and looke the Reaſon, we ſhall finde it yet more ſtrange: it will increaſe the doubt. Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended: What a reaſon is this? As who ſhould ſay: when He was aſcended, ſhe ſhould, then. But, then when He was aſcended, one would thinke, ſhe ſhould be further off, then now. Si ſtans in terrâ tam propè non tangitur, receptus in cœlum quomodo tangetur? If ſtanding on earth by Him, He is not to be touched, when He is taken up into heaven, no arme will then reach Him: paſt touching, then. That if not till then, never. The reaſon makes it yet further from reaſon. No remedie, but we muſt pray a conſultation (as they call it) upon this Prohibition.

It cannot be denied, but for Noli me, there is a time and place. It is worth the noting: the world began with a Noli me tangere; both the worlds. The old world: the firſt words (in a manner) GOD ſpake then, were a kind of a Noli me tangere; Touch not the Forbidden fruit. And as in the old, ſo here at the beginning this new, (for, with CHRISTS riſing, began the New creature) it is CHRISTS firſt ſpeech, wee ſee. CHRIST riſing, it is His firſt precept: His firſt Law is negative: it is the firſt thing He forbiddeth us: the firſt, He thought good to warne us of. Of His firſt words, we will have ſpeciall care, I truſt. The rule is: Things that will hurt us, beſt not touch. Beſt, not touch? nay, ſound and good was Arſenius the Eremite his advice touching thoſe: Impera Evæ & cave Serpentem, & tutus eris: Tutior autem, ſi arborem non aſpexeris. Can you command Eve, can you ſo; and can you beware the Serpent? well: doe ſo then, and you ſhall be ſafe: But (heare you) Tutior, you ſhall be yet more ſafe, if you ſee not, looke not upon, come not within the reach; nay, not within the ſight of the forbidden tree. But CHRIST is not the forbidden tree: the tree of life rather; to be touched and taſted, that wee may live by Him. No place in CHRIST for a Noli me tangere.

Of thoſe that hurt us, ſome we have no ſenſe of at the firſt. Such are all things unlawfull and forbidden: which, though for the time they ſeeme pleaſant, yet they have their ſtings in their taile: ſooner, or latter, we ſhall finde, they will hurt us; any fruit of the forbidden tree.

Other things we feele hurt us, we forbeare eaſily. An angry inflammation there is, the name of it is a Noli me tangere; and not that onely, but any bile or ſore indures not the touching. What? had CHRIST any ſore place about Him, ſince His paſſion? No: for S. THOMAS put his finger, nay, his whole hand into the place of His wounds, and put Him to no paine at all. No place in CHRIST for this Noli me tangere, neither.

Verſe 27.

I. Not on Chriſts part.

Not to hold you long: Noli me tangere can riſe but one of theſe wayes: Either out of of Noli; or 2 out of Me: ex parte tacti, or Ex parte tangentis; His that was touched; or hers, that did touch him. 1 Touch me not, you will hurt me, I am ſore; Ex parte tacti: 2 or, Touch me not, I ſhall hurt you; I am hot or ſharpe; Ex parte tangentis: Fire, I ſhall ſcorch you: an edge toole, I ſhall wound you: Pitch, I ſhall defile you: ſome contagious thing, I ſhall infect you. Every one of theſe cryes, Noli me tangere. But neither of theſe hath place in CHRIST. CHRIST riſing, was not now in ſtate, to receive any hurt; and neither now, nor ever in caſe to doe any; to pricke or to burne the fingers of any that touch Him.

2 But on Mary Magdalens.

We reſolve then; it was not on CHRISTS part, this Touch me not. It ſhould then more properly have beene Nolo me tangi: But, it is, Noli me tangere, and ſo on hers. No let in Him, but He might be touched: the let, in her; ſhe might not touch Him. That it was never CHRISTS meaning, after He was riſen, He would not be touched of any at all, it is evident. This very day, at even, appearing to the XI, He not onely ſuffered, but invited them to touch Him; nay more, Palpate me, which is, touch me throughly. This very CHAP. at the XXVII. verſe, He calls to S. Thomas, Infer digitum, put in your finger: Nay, affer manum, hand and all: which is to touch, and touch home (I am ſure.)

Luke 24.39.

How then? would He have Men touch Him, and not Women? nor that, neither. This is His firſt appearing: at His ſecond, and next to this, certaine Women met Him on the way: Hee ſuffered them to touch Him, and take Him by the feet. Some vertuous woman it may be: But, Mary Magdalen had beene a notorious ſinner, and ſo unworthy of it. No, nor that: for that, of the woman that ſo met Him, and ſo touched Him, ſhe was one. See *Matth.*28. Mary Magdalen touch, and Mary Magdalen not touch? the difficulties grow ſtill. For I aske: if at the ſecond appearing, why not at the firſt? Why after, and not now? Why, there, touch and ſpare not; and here, Noli me tangere, not come thither.

Matt. 28.9. Luke 7.47.

Let me tell you what we have gained yet: Theſe three things. 1 The Prohibition is not reall: the touch, the thing is not forbidden: it is but perſonall. 2 Nay, not perſonall neither abſolutely; not ſhe ſimply, but not ſhe, as now at this time. She might touch (it ſeemes) for ſhe did, not long after: Marie Magdalen might: but not this Mary Magdalen. 3 And laſt, that it is not finall; there is life, there is hope in it. Not, never to touch; but not, Stando in his terminis, ſtanding in the termes, ſhee doth. What termes are thoſe? And now (lo) wee are come to the point, to that we ſearch for.

Three ſenſes I will give you, and they have great Authors, all three, Chryſoſtome, Gregorie, Auguſtine. I will touch them all three; and you may take your choice of them; or, if you pleaſe, take them all: for, they will ſtand well together.

To correct her want of due reverence: S. Chryſoſtomes ſenſes.

One is (it is Chryſoſtomes) That, all was not well; ſomewhat amiſſe; ſhe ſomething to blame in the manner of her offer, which was not all, as it ſhould. The moſt we can make ſhe failed in ſomewhat. Not, that ſhe did it in any immodeſt or undecent manner: GOD forbid: never thinke of that. But onely a little too forward, it may be: not with that due reſpect that was meet.

We ſee by that is paſt, how the world went. CHRIST ſaid, Marie: She anſwers Him, with her wonted terme, with a Rabboni. And as ſhe ſalured Him with her wonted terme, ſo after her wonted faſhion, ſhe made toward Him, to have touched Him: not in ſuch manner, as was fit to have beene obſerved; nor with that regard, which His new glorified eſtate after His reſurrection, might ſeeme juſtly to require. It is in Me: not the ſame Me, He was. That that was enough to CHRIST, a few dayes ago, was nothing neere enough, to day, for Him. He that three dayes ſince endured ſo much, the day is now come, He willbe touched after another faſhion: Propter hoc exaltavit Eum DEVS, For, to this end GOD ſo highly exalted Him. I tell you plainely, I did not like her Rabboni: it was no EASTER-day-ſalutation,

It would have beene ſome better terme expreſſing more reverence. So, her offet would have beene in ſome more reſpective manner: her touch no Eaſter-day touch: her tangere had a tang in it (as we ſay.) The touch-ſtone of our touching CHRIST, is, with all regard and reverence that may be: Bring hers to this, and her touch was not the right touch; and all, for want of expreſſing more regard; not, for want of toto but tanto: not, of reverence at all; but of reverence enough.

Two cauſes they give of this faile. One, a defect in her judgement: The other, an exceſſe in her affection. Her amiſſe in the manner grew, out of her amiſſe in the mind; a miſconceipt, He had beene but even Rabboni ſtill. As it ſhould ſeeme, it ſeemeth to her, it was with Him no otherwiſe, than with her brother Lazarus: that CHRIST had riſen idem qui prius, neither more nor leſſe, but juſt the ſame, He was before. To be ſaluted, approched, touched, as formerly He had beene. Formerly, He might have beene touched: She thought, He might have beene even ſo ſtill. Whereas, with Him, the caſe was quite altered: He riſen, in a farre other condition than ſo. His corruptible had now put on incorruption; and His mortall immortalitie. He died in weakeneſſe and diſhonour: Roſe againe, in power and glory. And, as in another ſtate, ſo to another end: Not to ſtay upon earth or converſe here any longer, but to aſcend up into heaven. There was no aſcendi in her minde. 1 Cor. 15.53. 43.

His reaſon imports as much. You touch me, not as if I were upon aſcending; but, as if to ſtay here ſtill. For, in ſaying I am not yet; His meaning is, ere long, He ſhould. Nondum aſcendi; yet, I am not: but aſcendo, preſently I am to doe it: to leave this world and all here beneath; and to goe up and take poſſeſſion of my Kingdome of glorie. To this new glorious condition of His, there belonged more than Rabboni; another manner approach than more ſolito. He being ſo very highly exalted, and farre otherwiſe than He was, her acceſſe to have beene according: Not being ſo, it made her unmeet to touch Him, now. Nay, if you be but at Rabboni, and make toward me in no other ſort than thus, Noli me tangere, Touch me not.

Hence we learne, that when He ſees, we forget our ſelves, CHRIST will take a little ſtate upon Him; will not be ſaluted with Rabboni, but with ſome more ſeemly terme. Saint Thomas his, My Lord, and my GOD, a better farre than Rabboni. Ver. 28. Nor be approached to, after the old accuſtomed faſhion, but with ſome more ſeemly reſpect; ſicut decet ſanctos. They that ſo preaſe to touch Him, and be ſomewhat too homely with Him, they are in Marie Magdalen's caſe. Her noli me tangere, touches them home. And their puniſhment ſhall bee, that touch Him they ſhall not. Ephes. 5. 3.

It is no excuſe to ſay, all was out of love: Never lay it upon that. Love, CHRIST loves well: but, love, if it be right, οὐ περπερεύεται, nihil facit perperam (ſayth the Apoſtle) οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ, doth nothing uncomely, keeps decorum; forgets not, what belongs to duty and decency; carries it ſelfe accordingly. And, ſuch love CHRIST loves. Otherwiſe, Love may, and doth forget it ſelfe otherwhile: and then, in that caſe, the heathen mans ſaying is true, Importunus amor parùm diſtat à ſimultate: ſuch love is not love. A ſtrange kinde of love, when, for very love to CHRIST, we care not how we uſe Him, or carry our ſelves towards Him. Which being her caſe, ſhee heard, and heard juſtly, Noli me tangere: you are not now in caſe, till you ſhall have learned to touch after a more regardfull faſhion.

This may truly be ſaid: ſhe was not, before, ſo carried away, with ſorrow (that Paſſion;) but ſhe was now as farre gone in the other of joy: and ſo like enough to forget her ſelfe, in offering to touch Him no otherwiſe than heri and nudius tertius, as two or three daies agoe ſhe might have done. Saint Peters caſe in the Mount, was juſt her caſe here: He knew not what he ſaid, nor ſhe, what ſhe did: ſo ſurpriſed with the ſodaine joy, as ſhe had no leaſure to recollect her ſelfe, and to weigh the wonderfull great change, this day wrought in Him. Mar. 9. 6.

Out of which, our leſſon is, that in the ſodaine ſurpriſe of any paſſion, Chriſtus non eſt tangibilis, no touching CHRIST then. But, when the paſſion is over, and we come to our our ſelves, it will be with us, as with her: her affection calmed; her judgement ſetled better, than now on the ſudden it was (as it ſeemed) ſhe will be then fit, and then ſhee may bee admitted: and ſo, ſhee was, and did touch Him: but, that time, Matth. 28.9. when ſhe did ſo touch Him, ſhe was upon her knees, downe at His feet, another manner of geſture, than here ſhe offered.

Say, ſhe were unfit, yet hangs there a clowd ſtill: all is not cleere. For, why then did others touch, to our ſeeming as unfit as ſhe? Thomas with his faith in his fingers ends? The reſt, in whoſe teeth, He caſt their unbeleefe and hardneſſe of heart, they touched Him at firſt: why not ſhee, as well as they? They were unfit, I grant; but their unfitneſſe grew ex alio capite, another way, than did hers. They beleeved not,
Luke 24.38. were in doubt; thought, He had beene but a ghoſt. To rid them of that doubt,
37. that they might be ſure it was Hee, and bee able to ſay another day, which our hands
1 Iohn 1.1. have handled of the Word of life; they were ſuffered to touch Him. Touching was the proper cure for their diſeaſe. So, was it not, for hers. She never doubted a whit; was ſure, He whoſe voice ſhe heard, was Rabboni. She had no need to be confirmed in that. Her diſeaſe grew another way. Not from want of faith; of feare, rather: from want of due regard. To touch would not have cured her diſeaſe, but made it worſe. So, they touched, becauſe they beleeved not: ſhee touched not, becauſe ſhee miſ-beleeved; beleeved not of Him aright. They touched, that they might know, He was riſen: She touched not, that ſhe might know, He was not ſo riſen, as ſhe wrongly imagined, that is, as in former times, ſhe had knowen Him.

Out of that hath beene ſpoken, we learne: That they be not ſo well adviſed, who, if they heare one ſpeake of Noli me tangere, imagine ſtraight, it muſt needs be meant of a bile, ulcer, or ſome dangerous ſore. Every noli me tangere is not ſo: CHRISTS here is not ſo. Learne here, there doth to Excellencie belong a Noli me tangere, inducing reverence; no leſſe than to biles or ſores procuring indolencie. Touch me not,
Levit. 13.45. come not neere me, I am uncleane (ſaith the Leper.) Stand backe, touch not my ſkirts, Eſay 95.5. I am holier than you, (ſaith one, Eſay 65.) that is, Touch me not, I am ſo pure and cleane; as if to His excellent holineſſe there belongeth this priviledge, not to be touched.

The truth is, in the Naturall body, the eye is a moſt excellent part; but withall, ſo tender, ſo delicate, it may not indure to be touched; no, though it aile nothing, be not ſore at all. In the Civill body the like is: There are in it, both Perſons and Matters, whoſe excellencie is ſuch, they are not familiarly to be dealt with by hand, tongue, or penne, or any other way. The Perſons, they are, as the apple of GODS owne eye:
Pſal. 105.15. CHRISTI DOMINI. They have a peculiar Noli te tangere, by themſelves. Wrong is offered them, when after this, or in familiar or homely manner, any touch them. The Matters likewiſe, Princes affaires, Secrets of State, David calleth them
Pſal. 131.1. magna & mirabilia ſuper ſe, and ſo ſuper nos: points too high; too wonderfull for us to deale with. To theſe alſo, belongs this Touch not.

And, if of Kings ſecrets this may truely be ſaid, may it not as truely, of GOD, of His ſecret Decrees? May not they, for their height and depth, claime to this Noli, too? Yes ſure: and I pray GOD, He be well pleaſed with this licentious touching, nay toſſing His Decrees of late; this ſounding the depth of His Iudgements with our line, and lead; too much preſumed upon by ſome, in theſe dayes of ours. Iu- Pſal. 36.7. dicia Ejus abyſſus multa (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) His judgements are the great deepe.
Rom. 11.33. Saint Paul, looking downe into it, ranne backe, and cried, O the depth! the profound depth! not to be ſearched, paſt our ſadoming or finding out. Yet are there in the world, that make but a ſhallow of this great deepe: they have ſounded it to the bottome. GODS ſecret Decrees, they have them at their fingers ends, can tell you the number and the order of them juſt, with 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Men, that (ſure) muſt
*2 Cor. 12. 2. have beene in GODS cabbinet, above the third heaven*, where Saint Paul never came. Marie Magdalens touch was nothing to theſe.

I This was but upon the by. The maine of the Text, that it beareth full againſt, ex totâ ſubſtantiâ, is undue and undutifull cariage: and againſt them that uſe it. Not, that Marie Magdalens was ſuch: Hers, was but Tekel, certaine graines too light, minus habens:

habens : Not altogether without regard, but not altogether ſo full of regard as it might and ought to have been. Make it as little as you will, CHRIST ſaith Noli to it: and Noli is a word of unwillingneſſe. CHRIST is not unwilling with ought that is good: what he ſaith Noli to, is eo ipſo, not good, would be forborne: would not be offered Him, be it no more than hers was. She (it may be) ſhewed more regard than we: Yet, if we ſhew not more regard than ſhee, we ſhall hardly eſcape this Noli me tangere.

But, from this we riſe. If CHRIST ſaid Noli to her, that failed but in tanto; what ſhall He ſay to them that faile both in tanto and in toto? The Noli to her given, reacheth them in an higher degree. Greater muſt their fault be, now, than hers was, then. Shee had no Noli to warne her: they have hers to warne them, and will take no warning by it. CHRIST, as He ſaw, ſhe was; ſo, He foreſaw, others would be as (yea, more) defective this way. The Noli that was given to her, was (in her) given to them all. Even to this day, CHRIST crieth ſtill, Noli me tangere: Even to this day, there is uſe of it, to call upon us for a better touch. 2

If the Text be againſt rudeneſſe, to reſtraine it; then, is it for reverence, to injoyne it. If He ſay Noli, to the want of regard; we know, what he will ſay Volo to: that the more reſpectively, the better we carry our ſelves, the better He will like us. This is ſure: He will be approched to, in all dutifull and decent ſort; and He will not have us offer Him any other. Whatſoever is moſt or beſt in that kinde, if there be any one better than other, be that it. The beſt, wee have (I am ſure) is not too good for CHRIST. It is better to render accompt to Him of a little too much, than of a good deale too little. 3

Take this with you: CHRIST can ſay Noli, then. For (I know not how) our cariage, a many of us, is ſo looſe; covered we ſit; ſitting, we pray; ſtanding, or walking (or as it takes us in the head) we receive; as if CHRIST were ſo gentle a perſon, we might touch Him, doe to Him, what we liſt, He would take all well: He hath not the power, to ſay Noli to any thing. But, He hath, we ſee; and ſaith it; and ſaith it to one highly in His favour: and ſaith it, but for a touch a little awry, otherwiſe than it ſhould. 4

As the Heathen ſaid, vultu; ſo the Text ſaith, tactu ledi pietatem. One may offend; CHRIST, only by touching Him; ſuch the touch may be. We will allow Him greater than the Arke: That, would not endure Vzza's touch; He died for it. We will hold us to our Text: if we touch Him unduly, we ſhall doe it nolenti; it ſhall be much againſt His will; He likes it not: Witneſſe this noli here. 5 2 Sam. 6. 7.

Which, though it goe but to the touch, yet, à paritate rationis, it reacheth to all the body, and to every member of it. To our very feet (ſaith Salomon:) We to looke to them when we draw neere to Him. To our very fingers (ſaith a Greater than Salomon) we to looke to them, when we touch Him. And, as not with the foot of pride, nor the hand of preſumption; ſo, along thorow the reſt: neither with a ſcornefull eye, nor a ſtiffe knee: All are equally forbidden, under one; all to be farre from us. 6 Eccleſ. 4. 17. Luke 11. 31.

It reacheth to all: but yet for all that, the native word of the Text (the touch) is to have a kinde of pre-eminence. Moſt kindly, to that. To CHRIST it is every way; but moſt of all, to CHRIST as He is tangibilis; comes under our touch. To all parts of His worſhip; but, other parts will not come under tangere ſo fitly, as the Sacrament. So as, the uſe may ſeeme properly to have relation to that: and we, there, to ſhew our higheſt reverence. If we doe ſo, Dicite juſto quia benè, we doe well. But, divers have too much of Mary Magdalen in them. I know not, how they would touch CHRIST, if they had Him: that, which on earth doth moſt neerely repreſent Him, His higheſt memoriall, I know not how many both touch and take, otherwiſe than were to be wiſhed. 7 Eſay 3. 10.

But, thus are we now come to the day, the very day, it was given on. CHRIST gave this Noli me tangere, that it might be verbum Dei, a watch-word for this day. Take heed, how you touch: for, He eaſily foreſaw, this would be tempus tangendi, the Iohn 6.56. time whereon, touch wee muſt: Nay, more than touch Him, we muſt; for, eat His fleſh, and drinke His bloud wee muſt; and, that can we not doe, but wee muſt touch Matth.26. 26. Him. And this wee muſt doe by vertue of another precept, Accipite & manducate.

How will Accipite & manducate, and noli me tangere cleave together? Take, eat, and yet touch not? If we take we muſt needs touch, one would thinke: If we eat, guſtus eſt ſub tactu (ſaith the Philoſopher:) ſo, that comes under touching too.

It ſeemes the Text was not ſo well choſen, theſe points conſidered. Nay, ſet the day aſide we have no need (GOD wot) to be preached to of not touching: wee are Verſe 27. not ſo forward that way. It would rather have beene that of Saint Thomas, Affer manum. This, is now out of ſeaſon.

But, you will remember ſtill, I told you, this Noli was not generall. It was but to Mary Magdalen: And, to her, but till ſhe had learned a little better manners. Not to any, but ſuch as ſhee, or worſe than ſhee, that in unbeſeeming manner preaſe and proffer to touch Him (the onely cauſe of her repulſe.) But, at another time, when ſhe Matth.28.9. was on her knees, fell downe at His feet, then did ſhe touch Him, without any checke at all. Be you now, but as ſhee was then, and this noli me tangere will not touch you at all.

It is the caſe of the Sacrament right. There is place in the taking it, for Noli me tangere: So is there, for Affer manum. To them, that with Saint Thomas, in a feeling of the defect of their faith, or of any other ſpirituall grace, caſt themſelves downe, Verſe 27. and crie, My LORD, and My GOD, Affer manum to them: I ſet them free; I give them a diſcharge from this Noli me tangere. But, for them that are but at Rabboni, and ſcarce ſo farre; bold gueſts with Him; baſe in conceit, and homely in behaviour: to them, and to them properly, belongs this Noli me tangere: More properly, than ever it did to her. And ſo, that point reconciled. Thus farre for Saint Chryſoſtome, and his taking.

2 To haſten the Meſſage. Saint Gregories ſenſe.

There is a ſecond, and it is Saint Gregories: That the Vade & dic, was the cauſe of Noli me, &c. and that all was but to ſave time, that ſhee was not permitted it. CHRIST was not willing to ſpend time in theſe complements (it was no other;) but, to diſpatch her away, upon an errand, better pleaſing to Him, that required more haſte. As if Hee ſhould have ſaid: Let us have no touching now; there is a matter in hand, would be done out of hand; and therefore for this time hands of, Touch me not.

And the reaſon will follow well, ſo: Nondum enim aſcendi. You need not be ſo haſtie, or eager to touch mee; I am not yet aſcended: though I be upon going, yet I am not gone. You may doe this, at ſome other time, at ſome other meeting: & quod differtur non aufertur, at better leaſure, you may have your deſire: forbeare it, now.

Why, what haſte was there of doing this errand? Might ſhee not have touched Him, and done it time enough? Peradventure, ſhe might thinke ſo: Shee, knew CHRIST was riſen; She, was well. But, they that ſate in feare and ſorrow, that knew not ſo much; they would not thinke ſo: Not, to them. To them Nihil ſatis feſtinatur, No haſte was too much; all delay too long.

Nor to CHRIST neither. Who was (we ſee) ſo deſirous to have notice given with all ſpeed, that He would not take ſo much time from it, as wherein Mary Magdalen might have had but a touch at Him. So carefull, they might receive comfort with the firſt, that He ſaith, Goe your wayes with all ſpeed; Get you to them, the firſt thing you doe: It will doe them more good to heare of my riſing, than it will doe you, to ſtand and touch me.

Yet, a touch and away would not have taken up ſo much time. True: but Hee eaſily fore-ſaw, in the termes ſhee ſtood, if Hee ſuffered her to touch, that would not ſerve the turne; Shee would have taken hold too. And, if ſhee had taken taken hold once, nor that neither: Shee would have come to a Non dimittam, with her in the Canticles, Tenui Eum & non dimittam: Shee would not have let Him goe; or beene long, yer ſhee had: So, much time ſpent in impertinencies, which neither Hee nor ſhee the better for. So, ſhee to let her touching alone, and put it off till another time, being to bee imployed in a buſineſſe of more haſte, and importance. Cant. 3. 4.

3 To weane her from ſenſuall touching: Saint Auguſtines ſenſe.

The third place is Saint Auguſtine: That, CHRIST in theſe words, had a further meaning; to weane her from all ſenſuall and fleſhly touching, and teach her, a new and a true touch; truer than that, ſhee was about. This ſenſe groweth out of CHRISTS reaſon: Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended; as if, till He were aſcended, Hee would not bee touched; and, then, Hee would. As much to ſay: Care not to touch mee, here. Stand not upon it: Touch mee not till I be aſcended; Stay till then, and then, doe. That, is the true touch; that, is it, will doe you all the good.

And, there is reaſon for this ſenſe. For the touch of His body, which ſhee ſo much deſired; that, could laſt but fortie dayes in all, while Hee in His body were among them. And, what ſhould all, ſince, and we now, have beene the better? He was to take her out a leſſon, and to teach her another touch, that might ſerve for all, to the worlds end: that might ſerve, when the body and bodily touch were taken from us. Act. 1. 3.

CHRIST Himſelfe touched upon this point (in the ſixth Chapter, at the 62. Verſe) when at Capernaum they ſtumbled at the ſpeech of eating His fleſh: What (ſaith He) finde you this ſtrange, now? How will you finde it, then, when you ſhall ſee the Sonne of man aſcend up where He was before? How, then? And yet, then you muſt eat, or elſe, there is no life in you.

So, it is a plaine Item to her, that there may be a ſenſuall touching of Him, here; but that is not it; not the right; it availes little. It was her errour, this; She was all for the corporall preſence; for the touch with the fingers. So, were His Diſciples, all of them, too much addicted to it. From which they were now to be weaned: That if they had, before, knowne CHRIST, or touched Him after the fleſh; yet now from hence-forth, they were to doe ſo no more, but to learne a new touch; to touch Him, being now aſcended. Such a touching there is; or elſe His reaſon holds not: And, beſt touching Him, ſo; Better farre than this of hers, ſhe was ſo eager on.

Doe but aske the Church of Rome; Even, with them, it is not the bodily touch, in the Sacrament, that doth the good. Wicked men, very reprobates, have that touch, and remaine reprobates, as before. Nay, I will goe further: It is not that, that toucheth CHRIST at all. Example, the multitude that thronged and thruſt Him; yet, for all that, as if none of them all had touched Him, He askes, Quis me tetigit? So that, one may rudely thruſt Him, and yet not touch Him, though: Not, to any purpoſe, ſo. Marke 5. 31.

CHRIST reſolves the point, in that very place. The fleſh, the touching, the eating it, profits nothing. The words He ſpake, were ſpirit: So, the touching, the eating, to be ſpirituall. And Saint Thomas, and Mary Magdalen or whoſoever touched Him here on earth, niſi fælicius fide quàm manu tetigiſſent, if they had not been more happy to touch Him with their faith, than with their fingers end, they had had no part in Him; no good by it at all. It was found better with it, to touch the hemme of His garment; than, without it, to touch any part of His body. Iob 6. 63. Matth. 9. 20.

Now, if faith be to touch, that will touch Him no leſſe in Heaven than here: One, that is in Heaven, may be touched ſo. No aſcending can hinder that touch. Faith will elevate it ſelfe, that aſcending in ſpirit, wee ſhall touch Him, and take hold of Him. Mitte fidem & tenuiſti: It is Saint Auguſtine. It is a touch, to which there is never a Noli: feare it not.

So, doe we then: Send up our faith, and that ſhall touch Him, and there will vertue come from Him: and it ſhall take ſuch hold on Him, as it ſhall raiſe us up, to where He is; bring us to the end of the verſe, and to the end of all our deſires; to Aſcendo ad Patrem, a joyfull aſcenſion to our Father and His, and to Himſelfe, and to the Vnitie of the Bleſſed SPIRIT. To whom, in the Trinitie of Perſons, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at WHITE-HALL, on the XXI. of April, A.D. MDCXXII. being EASTER-DAY.

IOHN XX. VER. XVII.

Dicit ei IESVS, &c.

IESVS ſaith unto her, Touch me not: For, I am not yet aſcended to my Father: But, goe to my brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, and to my GOD and your GOD.

FOr noli me tangere the former part, you have formerly heard. Mary Magdalen might not touch: at leaſt-wiſe, not, as thus; not, as now.

The reaſon: 1. On her part, ſhe forgate her ſelfe a little in her touch, as in her terme, toward Him, who, though nondum He were not yet, was preſently to aſcend, and be taken up into heaven, and would be touched in ſome better manner. And, till ſhe had learned, ſo to touch, Noli me tangere.

2. On CHRISTS part. She need not be ſo eager; Nondum enim Aſcendi: that is, though Hee were going, yet Hee was not gone. Some other time might ſerve her, to touch Him in. Now, He had matter of more haſte, to ſend her about, and would have no time taken from it. And ſo, for ſaving of time, Noli me tangere.

3. On the touch it ſelfe. He was not yet aſcended: And, to touch Him before He were were ſo, was not the true touch; not the touch that would doe her, or us, any good. For theſe all, or ſome of theſe, Noli me tangere, no touching, now.

But what, ſhall ſhee be quite caſt off in the meane time? Denied touching; denied it, granted nothing for it? That were hard. Nothing to comfort her, in liew of it? Yes: CHRIST is not unrighteous, that He ſhould forget the worke and labour of her love, which ſhe, this day, made, ſo many wayes to appeare. Somewhat Hee deviſeth to comfort her, ſomewhat: in that He will have her doe ſomewhat for Him. So, the old rule was: quem non honoro, non onero. He will imploy her in a meſſage; and ſuch a meſſage, as was to the preſent joy of them, it was ſent to, and ſhould be to the generall joy and good, not of them onely, but of us all.

Hebr. 6. 10.

Now then, this muſt needs be reckoned as a ſpeciall favour ſhewed her by our bleſſed SAVIOVR. For, otherwiſe, He could as eaſily, Himſelfe, have appeared to them, He ſent her; as, to her, He did: but that, His will was, to vouchſafe her the honour of the firſt bearing of theſe ſo joyfull tidings, to them, and in and by them, to the whole world. When time was, ſhe brake her box of pretious ointment, and the ſent of it filled the whole houſe: The breaking of this box now, of the tydings of CHRIST, and His riſing, with the ſweet ſavour of life unto life hath filled, and ſtill filleth the whole world, from one end to the other.

2 Cor. 2. 16.

The Summe. The Summe of the Text is; A diſpatch of Mary Magdalen by CHRIST, to deliver a meſſage to His Diſciples. It is in effect, as if He ſhould have ſaid: You know, I am riſen, now; you are well for your part: There be others, that know not ſo much; and, becauſe they know it not, ſit in ſorrow, heavie and halfe dead at home. It would comfort them much, revive them, put life into them againe, to know what you know. Now you are well, thinke upon them that are not. Remember what was your owne caſe but even now. You cannot doe a better deed, than carry comfort to the comfortleſſe. I would they knew of it; I wiſh them well: They be my brethren, how ever they forgate themſelves when time was.

But, this is not all; that they might know of it: but, they muſt know of it with all ſpeed. For, that ſhe may the ſooner goe tell them, ſhe muſt not touch. For, if you marke it, It is not vade & dic; but, Sed vade & dic: It is not, barely, Goe and tell them; It is, Touch me not; But; goe and tell them, That is, in ſtead of touching, ſhe muſt be gone in all haſte to tell them. As if He ſhould ſay; Goe to, let us have no touching now: Get you to them, the firſt thing you doe, and tell them of it. It will doe them more good to be told of this, than it will doe you to ſtay here and touch me never ſo oft.

This ſo great haſte of the carrying it, is much for the credit of the meſſage: Much for it; I cannot but note it. That CHRIST thought the notice of it ſo neceſſary, the bearing of it ſo every way important, as (we ſee) He is carefull, no time be taken from it: but with all poſſible ſpeed, with the very firſt, they acquainted with it. So carefull, as He would not take ſo much (or rather, ſo little) time from it, as wherein Mary Magdalen might have had but a touch at Him; but takes her off, and ſends her away in all haſte. As if, ſome matter had lien in it, if they ſhould not have heard of His riſing, before the Sun-riſing.

Much for the honour of the Feaſt, on which it was done. That He would for ever have a Feaſt celebrated in memorie of this Day, whereon theſe tydings came to the world firſt.

Moſt of all, for His owne honour; Who ſheweth Himſelfe ſo deſirous, that they that are in heavineſſe may receive comfort, as He thinketh no haſte too much, no haſte enough, till they heare of it, till they heare of his loving kindneſſe betimes in the morning.

Pſal. 143. 8.

To take the Text in ſunder. The parts be two: 1 A Commiſſion to carry a meſſage, 2 And the Meſſage it ſelfe. The Diviſion

1 The Commiſſion: Vade ad fratres meos & dic eis, 2 The Meſſage: Aſcendo ad Patrem meum, &c.

In the Commiſſion againe, there are two, 1 the Parties firſt: 2 and then, the Charge: 1 the Prrties, Fratres meos: 2 The Charge Vade & dic eis.

In the Meſſage, two likewiſe: 1 Firſt, that He is upon aſcending: 2 Then, the Party, to whom. That Party, to whom, is but one; yet repreſented here, under two names, 1 Father and 2 GOD. And (that which, to us, is the capitall point of all, and which wee to lay hold of ſpecially) His Father, but ours, withall: and His GOD; but, ours, as well as His. The laſt and beſt part of the meſſage: For, in it lyeth the joy that commeth to us this morning.

On which foure, 1 My Father, and 2 your Father, and 3 my God, and 4 your God, as it were ſo many wheeles, is His aſcendo drawen: Vpon the ſame, is ours likewiſe to be, and is therefore the Conſummatum eſt of the Text, and of the Feaſt, and of this, yea (I dare adde) of the whole Goſpell.

And, let not this move you a whit, that His Father and our Father, His God and our God (who are the end to which we aſcend) are made the chariot by which we aſcend. This is no ſtrange thing in Divinitie. Ad CHRISTVM non itur, niſi per CHRISTVM (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) and ſo, neither ad DEVM, niſi per DEVM. With us nothing is more certaine, than that the end of our way, which we come unto, is alſo the way it ſelfe whereby we come thither. One and the ſame ad quem and per quem aſcenditur.

We ſhall make foure ſtands. 1 One, at fratres meos, the Parties. 2 Another, at Dic eis, the Commiſſion.. 3 The third, at Aſcendo, the Motion. 4 And the laſt, at My Father your Father, My God and your God, the Terminus ad quem, which giveth the perfection to all our motions, and ſo, to this, the laſt end of all our motions; For, after aſcendo, we ſhall move no more, but reſt for ever:

I.

Fratres meos. The Parties.

Vade ad fratres meos, Goe to my brethereh. Our firſt ſtand is to be at fratres meos, my brethren, the Parties He ſent to.

Who be they? They ſhe went to. To whom went ſhe? To His Diſciples (in the next verſe:) They then the Parties, He meant: They, His brethren. Verſe 18.

A ſtrange terme to begin with, conſidering how they had dealt with Him, ſcarce like brethren, not long before. Wee ſhall therein doe the worke of the Sabboth, which is to tell of His loving kindneſſe betimes in the morning; and this morning, more than ever any. Pſal. 59. 16.

Yer then we goe any further, let us touch a little at this terme, He gives them. It is no noli me tangere (this) It is a word to be touched and taked hold of: It was ſo, when time was, by Benhadads ſervants, this very word. Is Benhadad alive (ſaith the King of Iſrael) Frater meus eſt, He is my brother: which they preſently caught hold of, yea, thy brother Benhadad is yet living. So they. 1 King. 20. 32, 33.

And ſo we, Fratres meos. Let us not let this word fall to the ground, but ſay (with Bernard) Salvum ſit verbum Domini mei, GOD ſave this word; bleſſed be the lipps that ſpoke it. Yea thy brethren, Good LORD, if ſo thou wilt vouchſafe to call them.

Out of it firſt I note, here is nothing that ſavours of any diſpleaſure, of remembring any old grudge. Not ſo much as an harſh terme in all the meſſage; no mention they had fled from Him, forſooke Him, forſwore Him (full un-brotherly.) He hath forgotten it all, all is out of His minde: Caſts not them off, as they did Him, but ſends to them; and, by the name of brethren, ſends to them: They be my brethren, and I theirs, and by that name commend me to them. Nothing, here, that ſavours of any anger.

Nor nothing, that ſavours of any pride. But, even as Ioſeph in the top of his honor; So He, in this, the day of His glorious exalting from the dead, claimes kindred of them, a ſort of poore forlorne men: and (as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it) non eſt confuſus vocare, is not a whit aſhamed of them that were aſhamed of Him. Diſdaines not, poore as they were, unkinde as they were, but vouchſafes to call them brethren for all that.

Which word [brethren] implyes two things: 1. Firſt, Identitie of nature. His nature is not changed by death. The nature He died in, in the ſame He riſes againe. Thereby lies a matter. For, If He roſe, as man, then man alſo may riſe: If one be riſen, there is hope for others: If the nature bee riſen, the perſons, in it, may. So it was with the firſt Adam. In his perſon was our nature; and, in him, it died; and we, in it. So is it in the ſecond. In His perſon our nature is riſen; In our nature, we all. This firſt: Riſen in the ſame nature, He had before: Not changed it.

2. And ſecond, Riſen with the ſame love and affection, He had before: Not changed it, neither. Yes, changed it: (I ſaid not well in that:) but, changed it for the better. Before this, when He ſaid moſt, He ſaid but, I will call you my friends: The higheſt terme He came to, before. But here, being riſen, He riſeth (we ſee) higher, as high as Love can riſe, to count them and ſtyle them fratres meos. And ſo much for that, Goe to my bretheren.

Ioh. 15.15.

II. Dic eis. The Commiſſion.

Well, when ſhe comes to His Bretheren, what then? Et dic eis, and ſay to them, or tell them. By which words, He gives her a Commiſſion. Vade, is her Miſſion: Dic eis, her Commiſſion. A Commiſſion, to publiſh the firſt newes of His riſing, and (as it falls out) of His aſcending too.

The Fathers ſay, that by this word, ſhe was, by CHRIST, made an Apoſtle. Nay Apoſtolorum Apoſtola, an Apoſtle to the Apoſtles themſelves.

An Apoſtle: For, what lackes ſhe? 1. Sent firſt, immediately from CHRIST Himſelfe: And what is an Apoſtle but ſo? 2. Secondly, Sent to declare and make knowne: and what difference betweene Ite prædicate, and Vade & dic, but onely the number? the thing is the ſame. 3. And laſt, what was ſhee to make knowne? CHRISTS riſing and aſcending: And what are they but Evangelium, the Goſpell, yea the very Goſpell of the Goſpell?

Matt.28.19.

This day, with CHRISTS riſing, beginnes the Goſpell: Not, before. Crucified, dead and buried, no good newes, no Goſpell they, in themſelves. And them, the Iewes beleeve as well as we. The firſt Goſpell of all, is the Goſpell of this day, and the Goſpell of this day is this Marie Magdalens Goſpell, πρωτευαγγέλιον, the prime Goſpell of all, before any of the other foure. That CHRIST is riſen, and upon His aſcending? and ſhe the firſt, that ever brought theſe glad tydings. At her hands the Apoſtles themſelves received it firſt: And, from them, we all.

Matt.26.13.

Which, as it was a ſpeciall honour (and whereſoever this Goſpell is preached, ſhall bee told for a memoriall of her:) ſo was it withall, not without ſome kinde of enthwiting to them (to the Apoſtles) for ſitting at home, ſo drooping in a corner, that CHRIST not finding any of them, is faine to ſeeke Him a new Apoſtle: And, finding her, where He ſhould have found them, and did not, to ſend by the hand of her, that He firſt found at the Sepulchers ſide, and to make Himſelfe a new Apoſtle. And ſend her to them, to enter them (as it were) and catechize them, in the two Articles of of the Chriſtian faith, the Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion of CHRIST. To her, they and we (both) owe them, the firſt notice of them.

And, by this (lo) the amends (we ſpake of) is made her for her Noli me tangere: Full amends. For, to be thus ſent, to be the meſſenger of theſe ſo bleſſed tydings, is a higher honour, a more ſpeciall favour done here, a better good turne, every way better, than if ſhe had beene let alone, had her deſire, touched Chriſt, which ſhe ſo longed for, and ſo eagerly reached at. Better (ſure:) for I reaſon thus. Chriſt (we may be ſure) would never have injoyned her to leave the better, to take the worſe: To leave to touch Him, to goe to tell them, if to goe to tell them had not beene the better.

So that, hence we inferre, that to goe and carry comfort to them that need it, to tell them of Chriſts riſing, that doe not know it; is better than to carry and doe nothing but ſtand touching Chriſt. Touching Chriſt gives place to teaching Chriſt. Vade & dic better than mane & tange. Chriſt (we ſee) is for Vade & dic. That, if we were in caſe where we might touch Chriſt, we were to leave Chriſt untouched, and even to give our ſelves a noli me tangere, to goe and doe this: And to thinke our ſelves better imployed in telling them, than in touching Him.

Will you obſerve withall how well this agrees with her offer (a little before) of Ego tollam Eum? She muſt needs know of the Gardiner, Tell me where you have layd Him, Et ego tollam, and ſhe would take Him and carry Him, that ſhe would. Why, you that would ſo faine take and carry me being dead, goe take and carry me now alive: that is; carry newes, that I am alive: And you ſhall better pleaſe me with this ego tollam a great deale: It ſhall bee a better carrying, Ego tollam in a better ſenſe, than ever was that. Stand not here then touching mee: Goe and touch them; and, with the very touch of this report, you ſhall worke, in them, a kinde of (that you ſee in me, a kinde of) a reſurrection from a dolefull and dead, to a cheerfull and lively eſtate. Verſe 25.

III. Aſcendo. The Motion.

Tell them: What? Tell them, that I aſcend; that is, am about to aſcend, am upon the point of it, am very ſhortly to doe it. Quod prope abeſt ut fiat, habetur pro facto, that that is neere done, we reckon as good as done.

Tell them that I aſcend. Why how now, What day is to day? It is not Aſcenſion day: It is Eaſter, and but early Eaſter yet. His aſcenſion is fourty daies off. This were a Text for that day. Why ſpeakes He of that now? Why not rather, Tell them I am riſen (more proper for this day:) Why, Hee needs not tell her that: She could tell that of her ſelfe, ſhe ſaw it. And beſides, in ſaying, I aſcend, He implyes fully as much. Till He be riſen, aſcend He cannot: He muſt aſcend out of the grave, yer He can aſcend up to heaven. Reſurrexit muſt be paſt, yer Aſcendo can come. Aſcendo then puts His reſurrection paſt all peradventure: He needs ſay no more of that, of His riſing. But, as ſhe ſaw by His riſing that He had the keyes of hell and death, had unlocked thoſe doores and come out from thence; So, by aſcendo, He tells her farther, that He hath the Keyes of heaven-gates alſo, which He would now unlock, and ſo ſet open the Kingdome of heaven to all beleevers. 1 Apoc. 1.18.

And yet, there is a further matter in aſcendo, to ſhew us, what was the end of His riſing. CHRIST did not riſe, to riſe; no more muſt we. The reſurrection it ſelfe is for an end; it is not the end: is is but a ſtate yet unperfect, but an entry to a greater good, which unleſſe it lead us and bring us to, non habetur propoſitum, it is ſhort, ſhort of that it ſhould be. We muſt not then ſet up our reſt upon our riſing. There is ſomewhat more required than barely to riſe. What is that? Aſcendo: Chriſt roſe to aſcend; ſo are we to doe. And riſing is no riſing, no right riſing, we riſe not on our right ſides (as wee ſay) if that follow not upon it; if we aſcend not withall. For, to riſe from the bottome of the grave to the brinke of it, to ſtand up, upon our feete againe and tread on the grave-ſtone, and no more, is but halfe a riſing; is but Lazarus's riſing. To riſe up, up as high as heaven, that is to riſe indeed; that is Chriſts riſing: and that to 1 be ours. As, to riſe, is nothing but to aſcend out of the grave: So, to aſcend, is nothing but to riſe as high as heaven: And, then we are truely riſen, when ſo riſen. Before, I ſaid, there was no Goſpell till the reſurrection: I now ſay, the reſurrection it ſelfe is no Goſpell; (not, of it ſelfe) unleſſe aſcendo follow it. Reſurrexit, tell that to all the world: All that die in Adam, ſhall riſe in Chriſt, Miſcreants, Iewes, Turkes and all: No Goſpell that, properly. Tell the Chriſtian of more than ſo: tell him of aſcendo too, that goes withall, that pertaines to it. You muſt take that with you too, if it be Chriſts, if it be the right riſing, the Reſurrection to life and not to condemnation.

Marke this well: it is a materiall point. Better lye ſtill in our graves, better never riſe, than riſe and riſing not to aſcend. Of them that ſhall riſe, they that ſee they ſhall not aſcend, ſhall wiſh themſelves in their coffins againe: Nay, they ſhall pray the mountaines to fall on them; and the hills to cover them, and bury them quick. So much doth this concerne us, that theſe two part not; that aſcendo attend us at our riſing. And therefore, this you ſhall obſerve, that, in all this ſpeech or Text, CHRIST doth not ſo much as mention, as once name the word riſing or reſurrection, as if He made no great reckoning of it: But, in this one ſhort verſe here, in theſe few words, He is, at aſcendo, twiſe; ſpeakes of that, mentions that, over and over againe. All to teach us, aſcendo, is all in all. That reſurrexit is nothing, if it be nothing but reſurrexit; nor any accompt to be made of it, if aſcendo goe not with it, but, if aſcendo goe with it then it is. And, that it may goe with it, that to be all our care. Never take care for reſurrexit; that will come of it ſelfe without any thought taking. Never trouble your ſelves with that. Take thought for aſcendo, ſet your mindes there. Aſcendo, looke well to that: Reſurrexit let that goe.

Luc. 23.30.

3 A third reaſon their is of aſcendo. For, He ſaw upon theſe tydings, as ſhe did thinke, ſo they would ſay; O is He riſen, then ſhall we have His companie againe, as heretofore we had. But, by ſending them word of His aſcending, He gives them warning betimes; He roſe not, to make any abode with them, or to converſe with them on earth, as formerly He had; that ſo, they might have timely notice of it and know what they were to looke for. For, this, He knew, would be a hard leſſon. His riſing they would like well, but His aſcending be againſt: would not abide to heare of that, to loſe His companie at any hand. It was a conceit, that troubled them much: they were ſtill and ever addicted to His bodily being with them. Here, they would have kept Him, built Him a tabernacle, here; and by their good will never have let Him gone from hence. All for mane nobiſcum, and for Domine ſi tu fuiſſes hîc; all in Marie Magdalens caſe, had Him here to ſee Him and to touch Him; and then, all had beene well, as they thought.

Matt. 17.4.
Luc. 24.29.
Ioh. 11.32.

This was their error: And to rid them of it, of this earthly minde of theirs, thus ſtriving to affixe and keepe Him here on earth, and that then all ſhould bee well, He ſhewes them, that they were quite wrong, and ſets them right. That for Him to be here below on earth, that is not it: But for them to be with Him there above in heaven, that is it: There it is right. And, never ſhall they, or we, be well, till there wee bee with Him. And thither would Hee raiſe them and us, with this His aſcendo.

4 Yet, one more. For, this very point, that Chriſt riſeth with aſcendo in His mouth; that no ſooner riſen, but makes ready for His aſcending ſtreight; this (I ſay) if there were nothing but this (the ſo immediate joyning it, ſo cloſe upon His riſing, one hard to the other, no meane betweene) were of it ſelfe, enough to make the idle dreame of the old and new Chiliaſts to vaniſh quite; that phanſie to themſelves I wote not what earthly kingdome here upon earth, ſomewhat like Mahomets Paradiſe, and will not heare of aſcendo, after they be riſen, till a thouſand yeares at leaſt. This is none of Chriſts riſing, I am ſure: So, to be none of ours. As with Him, So, with us, riſing and aſcending are to follow ſtreight one upon the other.

CHRIST then doth aſcend. And out of what CHRIST did, we learne what we to doe. Seeing, Chriſt ſtayed not here, we not to ſet up our ſtay here neither, not to make earth our heaven, not to place our felicitie here below.

The

The Goſpell is (we ſee) when Chriſt was riſen, His minde was upon aſcendo preſently. The Epiſtle is framed fit for it, That if we be riſen with CHRIST, we would ſet our mindes and ſeeke the things above where CHRIST is: that is, if we be riſen with Him, make no more adoe but aſcend with Him alſo. Col. 3. 1.

All things in heaven and earth do ſo; riſing, they aſcend preſently. In heaven the ſtarres they be no ſooner riſen above the horizon, but they are in their aſcendent, eò ipſo, and never leave aſcending, till they be in the higheſt point, over our heads, in the very top of the skie. In earth, the little ſpires that peepe out of the ground, now at this time (natures time of her yearely reſurrection) they bee no ſooner out, but up they ſhoot, and never leave to aſpire, till they have attained the full pitch of their higheſt growth, they can aſcend to. In our ſelves, though (I know) for earthly men to have earthly minds it is not ſtrange, πολὺν ἔχοντες πάλιν having clay to our father, and πρόπατορας χῦν duſt to our Sire, we ſhould have χαμερπῆ νοῦν our ſoules ſhould cleave to the duſt, as Nazianzen excellently ſaith. Not ſtrange (I ſay) that, ſo it is with us; yet, ſo it ſhould not be. The very Heathen ſaw, that, though we be made of the earth, yet we are not made for the earth: That the heavenly ſoule was not put into the earthly body, to the end the earthly body, ſhould draw it downe to the earth; but rather, to the end, the ſoule ſhould lift it up to heaven. And ſo much they gathered out of our Os ſublime, and vultus ad ſidera, the very frame of our body that bares up thitherward, and bodes (as it were) a kinde of aſcending whither it lookes, and gives naturally. Nature doth teach this.

But, grace by Chriſts example much better. If Chriſt riſe, that we riſe with Chriſt, Not, in body yet; but to compt our ſelves dead to ſinne, and riſe from that, and live to GOD (the firſt reſurrection.) And, if Chriſt aſcend, we likewiſe to aſcend: not to part with Him, but to follow Him as we may. Not yet in body; it cannot be ſurſum corpora yet; it may bee ſurſum corda, wee may lift up our hearts thither, though. There our treaſure is, if Chriſt bee our treaſure: there, our hearts to bee; there we in heart to bee at leaſt, which is the firſt aſcenſion, the προάλωμα of it, the præludium, ſo. Apoc. 20. 5.

There are two words in the Text, 1. Nondum aſcendi, I am not yet aſcended; and, 2. aſcendo, yet I aſcend though: which will very well fit us, if, while wee are not at aſcendi, yet (that is, in body aſcended) we be, for all that, at aſcendo, (that is, aſcend in minde) even as Chriſt here did. And Bleſſed is the man (ſaith the Pſalme) cui in corde aſcenſiones, that hath the aſcenſion in his heart, or his heart on it; That, while it is nondum aſcendi with Him, yet at times it is aſcendo, lifts up his eyes, ſends up his ſighs, exalts his thoughts otherwhile, repreſents (as Chriſt doth) anticipates the aſcenſion, Voto & deſiderio in will and deſire, before the time it ſelfe come of the laſt and finall aſcenſion. Thus much for aſcendo. Pſal. 84. 5.

IIII.

Aſcendo is a motion. Every motion hath an Vnde, and a quò; a whence and a whither; a terminus à quo, and a terminus ad quem. The ad quem is (here) ad patrem. Ad patrem mium: The Ad quem.

To aſcend is, to CHRIST, His naturall motion: Heaven is His naturall place. Thence He came, Thither He is to goe againe. Specially, His worke being done, He came for. That was conſummatum eſt, with us, three dayes ſince. But, till He bee in heaven againe, it is not conſummatum eſt, with Him. So, the motion is naturall. Chap. 19. 30.

And the Ad quem, ad patrem, no leſſe. Seeing, for the Sonne, to goe to the Father, is very kindly too; we may not be againſt it. Chriſt ſaid, If you loved me, you would verily rejoyce, becauſe I ſaid, I goe to the Father. For very love to Chriſt, we cannot but rejoyce with Him. In the ad quem, all is well, if we conſider that. But, ſo, is not, in the à quo. For, when all is ſaid, make the beſt of it we can, aſcendo is diſcedo, to goe up is to goe from; from them: And this is no good newes. For Him, no ſooner to come, but gone againe, and leave them to the wide world, it might trouble them, Chap. 14. 28.

them, for all Tell my brethren. For, by Brethren Hee might meane falſe brethren, that had left Him; and ſo would He them, now: and peradventure doe their errand in heaven to His father, and make them have but little thankes for it, at His hands. So that, this aſcendo implying a nolo manere (in a manner) was as evill to them, as noli me tangere was to her.

What is then become of the Goſpell we ſpake of? where, or what is their comfort or ours, in theſe tydings: To deale plainely: when wee ſeeke it in aſcendo, we finde it not: Nor, in ad Patrem: Nor, in ad Patrem meum. None of theſe is it. But, in His & ad Patrem veſtrum, there, we finde it; there it is. There was (you will ſay) as much as this comes to, in fratres meos. It is true; it implied no leſſe. But, CHRIST would not deliver this implicitè, by way of implying, but explicitè, as explicate and plainely, as He could. And not once but twice. And it is a happy turne for us, He did ſo: For, this point can never be too plainely ſpoken to, too often repeated, too much ſtood upon. All the joy of the morning is in this veſtrum. Tell them, I goe to the Father, that is not all: Tell them this too, As I goe to the Father, ſo the Father I goe to, is their father, as well as mine; Not mine alone, but theirs alſo. And tell them againe, that, if Patrem meum be the cauſe of my aſcending (as here is none other ſet downe;) If I goe to Him thus, becauſe He is my Father; becauſe He is theirs alſo, they alſo ſhall come after me, the ſame way, to the ſame place, upon the ſame reaſon.

And He doth expreſſe here the terminus ad quem by the Party to whom, rather than by the Place to which, becauſe the Party will ſoone bring us to the Place, and to ſomewhat beſides. To the Place: For, you ſhall ſee, what will follow of this: that His houſe, that heaven is now become Paterna domus to us, as our fathers houſe; And who ſhall keepe us from our fathers houſe? No more ſtrangers now, but of the houſhold of GOD. And, in the houſhold, not ſervants but children; and have thereto as good right and title, ſhall be as welcome thither every way, as any child to his owne fathers houſe here uſeth to be. GOD, through Him, ſtanding no otherwiſe affected
17. to us, than as a father to his child; as well diſpoſed, as willing, as ready to receive us. CHRIST His beloved Son, in whom He is ſo abſolutely well pleaſed as He alwaies heares Chap. 11 43. Him, hath prayed to Him and obtained of Him, that where He is, we may be alſo, and,
Mic. 2 13. in due time, aſcend up, whither He is now aſcended, Pandens iter coram nobis, opening the paſſage for us to follow Him.

But, I told you, there was ſomewhat in the Perſon, more than in the Place. For,
Rom. 8. 15. by vertue of this Patrem veſtrum, while we are here, if we cry Abba Father (as now we may) He is ready to receive our prayers: and when we goe hence, ready to receive our perſons. While we are here, if at any time we repent, and ſay, Ibo ad patrem (with the child in the Goſpell) ready to receive us to grace: And, when we goe hence,
Luc. 15. 18. we may ſay with CHRIST, Vado ad patrem, ready to receive us to glorie. So, of ad Patrem veſtrum, there is uſe here and there, both.

And, all this by meanes of CHRISTS reſurrection: beſides the generall vertue whereof, to make all men riſe (all, in the ſecond Adam that die in the firſt) there is further a ſecond ſpeciall vertue for us Chriſtians, to make us riſe, not onely from the grave, but riſe higher than ſo, even as high as to heaven it ſelfe. And that we may have good right ſo to doe, to make His Father ours, and his Fathers houſe ours, that there we may dwell together fratres in unum. On which dependeth, and from whence riſeth all our hope of happineſſe for ever. And this is the joy of the Feaſt we celebrate, the loving kindneſſe of this morning, the glad tydings of Marie Magdalens Goſpell. It is evangelium parvum (ſo they call it) but a little one, but it hath in it, in theſe few words couched, much matter both of high myſterie and of heavenly comfort.

There be of the Fathers, that, telling the words of the Meſſage (which are fifteene in number) make them as ſo many ſtepps or rongs (as it were) of Iacobs Ladder, which we to aſcend by. There be others, that more properly and to the Text more agreeable obſerve theſe foure, [1] Patrem meum, [2] Patrem veſtrum, [3] Deum meum, [4] Deum veſtrum, as ſo many wheeles, as it were of Elias his chariot, in which he was carried up to heaven. 2 King. 2.

Aſcendo the chariot; theſe, the foure wheeles of it.

The truth is, there lye faire before us in it, foure paires or combinations, by which foure, aſcendo is here drawne in the Text. 1 Two ſingle: Patrem and Deum, one: 2 Meum and veſtrum, the other. Two double; 3 Patrem meum and Patrem veſtrum, one: and 4 Deum meum, Deum veſtrum, the other. I will but touch them briefly.

Father and GOD at large firſt, without any Pronounes put to them at all. It was not ſo, Stylo veteri. There, in the Law, it was Dominus Deus. To change this, and to make it Stylo novo, Pater Deus; in place of Dominus putting Pater, making of GOD a LORD, GOD a Father; is worth the while. It mends the terme, and it mends the matter much; as much as a Father is better than a LORD. Bonum Paſcha, bonus tranſitus: and we bound to our bleſſed SAVIOVR, for making this Paſſeover, for working but this change or alteration in GODS ſtyle. 1 Patrem Deum: The firſt paire. Exod. 20. 2.

A Father: How a Father? For, a Father in a ſenſe (we know) He may be ſaid and is, to all things whatſoever. Father of the raine and of the drops of dew (in Iob.) But, of us men, of mankinde, more ſpecially, in that we beare His Image. But, that is not it neither, that here is meant. That, is here meant, is aſcendo ad Patrem, a Father to aſcend to. Not for our prayers onely, but even alſo for our perſons to aſcend to. So, a Father He is to none, but to CHRIST, and to the true Chriſtian. Iob 38. 28.

And this now, a Father to aſcend to, is it that puts the difference betweene Him and all other fathers beſide Him. Fathers to aſcend to, ſuch Fathers there are none: None ſuch here. Our fathers here, we deſcend to, goe downe to them; downe, downe to the grave. Him, and Him only, we goe up to, up to heaven, up even where CHRIST is ſitting at the right hand of GOD; and He, to that end, a father, even to make us aſcend thither to Him. Heb. 10. 12.

Why would not Father ſuffice? Why is GOD added? Father is a name of much good will: But many a good father wants good meanes to his good will. GOD, is added, that He may not be defective that way; have meanes to His meaning. For, if He be a Father, firſt it is the voice of a father to his ſonne (in the Goſpell) omnia mea tua ſunt. Now then, if this Father be alſo GOD, and all His be ours, what can we deſire more, than all GOD hath, all that ever GOD is worth; able to ſatisfie never ſo vaſt a deſire (this.) For ſo, if heaven and the joyes of it be His, they be ours too; and then there lackes nothing but aſcendo, to goe up and take poſſeſſion of them: and here (lo) it is, Aſcendo ad patrem. Luc. 15. 32.

Bound to Him for this firſt, Patrem Deum. No whit leſſe bound for the ſecond; for putting to theſe pronounes poſſeſſives, Meum, and veſtrum (which is the ſecond ſingle combination.) For, till they came, till they in this wiſe, were put to, Meum was meum, and Veſtrum was veſtrum; His was His, and Ours was ours: His, His owne; and ours, to our ſelves, and there an end. No relation either to other, no intereſt either in other. But, now, Meum is made veſtrum; and veſtrum, meum. His, ours; and ours His, enterchangeably. A bleſſed change may we ſay: His great Meum for our little veſtrum: Little ours for great His. Every one will ſee the oddes betweene theſe. That (indeed) we are as much bound for meum and veſtrum, as for Patrem and Deum. Nay, more. For, as there is no comfort in Heaven, without GOD; nor, in GOD, without a Father: So, is there not any either in Father, Heaven, or GOD, without [ours] to give us a property in them. This then for the ſecond ſingle. Now to the two double. 2 Meum, veſtrum: The ſecond paire.

Patrem meum ſtands firſt, and is firſt every way. But Patrem meum will doe us no good. That which muſt doe us the good, is the ſecond in place, but (to us) the firſt. Patrem veſtrum, that will ſerve; that alone will ſerve us, we need no more. Oſtende nobis Patrem & ſufficit (ſaith Saint Philip.) But, how that ſhould be compaſſed, and 3 Patrem meum, Patrem veſtrum: The third paire Iohn 14. 8.

and His meum ſhould be our veſtrum, that Hee ſhould be ours, hic labor eſt, that is all the matter.

Deum meum. Deum veſtrum: The IV. paire.

This leades us to the other, the laſt combination of all, of Deum meum and veſtrum. For, that His Father may be our Father, no remedy, but our GOD muſt firſt be His GOD. So, this fetches in that. One would not ſerve: there behooved to be twaine: elſe the chariot will not goe.

It will be beſt, ante omnia, to ſet forth, in theſe termes, what is proper and what not; what CHRISTS, and what ours. Much light wee ſhall receive thereby.

CHRIST, on His part, ſaith My Father: and Hee ſaith alſo, My GOD. For Him to ſay, My Father, is proper; wee ſee reaſon for it. But, for Him, to ſay My GOD, no reaſon at all, altogether unproper. For, how can GOD have a GOD?

Deum veſtrum. Patrem veſtrum.

CHRIST, on our part, ſaith Deum veſtrum, your GOD; right and true (that) we are His poore creatures, He our GOD; ſo knowne, ſo acknowledged to be. But He ſaith further Patrem veſtrum, your Father: how that can be ſaid, we ſee not. Alas we are but duſt and aſhes: Our lineage is well ſet forth by Iob: We muſt ſay to rottenneſſe, Thou art my father; And to the wormes, Yee are my mother, Yee are my ſiſter. No Father of ours He, not properly.

Patrem meum: Deum veſtrum.

In exact proprietie of ſpeech then, Father here referres to CHRIST: GOD to us. His Father, is right: ſo is, our GOD. We will never ſpend a word on them, let them goe. But, His GOD, no way right; no more than, our Father. Theſe two, it is ſure, are unproper, both. And if ever they ſhall be verified one of the other, it muſt be brought about by ſome other wayes and meanes. And, ſo it is; and by the ſame way that the one, by the very ſame the other. His Father, our Father, by His meanes. Our GOD, His GOD, by ours.

To ſet them in right method, in their true order, Erunt noviſſimi primi, the laſt is to be firſt: we to begin at Deum veſtrum, the very laſt word of all, as it were the foot of the ladder, or the two ſmaller wheeles that goe before. To make meum, veſtrum; His, ours; Veſtrum is to be made meum, ours to be made His. Our GOD to become His GOD, firſt, that His Father may become our Father after. Him, that was our GOD, we to make His GOD; that Him, that was His Father, He may make to be our Father.

That this might proceed, He that doth here aſcend was to deſcend. Deſcend, whither? Even to be one of us: and we were creatures; and ſo, being one of us, Hee to be a creature as well as we. So He was, and ſo He is. For, even the ſoule and bodie of CHRIST are in the ranke of creatures; and, relation had to them, a creature He is, a GOD He hath, the ſame, that we (for there is but one:) and ſo He may truly ſay Deum meum, Our GOD, is His GOD. That we might aſcend to the higheſt heaven, He was to deſcend εἰς κατώτερα τῆς γῆς, to the loweſt parts of the earth: and ſo did. Deſcendo ad matrem with Him, that aſcendo ad Patrem with us. That we might crie Abba Father, He was content to crie that ſtrange crie Eli, Eli, My GOD, My GOD, on the Croſſe.

Ephes. 4.9. Rom. 8.15. Matth. 27.46.

So CHRIST might then ſay, and truly ſay, My GOD, no leſſe than My Father: His Father, as GOD; His GOD, as man. As the Sonne of GOD, a GOD He hath not; a Father He hath: As the Sonne of man, a Father He hath not; a GOD He hath. A GOD (I ſay) then, He hath; but, never till then; never till He medled with us. But then, He had: and ſince He hath. He, that was ours, not His; is now His, as well as ours. Theſe two wheeles are ſet right.

Patrem veſtrum.

We have brought it to this, that CHRIST may ſay Deum meum. After we have brought Him to Deum meum, we are halfe way; Our GOD is His. But now, how ſhall we get His Father to have Him to be our Father? Firſt, His Father He was from all eternity: He, and none but He can ſay, and ſay properly, Patrem meum. But He is content to quit that (none but He) and to take us in; and He being our brother before fore, to make us His, now. Ours, in our estate of this mortall: His, in His estate of immortall life. For, here (now) rising, and upon His ascending, Hee adopts us; and, by adopting, makes us; and by making, pronounces us His brethren, and so children to His Father. Vs, His children; Him, our Father, witnesse fratres meos, and patrem vestrum, both from His owne mouth. Salvum sit verbum Domini mei, by vertue whereof, it is now Abba Pater with us. Now Vado ad Patrem, wee a Father of GOD (even as CHRIST that spake it) to pray to, to goe to. Meum and vestrum both now in one. Then wee had a Father of Him, and since we have: But, till then, a GOD wee had, but not a Father: at least, not such a Father of Him as since we have. This, the bonum pascha, the felix transitus, the blessed enterchange we spoke of.

Who gets by this? Deum meum, His, His GOD, was His humiliation. Hee as low as we, nay lower than the lowest of us, when He cryed My GOD, My GOD, Deum meum, His humiliation, and Patrem vestrum our exaltation; by it, wee are made, in case, as Hee, to rise, to ascend: to goe whither, to be where Hee is, for ever; to say Ibo ad Patrem; to say Vado ad Patrem; to say with Him, Father forgive; and againe, Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit. In Patrem vestrum are all these. Deum meum. Patrem vestrum. Luke 23.34. 46.

So by this time, we see the necessitie of both these combinations, of both paire of wheeles; and that to our great comfort.

But we are not so to looke to our owne comfort, but that withall we be carefull to preserve His honour; that so, both may goe hand in hand together. And there is order taken for that too, by severing of each paire; that it is not nostrum in one word ours: but meum, and vestrum (in two words) mine, and yours: Yet, otherwise His and otherwise ours; Both, as Father, and as GOD. Meum and Vestrum, not Nostrum.

As Father. His, by nature, by very generation: Ours, by grace, by meere adoption. As GOD (and there we are before Him) our GOD, by nature. His no otherwise, than as He tooke upon Him our nature.

But, His honour thus set safe, by this partition kept on foot, then let the wheeles runne, pursue the rest, as farre as you please, make of it the most you can, for your best availe. That one and the same is both His and ours. One Father, one GOD, to Him and us both. Father, to Him; GOD, to us; GOD, to Him; Father, to us. If we, a GOD; He one. If He, a Father; we, one. Our GOD, CHRISTS GOD, CHRISTS Father, our Father. There is ascendo your chariot, and these are the foure wheeles on which it moveth, and is carried up to Heaven.

But, where is Easter-day, what is becomme of it all this while? For, me thinkes, all the time, we are thus about Father and Sonne, and taking our nature and becomming one of us, it should be Christmas by this, and not Easter (as it is) that this a meeter Text (one would thinke) for that Feast; and that (now) it comes out of season.

Not a whit. It is CHRIST that speaketh, and He never speaketh but in season; never, but to the purpose; never, but on the right Day.

A brother-hood (wee grant) was begunne then, at Christmas, by His birth, as upon that Day, for loe then was Hee borne. But, so was He now also, at Easter: borne then, too: and after a better manner borne. His Resurrection was a second birth, Easter a second Christmas. Hodiè genui te, as true of this day, as of that. The Church appointeth, for the first Psalme this day, the second Psalme, the Psalme of hodiè genui te. The Apostle saith expressly (Act. 13.33.) When He rose from the dead, then was hodiè genui te, fulfilled in Him, verified of Him. Then He was primogenitus a mortuis, GODS first begotten from the dead. And upon this latter birth doth the brotherhood of this day depend. Psal. 2. 7. Col. 1. 18.

There was then a new begetting, this day. And if a new begetting, a new Paternitie, and fraternitie, both. By the hodie genuite of Christmas, how soone He was borne of the Virgins wombe, He became our brother (sinne except) subject to all our infirmities; so, to mortalitie, and even to death it selfe. And, by death, that brotherhood had beene dissolved, but for this dayes rising. By the hodie genuite of Easter, as soone as He was borne againe of the wombe of the grave, He begins a new brother-hood, founds a new fraternitie straight; adopts us (we see) anew againe, by His fratres meos; and thereby, Hee that was primogenitus a mortuis, becomes primogenitus inter multos fratres: when the first begotten from the dead, then the first begotten in this respect, among many brethren. Before, He was ours: now, we are His. That was by the mothers side; so, He ours: This is by Patrem vestrum, the Fathers side; So, wee His. But halfe-brothers before; Never, of whole bloud, till now. Now, by Father and Mother both, Fratres germani, Fratres fraterrimi, we cannot be more.

Rom. 8. 29.

To shut all up in a word: That of Christmas, was the fraternitie rising out of Deum meum, Deum vestrum; So, then, brethren. This of Easter, adopting us to His Father was the fraternitie of Patrem meum, Patrem vestrum: So, brethren, now.

This daye's is the better birth, the better brother-hood by farre: the fore-wheeles are the lesse, the hinder, the larger ever. For, first, that of ours was when He was mortall: But, His adoption He deferred, He would not make it, while He was mortall: reserved it, till He was risen againe, and was even upon His ascending, and then He made it. So, mortall He was, when He ours: But, now (when we His) He is immortall, and wee brethren to Him, in that state, the state of immortalitie. Brethren, before; but not to ascendo: now, to ascendo and all. Death was in danger, to have dissolved that: But, death hath now no power on Him, or on this, this shall never be in danger of being dissolved any more. That, without this, is nothing.

But we shall not need to stand in termes of comparison: since, then, it was but one of these; now, it is both. His Father, is now become Our Father, to make us joynt heires with Him of His heavenly Kingdome: His GOD likewise, become our GOD, to make us partakers, with them both, of the Divine Nature. Patrem meum and Patrem vestrum, Deum meum, and Deum vestrum runne both merrily together, and ascendo upon them both.

Whereof (I meane of the partaking of His divine nature) to give us full and perfect assurance, as He tooke our flesh and became our brother, flesh of our flesh then; so He gives us His flesh, that we may become His brethren, flesh of His flesh, now: And gives it us now upon this day, the very day of our Adoption into this fraternitie. By taking our flesh; so begun His: By giving His flesh; so, begins ours. For, requisite it was, that, since we draw our death from the first Adam, by partaking His substance; semblably and in like sort, we should partake the substance of the Second Adam, that so we might draw our life from Him; Should be ingrafted into Him, as the branches into the vine that we might receive His sap (which is His Similitude:) Should be flesh of His flesh, not He of ours, as before, but we of His now; that we might be vegetate with His Spirit, even with His Divine Spirit. For, now in Him, the Spirits are so united, as partake one, and partake the other withall.

And it hath beene, and it is therefore an ordinance in the Church for ever, that, as upon this day, at the returning of it continually, His flesh and bloud should be, in Sacrament, exhibited to us; As to make a yearely solemne renewing of this fraternitie, so likewise to seale to us the fruit of it, our rising; and not rising onely, but, so rising, as ascendo goe withall. A badge of the one, a pledge of the other. For which cause, as it is called the living bread for that, it shall restore us to life and raise us up in the the last day: So is it alſo, the bread that came downe from heaven; came downe from thence, to make us goe up thither, and in the ſtrength of it to aſcend into GODS holy hill, and there reſt with Him in His tabernacle for ever. That ſo, the truth of the Feaſt, and of the Text both, may be fulfilled in us everlaſtingly, with GOD (Patrem veſtrum) our Father: and with CHRIST (fratres Meos) our Brother: and with the Bleſſed Spirit, the Love of them both one to the other, and of them both to us.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majestie at WHITE-HALL, on the XIII. of April, A.D. MDCXXIII. being EASTER-DAY.

ESAI CHAP. LXIII. Ver. I, II, III.

Quis est Iste qui venit de EDOM, &c.

Who is this that commeth from EDOM, with red garments from BOSRA? Hee is glorious in His apparell and walketh in great strength: I speake in righteousnesse, and am mighty to save.

Wherefore is thine apparell red, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-presse?

I have troden the wine-presse alone, and of all the people there was none with me: for, I will tread them in mine anger, and tread them under foot in my wrath, and their bloud shall bee sprinkled upon my garments, and I will staine all my rayment.

EVer when wee read, or heare read any text or passage out of this Prophet, the Prophet ESAI, it brings to our minde the Noble man Act. VIII. that sitting in his chariot read another like passage out of this same Prophet. Brings him to minde: and with him, his question, Of whom doth the Prophet speake this? of himselfe or of some other? Not of himselfe, that's once: It cannot bee himselfe. It is he, that askes the question. Some other then it must needs bee, of whom it is; and we to aske who that other was.

Act. 8 34.

The tenour of Scripture, that Noble man then read, was out of the LIII. Chapter, and this of ours, out of the LXIII. ten Chapters betweene. But, if S. PHILIP had found him reading reading of this here, as he did, of that; he would likewiſe have begun, at this ſame Scripture, as at that he did, and preached to him CHRIST: Onely with this difference: out of that, CHRISTS Paſſion; out of this, His Reſurrection. For, He that was led as a ſheepe to be ſlaine, and ſo was ſlaine there; He it is, and no other, that riſes and comes here backe like a Lion, from Bozra, imbrued with bloud, the bloud of His enemies. Eſay 53.7.

I have (before I was aware) diſcloſed, who this Partie is, It was not amiſſe, I ſo ſhould; not to hold you long in ſuſpence, but to give you a little light at the firſt, whom it would fall on. CHRIST it is. Two things there are that make, it can be no other but He. 1 One is without the Text, in the end of the Chapter next before: There is a proclamation, Behold, here comes your SAVIOVR, and immediately, He that comes, is this Partie here, from Edom. He is our SAVIOVR, and beſides Him there is none. Even CHRIST the LORD. 2 The other is in the Text it ſelfe, in theſe words: Torcular calcavi ſolus, I have trode the wine-preſſe alone. Words, ſo proper to CHRIST, ſo every where aſcribed to Him, and to Him only, as you ſhall not reade them any where applied to any other: no, not by the Iewes themſelves. So as, if there were no more but theſe two, they ſhew it plainly enough, it is, it can be none but CHRIST. Chap.62.11.

And CHRIST, when? Even this day, of all dayes. His comming here from Edom, will fall out to bee His riſing from the dead. His returne from Bozra nothing but His vanquiſhing of Hell. (We may uſe His words in applying it, Thou haſt not left my ſoule in hell, but brought mee backe from the deepe of the earth againe.) Nothing but the act of His riſing againe. So that, this very morning was this Scripture fulfilled in our eares. Pſal.16.10. 71.20.

The whole Text entire is a dialogue betweene two; 1 the Prophet, and 2 CHRIST. I.
There are in it two Queſtions; and to the two queſtions two Anſwers. 1 The Prophets firſt queſtion is touching the Partie Himſelfe, who He is; in theſe words, Who is this? To which, the Partie Himſelfe anſwers, in the ſame verſe, theſe words, that am I, one that, &c.

The Prophets ſecond queſtion is about his colours, why He was all in red (in the ſecond verſe:) Wherefore then is thy apparell, &c. The anſwer to that is (in the third verſe) in theſe: I have troden, &c. For I will tread them downe. II.

Of CHRIST: Of His riſing or comming backe: of His colours: of the wine-preſſe, that gave Him this tincture, or rather of the two wine-preſſes: 1 the Wine-preſſe of Redemption, firſt; 2 and then, of the other Wine-preſſe of Vengeance.

THE Prophets uſe to ſpeake of things to come, as if they ſaw them preſent before their eyes. That makes their Prophecies be called Viſions. In his viſion here, the Prophet being taken up in ſpirit, ſees one comming. Comming, whence? From the Land or Countrey of Idumæa or Edom. From what place there? From Bozra the chiefe Citie in the Land, the place of greateſt ſtrength. Who will lead me into the ſtrong Citie? That is Bozra: Who will bring me into Edom? He that can doe the firſt, can doe the latter. Winne Bozra, and Edom is won. I. The firſt Queſtion touching the Partie: Who it is. Pſal.60.9.

There was a cry in the end of the Chapter before: Behold, here comes your SAVIOVR. He looked, and ſaw one comming. Two things he deſcries in this Partie. 1 One, His habite, that He was formoſus in ſtolâ, very richly arrayed. 2 The other, His gate: that Hee came ſtoutly marching, or pacing the ground very ſtrongly. Two good familiar notes, to deſcrie a ſtranger by. His Apparell, whether rich or meane: which the world, moſt commonly takes notice of men, by. His Gate: for, weake men have but a feeble gate. Valiant ſtrong men tread upon the ground ſo, as, by it, you may diſcerne their ſtrength.

Now, this Partie He came ſo goodly in His apparell, ſo ſtately in His march, as if, by all likelihood, He had made ſome conqueſt in Edom (the place He came from;) had had a victory in Bozra (the Citie where He had beene.) And the truth is, ſo He had. He ſaith it in the third verſe, He had trodden downe His enemies, had trampled upon them, made the bloud even ſtart out of them; which bloud of theirs had all to ſtained His garments. This was no evill newes, For Eſayes countrimen, the people of GOD; Edom was the worſt enemie they had.

With joy then: but, not without admiration, ſuch a Partie ſees the Prophet come toward him. Sees Him; but knowes Him not: thinkes Him worthy the knowing: ſo thinking, and not knowing, is deſirous to be inſtructed, concerning Him. Out of this deſire, askes, quis eſt? Not, of himſelfe, (he durſt not be ſo bold) Who are you? but of ſome ſtander by, Whom have we here? Can you tell, who this might be? The firſt queſtion.

What is meant by Edom. Matth 2.14.

But before wee come to the queſtion, a word or two of the place where Hee had beene, and whence Hee came: Edom, and Bozra, what is meant by them? For, if this Partie be CHRIST; CHRIST was in Ægypt a childe: but never in Edom, that we reade; never at Bozra in all His life. So as here, wee are to leave the letter. Some other it might be the letter might meane: we will not much ſtand to looke after Him. For how ever poſſibly ſome ſuch there was, yet it will plainly appeare by the ſequele, that the teſtimony of IESVS, as it is of each other, ſo it is the ſpirit of this prophecie. Apoc. 9.10.

Goe we then to the kernell, and let the huske lye: let goe the dead letter, and take we to us the ſpirituall meaning that hath ſome life in it. For, what care we for the literall Edom or Bozra, what became of them: what are they to us? Let us compare ſpirituall things with ſpirituall things: that is it muſt doe us good.

I will give you a key to this, and ſuch like Scriptures. Familiar it is with the Prophets (nothing more, than) to ſpeake to their People, in their owne language; than to expreſſe their ghoſtly enemies, the both mortall and immortall enemies of their ſoules, under the titles and termes of thoſe Nations and Cities, as were the knowne ſworne enemies of the Common-wealth of Iſrael. As, of Ægypt where they were in bondage: as of Babylon, where, in captivitie: elſe-where, as of Edom here, who maliced them more than both thoſe. If the Angell tell us right, Rev. XI. there is a ſpirituall Sodome and Ægypt, where our LORD was crucified: and, if they, why not a ſpirituall Edom too, whence our LORD roſe againe? Put all three together, Ægypt, Babel, Edom: all their enmities, all, are nothing to the hatred, that Hell beares us. But yet, if you aske, of the three which was the worſt? That, was Edom. To ſhew, the Prophet, here, made good choyce of his place: Edom upon earth, comes neereſt to the kingdome of darkneſſe in Hell, of all the reſt. And that, in theſe reſpects: Apoc. 11.8.

1 Firſt, they were the wickedeſt people under the Sunne. If there were any devils upon earth, it was they: if the Devill, of any countrey, hee would chooſe to be an Edomite. No place on earth, that reſembled hell neerer: next to hell on earth, was Edom, for all that nought was. Malachi cals Edom, the border of all wickedneſſe; a people with whom GOD was angry for ever. In which very points, no enemies ſo fitly expreſſe the enemies of our ſoules, againſt whom the anger of GOD is eternall, and the ſmoke of whoſe torments ſhall aſcend for ever. Hell, for all that nought is. That, if the power of darkneſſe, and hell it ſelfe, if they be to be expreſſed by any place on earth, they cannot be better expreſſed than in theſe, Edom and Bozra. Mal. 1.4. Apoc. 14.11.

2 I will give you another. The Edomites were the poſteritie of Eſau: the ſame is Edom. So, they were neereſt of kinne in the Iewes, of all nations: ſo, ſhould have beene their beſt friends. The Iewes and they came of two brethren: Edom was the elder: and that was the griefe; that the people of Iſrael comming of Iacob the Gen. 36.1.

the younger brother, had enlarged their border; got them a better ſeat and country by far, than they (the Edomites) had. Hence grew envie: and an enemie out of envie, is ever the worſt. So were they: the moſt cankred enemies that Iſrael had. The caſe is ſo betweene us and the evill ſpirits. Angels they were (we know) and ſo, in a ſort, elder brethren to us. Of the two intellectuall Natures, they the firſt created. Our caſe (now) CHRIST be thanked, is much better than theirs: which is that enraged them againſt us, as much and more, than ever any Edomite againſt Iſrael. Hell, for rancour and envie.

3 Yet one more: they were ready to do Gods people all the miſchief, they were able; and, when they were not able of themſelves, they ſhewed their good wills, though; ſet on others. And when they had wonne Ieruſalem; cried downe with it, downe with it, even to the ground: no leſſe would ſerve. And, when it was on the ground, inſulted and rejoyced above meaſure; Remember the children of Edom. This is right the divels propertie quarto modo. He that hath but the heart of a man, will even rue, to ſee his enemie lying in extreme miſerie. None but very devils, or Devils incarnate will doe ſo: corrupt their compaſſion, caſt off all pitie; rejoyce, inſult, take delight at ones deſtruction. Hell for their ἐπιχαιρεκακίαν, inſulting over men in miſerie. Pſal. 137. 7.

4 But will ye go even to the letter? None did ever ſo much miſchiefe to David, as did Doeg: he was an Edomite. Nor none ſo much to the Sonne of David, CHRIST; none bore more malice to Him, firſt and laſt, than did Herod; and he was an Edomite. So, which way ſoever we take it, next the kingdome of darkneſſe was Edom upon earth. And Chriſt comming from thence, may well be ſaid to come from Edom. 1 Sam 22. 9.

2 By Bozra. But, what ſay you to Bozra? This: that if the countrey of Edom, do well ſet before us the whole kingdome of darkeneſſe, or region of death; Bozra may well ſtand for Hell it ſelfe. Bozra, was the ſtrongeſt hold of that kingdome: Hell, is ſo of this. The whole countrey of Idumea was called and knowne by the name of Vz, that is of ſtrength; And, what of ſuch ſtrength, as death? all the ſonnes of men ſtoope to him. Bozra was called the ſtrong citie: Hell is as ſtrong as it every way. They write, it was invironed with huge high rockes on all ſides: one onely cleft to come to it, by. And, when you were in, there muſt you periſh: no getting out againe. For all the world like to hell, as Abraham deſcribes it to him that was in it, They that would goe from this place to you cannot poſſibly; neither can they come from thence to us; the gulfe is ſo great, no getting out. No habeas corpus, from death; No habeas animam out of hell; you muſt let that alone for ever. Pſal. 60. 9. Luc. 16. 26. Pſal. 49. 8.

Now then, have we the Prophets true Edom, his very Bozra, indeed. By this, we underſtand what they meane. Edom, the kingdome of darkeneſſe and death: Bozra, the ſeat of the Prince of darkeneſſe (that is) Hell it ſelfe. From both which CHRIST, this day, returned. His ſoule was not left in hell: His fleſh ſaw not (but roſe from) corruption. Pſal. 16. 10.

For, over Edom, ſtrong as it was, yet David caſt his ſhoo over it, (that is, after the Hebrew phraſe) ſet his foot upon it, and trod it downe. And Bozra, as impregnable a Hold as it was holden, yet David won it; was led into the ſtrong citie: led into it, and came thence againe. So did the Sonne of David, this day from His Edom, death, how ſtrong ſoever, yet ſwallowed up in victorie, this day. And, from Hell, His Bozra: how hard ſoever it held (as he that was in it, found there was no getting thence;) CHRIST is got forth, we ſee. How many ſoules ſoever were there left, His was not left there. Pſa. 108. 9. 1 Cor. 15. 54.

And, when did He this? when, ſolutus doloribus inferni, He looſed the paines of hell; trod upon the Serpents head, and all to bruiſed it; tooke from death his ſting; from hell his victorie (that is) his ſtandard, alluding to the Romane ſtandard that had in it the image of the goddeſſe Victorie. Seazed upon the Chirographum contra nos, the Ragman Roll, that made ſo ſtrong againſt us; tooke it, rent it, and ſo rent, nailed it to His Croſſe; made His banner of it (of the Law cancelled) hanging at it banner-wiſe. And having thus ſpoiled Principalities and Powers, He made an open ſhew of them, triumphed over them in ſemetipſo, in His own perſon: (All three are in Col. 2.) and triumphantly came thence with Act. 2. 24. 1 Cor. 15. 55. Col. 2. 14. Col. 2. 15.

with the keyes of Edom and Bozra both, of hell and of death, both at His girdle, as He shewes Himselfe. Apoc. 1. And when was this? if ever, on this very day. On which, having made a full and perfect conquest of death, and of him that hath the power of death, that is, the Divell (Heb. 2.) Hee rose and returned thence, this morning, as a mighty Conqueror, saying as Debora did in her song: O my soule, thou hast troden downe strength, thou hast marched valiantly.

Heb. 2. 14.
Iud. 5. 21.

And comming backe thus, from the debellation of the spirituall Edom, and the breaking up of the true Bozra indeed, it is wondred, Who it should be. Note this: that no body knew CHRIST at His rising; neither Marie Magdalen, nor they that went to Emmaus. No more doth the Prophet here.

Iob. 20. 14.
Luc. 24. 16.

Now, there was reason to aske this question, for none would ever thinke it to be CHRIST. There is great odds; it cannot be He. 1. Not He: Hee was put to death, and put into His grave, and a great stone upon Him, not three daies since. This Party is alive and alives like. His Ghost it cannot be: He glides not (as Ghosts, they say, doe) but paces the ground very strongly.

Not He: He had His apparell shared amongst the souldiers; was left all naked. This Party hath gotten Him on glorious apparell, rich scarlet.

2

Not He: for, if He come, He must come in white, in the linnen, He was lapped in, and laid in His grave. This Partie comes in quite another colour, all in red. So the colours suit not.

To be short, not He: for, He was put to a foile, to a foule foile, as ever was any: they did to Him even what they listed; scorned, insulted upon Him. It was then the houre and power of darkenesse. This Party, whatsoever He is, hath gotten the upper hand, won the field; marches stately, Conqueror-like. His, the day sure.

Luc. 22. 53.

The first answer. That Partie is Christ.

Well; yet CHRIST it is. His answer gives Him for no other. To His answer then. The Party (it seemes) overheard the Prophets asking, and is pleased to give an answer to it himselfe: we are much bound to Him for it. No man can tell, so well as He himselfe, who He is. Some other might mistake Him, and mis-enforme us of Him: Now, we are sure we are right. No error personæ.

His name indeed, He tells not; but describes Himselfe by two such notes, as can agree to none properly but to CHRIST. Of none can these two be so affirmed, as of Him they may. That, by these two, we know, this is CHRIST, as plainely, as if His name had beene spelled to us. 1. Speaking righteousnesse; and righteousnesse referr'd to speech, signifieth truth ever. No guile to be found in His mouth: and, Omnis homo is, you know what. 2. Mighty to save: and, Vana salus hominis, vaine is the helpe of man. Who ever spake so right as He spake? Or who ever was so mighty to save as He? And this is His answer to quis est iste.

Psal. 115. 11. 60. 13.

That, am I. One that speake righteousnesse, and am mighty to save. Righteous in speaking; mighty in saving, whose word is truth: whose worke is salvation. Iust and true of my word and promise; Powerfull and mighty in performance of both. The best description (say I) that can bee of any man: by his word, and deed both.

1 His Natures.

And see how well they fit. Speaking is most proper; that, referrs to Him, as the Word: (In the beginning was the Word:) to His Divine Nature. Saving, that referrs to His very name IESVS, given Him by the Angell, as man, for that He should save His people from their sinnes: from which none had ever power to save, but He. There have you His two Natures.

Ioh. 1. 1.

2 His Offices.

Speaking referrs to his Office of Priest: the Priests lips to preserve knowledge; the Law of righteousnesse to be required at his mouth. Saving (and that, mightily) pertaines to Him as a King; is the office (as Daniel calls Him) of Messias the Captaine. Righteousnesse He spake, by His preaching. Saving, that belongs first to His miraculous suffering: It being farre a greater miracle for the Deitie to suffer any the least injurie, than to create a new world, yea many. But, secondly (which is proper to the Text and time) in His mighty ſubduing and treading downe hell and death, and all the power of Satan. Prophetiza nobis (they ſaid, at His Paſſion) ſpeake who hit you, there: and Ave Rex, they ſaid too: Both in ſcorne; but moſt true, both. Luc. 22. 64. Matt. 27. 24.

3 His Benefits.

You may referre theſe two, if you pleaſe, to His two maine Benefits redounding to us from theſe two. Two things there are that undoe us: Error, and Sinne. From His Speaking, we receive knowledge of His truth, againſt error. From His Saving, we receive the power of grace, againſt Sinne, and ſo, are ſaved from Sinnes ſequele, Edom and Bozra, both. This is His deſcription; and this is enough. A full deſcription of His perſon, in His Natures, Offices, Benefits; in word and in deed. He it is, and can be none but He. To reflect a little on theſe two.

Mighty, not in ſpeaking.

You will obſerve, that His ſpeaking is ſet downe ſimply, but in His ſaving, He is ſaid to be mighty, or (as the word is) multus ad ſervandum. So, marke where the multus is. He is not multus ad loquendum, one that ſaith much; and paucus ad ſervandum, and then does little, as the manner of the world is. Multus is not there, at His Speech. It is put to ſervandum; There, He is much, and His Might much. Much of might to ſave.

But, in ſaving Eſay 55. 7.

That His might is not put, in treading downe or deſtroying. No, but multus ad ignoſcendum, in the fiftie five Chapter before: and, multus ad ſervandum, here. Mighty to ſhew mercie, and to ſave. Yet, mighty He is too, to deſtroy and tread downe: Elſe had He not atchieved this victorie in the Text. Mighty to ſave, implieth ever mighty to ſubdue; to ſubdue, them, whom He ſaves us from. Yet, of the twaine, He chooſeth rather the terme of ſaving (though both be true) becauſe ſaving is with Him primæ intentionis: So of the twaine, in that, He would have His might appeare rather. Mighty to deſtroy, He will not have mentioned or come in His ſtyle: but mighty to ſave, that is His title; that, the qualitie, He takes delight in: delights to deſcribe Himſelfe, and to be deſcribed by.

Yet he teacheth too: and that firſt.

You will yet marke alſo, as the coupling of theſe two in the deſcription of CHRIST (for, not either of theſe, alone will ſerve; but betweene them both, they make it up) ſo, that they goe together, theſe two, ever. He ſaves not any, but thoſe He teaches. And, note the order of them too. For, that that ſtands firſt, He doth firſt; firſt teaches. Mighty to ſave He is; but whom to ſave? whom He ſpeakes righteouſneſſe to; and they heare Him, and returne not againe to their former folly. There is no phanſying to our ſelves, we can diſpence with one of theſe; never care, whether we deale with the former, or no; whether we heare Him ſpeake at all: but take hold of the latter, and be ſaved with a good will. No: you cannot, but if you heare Him ſpeake firſt. He ſaith ſo, and ſets them ſo Himſelfe.

We to be like Him in both.

And put this to it, and I have done this point. That, ſuch as is Himſelfe, ſuch, if we heare Him, will He make us to be. And the more true and ſoothfaſt any of us is of His word, the more given to doe good and ſave, the liker to Him, and the liker to have our parts in His riſing. We know, quis eſt iſte, now. This for the firſt part.

II.

The ſecond queſtion: Why His apparell is red.

Now, the Prophet hearing Him anſwer ſo gently, takes to him a little courage, to aske Him one queſtion more, about His colours: He was a little troubled with them. If you be ſo mighty to ſave, as you ſay, how comes it then, what ailes your garments to be ſo red? and adds, what kinde of red; and he cannot tell, what to liken them better to, than as if He had newly come out of ſome wine-preſſe; had beene treading grapes, and preſſing out wine, there. He cals it wine: but the truth is, it was no wine: It was very bloud. New wine, in ſhew; bloud indeed; that upon His garments. So much appeareth in the next verſe following. Where He ſaith Himſelfe plainely, that Bloud it was, that was ſprinkled upon His clothes, and had ſteined them all over. We know well, our reaſon leads us, there could be no vintage, at this time of the yeare, the ſeaſon ſerves not: Bloud it was.

But,

The Answer. But becauſe the Prophet made mention of a wine-preſſe, had hit on that Simile; taking occaſion, upon the naming it, He ſhapes Him an anſwer according: That (indeed) He had beene in a wine-preſſe. And, ſo He had. The truth is, He had beene in one: Nay, in two then. In one He had beene, before this here. A double wine-preſſe (we loſe nothing by this) we find; CHRIST was in both. We cannot well take notice of the one, but we muſt needs touch upon the other. But, thus they are diſtinguiſhed. In that former, it was in torculari calcatus ſum ſolus: In this latter, it is Torcular calcavi ſolus. In the former, He was Himſelfe troden and preſſed: He was the grapes and cluſters Himſelfe. In this latter here, He that was troden on before, gets up againe, and doth here tread upon, and tread downe, calcare and conculcare (both words are in the verſe) upon ſome others (as it might be the Edomites.) The Preſſe He was troden in, was His Croſſe and Paſſion. This, which He came out of, this day, was in His deſcent and reſurrection: Both, proper to this Feaſt; One to Good-friday; the other, to Eaſter-day.

The firſt wine-preſſe. To purſue this of the wine-preſſe a little. The preſſe, the treading in it, is to make wine: Calcatus ſum is properly of grapes, the fruit of the vine. CHRIST is the true vine, He ſaith it Himſelfe. To make wine of Him, He, and the cluſters, He bare, muſt be preſſed. So He was. Three ſhrewd ſtreines they gave Him. One, in Gethſemane, that made Him ſweat bloud: The wine, or bloud (all is one) came forth at all parts of Him. Another, in the Iudgement Hall, Gabbatha; which made the bloud runne forth at His head, with the thornes; out of His whole body, with the Scourges; out of His hands and feet, with the nailes. The laſt ſtreine, at Golgotha: where, He was ſo preſſed, that they preſſed the very ſoule out of His body, and out ran bloud and water both. Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina Sacramenta (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) out came both Sacraments, the twin Sacraments of the Church.

Chriſts calcatus ſum. Ioh. 15. 5.

17.

Out of theſe preſſures ran the bloud of the grapes of the true Vine; the fruit whereof (as it is ſaid Iudg. 9.) cheereth both GOD and man. GOD, as a libamen, or drink-offering to Him. Man as the cup of ſalvation to them. But, to make this wine, His cluſters were to be cut; cut, and caſt in; caſt in, and troden on; troden and preſſed out: all theſe, before He came to be wine in the cup. As likewiſe, when He calls Himſelfe, granum frumenti the wheat-corne, theſe foure, 1 the ſicle, the 2 flaile, the 3 milſtone, 4 the oven, He paſſed thorow: All went over Him, before He was made bread: The Shew-bread, to GOD; to us, the Bread of life.

Iud. 9. 13.

Ioh. 12. 24.

But, to returne to the wine-preſſe, to tell you the occaſion or reaſon, why thus it behoved to be. It was not idly done; What need then was there of it, this firſt preſſing? we finde (1 Cor. 10.) Calix Dæmoniorum: The Divell hath a cup. Adam muſt needs be ſipping of it: Eritis ſicut Dii, went downe ſweetly, but poiſoned him: turned his nature quite. For Adam was by GOD, planted a naturall vine, a true root; but, thereby, by that cup degenerated into a wilde ſtrange vine, which, inſtead of good grapes, brought forth labruſcas, wild grapes, grapes of gall: bitter cluſters, Moſes calls them: Coloquintida, the Prophet, Mors in ollâ, and mors in calice: by which is meant, the deadly fruit of our deadly ſinnes.

1 Cor. 10. 21. Gen. 3. 5.

Eſay 5. 24. Deut. 32. 32. 2 Reg. 4. 40.

But, (as it is in the fifth Chapter of this Prophecie) where GOD planted this vine firſt, He made a wine-preſſe in it: So, the grapes that came of this ſtrange vine were cut and caſt into the preſſe; thereof came a deadly wine; of which (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) In the hand of the LORD there is a cup; the Wine is red, it is full mixt, and Hee powres out of it; and the Sinners of the earth are to drinke it, dreggs and all. Thoſe Sinners were our Fathers, and we. It came to Bibite ex hoc omnes: They and we, were to drinke of it, all: One after another round. Good reaſon, to drinke as we had brewed; to drinke the fruit of our owne inventions; our owne words and workes, wee had brought forth.

Matt. 26. 27.

About, the cup went: all ſtreined at it. At laſt, to CHRIST it came: He was none none of the ſinners, but was found among them. By His good will, He would have had it paſſe, Tranſcat à me calix iſte; you know who that was. Yet, rather than we, than any of us ſhould take it (it would be our bane, He knew) He tooke it; off it went, dregs and all. Alas, the myrrhe they gave Him at the beginning, the vineger at the ending of His Paſſion, were but poore reſemblances of this cup, ſuch as they were. That, another manner draught. We ſee it caſt Him into ſo unnaturall a ſweat of bloud all over; as, if He had beene wrung and cruſhed in a wine-preſſe, it could not have beene more. This (loe) was the firſt wine-preſſe, and CHRIST in it, three dayes agoe; and, what with the ſcourges, nailes and ſpeares, beſides, ſo preſſed, as forth it ran (bloud or wine, call it what you will) in ſuch, ſo great quantitie, as never ran it more plenteouſly out of any wine-preſſe of them all. Here is CHRISTVS in torculari, CHRISTS calcatus ſum. Eſay 53. 12. Matth. 20. 39.

Of which wine ſo preſſed then out of Him, came our Cup, the Cup of this day, the cup of the New Teſtament in His bloud, repreſented by the bloud of the grape. Wherein long before, old Iacob foretold, SHILO ſhould waſh his robe; as, full well Hee might have done; there came enough to have waſhed it over and over againe. So, you ſee now, how the caſe ſtands. That former, our cup due to us, and no way to Him, He dranke for us, that it might paſſe from us, and we not drinke it. Ours did He drinke, that we might drinke of His. He, the cup of wrath, that we, the cup of bleſſing: ſet firſt, before GOD as a Libamen, at the ſight or ſent whereof He ſmelleth a ſavour of reſt, and is appeaſed. After, reached to us, as a ſoveraigne reſtorative to recover us of the Devils poiſon (for, we alſo have beene ſipping at calix dæmoniorum more or leſſe, woe to us for it; and no way but this, to cure us of it.) Luke 22. 20. Gen 49. 11. Eſay 51. 22. 1 Cor. 10. 16.

By this time you ſee the need of the firſt preſſe, and of His being in it. Into which, He was content to be thrown and there trodden on; all, to ſatisfie His Father, out of His juſtice, requiring the drinking up of that cup, by us, or by ſome for us: and it came to His lot. And never was there Lambe ſo meeke before the ſhearer, nor Worme ſo eaſie to be troden on; never cluſter lay ſo quiet and ſtill to be bruiſed, as did CHRIST in the Preſſe of His Paſſion. Ever be He bleſſed for it.

Now come we to the other of this day in the Text. This is not that, we have touched, but another. Wherein the ſtyle is altered: no more calcatus ſum; but calcavi and conculcavi too. Vp (it ſeemes) He gat; and downe went they, and upon them He trod. His enemies of Edom lay like ſo many cluſters under His feet; and He caſt His ſhooe over them, ſet His foot on them, and paſhed them to peeces. The ſecond wine-preſſe, CHRISTS 1 calcavi.

If it Had meant His Paſſion, it had beene His owne bloud: but, this was none of His now; but the bloud of His enemies. For, when the Yeare of redemption was paſt, then came the Day of Vengeance: then, came the time for that, and not before. Pſal. 108. 9.

For, after the conſummatum eſt of His owne preſſure, (ſic oportuit impleri omnem juſtitiam) and that all the righteouſneſſe He ſpake had beene fulfilled: then riſe up, riſe up thou arme of the LORD (ſaith the Prophet) and ſhew thy ſelfe mightily to ſave: He tooke Him to His ſecond attribute, to be avenged of thoſe that had been the ruine of us all, the ruine everlaſting, but for Him. To Edom, the kingdome of death, He went, whither we were to be led captives: yea, even to Bozra, to Hell it ſelfe, and there brake the gates of braſſe, and made the iron-bars fly in ſunder. He that was weake to ſuffer, became mightie to ſave. Of calcatus, He became Calcator. He that was throwne Himſelfe, threw them now another while, into the Preſſe, trode them downe, trampled upon them, as upon grapes in a fat, till He made the bloud ſpring out of them, and all to ſprinkle His garments, as if he had come forth of a wine-preſſe indeed. And we, before, mercifully, rather than mightily, by His Paſſion; now mightily alſo ſaved, by His glorious Reſurrection. Matth. 3. 15. Eſay 51. 9. Eſay 63. 2.

Thus have you two ſeverall vines, the naturall and the ſtrange vine: the ſweet and the wilde: two Preſſes, that in Iewry, that in Edom: two Cups, the curſed Cup, and the Cup of bleſſing: Of Wine or Bloud. His owne, His enemies bloud: One ſanguis agni, the bloud of the Lambe ſlaine: the other ſanguis Draconis, the bloud of the Dragon, the red Dragon (Apoc. XII.) trode upon. One of His Paſſion, three dayes ſince: the other of His victory, as to day. Betweene His buriall and His riſing, ſome doing there had beene; ſomewhat had beene done; ſomewhere He had beene: in ſome new winepreſſe, in Bozra, that had given a new tincture of red to His rayment all over.

Both theſe ſhall you finde together ſet downe in one and the ſame Chapter, in two Apoc. 5. 6. verſes ſtanding cloſe one to the other, Apoc. V. 1 CHRIST repreſented firſt, as a Lambe, a Lambe ſlaine, died in His owne bloud: this is the firſt Preſſe. 2 And immediately, (in the very next verſe) ſtraight repreſented againe in a new ſhape, as a Lion,
5. 5. Gen. 44. 9. 11. all be-bloudy with the bloud of His prey: A Lion of the Tribe of Iuda; which comes home to this here. For Iuda (it is ſaid) he ſhould waſh His robe in the bloud of the grape. And ſo much for Torcular calcavi.

2 Solus, alone. We muſt not leave out ſolus in any wiſe: that both theſe He did alone; ſo alone, as not any man in the world with Him in either.

Matth. 26. 56. 27. 46. Not in the firſt; there, preſſed He was alone. All forſooke Him: His Diſciples firſt; alone for them. Yet, then, He was not alone; His Father was ſtill with Him: but after, Father and all: as appeared by His crie, Why haſt Thou forſaken Me? Then, was He all alone indeed.

Verſe 5. Not in the ſecond neither. The very next verſe, He complaines, how that He looked about Him round, and could not ſee any, would once offer to helpe Him. Out of Bozra He got alone; from death He roſe, conquered, triumphed in ſemetipſo, Himſelfe alone. The Angell indeed rolled away the ſtone: but, Hee was riſen firſt, and the ſtone rolled away after.

Accordingly, wee to reckon of Him: that ſince in both theſe Preſſes Hee was for us; He, and none but He: that His, and none but His be the glory of both. That, ſeeing neither wee for our ſelves, nor any for us, could bring this to paſſe, but Hee and He onely; He and He onely might have the whole honour of both; have no partner in that which is onely His due, and no creatures elſe at all, either in Heaven or Earth.

And, is CHRIST come from Bozra? then, be ſure of this, that He returning thus in triumph (as it is in the LXVIII. Pſalme, the Pſalme of the Reſurrection) He will not leave us behinde, for whom He did all this, but His owne will Hee
Pſal. 68. 22. bring againe, as He did from Baſan: as from Baſan, ſo from Bozra: as from the deepe pit of the ſea, ſo from the deepe pit of Hell. He that raiſed IESVS, ſhall by IESVS
2 Cor. 4. 14. raiſe us up alſo from the Adama of Edom, the red mould of the earth, the power of the grave: and from the Bozra of Hell too, the gulfe whence there is no ſcaping out.
Rom. 8. 37. Will make us in Him (ſaith the Apoſtle) more than conquerours, and tread downe Satan under our feet.

CHRISTS garments, why red. You ſee, how CHRISTS garments came to bee red. Of the wine preſſe that made them ſo, we have ſpoken; but not of the colour it ſelfe. A word of that too. It was His colour at His Paſſion. They put Him in purple: then it was His weed in deriſion: and ſo was it in earneſt. Both red it was it ſelfe, and ſo, He made it more with the dye of His owne bloud. And the ſame colour He is now in againe, at His Riſing. Not with His owne, now; but, with the bloud of the wounded Edomites; whom treading under His feet, their bloud beſtained Him and His apparell. So, one and the ſame colour at both: Dying and Riſing, in red; but, with difference, as much as is betweene His owne, and His enemies bloud.

Cant. 5. 10. Matth. 17. 2. Marke 9. 3. The Spouſe in the Canticles, asked of her Beloved's colours, ſaith of Him; My Beloved is white and red; white, of His owne proper: So He was, when He ſhewed Himſelfe in kinde, transfigured in the Mount; His apparell then ſo white, no Fuller in the earth could come neare it. White of Himſelfe: how comes He red then? Not of Himſelfe, that, but for us. That is our naturall colour, we are borne polluted in our
Lam. 4. 14. owne bloud. It is ſinnes colour, that: for, ſhame is the colour of ſinne. Our ſinnes, Eſay 1. 18. (ſaith Eſay Chap. I.) are as crimſin, of as deepe dye as any purple. This, the true tincture of our ſinnes: the Edomites colour right: for, Edom is red. The tincture (I ſay)

(I ſay) firſt of our ſinne originall, died in the wooll; and then againe of our ſins actuall, died in the cloth too. Twice died: ſo was CHRIST twice. Once in His owne: againe, in His enemies: right dibaphus, a perfect full colour, a true purple, of a double die, His too. So was it meet for crimſin ſinners to have a crimſin Saviour: a Saviour of ſuch a colour it behoved us to have. Comming then to ſave us, off went His White; on went our Red: laid by His owne righteouſneſſe, to be clothed with our ſinne. He, to weare our colours; that we, His. He, in our Red; that we, in His white. So we finde (Apoc. VII.) our robes are not onely waſhed cleane, but dyed a pure white in the bloud of the Lambe. Yea, He died and roſe againe both, in our colours; that we might die and riſe too, in His. We fall now againe upon the ſame point in the colours, we did before, in the cups. He to drinke the ſowre vinegar of our wilde grapes, that we might drinke His ſweet in the cup of bleſſing. O cup of Bleſſing, may we ſay of this cup! O ſtolam formoſam, of that colour! Illi glorioſam, nobis fructuoſam: glorious to Him, no leſſe fruitfull to us. He, in mount Golgotha, like to us; that we, in Mount Tabor, like to Him. This is the ſubſtance of our rejoycing in this colour. Apoc. 7. 14.

One more: how well this colour fits Him, in reſpect of His two titles, Loquens juſtitiam, and Multus ad ſervandum! Loquens juſtitiam, is to weare red: Potens ad ſervandum is ſo too. The firſt. To whom is this colour given? Scarlet is allowed the degree of Doctors. Why? for their ſpeaking righteouſneſſe to us, the righteouſneſſe of GOD, that which CHRIST ſpake. Nay, even they which ſpeake but the righteouſneſſe of mans Law, they are honoured with it too. But CHRIST ſpake ſo as never man ſpake, and ſo, call ye none on earth Doctor, but one: none in compariſon of Him. So, of all, He to weare it. This ye ſhall obſerve; in the Revelation, at the firſt appearing of the Lambe, there was a Booke with ſeven ſeales. No man would meddle with it: the Lambe took it, opened the ſeales, read it, read out of it a Lecture of righteouſneſſe to the whole world; the righteouſneſſe of GOD, that ſhall make us ſo before Him. Let Him be arrayed in ſcarlet, it is His due: His Doctors weed. From loquens juſtitiam, as a Doctor. Iohn 7. 46. Rev 5. 6.

This is no new thing. The Heathen King propounded it for a reward to any that could read the hand-writing on the wall. Daniel did it, and had it. Sed ecce major Daniele hic. Thus was it in the Law. This colour was the ground of the Ephod; a principall ingredient into the Prieſts veſture. Why? For, his lips were to preſerve knowledge; all to require the Law from his mouth. And indeed, the very lips themſelves, that we ſpeake righteouſneſſe with, are of the ſame colour. In the Canticles it is ſaid, His lips are like a ſcarlet threed. And the fruit of the lips hath GOD created peace: and the fruit of peace is ſowen in righteouſneſſe: and, till that be ſowen and ſpoken, never any hope of true peace. Dan. 5. 7. Matth. 12. 7. Cant. 4. 3.

Enough for ſpeaking. What ſay you to the other, Potens ad ſervandum, which (of the twaine) ſeemes the more proper to this time and place? I ſay, that way, it fits Him too, this colour. Men of warre, great Captaines, mightie to ſave us from the enemies, they take it to themſelves, and their colour it is, of right. A plaine Text for it, Nah. II. Their valiant men (or Captaines) are in ſcarlet. And I told you, CHRIST, by Daniel, is called Captaine MESSIAS, and ſo well might. So, in His late conflict with Edom, Hee ſhewed Himſelfe: fought for us, even to bloud. Many a bloudy wound it coſt Him, but returned with the ſpoile of His enemies, ſtained with their bloud: And, who ſo is able ſo to doe, is worthy to weare it. So, in this reſpect alſo, ſo in both; His colours become Him well. 2 From potens ad ſervandum, as a Captaine. Nahum 2. 3. Dan. 9. 25.

Shall I put you in minde, that there is in theſe two, in either of them, a kinde of wine-preſſe? In mighty to ſave, it is evident: Troden in one preſſe, treading in another. Not ſo evident in the ſpeaking of righteouſneſſe. Yet, even in that alſo, there is a preſſe going. For, when wee reade, what doe wee but gather grapes here and there: and when we ſtudy what we have gathered, then are we even in torculari, and preſſe them we doe, and preſſe out of them that which daily you taſte of. I know, there is great oddes in the liquors ſo preſſed, and that a cluſter of Ephraim is worth a whole vintage of Iudges 8.2. Abiezer: but, for that, every man as he may. Nay, it may be further ſaid, and that truly, that even this great title, [Mighty to ſave] comes under loquens juſtitiam. There

Iames 1.21. is in the word of righteouſneſſe a ſaving power. Take the word (ſaith Saint Iames) graft
1 Tim.4.16. it in you, it is able to ſave your ſoules: even that, wherein we of this calling, in a ſort, participate with CHRIST, while; by attending to reading and doctrine, we ſave both our ſelves and them that heare us; we tread downe ſinne, and ſave ſinners from ſeeking death in the errour of their life.

But, though there be in the Word a ſaving power; yet is not all ſaving power in that, nor in that onely: there is a preſſe beſide. For, this preſſe is going continually among us; but, there is another that goes but at times. But, in that, it goes at ſuch times, as it falls in fit with the wine-preſſe here. Nay, falls in moſt fit of all the reſt. For, of it comes very wine indeed, the bloud of the grapes of the true Vine, which in the bleſſed Sacrament is reached to us; and with it, is given us that, for which it was given, even remiſſion of ſinnes. Not onely repreſented therein, but even exhibited to us. Both which when we partake, then have we a full and perfect communion with CHRIST, this day: of His ſpeaking righteouſneſſe in the Word preached: of His power to ſave in the holy Euchariſt miniſtred. Both preſſes runne for us; and we to partake them both.

I may not end, till I tell you, there remaineth yet another, a third Wine-preſſe: that you may take heed of it. I will but point you to it: it may ſerve as ſowre herbs to Matth.28.2. eat our Paſchal Lambe with. The Sunne (they ſay) danced this morning at CHRISTS
Pſal.2.11. Reſurrection: the earth trembled then (I am ſure:) there was an earthquake at CHRISTS riſing. So, there is trembling to our joy: Exultate in tremore, as the Pſalmiſt wills us. The vintage of the earth, when the time of that is come, and when the grapes be ripe and ready for it, One there is, that crieth to him with the ſharpe ſickle Apoc.14.18, 19, 20. in his hand (Apoc. XIIII.) to thruſt it in, cut off the cluſters, and caſt them into the great Wine-preſſe of the Wrath of GOD. A diſmall day, that: a pitifull ſlaughter, then. It is there ſaid, the bloud ſhall come up to the horſe-bridles by the ſpace of a thouſand ſix hundred furlongs. Keepe you out; take heed of comming in that preſſe.

We have a kinde Item given us of this, here in the Text, in the laſt verſe. There be Verſe 4. two acts of CHRIST: one, of being trodden, the other of treading downe. The firſt is, for His choſen: the other, againſt His enemies. One is called, the Yeare of Redemption: The other, the Day of Vengeance. The Yeare of Redemption is already come, and is now; we are in it: during which time, the two former wine-preſſes runne, [1] of the Word, [2] and Sacrament. The Day of Vengeance is not yet come: It is but in His heart; ſo the Text is: that is, but in His purpoſe, and intent yet. But certainly, come it will, that day; and with that day, comes the laſt wine-preſſe with the bloud to the bridles: yer it come, and during our yeare of redemption, that yeares allowance, we are to endevour to keepe our ſelves out of it; for, that is the day of vengeance, of ira ventura, GODS wrath for ever. So as, all we have to ſtudie is, how we may be in at the firſt two, out at the laſt preſſe: and the due Chriſtian uſe of the firſt, will keepe us from the laſt.

While then it is with us the yeare of Redemption; and before that day come;
Pſal.95.7. while it is yet time of ſpeaking righteouſneſſe, that is, to day if yee will heare His voice: while the cup of bleſſing is held out; if we will take it; lay hold on both. That ſo, we may be accounted worthy to eſcape in that day, from that day and the vengeance of it: and may feele the fulneſſe of His ſaving power in the Word engrafted, which is able to ſave our ſoules; and in the cup of ſalvation which is joyned with it; and that to our endleſſe joy. The yeare of redemption is laſt in the verſe: with that the Prophet ends. With that, let us end alſo: and, to that end, may all that hath beene ſpoken arrive and bring us.

A SER-

A SERMON PREPARED TO BE PREACHED ON EASTER-DAY, Anno Domini MDCXXIV.

HEBR. Chap. XIII.

DEVS autem pacis, &c.

VER. 20. The GOD of peace, that brought againe from the dead, our LORD IESVS CHRIST, the great Shepherd of the Sheepe, through the bloud of the everlasting Testament.

21. Make you perfect in all good workes, to doe His will, working in you that which is pleasant in His sight, through IESVS CHRIST, to whom be praise for ever and ever, Amen.

THese words [who hath brought CHRIST againe from the dead] make this a Text proper for this Day. For, as this day, was CHRIST brought againe from thence.

And these words [the bloud of the everlasting Testament] make it as proper every way for a Communion. For, there, at a Communion, wee are made to drinke of that bloud. Put these together: 1 The bringing of CHRIST from the dead, 2 and the bloud of the Testament, and they will serve well for a Text, at a Communion on Easter-day.

I will touch in a word, 1 the Nature of the Text, 2 the Summe, and 3 the partition of it.

I. For the Nature: It is a Benediction. The use, the Church doth make of it and I. The Nature of the Text.

and ſuch other like, is to pronounce them over the Congregation, by way of a bleſsing. For, not onely the power to pray, to preach, to make and to give the Sacrament; but the power alſo to bleſſe you, that are GODS people, is annexed, and is a branch of ours, of the Prieſts Office. You may plainly reade the power committed, the act injoyned, and the very forme of words preſcribed all in the VI.
Num.6.23. of Numbers. There, GOD ſaith, Thus ſhall you bleſſe the people: (that is) doe it Chap.7.10. you ſhall; and, thus you ſhall doe it, in hæc verba. Neither was this act Leviticall, or then firſt taken up: It was long before: While Levi was yet in the loynes of Abraham, even then it was a part of Melchiſedecks Prieſt-hood, and (if the bread and wine were no more but a refreſhing) the onely part, that we reade of, to ſay Benedictus over Abraham, as great a Patriarch as he was. There is nothing elſe mentioned, to ſhew he was a Prieſt, but that.

This bleſsing they uſed firſt and laſt: but rather laſt. For (lightly) then, the people were all together. They be not ſo, at firſt: but onely a few, then. And here (you ſee) the Apoſtle makes it his farewell. With this he ſhuts up his Epiſtle; and, with ſome other ſuch, all the reſt. And that, by CHRISTS example. The laſt
Luke 24.50. thing, that CHRIST did in this world: was: He lift up His hands, bleſt His Diſciples, and ſo went away to Heaven. And ſo you ſhall finde, it was the manner in the Primitive Church: at the end of the Liturgie, ever to diſmiſſe the aſſembly with a bleſsing. Which bleſſing, they were then ſo conceited of, they would not offer to ſtirre (not a man of them) till bowing downe their heads they had the bleſſing pronounced over them. As if ſome great matter had lyen in the miſſing of it: as if they
Gen 32.26. had beene of Iacobs minde, Non dimittam te niſi benedixeris mihi: they would neither let the Prieſt depart, nor depart themſelves, till they had their bleſsing with them: Such a vertue they held in it. The bleſſing pronounced, they had then leave to goe with λάοις ἄφεσις, in the Greeke; Miſſa eſt fidelibus, in the Latine Church; and none went away before.

An evill cuſtome hath prevailed with our people: Away they goe without bleſſing, without leave, without care of either. Marke if they runne not out, before any bleſsing; as if it were not worth the taking with them.

Verſe 17. I marvell, how they will be inheritors of the bleſsing, that ſeeme to ſet ſo little by it.
Matth.25.34. If they meane to heare Come ye bleſſed, they ſhould (me thinkes) love it better than by their running from it, they ſeeme to doe.

This would be amended. We are herein departed from the Primitive Chriſtians, with whom it was in more regard. Sure, there is more in the neglect of it, than we are aware of.

This bleſsing could not be delivered in better termes, than in thoſe, that came from the Apoſtles themſelves: which accordingly have beene ſought up here and there in their writings; and, by the Church, ſorted to ſeverall dayes, which they ſeemed beſt to agree with. As this here, having Eaſter-day in it, was made an Eaſter-day-benediction. For, the ſpeciall mention in it of CHRIST brought againe from the dead, doth in a manner appropriate it to this Feaſt. Vtter it but thus: The GOD of peace, who did now, as upon this day, bring againe CHRIST from the dead: doe but utter it thus, and it will appeare moſt plainly how well they ſuite, the Time, and the Text.

2 For the Summe. It is no more in effect, but ſhortly this. That GOD would ſo
The Summe. bleſſe them, and us, as to make us fit for, and perfect in all good workes. A good wiſh, at any time. But, why at this time ſpecially, upon mention of CHRISTS riſing, he ſhould wiſh it, is not ſeene at firſt. Yet there is ſome matter in it; that, at CHRISTS riſing, He doth not wiſh our faith increaſed, or our hope ſtrengthened, or any other grace or vertue revived: but onely, that good workes might be perfected in us, and we in them. Surely, this ſorting them thus together, ſeemes to imply, as if CHRISTS Reſurrection had ſome more peculiar intereſt in good workes: as (indeed) it hath. And, there hath ever beene, and ſtill are, more of them done now, at this time, than at any other time of the yeare.

A generall reaſon may be given. That, what time CHRIST doth for us ſome principall great work (as, at all the Feaſts, He doth ſome: and now at this time, ſenſibly;) we to take occaſion by it, at that time, to doe ſomewhat more than ordinarie, in memorie and honour of it. More particularly, ſome ſuch, as may in ſome ſort ſuit with and reſemble the act of Chriſt then done. As it might be, when Chriſt died, ſinne to die in us: when CHRIST roſe againe, good workes to riſe together with Him. CHRISTS Paſſion, to be, Sinnes paſſion: CHRISTS Reſurrection. good workes reſurrection. Good-friday is for Sin: Eaſter for good workes. Good-friday, to bring Sinne to death: Eaſter, to bring good workes from the dead. And we, that were dead before to good workes, by occaſion of this, to revive againe to the doing of them: And not (as the manner is with us) Sinne to have an Eaſter, to riſe, and live againe; and good workes to be crucified, lie dead, and have no reſurrection.

For the Partition. Two verſes there are, and two Parts accordingly. 1 The Premiſſes, and 2 the Sequele. The Premiſſes are GOD; and the Sequele, Good-workes. The former verſe is nothing but GOD, with His ſtyle or addition: The GOD of peace, who hath brought againe, &c. The latter is all for good workes, Make you perfect, &c. We may conſider them thus. Of the two, 1 One a thing done for us, in the former verſe. 2 The other a thing to be done by us, in the latter verſe. The bringing back CHRIST, the benefit done us by GOD: The applying good workes, our duty to be done to Him for it. 3 The Diviſion

The thing done is an act (that is) a bringing backe. Which act is but one, but implyeth another precedent neceſſarily. For, ἀναγαγὼν (which is a bringing backe) implyeth ἀγαγὼν (which is a bringing thither.) I.

To this Act there is a concurrence of two Agents. 1 One, the Partie, that brought: 2 The other, the Partie that is brought. The Party that brought is GOD, under the name or title of the GOD of peace. The Party, that was brought, is Chriſt; ſet forth here under the Metaphore of a Shepheard, the great Shepheard of the Sheepe. 1 2

The GOD of peace did bring againe this Shepheard; from whence? and how? 3 From whence? From the dead. Then, among the dead He was, firſt. Firſt, brought thither: 4 How from thence? by what meanes? By the bloud of a Teſtament everlaſting. All which is nothing elſe, but the Reſurrection of CHRIST extended at large thorough all theſe points. 3 4

The thing to be done. That GOD would ſo bleſſe them, As to make them, 1 Firſt, fit to doe; 2 and then to doe good workes. 1 Fit to doe, in the word καταρτίζαι. To doe: Wherein we conſider two things: 1 the doing, To which doing there is a concurrence of two Agents, 1 εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι ὑμᾶς, what we to do: 2 And ποιοῦντα ἐν ὑμῖν, what Hee to doe. 2 And then the worke it ſelfe expreſſed in two words, 1 θέλημα, and 2 εὐάρεστον: Θέλημα (that is) His Will: εὐάρεστον that which is well pleaſing in His ſight. Theſe two be holden for two degrees: and the latter of the twaine to have the more in it. II.

And laſt of all, the Sequele. Where is to be ſhewed, how theſe two hang together, and follow one upon the other. Firſt, the GOD of peace, and the bringing of CHRIST from death. Then how the bringing of Chriſt from death concernes our bringing forth good workes. Which being ſhewed; what this Feaſt of Eaſter hath to doe with good workes, will fall in of it ſelfe. That with Chriſt now riſing, they alſo ſhould now riſe: They are thought as good as dead; that there may be a Reſurrection of them, at Chriſts Reſurrection. II.

I.
The thing done for us.
1 The Party, by whom.

THE GOD of peace, &c. Here is a long proceſſe. What needs all this ſetting out His ſtyle at length? Why goes He not to the point roundly? And, ſeeing good workes doing is His errand, why ſaith Hee not ſhortly, GOD make you given to good workes, and no more adoe? But tells us a long tale of Shepheards, and Teſtaments, and I wote not what (one would thinke, to ſmall purpoſe?) But ſure, to purpoſe it is, The HOLY GHOST uſeth no waſte words, nor ever ſpeakes but to the point (we may be ſure.)

His title.
The GOD of peace.

Let us ſee, and beginne with His firſt title, the GOD of peace. GODS titles be diverſe, as bee His Acts: and His acts are, as His properties be, they proceed from. And (lightly) the title is taken from the propertie which beſt fits the Act it produceth.

Exod. 9. 27.
2 Cor. 1. 3.
Pſal. 89. 8.

As, when GOD proceedeth to puniſh, He is called the righteous GOD: when, to ſhew favour, the GOD of mercie: When to doe ſome great worke, the GOD of power. Now then, this ſeemes not ſo proper; Should it not rather have beene, the GOD of power which brought againe, &c. To bring againe from death, ſeemes rather an act of power, than of peace. One would thinke ſo. But, being well lookt into, it will be found to belong rather to peace. No power of His will be ſet on working, will ever bring againe from death, unleſſe He be firſt pacified and made the LORD of peace. Of His power there is no queſtion: Of His peace, there may be ſome. I ſhall tell you, why. For, all the Old Teſtament thorough, you ſhall obſerve, GODS great Title is the LORD of HOSTS; which, in the New, you ſhall never read: but, ever ſince He roſe from the dead, it is, in ſtead of it, the GOD of peace. To the Romanes, Philippians, Theſſalonians, &c. and now here, to the Hebrewes, and ſtill the God of peace. It is not amiſſe for us, this change. For, if the Lord of Hoſts come to be at peace with us, His hoſts ſhall be all for us, which were againſt us, while it was no peace. So as, make but God, the God of peace, and more needs not. For, His peace will command His power ſtraight.

Rom. 15. 13.
Phil. 4. 9.
1 Theſſ. 5. 23.
2 Theſſ. 3. 16.

When His hoſts were ſo about Him, it ſeemed hoſtilitie: How came He then to lay away that title of the Lord of Hoſts, to become Deus pacis? That did He, by thus doing: He brought againe one from the dead; and that bringing brought peace, and made this change, Stylo novo, the God of peace.

II.
2 The ſecond Party, Our LORD IESVS Paſtorem, The Shepheard.

This brings us to the other, the ſecond Party: He is not named till all be done; and then He is, in the end of the verſe: our LORD and SAVIOVR IESVS CHRIST. But, at firſt, He is brought in as a Shepheard. Thinke never the meaner of Him for that. Moſes and David, the Founders of the Monarchie of the Iewes; Cyrus, and Romulus, the Founders, one of the Perſian, the other of the Romane Monarchie, were taken all from the Sheepefolds. The heathen Poet calls the great Ruler of the Græcian Monarchie, but ποιμένα λαῶν (that is) the Shepheard of the people. Chriſt gives it to Himſelfe and God doth not diſdaine it in the LXXX. Pſalme. And the name (howſoever it falls to us of the Clergie now) ab initio non fuit ſic. Secular men, Ioſeph, Ioſua, and David were firſt ſo termed; and are more often ſo termed, in the Bible, than we.

Pſal. 80. 1.

The terme of Shepheard is well choſen, as referring to the God of peace. Peace is beſt for Shepheards and for ſheepe. They love peace: then, they are ſafe; then, they feed quietly. Yet, not ſo, but that Shepheards have ventured farre, to reſcue the Sheepe from the Beare, and from the Lion, as did King David; and as the Sonne of David here that ventured further than any, who is brought in (here) in Sanguine, bleeding, howſoever it comes.

1 Sam. 17. 36.

But, this Title was not ſo much for God, as for us: (Paſtorem ovium) and, in Ovium, are we; there come we in: we hold by that word. For ſo, there is a mutual & reciprocal relation relation betweene Him and us: that we thereby may be assured, by this very terme relative, whither, and whensoever He was brought; all He did or suffered, it was not for Himselfe. For then, an absolute name of His owne would have beene put. All was for His Correlative, for Ovium (that is) for us. He is no wayes considered, in all this, as absolutely put, or severed from us, His flocke; but still with reference and relation unto us.

But, because others enter-common in this and other His names with Him, He bears it with a difference; Pastor Magnus, the great shepheard. Not (as Diphilus said to Pompeius Magnus) nostrâ miseriâ Magnus es; Great, by making others little: but, Misericordiâ suâ Magnus, by making Himselfe little, to make us great. pastorem magnum, the great Shepheard.

1 The graduall points of His greatnesse, in respect of others are these. Great first, For, Totum is parte majus, Greater is He that feeds the whole, than they, that but certaine parcells of the flocke. All else feed but peeces: So, they bee but petties shepheards to Him. But He, the whole, maine entire flocke: He, and none but He. So, He the great shepheard of the great Flocke.

2 Againe, Greater is He that owes the sheepe He feeds, than they that feede the sheepe they owe not. All others feede His sheepe: None can say, Pasce oves meas. His they be: and reason. For, He made them, they be the sheepe of His hands: He feeds them so the sheepe of His hands, and of His pasture both. Ioh. 21.16. Psal. 94.2. 100.3.

3 But, this is not the greatnesse here meant. But Ecce quantam charitatem, see the great love to His sheepe! Others sell and kill theirs: He is so farre from selling, or killing, as He (this Shepheard) was sold and slaine for them, though they were His owne. Paid for them, bought them againe; and then He brought them againe. It may be, there were others had ventred their lives; but not lost them, and so lost them, as He did. Which makes Him not onely Great, but Primæ magnitudinis (that is) simply the Greatest that ever was. 1 Ioh. 3.1.

Of which Greatnesse two great Proofes there are, in the two words, 1 Sanguis, and 2 Testamentum. Sanguis, a great Price; Testamentum, a great Legacie. Sanguis, what He suffered; Testamentum, what He did for them.

In sanguine, through the bloud. The next word is in sanguine, a Shepheard, in His bloud. So, this Shepheard sweat bloud, yer He could bring them backe. It was no easie matter; it cost bloud: and, not any bloud (such, as He could well spare) but, it cost Him His life-bloud. It could not be the bloud of the Testament, but there must be a Testament: and, a Testament there cannot be, but the Testator must dye. So, Hee dyed, He was brought to the dead, for it. This bloud brought Him to His Testament, which is further than bloud.

The two Acts. We said there were two Acts: 1 One expresst, brought Him thence, ἀνήγαγον, 2 The other implied, brought Him thither, ἤγαγον: But first, brought thither, before brought thence. We will touch them both. 1 Why brought thither, and how? 2 and why brought thence, and how?

Broughtthither. If, when He was brought thence, it was peace: when He was brought thither, it was none. How came it, there was none? What made this separation? That did sinne: Sinne brake the peace.

2 Cor. 5.22. Why, sinne touched not Him, He knew no sinne. True: it was not for Himselfe, nor for any sinne of His. Whose then? here are but two, 1 Pastor, 2 and Ovium: Pastor, He; Ovium, we. If not the Shepheards, then the Sheeps sinne: if not His, ours. And so it was: peccata vestra (saith God, in Esay) and speakes it to us. No quarrell He had to the Shepheard: nothing to say to CHRIST, as CHRIST. But He would needs be dealing with Sheepe, and His Sheepe fell to straying, and light into the Wolves denne: and thither Hee must goe, to fetch them, if He will have them. Esay 59.2.

For Ovium then, is all this adoe; and that is for us. For, all we (as Sheepe) had gone astray. I may say further; all we (as sheepe) were appointed to the slaughter. So it was, we should have beene carried thither, and the Lord layd upon Him the transgressions Esay 53.6.

greſsions of us all; and ſo, He was carried for us: This Paſtor became tanquam ovis, as a ſheepe, for His ſheepe; and was brought thither, and the wolves did to Him whatſoever they would.

As if GOD had ſaid: away with theſe ſheepe; Incidant in lupos, quia nolunt regiâ paſtore, to the wolves with them, ſeeing they will be kept in no fold. But, that, the Shepheard endured not: but rather than they ſhould, He would. When it came to this; who ſhall goe thither, Paſtor, or Ovium, the Sheepe, or the Shepheard? Sinite hos abire (they be His owne words) Let them goe their way; let the Sheepe goe, and Ioh.18.8. ſmite the Shepheard; Sentence Him to be carried thither. The Sheepe were to be, they ſhould have beene: but, the Shepheard was. In Sanguine noſtro, it ſhould have beene, In ſanguine ſuo, His bloud, it was. So, to ſpare ours, He ſpilt His owne.

2 Brought againe thence.

Thither now He is brought. Brought thither, by His owne bloud-ſhedding. Wee can underſtand that, well: but not, how Hee ſhould bee brought thence by His bloud. Yet, the Text is plaine, how Hee was brought againe, in ſanguine, by His bloud.

Firſt then, let us make GOD, the GOD of peace: and, when He is ſo, you ſoone ſee Him bring Him backe, againe. That, which broke the peace (as we ſaid) the very thing that carried Him to the Croſſe, tooke Him downe thence dead, carried Him to His grave, and there lodged Him among the dead, was ſinne. Away with ſinne
Chap.9.22. then, that ſo there may be peace. But, there is no taking away ſinne; but by ſhedding of bloud; the bloud, either of Paſtor, or of Ovium, one of them.

3 In Sanguine, By the bloud.

Why then, here is bloud; even the Shepheards bloud: and ſhed it is; and, by the ſhedding of it, ſinne is taken away, and with ſinne Gods diſpleaſure. It is the Apoſtles owne word (Epheſ. II. XVI.) Hatred was ſlaine; and ſo, hatred being ſlaine, Epheſ.2.14. peace followed of her owne accord. He was our peace (ſaith the Apoſtle) in one place:
Col.1.20. He made our peace, or pacified all by His bloud, in another.

Now then, upon this peace, He; that was before carried away, was brought backe againe: And ſo, well might be. For, all being diſcharged, He was then to be inter
Pſal.088.5. mortuos liber, no longer bound, but free from the dead: not to be kept in priſon any longer, but, to come forth againe. And, by His very bloud, to come forth againe. For, it was of the nature of a Ranſome; which being layd downe, the Priſoner, that was brought thither, is to goe thence, whither He will. For, a Ranſome hath poteſtatem eductivam or reductivam, a power to bring forth, or bring backe againe from any captivitie.

1 Sam.2.6. In both theſe bringings, GOD had His hand: GOD bringeth to death, and bringeth backe againe. True (if ever) in this Shepheard. Brought Him to the dead, as the Lord of Hoſts. brought Him from the dead, as being now pacified, and the GOD of peace. Out of His juſtice, God ſmit the Shepheard; out of His love to His ſheepe, the Shepheard was ſmitten. But, quem deduxit iratus, reduxit placatus, whom, of His juſt wrath againſt ſin, He brought thither; now having fulfilled all righteouſneſſe, He was to bring thence againe. And ſo, brought backe He was; and, the ſame way that He was carried thither. Carried, the way of juſtice, to ſatisfie for them, He had undertaken for. And having fully ſatisfied for them, was in very Iuſtice, to be brought backe againe. And ſo He was: GOD accepted His paſſion in full ſatisfaction, gave preſent order, for His raiſing againe.

And, let not this phraſe, of Gods bringing backe, or of CHRISTS comming backe; of GODS raiſing Him, or of CHRISTS riſing, any thing trouble you. The Reſurrection is one entire Act of two joynt Agents, that both had their hands in it. Aſcribed one while to CHRIST Himſelfe, that He roſe, that He came backe, to ſhew, Iohn.10.18. that He had power to lay downe His life, and power to take it againe. Another while, to God; that He raiſed Him, that He brought Him backe: to ſhew, that God was fully

ſatisfied and well pleaſed with it; reach him His hand (as it were) to bring him thence againe.

To ſhew you the Benefit that riſeth to us, by this His riſing. Brought thither He was, to the dead: ſo, it lay us upon: if He had not, we ſhould. We were even carrying thither; and that we might not, He was. Brought thence He was, from the dead: So, it ſtood us in hand: if He had not beene brought thence, we ſhould never have come thence, but beene left to have lien there world without end. Brought thither He would be: He, and not we: He, without us. So carefull He was, not to ſpare Himſelfe, that we might be ſpared. Brought thence He would not be; not without His ſheepe we may be ſure: Hee would bring us thence too, or Hee would not bee brought thence without us. You may ſee Him, in the Parable, comming with His loſt ſheepe on His ſhoulders. That one ſheepe is the image of us all. So carefull He was, as He laid Him on His owne necke, to be ſure: which is the true pourtraiture or repreſentation of His ἀναγωγὴ. That, if the GOD of peace bring Him backe, He muſt bring them alſo: For He will not come backe without them. Vpon His bringing backe from death, is ours founded: in Him, all His were brought backe. In His perſon, our Nature: in our Nature we all. Luc. 15. 5.

Thinke you, after the payment of ſuch a Price, He will come backe Himſelfe alone, He will let the ſheepe be carried thither, and not ſee them brought backe againe? He did not ſuffer all this (we may be ſure) to come away thence, and leave them behinde Him. It was never ſeene, that any that paid after ſo high a rate for any, be it what it will, that when He had done would not ſee it brought away, but loſe all His labour and coſt. No: as ſure as Himſelfe was brought, ſo ſure He will bring them, whom He would not part from: (He will die firſt.) Nothing ſhall part them now. Paſtor and Ovium, ſheepe and Shepheard now, or no bargaine. He with His flocke, and His flocke with Him; it with Him, and He with it: He and they, or not He Himſelfe; both together, or not at all. Will you heare Himſelfe ſay as much? Father, my will is, that whither I goe, whence I come, where I am, thither, thence, and there, theſe bee alſo.

4 Sanguine Teſtamenti, the bloud of the Teſtament.

But, when He had brought us thence, what ſhall become of us (trow?) Will He leave us at randome, to wander in the mountaines? No: but, Vbi deſinit Paſtor, ibi incipit Teſtator, where the Shepheard goes out, the Teſtator comes in. Which we finde plainely in the word Teſtament. For (though peace be a faire bleſſing in it ſelfe, if no more but it; and bringing back be worth the while, yet) heere is now a greater matter than ſo. There is more in the blood, than we are aware of. This is alſo meant: that there is the blood of a Teſtament, which bodeth ſome further matter. There ſhould neede no Teſtament, if it were for nothing but to make peace. A Covenant would ſerve for that: My Covenant of peace would I make with thee (ſaith GOD.) Sanguis fœderis would have done that, if there had beene no more but ſo. But here, it is the bloud of a Teſtament. Ezek. 37. 26.

It is Sanguis cum Teſtamento annexo, Blood, with a Teaſtment annexed. Beſide the pacification and back-bringing, this Scripture offereth more grace: even a Teſtamentarie matter to be adminiſtred for our farther behoofe.

For, I aske. Every drop of this blood is more worth than many worlds: Shall this blood then ſo precious, of ſo great a Perſon, as the Sonne of GOD, be ſpent, to bring forth nothing but pardon and peace? Being of ſo great a value, ſhall it produce but ſo poore an effect? Pitie it ſhould be ſhed, to bring forth nothing, but a few ſheep from death. There is enough in it, to ſerve further, to make a purchaſe; which He may diſpoſe of to them, He will vouchſafe to bring againe from the dead. For, when He hath brought them thence, how He will diſpoſe them, that would be thought on too.

I finde then aſcribed to His blood, a Price: not onely of ἀπολύτρωσις (that is) a Redemption or Ranſome; but alſo περιποίησις (that is) of Perquiſition, or Purchaſe. And I finde them both in one verſe (Epheſ. 1. 14.) So that, this blood availed, as to pay our debt; ſo, over and above, to make a purchaſe: Served, not only to procure our peace, but, to ſtate us in a condition better than ever we were before. Not onely brought us, but bought us: Nay, not onely bought us, and brought us backe; but bought for us further an everlaſting inheritance, and brought us to it.

Two powers were in it: [1] as Sanguis fœderis, the Bloud of the Covenant, the Covenant of Peace: for, in bloud, were the Covenants made; that, with Abraham, in Gen. XV. that with Moſes, in Exod. XXIV. in bloud both: And among the Heathen men, never any Covenant of peace, but in bloud. [2] Now, for peace, this were enough: But, it is Sanguis Teſtamenti too, the bloud of a Teſtament. Which is founded upon better promiſes; bequeathes legacies; diſpoſeth eſtates: Matter farre of a higher nature, than bare peace. As the bloud of the Covenant, ſo it pacifieth and appeaſeth: As the bloud of the Teſtament, ſo it paſſeth over and conveyeth beſides.

Gen. 15. 9. Exod. 24. 8.

But ſay, it did not; it were for nothing elſe, but our peace: Yet, it is much better for us, that our peace goe by Teſtament, rather than by a Covenant. Leagues, Covenants, Edicts of Pacification have oft beene, and are (we ſee) daily broken. Small hold of them: A ſtronger hold than ſo, behoved us. A ſtronger hold there is not, than that of a Teſtamant. That is holden inviolable, never to be reverſed. Nothing in rebus humanis is held more ſacred. So as, peace by a Teſtament, is farre the ſurer of the twaine.

Teſtamenti æterni, Of the everlaſting Teſtament. Mic. 5. 2.

Of which Teſtament and the greatneſſe of it, there is much to be ſaid. For, it is not, as other Teſtaments, to be fully adminiſtred: This ſhall never be ſo; it is Everlaſting. Everlaſting: For, ſo is He that made it: His goings out are from everlaſting. Everlaſting: For, ſo is the Teſtament it ſelfe: Though it be executed in time, it was made ab æterno, and lay by Him all the while. Everlaſting: For, ſo is the bloud wherewith it is ſealed: the vertue and vigor thereof, doth ſtill continue as a fountaine in-exhauſt, never dry; but flowing ſtill as freſh, as the very firſt day, His ſide was firſt opened. We, that now live, come to it, of even hand with the Apoſtles themſelves, that were then at the opening. And they that come after us, ſhall not come too late, but to full as good a match, as either they or we. Everlaſting: For, the legacies of it are ſo. Not, as with us, of things temporall: Nor as of the former Teſtament of the land of Canaan, now growen a barren wilderneſſe: but, of eternall life and joy, and bliſſe; of eternitie it ſelfe. And laſtly, everlaſting: That wee may looke for no more: Our Goſpell is Evangelium æternum (Revel. XIV.) None to come after it. This is the laſt: and ſo to laſt for ever.

Revel. 14. 6.

Now lay theſe together and tell me: Was He not the Great Shepheard indeed, that indured this carrying thither, whence this day He came? that paid this great Ranſome; purchaſed this great eſtate; made this great will; diſpoſed theſe great Legacies, even His heavenly kingdome to His little flocke? was He not every way as good, as Great (which is the true Greatneſſe, ἐν τῷ εὖ, τὸ μέγα) Here with us, Men bee good, becauſe they be great: with GOD they bee great, becauſe they be good: For this His great Love, His great Price, His great Teſtament, was Hee not worthy to weare His title of Paſtor magnus, of Paſtor, and of Teſtator, both? For ſo, both He was: And we, not onely His ſheepe, but His Legataries: both, in His Paſtor-ſhip, and in His Teſtator-ſhip: in His bringing forward, and in His bringing backward: No waies to be ſevered from us. He procured no peace, ſhed no bloud made no Teſtament; was neither brought to the dead, nor from the dead for Himſelfe but for His flock: for us ſtill. All He did, all He ſuffered; all He bequeathed, all He was, He was for us.

And now, when all is done, then now (loe) He is the LORD IESVS CHRIST. Till then, a Shepheard wholy and ſoly: The more are we beholden to Him. Then (loe) He tells us His name, that He is the great Shepheard, He that was brought backe: the bloud, His; His, the Teſtament. Truely called the Teſtament: There can no Inventorie be made of this. It hath not entered in the heart of man to conceive, what things GOD hath prepared for thoſe, that have their part in this Teſtament: above all that that we can desire or imagine. Vpon earth, there is no greater thing than a Kingdome: and, no lesse than a Kingdome, it is His Fathers will to dispose unto us. But, a Kingdome eternall, all glorious and blessed: farre above these here. Luke 12.32.

All this is a good hearing. Hitherto we have heard nothing, but pleaseth us well. GOD at peace: The Shepherd brought to death, that we might not: and brought from death, that we also might be brought from thence: and not brought, and left to the wide world; but further, to receive those good things which are comprised in His Testament. This is done: done by Him for us. Now, to that which is to be done; to be done by us. Not, for Him: (I should not doe well to say so) but indeed, for our selves. For so, for us, in the end, it will prove. Both what Hee did, and what we doe our selves. II. The thing to be done by us, 1 The fitting of doing.

That, which, on our part, the Apostle wisheth us, is, that we may be so happie, as that GOD would in effect doe the same for us, He did for Him: (that is) bring us backe; backe from our sinfull course of life, to a new, given to doe good workes.

The Resurrection is here termed ἀναγωγὴ, a bringing backe. So that, any bringing backe from the worse to the better, carrieth the Type, is a kinde of a Resurrection, referres to that of CHRIST: who died, and rose, that sinne might die, and that good workes might rise in us. Both the time, and the Text lay upon us this dutie, to see, if good workes that seeme to be dead and gone, we can bring life to them, and make them to rise againe.

The rule of reason is: Vnumquodque propter operationem suam; every thing is, and hath his being, for the worke, it is to doe. And, these are the workes, which we were borne, and came into the world to doe. The Apostles speakes it plainly: we were created for good workes, to walke in them (Ephe). II. X.) And againe: That wee were redeemed, to be a people Zealously given to good workes (Tit. II. XIV.) So, they come doubly commended to us, as the end of our Creation and Redemption, both.

In this Text (we see) it is GODS will, it is His good pleasure, we doe them: if we any thing regard either His will, or pleasure.

In this Text, the Apostle prayes, that we may be made perfect, in them. So, unperfect we are, without them: unperfect we, and our faith both. For, by workes is our faith made perfect (Iam. II.) even as Abrahams faith was. And, the faith, that is without them, is not only unperfect, but starke dead: so as, that faith needs a Resurrection, to be brought from the dead againe. Iames 2. 22.

And, whatsoever become of the rest, in this Text it is, that He hath not left them out, nor unremembred in His Testament. They are in it: and divers good legacies to us for them. Which, if we meane to be Legataries, we must have a care of. For, as His bloud serveth for the taking away of evill workes; So doth His Testament, for the bringing againe of good. And, as it is good Philosophie: Vnumquodque propter operationem suam: So, this is sure; it is sound Divinitie; Vnusquisque recipiet secundùm operationem suam. At our comming backe from the dead (whence wee all shall come) we shall be disposed of according to them: Receive we shall, every man according to His workes. And, when it comes to going, they that have done good workes shall goe into everlasting life; and they (not, that have done evill, but they) that have not done good, shall goe, you know, whither. Let no man deceive you: the Root of Immortalitie, the same is the Root of Vertue: But one, and the same Root, both. When all is said, that can be: Naturally, and by very course of kinde, good workes (you see) doe rise out of CHRISTS Resurrection. Matth. 16.27.

Make you perfect (so we reade it:) which shewes, We are (as indeed we are) in state of imperfection, till we doe them. Nay, if that be all, we will never sticke for that Cognoscimus imperfectum nostrum, we yeeld our selves for such, for unperfect: And, that is well. But, we must so finde and feele our imperfection, that as the Apostle Καταρτίζαι, to make perfect. Psal. 51.4.

Chap.6.1. poſtle tels us (in the VI. Chapter before) wee ſtrive to be carried forward to perfection, all wee may. Elſe, all our cognoſcimus imperfectum, will ſtand us in ſmall ſtead.

Why, is there any perfection in this life? There is: Elſe, how ſhould the Apoſtles exhortation there, or his bleſſing (here) take place. I wot well, Abſolute, compleat, conſummate perfection, in this life, there is none: It is agreed of all hands: None Phil.3.13. may be out of it. Non puto me comprehendiſſe (ſaith Saint Paul) I compt not my ſelfe to have attained: No more muſt wee, not attained. What then? But, this I doe (ſaith hee, and ſo muſt wee;) I forget that which is behinde, and endevour my ſelfe, and make forward ſtill, to that which is before. Which is the perfection of Travellers, of way-faring men: the further onward on their journey, the nearer their journey's end, the more perfect: which is the perfection of this life: For, this life is a journey.

Now, good workes are, as ſo many ſteps onward. The Apoſtle cals them ſo; Rom.4.12. the ſteps of the faith of our Father Abraham, who went that way, and we to follow him in it. And the more of them we doe, the more ſteps doe we make, the further ſtill ſhall we finde our ſelves to depart from iniquitie, the nearer ſtill to approach unto GOD in the Land of the living: whether to attaine, is the totall, or Conſummatum eſt of our perfection.

Καταρτίζαι, To make fit or even. But, not to keepe from you the truth, as it is: The nature of the Apoſtles word [Καταρτίζαι] is rather to make fit, than to make perfect. Wherein, this he ſeemes to ſay. That, to the doing of good works, there is firſt requiſite a fitneſſe to doe them, before we can doe them: Καταρτίζαι, and ποιῆσαι are both in the Text. Fit, to doe them, yer we can doe them. We may not thinke to doe them hand over head, at the firſt daſh. In an unfit and indiſpoſed ſubject, no Agent can worke: Not GOD Himſelfe, but by miracle. Fit then we muſt be.

Now, of our ſelves, as of our ſelves, we are not fit, ſo much as to thinke a good thought: It is II Cor. III. V. Not ſo much as to will: For, it is GOD, that worketh in us to will (Phil. II. XIII.) If not theſe two, [1] Neither thinke, [2] nor will; then, not to worke. No more we are: Neither to begin (Phil. I.VI.) nor having begun, to goe forward, and bring it to an end. Fit, to none of theſe. Then, made fit we muſt be. And, who to reduce us to fitneſſe, but this GOD of peace here, that brought againe CHRIST from the dead.

Καταρτίζαι, To ſet in joynt. Now, if I ſhall tell you, what manner of fitneſſe it is, the Apoſtles word Καταρτίζαι (here) doth import: It is (properly) the fitneſſe, which is, in ſetting that in, which was out of joynt: in doing the part of a good Bone-ſetter. This is the very true and native ſenſe of the word; Set you in joynt, to doe good workes. For the Apoſtle (*Eph.*IV. Epheſ 4.16. and Coloſ II.) tels us, that the Church and things Spirituall goe by joynts and ſinewes, Col.2.19. whereof they are compact, and by which they have their action and motion. And, where there are joynts, there may be (and other-whiles, there is) a diſ-joynting or diſlocation: no leſſe in things Spirituall, than in the naturall body. And that is, when things are miſ-ſorted, or put out of their right places.

Now, that our Nature is not right in joynt, is ſo evident, that the very Heathen men have ſeene and confeſſed it.

And, by a fall, things come out of joynt: and (indeed) ſo they did: Adam's fall wee call it, and wee call it right. Sinne, which before broke the peace; which made the going from or departure, which needed the bringing backe; the ſame ſinne, here now againe, put all out of joynt. And, things out of joynt are never quiet, never at peace and reſt, till they bee ſet right againe. But when all is in frame, all is in peace: And ſo, it referres well, to the GOD of peace, who is to doe it.

And marke againe. The putting in joynt, is nothing, but a bringing backe againe to the right peace, whence it ſlipt: That ſtill there is good coherence with that which went before: The peace-maker, the bringer-backe, the bone-ſetter, re all one.

The

The force or fulneſſe of the Apoſtles Simile (of out of joynt) you ſhall never fully conceive, till you take in hand ſome good worke of ſome moment: and then you ſhall, for certaine. For, doe but marke me then, how many rubs, lets, impediments, there will be, as it were ſo many puttings out of joynt, yer it can be brought to paſſe. This wants, or that wants: one thing or other frames not. A ſinnew ſhrinkes, a bone is out, ſomewhat is awry: and what adoe there is, yer we can get it right? Either the will is averſe, and we have no minde to it; or the power is ſhrunke and the meanes faile us; or the time ſerves not; or the place is not meet, or the parties to be dealt with, we finde them undiſpoſed. And the miſery is, when one is got in, the other is out againe. That, the wit of man could not have deviſed a fitter terme, to have expreſſed it in. This for the diſeaſe.

What way doth GOD take, to ſet us right? Firſt, by our Miniſtery and meanes. For, it is a part of our profeſſion under GOD, this ſame καταρτισμὸς, to ſet the Church in, and every member that is out of joynt. (You may reade it, in this very terme (Epheſ. IV. XII.) πρὸς καταρτισμὸν.) And that we doe, by applying outwardly this Teſtament and the bloud of it: Two ſpeciall Splints (as it were) to keepe all ſtraight. Out of the Teſtament, by the word of exhortation (as, in the next Verſe he cals it:) praying us to ſuffer the Splinting. For, it may ſometimes pinch them, and put them to ſome paine, that are not well in joynt, by preſſing it, and putting it home. But both by denouncing, one while the threats of the Old Teſtament, another while by laying forth the promiſes of the New, if by any meanes, we may get them right againe. This, by the Teſtament, which is one outward meanes. The Bloud is another inward meanes. By it, we are made fit and perfect (chooſe you whether:) and that ſo, as at no time of all our life, we are ſo well in joynt, or come ſo neere the ſtate of perfectneſſe, as when we come new from the drinking of that bloud. And thus are we made fit. Verſe 21.

Provided, that καταρτίσαι doe end (as here it doth) in ποιῆσαι and ἐν ἔργῳ: that, all this fit making doe end, in doing and in a worke: that ſome worke be done. For, in doing it is to end, if it end aright; if it end, as the Apoſtle (here) would have it. For, this fitting, is not to heare, learne, or know; but to doe His will. We have beene long at Teach mee thy will, at that leſſon: There is another (in Pſalme CXLIII.) Teach me to doe thy will; we muſt take out that alſo. Teach me thy will; and Teach me to doe thy will, are two diſtinct leſſons. We are all our life long about the firſt; and never come to the ſecond, to εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. It is required, we ſhould now come to the ſecond εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. We are not made fit (when we are ſo) to doe never a whit the more: Καταρτίσαι is to end in ποιῆσαι (which is) doing: and in ἔργον (that is) in a worke. Εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. The firſt Agent. Pſal. 143. 10.

In worke, and in every good worke. We muſt not ſlip the collar there, neither. For, if we be able to ſtirre our hand but one way and not another, it is a ſigne, it is not well ſet in. His, that is well ſet, he can move it to and fro, up and downe, forward and backward; every way and to every worke. There be, that are all for ſome one worke; that ſingle ſome one peece of GODS ſervice; wholly addicted to that, but cannot skill of the reſt. That is no good ſigne. To be for every one; for all ſorts of good works, for every part of GODS worſhip alike: for no one more than another: that (ſure) is the right. So chooſe your Religion; ſo practiſe your worſhip of GOD. It is not ſafe, to doe otherwiſe; nor to ſerve GOD by Synecdoche: but ἐν πάσῃ, to take all before us. Ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ. In all good workes.

But, in the doing of all or any, beſide our part (εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι) here is alſo ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, a Worker beſides. For, when GOD hath fitted us by the outward meanes, there is not all. He leaves not us to our ſelves for the reſt: but, to that outward application of ours, joynes His ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, an inward operation of His owne inſpiring, His grace; which is nothing but the breath of the Holy Ghoſt. Thereby enlightning our mindes, inclining our wils, working on our affections, making us homines bonæ voluntatis: that when we have done well, we may ſay with the Prophet; Domine univerſa opera noſtra operatus es in nobis: LORD, all our good works thou haſt wrought in us. Our works they be: yet, of thy working. And with the Apoſtle: We did them; yet not we, but the grace Ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν; The ſecond Agent. Eſay 26. 12. 1 Cor. 15. 10.

of GOD that was with us. Both wayes, it is true: what He workes by us, Hee workes in us; and, what He workes in us, Hee workes by us. For, ἐνεργεῖ ⟨συνεργεῖ take not away one the other, but ſtand well together. This for the doing.

2 The worke. Now for the worke. In every good worke we do His will: yet (it ſeemeth) degrees there are. For, here is mention of θέλημα, His will; and beſides it, of εὐάρεστον, His good pleaſure, and this latter ſounds, as if it did import more than a ſingle will. Chap. 12. 28. Ones good pleaſure is more, than His bare will. So, in the Chapter before, He wiſheth λατρεύσαι εὐαρέστως, (that is) we may ſerve and pleaſe: (that is) may ſo ſerve, as that we may pleaſe. Acceptable ſervice then, is more than any, ſuch as it is. There is no queſtion, but that, as of evill workes ſome diſpleaſe GOD more than other; ſo, of good workes, there are ſome better pleaſing, and that He takes a more ſpeciall delight in.

And, if you would know, what they be: above, at the XVI. verſe, it is ſaid, that, to doe good and to diſtribute, (that is) diſtributive doing good. It is more than an ordinarie ſervice: it is a ſacrifice every ſuch worke. It is of the higheſt kind of ſervice, and that with that kind εὐαρεστεῖται (our word here) GOD is highly pleaſed. So doth S. Paul call the bounteous ſupplying of his wants from the Philippians, θυσίαν δεκτὴν, a ſacrifice right acceptable and pleaſing to GOD, and ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, a moſt delightfull ſweet ſavour. And, that you may ſtill ſee, He lookes to the Reſurrection, He ſaith: the Phil. 4. 12. Philippians had lien dead, and drie a great while, as in winter, trees doe uſe. But, when that worke of bounty came from them, they did ἀναθάλλειν (that is) ſhoot forth, wax freſh, grow greene againe, as now at this ſeaſon plants doe. That ſo, the very vertue of CHRISTS reſurrection did ſhew forth it ſelfe in them. So, fitting Natures reſurrection-time (the time of bringing things, (as it were) from the dead againe) with this of CHRIST. Which time is therefore the moſt pleaſing time, the time of the greateſt pleaſure of all the times of the yeare. So, we know, how to do that, is pleaſing in His ſight.

Yet, even this pleaſing, and all elſe, is to conclude (as here it doth) with through IESVS CHRIST our LORD: He is in, here too. In, at the doing: In, at the making them to pleaſe GOD, Vt faciat quiſq; per CHRISTVM, quod placeat per CHRISTVM that, what by CHRIST is done, by CHRIST may pleaſe when it is done. In, at the doing, infundendo gratiam, gratiam activam, by infuſing or dropping in His grace active; making us able and fit to doe, and ſo to doe them. In at the pleaſing; affundendo gratiam, gratiam paſſivam, by powring on His good grace and favour paſſive, as it might be ſome dropps of His bloud, whereby it pleaſeth being done. Gracing His worke (as we uſe to ſay) in GODS ſight, that ſo, He of His grace may crowne it.

III. The ſequele. We have gone through with both points. Now comes the hardeſt point of all, the ſequele, to couple them and make them hang well together.

1 Firſt then, they be aſcribed to the GOD of peace. There are but three things to be done in the Text, and Peace doth them all. And, if Peace; then GOD, by no other title than the GOD of peace. 1 Peace bringeth from death: For, Warre (I am ſure) bringeth to death many a worthy man. There is little queſtion to be made of this: that the GOD of peace doth the one; but the Divell of Diſcord doth the other.

2 Secondly, Peace ſets in joynt, Warre brings all out of joynt: Warre is not good for the joynts, as we ſee daily. Peace doth them no hurt.

3 Thirdly, Peace makes us fit for good: Warre, for all manner of evill workes (ſaith S. IAMES in the III. Chap. Ver. XVI.) Therefore the God of peace, ſay we. (And, if He take it from us for a time, that He bring it quickly back to us againe.) For, when He was firſt brought into the world, among the living, at His birth, IANVS was Luke 2. 14. ſhut: the Angels, they ſung Peace upon earth. And, when He was brought againe from from the dead, this day, He was no ſooner riſen, but the firſt newes was, the Souldiers ranne all away: A ſigne of peace. And indeed, when He had ſlaine hatred, it was moſt kindly then, to bring peace. As, this evening, with His owne mouth, He ſpake it once and twice, Pax vobis, over and over againe. Which is the Apoſtles benediction here. Ioh. 20. 21. So, Reſurrection and Peace, they accord well.

Now for the ſequele of good workes upon CHRISTS bringing from the dead. Being to inferre good workes, He would never put in all this, of CHRISTS bringing backe againe from the dead, if there had not beene ſome ſpeciall operative force to or toward them, in CHRISTS Reſurrection. If CHRISTS riſing made not for them, had not ſome ſpeciall reference to them, ſome peculiar intereſt in them, all this had not beene ad idem, but idle, and beſide the point quite. We muſt take heed of this errour, to thinke, the Paſſion, or Reſurrection of CHRIST (though it be actus tranſiens, that with the doing paſſeth away) that it hath not a vertue and force permanent; that it left not behinde it a vertue and force permanent to worke continually ſome grace in us; as, to thinke, His Reſurrection to be Actus ſuſpenſus, an act to have his effect at the latter day, and in the meane time to ſerve for nothing, but to hang in nubibus (as they ſay.) But that, this day, it hath an efficacie continuing, that ſheweth forth it ſelfe: And, as the rule is, in the ſoule, before it doth on the body. Wee will leave the Heathen to their habits, and habitualities: But, with us Chriſtians, this is ſure: Whatſoever, in us, or by us is wrought, that is pleaſing to GOD; it is ſo wrought by the vertue of CHRISTS Reſurrection. We have not thought of it perhaps; but, moſt certaine it is, it is ſo. So GOD hath ordained it. Whatſoever evill is truely mortified in us, it is ſo, by the power of CHRISTS death; and thither to be referred properly. And, whatſoever good is revived or brought againe anew from us, it is all from the vertue of CHRISTS riſing againe. All doe riſe, all are raiſed, thence. The ſame power, that did create at firſt, the ſame it is, that makes a new creature. The ſame power, that raiſed Lazarus the brother, from his grave of ſtone: the ſame raiſed Mary Magdalen the ſiſter, from her grave of Sinne. From one, and the ſame power, both. Which keepeth this methode: Worketh firſt, to the raiſing of the ſoule, from the death of ſinne; and after, in the due time, to the raiſing of the body; from the duſt of death. Elſe, what hath the Apoſtle ſaid, all this while?

Now, this power is inhærent in the Spirit as the proper ſubject of it: even the æternall Spirit, whereby Chriſt offered Himſelfe firſt unto GOD, and after raiſed himſelfe from the dead. Now, as in the texture of the naturall body, ever there goes the Spirit with the bloud: ever, with a veine (the veſſell of the one) there runnes along an arterie (the veſſell of the other:) So is it in CHRIST; His bloud, and His Spirit allwayes go together. In the Spirit is the power: in the power, vertually, every good work it produceth, which it was ordained for. If we get the Spirit, we cannot faile of the power. And, the Spirit, that ever goes with the bloud, which never is without it.

This carries us now to the bloud. The very ſhedding whereof upon the Croſſe, primùm & ante omnia was the nature of a price. A price: firſt, of our ranſome from death due to our ſinne, through that His ſatisfaction. A price againe, of the purchaſe, He made for us, through the vale of His merit, which by His Teſtament, is by Him paſſed over to us.

Now then, His bloud, after it had, by the very powring it out, wrought theſe two effects, it ranne not waſte, but divided into two ſtreames. 1. One into the Laver of the new birth (our Baptiſme) applied to us outwardly to take away the ſpots of our ſinne. Tit. 3. 5. Luc. 22. 20. 2. The other, into the Cup of the New Teſtament in His bloud, which inwardly adminiſtred, ſerveth, as to purge and cleanſe the conſcience from dead works, that ſo live works may grow up in the place: So, to endue us with the Spirit, that ſhall enable us with the power to bring them forth. Chap. 9. 14. Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina Sacramenta: theſe are (not; two of the Sacraments, but) the two twin-Sacraments of the Church (ſaith S. Auguſtinc.) And with us there are two Rules. 1. One, Quicquid ſacrificio offertur, Sacramento confertur; what the Sacrifice offereth, that the Sacrament obtaineth. 2. The other, Quicquid 1 2

To draw to an end. If this power be in the Spirit, and the bloud be the vehiculum of the Spirit; How may we partake this bloud? It ſhall be offered you ſtraight, in 1 Cor. 10. 36. the Cup of bleſsing, which we bleſſe in His name. For, is not the Cup of bleſsing which we bleſſe, the Communion of the bloud of CHRIST (ſaith Saint Paul?) Is there any doubt of that? In which bloud of CHRIST is the Spirit of CHRIST. In which Spirit is all Spirituall power: and namely this power, that frameth us fit to the workes of the Spirit. Which Spirit we are all made, there, to drinke of.

And what time ſhall we doe this? What time is beſt? What time better than that day, in which it firſt ſhewed forth the force and power, it had in making peace, in bringing backe CHRIST, that brought peace backe with Him, that made the Teſtament, that ſealed it with His bloud; that died upon it, that it might ſtand firme for ever? All which were, as upon this day. This day then, ſomewhat would be done: ſomewhat more than ordinary, more than every day. Let every day, be for every good worke, to doe His will: But, this day, to doe ſomething more than ſo, ſomething that may be well pleaſing in His ſight. So, it will be kindly: So, we ſhall keepe the degrees in the Text: So, we ſhall give proofe that we have our part and fellowſhip in CHRIST, in CHRISTS reſurrection, in the vertue of CHRISTS reſurrection: Grace riſing in us; workes of grace riſing from it. That ſo, there may be a reſurrection of vertue, and good workes, at CHRISTS reſurrection. That, as there is a reviving, ἀναβιόω in the earth, when all and every herbs and flowers are brought againe from the dead: So, among men good workes may come up too, that we be not found fruitleſſe, at our bringing backe from the dead, in the great Reſurrection: But have our parts, as here now, in the bloud, ſo there then in the Teſtament, and the Legacies thereof; which are glorie, joy, and bliſſe for ever and ever.

SERMONS

OF THE SENDING OF the Holy Ghost, PREACHED
VPON
Whit-Sunday.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT GREENVVICH, on the VIII. of June, A. D. MDCVI. being Whitſunday.

Acts CHAP. II. VER. I, II, III, IV.

And when the Day of Pentecoſt was come (or, when the fifty daies were fulfilled) they were all with one accord, in one place.
And there came ſodainely from heaven the ſound of a mighty Wind; and it filled the place where they ſate.
And there appeared tongues cloven, as they had beene of fire; and ſate upon each of them.
And they were all filled with the HOLY GHOST, and they began to ſpeake with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

WE are this day (beſide our weekely due of the Sabboth) to renew, and to celebrate the yearely memorie, of the ſending downe the Holy Ghoſt. One of the Magnalia Dei (as they be termed after in the XI. Verſe;) One of the great and wonderfull Benefits of GOD; Indeed, a Benefit ſo great and ſo wonderfull, as there were not tongues enough, upon earth, to celebrate it withall, but there were faine to be more ſent from heaven, to helpe to ſound it out throughly: Even a new ſupply of tongues from heaven. For all the tongues, in earth, were not ſufficient to magnifie GOD for His goodneſſe, in ſending downe to men the gift of the HOLY GHOST. Ver. 11.

This

This wee may make a ſeverall benefit by it ſelfe, from thoſe of CHRISTS
Gal. 4.4. 4.6. And ſo the Apoſtle ſeemeth to doe. Gal. 4. Firſt, GOD ſent His Sonne, in one verſe; and then after GOD ſent the Spirit of His Sonne, in another.

Or wee may hold our continuation ſtill, and make this the laſt of CHRISTS Benefits: For, Aſcendit in altum, is not the laſt; there is one ſtill remaining, which Pſal. 68.18. is Dona dedit hominibus. And that is this dayes peculiar; wherein were given to men, many and manifold, both graces and gifts, and all in one gift, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

Howſoever we make it, ſure it is, that all the reſt, all the Feaſts hitherto, in the returne of the yeare, from His Incarnation, to the very laſt of His Aſcenſion, though all of them be great, and worthy of all honour in themſelves; yet, to us, they are as nothing, any of them, or all of them (even all the Feaſts in the Calendar) without this Day, the Feaſt, which now we hold Holy to the ſending of the Holy Ghoſt.

CHRIST is the Word; and all, of Him, but words ſpoken, or words written: there is no ſeale put to, till this day; The Holy Ghoſt is the Seale or Signature, In quo

In all theſe of CHRISTS, there is but the purchaſe made, and payd for; and (as they ſay) Ius ad rem acquired: But, Ius in re, Miſsio in poſſeſſionem, Liverie, and ſeizin; that, is reſerved till this day: For the Spirit is the Arrha, the earneſt or the in-

But we will not compare them: they are both above all compariſon. Yet, this we may ſafely ſay of them: without either of them, we are not compleat, we have not our accompliſhment; But, by both, we have; and that fully, even by this daies royall exchange. Whereby, as before, He of ours; ſo now, we of His are made partakers. He, clothed with our fleſh, and we inveſted with His Spirit. The great Promiſe of the Old Teſtament accompliſhed; That He ſhould partake our humane nature: and the great and precious Promiſe of the New, That we ſhould be Conſortes
2 Pet. 1.4. Divinæ naturæ; partake His divine nature: Both are, this day, accompliſhed. That the Text well beginneth with Dum complerentur; For, it is our Complement indeed: and not onely ours, but the very Goſpels too. It is Tertullian: Chriſtus, Legis; Spiritus Sanctus, Evangelii Complementum. The comming of CHRIST was the fulfilling of the Law: The comming of the HOLY GHOST, is the fulfilling of the Goſpell.

I. Of which comming of the HOLY GHOST the Report is here ſet downe by Saint Luke; both of the 1 time, and the 2 manner of it. 1. The Time, in the firſt words: When the day of Pentecoſt was come. 2. The Manner, in all the reſt of the

II. foure Verſes.

And the Manner, firſt on their parts, to whom He came: Of the preparation for His comming in the firſt verſe. And then, the manner of His comming in the other three.

1 On their parts, to whom He came, how they ſtood prepared, how they were found framed and fitted to receive Him when He came, in theſe three: 1. They were all of one accord. 2 They were all in one place. 3. And both theſe (dum complerentur) even ſo long, till the fiftie daies were fulfilled.

2 On His part, the manner of His comming to them thus prepared. 1 Firſt, as it is propoun-propounded in Type or Figure, in the second and third Verſes. 2 And then, as it is expounded in truth and in deed, in the fourth.

1. In Type or figure Symbolicè; and that is two wayes, agreeable to the two chiefe ſenſes, 1 the hearing, and 2 the ſight. 1 To the Hearing, by a ſound, in the ſecond verſe, 2 To the ſight, by a ſhew in the third.

1 To the hearing, by a ſound, in the ſecond: A ſound of a wind; A wind, 1 ſudden, 2 vehement, 3 that came from heaven, and 4 filled that place where they ſate.

2 To the ſight, by a ſhew in the third: There appeared, 1 Tongues; 2 cloven; 3 as it were of fire; 4 which ſate upon each of them. Thus farre, the Figure.

2 Then in the fourth, followeth the thing it ſelfe. Which verſe is (as it were) a Commentary of the two former. 1. Of the Wind inward, in the firſt part of it, and theſe words: They were all filled with the HOLY GHOST. 2 Of the Tongues outward, in the latter, and theſe words: They began to ſpeake with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

The one, to repreſent the inward operation. The other, the outward manifeſtation of the Spirit. Thus ſtandeth the Order; Theſe are the Parts.

I.

The Time. When the day of Pentecoſt was come.

THe firſt point is the Time of His comming (that is) The day of Pentecoſt.

1 Why that day? The day of Pentecoſt was a great Feaſt under the Law: And meet it was, this Comming ſhould be at ſome great Feaſt. 1 The firſt Dedication of CHRISTS Catholike Church on earth; 2 The firſt publiſhing the Goſpell; 3 The firſt proclaiming the Apoſtles Commiſſion, were ſo great matters, as it was not meet, they ſhould be obſcurely carried; ſtolne as it were, or done in a corner. Much lay upon them: and fit it was, they ſhould be done in as great an Aſſembly as might be. And ſo they were: even in a Concourſe (as in the V. Verſe it is) of every Nation under heaven; That ſo, notice might be taken of it, and by them carried all over the world, even to the utmoſt corners of the earth. Saint Paul ſaid well to King Agrippa: This is well enough knowne; This was not done in a corner. Act. 26. 26.

2 At a great Feaſt, it was meet: but, there were many great Feaſts; why at this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt?

2 As the Feaſt of giving the Law.

It is agreed by all Interpreters old and new; (* Cyprian is the firſt, we finde it in) That it was to hold harmony, to keepe correſpondencie betweene the two Teſtaments, the Old and the New. So it was, at CHRISTS Death (we ſee.) He was ſlaine, not onely, as the Lambe was; but even, when the Lambe was ſlaine too: On the Feaſt of the Paſſeover, then was CHRIST our Paſſeover offered for us.

* Cyprian. Ser. de Spiritu.

Now, from that Feaſt of the Paſſeover, reckoning fiftie dayes, they came to Sinai: And there on that day (the day of Pentecoſt) received they the Law: (a memorable day with them, a high Feaſt; even for ſo great a Benefit: and is therefore by them called the Feaſt of the Law.)

And, even the very ſame day (reckoning from CHRIST our Paſſeover, fiftie dayes) that the Law was given in Sinai, The very ſame day doth the new Law here goe out of Sion (as the Prophet Eſay foretold, exibit de Sion Lex;) which is nothing elſe, but the promulgation of the Goſpell. The Royall Law (as Saint Iames calleth it) as given by CHRIST our King: The other, but by Moſes, a ſervant: And ſavoureth therefore of the Spirit of bondage, the feare of Servants; As this doth, of the Princely Spirit, the Spirit of ingenuitie, and adoption, the Love of Children.

On the Feaſt of Pentecoſt then; becauſe then, was given the Law of CHRIST written in our hearts by the HOLY GHOST.

2 The Feast of beginning of Easter.

To this doth Chryſoſtome joyne a ſecond harmonie. That as, under the Law, at this Feaſt, they firſt put their ſicle to the Corne; (Harveſt, in that Climate, beginning with them in this Moneth:) the firſt fruits whereof they offered at Easter; and was called therefore by them Feſtum meßis: In like ſort we ſee, that this very day (the LORD of the Harveſt ſo diſpoſing it, who not long before lifting up His eyes and looking on the regions round about, ſaw them white and ready to the harveſt) His firſt Worke-men, the Apoſtles, did put in their firſt ſicle into the great Harveſt, Cujus ager eſt Mundus, whereof the world is the field, and the ſeverall furrowes of it, all the Nations under heaven. On the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, then ſecond, becauſe then began the great Spirituall Harveſt.

The Feaſt of Iubilee.

To theſe two doth * Saint Auguſtine adde a third, taken out of the number in the very name of Pentecoſt, and that is fiftie. Which, being all along the Law, the number of the Iubilee (which was the time of forgiving of debts, and reſtoring men to their firſt eſtates) it falleth fit with the proclaiming of the Goſpell (done preſently here in the 38. Verſe of this Chapter) which is an Act of GODS moſt gratious generall free pardon of all the ſinnes, of all the ſinners in the world.

Auguſt. ep. 119.

Cyril. Cat. 17.

Pſal. 104. 30.

And no leſſe fit falleth it for our Reſtitution, whereunto Cyril applyeth excellently the XXX. Verſe of the CIV. Pſalme, Emitte Spiritum tuum & creabuntur & renovabis faciem terræ. Shewing, there was firſt an emiſſion of the Spirit into man, at his Creation; Which, being ſince choked with ſinne, and ſo come to nothing: this day, there is here a ſecond emiſſion of the ſame Spirit into man, fully to reſtore, and renew him, and in him the whole Maſſe of the Creation. On the day of Pentecoſt then laſt, becauſe therein, is the true number and force of the true Iubilee. This for the choice of the time.

II. The Number thus ſetled, wee deſcend to the ſecond point, of the Manner. And firſt on their parts on whom the HOLY GHOST came: how He found them framed, and fit to receive ſuch a Gueſt. It is called by the Fathers, Paraſceue SPIRITVS, The preparation (as there was one for the Paſſeover, ſo here) for Pentecoſt.

The Manner.

1 On their parts, Their preparation.

It is truly ſaid by the Philoſopher, That Actus activorum ſunt in patiente diſpoſito; if the patient be prepared aright, the Agent will have his worke, both the ſooner and the better. And ſo conſequently, the Spirit, in His comming; if the parties to whom He commeth, be made perſpirable.

And this is three-fold, ſet downe in theſe words, 1. They were all with one accord. 2. They were all in one place. A double Vnitie: 1 Vnity of minde (ſo is ὁμοθυμαδὸν, θυμῷ:) or of hearts (ſo is accord, cordium.) 2 And ſecondly, unitie of place. 3. And thirdly, theſe two, dum complerentur: Patiently expecting, while the fiftie dayes were accompliſhed.

1 They were all of one accord.

Vnitie is the firſt: unitie of minde. And for it, take but any ſpirit, that is to give life to a naturall bodie; Can any ſpirit animate or give life to members diſmembred, unleſſe they be firſt united and compact together? It cannot: Vnitie muſt prepare the way to any ſpirit, though but naturall A faire example wee have, in EZEKIEL, Chap. XXXVII. A ſort of ſcattered dead bones there lay: They were to be revived. Firſt, the bones came together, every bone to his bone; then, the ſinewes grew and knit them: then, the fleſh and skinne, and covered them: and then, when they were thus united, then and not before, called Hee for the Spirit from the foure winds, to enter into them and to give them life. No Spirit, Not the ordinary, naturall Spirit will come, but where there is a way made and prepared by accord and unitie of the bodie.

Ezek. 37. 7, 8, 9.

Now then take the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of all ſpirits, the third Perſon in Trinity: He is the very eſſentiall Vnity, Love, and Love-knot of the two Perſons, the Father and the Sonne; even of GOD with GOD. And He is ſent to be the Vnion, Love and Love-

Love-knot of the two Natures united in CHRIST; even of GOD with man. And can we imagine, that He will enter (Eſſentiall unitie) but where there is unitie? The ſpirit of unitie, but where there is unitie of ſpirit? Verily there is not, there cannot poſſibly be a more proper and peculiar, a more true and certaine diſpoſition, to make us meet for Him, than that quality in us, that is likeſt His nature and eſſence, that is unanimitie. Faith, to the Word; and Love to the Spirit, are the true Preparatives. And there is not a greater barre, a more fatall or forcible oppoſition to His entrie, than diſcord, and diſ-united mindes, and ſuch as are in the gall of bitterneſſe: They can neither give nor receive the HOLY GHOST. Diviſum eſt cor eorum, jamjam interibunt (ſaith the Prophet) their heart is divided, their accord is gone, that Cord is untwiſted; they cannot live, the Spirit is gone too. Act 8.23. Hoſ.10.2.

And doe we marvell, that the Spirit doth ſcarcely pant in us: that we ſing and ſay, Come HOLY GHOST, and yet He commeth no faſter? Why, The Day of Pentecoſt is come, and we are not all of one accord. Accord is wanting: The very firſt point is wanting, to make us meet for His comming. Sure, His after-comming will be like to His firſt: to them, that are (and, not to any, but them that are) of one accord.

And who ſhall make us of one accord? High ſhall be his reward in Heaven, and happy his remembrance on earth, that ſhall be the meanes to reſtore this accord to the Church: that once we may keepe a true and perfect Pentecoſt, like this here, Erant omnes unanimiter. I paſſe to the ſecond.

2 In one place.

But ſuppoſe wee were of one accord; is not that enough? May we not ſpare this other, of one place? If our mindes be one, for the place it skills not: it is but a circumſtance or ceremony, what ſhould we ſtand at it? Yes ſure; ſeeing the HOLY GHOST hath thought it ſo needfull, as to enter it; wee may not paſſe it over, or leave it out. Not onely, of one minde (that is) unanimitie: but alſo, in one place too (that is, uniformitie.) Both, in the unitie of the Spirit, that is inward; and in the bond of peace too, that is, outward. An Item, for thoſe, whom the Apoſtle calleth Filii Subſtractionis, that forſake the Congregation (as, even then, in the Apoſtles Times, the manner of ſome was) and doe withdraw themſelves, to their perdition, to no leſſe matter. GODS will is, we ſhould be, as upon one foundation, ſo under one roofe: That, is His doing, Qui facit unanimes, &c. Hee that maketh men of one minde to dwell in one houſe. Therefore it is expreſly noted, of this Company here (in the Text) where they prayed, they prayed all together (*Chap.*4.24.) When they heard, they heard all together (Chap. 8. 6.) When they brake bread, they did it all together (Verſe 46.) All together, ever: not, in one place, ſome; and ſome in another: but, all ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, all in one and the ſelfe-ſame place. For, ſay what they will, Diviſion of places will not long be without diviſion of mindes. This muſt be our ground. The ſame Spirit, that loveth unanimitie, loveth uniformitie; unitie even in matter of circumſtance, in matter of place. Thus the Church was begun; thus it muſt be continued. Eph.4.3. Heb.10 39. Heb.10.25. Pſal.68.6.

3 While the fiftie dayes were fulfilled.

To theſe, doe the Fathers joyne a third: which they raiſe out of the word, Dum complerentur. A diſpoſition in them, whereby they held out, and ſtirred not, even till the fiftie dayes were fulfilled. That former unanimitie; this latter, longanimitie. There is in us, a hot haſtie ſpirit, impatient of any delay: what we would have, we would have out of hand: and theſe ſame Dum, and Donec, and ſuch like words we love them not. This Spirit was even in theſe here (the Apoſtles themſelves) at the firſt, as we may ſee in the laſt Chap. verſ. 6. where they ſhew it: Domine jamne vis? LORD wilt thou now? euen now? by and by? But that Spirit He caſt out, with Non eſt veſtrum, &c. Manete vos, dum. After which charge given, though at the inſtant of His aſcending, He promiſed He would ſend them the HOLY GHOST; yet Chap. 1. 7.

they did not looke for Him, the ſame afternoone; nor ſtayed but till the morrow after Aſcenſion Day; nor (as the Bethulians ſtint was) foure or five dayes, at the fartheſt, and then waxed weary, and would wait no longer: But, as He willed them to wait, ſo they did wait; not five dayes, but five, and five: And ſo continued waiting, even uſque dum Complerentur, till they were accompliſhed: And then brake not up neither, to keepe Holy-day, but held on their waiting, Holy-dayes, and all.

Judith. 7.30.

We ſay before, this Feaſt had divers names: 1 The Feaſt of the Law, 2 The Feaſt of harveſt, 3 The Feaſt of Pentecoſt: We may put to a fourth (out of *Deut.*16.9.) It is there called 4 the Feaſt of Weekes. It is not houres will ſerve the turne, nor yet dayes: it muſt be weekes, and as many weekes as be dayes in a weeke, to make it Pentecoſt (that is) fiftie dayes. Thus long they ſate by it (as it is in the next verſe) and tarried patiently the LORDS leaſure, till He came unto them, Qui crediderit ne feſtinet (ſaith the Prophet Eſay) He that beleeveth, let him not be haſtie: And, ſi moram fecerit, expecta Eum (ſaith Abacuk) If He happen to ſtay, ſtay for Him. And ſo we ſhall, if we call to minde this, that Hee hath waited for us and our converſion, more yeares, than we doe dayes for Him. And this withall, veniendo veniet; ſtay He may for a time, but if we wait, come He will certainly; and when He commeth, Manebit vobis in aternum, He will never forſake us, but continue with us for ever. Dum complerentur ſhall have His accompliſhment.

The Manner, On His part. 1 His comming in type.

And now we come to the Manner, of His comming. And that, firſt in type ſenſibly; thus deſcribed. 1 There came a ſound; 2 There were ſeene tongues, which is a ſenſible kinde of Comming.

And that is a comming rare, and nothing uſuall with the HOLY GHOST; which as an inviſible Spirit, commeth (for the moſt part) inviſibly. So ſaith Iob: He commeth to me, and I ſee Him not; He paſſeth hard by me, and I perceive Him not. It was thus here, for this once: But after, we ſee (in the tenth Chapter) He came upon Cornelius and his company; And after that, upon the Twelve at Epheſus (in the ninth Chap.) But on neither, that ought could be ſeene or heard: Onely diſcerned by ſome effect, He wrought in them. He that beſt knew the Spirit (CHRIST) ſets us downe the manner of His comming; Spiritus ſpirat, ſed neſcis unde aut quò, Hee doth come and inſpire, but how or which way, that know you not.

Iohn 3. 8.

Yet here, in this preſent caſe, for this once, it was meet, He ſhould thus come in ſtate; and that there ſhould be a ſolemne, ſet, ſenſible deſcending of it.

1 Meet: that no leſſe honour done to this Law of Sion, than to that of Sinai, which was publike, and full of Majeſtie; and ſo was this to be.

2 Meet: That having once before beene, and never but once, upon CHRIST the Head: it ſhould be ſo once more, on the Church too, the Body. It pleaſed Him to vouchſafe to grace the Church His Queene with like ſolemne inauguration to that of His owne, when the HOLY GHOST deſcended on Him in likeneſſe of a Dove; that ſhee might no leſſe, than Hee Himſelfe, receive from Heaven like ſolemne atteſtation.

3 Laſtly, meet it was, it ſhould remaine to the memory of all ages teſtified, that a day there was, when even apparantly to ſenſe, Mankind was viſited from on high: And that this Wind here, and theſe Tongues came not for nought, at ſo high a Feaſt, in ſo great an Aſſembly.

This Comming then of His, thus in State, is ſuch, as it was both to be heard and ſeene, To the eare and the eye both. So ſaith Saint Peter of it after (Verſe 33.) Being thus exalted (ſaith he of CHRIST) and having received the promiſe of the Father, He hath ſhed forth this, which you now both ſee and heare. And with good reaſon, both: To both ſenſes is the HOLY GHOST preſented. To the eare which is the ſenſe of faith: To the eye, which is the ſenſe of love. The eare, that is the ground of the word, which is audible: the eye, which is the ground of the Sacraments, which are viſible.

To

To the eare, in a noiſe; To the eye, in a ſhew: A noiſe, of a mightie Wind; A ſhew, of firy Tongues. The noiſe, ſerving as a Trumpet, to awake the World, and give them warning, He was come. The firy Tongues; as ſo many Lights, to ſhew them, and to let them ſee the Day of that their viſitation.

To begin with the firſt: There came a ſound. Which very ſound, is to ſhew, that the Spirit, whereof it is the fore-runner, is no dumbe ſpirit but vocall. And ſo it is: the ſound thereof is not onely gone into all Lands: but hath beene heard, in all ages; before the Floud it ſounded in [a] Enoch a Prophet, and [b] Noe a Preacher of righteouſneſſe. All the Law long, it ſounded in them, by whom [c] Moſes was preached every Sabbath day. The very beginning of the Goſpell, was with a ſound, [d] Vox clamantis: and but for this ſound Saint Paul knoweth not, how we ſhould doe; [e] How ſhould they beleeve (ſaith he) in Him, of whom they have not heard? and without a ſound, there is no hearing. But, we ſhall come to this againe in the apparition of the tongues. There came a ſound.

There came a ſound: and not any ſound; it will not be amiſſe, to weigh what kinde of ſound is expreſſed in the word here uſed [ἦχος] you know, what ſound an Echo is: a ſound at the ſecond hand, a ſound at the rebound. Verbum DOMINI venit ad nos; The Word of the LORD commeth to us: there is the firſt ſound, To us: and ours is but the Echo the reflection of it to you. GODS firſt, and then ours ſecond. For, if it come from us directly; and not from Him to us firſt, and from us then to you (echo-wiſe) it is to be ſuſpected. A ſound it may be; the HOLY GHOST commeth not with it: His forerunner it is not; for, that is ἦχος. A ſound Echo-wiſe.

There came a ſound, and it was the ſound of a wind: and this too, very fitly. For, the Wind, which is here the type of the HOLY GHOST, of all the creatures, doth beſt expreſſe it. A ſound of a Wind.

1 For firſt, of all bodily things, it is the leaſt bodily, and commeth neareſt to the nature of a ſpirit: inviſible as it is.

2 And ſecondly, quicke and active, as the ſpirit is. Of the Wind it is ſaid, Vſque adeo agit, ut niſi agat non ſit: ſo active it is, as no ſtirring the aire, no action, no wind: even ſo, no operation, no ſpirit. So like, as both have but one name: nay, all three but one: 1 The wind in the wide world, 2 the breath in our bodies, 3 and the Spirit in the myſticall Body (the Church:) and much adoe we have, to diſtinguiſh them in many places; they be taken ſo one for another.

Now, this Wind that came and made this ſound, is here deſcribed with foure properties. [1] It fell ſuddenly: [2] It was mightie or violent: [3] It came from Heaven; [4] It filled that place where they ſate; that place, and no other. Of which, the two firſt are ordinarie, and (like the wind) common, [1] To be ſudden, [2] and to be violent. The other two, not ſo, but diſlike: [3] To come from Heaven, [4] and to keepe it ſelfe within one place; and that of no great compaſſe. 1 It came ſuddenly.

It fell ſuddenly, ἄφνω φερομένη: ſo doth the wind. It riſeth oftentimes in the midſt of a calme; giveth no warning, but ruſheth up of a ſudden; and even ſo doth the Spirit: For, that commeth not by obſervation neither (ſaith our SAVIOVR;) you can make no ſet rules of it; you muſt wait for it, as well when it commeth not, as when it comes. [b] Many times it is found of them that ſeeke it not; and therefore little account make of it; and therefore little deſerve it; [c] Cecidit ſuper eum Spiritus, is ſo common in both the Old, and New Teſtament, as wee can make no doubt of this. Which ſheweth, it falls ſuddenly; it creepes not: ſerpentis eſt ſerpere. Commonly, motions that come from the Serpent, creepe upon us: but, neſcit tarda molimina Spiritus Sancti gratia (ſaith Ambroſe.) [d] Velociter currit ſermo Ejus, His Word runneth very ſwiftly, and [e] His Spirit commeth with the wings of the Wind. And therefore ſudden (ſaith Gregorie,) becauſe, things, if they be not ſudden, awake us not, affect us not; but, Repentina valdè mutant, ſudden things ſtart us, and make us looke up. And, therefore ſudden (ſaith he againe) that men may learne, not to deſpiſe preſent motions of grace, though ſuddenly riſing in them; and though they can give no certaine reaſon of them: but take the Wind while it bloweth, and the water, while the Angell moveth it; as not knowing, when it will, or whether ever it will blow A Wind.

againe, or ſtirre any more. It is ἄφνω φερομένη, it fell on a ſudden.

2 A vehement Wind. It was a mightie or vehement wind. The Wind is ſo; and the Spirit is ſo: both in this well ſorted together.

Of the Wind, it is a common obſervation, that being nothing elſe but a puffe of aire, the thinneſt, the pooreſt, and (to our ſeeming) of the leaſt force of all creatures, yet groweth it to that violence, and gathereth ſuch ſtrength, as it [f] rattles together the great ſhips of Tharſis, as [g] it rents and rives in ſunder mountaines and rockes: pulls up trees; blowes downe huge piles of building: hath moſt ſtrange and wonderfull effects, which our eyes have often ſeene: and all this but a little thinne aire.

g 1 Reg. 19. 11.

And ſurely, no leſſe obſervable, or admirable (nay, much more) have beene and are the operations of the Spirit. Even preſently after this, this Spirit, in a few poore, weake and ſimple inſtruments (GOD knoweth) waxed ſo full and forcible, as it [h] caſt downe ſtrong holds, brought into captivitie many an exalting thought, [i] made a conqueſt of the whole world, even then, when it was bent fully in maine oppoſition againſt it: as it hath ſet all men in a maze to conſider, how ſo poore a beginning ſhould grow to ſuch might, that, Wiſdome, and Learning, and Might, and Majeſtie, and all have ſtooped unto it: and all was but, GODS [k] little finger; all [l] the breath of His mouth. Verily, the Wind was never ſo vehement, as the Spirit hath beene and is, in His proceeding.

k Luke 11. 20.

Theſe two are common with the Wind; and for theſe two, it might have beene no more, but even a common wind. The other two are not ſo; but ſhew it to be more than a wind: 3 The comming from Heaven, 4 the filling but of that one place. In theſe two, it is diſlike; as, in the former two, like the ordinary wind that bloweth.

3 It came from Heaven. It came from Heaven. Winds (naturally) come not from thence, but out of the caves and holes of the earth: they blow not downeward, but move laterally from one coaſt or climate to another. To come directly downe, not onely de ſurſum, from above (ſo it may be, from the middle region of the aire) but de cælo, from Heaven it ſelfe; that, is ſupernaturall, ſure: that, is a Wind out of GODS owne Treaſury indeed: that, points us plainely to Him, that is aſcended up into Heaven, and now ſendeth it downe from thence.

And therefore ſendeth it from Heaven, that it may fill us with the breath of Heaven. For, as the wind is, ſo are the blaſts, ſo is the breath of it: and, as is the ſpirit, ſo are the motions, it uſeth; ſo are the reaſons, it is carried by.

To diſtinguiſh this Wind from others, is no hard matter. If our motions come from above; if we fetch our grounds there, de cælo, from heaven, from Religion, from the Sanctuary; it is this wind: but thoſe, that come from earthly reſpects, we know their cave; and that there is nothing but naturall in them. This wind came thence, to make us heavenly minded, [n] ſapere quæ ſurſum, to ſet our affections on things heavenly, [o] and to frame the rules of our converſation agreeable unto Heaven. So wee ſhall know, what wind blowes; whether it be de cælo, or de hominibus: whether it be defluxus cæli, or exhalatio terræ; from heaven or of men, a breath from heaven, or a terrene exhalation.

Matth. 21. 25.

4 It filled that place one'y. And like to this is the fourth: It filled that place where they ſate. That place, where they: That place, not the places about. That place it filled: the other felt it not. And this is another plaine diſſimilie, To blow but in one place: and ſheweth it to be more than ordinary. The common wind, all places within his circuite, it aireth all alike; one as well as another, indifferently. This here ſeemeth to blow Electivè; as if there were ſenſe in it, or it blew by diſcretion. For, it blew upon none of the neighbour houſes, none of the places adjacent, where theſe men were not. That, and onely that roome it filled, where they were ſitting.

And this [of blowing upon one certaine place] is a property very well fitting the Spirit, Vbi vult ſpirat. To blow in certaine places, where it ſelfe will; and upon certaine perſons, and they ſhall plainely feele it, and others about them, not a whit. There ſhall be an hundred or more in an auditory; one ſound is heard, one breath doth blow: at that inſtant, one or two and no more; one here, another there; they ſhall ſhall feele the Spirit, ſhall be affected, and touched with it ſenſibly: Twenty on this ſide them, and forty on that, ſhall not feele it; but ſit all becalmed, and goe their way no more moved than they came. Vbi vult ſpirat, is moſt true.

And that Vbi is not any where, but where theſe men ſate; that is, it is a peculiar Wind, and appropriate to that place where the Apoſtles are, that is, the Church: elſewhere to ſeeke it, is but folly: The place, it bloweth in, is Sion: and, in Sion, where men be ſo diſpoſed, as we ſhewed ere-while; that is, where there is concord and unity, the dew of Sion, Ibi mandavit Dominus benedictionem; There, GOD ſendeth this Wind; and there He ſendeth His bleſſing with this wind, which never leaveth us till it bringeth us to life for evermore, to eternall life. So doth Salomon deſcribe the nature of the Wind: That it goeth forth, and that it compaſſeth round about, and then laſt, That it returneth, Per circuitus ſuos: So doth this, it commeth from heaven, and it bloweth into the Church, and thorow, and thorow it, to fill it with the breath of heaven: and as it came from heaven to the Church, ſo it ſhall returne from the Church, into heaven againe, per circuitus ſuos: and whoſe ſailes it hath filled with that wind, it ſhall carry with it along per circuitus ſuos; even to ſee the goodneſſe of the LORD in the Land of the living, there to live with Him and His Holy Spirit for ever.

Eccleſ. 1. 6.

So we have briefly the foure properties of this Wind, and of the Spirit whoſe Type it is: 1 That it is ſudden, in the firſt comming; 2 That it is mighty in proceeding; 3 That it commeth from heaven; 4 That it commeth into the Church; to fill it with the Spirit of heaven, and to carry it thither whence it ſelfe commeth. Thus much for the ſecond, The firſt Type.

This wind brought downe with it tongues, even imbrem linguarum, a whole ſhower of them, which is the next point, Of the ſhew which appeared. By which appearing, it appeareth plainely, that the Wind came not for themſelves onely, but for others too beſide: In that here is not onely ſent a Wind, which ſerveth for their owne inſpiration; but there be alſo ſent tongues with it, which ſerve for eloquution (that is) to impart the benefit to more than themſelves.

2 To be Seene. There appeared Tongues, &c.

It ſheweth, that the HOLY GHOST commeth and is given here, rather as gratia gratis data, to doe others good; than as gratia gratum faciens, to benefit themſelves. Charitas diffuſa in corde would ſerve them, Charity powred into their hearts; but gratia diffuſa in labiis, Grace powred into their lips, that is not needfull for themſelves, but needfull to make others, beſide them, partakers of the benefit. The Wind alone, that is to breathe withall; the grace of the HOLY GHOST whereby our ſelves live: but, the Wind and Tongues, that is to ſpeake withall; the grace of the HOLY GHOST, whereby we make others live, and partake of the ſame knowledge to life. An union of the Wind and Tongue here on earth, expreſſing the unitie of the Spirit and Word in Heaven: that, as the Wind or breath in us is to ſerve the Tongue; ſo is the Spirit given, to ſet forth the Word, and the HOLY GHOST to ſpread abroad the knowledge of CHRIST.

Rom. 5. 5. Pſal. 45. 2.

Where, it is not unworthy your obſerving neither, that as in the naturall body, one and the ſame breath of ours, is Organon both vitæ and vocis, is the inſtrument both of life and voice; the ſame that we live by, is the ſame that we ſpeake by: Even the very like is, in the body myſticall; and both the vitall breath, and the vocall, come both (as we here ſee) from the HOLY GHOST.

This alſo ſtandeth of foure parts, as did the former. For, there appeared, 1 Tongues, 2 cloven, 3 as it were of fire, 4 ſitting upon each of them.

The tongue is the ſubſtantive, and ſubject of all the reſt. It is ſo: And GOD can ſend from Heaven no better thing; nor the Devill from hell no worſe thing, than it. The beſt member, we have (ſaith the Prophet;) The worſt member, we have (ſaith the Apoſtle:) Both, as it is imployed.

Pſal. 108. 1. Iames 3. 6.

The beſt, if it be of GODS cleaving; if it be of His lightning with the fire of Heaven; if it be one that will ſit ſtill, if cauſe be. The worſt, if it come from the Devils hands. For, he, as in many other, ſo in the ſending of tongues, ſtriveth to be like GOD; as knowing well, they are every way as fit inſtruments, to worke miſchiefe by, as to doe good with. There be tongues of Angels (in 1 Cor. 13. 1.) and if of good Angels, I make no doubt but of evill; and so, the Devill hath his tongues.

And he hath the art of cleaving. He shewed it in the beginning, when he made the Serpent, linguam bisulcam, a forked tongue, to speake that, which was contrary to his knowledge and meaning, They should not die; and as hee did the Serpents, so hee can doe others.

Gen. 3 4.

There is fire in Hell, as well as in Heaven; that, we all know.

Onely, in this, they agree not, but are unlike; his tongues cannot sit still, but fly up and downe all over the world, and spare neither Minister, nor Magistrate, no nor GOD Himselfe.

Psal. 108. 2. But if we shall say to our tongue, as David did to his, Awake up my glory (that is) make it the glory of all the rest of our members; it can have no greater glory than this, to be the Organ of the HOLY GHOST: to set forth, and sound abroad the knowledge of CHRIST, to the glory of GOD the Father. And, so used, it is heavenly; no time, so heavenly as then; in no service, so heavenly as in that.

Not to inlarge this point further, there is no new matter in it. This here (of the Tongues) is as that before of the sound; both are to no other end, but to admonish them of their Office, whereto they here received Ordination: even to be Tongues, to be trumpets of the Counsell of GOD, and of His Love to mankinde, in sending His Sonne to save them.

Here is wind to serve for breath; and here are Tongues now, and what should let them to doe it? That which before they received in charge audibly, Ite, Prædicate; the very same they here received visibly, in this apparition, which is after expounded thus; Cæperunt loqui, by vertue of these tongues they began to speake.

2 Cloven tongues.

Tongues and cloven tongues. And that very cleaving, of right necessary use, to the businesse intended. For, that of theirs was but one whole entire tongue, that could speake but one poore language, the Syrian, they were bred in. There was not a cleft in it. So, could they speake their minde to none but Syrians; and by that meanes, should the Gospell have beene shut up, in one corner of the world.

Τὸ κοινωνικον is the goodnesse of all that is good; even the imparting it to the good of the common. To the end then, this great good of the knowledge of the Gospell, might be dispersed to many Nations, even to every nation under heaven; To that end, clove He their tongues: to make many tongues, in one tongue; to make one man to be able to speake to many men, of many Countries, to every one, in his owne language; If there must be a calling of the Gentiles, they must have the tongues of the Gentiles, wherewith to call them. If they were debters, not onely to the Iewes, but to the Grecians; nay, not onely to the Grecians, but to the Barbarians too; then must they have the tongues not onely of the Iewes, but of the Grecians and of the Barbarians too, to pay this debt, to discharge the duty of Ite, Prædicate, to all.

Marke 16. 25.

And this was a speciall favour from GOD, for the propagation of His Gospell farre and wide, this division of tongues: and it is by the ancient Writers (all) reckoned a plaine reversing of the curse of Babel, by this blessing of Sion: since they account it all one (and so it is) either, as at the first, for all men to speake one language; or, as here, one man speake all. That is here recovered, that there, was lost; and they inabled for the building up of Sion in every Nation, to speake so, as all might understand them of every Nation.

But this withall we are to take with us: that, with their many tongues, they spake, one thing, and that Vnivocè. With one mouth (Rom. 15. 6.) With one voice (Chap. 4. 24.)

Chap. 4 24.

With diverse tongues to utter one and the same sense, that is GODS cloven tongue; that, is the division of Sion, serving to edification.

With one tongue, æquivocè, to utter diverse senses, diverse meanings; that, is none of GODS, it is the Serpents forked tongue, the very division of Babel, and tendeth to nothing but confusion.

Tongues cloven, and as they had beene of fire. As they had beene: to keepe a difference in these (as before, in the Wind;) and to shew, that they were not of our elementarie fire.

fire. For, it is added; ſate upon them: which they could not have done, without ſome hurt; without skorching them, at leaſt; if it had beene ſuch fire, as it is in our chimneyes. But it was ὡσεὶ, as it were ours: (that is) in ſhew, earthly; in deed, celeſtiall: And as the Winde, ſo the fire from heaven; of the nature of that (in the III. of Exod.) which made the buſh burne, and yet conſumed it not. Exod.3.2.

Where firſt we are to obſerve againe, the conjunction of the tongue, and fire. The ſeat of the tongue is in the head; and the Head of the Church is CHRIST. The native place of heat (the quality, in us, anſwering to this fire) is the heart: and the Heart of the Church is the HOLY GHOST. Theſe two joyne, to this work: CHRIST, to give the tongue; the HOLY GHOST, to put fire into it. For, as in the body naturall, the next, the immediate inſtrument of the ſoule, is heat, whereby it worketh all the members over; even ſo, in the myſticall body, a vigor there is, like that of heat, which we are willed to cheriſh, to be [a] fervent in the Spirit; to [b] ſtirre and to [c] blow it up: which is it, that giveth efficacie to all the ſpirituall operations. Ephes.1.22.

c 2 Tim.1.6.

To expreſſe this qualitie, it appeareth in the likeneſſe of this element; even to ſhew, there ſhould be an efficacie, or vigour, in their doctrine, reſembling it; Quòd igneus eſt illis vigor, that the force of fire ſhould ſhew forth it ſelfe in their words: both in the ſplendor; which is the light of knowledge to cleare the miſt of their darkned underſtanding; and in the fervour, which is the force of ſpirituall efficacie; to quicken the dulneſſe of their cold and dead affections.

And indeed, the world was then ſo overwhelmed with ignorance and errour; and ſo overgrowne with droſſe, and other bad matter, by Paganiſme, it long had beene, that their lips did need, to be touched with a cole from the Altar. Tongues of fleſh would not ſerve the turne, nor words of aire: but there muſt be fire put into the tongue, and ſpirit and life into the words, they ſpake; a force more than naturall (that is) the force of the Spirit: even to ſpeake ſparkes of fire in ſtead of words, to drive away the darkneſſe, and to refine the droſſe of their heatheniſh converſation ſo long continued. Eſ.6.6.

Our SAVIOVR CHRIST ſaw this, and ſaid: Every ſacrifice then had need to be ſeaſoned with fire: but there was no fire to doe it with. Therefore He addeth, in another place: I came to ſend fire upon earth; and, this day, Hee was as good as His word, and ſent it. Marke 9.49. Luke 12.49.

And with ſuch a tongue, ſpake He Himſelfe, when they ſaid of Him, Did not our hearts burne within us, while He ſpake unto us by the way? With ſuch a tongue Saint Peter, here in this Chapter: for ſure, there fell from Him ſomething like fire on their hearts, when they were pricked with it and cryed, Men and brethren, what ſhall we doe? Luke 24.32. Verſ.37.

And even to this day yet, in them, that move the dead and dull hearts of their hearers, and make them to have a lively apprehenſion of things pertaining to GOD, there is a remainder of that, which this day was ſent; and they ſhew plainly, that yet, this fire is not cleane gone out.

But this is not alwayes, nor in all, with us; no more was it with them; but, in thoſe of their hearers, which had ſome of the anointing, and that will eaſily take the fire; in them good will be done: Or at leaſt, where there was ſome ſmoaking flax, ſome remainder of the Spirit, which without any great adoe will be kindled anew. Them, it doth good: the reſt, it did not. This for the fire. 1 Iohn 2.27. Matth. 12.20.

Theſe ſate upon each of them. In which ſitting, is ſet downe unto us, their laſt qualitie, of continuance and conſtancie. The vertue is διεσπαρμένον, firy tongues ſitting: the vice oppoſite ἐπιπολάζειν, firy tongues flitting. They did not light, and touch, and away, after the manner of butterflies; but both they ſate, themſelves (in the former Verſe;) the tongues ſate on them (that is) they abode ſtill, and continued ſtay'd and ſteddie, without ſtirring or ſtarting aſide (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) like a ſwarving bow. 4 And ſate on each of them. Verſe 2. Verſe 3. Pſal.78.57.

Of our SAVIOVR CHRIST Himſelfe, how to know Him, GOD Himſelfe gave Saint Iohn Baptiſt a privie ſigne; and it was this: On whomſoever thou ſeeſt the Spirit lighting, and abiding on Him, That is He: Lighting is not it, though it be the HOLY GHOST: but, lighting, and abiding; that is the true Signe. Iohn 1.33.

The ©

Psal.68.18,19. The ſame our SAVIOVR is, this day, ſaid: That aſcending on high, He gave gifts unto men: and to what end? that the LORD their GOD might dwell among them. Marke that; Dwell: not, might ſtay and lodge for a night, as in an Inne, or Hoſtry, and then be gone in the morning; but, Dwell (that is) have His habitation, take up His reſidence among them.

Psal.51.10. The GOD, or that perſon of the Deitie, He there ſaith, ſhall dwell, is the HOLY GHOST: One of whoſe chiefe Attributes (in the Pſalme) is, that He is רוח נכון a conſtant Spirit: (and, if Sanctus come of Sancio, there is as much ſaid in the Latine word as in the Hebrew:) Conſtant, not deſultory: and His fire not like the fooliſh meteor, now in, now out; but permanent ſtill, like the fire on the Altar.

Levit. 6.12. So in vigour, as His vigour is not brunts onely, or ſtarts, impetus; but, habitus; that it holdeth out habit-wiſe. Not onely like the ſparkes, before, which will make a man ſtirre for the preſent; but, leaving an impreſſion, ſuch an one as iron red hot leaveth in veſſels of wood; a fire-marke never to be got out more. Such doth the HOLY Psal.119.93. GHOST leave in the memories: In æternum non obliviſcar, I ſhall never forget it.

And ſuch did it leave in the hearts of the firſt Chriſtians, that could never be got out of their hearts by their perſecutors, till they plucked out hearts and all.

Marke 9.49. With this Salt, as well as with that fire (ſaith CHRIST) muſt every ſacrifice be ſeaſoned: Not onely with that fire, to ſtirre it up; but with this ſalt, to preſerve it; By this vertue (in the former verſe) they were diſpoſed to the Spirit: and now here, you ſee againe, by the Spirit, they are diſpoſed to this vertue: And not onely diſpoſed to it, but rooted, and more and more confirmed in it; that we may learne to eſteeme of it accordingly.

And thus have we (as before, heard what the ſound, ſo now) ſeene, what the ſight can ſhew us, even all foure: 1. Tongues, that they might preach: 2. Cloven, that they might preach to many: 3. Fire, that they might doe it effectually; 4. And Sitting, that ſo effectually as not flittingly, but that it might be an efficacie, conſtant, abiding, and ſtaying ſtill with them: So forcible, that continuall.

Now are we to know, what all this amounts to; what is the Signatum or thing ſignified of both theſe ſignes: What was wrought in them, by inward concurrence with this outward reſemblance. And that followeth, in the fourth verſe; wherein, there is a Commentary of this Winde, and a Gloſſe of theſe tongues. Of the Winde, in the forepart: They were all filled with HOLY GHOST. Of the Tongues, in the latter; They began to ſpeake with other Tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

But, the time being alreadie ſpent, I will not ſo farre preſume, vs to enter into it: It would aske too long a treaty.

It remaineth now, that firſt wee offer up our due praiſe and unfeined hearty thankes, giving to Him that is aſcended up on high, for ſending, this day, this bleſſing upon that His Church, the Mother of us all. The fruit whereof, even of this Wind, and of theſe tongues, in the effect of them both (the blowing of the one, and the ſpeaking of the other) we all feele to this day, ſo farre as Chriſtendome is wide. It is the dutie of the day.

Firſt then this: and then withall ſecondly, to endevour that we may have this day ſome feeling of this dayes benefit, our ſelves; and ſome way finde our ſelves viſited with the ſame Spirit.

I told you, after this firſt, there is no more viſible comming to be looked for: but that, after His accuſtomed uſuall manner, inviſibly He ceaſeth not to come ſtill, nor will not to the worlds end.

Even in this booke, after this time here, three ſeverall times (in the fourth, tenth, and nineteenth Chapters;) and at three ſeverall places (Ieruſalem, Cæſarea, Epheſus) The ſame Spirit came upon the faithfull people, and yet nothing heard nor ſeene; onely diſcerned after, by the impreſſion, it left behinde it. And this comming is ſtill uſuall with Him; and this we may hope for; hope for, and have, if we labour and diſpoſe our ſelves for it.

And we may direct our ſelves, how to doe this, by thoſe three places, I even now alleaged. 1 In the fourth Chapter, 31. Verſe; As they prayed, the Spirit came upon them: 2 In the tenth, Verſe 44. While Peter yet ſpake, the Spirit fell upon them: 3 In the nineteenth Chapter, Verſe 6. As they received the Sacrament, the Spirit was ſent on them. In which three, are plainely ſet downe to us, theſe three meanes to procure the Spirits comming: 1 Prayer, 2 The Word, 3 The Sacraments.

I know well, it was the Sacrament of Baptiſme in the place laſt alleaged: but that is all one. In one Verſe, doth the Apoſtle name them both, as of equall power (both) for the purpoſe; (1 *Cor.*12.13.) Vno Spiritu baptizati eſtis; (and, before he ends the verſe) & uno Spiritu poti. Baptized in the Spirit, There is theirs at Epheſus; but made drinke of the ſame Spirit, that is this of ours here. For, ex ſimilibus ſumus & alimur. Ours here (I ſay) where we doe drinke of the Spirit, if aright we receive it; in which reſpect he calleth it the Spirituall drinke (1 *Cor.*10.3.) becauſe we doe even drinke the Spirit with it.

And even in this very Chapter before the end, it is noted by S. Luke, as a ſpeciall meanes, whereby they invited the Spirit to them againe and againe; Their continuing in the Temple with one accord, and breaking of bread. Of one accord, we ſpake at the first, as an effectuall diſpoſition thereto: And this Sacrament of breaking of Bread is the Sacrament of accord; as that, which repreſenteth unto us perfect unity in the many graines kneaded into one loafe, and the many grapes preſſed into one Cup; and what it repreſenteth lively, it worketh as effectually. 1 Cor.10.17.

Howſoever it be, if theſe three, 1 Prayer, 2 The Word, 3 the Sacraments, be every one of them as an artery, to conveigh the Spirit into us; well may we hope, if we uſe them all three, we ſhall be in a good way to ſpeed of our deſires. For, many times we miſſe, when we uſe this one, or that one, alone; where it may well be, GOD hath appointed to give it us by neither, but by the third. It is not for us, to limit or appoint Him, how, or by what way, He ſhall come unto us, and viſit us: but, to offer up our obedience, in uſing them all; and uſing them all, He will not faile but come unto us, either as a wind, to allay in us ſome unnaturall heat of ſome diſtempered deſire in us to evill; or as a fire to kindle in us ſome luke-warme, or ſome key-cold affection in us to good. Come unto us, either as the Spirit of truth, lightning us with ſome new knowledge; or as the Spirit of Holineſſe, reviving in us ſome vertue or grace; or as the Comforter, miniſtring to us ſome inward contentment, or joy in the HOLY GHOST; or, in one or other certainely He will come. For, a compleat obedience on our part, in the uſe of all His preſcribed meanes, never did goe away emptie from Him, or without a bleſſing: Never did, nor never ſhall.

Never: but not on this day, of all dayes; the day, wherein Dona dedit hominibus, He gave gifts unto men. It is Dies donorum, His giving day, His day of Donatives: Some gift He will give, either from the Wind, inward; or from the tongue, outward; ſome gift He will give.

There be nine of them ſet downe, Nine manifeſtations of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12.) ſome of them nine. There be nine more ſet downe, nine fruits of the Spirit (*Gal.*5.) ſome of them nine: Some gift He will give. 1 Cor.12.8. Gal.5.22.

Onely let us diſpoſe our ſelves, by the uſe, not of this one, or that one, or two, but of all the meanes, to receive it by. Inwardly, by unitie, and patient waiting His leaſure, as theſe here: Outwardly, by frequenting thoſe holy duties, and offices all, which (we ſee) ſucceeded with thoſe there in the three places remembred.

And, in theſe, the bleſſed Spirit ſo diſpoſe us, and in them ſo bleſſe us, as we may not onely by outward celebration, but by inward participation, feele and finde in our ſelves, that we have kept to Him, this day, a true Feaſt of the comming of His Spirit, of the ſending downe the Holy Ghoſt. Which Almightie GOD grant, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at GREENWICH, on the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCVIII. being WHITSVNDAY.

ACTS CHAP. II. Ver. IV.

Et repleti ſunt omnes SPIRITV SANCTO, & cœperunt loqui variis linguis, prout SPIRITVS SANCTVS dabat eloqui illis.

And they were all filled with the HOLY GHOST, and began to ſpeake with other tongues, as the SPIRIT gave them utterance.

1 THIS day hold wee holy to the HOLY GHOST, by whom all holy dayes, perſons, and things are made holy. And with good reaſon, hold we it: He that maketh all holy dayes, it is meet ſhould bee allowed one, Himſelfe. And if we yeeld this honour, to this and that Saint; much more to the Saint-maker; to Him, that is the onely true Canonizer of all the Saints in the Calendar.

2 This honour were we bound to yeeld Him, if there were nothing beſides: but, ſeldome ſhall ye finde a Feaſt, wherein, with His honour, there is not joyned the remembrance of ſome memorable benefit then vouchſafed us; as (here) this Feaſt is not to the HOLY GHOST ſimply; but; but, to the ſending or comming of the HOLY GHOST: to the HOLY GHOST ſent.

3 Sent: not, as in former times, qualified or by measure, but even in plenitudine, in plenteous manner, fully. It is said, They were filled with the HOLY GHOST.

4 Filled: not to hold, but to set over. For, so many tongues, so many pipes to derive it to others, that, by preaching, they might impart the Spirit they received: preaching being nothing else (as the Fathers observe, out of the XI. Num.) but the taking of the spirit of the Preacher, and putting it on the hearer: or (to expresse it by the type of fire) the lighting of one torch by another; that so, it might passe from man to man, till all were lightned. Numb. 11.25.

For this Holy Spirit thus sent, plenteously sent, sent to them, and by them, to all and to us, are we here met to render our thankes to GOD: even to imitate Him; to send, this day, tongues into heaven, there to laud and magnifie Him, who as this day, sent these tongues into earth.

Now, of this benefit, (so farre as the two types in the former verses) * hath formerly beene treated: and we are now to supply what was then left in remainder. *At Pentecost, A. D. 1606.

This fourth verse then, is nothing else but a Commentary of the former; what in them was set forth in figure, is here expressed in plaine termes. The types were of two sorts, according to the two chiefe senses; 1 Audible to the eare, in the sound of wind; 2 Visible to the eye, in the shew of tongues. These two are expounded in the two moities of this Verse. The former, the Commentary of the wind, in these words: They were filled with the HOLY GHOST. The latter, the glosse of the tongues, in these: And they began to speake with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. The Summe.

For the first. The place was filled with a wind from Heaven. The filling of the place was a signe of the filling the persons in the place; the wind was a signe of the Spirit; the wind from Heaven, of the Holy Spirit: which Spirit filled the Persons, no lesse than did the Wind, the roome they sate in. Two points there be in it: 1 One of the Gift it selfe, in Spiritu sancto. 2 The other of the measure of the gift, in Repleti sunt. The Division I. 1 2

For the latter: foure things were in the type, 1 Tongues, 2 cloven, 3 sitting, 4 of fire; all foure here expressed, and suited. 1 Tongues: they began to speake. 2 Cloven: with other tongues. 3 Sitting: as the Spirit gave them. 4 Fire: ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, (utterance, it is turned; it is more.) These are the Heads. But, for that there is no speaking of the Spirit, without the Spirit, no hearing neither; to the end that speaking and hearing of Him, He may helpe our infirmities, &c. II. I. 2. 3. 4.

THE truth answering the type per omnia, as there were in that, two; 1 the Wind, and 2 Tongues: so are there here, two; 1 the Spirit, 2 and speech. Spirit, because speech without spirit, is but a dead sound like the a tinckling of a Cymball. Speech; because spirit without Speech, is but as the spirit that CHRIST cast forth, b Et illud erat mutum, a dumbe spirit; none the better for it. Which made the HOLY GHOST come in spirit and speech: not in spirit onely, but, in spirit and speech. I.

The Commentary of the Wind.

Of both parts joyntly: Spirit and Speech both.

a 1 Cor. 13. 1.

b Luke 11. 14.

But Spirit first in order.

But in spirit first, and then speech. So is the order. The HOLY GHOST begins within, à centro, and worketh outward: alters the minde, before it change the speech: giveth another heart, before another tongue: workes on the spirit, before on the phrase or utterance: ever, so. It is preposterous, and all out of order, to have the tongues come, before the wind; where they doe, it commonly falls out in such, all their religion is in common phrases and termes well got by heart, and nothing else. This for their joyning, and for their order.

I. Of the parts ſeverally.

Now of either, apart. Of the Spirit firſt, which they were filled with; After, of their filling; that is, [1] firſt of the Gift it ſelfe; [2] then of the Meaſure. That, they were filled with, is ſet downe in two words; [1] Spiritu and [2] Sancto. Firſt, that it was a ſpirit; then, that that ſpirit was holy. A ſpirit; for, men may be filled, and not with the ſpirit: Holy; for, there is a ſpiritu without ſancto. We muſt needs put the difference; Spirit and Holy, are two diverſe things.

I The Gift. 1 It was a Spirit.

A ſpirit, not An humour.

With the ſpirit: for, men may be filled, and not with the Spirit. That which enforceth this note, is, a ſpeech at the XIII. verſe; there, they ſticke not (ſome,) this, that was the Spirit indeed, to reproach with the terme of new wine: Theſe men are full (ſay they;) full, they grant: but, with wine, a liquor though full of ſpirit, yet no ſpirit though. It was falſe, as it fell out: yet, this it worketh, that if the Spirit may be taken for a humour, why not a humour for the Spirit likewiſe? And not the humour of the vine onely: but, the Philoſopher (in his Problemes) tels us, that looke whatſoever operation wine hath, the ſame have ſome humours in our bodies, with a little fermenting. The Prophet Eſay ſeemeth to ſay the ſame in two places: that men may be drunke, and not with wine; their owne humour will doe it as well.

Eſay 29. 9. 51. 21

I wiſh, it were not true, this: that humours were not ſometimes miſtaken, and miſ-termed the Spirit. A hot humour flowing from the gall, taken for this fire here, and termed (though untruly) the ſpirit of Zeale. Another windie humour proceeding from the ſpleene, ſuppoſed to be this Wind here, and they that filled with it (if no bodie will give it them) taking to themſelves the ſtyle of the godly brethren. I wiſh, it were not needfull, to make this obſervation. But, you ſhall eaſily know it, for an humour: Non continetur termino ſuo; It owne limits will not hold it. They are ever mending Churches, States, Superiours; mending all, ſave themſelves: alieno, non ſuo, is the note to diſtinguiſh an humour.

2 The Holy Spirit. Not our owne ſpirit.

With the ſpirit; yet, not every ſpirit. I told you, there was a ſpiritu without ſancto; and I meane not the wicked ſpirit (away with him, we will not once mention him;) but, two other: [1] There is a ſpirit in a man (ſaith [a] Elihu) that is, our owne ſpirit; and many there be, [b] qui ſequuntur ſpiritum ſuum, that follow their owne ghoſt, in ſtead of the HOLY GHOST: for, even that ghoſt taketh upon it, to inſpire, [c] and fleſh and bloud (we know) hath their revelations.

2 Not the Worlds ſpirit.

The other is, that the Apoſtle calleth [d] ſpiritum mundi, the worlds ſpirit (or worldly ſpirit) [e] qui poſuit mundum in corde ſuo (ſaith Salomon) hath ſet up and ſhrin'd the world in his heart: thence riſe all his reaſons, by them he frames and meaſures Religion. Vp ſhall the golden calves, to uphold the preſent eſtate: downe ſhall CHRIST, [f] ne veniant Romani, that the Romans come not, and carry us all away. Either of theſe is peradventure Sacer ſpiritus, as the Poet calleth auri ſacra fames; but neither is ſanctus. [g] Saint Peter oppoſeth the firſt (of private reſolution) to the HOLY GHOST: [h] Saint Paul the ſecond (of worldly wiſdome) to the Spirit of GOD. The wind (before) had foure qualities: two of them ([1] ſuddenneſſe, and [2] vehemencie) are paſſed by. Every wind, every ſpirit hath them. And commonly, other ſpirits are more violent, and make a greater noiſe, than the true ſpirit. The other two, [1] of comming from heaven, [2] comming for the Church; from the holy Heaven, to the holy Church; are both, in ſancto: and ſapere quæ ſurſum, being wiſe from thence, and regard to Religion and the Church; are the two beſt Characters to diſcerne the Holy Spirit by.

The Holy ſpirit, that is, His Graces.

Now ye will underſtand of your ſelves (I ſhall not need to tell you;) when we ſpeake of the Holy Spirit, as it filleth us, we meane not the Eſſence or Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, that filleth Heaven and earth (ſaith the Prophet;) and there is no going from it (ſaith the Pſalmiſt:) But onely certaine impreſſions of the Spirit. The Pſalmiſt calleth them Gifts (Pſal. LXVIII. XVIII.) The Apoſtle, Graces (I Cor. XII. VII.) which carry the name of their Cauſe: ſo that (in the Dialect or Idiom of the Scriptures) to be filled with them, is to be filled with the Spirit. To ſhew this, otherwhile they be joyned: the ſpirit and power of Elias (that is) the power of the ſpirit; the Wiſdome and ſpirit of STEPHEN, (that is) the wiſdome of the Spirit. Acts 6. 10.

And, becauſe theſe Gifts, and Graces be of many points (more Points of this Wind than there be of the Compaſſe) and as it were many ſpirits in one, ſix, (ſaith [a] Eſay;) ſeven, (ſaith [b] Saint Iohn:) they are all recapitulate under theſe two. 1 Vnder the Wind is repreſented the ſaving grace, which all are to have (ſo to ſerve GOD, that they may pleaſe Him;) as neceſſary to all, and without which, we can be no more, in our ſpirituall life, than we can, without our breath, in our naturall. This is generall to all. It is ſaid repleti ſunt omnes: the hearer muſt have it, as well as the ſpeaker. It muſt aire and drie up the ſuperfluitie of our nature; elſe, the fire will not kindle in us, but turne all to ſmoke. Of this Spirit are thoſe nine points (Gal. V. XXII.) [2] The other, (repreſented in the Tongues,) ſet forth unto us another kinde of Grace, principally meant and ſent for the benefit of others: given therefore in Tongues, which ſerve to teach; and in fire, which ſerveth to warme others: to ſhew, they are given and received, for the good of others, rather than of themſelves. And of this Spirit are the Points reckoned up, (I Cor. XII. VII.)

And now we know, what it was they were filled with, let us come to the meaſure, Repleti ſunt. It was not ſpiritus tranſiens, but implens: a wind, not that blew thorow them, (as it doth thorow many of us, I know not how oft) but, that filled them: they were the fuller for it. Which word [of filling] wanteth not his ſpeciall force: referre we it to their eſtate now, compared with what it was before, repleti ſunt; or to their eſtate in this point, compared with other ſince, and namely with our ſelves, Repleti ſunt illi.

2 The meaſure: Repleti ſunt.

With their owne eſtate firſt. For, there is no queſtion, they were not emptie or void of the Spirit, before this comming. They had not beene baptized by CHRIST; He had not breathed on them, and bid them receive the HOLY GHOST, in vaine: If, before this, they had dyed, none would have doubted of the eſtate of their ſoules. This filling then (firſt) ſheweth us, there be divers meaſures of the Spirit: ſome ſingle, ſome double portions, as appeareth by ELISA's petition: not all of one ſize or ſcantling. That, as there are degrees in the wind, Aura, ventus, procella; a breath, a blaſt, a ſtiffe gale: ſo are there in the Spirit. One thing, to receive the Spirit, as on Eaſter-day; another, as on Whit-ſunday. Then, but a breath: now, a mightie wind: then, but received it; now, filled with it. Sprinkled before, as with a few drops, Ezekiels ſtillabo Spiritum; but, now comes Ioels Effundam ſpiritum (which very Text is alleaged at the XXVIII. verſe after by Saint Peter) powred out plenteouſly, and they baptized (that is) plunged in it. Imbuti Spiritu, covered with ſome part of it; ſo were they before: here now, they be induti Spiritu, clothed all over with power from above, as CHRIST promiſed (Luke XXIV. XLIX.) To conclude: the HOLY GHOST came here (ſaith Leo) cumulans, non inchoans; nec novus opere, ſed dives largitate: rather, by way of augmenting the old, than beginning a new. Though (to ſay the truth) both wayes He came here. The rule of the Fathers is (Hierome and Cyrill have it) where the HOLY GHOST was before, and is ſaid to come againe, it is to be underſtood, one of theſe two wayes: 1 Either of an increaſe of the former, which before was had; [2] or, of ſome new not had before, but ſent now for ſome new effect. Breath they had before: breath and wind are both of one kinde: differ onely ſecundùm magis & minus: to be filled, is but to receive onely in a greater meaſure: therefore greater, becauſe their worke was now greater. Before, but to the loſt ſheepe of Iſrael: now to all the ſtray ſheepe in all the mountaines of the whole earth.

But, beſide that increaſe, here is a new forme too. Which is a ſigne of a new gift, utterly wanting in them before; and wherewith now, and never till now, they were furniſhed; to ſpeake to all nations, of all tongues under Heaven. Thus farre, compared with themſelves.

2 Repleti ſunt illi, with reference to others.

Now, repleti ſunt illi. Illi, with reference to others ſince, and (if you will) to our ſelves. They, in the ſucceeding ages, and we, to this day, receive the Spirit too, or elſe it is wrong with us. But, both they before us, ſhort of the Apoſtles; and we ſhort of them, by much. It fareth herein, as it doth in the powring forth of an ointment (the Pſalme ſo likeneth it:) No oyntment at the skirts, or edges of a garment, doth runne ſo freſh, and full, as on the head and beard, where it was firſt ſhed: ever, the further it goeth, the thinner and thinner the ſtreames be. Therefore it is ſaid, Repleti ſunt illi; and even illi wants not his force, they were filled, they. Wee, but a Hin, to their Epha; but an handfull, to their heape; but a rantiſme, to their Baptiſme. They filled; had as much, as they could hold: We have our meaſure, ſuch as it is; but, full we are not. None of us ſo full, but we could hold more.

1 Reaſon.

And, two reaſons there are rendred: 1 One, ſuch a Pentecoſt, as this, never was but this; never the like before, nor ſince. It was CHRISTS Coronation day, the day of placing Him in His Throne, when He gave theſe gifts unto men. That day, all magnificence was ſhewed, the like not to be looked for ever after.

2 Reaſon.

Then againe, to ſay truth, our taske-worke is not ſo great, that we need require ſuch a filling. We have to deale but with an handfull of men, in compariſon; and thoſe brought up in religion, and (as it were) broken, to our hands. They, with the fulneſſe of the Gentiles, all mankinde; wilde as then, and enraged; filled full of malice againſt them; and their doctrine by the evill ſpirit: that, they needed the good Spirit, to fill, to encounter ſuch oppoſition. The caſe (you ſee) differs much. It was happie for the world, they had this overflowing fulneſſe of the Spirit. It is enough for us, we have the meaſure ſpoken of, 2 Cor. 12. 9. Sufficit tibi gratia, grace ſufficient for us: and let that content us. And thus much for the commentary of the wind. Now, to the gloſſe of the tongues.

The gloſſe of the tongues. And they ſpake. * Pſal. 39. 3.

They were filled; and, in ſigne they were filled, it is added, they ranne over. The * fire was kindled in them, by this wind; and in ſigne thereof, they ſpake with their tongue. Indeed, pitie they ſhould be thus full, and have no meanes to vent it: have a ſpirit to fill, and not a tongue to empty, or impart it. Therefore, the tongues were requiſite. The wind would have ſerved them, if they had beene to be Chriſtians only: But, they were to be Apoſtles (that is, Ambaſſadors) and ſuch muſt have tongues, needs. But, two imperfections were in their tongues: 1 They were but ſingle: He cleft them, and made them able to deale with many. 2 Their tongues were wateriſh and weake: He gave them, the force and operation of fire, to kindle ſuch a light, as ſhould burne to the worlds end. In a word: where they knew neither how nor what to ſpeake, He gave them both: both ſicut, how; and ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, what: Hee gave them both, and ſo made them perfect Apoſtles. Theſe foure, 1 courage, 2 language, 3 diſcretion, and 4 learning.

The dependence of Repleti, and loquuti, their skill.

Firſt, a word of the dependance of Repleti, and loquuti: They were filled, and then they began to ſpeake. It is well, they began not before; but were filled firſt, and then ſpake after. This, is the right order. Somewhere, ſome fall a ſpeaking, I will not ſay before they be full, or halfe-full; but while they be little better than emptie, if not empty quite. There, is not repleti ſunt, & cæperunt loqui: cæperunt loqui begins the verſe with them; Repleti ſunt is skipped over. Ever, emptying preſuppoſeth filling: Repleti hath reference to the ciſterne; Loquuti to the cocke. The ciſterne would be firſt looked to, that it have water ſtore, before we be too buſie to ply the cocke; Elſe, follow we not the Holy Ghoſt's method: Elſe, it may be cæperunt loqui, but not ſicut dedit Spiritus: He giveth leave to none, to ſpeake, empty.

It is but a Grammar note (that of Hieromes) but it is to the purpoſe, upon the word quem docebo ſcientiam (Eſay 28.) that doceo, if it have his right, would have a double Accuſative: not onely, quem, whom (that is) an auditory; but ſcientiam, what (that is) knowledge.

knowledge. So as, he that hath not ſcientiam, ſhould not have quem; and they that get themſelves whom to teach, and have not ſcientiam what to teach, goe they never ſo oft into the Pulpit, it is not ſicut dedit Spiritus, the HOLY GHOST gave them neither miſsion nor commiſsion. He ever taketh order for repleti, before Hee giveth licence for cæperunt loqui.

And this for their skill. But, he that reades the Fathers writings, ſhall finde they referre this cæperunt loqui, no leſſe to their boldneſſe, than to their habilitie: began, not onely, poſſe, to be able, in reſpect of their skill, but audere, to dare, in regard of their courage. Before, neither courage, nor skill; now, both: that any man might ſee, there was a new ſpirit come into them. In ſaying [they began] it is, as if before they had beene tongue-tyed; had never ſpoken. No more they had: never, as they ſpoke now; never, with that confidence. Before, they did not ſpeake out, they durſt not; they ſpake betweene the teeth, hoarſly, as if they had loſt their voice. A poore Damoſell did but aske Saint Peter a queſtion, hee faultered preſently, could not ſpeake a right word. Every thing, then, tooke away their voice. But, after this mighty Wind, had filled them and blowen up the fire, and they warmed with it; then (ſaith Auguſtine) In omni prætorio, in omni Conſiſtorio, in every Iudgement-place, in every Conſiſtory, then, they ſpake what they had heard and ſeene, even before Kings, and were not abaſhed. It confirmed them; it gave them ſides, and ſtrength. Which ſo ſudden change, from ſo great puſillanimity, to ſo great courage and conſtancie, was ſure mutatio dexteræ Excelſi, a change wrought by the hand of the moſt High. No other hand could worke it.

1 Cæperunt loqui. Their courage.

Matth. 26. 69.

Pſal. 77. 10.

And (that we may know, that not onely the tongues wrought in them, but even the cleaving alſo had his effect) they began, not only to ſpeake; but, with other tongues: other, than ever they had learned. For, looke what tongue ſoever it was, beſide the Syriack, it was another tongue, it was not theirs: they had but one till now; any other, they could not skill of. But now, on a ſudden, Greeke, Latine, Arabicke, Perſian, Parthian, none came amiſſe: yet, never were they taught them; but came to them, as it were with a cleft onely. A great miracle, in it ſelfe: And a great inabling to them. For, by this meanes, every Apoſtle, looke how many tongues he could ſpeake, ſo many Apoſtles was he, as ſerving for ſo many ſundry men, as muſt elſe have beene uſed for the ſpeaking ſo many ſundry tongues, to ſo many ſundry Nations. Whereby, as the line of the Creator is ſaid to have gone into all Lands (Pſal. 19. 4.) ſo is the ſound of the Apoſtles ſaid likewiſe to have gone as farre (Rom. 10.) The one, to proclaime the creation; the other, the redemption of the world. And ſo, by ſpeaking all tongues, they have gathered a Church, that ſpeaketh all tongues; a thing much tending to the glory of GOD. For, being now converted to CHRIST, they ſend up daily to Heaven, ſo many tongues, there to praiſe His name; as He, this day, ſent downe to earth, to convert them withall to His truth. And indeed, it was not meet, one tongue onely ſhould be imployed that way, as (before) but one was: It was too poore, and ſlender; like the muſicke of a monochord. Farre more meet was it, that many tongues; yea, that all tongues ſhould doe it; which (as a conſort of many inſtruments) might yeeld a full harmony. In which, we behold the mighty Worke of GOD: that the ſame meanes of diverſe tongues, which was the deſtroying of Babel, the very ſame is here made to worke the building of Sion: that meanes, that ſcattered them, from the Tower of confuſion; the very ſame, to reduce them, to the fold of unity: that ſo, the curſe might be taken away, and a bleſſing come in place, the confuſed tongues being united into GODS glory; and there being neither ſpeech nor language, but His praiſe is heard among them. The Nations being once converted to the faith (moſt of them) this gift is ceaſed: ceaſed ſo farre, as by immediate inſpiration: though, in part to attaine it, by our endevours, and GODS bleſſing upon them, is found ſtill of good uſe. For, even to this day, it is holden for requiſite, there be one cleft (at leaſt) in the tongue; and we able to ſpeake one tongue more, than our mothers taught us. Better yet, if the cleft, which GOD hath made in His Word, in the tongues of the Old and New Teſtament, be in our tongues too. That, hath ſtill a neceſſary ſervice; and maimed are we, without it: For, we muſt (elſe) receive the embaſſage from GOD, by an Interpreter, which is not ſo convenient. But, enough of the cleft of the tongues.

2 Linguis, &c. Their language.

3 Their diſcretion. Sicut dedit ſpiritus.

Pſal. 45. 1.

Now, that this might not prove to vain-glory (as it did, after, in ſome at Corinth) it is well added, Sicut dedit Spiritus (which is the third:) that they began to ſpeake, not, as their owne vanity carried them, but as the HOLY GHOST directed them. Their tongue was but the pen; He, the Writer. His wind blew the fire, ſlaked it, and made it more or leſſe, as need was. The tongues ſate on them, and He in the tongues, holding (as it were) the reines in His hand; guiding and moderating their ſpeech; making them keepe time, meaſure, and manner: time, when; meaſure, how much; manner, how to ſpeake. Which Sicut is the gift of diſcretion; many times as much worth as dedit, the Gift it ſelfe. Sure, theſe are two: 1 Dedit is one thing, the Gift; 2 Sicut another, the vſe of the gift. To many is given to ſpeake, but not with the right Sicut. Two diſtinct things be they: and howſoever we doe with the one, we ſhall finde a needfull uſe of prayer to obtaine the other. We may begin to ſpeake when we pleaſe: but, who ſhall give us our Sicut? Sure, none but the Spirit: Of Him we muſt receive this, or elſe we ſhall never have. Let that ſuffice.

4 Their learning: As the Spirit gave them utterance.

Laſt then, that we miſtake not, what it was He gave them to ſpeake; (for, all this while, it is not ſaid, what.) That they began to ſpeake is ſaid; and wherewith, with other tongues; and how, as the Spirit gave them utterance. Leſt therefore wee might miſtake, it was quicquid in buccam, any thing that tooke them in the head, it skilled not what; he tels us, what it was, in the laſt word; that He gave them ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, Vtterance, we reade; it is of larger contents, a more pregnant word, and more full of ſignificancie.

They began to ſpeake as the Spirit gave them. Why not there ſtay, what needed any more? Yes: more (it ſeemes) needed; there goeth more unto it, than ſo. Speaking will not ſerve the turne: elſe, λαλῆσαι had beene enough, and not any word more put to it. He foreſaw, that to ſpeake, and only to ſpeake, would be enough for ſome. So we goe up for an houre and ſpeake, be it to the purpoſe or no, it is all one. For the common man it skils not, it contents him well enough: But, the HOLY GHOST is not content with λαλῆσαι: It is not every ſpeaking; but, a kinde of ſpeaking it muſt be, and that kinde is ἀποφθέγγεσθαι.

The Word, I wiſh well weighed. Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, the Interpreters (all) weigh it; and aſſure us, it is no ſlight, or light word, but verbum talenti, a word of weight, of a talent weight. To tell you, what it is: You have heard of Apophthegmes; (So doth both Greekes, and Latines call wiſe and weighty ſententious ſpeeches:) that word [Apophthegmes] is the true and proper derivative, of this ἀποφθέγγεσθαι here. Such the Spirit gave them to utter. Not the crudities of their owne braine, idle, looſe, undigeſted geere (GOD knoweth:) No, but pithy and wiſe ſentences: thoſe be ſicut dedit Spiritus, ſuch as the HOLY GHOST gave them. It is after ſaid (in the 11. Verſe) that by vertue of this, when they ſpake, they ſpake Magnalia: Magnalia, great and high Points; not Trivialia, baſe and vulgar ſtuffe, not worth the time it waſteth, and taketh from the hearer. Yet now, all is quite turned: and we are come to this, that this kinde of ſpeaking is onely from the Spirit of GOD: and the other (ſaid here to be given by the HOLY GHOST) is ſtudie, or affectation, or I wot not what; but, Spiritus non dedit, that is certaine.

Well, Saint Luke ſaith ἀποφθέγγεσθαι is that, the Spirit giveth. So ſaith Saint Paul, λόγῳ καὶ διδαχῇ, Speech according to learning: ſo Saint Peter, ſuch ſpeech as may ſeeme, or beſeeme the very oracles of GOD: as may worke light in the underſtanding, or fervour in the affection: thoſe two ſhew it fire. The fire of the Old Teſtament, the burning coale, wherewith the Seraphim touched Eſay's mouth, and gave him (as he ſaith) linguam eruditam, a learned tongue; not onely a tongue, but a learned tongue. As the fire of the Old; ſo, of the New. So (I am ſure) was our SAVIOVRS promiſe, Tit. 1. 9.

1 Pet. 4. 11.
Eſay 6. 7.
50. 4.

Dabo

Dabo vobis os & ſapientiam, He would give them a mouth and wiſdome. Not a mouth onely, but, a mouth and wiſdome. Put theſe two together, 1 a mouth and wiſdome, 2 and a learned tongue, and you know, what is ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, and you know what is meant by a tongue of fire. For, fire cannot ſpeake chaffe, it conſumes it (we ſee;) therefore, if it be chaffe, it is no firy tongue that ſpeakes it. Luke 21. 15.

And where it is required, that not onely the tongue have this fire, but that it ſit and bide by us; ſure it is, that volubility of utterance, earneſtneſſe of action, ſtraining the voice in a paſſionate delivery, Phraſes and figures, theſe all have their heat, but they be but blazes. It is the evidence of the Spirit, in the ſoundneſſe of the ſenſe, that leaves the true impreſſion: that, is the tongue, that will ſit by us; that, the fire, that will keep ſtill alive. The reſt come in paſſion; move for the preſent, make us a little ſermon-warme for the while; but, after, they flit and vaniſh, and goe their way; true marke leave they none. It is onely verba ſapientum clavi (ſaith the Wiſe-man) the wiſdome of the ſpeech, that is the naile, the naile red-hot, that leaveth a marke behinde, that will never be got out. Enough (I truſt) to ſerve them that doe λαλῆσαι, as their owne ſpirit; from them that doe ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, as the Spirit of GOD giveth them: and to ſtop their mouthes for ever, that call it not ſpeaking by the Spirit, unleſſe never a wiſe word be ſpoken. So have we the Gloſſe of the tongues: 1 The tongues themſelves in cæperunt loqui: 2 Cloven, in linguis aliis: 3 ſitting, in the Spirits ſicut: 4 Fire, in ἀποφθέγγεσθαι: the truth anſwering the type, in every point: ſhewing us, what was in them; and what they ſhould be, that hold their places: able to ſpeake more tongues than one; to ſpeake diſcreetly; and to ſpeake learnedly. Eccleſ. 12. 11.

And now, to draw to an end. Let us returne to our Pentecoſt-dutie, to glorifie GOD, for the HOLY GHOST thus ſent, theſe two wayes: 1 As the Spirit (within) filling; 2 As the tongues (without) uttering. The tongues, they are a peculiar to one kinde of men, though all now invade them, and talke even too much. Of them firſt. Where the Apoſtle expoundeth that of the Pſalme [Going up on high, Hee gave gifts unto men;] he tells us what thoſe Gifts were: He gave ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts: and he ſtayes not there, but tells us, that part of that Gift were Paſtors, and Teachers, whereof there were none at CHRISTS Aſcenſion, but they were ordained after, for the ſucceeding ages. Intending (as it ſeemeth) a part of our Pentecoſtall duty ſhould be, not onely to give thankes for them, He firſt ſent, on the very day; but even for thoſe, He ſent ever ſince; and for thoſe, He ſtill ſendeth, even in theſe dayes of ours. To thanke Him, for the Apoſtles; thanke Him for the ancient Doctors, and Fathers; thanke Him for thoſe we have, if we have any ſo much worth. And are theſe the Gifts, which CHRIST ſent from on high? was Saint Paul well adviſed? Muſt we keepe our Pentecoſt in thankſgiving for theſe? Are they worth ſo much, trow? we would be loth to have the Prophets way taken with us (Zach. XI.) that it ſhould be ſaid to us, as there it is: If you ſo reckon of them indeed, let us ſee the wages, you value them at; and when we ſhall ſee, it is but eight pound a yeare; and having once ſo much, never to be capable of more; may not then the Prophets ſpeech there well be taken up: A goodly price theſe high Gifts are valued at by you! And may not He juſtly (inſtead of Zachary, and ſuch as he is) ſend us a ſort of fooliſh ſhepherds; and ſend us this ſenſleſneſſe withall, that, ſpeake they never ſo fondly, ſo they ſpeake, all is well; it ſhall ſerve our turne as well as the beſt of them all? Sure, if this be a part of our duty, this day, to praiſe GOD for them, it is to be a part of our care too, they may be ſuch, as we may juſtly praiſe GOD for. Which, whether we ſhall be likely to effect, by ſome courſes as of late have beene offered, that leave I to the weighing of your wiſe conſiderations. The Application. Eph. 4. 8. 11, 12, 13. Zach. 11. 12.

¶ But leaving this, which is peculiar but to ſome, let us returne to the HOLY SPIRIT common to all, and how to be filled with it. A point which importeth every one of us: this day eſpecially; when firſt, certaine it is, we are not to content our ſelves (as Bernard well ſaith) quibuſvis anguſtiis, with every ſmall beginning, and there to ſticke ſtill; to thinke, if we have never ſo ſmall a breath of it, and that but once in all our life, that that is enough; we may ſit us downe ſecurely, and take no more thought; but rely upon that, for that will doe it: but to aſpire ſtill, as we may, nearer and nearer, to this meaſure here; and know, that repleti ſunt was not ſaid for nothing. Which how to doe, we may take ſome light from the Text. The two types, He came in, being bodily, ſerve to teach us, we are not to ſeeke after meanes meerely ſpirituall, for attaining it; but truſt, as here He viſited theſe, ſo will He us, and that per ſigna corporea (ſaith Chryſoſtome.) For had we beene ſpirit, and nothing elſe, GOD could and would immediatly have inſpired us that way: but conſiſting of bodies alſo (as we doe) it hath ſeemed to His Wiſdome moſt agreeable, to make bodily ſignes, the meanes of conveying the graces of His Spirit into us. And that, now the rather, ever ſince the Holy one Himſelfe and Fountaine of all holineſſe (CHRIST, the Son of GOD) partaketh of both body and Spirit; is both Word and fleſh. Thus it is: that, by the Word we are ſanctified, & per linguam verbi patrem (ſaith Chryſoſtome) even by thoſe tongues here, Ioh. XVII. XVII. But no leſſe, by His fleſh and body, Heb. X. X. And indeed, this beſt anſwereth the terme filling, which is proper to food; & Spiritus eſt ultimum alimenti, the uttermoſt perfection of nouriſhment. In which reſpect He inſtituted Eſcam ſpiritualem, ſpirituall food, to that end: ſo called ſpirituall, not ſo much for that it is received ſpiritually; as for that, being ſo received, it maketh us, together with it, to receive the Spirit, even potare Spiritum (it is the Apoſtles owne word.)

1 Cor. 10. 3. Ioh. 6. 63. 1 Cor. 12. 13.

In a word: our Penteceſt is to be, as theſe types here were. They were for both ſenſes: 1 The eare, which is the ſenſe of the Word; 2 and the eye, which is the ſenſe of the Sacrament, viſibile verbum, ſo it is called. Meant thereby, that both theſe ſhould ever goe together, as this day; and as the type was, ſo the truth ſhould be. And, for our example, we have themſelves and their practice in this very Chapter: who, on this Feaſt, joyned together the Word (at the XIV.) and the breaking of bread (at the XLII. verſe.) And ſo let us too: and truſt, that by filling up the meaſure of both types, wee ſhall ſet our ſelves in a good way, to partake the fulfilling of His promiſe, which is, to be endued with power from above, as they were: at leaſt, in ſuch ſort, as Hee knoweth meet for us.

Which Almightie GOD
grant wee may.

A SER

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITE-HALL, on the XXVII. of May, A. D. MDCX. being WHITSVNDAY.

IOHN CHAP. XIV. VER. XV. XVI.

Si diligitis Me, mandata mea ſervate,
Et ego rogabo Patrem, & alium PARACLETVM dabit vobis, ut maneat vobiſcum in æternum.

If yee love Me, keepe my Commandements,
And I will pray the FATHER, and He ſhall give you another COMFORTER, that He may abide with you for ever.

THEY are CHRISTS words to His Apoſtles: they touch the comming of the HOLY GHOST. Of whoſe comming this Text is a promiſe: A promiſe of a prayer to procure the Comforter ſent them. Which Comforter, who it is, is told us, verſe 26. the Comforter which is the HOLY GHOST. Let this be ſaid to the honour of it. An Angell ſerved to annunciate CHRISTS comming: No Angell would ſerve for this Annunciation; CHRIST Himſelfe did it: thought not Himſelfe too good to doe it. A ſpeciall high benefit therefore it is, we may be ſure. And this Comforter (the HOLY GHOST) was by the Father ſent, and by them received; and ſo, the prayer heard, and the promiſe performed all as as this day. Which day we yearely hold holy in thankfull remembrance of the Holy Ghost promiſed to be ſent, and ſent.

The Holy Ghost is the Alpha and Omega of all our ſolemnities. In His comming downe, all the Feaſts begin; at His Annunciation, when he deſcended on the Bleſſed Virgin: whereby the SONNE of GOD did take our nature, the nature of man. And, in the Holy Ghoſts comming they end, even in His deſcending this day upon the 2 Pet. 1. 4. ſonnes of men; whereby they actually become partakers θείας φύσεως of His nature, the nature of GOD. Of which His laſt and great comming, in this Text is the promiſe, and at this time the performance: that, as Promiſe and Performance, ſo the Text and time agree.

Every promiſe is glad tidings; but every promiſe is not Goſpell: nor is it good to make a Text of it, while it is in ſuſpence: But, when it is dixit & factum eſt, ſo ſaid and ſo done, then it is a Goſpell, and may be preached on. Being then made good this day, the Church hath made it the Goſpell of this day; it being Feſtum ſolutionis, the Feaſt whereon it was to be, and whereon it was paid.

This promiſe grew thus. They were to be deprived of CHRISTS preſence: He to be gone. They were troubled with: troubled at the very heart. In that ſtate, they needed comfort. A Comforter He promiſeth them. His promiſe is in manner of a Deed; not abſolute, but as it were with Articles on both parts per modum Syngraphæ. A Covenant on His part; A Condition on theirs. He covenants two things: the one ſuppoſed, love: If ye love me. The other impoſed, Then keepe my Commandements. Theſe two on their part well and truely performed and kept, He ſtands bound to pray, and praying to procure them a Comforter, another in His ſtead: And, that they might not be every other while to ſeeke for a new, one that ſhould not leave them, as He did, but abide with them for ever.

Many are the benefits that come to us by the HOLY GHOST; and ſo, His titles many: He is here expreſſed in the title of a Comforter. Comfort never comes amiſſe: but it is moſt welcome to men in their eſtate (here) troubled in minde. It may be, our eſtate is not yet, as theirs was; and we have our terrenas conſolatiunculas, which yet ſerve our turne well enough. But, there is none of us, but the day will come, when we ſhall need Him and His comfort. It will be good to looke after Him:
Act. 2. 15. and the ſooner, the better. He came here (we ſee) before the third houre of the day, that is, nine in the morning: let us not put Him off, till nine at night. It will be too Matth. 25. late, to ſeeke for our oyle, when the Bridegroome is comming.

Thoſe Articles were here drawne, for them: but, he that liketh the ſame conditions, may have title to the ſame covenant to the worlds end. For, to the worlds end, this covenant here holdeth; and the HOLY GHOST offered to be ſent (though not in viſible manner, as this day; it was meet, it ſhould be, with ſome ſolemnitie at His firſt comming for the more credit, yet) ſenſibly to them, that receive Him. No day excepted: yet, this day pleadeth a ſpeciall intereſt.

It will then not be amiſſe, if we take inſtructions, what is required on both parts, ſo many as are deſirous to be partakers of His heavenly comfort, which (I truſt) is the deſire of us all, that ſo with comfort we may celebrate this Feſtum Paracleti, this Feaſt of the Comforter.

The Diviſion Thus, they will riſe to be treated of. 1. The condition firſt: 1 Their Love,
I. 2 their looking to His Commandements keeping. 2. Then the Covenant: 3 CHRISTS
II. interceſſion: 4 His Fathers giving: 5 Giving the Comforter: 6 Another Comforter. Where, both will come to be touched: but, His diverſitie. 7 At laſt His perpetuitie, or abode with them for ever.

The

THe Condition ſtands firſt, as firſt commended to our care. For, of our part we had need have care: On His, we need not. And, let me ſay this of it: No condition could have beene deviſed more proper and fit for this Feaſt: Both parts of it. Firſt, if you love me, Love; and this is Feſtum charitatis, the Feaſt of Love; and He, whoſe the Feaſt is (the Holy Ghoſt) Love it ſelfe, the eſſentiall love and love-knot of the two perſons of the God-head, Father and Sonne. The ſame the love-knot betweene GOD and Man; and yet more ſpecially betweene CHRIST and His Church. Properly, as faith referreth to CHRIST the Word; So doth Love, to the Spirit, and comfort to Love. It is the Apoſtle: Si quod ſolatium charitatis, If there be any comfort, it is in Love. What condition could be more fit?

I. The condition.

Phil. 2. 1.

And the ſecond is like to it; as fit every way: Keepe my Commandements. For yee ſhall reade in Exodus, that, at this Feaſt of Pentecoſt, the Commandements were given. The very Feaſt it ſelfe inſtitute, in remembrance of the Law then given: then very meet they be remembred of them at this Feaſt. And the HOLY GHOST ſent, inter alia, that they may be written not in ſtone, but in their hearts; not with the letter, but, with the Spirit: and the Spirit not of feare, but love; as, by whom the love of GOD is ſhed abroad in our hearts. Which love is the fulfilling of the Commandements, and they all abridged in this one word Diliges. So, whether we regard the Feaſt, or the Perſon, or the Office of Him to whom we hold the Feaſt, the Condition is well choſen.

Rom. 13. 10.

To begin then with the firſt: If ye love me. Love is not ſo fit here, as If is unfitting. For, If, is as if there were ſome if, ſome doubt in the matter; whereof, GOD forbid there ſhould be any. It would be without if. Thus rather: Foraſmuch as you love me, Keepe my, &c. That they and we love Him, I truſt, ſhall not need to be put in Hypotheſi--Et erat tum dignus amari: ſeeing He is ſo well worthy our love, that we too blame, if we endure any if, any queſtion to be made of it.

1 Love.

It grieveth me to ſtand long on this condition; to make an If of it, at Pentecoſt. Take the Feaſts all along, and ſee, if by every one of them, it be not put paſt If. Chriſtmas-day; for us, and for our love He became fleſh, that we might love Him, becauſe like us He tooke our nature on Him. New-yeares day; knowing no ſinne, He was made ſinne for us, ſealed the bond with the firſt drops of His bloud; wherewith the debt of our ſinne light upon Him. Candlemas day; He was preſented in the Temple, offered as a live oblation for us, that ſo the obedience of His whole life might be ours. Good-friday; made a ſlaine ſacrifice on the Croſſe that we might be redeemed by the benefit of His death. Eaſter-day; opened us the gate of life, as the firſt fruits of them that riſe againe. Aſcenſion-day; opened us the gate of Heaven; thither, as our fore-runner entered, to prepare a place for us. And this day ſeales up all by giving us ſeiſin of all He hath done for us, by His Spirit ſent downe upon earth. And after all this, come yee in with If ye love me? Shall we not out with Si, ſtrike out (If) and make the condition abſolute? Shall we not to Saint Pauls If, If any man love not the LORD IESVS, let him be Anathema Maranatha, All ſay, Let him be ſo?

Iohn 1. 14.

2 Cor. 5. 21.

Luke 2. 22.

1 Cor. 15. 20.

Heb. 6. 20.

1 Cor 16. 22.

If we love them that love us, what ſingular thing doe wee, ſince the very Publicans doe the like? That, if our love be but as the Publicans, there would be no If made of it, for He loved us.

Matth. 5. 46.

And not becauſe we loved Him, but He loved us firſt. Et nulla major ad amorem provocatio quàm prævenire amando: Nimis enim durus eſt, qui amorem etſi nolebat impendere, nolit rependere. No more kindly attractive of love, than in loving to prevent: For, too hard metall is he of, that though he like not to love firſt, will not requite it and love againe, either firſt or ſecond.

Specially;

1 Iohn 3. 1. Iohn 15. 13. Specially, ſince His love was not little, but ſuch as Saint Iohn makes an Ecce quantam Charitatem of, ſee how great love ! How great ? So, as none greater. For, greater love hath no man, than this, to give his life for his friends. No man greater, but He: For His was beyond. To give His life, is but to die any ſort of death; But morte crucis, to die as He died, that is more. And, for ſuch as were His friends is much: Rom. 5. 10. But, cum inimici eſſemus, is a great deale more. And yet is it If? Put it to the Prophets queſtion, quid debuit facere? And adde to it (if yee will) quid debuit pati? What Eſay 5. 4. ſhould He have done, and what ſuffered? If He did it not, if He ſuffered not, make an If of His love: but, if He did both, out with it.

But the Publican will be the Publican, and the world the world: their love is mercenary ſale ware; ſi nihil attuleris, no profit, no love. To take away that If, even thither He will follow us, and apply Himſelfe to that. And if we wil make port-ſale of our love, and let it goe by who gives more; He will out-bid all. All, by the laſt word, In æternum. For, whatſoever we may have here, if it were a kingdome, it is not for ever. But this Comforter that ſhall abide with us, is but a pledge of that bliſſe and Kingdome of His wherein wee ſhall abide with Him eternally. Let any offer more for our love, and carry it.

Verily, Bonum, ſi non amatur, non cognoſcitur, ſaid the Heathen. But more true of CHRIST, If we love Him not, we know Him not. If we did but know, what He is in Himſelfe; what, to us: what He hath alreadie done, what He is readie to doe for us ſtill, wee would take it evill, a caſe ſhould be put, and yeeld to it without more adoe.

Why ſo wee doe: take it evill, an if is made: yeeld to it, wee love Him all. Yet great reaſon there was, we ſhall ſee, CHRIST ſhould ſo put it, being to inferre the ſecond. For, at that, there will be ſome ſticking: which would not be, if we were not defective in this former, of love. If our love were not light, His Commandements would not be heavie. If love were as it ſhould be, nothing is heavie to it. Amor erubeſcit nomen difficultatis, Love endures not the name of difficultie, but ſhames to confeſſe any thing too hard for it. De internis affirmare tutum (ſaith the Heathen) It is ſafe affirming of any thing, within us, where no man can convince us; for, none is privie to it but our ſelves. How many ſhall we heare ſay, I have ever affected, wiſhed you well, borne you good will, and never a word true. Foraſmuch then, as 1 Iohn 4. 20. there be two loves (ſaith Saint Iohn) one in word and tongue, and that is feined; and another in deed and truth, and that is right: and that CHRIST conditioneth not, If ye ſay ye love me; but if ye love mee indeed: We muſt come to Saint Iames Iames 2. 18. aſſay, Oſtende mihi, ſhew me thy faith: and as well, ſhew me thy love, by ſome oſten-ſive ſigne. So did CHRIST to us. Ecce quantam charitatem oſtendit ! Behold how 1 Iohn 3. 1. great love (not, He verbally proteſted, but) really ſhewed! and ſo, they to doe the like; to ſhew it.

Why, thus they ſhew it: He is going away, and they be very ſad for it: which ſheweth, they love Him, and would keepe Him ſtill. But, that may be a ſigne, they love themſelves, in that they are to have ſome good by His ſtay with them.

That may deceive you. But, will you have a ſigne infallible? Take this: His Commandements. His Word. He that keepes it, loves Him: true in the affirmative. He that keepes it not, loves Him not: true in the negative. This then is the ſecond condition: If yee love Me (not, keepe Me ſtill; but) Keepe My Commandements. Let your heart be troubled, not, if yee keepe not Me, but, if you keepe not them: Not, if not Mee; Mee, that is, My fleſh: but, not Mee; Mee, that is, My Word, whereof the Commandements are an abſtract. The Word is the better part of Mee, better than My fleſh: ſtrive to keepe that, be troubled, for not keeping that; and then, your love is paſt If, true indeed.

And is this the other part of the condition? This ſomewhat troubleth us: for who can doe this, keepe the Commandements? as good condition with us, to flye or walke, walke on the Sea. We are even as well able to doe the one, as the other. So, upon the matter, all this promiſe fals out to prove nothing: the Condition cannot bee kept, and ſo, the Covenant voide. NO HOLY GHOST, or Comforter to be hoped for, or had: we are but deluded.

Deluded! GOD forbid: CHRIST loves us too well, to delude us. Hee will never doe it. A melius inquirendum would be had, to looke a little better into it, and not ſo lightly loſe our intereſt in ſuch a gift as the Holy Ghoſt. It ſtands us ſo in hand to get the condition made good: elſe we forfeit our eſtate in the promiſe.

If we be to be releeved, it is, by the word Mea; that they be His. And ſome alteration there is plainely in them, by Him, and His comming. It is not ſaid, for nought (and that, by way of oppoſition) that the Law came by Moſes, but grace came by Him, and grace for grace; that is, not onely grace active which we receive, which releeveth us in the keeping them; but grace paſsive too, which we finde with Him, which releeves in abating the rigor, when we are called to accompt about them. You ſhall finde an alteration, in this very point. The Apoſtles would not preſſe the Gentiles to be circumciſed: being circumciſed, Saint Paul teſtifieth, they become debters, to keepe the whole Law: A yoke (ſaith Saint Peter) that neither they (the Apoſtles) nor their fathers were able to beare, it was ſo heavy. This, as they came by Moſes. But after CHRIST, with His grace, came; and His grace with Him; when they came to be His, Mandata Ejus (ſaith Saint Iohn) gravia non ſunt, they are not heavy. And Himſelfe, that beſt knew the price of it, ſaith plainely of His yoke, that it is eaſie, and it were hard to gaine-ſay Him.

1 Ioh. 5. 3.

This qualifying then groweth two waies: 1. One, that the Law, at the very giving it by Angells, was (ſaith Saint Paul) ordinata in manu Mediatoris, ordained to be in the Mediators hand (that is, CHRIST) whoſe hands are not ſo heavy, as Moſes were. 2. The other, that Pater omne judicium dedit Filio (ſaith Himſelfe) His Father hath made Him Iudge of the keeping or not keeping them. All judiciall power and proceeding concerning them, is committed over to Him.

Gal. 3. 19.

By the firſt, that they are ordained to be in His hand, He may take them into His hands when He will; and having them in His hands, order them and eaſe them as pleaſeth Him. Lex in manu Mediatoris, is it we muſt hold by. If a bruiſe in the reed, Moſes would breake it quite. If the flax ſmoake and flame not out, he would quench it ſtraight. So will not He: His hand will not breake the one; nor His foot tread on the other. To Mary Magdalen, He ordained, that fecit quod potuit ſhould ſerve, and He would require no more. Credo Domine, adjuva incredulitatem meam, I beleeve Lord, helpe my unbeleefe, a beleefe mixed with unbeleefe, would never have endured Moſes aſſay: In manu Mediatoris, it did well enough. Thus He ordained; he that neither doth them, nor prepareth himſelfe, Non fecit, neque præparavit (Luc. 12.) he ſhall be puniſhed: But if he prepare, ſtirre up himſelfe, have a care, a reſpect unto them that (it ſeemeth) in manu Mediatoris, will be taken. That if there be (ſaith the Apoſtle) prompta voluntas, a ready will; a man ſhall be accepted according to that, he hath; and not according to that, he hath not. For, the Mediator is man, and hath had experience of mans infirmities: He knoweth our metall and our mould; and what our condition will beare. He knoweth, there is that conflict in us, we cannot doe what we would. And indeed, why ſhould concupiſcence to evill be reputed ſinne, on the worſe part; and a like deſire (concupivi deſiderare mandata tua) not be as well reckoned, for as much on the better part, though it be not full out according to the purification of the Sanctuarie? Thus, as, in His hands ordained.

Heb. 4. 15. 5. 2.

Pſal. 119. 40.

Then againe, as, in His Court, to be judged. For, the Court may alter the matter much, as with us here it doth. Sedens in ſolio juſtitiæ (as, to ſome) in His tribunall ſeat of ſtrict juſtice, there ſitting, ſentence will proceed otherwiſe, than Si adeamus thronum gratiæ, if we have acceſſe to Him in His throne of grace, where we may obtaine mercie and finde grace. And S. Iames brings us good tydings, that Super-exaltat, &c. the throne of grace is the Higher Court; and ſo an Appeale lieth thither, to whom he will admit. To cruell men (ſaith He) there ſhall be judgement without mercie: which ſheweth, judgement with mercie ſhall be to ſome other, to whom He will vouchſafe it.

Heb. 4. 16. Iam. 4. 13.

And thus, it muſt ſtand upon Mea, and Manu Mediatoris, and the throne of grace, or elſe, even thoſe here (the Apoſtles) it will goe wrong with them, they will hardly be releeved in their claime of a Comforter. For, within twentie foure houres and leſſe, it came indeed to an If, their love: They loved Him not ſo well, but they loved their owne ſafety better: fell away, and fled away, and denied Him; even he, that ſaid he loved Him beſt.

Matt. 26. 33. 69.

And what, kept they His Commandemants? Sinned they not? In multis, omnes (ſaith Saint Iames) in many things, all: and if they ſhould ſay otherwiſe (ſaith Saint Iohn) that they had no ſinne (not, they were ſomewhat proud, and there were no humilitie, but) they were very liers, and there were no truth in them. So that, keeping the Commandements, and having of ſinne, muſt ſtand together, or elſe they kept them not.

Iam. 3. 2. [1 Ioh. 1. 8.

But, this they kept (and ſo may we too;) they were troubled, their hearts were troubled for not keeping them: and at the throne of grace, that was accepted; and the not keeping not reckoned a breach of the Commandement, if we be troubled for it.

Againe (as, well ſaith Saint Auguſtine) Amongſt His Commandements this is one, which we muſt not faile duely to keepe; and that is, the Commandement of daily praying Dimitte nobis, forgive us our not keeping, which helpes all the reſt. We keepe (Lord) helpe our not keeping, as well as I beleeve (Lord) helpe my unbeleefe. A true endeavour with an humble repentance (for ſo he reſolves) and then Omnia mandata facta deputantur, quando quod non fit ignoſcitur: All are accounted as kept, when, what is not, is pardoned out of His mercie; and ſo the reſt rewarded out of His bounty; that alloweth a daies wages for an houres worke, as to them that came at the eleventh houre to the vineyard, that is, at five of the clocke after noone. This will it be with us in hope: Thus was it with them. For, the Covenant held, and the Prayer went forward, and the Comforter came notwithſtanding.

II. The Covenant.

Now to CHRISTS part. Rogabo Patrem & dabit: that CHRIST will pray, and His Father give. And there is nothing more effectually ſheweth, they were ſhort in their Condition, than theſe two words, [1] Rogabo, and [2] Dabit. The Father ſhall give: It is His free gift, not due debt; upon deſert of the former. And Dabit roganti give it to Chriſts prayer, rather for Rogation weekes ſake with Him, than for any worke of Supererogation with them. But, it commeth from GODS bounty, and CHRISTS entreaty; without which, our love and commandement-keeping would not carry it: They are not ſufficient to weigh it down pondere meriti; it muſt come rogatu Chriſti, or not at all. Then, not to leane on them: CHRIST it is, and His interceſſion, we take to. Not, you ſhall love, and keepe my Commandements, and then my Father ſhall be bound; but, and then CHRIST ſhall pray and the Father will give, if Chriſt pray; and not otherwiſe.

But, a doubt here ariſeth: May we love Chriſt, or keepe His Commandements, before we have the Holy Ghoſt, without whom firſt had, it is certaine, wee can doe neither? How ſhall we love Chriſt or keepe His commandements, that we may receive the HOLY GHOST, when, unleſſe we firſt receive, we can neither love Him nor keepe them, nay not ſo much as ſay, IESVS is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt? Nay, not ſo much as thinke that, or any other thought that is good? How ſaith He then, Keepe and I will give, when He muſt give or we cannot keepe?

This ſcruple will ſoone be removed by Habenti dabitur. A promiſe may be made tam habenti quàm non habenti, as well to Him that hath a thing already, as to him that hath it not at all. To him that hath it already, in a lower or leſſe; may be promiſed to have it in a more ample meaſure or more high degree, than yet he hath: or to him, that hath it in one kinde, that he may have it in ſome other. To all (ſave Chriſt) the Spirit

Matt. 13. 12.

Spirit is given in measure: Where there is measure, there are degrees: where there be degrees of more and lesse, the more may well be promised to him that hath the lesse. To him that hath it in the degree of warme breath, it may well be promised in tongues of fire. To him that hath it as the first fruits, which is but an handful, it may well be promised as in the whole sheaf, which filleth the bosome. But (that which is more agreeable to this Text here) we consider the Spirit (as S. Peter) multiformem; the Spirit, in his graces; or the graces of the Spirit, as of many kinds. Of many kinds; for, our wants and defects are many. Not to go out of the Chapter: In the very next words, He is called the Spirit of truth: and that is one kind of grace, to cure us of error. In the XXVI. verse after, the Spirit of holinesse, which is His common name, which serveth to reduce us from a morall honest life, to a holy, and wherein the power of Religion doth appeare. And heere He is termed the Comforter, and that is against heavinesse and trouble of minde. To him that hath Him as the Spirit of truth, which is one grace, He may be promised as the Spirit of holinesse, or comfort, which is another. It is well knowne, many partake Him, as the spirit of truth in knowledge, which may well be promised them (for sure, yet they have Him not) as the Sanctifying Spirit. And both these waies may He be had of some, who yet are subject to the Apostles disease here, heavy and cast downe, and no cheerefull spirit within them. So, they were not cleane destitute of the Spirit at this promise making, but had Him; and so well might love Him, and in some sort keepe His commandements, and yet remaine capable of the promise of a Comforter for all that. So that, CHRIST may proceed to His Prayer, that His Father would send them the Comforter.

Ioh. 3.34.

3 CHRISTS Intercession.

Where, we beginne with matter of faith. For, we have here the Article offered to us and set downe in the three Persons, 1 Ego, 2 Ille, and 3 Alium: 1 I, 2 He and 3 Another. 1 I will pray the Father, that is, CHRIST the Sonne. 2 And He shall give it, that is, the Father (His Person is named.) 3 Alium, another third Person besides, that is, Paracletum the HOLY GHOST. 1 One praying; 2 the other prayed to; 3 the third prayed for. 1 Filius orans; 2 Pater donans; 3 Spiritus consolans. The Sonne praying; the Father granting; the Spirit Comforting: A plaine distinction.

And CHRISTS prayer sets us to seeke His other nature. For here He intreats, as inferiour to His Father, in state of man: But (in the twentie sixe verse) as equall to His Father, in the nature of GOD, joynes in giving with like authoritie. Rogabo, as Man: Dabo, as GOD.

Finding the Father giving here, and the Sonne giving there, we have the proceeding of the HOLY GHOST from both; quem mittet Pater, whom the Father shall send, in the twentie sixt of this; quem ego mittam, whom I will send, in the twenty sixt of the next. Called therefore the Spirit of the Father (*Mat.*10.20.) and againe called the Spirit of the Sonne (*Gal.*4.6.) the Spirit of both, as sent and proceeding from both.

And last the equalitie of the Holy Ghost. For, sending and procuring, He must send and procure them one equall to Himselfe; as good every way; or else, they had changed for the worse, and so pray Him to let His prayer alone; they were better as they were; they shall be at a losse.

CHRIST will pray: and if He pray, great likely-hood there is, He will speed. He that is sued to, is easie to intreate; He is a Father: and He that doth sue is gratious to prevaile, He is a Sonne. Pater à Filio rogatus, great odds, the suit is halfe obtained, yer begunne. Specially, His suit being not faint or cold, but earnest and instant, as it was. He sued by word, and it was clamore valido, with strong crying in an high key: & lachrymis, and He added teares (saith the Apostle) and they have their voice. And yet staid not there, but His bloud speakes too; cries higher and speakes better things than the bloud of Abel. And the effect of His prayer, was not only Pater condona, Father forgive them; but Pater dona, Father give them the Holy Spirit to teach, sanctifie

Heb. 5.7.

12.24, Luc. 23.34.

ſanctifie and comfort them (Chap. XVII. XVII.) This was His prayer; and His prayer prevailed: as good as His word He was. His Father ſhould ſend, He ſaid; and His Father did ſend, and the HOLY GHOST came: witneſſe this day.

5 Giving the Comforter.

And came in that ſort, He undertooke: even in that kind, whereof they had moſt need: (moſt welcome to them, as their caſe then ſtood:) under the terme of Paracletus a Comforter. If we aske, Why under that terme? To ſhew the peculiar end for which He was ſent, agreeable to the want of their private eſtate, to whom He was ſent.

If they had beene perplexed, He would have prayed for the Spirit of truth. If in any pollution of ſinne, for the ſanctifying Spirit. But they were (as Orphans) caſt downe and comfortleſſe: Triſtitia implevit cor eorum, their hearts full of heavineſſe: no time, to teach them now, or frame their manners: they were now to be put in heart. The Spirit of truth or holineſſe would have done them ſmall pleaſure. It was comfort, they wanted; a Comforter to them was worth all.

Many good bleſſings come to us by the Holy Ghoſts comming: and the Spirit in any forme, of truth or holineſſe (or what we will) by all meanes worthy to be received, even all His gifts: but a gift in ſeaſon goes beyond all; carrieth away the name from all the reſt. Every gift then, in his time. When troubled with erroneous opinions, then the Spirit of truth: when aſſaulted with tentations, then the Spirit of holineſſe: but, when appreſſed with fear or ſorrow, then is the time of the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter. Sorrow doth chill, and make the ſpirits congeale: therefore He appeareth in fire, to give them warmth; and in a tongue the inſtrument of comfort, by miniſtring a word in due ſeaſon; and cloven, that it might meet with diſmayes of all ſorts, and comfort them againſt all.

And ſo did it: and that apparently. For, immediately upon the receiving it, they were thought to be full of new wine. That, was but an errour: but ſo comforted they were, as before being exceeding fearefull, they grew exceeding full of courage and Act. 5. 41. Spirit; ſo as, even when they were ſcourged piteouſly, ibant gaudentes, they went away, not patiently induring, but even ſenſibly rejoycing; not as men evill intreated, but as perſons dignified, having got a new dignitie, to be counted worthy to ſuffer for CHRIST'S Name.

6 Another Comforter.

A Comforter then: and two things are added: [1] Alium, and [2] qui manebit in æternum. [1] Another comforter, and [2] that ſhall abide with them for ever. Both which are verified of Him, even in regard of CHRIST: but much more in regard of other earthly, fleſhly, worldly comforts and Comforters whatſoever. Another: which word preſuppoſes one beſides: ſo that two there be. [3] One they have already: and now another they ſhall have (which is no evill newes.) For thus in ſtead of a ſingle, they finde a double comfort. But both they needed.

This ſets us on worke to finde the firſt: and we ſhall not need to ſeeke far for Him. Speake to them of a Comforter, and they underſtood it not but of CHRIST: all their comfort in Him: loſe Him and loſe all. Indeed, CHRIST was one:
1 Ioh. 2. 1. was and is ſtill. And the very terme of Paracletus is given Him by S. John: and though it there be turned an Advocate, upon good reaſon; yet the word is the ſame in both. CHRIST had beene their Comforter, while He was their Bridegroome
Matt. 9. 15. and they the children of the Bride-chamber. But, expedient it was, He ſhould goe, for, expedient it was, they had one in heaven; and expedient with all, they had one in earth, and ſo another in His ſtead.

1 For the firſt: even now abſent, He is our Comforter ſtill, that way, we named Apoc. 12. 10. right now: that is, our Advocate, to appeare for us before GOD, there to anſwer the ſlanderous allegations of him that is the accuſer of us and our brethren. And a comfort it is, and a great Comfort, to have a good Advocate there, in our abſence: For, then we be ſure, our cauſe ſhall take no harme.

2 But ſecondly. If as an Advocate, He cannot defend us, becauſe the accuſation oft
Ioh. 5. 45. falleth out to be true, if Moſes accuſe us too; yet a ſecond comfort there is, that as a

High

High-Prieſt for ever. He is entered into the holy places made without hands, there by His interceſſion, to make atonement for them as Sinners, whoſe innocencie, as an Advocate, He cannot defend. Heb. 7. 17. 9. 11.

3 And to both theſe, He addeth a third, at the beginning of this Chapter: That His leaving them, is but to take up a place for them, to be ſeazed of it in their names, whom, He will certainely come againe and receive to it; there, to be for ever with Him. Verſe 2.

And in the meane time, He will take order, we ſhall have ſupply of another: in abſence of His body, the ſupply of His Spirit. That if we looke up, we have a Comforter in heaven, even Himſelfe: and if we looke downe, we have a Comforter on earth, His Spirit: and ſo are at an anchor in both.

For, as He doth in heaven, for us; So doth the Spirit on earth in us, frame our petitions and make interceſſion for us, with ſighes that cannot be expreſſed. And, as CHRIST is our Witneſſe in heaven; ſo is the Spirit here on earth, witneſſing with our Spirits that we pertaine to the adoption, and are the children of GOD. Evermore in the midſt of the ſorrowes that are in our hearts with His comforts refreſhing our ſoules. Yet not filling them with falſe comforts; but (as CHRISTS Advocate here on earth) ſoliciting us daily, and calling upon us, to looke to His Commandements and keepe them; wherein ſtandeth much of our comfort, even in the teſtimonie of a good conſcence. And thus theſe two; this one, and this other; this ſecond, and that firſt yeeld plentifull ſupply to all our wants. Rom. 8. 25. 26. Rom. 8. 16.

A ſecond note of difference, is in the tenure they ſhall have of this other; that He ſhall ſtay with them ſtill; which, of CHRIST they had not. For, this is the griefe; when wee have one that is our comfort, that we cannot hold Him: and this their feare, that when they have another, ſtill they ſhall be changing, and never at any certainty. Chriſt, as man, they could not keepe. Given He was by the father; but, given for terme of yeares; that terme expired, He was to returne. Therefore His abode is (Chap. 1. ver. 14.) expreſſed by the word ἐσκήνωσεν, the ſetting up of a Tent or Tabernacle to bee taken downe againe, and removed within a ſhort time: No dwelling of continuance. But, the HOLY GHOST ſhall continue with us ſtill, and therefore He is allowed a Temple, which is permanent, and never to be taken downe. We have in Him, a ſtate of perpetuitie, to our endleſſe comfort. 7 To abide for ever. 1 Cor. 3. 16. 6. 19.

Howbeit, it may well be thought, Alium and manebit in æternum, are not put ſo much, for Chriſt, to make a difference from Him; as for theſe ſame other terrenæ conſolatiunculæ, petie poore comforts and ſolaces of the world: which GOD hath given us and wee may uſe; but we muſt looke after Paracletum alium, another and another manner Comforter, when all is done. For, of theſe, it may be, we ſhall feele ſome comfort, while we be in health and meetly good eſtate, and in caſe not much to need it. But, let us come into their caſes here, the heart troubled, the minde oppreſſed, the Spirit wounded; and then, what earthly thing will there be, can miniſter any ſound comfort to us? It will not be: we muſt needs ſeeke for this Paracletum alium here, at any hand. What ſpeake I of the mind? If but ache come into a joynt, we know, we have tried them and found them, they are not able to drive away the leaſt paine from the leaſt part. And how then, when ſickneſſe commeth, and ſorrow, and the pangs of death, what comfort in theſe? Comfort! Nay ſhall we not finde diſcomfort in the bitter remembrance of our intemperate uſing them, and little regard of the true Comforter? Shall we not finde them (as Iob found his friends) like winter-brookes, full of raine in winter, when no need of it, when it raines continually; but, in Summer, when need is, not a drop in them. So, when our ſtate of body and mind is, that we can ſuſtaine our ſelves without it, then (perhaps) ſome they yeeld: but, when ſorrow ſeazeth on the heart, then none at all. In the end, we ſhall ſay to them as he did, miſerable comforters are ye all. Wherefore another comforter we are to ſeeke, that may give us eaſe in our diſeaſe of the minde, and in the midſt of all our ſorrowes and ſufferings make us ire gaudentes, goe away rejoycing. No other will doe it but this: that, when we have Him, we need looke no further. Iob 6. 15 16. Iob 16. 2.

The other is likewiſe a difference: of ſtaying with us for ever. For ever? the weak poore comfort we have by the creatures here (ſuch as it is) we have no hold of it: it ſtayes not, not for ever, nay, not for any long time. There be two degrees in it: 1 Non in æternum, that is too plaine; 2 Nay, not manent nobiſcum, they ſtay not with us: fugiunt a nobis, they fly from us many times in a moment; as Salomons fire of thornes, a blaze, and out ſtraight.

Nay, if they would tarry with us, would they not tire us? Even Manna it ſelfe, did it not grow lothſome? Doe we not finde, that when we are readie to ſtarve for hunger, and have meat to drive it away; if we uſe it any while, the meat is as irkſome as the hunger was, and we are as hungry for hunger, as ever we were for meat? That we may not be cloyed, we change them; and even thoſe, we change them for, within a while, cloy us as faſt. What ſhall we doe? where ſhall we finde comfort aright? Ever Per quod faſtidio occurritur, faſtidium incurritur: ſo that, if they would tarry, we muſt put them away: the not tarrying of them with us, that is, the change of them, is it that makes us able to indure them.

Well then; comfort us they cannot, when we need it: we muſt pray for Alium. If they could, they cannot ſtay: not, for any ſpace; much leſſe, for ever. If they could, their very ſtay would prove faſtidious and yeeld us but diſcomfort. Seeing then, we cannot intreat them to ſtay with us; and if we could, in the evill day, they could not ſtead us; but, then faile us ſooneſt when our need is greateſt; Let us ſeeke for another, that through ſickneſſe, age and death, may abide with us to all eternitie, and make us abide with Him in endleſſe joy and comfort.

The Application to the Sacrament.

Such is this here, which CHRIST promiſed, and His Father ſent this day: and which He will ſend, if CHRIST will aske: and CHRIST will aske, if (now we know the Covenant and ſee the Condition) we will ſeale to the deed.

To a Covenant, there is nothing more requiſite, than to put to the Seale. And we know, the Sacrament is the Seale of the new Covenant, as it was of the old. Thus, by undertaking the duty He requireth, we are entitled to the comfort which here He promiſeth. And, doe this, He would have us, as is plaine by His Hoc facite.

And ſure, of all the times in our life, when we ſettle our ſelves to prepare thitherwards, we are in beſt termes of diſpoſition to covenant with Him. For, if ever we be in ſtate of love toward Him, or toward one another; then, it is. If ever troubled in Spirit, that we have not kept His commandements better; then, it is. If ever in a vowed purpoſe and preparation, better to looke to it; then, it is. Then therefore of all times, moſt likely to gaine intereſt in the promiſe, when we are beſt in caſe, and come neereſt to be able to plead the condition.

Beſides, it was one ſpeciall end, why the Sacrament it ſelfe was ordained, our comfort; the Church ſo telleth us; we ſo heare it read, every time to us: He hath ordained theſe Myſteries, as pledges of His love and favour, to our great and endleſſe comfort. The Father ſhall give you the Comforter: Why He giveth Him, we ſee: How, He giveth Him, we ſee not. The meanes, for which, He giveth Him, is Chriſt: His intreaty by His Word, in prayer; by His fleſh and bloud in Sacrifice: For, His bloud ſpeakes; not, His voice onely. Theſe, the meanes for which: And the very ſame, the meanes, by which, He giveth the Comforter: by CHRIST the Word; and by CHRISTS body and bloud, both. In tongues, it came: but the tongue is not the inſtrument of Speech onely, but of taſte, we all know. And, even that note hath not eſcaped the Ancient Divines; to ſhew, there is not only comfort by hearing the Word, but we may alſo taſte of His goodneſſe, how gracious He is, and be made drinke of the Spirit. That not only by the letter we read, and the word we heare; but by the fleſh we eat, and the bloud we drinke at His table, we be made partakers of His Spirit, and of the comfort of it. By no more kindly way, paſſeth His Spirit than by His fleſh and bloud, which are Vehicula Spiritus, the proper carriages to conveigh it. Corpus aptavit ſibi, ut Spiritum aptaret tibi: CHRIST fitted our body to Him, that He might fit His ſpirit to us. For, ſo is the Spirit beſt fitted, made remeable, and beſt exhibited to us, who conſiſt of both.

Heb. 12.24.

Pſal. 34.8.
1 Cor. 12.13.

This

This is ſure: where His fleſh and bloud are, they are not exanimes; ſpirit-leſſe, they are not, or without life; His Spirit is with them. Therefore was it ordained, in thoſe very elements, which have both of them a comfortable operation in the heart of man. One of them (bread) ſerving to ſtrengthen it, or make it ſtrong: and comfort commeth of confortare, which is to make ſtrong. And the other (wine) to make it cheerefull or glad: and is therfore willed to be miniſtred to them that mourne, and are oppreſt with griefe. And all this, to ſhew that the ſame effect is wrought in the inward man, by the holy Myſteries, that is, in the outward, by the Elements: that there, the heart is eſtabliſhed by grace, and our ſoule indued with ſtrength, and our conſcience made light and cheerefull, that it faint not, but ever more rejoyce in His holy comfort. Pſal. 104. 15.

To conclude: where ſhall we finde it, if not here, where, under one, we finde CHRIST our Paſſe-over offered for us, and the Spirit our Pentecoſt thus offered to us? Nothing remaineth, but the Father Himſelfe: And of Him, we are ſure too. Filium in pretium dedit; Spiritum, in ſolatium: Se ſervat in præmium. His Sonne He gave, to be our price; His Spirit to be our comfort: Himſelfe He keepeth, to be our everlaſting reward.

Of which reward there, and comfort here, this day and ever may we be partakers, for Him that was the price of both, IESVS CHRIST.

IOHN CHAP. XVI. VER. VII.

Sed ego veritatem dico vobis: expedit vobis, ut Ego vadam: ſi enim non abiero, PARACLETVS non veniet ad vos; ſi autem abiero, mittam Eum ad vos.

Yet I tell you the truth: It is expedient for you, that I goe away: For, if I goe not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but, if I depart, I will ſend Him unto you.

BVT if I goe, I will ſend Him to you. And He did goe, and He did ſend Him; and, this day, He did ſend Him. So that, between this Text and this Feaſt, there is that mutuall reference and reciprocation, that is, betweene promiſsio miſsionis, and miſsio promiſsionis; the promiſe of the ſending, and the ſending of the promiſe: The promiſe of the ſending, the ſubſtance of the Text; and the ſending of the promiſe the ſubſtance of the Solemnitie: It being the ſolemnitie of mittam, and veniet (both in the Text) the ſending and comming of the HOLY GHOST.

CHRISTS words they be: and all is nothing elſe, but a ſetting forth or demonſtration of the non veniet: Of non veniet, the not comming, and of Expedit the Expedience of CHRISTS going, and conſequently of this Feaſt.

There

There ſeemes to be a queſtion here, whether beſt, the Comforter come, or not come: that is, whether any Whit-ſuntide, or no? The queſtion of His comming grew out of another, of Christs going; whether beſt Christ goe or, not goe: That is, whether any Aſcenſion-day, or no. The Apoſtles were all mainly againſt His going, and ſo oppoſed hard againſt the Aſcenſion. But Christ here reſolveth the point thus: If they were againſt the Aſcenſion, they loſt Feſtum Paracleti, a feaſt, which they might not miſſe, out of their Kalendar: and ſo, with promiſing them this, perſwades them, to beare with that; to yeeld to the Aſcenſion, in hope of Whit-ſuntide.

Which two Feaſts are both in the Text, and the two maine points of it: Here is an abeam, a going; and here is a veniet, a comming: Christs going, that is the Aſcenſion; The Holy Ghoſts comming, that is Pentecoſt (the day which we now celebrate) as it were ἀντισυμβαίνοντα, one to make amends for the other. And ye ſhall obſerve, it is uſuall. Anon after Chriſtmas-day, and the poore eſtate of Chriſts birth, there commeth the Epiphanie with a ſtarre, and great mens oblations, as by way of compenſation. Preſently after Good-friday, and the ſorrow of His paſſion, Eaſter-day followeth ſtraight, the day of His triumph, to revive us againe. And even ſo here, upon His aſcenſion, or going from us, there inſueth Whit-ſunday, the mends together withall. No impedit, without an expedit: no abeam, but a mittam: no going away, to bring a loſſe; but a comming too, to make a ſupply.

The truth is: Aſcenſion-day, though to Him it were a day of glory; yet, to them, it could not be, but a day of ſorrow. It was a going, to His Father; but, it was a going, from them. Going from them, they were to loſe Him; and loſſe breeds ſorrow; and a great loſſe (as this was) great ſorrow. It did ſo: the very next words before theſe are, Your hearts are full of ſorrow. And good reaſon: 1. To part with, to forgoe any friend, is a griefe. Not without ſome griefe, doth the Apoſtle recount, that even Demas was fallen off, and had forſaken Him. 2. And, if any friend; how much more, of ſuch a friend, as Christ was to them? It was a feſtivall, all the while; and they the children of the Bride-chamber, ſo long as He was with them. To forgoe ſuch an one, muſt fill up the meaſure, a good way. Ver. 6. 2 Tim. 4. 10. Matt. 9. 15.

3. But to fill it full; if to part with ſuch an one be grievous, at any time; then, to part with Him; then, He to leave us, and we Him, when we have moſt need of Him, when troubles are at hand, is above meaſure grievous. And at hand they were (ver. 2.) perſecutions to riſe, and they to be in that caſe, that they that cut their throats, ſhould thinke they did God good ſervice. If needs He would leave them, He ſhould ſtay, till faire weather: Now, a tempeſt is toward; then, to be left, is the worſt time that may be.

Now, joyne all theſe, 1 of a friend; 2 of ſuch a friend; 3 at ſuch a time, to be deprived; and tell me, if there were not great reaſon, ut triſtitia impleret cor eorum, their hearts ſhould be full of ſorrow, for His going: Non expedit ut abeas. This for them.

Now for Christ: we ſhall ſee, quàm incertæ providentiæ noſtræ. It falleth out many times, men are grieved with that, which is for their good: and earneſtly are ſet on that, which is not expedient for them. It was their caſe, in deſiring, Christ might not goe. All was out of miſtaking. Therefore Christ begins: But I tell you the truth: (as much to ſay) you are in an errour all this while: your hearts be full of ſorrow, becauſe your heads are full of errour. You conceive of my ſtay as beneficiall to you, but falſly: I tell you true, it is ſo far from that, as, impediet, it will hinder you, turne to your loſſe. You apprehend my going, as an hinderance; but erre. 1 I tell you true, expedit vobis, it will be your gaine. 2. This gaine, and loſſe, are ſet downe both: 1 The loſſe, in the not comming: 2 the gaine, in the comming of the Comforter, this day. 3. This comming or not comming, depends upon Chriſts going, or His ſtay. Non venict niſi, if Chriſt goe not, He commeth not: veniet ſi, if Chriſt goe, He commeth. Seeing then, ye ſhall be loſers by my ſtay, and gainers by my going, be not for my ſtay: My ſtay will deprive you of Him: non veniet. Be not againſt

My

My going, my abſence will procure you Him: Mittam. I love you not ſo evill, as to ſtay with you for your hurt. Be not you grieved; be not againſt that, which is for your good.

The manner of this anſwer is, 1 firſt retorquendo (holden ever to be the beſt.) You thinke, it will hinder you: I ſay συμφέρει, it will benefit you, that I goe. 2 Then, to prove it, He proceeds, abducendo ad abſurdum. For why, if I goe not, there will follow a maine inconvenience, which by no meanes is to be admitted, and that is, Non veniet Paracletus. The expedience of veniet, we deduce out of the inconvenience of non veniet.

This inconvenience, if He goe not. What if He goe? He will come certainely: For, He will be ſure to ſend Him. Now chooſe, whether I ſhall goe, and you have Him: or ſtay, and you want Him. The anſwer is cleare: have Him ye muſt; want Him ye may not. So, if this be the caſe; If no Aſcenſion, no Pentecoſt; we yeeld, Aſcendat Chriſtus, ut deſcendat Paracletus.

The Diviſion

I. Where we have to conſider of theſe: 1. Of the reaſon: It is expedient, expedient for you, I goe.

II. Then, of the two. 1 The inconvenience of non veniet, the HOLY GHOST not comming: 2 And of the neceſſitie of ſi non abiero, that CHRIST muſt goe, that He may come.

III. And laſt, of Veniet and Mittam, His comming and Chriſts ſending. Where, we are to treat, 1 of Paracletus, His name and nature firſt; 2 and then of the time, and manner of His ſending.

I.

The Reaſon. It is expedient

THere is no act of our Saviour Chriſts, but ever, at the firſt view, there ſheweth forth; nor ſpeech, but ever at the firſt hearing, there ſoundeth ſome vertue in it. As here, in this; that vertue with the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 1. 10.) calleth ἐπιείκεια, His mildneſſe and equitie; the beames of that vertue brake forth in this. 1 Herein is equitie: This very firſt, that He would yeeld to yeeld them a reaſon of His departure: Not uſe His authoritie (as well He might;) come, and goe at His pleaſure, who could aske Him why? but even condeſcends to render them (though farre His inferiours) a reaſon of His going and comming; which (ſure) Hee was no way bound to doe.

2. And what reaſon? that is next. It is not Licet, what is lawfull for Him; but Expedit, what is expedient or meet to doe.

3. And thirdly, His expedit is not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis: meete or expedient, not for Himſelfe, but for them, to whom He renders it.

1 A reaſon given. 1 Sam. 2. 16.

There was, amongſt the heathen, one, that would have his will ſtand for reaſon. And was there none ſuch, among the people of GOD? Yes: we finde (1 Sam. 2.) one, of whom it was ſaid: Thus it muſt be, for Hophni will not have it ſo, but thus. His reaſon is, for, hee will not: And GOD grant, none ſuch bee found among Chriſtians.

2 Not licet; but expedit. 1 Cor. 6. 12. 10. 23.

But, among Chriſtians, there were, that ſtood with Saint Paul, upon licet: what they might doe, this was lawfull for them, and who ſhould abridge them of it? Saint Paul may well ſeeme to have had relation there, to His Maſters reaſon here, where He teacheth them a better rule, if they could hit of it: That licet is not it; expedit is CHRISTS, and is the true Chriſtians reaſon.

3 Not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis.

And not expedit, at large. For ſo, we know not whom it referrs to. It may be to Himſelfe, expedit mihi; as, all the worlds reaſons tread inward. No: but expedit vobis, for them, their profit and benefit, rather than His owne. We finde one before, in this Goſpell (Chap. 11.) and He was the High Prieſt, that made His, from expedit; but, it was expedit nobis: ſo reaſons Caiaphas, there. But, CHRIST our High-Prieſt taketh it the other way. I doe it, becauſe it is expedient for you, that I doe it. And, the Apoſtle followeth Him in that too: Heb. 13. Vſe your Rulers (your ſpirituall Rulers) ſo, as they may doe their office with joy, not with griefe; Ἀλυσιτελὲς, for that is not good for you: not, for you (heare you) and let them goe. Well, certainely herein is equitie; herein is mildneſſe, in theſe two firſt words. It was, to His Father, and to His glorie, He went: He would not doe it, but acquaint them with the reaſon of it: and that reaſon was, He would not doe it, but that it was for their good. I have enough, from theſe three, if we learne to avoid [1] Hophni's non vult enim, to make our vult our enim; And the [2] Corinthians ſtanding with him, upon his licet; [3] And frame our Rule, by expedit: and that, not Caiaphas expedit nobis, but CHRISTS expedit vobis: for you, it is good; you the Diſciples: and make that the rule of our going out and comming in. This for Expedit vobis.

Heb. 13. 17.

II.

The inconvenience of non veniet.

If it be good, and good for them, they will not hinder it; Nemo impedit, quod expedit: That leſſon will ſoone be learned, to yeeld to that, which is for our behoofe. All the matter will be, to bring [expedit vobis] and [ut ego abeam] together: to underſtand that good; how [Ego abeam] can be expedient for them. Indeed it is hard to conceive. This we can well conceive: Expedit vobis, ut ego veniam, expedient it is, that I come; and ſay with the Apoſtle, Etiam veni, yea, come Lord; come quickly: And this we can alſo, Expedit vobis, ut ego maneam, expedient it is, that I tarry, and ſay with them (Luc. 24.) mane nobiſcum Domine; yea, tarry with us good Lord. It is more than expedient, for thee, ſo to doe. But Expedit vobis ut ego abeam, expedient, I goe my way and leave you, Durus eſt hic ſermo, it is a hard ſaying and who can endure it, That it ſhould be good for them, or for any, to have CHRIST goe from them or forſake them?

Luc. 24. 29.

And ſure, the propoſition is not ſo hard, but the reaſon, that induceth it, is as hard, and more, if more may be: The Comforter will not come. Be it ſo: let him not come; ſtay you. In te ſatis nobis, we are well enough, we deſire no other Comforter. And the other moveth not neither, unleſſe I goe: why, may He not ſtay, and He come notwithſtanding? What hinders it, but we may enjoy both together? Two difficulties, which muſt be cleered, or we cannot proceed.

Non veniet, that may be anſwered with, Ne veniat. But, He is a Comforter. No comforter to CHRIST: no loſſe ſo great, as to loſe Him: if we may keepe Him, we care not: ne veniat. Stay His aſcenſion, we feare not Pentecoſt. But, He is in earneſt, and tells us for a truth, It is altogether expedient, the Holy Ghoſt come: So expedient, Vt expedit, ut ego abeam, potius quàm ille ne veniat: Better I goe, than He not come; of the twaine, better I ſpared, than He. So it muſt be; elſe, He ſaith nothing: elſe, the ballance hangs even; one, as good as the other; they may take which they will; ſay, they were well enough, as they are. But weigh the Feaſts together, Aſcenſion, and Pentecoſt; the expedience of Ego abeam, and the expedience of Ille veniet; better CHRIST depart, than the HOLY GHOST ſtay from us. This ſets before us and ſhewes us the greatneſſe of this Dayes benefit: conſequently, the highneſſe of this Feaſt: not only, that it is equall, to any of thoſe precedent; (that the Holy Ghoſt is equall to Chriſt, elſe ſhould we be at an after deale, and change for our loſſe: No, Saint Auguſtine prayeth well, Domine da mihi alium te, alioqui non dimittam te, give us another as good as your ſelfe, or we will never leave that, or conſent that you leave us:) But, that ſome inequality there is; elſe they might ſtand, as they are, ſeeing they ſhould be never the better: but ſure, as the caſe ſtandeth, more for their behoofe, than CHRIST Himſelfe.

We

The inconvenience of non veniet.

We ſhall never ſee it in kind, the expedience of veniat, the abſolute neceſſity of His comming, till we ſee the inconvenience of non veniet; that it by no meanes may bee admitted; we cannot be without Him. Firſt then, abſolute neceſſity it is; in both the maine principall workes of the Deitie, all three perſons cooperate, and have their concurrence. As, in the beginning of the creation, not onely dixit Deus was required, which was the Word; but ferebatur Spiritus, the motion of the Spirit, to give the Spirit of life, the life of Nature. As, in the Geneſis, ſo in the Palingeneſie of the world, a like neceſſity: not onely the Word ſhould take fleſh; but fleſh alſo receive the Spirit, to give life, even the life of grace to the new creature. It was the counſell of GOD, that every perſon in the Trinitie, ſhould have his part in both; in one worke, no leſſe than the other, and we therefore baptized into all three.

Gal.6.15.

But I adde ſecondly; more than expedient it is, the worke of our ſalvation be not left halfe undone, but be brought to the full perfection; which, with non veniet, cannot be: if the Holy Ghoſt come not, CHRISTS comming can do us no good; when all is done, nothing is done. No, ſaid not He Conſummatum eſt? Yes: and ſaid it truly in reſpect of the worke it ſelfe; but quoad nos, in regard of us and making it ours, non conſummatum eſt, if the HOLY GHOST come not too. Shall I follow the Apoſtle, and humanum dicere, ſpeake after the manner of men; becauſe of our infirmitie? GOD Himſelfe hath ſo expreſſed it: A word is of no force, though written (which we call a deed) till the ſeale be added: that, maketh it authenticall. GOD hath borrowed thoſe very termes from us: CHRIST is the Word; the HOLY GHOST the Seale, in quo ſignati eſtis, Eph. IV. XXX. Niſi veniat, if the Seale come not too, nothing is done.

Ioh.19.30.
Rom.6.19.

2. Yea, the very will of a Teſtator, when it is ſealed, is ſtill in ſuſpence, till adminiſtration be granted: Chriſt is the Teſtator of the new Teſtament: The adminiſtration is the Spirits, I Cor. XII. If that come not, the Teſtament is to ſmall purpoſe.

Heb.9.15.
1 Cor.12.5.

II. 3. Take CHRIST as a Purchaſer: the purchaſe is made, the price is paid; yet is not the ſtate perfect, unleſſe there be inveſtiture, or (as we call it) liverie and ſeiſin: that, maketh it compleate. Perquiſitio, that very word is CHRISTS: but, the inveſtiture is by the Spirit, II Cor. V. V. If He come not, we lacke that: that, we may not lacke; and ſo not lacke Him. What will ye, that I ſay? Vnleſſe we be joyned to Him, as well as He to us; as He to us, by our fleſh; ſo we, to Him by His Spirit: nothing is done. The exchange is not perfect, unleſſe, as He taketh our fleſh, ſo He give us His Spirit: as He carrieth up that to heaven, ſo He ſend this downe into earth. Ye know, it is the firſt queſtion the Apoſtle asked: Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt ſince ye beleeved? If not, all elſe is to no purpoſe: without it, we are ſtill (as Iude calleth us) animales, Spiritum non habentes, naturall men, but without the Spirit. And this is a certaine rule, Qui non habet, He that hath not His Spirit, is none of His; Chriſt profiteth him nothing.

Act.19.2.
Rom.8.9.

Shall I let you ſee one inconvenience more, of non veniet? As nothing is done for us, ſo nothing can be done by us, if He come not. No meanes on our part, availe us ought. 1 Not Baptiſme; for, niſi ex Spiritu, if He come not, well may it waſh ſoile from our skinne, but no ſtaine from our ſoule: no Laver of regeneration, without renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. 2 No Preaching, neither; for, that is but a letter that killeth, except the Spirit come too, and quicken it. 3 No Sacrament; we have a plaine Text for it: The fleſh profiteth nothing, if the Lord and giver of life (the Spirit) be away. 4 To conclude, no prayer: for, niſi, unleſſe the Spirit helpe our infirmitie, and make interceſſion with us, we neither know how, nor what to pray. So, the Spirit muſt come to all: and it goeth through; neither can ought be done for us, or by us without it. Away then with ne veniat: we cannot ſay it; we may not thinke it. We cannot ſpare this firſt. Another veniat there muſt be; a ſecond Advent, beſides CHRISTS. CHRISTS Advent beginns all: this, ends all our ſolemnities. Come He muſt: and we muſt all agree, to ſay, Veni Creator Spiritus: the inconvenience of non veniet we cannot endure.

2 Cor.3.6.
Ioh.6.63.
Rom.8.26.

But then, there ariſeth a new difficultie upon Si non abiero. We ſee a neceſſity of His comming: but, we ſee no neceſſitie of CHRISTS going. Why not Chriſt ſtay, and yet He come? Why may not CHRIST ſend for Him, as well as ſend Him? Or, if He goe, come againe with Him? Before, it was, Ne veniat ille, mane tu: now, it is, Veniat ille, et mane Tu. Why not? Are they like to buckets; one cannot goe downe, unleſſe the other goe up? If it be ſo expedient, He come, CHRIST (I truſt) is not impedient, but He may come. The neceſſitie of Si non abiero CHRIST (ſure) and He are not ἀσύμφωνοι, incompatible: they may be, and abide together well enough. We beleeve, He was conceived by the HOLY GHOST: then, no antipathy betweene them. At His Baptiſme, He was knowne by this, that the Spirit reſted and ſtayed upon Him: why not now, as well? We ſee not, how this holdeth: If I goe not, He will not come. It cannot be denied, they two can ſtay together, well enough; and the time ſhall come, we ſhall enjoy them both together, and the Father with them. That time is not yet: now, it is otherwiſe. Not for any let in themſelves; that is not all: but, for ſome further matter and conſiderations noted by the Fathers, for which, it was expedient, CHRIST ſhould goe, that the Holy Ghoſt might come. Ioh.1.32.

1 On the Holy Ghoſts part.

First, for veniet. The HOLY GHOST cannot come, as He ſhould. He ſhould come as GOD. The ſtay of CHRIST would have beene a let of the manifeſtation of His God-head. To manifeſt His Godhead, being to ſhew great Signes, and worke great Wonders, if CHRIST had ſtill remained and not gone His way, they would not well have beene diſtinguiſhed, and great odds have beene aſcribed to CHRIST. So, the Holy Ghoſt hath wanted their honour and eſtimation due to Him: an impreachment it would have beene, to his Divinitie. But CHRIST aſcending, all ſuch imaginations ceaſe.

2 On Chriſts.

From mittam Eum: a little impeachment it would have beene, to CHRISTS equalitie with His Father. For, He not going to ſend Him, but ſtaying ſtill here, the ſending of the Spirit would have beene aſcribed to the Father alone, as His ſole act. This would have beene the moſt: that the Father, for His ſake, had ſent Him; but He, as GOD, had had no honour of the ſending. Being aſcended and glorified, mittam will ſtraight be conceived: Quem mittet Pater, & quem mittam a Patre: that with the Father, He ſends Him, equally, and we alike beholden to them both. Ioh.40.26. 15.26.

3 On theirs, as their caſe was to be.

A third is in vobis, on their part alſo. As their caſe was to be, it was (ſo) meet, even in regard of them. They were to be ſent abroad into all coaſts; to be ſcattered all over the earth to preach the Goſpell, and not to ſtay together ſtill, in one place, His corporall preſence would have ſtood them in ſmall ſtead: He could have beene reſident but in one place, to have comforted ſome one of them; S. Iames at Ieruſalem: as for Iohn at Epheſus, or Thomas in India, or Peter at Babylon; as good (for them) in heaven as in earth; all one. The Spirit, that was to ſucceed, was much more fit for men diſperſed. He could be, and was preſent with them all, and with every one, by Himſelfe, as filling the compaſſe of the whole world.

4 On theirs, as their caſe was then.

This, as their caſe was to be. But, the Fathers rather pitch upon their eſtate as preſently it was: Vobis, that is, vobis ſic diſpoſitus: for you, that is, you ſo diſpoſed, as I find, you are. So, it is ad homines: to them affected in ſuch ſort, as then they were. Whereby he giveth us to underſtand; ſome are in that caſe; as it is expedient, Chriſt withdraw Himſelfe from them. And is there any vobis, can any man be in that caſe, it ſhould be good for CHRIST to depart from him? It ſeemeth ſo. We ſee oftentime, the caſe ſo ſtandeth, even in regard of this life, that, from ſome, it is good their meate be taken, and yet is meate the ſtay of their life; that, from ſome, it is good their bloud be taken, yet bloud is natures treaſure, and that holdeth us in life; that, from ſome, light be taken, in ſome diſeaſe of the eyes, yet is light the comfort of this life. All this we conceive, Expedit, ut cibus, ut ſanguis, ut lux abeat; and all this better, than expedit ut Chriſtus abeat; we may ſpare them all, better than Him.

1 For His bodily preſence.

Yet CHRIST it is, that telleth it us, and telleth it us for a matter of great truth:

theſe were: (and whoſe caſe is better than theſe?) But, if theſe, ſome there are, in that caſe, it may be ſaid to them truly, It is expedient I be gone. And what caſe may that be? Even that caſe, that maketh the mother many times withdraw her ſelfe, from her yong child, whom (yet) ſhe loveth full tenderly, when the child groweth fooliſhly fond of her: which grew to be their caſe juſt. Chriſts fleſh, and His fleſhly preſence, that, and none but that. So ſtrangely fond they grew of that, as they could
Ioh. 11.21. not endure He ſhould goe out of their ſight; Nothing, but His carnall preſence, would quiet them. We know, who ſaid: If thou hadſt beene here Lord: as if, abſent, He had not beene, as able to doe it, by His Spirit, as preſent by His bodie. And Matt.17.4. a tabernacle they would needs build Him, to keepe Him on earth ſtill; and ever and anon they were ſtill dreaming of an earthly kingdome, and of the chiefe Seates there, as if their conſummation ſhould have beene in the fleſh. Theſe phanſies (indeed, errors) they fell into, about the fleſh: they had need have it taken from them. The Spirit was gone quite: they had more need, to have Him ſent. This was, at no hand, to be cheriſhed in them: they were not to be held as children ſtill, but to grow to mans eſtate, to perfect age and ſtrength; and ſo conſequently to be weined from the corporall preſence of His fleſh; nor to hang all by ſenſe, to which (it is too true) they were too much addicted. The corporall therefore to be removed, that the ſpirituall might take place: the viſible, that the inviſible: and they, not in ſight or ſenſe, as hitherto; but, in ſpirit and truth, henceforth to cleave unto Him. To ſay (with the 2 Cor.5.16. Apoſtle) If we have knowne CHRIST after the fleſh, yet now henceforth we know Him ſo no more. This was for them: And we ſhould have beene no better, as now we are; the fleſh will but hinder the ſpirit; even the beſt.

2For His ſpirituall preſence. This, For His bodily preſence. But, the Fathers goe yet further; and inquire, whither this alſo be not true, in His ſpirituall preſence: and reſolve, that, even in regard of that, it is no leſſe true. To ſome Vobis, it is expedient, that, even after that manner alſo, CHRIST goe from them. And who are they?

As growen faint Cant.3.1. 1. One Vobis, when men grow faint in ſeeking, and careleſſe in keeping Him (as in *Cant.*3.) lie in bed, and ſeeke Him. Gone He was; and, meet, He ſhould ſo be, to teach them to riſe and ſeeke; to watch and keepe Him better.

As over-weening. Pſal.30.7. Matt.26.33. 2. Another Vobis, when men grow high conceited and overweening of themſelves, and their owne ſtrength; and ſay (with David) non movebor, as if they had CHRIST pinned to them; and (with Peter) Etſi omnes non Ego. It is more than time, CHRIST be gone from ſuch; to teach them to ſee and know themſelves better.

But, if CHRIST leave us, if He withdraw His ſpirituall preſence, we fall into ſinne; and that cannot be expedient for any. Good, that I have beene in trouble; for,

Yes indeed: Audeo dicere (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) I dare avow it, Expedit Superbo, ut incidat in peccatum (there are the very termes) it is expedient they fall into ſome notorious ſinne (as David, as Peter did) that their faces may be filled with ſhame, and

III.

Of Mittam Eum. 1 Eum the Perſon.

If He goe not, the HOLY GHOST will not come. But, if CHRIST goe, will He come? ſhall we not be left to the wide world, without both? will the Comforter come? He will: for, Chriſt will not faile but ſend Him. If He take His bodie from our eyes, He will ſend His Spirit into our hearts. But, ſent He ſhall be; here is mittam Eum, And ſo He did. CHRIST ſent Him, and He came; and in memorie of this Veniet & mittam, hold we this Day. He did, to them: but, will He alſo to us? He will. And, ſhall we ſee firie tongues? That, is not Chriſts promiſe, to ſend firie tongues; but Illum, Him, the comforter. And, Comfort it is, we ſeeke. It is not the tongues, or fire, we care for, or will doe us good. We conceive (I truſt) after to manners, He came, as this day: [1] One viſible, in tongues of fire that ſate upon their heads: [2] The other inviſible, by inward graces, whereby He poſſeſſed their hearts. The former was but for ceremonie at firſt; the other is it, the reall matter, Illum, Him. And Him, this day as well as that, this day and ever, He will not faile to ſend. Alwaies, we are to thinke, His promiſe and His prayer were not for theſe onely, but for all that ſhould beleeve on Him, by their word, to the worlds end.

Now this laſt point (theſe two, [1] mittam, [2] illum) we are ſpecially to looke to. CHRIST is gone, once for all. We have no hold now, but of this promiſe, I will ſend Him. That we take heed, we forgoe not Him, and loſe our part in the promiſe too. A great part of the world is (ſure) in this caſe: Chriſt is gone, and the Comforter is not ſent. Not this: for I ſpeake not of the worlds comfort, the rich mans (Luc. 16.) qui habebat hîc conſolationem, who had his comfort, here in good fare and braverie, and all manner delights of the fleſh; fleſh-comforts: but, this here is Paracletus qui eſt Spiritus.

Luc. 16. 25.

And becauſe all Religions promiſe a Spirituall comfort; it is ſaid further, Paracletus qui eſt ſpiritus veritatis: No ſpirit of error, but the ſpirit of truth. And becauſe all Chriſtians (though counterfeit) claime an intereſt in Spiritus veritatis; yet further, it is added, Paracletus qui eſt Spiritus ſanctus: He is no uncleane Spirit, but one ſanctifying, and leading us into an holy and cleane life. This is the true Comforter (and none other) that Chriſt promiſeth to ſend.

Chriſt will ſend Him. But (that we miſtake Him not) not, unleſſe we call for Him, and be readie to entertaine Him: For [cletus] is in Paracletus. Of which let me tell you, theſe three things: It is the chiefe word of the Text, and chiefe thing of the Feaſt. It is tranſlated Comforter: that tranſlation is but ad homines, for their turne, to whom He ſpeakes; for, as their caſe was, they needed that office of His, moſt. But, the true force of the word Paracletus is Advocatus (not the Nowne but the Participle) one called to, ſent for, invited to come, upon what occaſion, or for what end ſoever it be. For what end ſoever it be, the perſon ſent for, is Paracletus (properly) pro eâ vice; for that time and turne, Advocatus. But, becauſe the ſpirit of the world, ruleth in this world, the worldly affaires come thickeſt, our affections in that kind ſo many and oft; it is come to paſſe, that the Lawyer hath carried away the name of Advocatus from the reſt; and they growne to be the Paracleti of this world, called for even from the Prince to the Peaſant, and conſulted with, none ſo often. The Phyſitian, he hath his time and turne of advocation, to be a Paracletus too; but nothing ſo oft: as for Barnabas (which is interpreted the ſonne of conſolation) never, till both Zenas the Lawyer, and Luke the Phyſitian have given us over; never called for, but when it is too late.

Acts 4. 35.

But firſt, from mittam Paracletum, this we have. Mittam, Chriſt will ſend: but Paracletum, if you ſend for Him. Veniet, come He will, but not come, unleſſe called: nor ſent, but ſent for. If we call Him, veniet, He will come: if we ſend for Him, He will ſend Him. That, is our duty; but what is our practice? We miſſe in this firſt we call not for Him. We finde no time for Him, He is faine to call for us, to ring a bell for us, to ſend about to get us; and then are we Advocati, not He. When we ſend for Him, He is Paracletus: when He, for us, then we are, and not He: (if we be that, if we be Advocati, and not rather avocati; every trifling occaſion being enough, to call us away.) Thus we ſtumble at the very threſhold: and doe we yet mervaile, if Chriſt ſend Him not, nor He come?

1 Our duty, to call for Him for Comfort.

Men are ſent for, for ſome end: and diverſe are the ends, thereafter as our need is. Wee ſend not for them, onely when we are in heavineſſe, to comfort us; but when we are in doubt, to reſolve us: which is the ſecond ſignification, and ſo [Paracletus] is turned advocate, or counſellor (1 *Ioh.*2.1.) And the Holy Ghoſt looketh to be ſent for, for both: for counſell, as well as for conſolation: for both; he is good for both. Yea, many are His uſes: and therefore He thinketh much to be ſent for, but for one, as if He were good for nothing elſe. If we be in doubt, He is able to reſolve us: if perplexed, to adviſe and to guide: if we know not how, to frame our petition for us: If we know not, to teach; if we forget, to remember us: And not only one uſe (as we phanſie) if we be out of heart, to comfort us.

[a] Io.4.5. [b] Act.2.3. [c] Io.3.8. [d] Io.2.20. [e] Io.15.26. [f] Eſai 11.2.

And, becauſe His uſes be many, His types are ſo. [a] Water ſometimes, ſometimes [b] fire: One while [c] winde, one while [d] oyntment: and according to our ſeverall wants we to ſend to Him, for fire to warme; for winde, to coole; for water, to clenſe us; for oyle, to ſupple us. And, as His Types, ſo His names: the [e] Spirit of truth, the [f] Spirit of counſell, the Spirit of holineſſe, the Spirit of comfort: And according to His ſeverall faculties, we to invocate (or call for) Him, by that name, that is moſt for our uſe or preſent occaſion. For all theſe, He lookes, we ſhould ſend for Him.

Our error is, as if He were onely for one uſe or office; for comfort alone: ſo, in all others, we let Him alone; and, if never in heavines, never looke after Him, or care once to heare of Him. But, He is for advice, and direction alſo. No leſſe Paracletus, a counſellor, than Paracletus, a comforter. He is not ſent by CHRIST, to comfort onely. Ye may ſee, by the very next words: the firſt thing He doth, when He commeth, is, He ſhall reprove; which is far from comforting. But ſent He is, as well to mediate with us, for GOD: as, with GOD, for us. GODS Paracletus, His Sollicitor, to call on us for our dutie; as our Paracletus, or Comforter, to miniſter us comfort, in time of need. Verſe 8.

Our manner is, we love to be left to our ſelves, in our conſultations to adviſe with fleſh and bloud; thence to take our direction, all our life: and, when we muſt part, then ſend for Him, for a little comfort, and there is all the uſe, we have of Him. But, he that will have comfort from Him, muſt alſo take counſell of Him; have uſe of Him as well againſt error and ſinfull life, as againſt heavineſſe of minde. If not, here is your doome: where you have had your counſell, there ſeeke your comfort: he that hath beene your Counſellour, all the time of your life, let him be your Comforter, at the houre of your death. And good reaſon: He will not be Paracletus at halves; to ſtand by at all elſe, and onely to be ſent for, in our infirmitie.

Baſe it is, to ſend for Him, never but when in extreme need: but, even otherwiſe extra caſum neceſſitatis, for entertaining of acquaintance and to grow familiar, as we uſe to doe thoſe, we delight in. The word [ἐπιδημεῖν] giveth as much: He ſhould be neere us, by us, one ordinarie; not a ſtranger, to call or ſend for a great way off. It is ſo expedient, and He may know us throughly, and we Him: the beſt and neereſt way to finde ſure comfort, when moſt we ſhall need it. For he that ſhould miniſter it ſoundly indeed, had need be familiarly acquainted with the ſtate of our ſoules, that he may be readie and ripe, then. To goe to a Lawyers reading, and not heare it, ſerves us not for our worldly doubts: nor to heare the Phyſicke lecture, for the complaints of our bodies. No: we make them Paracletos, we call them to us, we queſtion with them in particular, we have private conference, about our eſtates. Onely, for our ſoules affaires, it is enough to take our directions in open Churches, and there delivered in groſſe: private conference we endure not; a Paracletus there, we need not. One we muſt have, to know throughly the ſtate of our lands or goods: One wee muſt have, entirely acquainted with the ſtate of our body: In our ſoules, it holdeth not. I ſay no more: it were good it did. We make him a ſtranger, all our life long; He is Paraclitus (as they were wont to pronounce him;) truly Paraclitus, one whom we declined, and looked over our ſhoulders at: And then, in our extremitie, ſodenly He is Paracletus; we ſeeke, and ſend for Him, we would come a little acquainted with Him. But, take we heed of Neſcio vos; It is a true anſwer: We take too little a time, to breed acquaintance in. Neſcio vos (I feare) they finde, that ſo ſeeke Him: Paracletus, they doe not; Paraclitus, rather. Matt. 7. 12.

This

This, of Paracletus. Now, of Mittam, the 1 time, and the 2 manner: both are to the purpoſe. The time, that when He ſends, we make readie for Him. The time of the yeare was this time, in the Spring, the faireſt and beſt part of it. The time of the moneth, the third day: (ſo they deduce, from the fifteenth day, the day of the Paſſeover, and ſo fifty dayes, it will ſo fall out by calculation:) that is, the beginning of the moneth. The time of the day: it was before the third houre (that is, nine of the clocke in the morning plainely.) So it was ſtill prime. Theſe teach us, it would be in our prime, the time of health and ſtrength, when we lay the grounds of our comfort; not to tarry, till the froſt and ſnow of our life; till the evill dayes come, and the yeares approach, whereof we ſhall ſay, we have no pleaſure in them. He, in the ſpring: we in the end of the yeare. He, in the beginning of the moneth: we, in the laſt quarter; nay, even pridiè calendas. He, before nine in the morning: we, not till after nine at night. If we will keepe time with Him, we know what His time is of ſending.

2
His ſending: 1 The Time: Mittam.

Eccleſ. 12.

The manner is beſt: and it is in the body of the word. As the Spirit of truth, by preaching: as the Holy Ghoſt, by prayer; the Paracletus (we know, what He meaneth) per Paracleſin, by invitation. As the Dove to baptiſme, the Winde to prayer (Aperui os & attraxi Spiritum, Pſal. 119. 131.) the tongue, to a ſermon; the Paracletus, to Paracleſis, as it were a refreſhing: (ſo, friends meete and nouriſh love and amitie one with another.) And, even humanum dicere, after naturall men, when our ſpirits are ſpent and we wax faint, to recover them (or never) in the naturall man, it is done, no way more kindly, than by nouriſhment: ſpecially, ſuch as is apt to breed them (as, one kinde is more apt than other.) There is a ſpirituall meat, and a ſpirituall drinke (ſaith the Apoſtle:) in which kinde, there is none ſo apt to procreate the Spirit in us, as that fleſh and bloud, which was it ſelfe conceived and procreate by the Spirit, and therefore full of ſpirit and life, to them that partake it. It is ſure; to invite and allure the Spirit to come, there is no more effectuall way; none, whether Chriſt will ſend Him, or whether He will come, more willingly, than to the preſence of the moſt holy Myſteries. And namely, at this feaſt; concerning which, our Saviour CHRISTS voice is to ſound in our eares, Si quis ſitiat, veniat ad me: If any thirſt let him come to me and drinke: Which He meant and ſpake (ſaith Saint Iohn) of the Spirit, which was to begin at that time eſpecially, when He was newly glorified. De meo accipiet (ſaith CHRIST of Him:) and it is no where more truly fulfilled, that He ſhall take of CHRISTS, and give it us, than it is done, of that, which is His moſt intrinſecally. That was, this very day; and no better opportunitie, no fitter time, to receive the Spirit, than the Day of the Spirit; the Day of CHRISTS ſending, and of His comming. When ſhall He be ſent or come; if then, He doe not? But, keeping the time, and obſerving the manner, we truſt in His promiſe, and call upon Him, that ſo He will ſend Him; and upon the Holy Ghoſt, that ſo He will come. And as we be His Paracleti, His gueſts; ſo He will be ours, dwelling with us with His aſſiſtance, and being in us by His graces, to life eternall. Which Almighty GOD grant, &c.

2 The manner: Per Paracleſia.

Ver. 14.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the XXXI. of May, A. D. MDCXII. being WHITSVNDAY.

ACTS CHAP. XIX. VER. I, II, III.

And it came to paſſe, &c. that PAVL came to EPHESVS, and found there, certaine Diſciples.

And ſaid unto them, Have yee received the HOLY GHOST, ſince yee beleeved? And they ſaid unto him, wee have not ſo much as heard, whether there bee an HOLY GHOST.

And He ſaid unto them, Vnto what were ye then baptized? and they ſaid, Vnto IOHNS baptiſme.

HEre is a queſtion. Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt? And here is an anſwer to it: Nay, not ſo much as heard, whether any Holy Ghoſt or no. There is no fitter time, to aske and reſolve this queſtion of His receiving, than this day, the day, He was received viſibly: nor to amend this anſwer (Not, whether any or no,) than this day, on which He declared Himſelfe to the world, when it was both heard and ſeene, that there was an Holy Ghoſt.

Acts 2 33. The part Narrative.

The Narrative is thus, briefly. S. PAVL came to Epheſus, and there he found certaine Diſciples. At the firſt meeting, the very firſt queſtion he askes, is Si recepiſtis, Whether they had received the Holy Ghoſt? Marke it well. It is the firſt point, he thinkes meete to bee nquired of, or to informe himſelfe concerning.

The firſt queſtion.

The

The Apoſtle (no doubt) hoped for an anſwer affirmative from them: That they had received Him. Theirs is a ſtrange negative: That, not only they had not received Him; Sed neque, But were ſo farre from that, as they had not ſo much, as heard, whether there were any to receive: whether, there were any, at all. Whom they ſhould have received, Him they had not heard of. This was a great rudeneſſe. And yet Diſciples they were, and Diſciples that had beleeved, and beleeved a good while ſince. And they were twelve (it is ſaid at the ſeventh verſe) that is, a full Iurie; and yet put the Holy Ghoſt upon their Verdict, that, they returne, is an Ignoramus. The anſwer.

The Apoſtle, little looked for ſuch rudeneſſe, at Epheſus, the moſt civill place of all Aſia. This anſwer almoſt poſed him; yet, he gives them not over. Nay, he muſt not leave them thus. Whether one, or no: This anſwer (of force) begets another queſtion, to finde where the error was. Diſciples they were, and therefore baptized; baptized, and yet had not heard of the Holy Ghoſt? He muſes how, or into what they had beene baptized, and askes them that. They tell him, into Iohns baptiſme, and further they had not gone. Of Iohns Baptiſme I will not now ſtand to enlarge: This is certaine, a Baptiſme it was, wherein (it ſeemes) there was no mention, nor no hearing of the Holy Ghoſt. The ſecond queſtion. The anſwer.

Now, by this time, their rudeneſſe, that ſeemed ſtrange at the firſt, is not now ſtrange, when the reaſon of it is knowne. And it might ſeeme in ſome ſort to excuſe them, in that, they were but at Iohn Baptiſme: and ſo it did. But yet, to accuſe them withall, that they were but at Iohns Baptiſme (for it was now more than twenty yeares ſince Iohn was dead) that, all this while, they were no further; that (as He ſaith to the Hebrewes) conſidering the time, whereas they might have beene Teachers, they had need to be catechiſed, in the very rudiments of Religion. The error. Heb. 5. 11.

Yet * quencheth he not this flax, though it did but ſmoke; beares with them, rates them not, but teacheth them; firſt, that as Iohn was to CHRIST, ſo was Iohns baptiſme to Chriſts baptiſme, in manner of a Parate viam, or introduction, in venturum, to one that was to come, and they, no otherwiſe to conceive of it. The rectifying. * Matt. 12 20.

It was Apollo's caſe (in the Chapter before, Verſe 25.) He knew not but Iohns baptiſme neither, at the firſt. And theſe (it may well be) were His Diſciples. But as Aquila there taught Him: So doth the Apoſtle theſe here, the way of truth more exactly. And ſo, being taught, they were baptized with a baptiſme, where, they both heard of, and received the Holy Ghoſt. Verſe 5. 6.

Thus doth end the Narrative part. And therein, he gives us an example in himſelfe, of his owne rule to Timothee. If we meet with ſuch, as theſe at Epheſus, raw and evill catechiſed Chriſtians, that we grow not abrupt; but, exerciſe our office, in all long ſuffering and doctrine: not in doctrine alone, but in long ſuffering and doctrine: For without ſuffering, and ſuffering long otherwhiles, all our doctrine will doe but little good. The Apoſtles patience. 2 Tim. 4. 2.

Out of all this, we gather theſe points. Firſt, the neceſſitie of receiving the Holy Ghoſt: in that, it is his firſt care, his firſt queſtion he askes. Of the other Perſons in the God-head, it is enough we heare of them and beleeve in them: Of the Holy Ghoſt it is not ſo. To heare of Him, or beleeve in Him, will not ſerve; but we are to receive Him too. To know, not only Quòd ſit, that He is; but to certifie our ſelves, Quòd inſit, that He is in us: For He ſhall remaine with you and ſhall be in you (it is CHRIST.) The part diſpoſitive. Ioh. 47. 17.

But then, receive we cannot, unleſſe firſt we heare: heare, that there is one to receive, or ever we receive Him. Firſt, notice of His being; and then ſenſe of His receiving. And indeed, the hearing of Him is a way to His receiving: For, though, not every one that heares, receives: yet none receives, but he heares firſt. So, that ground muſt firſt be layd.

And to lay that ground, no better way, than the Apoſtle here directs us to, by his ſecond queſtion; get us to our baptiſme. Aske, into what we were baptized? There we ſhall not faile, but reſolve our ſelves, that one there is: receive Him after, as we may.

The right order. Now, but that the Apoſtle had a better conceit of theſe, here, than there was cauſe, and ſo erred of charitie, ſuppoſing theſe Diſciples better Scholers than they were; He would have begunne with the latter, and firſt asked them, If ever they heard of Him: and then after, if they had recived Him. For, that is firſt in nature, An ſit, then An inſit.

There then let us beginne. I am ſorrie and aſhamed, that we ſhall need deale with An ſit: Yet (I know not how) as theſe daies of ours grow from evill to worſe, and from worſe to worſt of all; it is no more than needs. Not that I doubt of any ſuch, who (as theſe here at Epheſus) have not heard of the HOLY GHOST: For (no doubt) long yer this, His ſound is gone out into all lands: but rather, ſuch other (as Saint PAVL found at Epheſus too) I can tell them no better, than he doth, Beaſts in the ſhape of men. That have heard, and yet take to themſelves (a Chriſtian libertie (they call it) and that forſooth, humbly, ſimply, and modeſtly; but indeed) an unchriſtian licentiouſneſſe, proudly, lewdly, and malapertly, to call in queſtion what they liſt; and, to make Quere's of that, which the Chriſtian world hath long ſince reſolved, and ever ſince beleeved, concerning GOD, CHRIST and the Bleſſed Spirit: no leſſe matters.

Rom. 10. 18.

1 Cor. 13. 30.

The Diviſion I. So then, to theſe two parts, we reduce all: 1 The Hearing of Him firſt: Then 2 the receiving of Him. 1. The Hearing: and therein, 1 Where we ſhall heare of Him? and 2 What we ſhall heare of him? 1 Where we ſhall heare of Him? At our Baptiſme: 2 And What we ſhall heare of Him there: That one there is (at leaſt) and I truſt, ſomewhat elſe beſides.

II. 2. Then, the Receiving of Him. And in it, three points: 1. Firſt, that this queſtion muſt be anſwered too, and ſo we bound to receive Him. And that, either affirmativè, or negativè. We have, or we have not. 2. Then, Have we received Him? How to know, if we have. 3. Have we not received Him? How to procure, if we have not. In the former, of Hearing: is matter of faith. In the latter, of Receiving: matter of morall duty. Both, meete to be intreated of, at all times; but at no time ſo fit, and ſo proper, as at this Feaſt.

I. The hearing. THere is no receiving of Him, that is not. Therefore, no talke of receiving, no place, for the firſt queſtion, Have yee received? till the latter be firſt reſolved, Is there one to receive? For reſolution whereof, He might have ſent them, to the very beginning of Geneſis, where they ſhould have heard, the Spirit of GOD moved on the face of the waters. Or to the Law; where the ſame Spirit came downe upon the ſeventie Elders. Or, to the Pſalmes; where, they ſhould have heard David ſay of Him, Emitte Spiritum & creabantur, Send forth thy Spirit and all ſhall bee made. And Spiritum Sanctum ne auferas, Take not thy Holy Spirit from me. Or, to the Prophets: The Prophet Eſay: CHRISTS firſt Text, *Luc. 4. b. Ioh. 20. 22.

ſent downe, like firie tongues, upon each of them. Or of their ſolemne meeting and Councell at Ieruſalem, and Decrees there, the tenor whereof was, [d] It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and us. Or but of the ſtrange end, that hapned to Ananias, they could not chooſe, but have heard his offence told Him, by Saint Peter, He had lyed to the HOLY GHOST: and ſtraight upon it; hee had lyed not to man, but to GOD directly. [d] Act. 15. 28. Act. 5. 3. 4.

All this, he might; yet, this he did not, but takes a plaine courſe, ſends them to their baptiſme, (ſtill ſuppoſing it, to be CHRISTS Baptiſme, they were baptized with, the onely true Baptiſme.) And, ſeeing the Apoſtle, upon good advice, tooke that for the beſt way; we cannot follow a better direction: and ſo, let us take it. We meane not (I truſt) to renounce our Baptiſme. By it, we are, that we are. And, at it, we ſhall not fayle, but heare, There is a Holy Ghoſt. Expreſſe mention of Him, is directly given in charge, in the ſet forme of Baptiſme, preſcribed by our SAVIOVR: That All ſhould be (as we all are) baptized, in the name of the Father, the Sonne and the Holy Ghoſt. 2 At Baptiſme. 1 That one there is. Matt. 28. 19.

Yea, I adde further: He could not better referre them, than to baptiſme. For, a ſpeciall prerogative hath the Holy Ghoſt, in our baptiſme, above the other two Perſons. That Laver, is His Laver properly; where, we are not only to be baptized into Him (as into the other two) but alſo, even to be baptized with Him: which is proper, to Him alone. For, beſides the Water, we are there, to be borne anew of the Holy Ghoſt alſo, elſe is there no entering for us into the kingdome of God. Tit. 3. 5. Ioh. 3. 5.

This for Baptiſme. But, let me alſo tell you a fayſing: It is Saint Baſils, and well worth your remembring. He beginneth with, In hoc baptizamur, and proceedeth three degrees further, all riſing from thence naturally: they be but the traine of baptiſme. 2 Cant. Eunom. l. 2. De Spirit. Sanct.

1. Firſt. Et quomodo baptizamur, ita & credimus. As we are baptized, ſo we beleeve. As is our baptiſme, ſo is our beleefe. And our beleefe, is there (at our baptiſme) repeated from point to point. A point whereof, is, I beleeve in the Holy Ghoſt. And, wee deſire to bee baptized in that faith. There Hee is now againe, at our baptiſme.

Yea, before we come ſo farre: even, at Chriſts conceiving, there we heare of Him firſt, Who was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. So, three ſeverall times, we there heare of Him. [1] Which was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. [2] I beleeve in the Holy Ghoſt, and [3] in the name of the Holy Ghoſt. At our baptiſme, all three. And in the mouth of three witneſſes, is every point ſufficiently eſtabliſhed. 1 Cor. 13 1.

2. Saint Baſil proceeds. Et quomodo credimus, ita & glorificamus. As from Baptiſme, to Beleefe: So from beleeving to giving glorie. And there, he flatly avoweth (which all the Chriſtian world knew to be true, nor was there ever Heretike found, ſo bold as to denie it) That the Δοξολογία (as they call it) that is, the uſe of ſaying, Glorie be to the Father, the Sonne and the Holy Ghoſt; this forme of concluding Pſalmes, and Hymnes, and Thanksgivings, was ever received, and retained in the Church, from the beginning; as with us, ſtill it is. So was Baptiſme, ſo was thankes for the baptized partie (the new member of the Church;) ſo, all concluded. So that way, we heare of Him there, againe.

3. Yet one more, and it is His laſt. Et quomodo glorificamus, ſic & benedicimus. As we glorifie GOD, ſo we bleſſe men: As we give glorie to Him: ſo we receive bleſſing from Him. How? the forme is often heard, and well knowne, it is the Apoſtles: The Grace of Chriſt our Lord, the Love of GOD His Father; Communio, and the fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt, to be with us. So, after Baptiſme; So, after Sermon; So, is the congregation ever diſmiſſed. Then, there we glorifie Him. And in Him we there are bleſſed. And ſo, we heare of Him, once more, quòd ſit, that a HOLY GHOST there is. 2 Cor. 13. 13.

Vpon the matter: no Baptiſme, no Beleefe, GOD no glorie, men no bleſſing, but ſtill we heare of Him. So as, if any but ſee Baptiſme, heare but the Creed, be at the daily

Service;

Service, heare the Church rendring glorie to GOD, receiving bleſsing from the Biſhop or Prieſt: by ſome of theſe, or all of theſe, they cannot chooſe, but heare of the Holy Ghoſt. There is then no ſaying, for us, Sed neque audivimus: Away with that, And ſay with Saint Baſil, In hoc baptizamur, there we beginne, Et quomodo 1 baptizamur ſic credimus, 2 Et quomodo credimus ſic glorificamus, 3 Et quomodo glorificamus ſic benedicimus. So, we are baptized, in Him; 2 and as we are baptized, ſo we beleeve; and 3 as we beleeve ſo glorifie we GOD; and 4 as we glorifie God, ſo bleſſe we men; bleſſe, and are bleſſed. Theſe foure, they are all three, and they are not farre fet, they have no curious ſpeculation in them, they will ſerve for any honeſt or good hearted Chriſtian, to reſt in, and they need goe no further, than In quo ergo baptizati eſtis.

2 That He is GOD.

Thus, we are referred, and we know, where we are ſure to heare of Him. But, if we ſtay a little upon [In quo baptizati] and looke better into it, this is not all, but we ſhall finde further, not onely that ſuch an one there is, but take more perfect notice of Him. And firſt, that He is GOD. And by no other, but by the ſame ſteps we went before.

1 GOD, firſt. For that, we cannot be baptized into any name, but Gods alone. The Apoſtle diſputes it at large I Cor. I. that it cannot be, that it is not lawfull, to be baptized into Saint Peters name, or into his, or into any name elſe, but GODS only. But, in His name, we are baptized: even in the name of the Holy Ghoſt: that, proves Him, GOD.

2 GOD, ſecondly. For we beleeve in Him. We there profeſſe it. Et nemini Chriſtianorum unquam dubium fuit, nos in Deum, non in Creaturam, credere (ſaith Athanaſius ad Epiſcopos Afric.) Never any Chriſtian doubted of this, that we beleeve not in any Creature, but in GOD alone. Beleeving then in Him, we acknowledge Him to be GOD.

3 Eſay 42. 8. GOD, thirdly. For, we aſcribe to Him glorie. And glorie is proper to GOD onely: So proper, that He ſaith expreſly, Alteri non dabo, He will not part with it, to any other. But we render Him glorie, and, With the Father and the Sonne, pariter together, He is worſhipped and glorified: Therefore, GOD with them, even in that reſpect.

4 Num. 6. 27. Laſtly, GOD, from bleſsing alſo: for, that is one of Gods peculiars: To bleſſe in His name: by putting His name, upon Children, old and young, upon the Congregation, to bleſſe them. But, with His name, we bleſſe, no leſſe, than with the reſt. Therefore, as they, ſo Hee, GOD above all, as to bleſſe, ſo to be bleſſed for ever.

And upon theſe foure we reſt. Theſe foure, 1 To be baptized into Him, 2 To beleeve in Him, 3 To aſcribe glorie to Him, 4 To bleſſe by Him, or in His name, They are acts, ſuch acts, as cannot be given to any, but to GOD onely; and ſo evedently, we there heare of Him, that He is GOD alſo. And ſuch are the two acts, in the Creed of Conſtantinople, To be LORD and giver of life, and To ſpeake by the Prophets. Such are many other attributes, and workes (that cannot agree to any, but GOD) aſcribed to the Holy Ghoſt; which might be, and which elſewhere have beene alledged: But now we are to keepe us to our Baptiſme, and goe no further.

3 GOD in unitie.

And, if we will ſtay yet, but a little, at our Baptiſme; and hearken well: as, we heare that He is GOD; ſo ſhall we, that, He is GOD in unitie. For there, we heare but, In nomine, but, of one name. Now, as the Apoſtle reaſoneth (Gal. 3. 16.) Abrahæ dictæ ſunt promiſſiones, & ſemini ejus. Non dicit Seminibus, quaſi in multis; ſed tanquam in uno, Semini ejus. To Abraham and his ſeed, were the promiſes made. He ſaith not, To the ſeedes, as of many; but to his ſeed, as of one. So wee, are baptized, Non in nominibus, quaſi multis; ſed, in nomine, quaſi uno: not in the names, as of many; but in the name, as of one. One name and one nature, or eſſence. Vnum ſumus (ſaith CHRIST) of two of them: Vnum ſunt, ſaith Saint Iohn, of all three. This we heare there.

Ioh. 10 30. 1 Ioh. 5. 6.

5 Diſtinct. Vnum ſunt; but not unus. For, as from the name, we ceduce the unitie: So, from the number (Three) doe we, the Trinitie. One in name and nature: yet diſtinct betweene betweene themſelves. Diſtinct in number, as in our baptiſme. The Father, Sonne, Holy Ghoſt. And that number, diſtinct to the ſenſe, as at CHRISTS Baptiſme, the Father in the voyce, the Sonne in the floud, the Holy Ghoſt in the ſhape of a Dove. And that ſhewed to be, a diſtinction of perſons, in CHRISTS promiſe. [1] Ego the Perſon of CHRIST: [2] Patrem the Perſon of the Father, [3] and Paracletum, the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt. The Holy Ghoſt (I ſay) diſtinct from the Father, The Lord and His Spirit hath ſent me, Eſa. 48. 16. From the Sonne Paracletum alium, by alium, the Sonne one, He another. And diſtinct, as a Perſon: For (to omit other perſonall acts, which properly argee to none but a reaſonable nature determined: As [a] To be the Lord, [b] To ſpeake, [c] teach, [d] reprove, comfort, [e] bee a witneſſe, [f] place Biſhops, [g] make Decrees in councell:) That which we heare of at our Baptiſme, aſcribed to Him, to conceive the humane nature of CHRIST, is an act ſo perſonall, as, in proprietie of ſpeech, can agree to none, or be affirmed of none, but of an intire Perſon. This we heare.

A Perſon then, diſtinct by Himſelfe, yet (as a perſon) not, of or from Himſelfe. And, this we heare, from the very terme it ſelfe [of Spiritus.] For even as filius alicujus, ſo Spiritus, alicujus, eſt, ab aliquo: proceed from Him, whoſe Sonne; or Spirit they are. So the Sonne of GOD, and Spirit of GOD, doe from GOD: GOD of GOD, either. Eo ipſo then, that He is Spiritus Domini, He proceeds without more adoe.

4 Proceeding.

Proceeds: and from both. [1] From the Father, the Conſtantipolitan Councell, from the expreſſe words, who proceedeth from the Father: [2] From the Sonne; The Councell of Toledo the eight, from the viſible ſigne, where the Sonne breathed on the Apoſtles, and willed them, from Him to receive the Holy Ghoſt. And Non à ſemet ipſo loquetur, ſed de meo accipet, ſheweth fully as much. Briefly: Sent by the Father Ioh. 14. 26. Filioque, and by the Sonne too. Ioh. 15. 26. And ſo, the Spirit of the Father, Matt. 10. 30. Filiique, and of the Sonne too. Gal. 4. 6.

Proceeding from them; and not by way of generation: (That is Chriſts proper; He is often termed, the Onely begotten, and ſo, none but He:) but by way of, Emitte Spiritum, Emiſſion, ſending it forth: that is (out of the very body of the word ſpirit) by ſpiration, or breathing. One breathing, yet from both: even as the breath (which carrieth the name and reſemblance of it) is one, yet from both the noſtthrils, in the body naturall.

6 Breath-wiſe.
Pſal. 104 30.

All theſe are expreſſed, or implied, in our Baptiſme. And now laſtly (to returne home to our purpoſe) proceeds from them, to come to us: is breathed from them, to inſpire us: Sent, by them, to be given us: Per Spiritum ſanctum qui datus eſt nobis, by the Holy Ghoſt which is given us: given to receive, and ſo, to be received of us. Which openeth the way and maketh the paſſage over, to the ſecond queſtion, ſi recepiſtis, Have ye received? And ſo, (as we ſee) the two parts, follow well and kindly, one upon the other. For, this now, is the laſt thing, to be heard of Him; that, it is enough, to heare of Him: but, that we are to receive Him alſo: and to give account to Saint Paul, that we have ſo done.

Rom 5. 5.

So then, we have now cleered the firſt queſtion, at our Baptiſme: and have heard. 1. That ſuch a one there is. 2. And that He is GOD. 3. GOD, in unitie of name. 4. Yet, in number, diſtinct; and diſtinct as a Perſon by Himſelfe. 5. A perſon by Himſelfe, yet not of Himſelfe, but proceeding. 6. Proceeding from both Perſons; that ſtand before Him, the Father and the Sonne. 7. And that breath-wiſe. And ſo, we have done with that. But yet, we have not done, though. For, the other queſtion muſt be anſwered too; no remedie, it imports us. For, as good not heare of Him at all, as heare, and not receive Him.

II. The ſecond part.

Thither then, I come. Si recipiſtis? Have ye recived the Holy Ghoſt? Wherein theſe three points. 1. That we are liable to this queſtion, and to the affirmative part of it, that we have, and ſo are bound to receive Him: For ſo, ſi preſuppoſeth. 2. If we ſo have, how to know it. 3. If we have not, how to compaſſe it.

How

The neceſſitie. How much it importeth us, to receive Him, we may eſteeme, by this, that S. Paul makes it, his article of Imprimis; begins with it, at the firſt, as the moſt needfull point.

1 Of receiving. Two things are in it. Firſt, that receive we muſt. Secondly, that it muſt be the Holy Ghoſt, we are to receive.

Receive? What need we receive any Spirit, or receive at all? May we not, out of our ſelves, worke that, will ſerve our turnes? No: For holy we muſt be, if ever we ſhall reſt in His holy Hill: for, without holineſſe, none ſhall ever ſee GOD. But holy we cannot be, by any habit morall, or acquiſite. There is none ſuch in all morall Philoſophie. As, we have our faith, by illumination: ſo, have we our holineſſe, by inſpiration: receive both; both, from without.

Heb. 12. 24.

To a habit the Philoſophers came, and ſo Chriſtians may: but that will not ſerve, they are to goe further. Our habits acuqiſite will lift us no further, than they did the Heathen men: no further than the place, where they grow, that is, earth and nature. They cannot worke beyond their kind (nothing can;) nor riſe higher, than their ſpring. It is not therefore Si habitum acquiſiſtis: but, ſi ſpiritum recepiſtis, we muſt goe by.

2 Of receiving. the Holy Ghoſt But then, why recepiſtis Spiritum Sanctum, the Holy Ghoſt? No receiving will ſerve, but of Him? The reaſon is, it is nothing here below, that we ſeeke: but, to heaven we aſpire. Then, if to heaven we ſhall, ſomething from heaven, muſt thither exalt us. If, Partakers of the divine nature, we hope to be (as, great and precious promiſes we have that we ſhall be) that can be no otherwiſe, than by receiving one, in whom the divine nature is. He being received, imparts it to us, and ſo makes us Conſortes divinæ naturæ; and that, is the HOLY GHOST.

1 Pet. 1. 4.

For, as an abſolute neceſſitie there is, that we receive the Spirit, els can we not live the life of nature: ſo, no leſſe abſolute, that we receive the holy Spirit, elſe can we not live the life of grace; and ſo conſequently, never come to the life of glorie. Recepiſtis Spiritum, gives the life naturall. Recipiſtis Spiritum Sanctum, gives the life ſpirituall.

1 Cor. 15. 45.

1. There holdeth a correſpondence, betweene the naturall and the Spirituall. The ſame way, the world was made, in the beginning, by the Spirit moving upon the waters of the deepe: the very ſame, was the world new made, (the Chriſtian world, or Church) by the ſame Spirit moving on the waters of baptiſme.

2. And looke, how in the firſt ADAM, we come to this preſent life, by ſending the breath of life, into our bodies. So, in the ſecond, come we to our hold, in the other life, by ſending the Holy Ghoſt into our ſoules.

3. By that Spirit, which CHRIST was conceived by; by the ſame Spirit, the Chriſtian alſo muſt be. Not to be avoided, abſolutely neceſſarie all theſe, it cannot be otherwiſe.

2 [a] Luc. 11. 24. Another neceſſitie of His receiving. For, [a] the houſe will not ſtand emptie long. One Spirit or other, holy, or unholy, will enter and take it up. We ſee, the greateſt part [b] Eſay 29. 10. of the world by farre, are entered upon, and held, ſome by the [b] ſpirit of ſlumber; that paſſe their time (as it were in a ſleepe) without any ſenſe of GOD, or religion at all. [c] Eſay 19. 14. Others by the [c] ſpirit of Godlineſſe; that reele to and fro, and every yeare are of a new [d] 1 Tim. 4. 1. religion. Others, by [d] the ſpirit of error; given over to beleeve lies through ſtrong illuſion. [e] Luke 11. 24. And they that ſeeme to know the truth, ſome with the [e] uncleane ſpirit, ſome [f] Iam 4. 5. with [f] the ſpirit of envie, or ſome ſuch (for they are many:) that, a kind of neceſſitie there is, to entertaine and receive the good ſpirit; that ſome or other evill ſpirit, from GOD, ſeaze not upon us. From which GOD deliver us.

3 A third neceſſitie there is, we receive Him: for that, with Him, we ſhall receive, what ever we want, or need to receive, for our ſoules good. And here, fall in all His Offices. By Him, [g] we are regenerate at the firſt, in our baptiſme. By Him after [h] confirmed, in the impoſition of hands. By Him after [i] renewed to repentance, when we fall away, by a ſecond impoſition of hands. By Him, [k] taught all our life long, that we know not; [l] put in minde of what we forget; [m] ſtirred up in what we are dull; [n] helped in our prayers; [o] releeved in our infirmities; comforted in our heavineſſe: in a word, [p] ſealed to the day of our Redemption, and [q] raiſed up againe in the laſt day. Goe all along, along, even from our Baptiſme, to our very Reſurrection, and we cannot miſſe Him, but receive Him we muſt.

[g] Tit. 3. 5. [h] Heb. 6. 2. [i] 1 Tim. 5. 22. [k] Ioh. 2. 27. [l] Ioh. 14. 26. [m] 2 Cor. 3. 6. [n] Rom. 8. 26. [o] Ioh. 14. 16. [p] Eph. 4 30. [q] Rom. 8. 11.

And on the other ſide, Si non recepiſtis, without Him received, receive what we will, nothing will doe us good: Receive the Word, it is but [r] a killing letter; receive Baptiſme, it is but Iohns Baptiſme; but a [ſ] barren element; receive His fleſh, [t] it profiteth nothing; receive CHRIST, it will not doe, for [u] Qui non habet Spiritum CHRISTI, hic non eſt Ejus, He that hath not His Spirit, is none of His. So, CHRIST renounces him, He hath no part in him. To receive CHRIST, and not the HOLY GHOST, is to no purpoſe. To conclude, if we receive not Him, we be but [x] animales, Spiritum non habentes, only men of ſoule, having not the Spirit. [y] Et animalis homo, the naturall man that never received the Spirit, neither perceiveth nor receiveth the things of GOD, hath nothing to doe with them. So that, Spiritum non habentes, is enough, and there needs no more (but onely that) to condemne us. All this, laid together, we ſee, Recepiſtis Spiritum, is no more than needs; and it muſt needs have an anſwer.

The next point is, how to certifie our ſelves, whether we have received this Spirit, or no. I ſay, [1] Whether the Spirit, firſt: [2] And then, whether that Spirit be the HOLY GHOST, after.

2 If we have received, how to know it.
1 Whether received the Spirit.

Of the Spirit, the ſignes are familiar. For if it be in us, (as the naturall Spirit doth) At the Heart it will beat: At the mouth it will breath: At the pulſe it will be felt. Some one of theſe may; but all theſe will not deceive us.

1 The Heart.

At the Heart we begin; for that is firſt, [a] Dabo vobis Cor novum & Spiritum novum. A new heart and a new Spirit we ſhall finde. [b] We ſhalbe renewed in the Spirit of our mind. Sanè novum ſuperveniſſe Spiritum, nova deſideria demonſtrant (ſaith Bernard:) That a new Spirit is received, no better way, to know, than by new thoughts, and deſires. That he that watches well, the Current of his deſires and thoughts, may know, whether, and what ſpirit it is, he is led by, old or new. Therefore our SAVIOVR CHRIST breathed into them, when He firſt gave them the HOLY GHOST, that they might receive Him, there within, even [c] in viſceribus, in the inward parts. [d] A timore tuo Domine concepimus Spiritum ſalutis: We ſhall know the Spirit is conceived, by the feare of GOD in our hearts; it is, as the Syſtole or drawing in, to refraine us from evill. And, we ſhall know it, by [e] Charitas Dei diffuſa eſt in cordibus noſtris, the love of GOD there ſhed abroad, in our hearts. Which is, as the diaſtole or dilating it out, to all, that good is.

2 The Speech.

But then, this every one may ſay; All is well within: and their word muſt be taken, wee cannot gain-ſay them. For no man knowes, in ſo ſaying, whether they ſay true, or no. Therefore we goe yet further, and ſay: Idem eſt vitæ & vocis organon, the breath that ſerves us for life, or to live by; the ſame ſerves us alſo for the voice, or to ſpeake by. So, that way yee ſhall know it. For if [f] in ore ipſorum non eſt ſpiritus, no breath be to be perceived in their mouthes; if they [g] ſpeake not thorow their throats, they are but Idols and no better. Will ye ſee it at the mouth? [h] Credidi, propter quod locutus ſum, ſaid he: And [i] habentes eundem Spiritum, if we have the ſame Spirit, (ſaith the Apoſtle) we ſhall doe no leſſe. This we know for certaine, that upon this day, the HOLY GHOST came in ſhape of tongues, and they are for ſpeech. And this likewiſe, that, upon the receiving the HOLY GHOST, theſe (here in the Text) and generally all other, ſpeake, and that with new tongues; not ſuch as they ſpake with before. The miracle is ceaſed: but the morall, holdeth ſtill; where the HOLY GHOST is received, there is ever a change in the dialect, a change from [k] curſed, uncleane, corrupt communication, unto [l] ſuch as becommeth Saints.

3 The Worke.

But then againe, becauſe even birds too may be, and are ſometimes taught, to ſpeake, (and that, holy phraſes for a need;) therefore further yet, to the pulſe we goe, and touch it. To the hand, to the worke, and enquire of that. The HOLY GHOST was firſt given and received by the [m] breath inward, for the Heart. Then, by [n] firy tongues, for the ſpeech. But ever after, and here in this place, the HOLY GHOST (we know) was given and received, by [o] laying on of hands: and that, to admoniſh us, that by impoſita, and by admota manus, by lifting up, and laying to our hands, wee may know, we have receiued Him: we have had laying on of hands, if we uſe laying or putting our hands to any good worke.

p Ier.17.9. q Tit.1.16. As for what is in the heart; p Quis cognoſcit illud? who knowes it? Not we our ſelves: our owne hearts, oft deceive us. And there is q a verbis conſitentur, confeſſe at the mouth, with a fact is negant, deny with the deeds: and that deceives too. But there

r 1 Theſſ.1 3. ſ Gal.5.6. t Iam.2.18. is r opus fidei, the worke of faith, from ſ fides quæ operatur, faith that worketh, that is, Saint Pauls faith; that can t ſhew it ſelfe by his working, that is, Saint Iames faith: and there, may well be the Spirit. But without workes, there, it may not be. For without workes, Saint Iames is flat, it is but u Iames 2. 24. u a dead faith, the carcaſſe of faith, and there is no Spirit in it. No Spirit, if no worke. For uſque adeò proprium eſt, operari Spiritui, ut niſi operetur, nec ſit: ſo kindly it is, for the Spirit to be working, as if it worke not, it is not. There is none, to worke: Spectrum eſt, non Spiritus, a flying ſhadow it is, a Spirit it is not, if worke it doe not.

And yet I cannot deny, workes there may be and motion, and yet no Spirit: as, in artificiall engins, Watches, and Iackes, and ſuch like. And a certaine artificiall thing there is in religion (we call it Hypocriſie) that by certaine pins and gins, makes ſhew of certaine workes and motions, as if there were Spirit, but ſurely Spirit there is none in them. Vaine men they are, that boaſt of the Spirit, without the worke: Hypocrites they are, that counterfeit the worke, without the Spirit. You ſhall eaſily diſcover theſe

Verſ.10, 12. workes, that they come not from the Spirit, by the two ſignes, in Pſal. L I. גבין, and גריבה, 1 conſtant, and 2 free. They that come from cunning, and not from the Spirit, ye ſhall know them by this, they be every foot out; they are not conſtant, they con-

Hoſ.6. 4. tinue not uniforme long, and when the barrell is about, or the plummets downe, they ſtay. But howſoever, long they will not hold, but vaniſh like the cloud, dry away like the dew of the morning, לא גביו no conſtancie.

And ye ſhall know them againe, by the other note גריבה. Which makes the difference, between the Creatures, and the Spirit. For the Creatures are produced from without: The Spirit doth emanare, proceed from within. So theſe, they have principium motus ab extra, that that makes them goe, is ſome thing, ſome engine without; they flow not freely, they come not kindly, as from within לא בריבה, no naturall motion, Ingenious but not ingenuous. Ingenuitie and conſtancie, the free proceeding, the conſtant continuing of them, will ſoone diſcloſe, whether they come from a Spirit or no; will ſoone ſhew, they come from the art of Hypocriſie, not from the Spirit of true pietie.

2 Whether receiued the Holy Ghoſt. And theſe will ſerve, to know whether from a Spirit. Now, whether that Spirit be Holy or no. For, divers times doth the Apoſtle diſtinguiſh, and ſay: We have not receiued this Spirit, but that; as Rom. V III. X V. II Tim. I. V II. and namely, I Cor. II. X II. that we have not receiued the Spirit of the world, but the holy Spirit which is of GOD. This ſame Spirit of the world, it is Sacer Spiritus (for there is no touching it) but not Sanctus. Sacer, as he called ſacra fames: for, ſancta fames he could never have called it. That ſpirit of the world, be it from policie, or be it from Philoſophie, both are res ſacræ (and ſanctæ alſo may be, as they may be uſed) but of themſelves ſecular they are, and from men: Holy, or from heaven they are not. But this Spirit, this Wind, muſt blow from heaven, not from our caves here beneath. And ſo you ſhall ſoone diſcerne it. Doe but marke the coaſts, whence and whither it bloweth, the motive and the marke, and you ſhall diſtinguiſh it ſtraight. For if, from a ſecular reaſon; if, to an end beneath; virtus ab imo it may be, virtus ab alto it is not.

Act. 2. 2.

Luke 24.49. Mica 6, 16. For example, I doe forbeare to ſinne: what is my motive? Becauſe (as Micah ſaith) it is againſt Omri's ſtatutes, ſome penall law; I ſhall incurre ſuch a penaltie, be lyable to ſuch an Action, if I doe not: It is well; but all this, is but the Spirit of the world: E Prætorio, non Sanctuario, bloweth out of Weſtminſter-Hall, not out of the Sanctuarie.

I goe further, to a better Spirit; Though there were no penall law, I forbeare to ſinne, becauſe it is a brutiſh thing, and ſo againſt reaſon: and ignominious, and ſo againſt my credit and reputation. Nay then, further yet; becauſe, I ſhall thereby endanger

endanger my ſoule, for that it will barre me of Heaven, or be a meanes to bring me to hell (for, the Heathen men tooke notice of both theſe places:) all this while, this is no more, than the Spirit of the Philoſophie ſchooles will teach: no more than might be taught in the ſchoole of Tyrannus, before Saint Paul ever came in it. It bloweth (this wind) out of Ariſtotles Gallery, not out of the Sanctuary yet: E Lycæo, non Sanctuario. But, if with eye to GOD, I forbeare: becauſe, in ſo doing, I ſhall offend Him, and doe evill, againſt the rule of His Iuſtice, the reverence and Majeſty of His Preſence, the awfull regard of His Power, the kinde reſpect of His Bountie and Goodneſſe; This now, commeth from the Sanctuary, this wind bloweth from Heaven; this is right Sanctus indeed. C. Verſ. 8

This is the Line. Againe, looke to the Levell. If it be Demetrius's end, here in the Chapter, Iſthinc eſt acquiſitio nobis, by this we have our advantage. If it be theirs, paremus nobis nomen, ſo I ſhall make my name famous upon earth, or any of that levell, it is, but of the world: ſacer Spiritus, not ſanctus. But, if of our well doing, GOD His will be the Center, and His glory the circumference: we doe it, not that our will, but His be done; not, our name, but His be hallowed: the act is holy, and the ſpirit is of the ſame kinde. Otherwiſe, philoſophicall, politike, morall it may be: theologicall, religious, holy it is not. Our line and our levell, or inducements or impediments to our doings, marke them, what coaſt they come from, and whither they bend, ye ſhall eaſily conclude; as before, whether recepiſtis ſpiritum; ſo here, whether recepiſtis ſanctum or no. And thus we know, whether we have received. But, if we have not, how then? How may wee (by the grace of GOD) ſo diſpoſe our ſelves, as we may receive Him. And now wee are come to the dutie of the day: For this, is the day of His receiving. If we have not received, how to procure it.

The wayes are two: 1. One, that wee lay no barres to keepe Him from us. 2. The other, that we uſe all good meanes to allure Him, to us.

Firſt, that we fall not into Saint Stephen's challenge, that we * reſiſt not the HOLY GHOST, and His comming. And reſiſt Him wee doe, if we lay any impediments in His way; nay, if we remove them not: As the manner is, as they doe, that draw the Curtaines, or open the Caſements, that would take in breath. 1 The removing impediments. * Act. 7. 51.

Of theſe, I finde three of note: quit they muſt bee all, or no receiving Him.

One, and a chiefe one, is Pride. For the HOLY GHOST will not [a] reſt, but upon the lowly, ſaith Eſay: nor GOD, give grace, but to the humble (ſaith Salomon.) That we therefore pray to Him, that giveth grace to the humble, to give us the grace to be humble, that ſo we may be meet to receive Him. For, at His firſt comming He came as a Dove, and did [c] light upon Him, that was Himſelfe [d] humble and meeke, like a Dove, and willeth us to learne that leſſon of Him, as that, which will make us meet to receive the Dove which He received, whoſe qualities are like His, of a meeke and quiet Spirit; which howſoever the world reckon of it, is with GOD a thing much ſet by. 1 pride. a Eſay 57. 15. b Prov. 3. 34. c Matth. 3. 16. d Matth. 11. 29. 1 Pet. 3. 4.

In the beginning, the Spirit moved on the waters, and at Baptiſme, it doth ſo: And our SAVIOVR CHRIST ſpeaking of the graces of the Spirit, doth it, in termes of water: and water (wee know) will ever to the loweſt place. Pride then is a barre, and humilitie a diſpoſing meanes, to the prime receiving the HOLY GHOST. Iohn. 7. 39.

Another impediment is Carnalitie. For ſpirituall, and carnall, are flat oppoſite. Quod ſanctum eſt, mundum eſt, ever: No holineſſe, without cleanneſſe. So that, the uncleane ſpirit muſt be caſt out, yer the HOLY GHOST received. A cleane box it muſt be, that is to hold this Oyntment. The Dove lights on no carrion. Into our Bodies, as a Temple, He is to come: as into a Stewes, He will not. And, that which we ſaid right now, of water, we here repeat againe. The Spirit in the beginning moved there, and at Baptiſme came thither againe; and His gifts are as ſtreames of water: and water 2 Carnally. 1 Ioh. 2. 27. 1 Cor. 6. 19.

3 Malice. But the third is, ex totâ ſubſtantiâ, againſt the HOLY GHOST: and that is, the ſpirit in us, that (as Saint Iames ſaith) luſteth after envie: after envie, or malice, or whatſoever ſavoureth of the gall of bitterneſſe; in which whoſoever are, S. Peter ſaith plainly, Acts 8. 23. they have no part, or fellowſhip, either in giving, or receiving the HOLY GHOST. The HOLY GHOST, as, in the body, He is expreſſed by the breath, and in that forme given by CHRIST: ſo, in the ſoule, by mutuall or reciprocall love, which is (as it were) the lives-breath, of the ſoule. So is His Nature; and ſo is His ſigne: the Gen. 8. 11. Dove brought an Olive branch, and that is the ſigne of love and amitie: and ſo is His Rom. 5. 5. Office, to ſhed abroad love in our hearts: And how can that be received, if malice be not firſt of all voided out? They are as oppoſite, as Saint Lukes fire from heaven, and Acts 2. 3. Saint Iames's fire from hell: one muſt be quenched, or the other will not burne. Iames 5. 6.

2. The uſing the meanes. Now, theſe being removed, 1 Pride, 2 Luſt, and 3 Malice, and ſo a place made; we are to invite the Spirit, by all good meanes Hee loveth, and as it were to gather wind as much as we can. To that end to get us to the place, and to viſit it oft, where this aire breatheth: and, that is (as we finde, Numb. XI. XVI.) the doore of the Sanctuary. If any be ſtirring, if any be to be found, there it is. No place on earth, which the Holy Spirit more frequenteth, hath duer commerce with, than the Holy places, Exod. 19. 24. where, the remembrance of His name is put; for, thither He will come to us, and bleſſe us, with His bleſſing.

1 prayer. Being there, it is but an eaſie leſſon, yet David thinkes meet to teach it us, by his Pſal. 119. 131. example; Os meum aperui, & Spiritum attraxi, To open our mouth and draw it in. And Zach. 12. 10. that opening, is by prayer. Zachary calleth it Spiritum precum: the Spirit, that is, the active inſpiration, or attraction of it, where wee expreſſe our deſire to draw Him in. Which very attraction or deſire, hath a promiſe, by the mouth of our SAVIOVR Luke 11. 13. CHRIST Himſelfe; that His Heavenly Father will give the HOLY GHOST αἰτοῦσιν αὐτὸν to them that will make petition, ſeeke and ſue, open their mouth, and pray for it.

2 The Word. Then ſecondly, looke, how the Breath and the Voice in naturalibus goe together; a Rom. 8. 9. even ſo doe the Spirit and the Word in the practice of Religion. The [a] HOLY b Iohn 1. 14. GHOST is CHRISTS Spirit, and [b] CHRIST is the Word. And of that Word, c 1 Pet. 1. 25. the Word [c] that is preached to us, is an abſtract. There muſt then needs be, a neareneſſe, and alliance, betweene the one and the other. And indeed (but by our default) Eſay 59. 21. The Word and the Spirit (ſaith Eſay) ſhall never faile, or ever part; but one be received, when the other is. We have a plaine example of it this day, in Saint Peters auditory (Acts II.) and another, in Cornelius and his family (Act. 10.) even in the Sermon-time, the HOLY GHOST fell upon them, and they ſo received Him.

Yea, we may ſee it by this, that, in the hearing of the Word, where He is not *re*Acts 24. 26. ceived, yet He maketh proffers, and worketh ſomewhat onward. Vpon Felix, tooke him with a ſhaking, and further would have gone, but that he put it over to a convenient time, which convenient time never came. And upon Agrippa likewiſe, ſomewhat it Acts 26. 28. did move him, and more it would, but that he was content to be a Chriſtian ἐν ὀλίγῳ, to take his religion, by a little (as it were upon a knives point) and was afraid to be a Chriſtian in multo, too much a Chriſtian.

That wee ſee not this effect, that with the Word the Spirit is not received as it would be, the reaſon is, it is no ſooner gotten, than it is loſt. We ſhould finde this effect, if after we had heard the Word, we could get us a little out of the noiſe about us, and withdraw our ſelves ſomewhither, where we might be by our ſelves, That, when Pſal. 85. 10. we have heard Him ſpeake to us, we might heare what He would ſpeake in us. When Eſay 30. 21. we have heard the voyce before us, we might heare the other behinde us, Hæc eſt via. Iob 4. 16. When, the voice that ſoundeth; the other of Iob, Vocem audivi in ſilentio: there, heare Him, reprove, teach, comfort us, within. Vpon which texts are grounded the ſoliloquies, the communing with our owne ſpirits, which are much praiſed by the Ancients, to this purpoſe: for, in meditatione exardeſcit ignis, by a little muſing or meditation, the Pſal. 39. 3. fire would kindle and be kept alive, which otherwiſe will die. And certaine it is, that many many ſparkes kindled, for want of this, goe out againe ſtraight: for, as faſt as it is written in our hearts, it is wiped out againe: as faſt as the ſeed is ſowne, it is picked up by the fowles againe, and ſo our receiving is in vaine, the Word and the Spirit are ſevered, which elſe would keepe together.

Laſtly, as the word and the Spirit; ſo the fleſh and the Spirit goe together. Not all fleſh; but this fleſh, the fleſh that was conceived by the HOLY GHOST, this is never without the HOLY GHOST, by whom it was conceived: ſo that, receive one, and receive both. Ever with this bloud, there runneth ſtill an artery, with plenty of Spirit in it: which maketh, that we eat there, eſcam ſpiritualem, a ſpirituall meat; and that in that Cup, we be made drinke of the Spirit. There, is not only impoſitio manuum, but after it, poſitio in manus; putting on of the hands, but putting it into our hands. Impoſitio manuum, putting on of hands, in Accepit panem & calicem: And poſitio in manus, putting it into our hands, in Accipite, edite, bibite. And ſo, we in caſe, to receive body, bloud, Spirit and all, if our ſelves be not in fault. 3 The Sacrament. 1 Cor 10 3. 12 13.

Now then, if we will invite the Spirit indeed; and if each of theſe, by it ſelfe in ſeverall, be thus effectuall to procure it: put them all, and binde them all together. Accipite verba, take to you words, Hoſe's words, words of earneſt invocation. Suſcipite inſitum verbum, receive, or take to you the Word (Saint Iames word) grafted into you, by the Office of preaching. Accipite corpus, accipite ſanguinem; take the holy myſteries of His body and bloud, and the ſame, the holy arteries of His bleſſed Spirit. Take all theſe in one, (the attractive of Prayer; the Word, which is Spirit and life; the bread of life, and the Cup of ſalvation:) and is there not great hope, we ſhall anſwer Saint Pauls queſtion, as he would have it anſwered, affirmativè? Have yee received? Yes; we have received Him. Yes ſure. Then, if ever; thus, if by any way. For on earth, there is no ſurer way, than to joyne all theſe: and He, ſo to be received, if at all. All together joyntly. Hoſ. 14. 7. Iam. 1. 21.

So, we began with hearing outward, and we end with receiving inward. We began with one Sacrament, Baptiſme; we end with the other, the Euchariſt. We began with that, where we heard of Him; and we end with this other, where we may and ſhall (I truſt) receive Him. And Almightie GOD grant, we ſo may receive Him at this good time; as in His good time, we may be received by Him, thither, whence He this day came of purpoſe to bring us, even to the Holy places made without hands, which is His heavenly kingdome, with GOD the Father who prepared it, and GOD the Sonne who purchaſed it for us. To whom, three Perſons, &c.

EPHES. CHAP. IV. VER. XXX.

Nolite contriſtari, &c.

And grieve not (or, be not willing to grieve) the HOLY SPIRIT of GOD; by whom ye are ſealed unto the Day of Redemption.

THIS Requeſt, or Counſell, or Caution, or Precept (or what yee will call it) of the Apoſtles is ſure very reaſonable: The HOLY GHOST, by whom we are ſealed to the Day of Redemption, that wee would not grieve Him.

Not the HOLY GHOST. Hee is the Spirit of the Great and High GOD: And ſo, for His Dignities ſake. Not Him againe, as by whoſe meanes we have our ſignature againſt the great Day of Redemption: And ſo, even for His benefits ſake. Theſe two, 1 For His Greatneſſe, or 2 for His Goodneſſe; Greatneſſe in Himſelfe, Goodneſſe to us: For either of theſe, or for both of theſe, we would be ſo reſpective of Him, as Not to grieve Him.

Not to grieve Him. He might well, and (as one would thinke) ſhould rather have ſaid, yeeld Him all cauſe of joy and contentment: It had beene but reaſon, ſo. Now, that, He doth not move: onely this; that we would not miniſter unto Him any cauſe of grievance: And what could He ſay leſſe? To ſuch a Perſon, and for ſuch a Benefit, it it is but even a ſmall pleaſure. If not rejoyce Him, yet Grieve Him not. And it is ſo reaſonable, I ſee not how well it can be denied Him.

Now then as we ſee it is but reaſonable (this Requeſt;) So is it exceeding fit for this time. It is for the HOLY GHOST: And this is the HOLY GHOSTS Feaſt. It mentioneth His Sealing (for a reaſon:) And this is (as I may call it) His firſt Sealing-day: This the day, on which the Spirit of GOD firſt ſet His Seale upon the Fathers of our faith, the bleſſed Apoſtles. On which He then did, and on which He ever will, though not in like manner, yet in like effect (it being His owne day) viſit us from on high, if by ſome grievance or other, we diſappoint Him not, and ſo drive Him away.

So, what eaſier requeſt than this, Nolite contriſtari? And what fitter time to move for the HOLY GHOST, than upon His owne Feaſt and upon His Sealing-day? And this is the Summe.

The Parts fall out evidently two, 1 The Party, for whom this Requeſt is preferred: The Diviſion
2 And a Duty, or (it is not worth making a duty) rather a common ordinary Courteſie to be done Him. 1. The Party, The Holy Spirit of GOD, by whom we are ſealed to the Day of Redemption. 2. The Duty (or what yee will call it) Nolite contriſtari.

In the Party, two Motives there be: 1 His Perſon, and 2 His Benefit. 1. His Perſon in theſe: The Holy Spirit of GOD. 2. His Benefit in theſe: By whom yee are ſealed to the Day of Redemption. His Perſon ſet forth in the originall, with very great energie: ſuch, as our tongue is no able to expreſſe it fully enough. For it is not Πνεῦμα ἅγιον Θεοῦ, but with greater emphaſis; but three words, and three Articles, every word his ſeverall Article by it ſelfe, τὸ πνεῦμα, τὸ ἅγιον, τοῦ Θεοῦ. The Spirit, not a Spirit; and not Holy, but The Holy; nor of GOD, Θεοῦ; but of ὁ Θεός, The GOD; that is, the onely, living and true GOD. All, The's; never an A among them. I. 1

Then, His Bounty or Benefit vouchſafed us: By whom, we have our ſealing to the Day of Redemption. Wherein, theſe foure points come to be weighed: 1. Of Redemption. First, What and how it is. 2. Then, that it hath a Day; the Day of our Redemption. 3. That, againſt that Day, we are to be Sealed. 4. That, The HOLY GHOST keepeth that Seale, and His Office it is to paſſe it to us. This is the Benefit. 2

Now, either of theſe is a Motive of it ſelfe. 1 His Perſon: Grieve not the Holy Spirit of GOD, and there ſtay: for, that, of it ſelfe, is reaſon enough: 2 Or, leave out His Perſon, ſet that by, and ſay, but even, Him, Who ſeales unto you, ſo great a favour, as to ſave you, at the great Day: Him (be He what He will, GOD or Man, Spirit or fleſh, holy or common) grieve Him not. This is reaſon enough too: Grieve Him not, for His owne: If not for His owne, yet not, for His Seales ſake.

The Duty followeth. To this Perſon great, and of great bountie beſide (to ſpeake as Naamans Servants did to Him) Si rem grandem dixiſſet Apoſtolus; if the Apoſtle had injoyned us ſome great peece of Service, we ought not to have thought much of it. How much more then, when he ſaith, but this, Doe not grieve Him (and there is all?) which is no poſitive, or actuall peece of ſervice, of paines, or of perill onely a privative, of diſſervice (as they call it) which is ever, as little as can be required: Non contriſtari. II.

Non contriſtari: or at leaſt, Nolite contriſtari; for, there be two degrees: 1. That we doe it not. 2. That willingly wee doe it not. That wee have a will not to doe it. Which reading, offers more grace. For, much depends upon our willingneſſe or not willingneſſe to it. 1 2

In both which, we have 1 firſt to weigh, whether we can grieve Him, or He be grieved: (that ſo we may underſtand the phraſe, and take it right.) 2 Then, how it is, we doe it, and what thoſe grievances be; that ſo, we may take notice of them, and be carefull to avoid them.

3. Laſt of all, the fitting it to the Time and ſhewing it ſeaſonable. For, by occaſion of the Perſon, His Feaſt; and by occaſion of the Day of Redemption, the Day of Sealing alſo will fall in; and the intended action, with it. Which (as we ſhall ſhew) is it ſelfe, a kinde of Signature. Doe it not; This time, doe it not: It is His owne 3

Feaſt, now; It is His Sealing-Day, this; Now then, Nolite contriſtari. Thus lye the Parts. Of which, that what ſhall be ſpoken, &c.

I. Grieve not.

TWo ſorts of Perſons there be, that (if we be well adviſed) we would be loth to grieve: 1 Great Perſons; 2 and ſuch as carry the reputation of being Good. Not Great, in regard of their power: They may doe us a diſpleaſure: The motive of feare. Not good, in regard of their bounty: Others are, and we may be, the better for them: The motive of hope. If He be Great, though He Seale us nothing, no wiſdome, to offend Him. If He be to Seale us a favour (though otherwiſe He be not great) for His favours ſake favour Him ſo much, as grieve Him not. Either of theſe available; but where they meet, there is vis unita. Specially, if we adde, In quo vos; that our parts be in it; and Signati eſtis, that either He already hath, or is ready to doe it for us: The motive of love, and of the greateſt love, the love of our ſelves. Then it comes home indeed. Theſe three meet all in this Partie. 1. He is τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τοῦ θεοῦ. 2. Sigillum habet. 3. In quo vos.

1 Not the Spirit of GOD.

I begin with Quantus, how great. He is The Spirit of GOD. And were it but the Spirit of man, our owne Spirit; Sinnes of the greater ſize, would be forborne, as for other divers, ſo even for this reaſon, that they be gravamina Spiritus, grievances againſt our owne Spirit; which, every one feels, whoſe conſcience is not ſeared. And if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Eſchew them, for that they breed Singultum & ſcrupulum cordis, the up-braiding or yexing of the heart (as [a] Abigail excellently termeth it;) or (as [b] Salomon) vulnus ſpiritus, the wound, or gall of the Spirit; or (as [c] Eſay) compunctionem, the pricke or ſting of conſcience; or (as our [d] SAVIOVR Himſelfe) a worme which once bred, never dies, nor, never leaves gnawing: he had ſaid enough. But this, even the Heathen could have ſaid too.

a 1 Sam. 25. 31.
b Prov. 18. 14.
c Eſ. 29. 10.
d Marke 9. 44.

The Apoſtle doth like an Apoſtle; tels us truly, there is a greater matter 'longs to it than ſo. There is a farre higher Spirit than ours, than any in man (our Spirit is nothing to it) the Spirit of GOD: they be grievances againſt it.

The Spirit of GOD.
b Eſ. 48. 16.

To ſpeake then of the Spirit of GOD: [a] GOD is a Spirit; and [b] GOD hath a Spirit. Hath many, created, in His power, and at His command: but hath one, one above all, uncreated, intimum ſubſtantiæ, of His owne ſubſtance: Knowne ever, by the article τὸ, (as Saint Baſil obſerveth) The Spirit, the Soveraigne Spirit: Styled ever, with this addition, His owne Spirit; the Spirit not of any Saint, in concreto or in abſtracto, but even of GOD Himſelfe.

Ioh. 3. 8.

Our SAVIOVR CHRIST teacheth us, to take notice of Him, as we doe of the Winde; By His effect. For the wind: it is a body of aire, but ſo thinne and ſubtile, as it is next neighbour to a Spirit. Wee ſee foule rule here in the world ſometimes, houſes blowne downe, trees blowne up by the roots. When we ſee this, we know ſtraight, this cannot be done without ſome power. And that power (we are ſure) cannot ſubſiſt of it ſelfe (it is an accident:) muſt (needs) have his inherence in ſome ſubſtance. That ſubſtance, if it be viſible, we call it a body: if inviſible, a Spirit. So our SAVIOVR tells us, Spiritus eſt qui ſpirat. It is the wind did this, blew all theſe downe.

And even ſo, of the Spirit of GOD, when (as upon this day) they that could ſcarce ſpeake one tongue well; on a ſudden, were able perfectly to ſpeake to every nation under heaven, every one in his owne tongue: This (we know) could not come to paſſe, but by ſome power. And ſure we are, that power muſt have for His Subject, ſome ſubſtance: And not any viſible or bodily; Then, ſome Spirit it muſt be: And no Spirit in the world could effect this: And ſo, the Spirit of GOD.

But the relation of theſe tongues, depends upon S. Lukes credit. There was after, a more ſtrange and famous operation, which in all Stories we finde. The Temples of Idols Idols blowne downe all the world over : yea, the world it ſelfe blowne quite about, turned up-ſide downe (as it were) from Paganiſme, and the worſhip of Heathen gods to the truth of Chriſtian Religion. And that, maugre the Spirit of the World, which bluſtred, and bent it ſelfe againſt it, totis viribus. This we finde : And for certaine, this worke and this power could not come from any other Spirit, but the Spirit of GOD only. Thus, we take notice of Him, by His effects : and of His Greatneſſe, by the greatneſſe of His effects.

The Spirit of GOD ; and the Holy Spirit : what needs this ? To make Him great (as the world goes) what needed Holy ? Or, if a title muſt be added, to that end, there were other ſtyles many, in the eye of fleſh, more magnificent and likely to ſhew Him for Great, than this of Holineſſe. The Spirit of Principality, of Courage, Power, Government ; divers other. And all theſe, are from Him too ; He the fountaine of all. So the Apoſtle tels us, I Cor. XII. And, though the Spirit be all theſe ; yet choice is made of none of all theſe, but only of this one [Holy] from among them all, τὸ ἅγιον. And His title, is not The High and Mighty : nor, The Great and Glorious : but only, the Holy Spirit. Nor, doe the Seraphins and Powers of Heaven cry, Magnus, or Celſus, or Fortis, thrice ; but Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus ; Holy and thrice Holy, to GOD Himſelfe : making choice (I doubt not) of His Soveraigne Attribute, to laud and magnifie His glorious Name by. Which teacheth us a leſſon (if we would learne it :) That, it is, the Attribute in GOD, which of all other, He doth ; and which of all other, we ſhould moſt eſteem of. And by vertue of this (if we kept right) Places, and Times, and Perſons, and Things Sacred ſhould be in regard accordingly. For this we may be ſure of: were there in GODS titles, a title of higher account ; the Spirit of GOD, ſhould have been ſtiled by it. But in GOD, Holy, Holy, is before Lord of Hoſts : His Holineſſe, firſt ; His Power, after.

2 The Holy Spirit.

Eſay 6. 3.

Thus, have we two reaſons de non gravando : 1 Firſt, were He but the Holy Spirit, for that, He would be ſpared. For, without all queſtion, He is the more to be ſet by, by reaſon of that Attribute : It is GODS chiefe, as ye may ſee, in the High Prieſts forehead ; as ye may heare, out of the Angels mouthes.

3 The Holy Spirit of GOD

Exod. 28. 36. Eſay 6. 3.

2 Then againe, that He is GODS ; and not a Spirit, but The Spirit of GOD ; we will forbeare Him ſomewhat (I truſt) for His ſake, whoſe He is. Put theſe two together.

And to theſe two for a ſurpluſage joyne that, He is not onely Dei, but Deus ; Of GOD, but GOD alſo : and then, we have our ful weight for this part, for His Greatneſſe.

And this we ſhewed, laſt Feaſt. We are baptized into Him : We beleeve in Him : We yeeld Him equall glorifying : We bleſſe by Him (or, in His name) no leſſe than of the other two : So, in the Deity, He is. And a Perſon He is : For, to Seale (which He is ſaid here to doe ;) to ſeale, is ever an act perſonall. Thither then, I now come, even from His Greatneſſe to His Goodneſſe.

2 The Holy Spirit of GOD, By whom ſealed.

For He is not great, as the Great CHAN : but, He is Good withall. And great, and good withall, that carries it ever : If, in quo Vos come to it, that this goodneſſe reach to us.

And ſure, this Party (His Greatneſſe ſet apart) is, to us, the Author of many a benefit. No perſon of the three, hath ſo many, ſo diverſe denominations as He ; And they be all, to ſhew the manifold diverſitie of the gifts, He beſtoweth on us. They count them. 1. [a] His מרחפת, or agitation, which maketh the vegetable power in the world. 2. His [b] נפש היח, Spirit or ſoule of life, in the living Creatures. 3. His [c] חיים נשמה, heavenly Spirit of a double life, in mankind. 4. Then, that in [d] Bezaleel, that gave him excellencie of art. 5. That in [e] the LXX Elders, that gave them excellencie of wiſdome to governe. 6. That in [f] Balaam and the Sibylls, that gave them the word of prophecie, to foretell things contingent. 7. That of the [g] Apoſtles (this day) that gave them skill, to ſpeake all tongues. All theſe are from Him. All theſe he might, but, doth not reckon up, any of them. And that, becauſe, though they be from the Holy Spirit of GOD, yet not from Him, as Holy ; but, as the Spirit of GOD onely, without eye or reference to this Attribute [Holy] at all.

But from the Holy Spirit (or the Spirit, as He is Holy) commeth the gratum faciens, the gift of gifts, the gift of grace, which He beſtoweth on His Saints and Servants, and maketh them ſuch, by it. We waive all the former, all the gratis datæ, and take our ſelves only to this. And here againe, there come in upon us, as many more. 1. The grace [a] reproving and checking them within (when they are ready to go aſtray) Spiritus reflans, the wind againſt them, [b] not ſuffering them to goe into Aſia or Myſia (when they ſhall doe no good there) but making them even wind-bound as it were. 2. Spiritus afflans, the wind with them, [c] guiding them, and giving them a good paſſe into all truth. 3. The grace [d] teaching them what they knew not, and calling to their minds, that they did know, and have forgot. (And ſo, Spiritus difflans blowing away and ſcattering, as it were, the miſts of error and forgetfulneſſe.) 4. The grace [e] quickning them and ſtirring them up, when they grow dull, and even becalmed. 5. The grace inſpiring, and [f] enditing their requeſts, when they know not what, or how to pray. 6. The Spirit breathing, and [g] ſhedding abroad His love in their hearts: which makes them [h] goe bound in the ſpirit, and (as it were) with full ſaile to Ieruſalem (when it is for His ſervice.) 7. And laſt, the ſpirit [i] ſealing them an aſſurance, of their eſtates to come: which is the moſt ſoveraigne of all the ſeven; as that, which doth ſanctifie (that is) ſever and ſet us apart, from the reſt of the world, and proprios dicare, make us His owne peculiar.

Now, this Benefit we finde (here) woven and twiſted with another: For, two are mentioned, [1] Redeeming, and [2] Sealing. We muſt looke to ſuum cuique. Both, are not the HOLY GHOSTS: One belongs to CHRIST. His, the Office to redeeme, and that day (the day of Redemption) His. The other, to the HOLY GHOST. The Seale is His; and His, the day of ſealing. We are to paſſe both theſe Offices. To be redeemed, queſtionleſſe: But, take this withall; it is not enough, that (to be redeemed) if by this Seale alſo, it be not paſſed to us.

Of theſe then briefly. 1. Redemption there is. 2. That, hath a day. 3. Againſt that day, we to be ſealed. 4. The HOLY GHOST hath that Seale: He is to doe it; that Office is His.

CHRISTS is firſt: we muſt then, goe a little from the HOLY GHOST: we will come to Him againe, ſtraight.

1 Redemption.

Oft we have heard; in Redemption, there is emption (a buying) and Re (that is) backe: a buying backe of that, which formerly hath beene loſt, or made away.

It is of two ſorts: [1] Reall, and [2] Perſonall. Redemption reall, of our eſtates, lands, or goods: Redemption perſonall, of our owne ſelves, ſoules and bodies. This, in the Text, ſeemeth to be perſonall: In quo vos, by whom you; you your ſelves: There is not mention of any poſſeſſions. And ever, of the twaine, this is the greater. You know, who ſaid Skin for Skin, all that a man hath, to redeeme himſelfe. But indeed, upon the matter; this Redemption, is of both. For, CHRISTS redemption, is not of one halfe; but, a totall entire redemption both of Perſons and Eſtates.

Now, mens perſons come to need redeeming, by Captivitie: And in that caſe, there muſt be a ranſome. Mens eſtates, come to need it, upon a Sale out-right: and in that, there needs a new Purchaſe.

We were gone both wayes. Both, are in the VII. to the Rom. at the XXIII. Verſe, there is a law in our members leading us captive: when, either we are taken, and carried away by ſtrong hand, with a tentation: or over-raught, by the ſleights of the enemie. At the XIV. verſe: there is a ſale, Carnall and ſold under ſinne: when, for ſome conſideration, as we thinke (but many times, ſcarce valuable) we make away our eſtates, by our owne voluntary act.

CHRIST redeemes us from both. His Ranſome yee ſhall finde, 1 Tim. 2. 6. Ἀντίλυτρον. And His Purchaſe, Chap. 1. 14. Redemptionem περιποιήσεως; that is of Purchaſe, plaine. His purſe went not for either, but His Perſon. His death, as the High Prieſts, freed us from captivitie, His bloud, as the bloud of the Covenant was the price, that cleared our eſtate, from all former bargaines and ſales.

This

This Redemption hath a Day. But by this reckoning, that Day ſhould be paſt. The Day of His Paſſion, was the Day of that payment, and that is paſt: How can we be ſealed againſt it, then? But (if ye marke it well) Lightly, there are more dayes, than one, goe to a full Redemption: Two, at leaſt: And, till the ſecond come, the Redemption is not compleat. 2 The Day of Redemption.

In the Reall: there is one day of 1 paying the money; another, of 2 putting in poſſeſſion, ever. That (lightly) is not the ſame day; but ſometimes, a good while after.

In the Perſonall: 1 One day, when concerning a Priſoner, a condemned man, it is graciouſly ſaid, by His Majeſtie, He ſhall not dye. 2 Another, when this is put under Seale, and brought to the priſon, for his releaſe: And poſſibly, a good diſtance, betweene theſe.

I know, all is counted as good as done, when the money is paid, or the word ſpoken: But, the Priſoner lyeth by it ſtill; and the poſſeſſion is out of our hands, till the ſecond day commeth: So, that is the Day of Redemption conſummate.

And even ſo, ſtands it with us. The Ranſome was paid downe; The Sentence reverſed, the day of His Paſſion. The putting us in poſſeſſion, the perfect ſetting us free; that, hath another day, not yet come. For, out of poſſeſſion we are as yet; and, in a kinde of priſon, we are ſtill. The firſt day, the pay-day, is paſt; we hold a memory of it, of all dayes, on Good-friday. But Himſelfe tells us, of another day after that (the day of His ſecond appearing) and, when that comes, then He bids us lift up our heads and looke up cheerefully; for then our Redemption drawes nigh, is even hard at hand; (that is) our full, perfect, plenary Redemption, indeed. And till that come, for all the firſt fruits of the Spirit, Wee grone ſtill, as ſubject to vanity and corruption (our priſon-irons, as it were) and all the Creatures together with us, doe the like. Thus farre Redemption, and the Day of it: And thus farre CHRISTS office. Luke 21.28. Rom.8.22,23.

Now betweene theſe two Redemption-dayes (the firſt and the ſecond) commeth in the Seale. And, againſt that ſecond day come (which is in truth, the very Day of full redemption) it will ſtand us in hand, to provide, we be Sealed, and have this marke of Separation. It is exceeding materiall. No claime of redemption without it. In vaine ſhall we ſay, we are redeemed; unleſſe, we then have this Seale to ſhew. Therefore, not to reſt upon Redemption with a blancke, or the conceit of that: but know, there is a further matter ſtill (even obſignati eſtis) and looke to that. For, when that Day comes, all will go by it. In very deed (upon the point) the Day it ſelfe goes by it: for, if ſealed, then a Day of Redemption: If otherwiſe, then no Day of Redemption, but a Day of utter deſolation. 3 Ye are ſealed againſt that day.

Ye have a Type of this, in the Old Teſtament (Ezek.9.) Six fellowes came forth with axes, to make havocke and deſtroy. There goes one before, and makes a Tau in the fore-heads of ſome certaine perſons: They, and none but they, ſpared: The reſt, hewed in peeces every mothers Sonne. Ezek.9.4.

The like againe, in the New Teſtament (Apoc.7.) The foure Angells hold the foure windes, readie to deſtroy the earth. But firſt goeth one with a Seale; and a proclamation there is, to make ſtay, till we have Sealed ſome: and (that done) as for the reſt, deſtroy them and ſpare not. As much to ſay: Theſe with the Seale, are they, to whom the redemption ſhall be applied, and for whom onely, it is availeable. Paſſe over theſe: Theſe are mine, I ſee my Seale upon them. The reſt, neſcio eos; I finde not my marke, I know them not. Doe with them, what ye will. Revel.7.2.

And (becauſe I ſpake of paſſing over) in the Paſſe-over, it was ſo; both acts, there. The Lambe ſlaine, There is Redemption: The poſts ſtroken with hyſſope dipped in the bloud, There is the Signature. Anſwerable to theſe two, with us; Redemption by the SONNE of GOD, at Eaſter: And the Sealing by the HOLY GHOST at Whitſuntide. Exod.12.6,7.

But, further yet: Theſe with the Seale, not onely ſave them, deſtroy them not: but,

Heb.4.11. Matth.25.21. Matth.25.34. but, let them alſo enter into my reſt, my glory, my joy. I did not onely ranſome their perſons; but, I redeemed alſo their eſtates: purchaſed an eſtate of bliſſe, for them and in their names. This was prepared by the FATHER, redeemed by the SONNE, and now, the conveyance of it ſealed by the HOLY GHOST: Let them poſſeſſe it.

And by this, ye ſee, how great matters both perſonall and reall, depend upon this ſeale: how much it importeth us, not to miſſe it. What reckoning we now make of it, how light, it skills not: The day will come, if we had the whole world to give, we would, to be found with ſeale upon us.

4. By whom ye are ſealed. This ſeale (which makes up all, and without which nothing is authenticall) is in the diſpenſing and diſpoſing of the Holy Ghoſt. We are therefore of neceſſitie to paſſe His Office alſo: that ſo, all the Trinitie may co-operate, and every Perſon have a hand, in the worke of our Salvation. remember, I have told you heertofore, that CHRIST, without the Holy Ghoſt, is as a deed, without a ſeale; as a Teſtator, without an Executour. It is ſo: For all he hath done; Redemption, or no redemption goeth by this ſeale: all, that CHRIST hath wrought for us; by that, the Holy Spirit doth worke in us. And the Apoſtle, as he ſaith here, He the partie, by whom ye are ſealed, to the day of redemption: So he might have added, and without whom, ye are left blanck, for the day of deſtruction. For, by and from Him we have it: and by and from any other, we have it not.

And, if it be not to be had, from any other: We may well thinke it excludeth our ſelves, and our owne ſpirit. There were (I wot well) in the heathen, and may be in the Chriſtian, other good morall vertues: But, they will not ſerve, to ſeale us againſt the day, here ſpecified. One may have them all, and be never the nearer, at the day of redemption. That, which is, then, to ſtand us in ſtead (let us not deceive our ſelves) we ſpinne it not out of our ſelves, as the Spider doth her web: It is of the nature, of an aſpiration, or of an impreſſion. It is from without; as breathing, and, as ſealing is. And it is the breath of this Spirit (the Spirit of GOD:) and the print of His ſeale, muſt doe this. From without, it commeth, from the Spirit of GOD, not our owne ſpirit. That we phanſie not, we may have it, ſome other way, from our owne ſelves. It is Hee, that hath made us, and not we our ſelves, GOD the Father: It is He, that hath redeemed us, and not we our ſelves, GOD the Sonne: and, it is He that hath ſealed us, and not wee our ſelves, GOD the HOLY GHOST: That the whole glory may redound to the bleſſed Trinitie, and hee, that rejoyceth, may rejoyce in the LORD.

Then to end this point. 1. There is a day in comming. 2. A day of redemption to ſome it is; and may prove ſo, to us. 3. To us it may, if wee bee found ſealed. 4. Found ſealed we cannot be, but by the HOLY GHOSTS meanes, wee muſt be beholden, to Him: He keepes the ſeale: He ſets it to. 5. To Him we ſhall be beholden, and He will ſet it to, If we grieve Him not. Why then, this brings us directly to the duty, Nolite contriſtari, Grieve Him not.

II. The duties.

I. Grieve not. This Partie, whoſe favour may thus much ſtead us; and that, againſt a time wee ſhall ſo much ſtand in need of it; what can we ſay, or doe worthy of Him? We (no doubt) will riſe ſtraight in our magnificall loftie ſtyle, and ſay, What? Why, worke Him all poſſible joy and jubilee; and all, too little. Sure, it were ſo to be wiſhed. But heare you, Interim, I would (ſaith the Apoſtle) we would, but doe thus much for Him, as not grieve Him. Even as, in another place touching GODS Name; wee in our riſing veine, would ſay, GODS Name. What, but glorifie it, make it famous, renowned every where? Ye ſay well, ſaith He; In the meane time, I would His Name, might 1 Tim.6.1. not bee evill ſpoken of by your meanes, Let your lætificat, and glorificat alone, and but even Nolite contriſtari. The Apoſtle pleads but for that; that will content Him: And I would, He might not faile of that, till the other come.

And

And that (I truſt) He ſhall not faile of, Non contriſtari. We will never ſtand with Him for this. It is but a ſmall matter, this; but even rationabile obſequium, a requeſt of great modeſtie; rather a courteſie, than a duty, Not to grieve. Rom. 12 1.

Not to grieve? Why reaſon would (ſaith Salomon) we ſhould not greive any of our neighbours, ſeeing they dwell by us, and doe us no hurt. But (as I ſaid) not the Great, if there be any wiſdome: nor the Good, if there be either grace, or good nature in us. 1 Not any man. Pr. 3 29.

Well, howſoever we deale with men, here (high or low, good or otherwiſe) in any wiſe take heed of offernig it, to GOD. Why (ſaith Eſay) is It not enough for you to grieve men, but will ye grieve my GOD alſo? Provoke we Him (ſaith the Apoſtle) Are we ſtronger than He? As if he ſhould ſay, That were extreame folly. 2 Not GOD. Eſa. 7. 13.

But yet one ſtep further: I ſay, and CHRIST ſaith as much: If God, yet not the Holy Spirit of GOD though; not that Perſon. Sinnes and grievances againſt the other two, may and ſhall; Sinne againſt Him, ſhall never be forgiven. Grieve not Him then, at any hand, 3 Not the Spirit of GOD. Mat. 12 32.

But I aske: Can we grieve the Spirit of God, that is, God? Can He be grieved? Indeed, they be two Queſtions: 1 Can we? and 2 Can He? I ſhould anſwer ſomewhat ſtrangely (but truly) to ſay, We can, and He cannot. For we may (on our parts) grieve; (that is) doe what in us lieth, to grieve Him. And with Him, the endevour, is all; and to doe what we can, habetur pro facto, though the effect follow not. This, we can: So badly demeane our ſelves; as, if it were poſſible by any meanes in the world, that griefe could be made to fall into the divine Eſſence (let Him looke to it) we would doe that, ſhould provoke it in Him; that, ſhould even draw it from Him. Let Him thanke the high ſuper-eminent perfection of His nature, that is not capable of it: If it were, or any way could be, we would put Him to it. 1 Whether we can grieve.

Now, I finde in the Goſpell (from our SAVIOVRS owne mouth) he that looketh on a woman with luſt after her, hath (on his part) committed adulterie with her: (the woman in the meane while, remaining chaſt, as never once thinking of any ſuch matter.) Then, if the one Partie may be an Adulterer, and the other (as I may ſay) not adultered: why not, in like ſort, one grieve, and yet the other not grieved? Alwaies, this uſe we may make of it, ad exaggerandam peccati malitiam, to aggravate ſome ſinnes, and ſhew the heynouſneſſe of ſome ſinners, that doe (on their part) all they can, to doe it; and that is all one, as if they did it. This is * Tertullian. Matt. 5 28.

But, GOD forbid, it ſhould lie in the power of fleſh, to worke any griefe in God. or, that we ſhould once admit this conceipt, the Deitie to be ſubject to this, or the like perturbations, that we be. And yet, both this paſſion of griefe, and divers other (as, anger, repentance, jealouſie) we read them aſcribed to God in Scripture: And, as aſcribed in one place, ſo denied as flatly in another. One where it is ſaid, It repented GOD, He had made Saul King: In the ſame place by and by after, The Strength of Iſrael, is not as man, that He can repent. One where, GOD was touched with griefe of heart: Another, There is with Him the fulneſſe of all joy for ever; which excludeth all griefe quite. 1 Sam. 15 11. Gen. 6. 6. Pſal. 16. 11.

How is it then? How are we to underſtand this? Thus: That when they are denied; that, is to ſet out unto us, the perfect ſteddineſſe of the Nature divine, no waies obnoxious to theſe our imperfections. And that, is the true ſound Divinitie.

But, when they are aſcribed, it is for no other end, but even humanum dicere, for our infirmitie, to ſpeake to us our owne language, and in our owne termes; ſo to worke with us the better. Lightly, men doe nothing ſo ſeriouſly, as when they doe it in paſſion: Nor indeed, any thing throughly at all, or (as we ſay) home, unleſſe it be edged with ſome kind of affection. Conſequently, ſuch is our dull capacitie, we never ſufficiently take impreſſion, God will doe this, or that to purpoſe; except He be ſo repreſented unto us, as we uſe our ſelves to be, when we goe through with a matter. In puniſhing, we pay not home, unleſſe we be angrie: When GOD then is to puniſh, He is preſented unto us, as angrie, to note to us, He will proceed as effectually, as if He Rom. 6. 19.

were ſo indeed. We are not carefull enough (we thinke) of that we love, unleſſe there be with our love, ſome mixture of jealouſie: When GOD then, would ſhew, how charie He is of the entireneſſe of our love towards Him; He is ſaid, to be a jealous GOD. We alter not what once we have ſet downe, but when we repent: When GOD then, changeth his courſe formerly held, He is made, as if He did repent (though, ſo to doe, were ever His purpoſe.) And ſo here: we withdraw not our ſelves, from whom we have converſed with before, but upon ſome grievance: When the Spirit of GOD then, withdraweth Himſelfe for a time, and leaves us, He is brought in as grieved. For that if it were otherwiſe delivered, it would not ſo affect us, nor make in us the impreſſion, that this way it doth. So that, Grieve Him not, that is (in direct termes) Give Him not cauſe to doe that, which in griefe men uſe to doe, to withdraw Himſelfe, and to forſake you. If yee doe, beleeve this; He will as certainely give you over, as if Hee were grieved in earneſt. This is from Saint Auguſtine.

How to have uſe of this phraſe.

By this time, we know how to conceive of this phraſe aright. Now, how to have uſe of it. And of this humanum dicit, this uſe we may have. Firſt, upon theſe places, where we thus finde affections attributed to God, Our rule is ever, to reflect the ſame affection upon our ſelves, which is put upon Him; to be jealous over our ſelves, to be angrie, or grieved with our ſelves, for that, which is ſaid to anger, or to grieve GOD. And that, upon this Soliloquie with our ſelves, That, how light ſoever we ſeeme to make of ſinne, yet in that, it is ſaid, thus, to grieve GODS Holy Spirit it muſt needs be ſome grievous matter certainly. And yet (me thinks) it toucheth not the Spirit of GOD though: He ſhall loſe nothing by it. He needs not to grieve at it. Of the twaine, it ſhould rather ſeeme to concerne us, we may come ſhort of our Redemption, by the meanes; and (a worſe matter than that) be caſt into eternall perdition. The loſſe is like to be ours. And is this ſaid to grieve the Holy Spirit of GOD, and ſhall it not grieve us, whom it more neerely concerneth? Shall we be ſaid to grieve Him with it, and not our ſelves be greeved for it? This, or ſome, to like effect.

2 Then, it teacheth us (this phraſe) withall, what in this caſe we are to doe, when it happeneth. Sure, even that, which we would doe, to one, greived by us (whom we make ſpeciall account of, and would be right loth to loſe his favour:) never to leave, but to ſeeke, by all meanes, to recover him; by ſhewing our ſelues ſorry, and grieved, for grieving of him; by vowing, never to doe the like more; by undertaking any thing, that may win him againe. The onely way to remedie it, is, to take us to the ſame affection: As here, that it grieve us to doe any thing, may turne Him to griefe, or, if we have done it, never ceaſe to be grieved with our ſelves, till we have recovered Him; His favour, and His grace againe.

2 How we doe greeve Him.

Now then, were it not well, to take notice of theſe grievances, that we might avoid, not offer them: and ſo fulfill the Apoſtles, Nolite contriſtari? Divers there be. But one of them, we cannot but take notice of (This verſe is ſo hemmed in with it, on both ſides.) Our verſe beginns with [And] which couples it, to the former. And the very ſame, that is in the former, is repeated over againe, in the next after. And this it is: To ſet a Seale upon our lips, from foule language, bitterneſſe, curſing, ſwearing without any ſenſe at all. That theſe, come not out of our mouthes. That we leave theſe in any caſe; and then, followes our verſe, And grieve not the Holy Spirit: as if He pointed us to theſe, and ſaid, Theſe are ſuch, whereby we grieve the Spirit of GOD, and all good men, that heare them. (And that is one ſpeciall way to grieve the Spirit, to grieve good men, in whom it is.) His very comming (this day) in ſhape of tongues, ſheweth, He would have the print of His Seale upon that part, upon the tongue: and His fire from heaven, breath; not this fire from hell, thus ſparkle from it. Saint Iames makes ſhort worke: If any would be holden for religious, and refraine not his tongue from theſe, that mans religion is (to be priſed) as, little worth. This, from [And] the firſt word, the Copulative to the bordering verſe, which, I could not avoid.

And greeve not.

Iam. 1 26.

But I chooſe rather, to hold my ſelfe to the point of Sealing, within the Text; and the grievances againſt it: which I reduce to theſe two: 1 Either, Before, when we are not yet Sealed, but are to be; when He offers to do it: 2 Or, After, when we are already paſt His hand, and His Seale upon us. There are grievances, both waies. How in the act of Sealing.

Firſt, the Spirit of GOD doth come, and offer to Seale us: our part were to invite Him to come, if He did not; but if He come, to be glad of it; but in any wiſe, to be willing, withall. Otherwiſe, Ipſum nolle, contriſtari eſt. For if we be not willing, but refuſe, and ſhift Him off ſtill, is it not juſtum gravamen? But, even as there were, that, when CHRIST ſet His foot on land, and offered to come to them, intreated Him, He would be gone againe: So, when the HOLY GHOST makes the like proffer, He hath His Gergeſites too, that can ſpare Him and His Seale both. Men are (I know not how) even loth, and (as it were) afraid; thinke it a diſgrace to them, many (and, that would be called men of Spirit) that any Seale or marke of holineſſe; ſhould be ſet, or ſeene upon them. Content with a Label, without any Seale to it, all their life long. And of theſe Labell-chriſtians, we have meetly good ſtore. As the Spirit of God, they like Him well enough, to have their breath, and life, and moving from Him: yea, arts and tongues too, if He will: But, as the Holy Spirit, not once to be acquainted with Him. And what is this plaine, but their ſpeech, Cauſe the Holy one to ceaſe from us? But yet I do not ſay [not at all:] For, if He will come and Seale them, ſome quarter of an hower before they die; for that, they will not ſtand with Him. But they deſire to weare the Signature of the fleſh, or of the world, of pride, or of luſt, as long as they are able to ſtand on their legs. Animales, all their life: and Spiritum habentes, at the hower of their death. Clinici Chriſtiani, beddered Chriſtians (as the Primitive Church called them) when the fleſh leaves them, let the Spirit take them and Seale them: Then the Seale (and ye will;) but, not before. But, this, is an indignitie, and cannot be well taken. He will not endure, thus to be trifled with and ſhifted off, when He would: and if, then He Seale us not; when we would we have our mends in our owne hands. 1 Before it. I Matt. 8. 34. Eſa. 30. 11. Iud. 19.

But ſecondly, Say we be willing He come: Is it not our part, againſt He comes, to diſpoſe our ſelves, and be readie wrought, to receive the figure of His Seale? Then, if either He finde us ſo indurate, in malice and deſire of revenge, or ſinnes of that ſort; that, as good offer Him a flint to Seale, which will take no print: Or, on the other ſide, finde us ſo diſſolved (as it were) and even molten in the ſinnes of the fleſh, that, as good offer Him a diſh of water to Seale, that will hold no figure: Both come to one: 1 Not to ſuffer Him, to doe it; and 2 not to be in caſe, to receive it: 1 Not diſpoſed to it; Or, 2 indiſpoſed for it. And can He chooſe, but reckon this as a ſecond gravamen and goe His way, and leave us as He found us?

Theſe two, before we be: Two more, when we be Sealed. For, when we have well and orderly received it; then doth it behoove us, carefully to keepe the Signature from defacing or bruiſing: If wee doe not, but carry it ſo looſely, as if wee cared not what became of it; and, where we are Signati to be cloſe and faſt, ſuffer every trifling occaſion to break us up; have our ſoules ly ſo open, as, all manner of thoughts may paſſe and repaſſe through them: Is not this a third? When one ſhall ſee a poore Countrie-man, how ſollicitous he is, if it be but a bond of no great value, to keepe the Seale faire and whole: But if it be of higher nature, as a patient, then to have his box, and leaves, and wooll, and all care uſed, it take not the leaſt hurt: And on the other ſide, on our parts, how light reckoning we make of the Holy Ghoſts Seale; vouchſafe it not that care, do not ſo much, for it, as He, for his Bond of five nobles, the matter being of ſuch conſequence: This contempt, muſt it not amount to a grievance? Yes, and that to a grave gravamen, a grievous one. For, this, is even Margaritas porcis right. After it. I

But yet further: If I having received this Seale upon us, we ſo far forget our ſelves as we be brought, to let His æmulus, the fiend, the evill ſpirit (whom He can by no meanes endure) even to Super-ſigillare, ſet his marke over it, Seale upon Seale; put his print, with his image and Superſcription, above and upon the HOLY GHOSTS: This is ſo foule a diſgrace, as He can never brooke it. And ſhall we once conceive, but, upon ſo bad uſage as this, He will doe, what men grieved uſe to doe, ſay preſently 2 migremus hinc, away, here is no place to ſtay, and ſo leave us, with our new image upon us.

And if ſo; a worſe matter, than all yet. For, He no ſooner gone, but in His place another will come, and, as he hath Sealed us, ſo Seaze on us: and, not alone neither, but companie with Him, Seven more worſe than himſelfe, and the end of that man, worſe than his beginning, a thouſand-fold. Theſe they be then, theſe foure: Not to offer theſe, is Non contriſtari.

Luc. 11. 26.

2 Nolite contriſtari.

But then, if our hap be ſo evill, as we doe; yet that we remember, Nolite, do it not willingly: Have a will, not to doe it. If we fall into any of the former foure, 1 neglect to receive Him, when He commeth: 2 diſpoſe not our ſelves, as we ſhould, againſt He commeth: Happen to 3 bruiſe, or marre our Seale: Yea 4 admit a Sealing upon it (of the world upon GOD, the fleſh upon the Spirit, Prophane upon Holy:) yet let not our will be to it: At leaſt, not our whole will; not our full conſents. Let it but happen per accidens (as we ſay) either ſurpriſed with the violence, or wearied with the importunitie of the tentation; or circumvented with the ſlights of the Serpent: but ever carrie voluntatem (if it may be;) or elſe (as in the Schooles they call it) velleitatem de non contriſtando. A great matter depends on this: For, wilfully to do it, that is indeed, to grieve; if it be not more, even to worke deſpite to the Spirit of Grace.

Heb. 10. 29.

Application to the time.

Now, to draw to an end. This requeſt never comes ſo fit, as on this Day. For there is in the Text, a day of redeeming; And there is by like analogie, a Day of Sealing. As that, CHRISTS: So this, the HOLY GHOSTS Day. Now, if the Sealing-Day, be the Holy Ghoſts; then, reciprocè, the Holy Ghoſts Day, that is the Day of Sealing. And this, is the Holy Ghoſts Day. And not onely, for that originally ſo it was; But for that it is to be intended, ever, He will doe His owne chiefe worke, upon His owne chiefe Feaſt; and opus Dei, the dayes worke, upon the Day it ſelfe. So that, now we are come about, to our firſt grievance, Not to refuſe Him: not at any time; but not, at His owne Time; not then, when He ſits in His office, and offers to ſet His Seale on us.

Application to the Sacraments

2 Cor. 5. 5.

And, that, He now doth. For, when we turne our ſelves every way, we finde not (in the Office of the Church) what this Seale ſhould be, but the Sacrament; or, what the print of it, but, the grace there received, a meanes to make us, and a pledge or earneſt to aſſure us, that we are His.

The outward Seale ſhould be a thing viſible, to be ſhewed: And the Sacrament is the only viſible part of Religion, and nothing ſubject to that ſenſe, but it. This I find, that the Schoole-men, when they numbred, Seven, thoſe ſeven, were the ſeven Seales: So, for Seales, they have beene ever reputed. But what doubt we? One of them, is by the Apoſtle, named a Seale, in expreſſe termes: The ſeale of righteouſneſſe. And, if one, then the other: Both are of like nature. Onely this difference betweene them (for which we have great cauſe, highly to magnifie the goodneſſe of GOD:) That, where the one Seale, (the Seale of Baptiſme) can be ſet to but once, and never repeated more; this other ſhould ſupply the defect thereof, as whereby, if we have not preſerved the former figure entire and whole, we might be (as it were) new ſigned over againe. And that, not once alone, and no more; but, that it ſhould be iterable: wherby it commeth to paſſe, that of this Sealing, there be many daies; many daies, to Seale us well, and make us ſure againſt that one Day, the Day of Redemption. GOD therein providing for our frailneſſe. As indeed, without it, a great many of us, I know not how we ſhould have done.

Rom. 4. 12.

A Seale of Redemption.

This then, is the Seale. I adde further, that it may be rightly called, the Seale of our Redemption, as whereby, the meanes of our Redemption, is applied unto us: the Bodie and the Bloud, one broken, the other ſhed, of Him, whom GOD Sealed to that end, even to redeeme us.

Ioh. 6. 27.

The print of this Seale.

And by, and with theſe, there is grace imparted to us; which grace is the very breath of this Holy Spirit, the true and expreſſe Character of His ſeale, to the renewing in us, the the image of GOD, whereunto we are created. And with grace, which ſerveth properly (pro totâ ſubſtantiâ) to and for the whole ſubſtance of the ſoule, the two ſtreames of it, one into the underſtanding part; the other into the Seate of the affections. Into the underſtanding part, the aſſurance of faith and hope: Into the part affective, the renewing of charitie, the oſtenſive part of this Seale, In quo cognoſcent omnes, by which all men may know, and, ſine quo cognoſcet nemo, without it no man, that we are ſealed aright, and are truely His. This grace we are thus to receive there: Onely, that we [a] receive it not in vaine: [b] Be not wanting to it, after: [c] neglect it not: [d] Quench it not: [e] fall not from it: but [f] ſtand faſt, and continue in it: Be carefull to [g] ſtirre it up: Yea, [h] to grow and increaſe in it, more and more, even to the conſummation of it, which is glorie. Glorie, being nothing elſe, but grace conſummate: the figure of this ſtampe, in His full perfection.

Reſolve then, not to ſend Him away (on His owne Day) and nothing done; but, to receive His Seale, and to diſpoſe our ſelves, as pliable and fit to receive it. And, that ſhall we but evill doe, nay not at all, unleſſe it pleaſe Him, to take us in hand, and to worke us readie for it. To pray Him then, ſo to doe, to give us hearts of wax, that will receive this impreſſion: And, having received it, to give us carefull mindes withall, well to looke to it, that it take as little harme, as our infirmitie will permit. That ſo, wee may keepe our ſelves, from this unkinde Sinne, of Grieving Him, that hath beene and is ſo good to us. Which, the GOD of mercie grant us, for His SONNE and by His SPIRIT, To whom, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at GREENWICH, on the XII. of Iune, A.D. MDCXIIII. being WHITSVNDAY.

PSAL. LXVIII. VER. XVIII.

Aſcendiſti in altum, &c.

Thou art gone up on high; Thou haſt led captivitie captive, and received gifts for men: yea, even * the rebellious haſt Thou led, that the LORD GOD might dwell * there.

* Or, for thine enimies.

THIS is CHRIST (the Prophet here ſpeaketh to.) That He it is, the Apoſtle is our warrant (*Epheſ.*4.8.) There, hee applies it to CHRIST: Thou art gone up (ſaith the Prophet here) in the ſecond perſon: He is gone up (ſaith the Apoſtle there, of Him) in the third.

To Chriſt then: And to Chriſt gone up, or aſcended: and therefore aſcended, they be the laſt words of this Verſe, that GOD, might dwell among us. Which cannot bee applied to Chriſt Himſelfe in perſon; for then, He was not to goe up on high, from us: but to ſtay here ſtill below with us. Therefore, GOD here, is GOD the HOLY GHOST: who this day, came downe, after Chriſt was gone up, to be not onely among us, but even in us (ſaith our Saviour:) To be in us and abide with us for ever. So, the Text beginns, with the aſcending of Chriſt: and ends, with the deſcending of the HOLY GHOST. And, that was upon upon this day: And ſo, we are come, to CHRISTS hodiè impleta eſt, This day is this Scripture fulfilled; the beſt application of every Text. Luc. 4. 21.

Our bookes tell us, the Scripture will beare foure ſenſes: All foure be in this; and a kind of aſcent there is in them. The Summe.

First, after the letter, and in due conſequence to the word immediately next before this (the laſt word of the Verſe) which is, Sinai. It is a report of Moſes's aſcending thither. For, he, from the bottome of the red Sea, went up to the top of Sinai, leading with him the people of Iſrael, that long had beene captive to Pharao: and there received gifts, the Law, the Prieſt-hood (but above all) the Arke of the covenant, to be the pledge of GODS preſence among them. This is the Literall. 1

This of Moſes, by analogie, doth King David applie to himſelfe. To his going up to Mount Sion, and carrying the Arke up thither. For all agree, this Pſalme was ſet, upon that occaſion. The very beginning of it [Let GOD ariſe, &c.] ſheweth as much: The acclamation ever to be uſed, at the Arkes removing, as is plaine by Num. X. Ver. XXXV. Now, this was done immediately upon His conqueſt of the Iebuſites: whom a little before he had taken captives, and made tributaries there. What time alſo, for honour of the ſolemnitie, dona dedit, he dealt bread and wine, to all the people, gift-wiſe (as we finde I Chron. XV.) This is the Analogicall: as Moſes to Sinai; ſo David, to Sion. 2 2 Sam. 6. 2 Sam. 5. 2 Sam. 6. 19. 1 Chro. 16. 3.

From theſe two, we ariſe to the Morall ſenſe: thus. That, as whenſoever Gods people are carried captive, and made thrall to their enemies; as then, GOD ſeemeth to be put downe and lie foyled for a time, that one may well ſay, Exurgat DEVS to Him: So, when He takes their cauſe in hand, and workes their deliverance, it may well be ſaid, Aſcendit in altum, He is gone up (as it were) to His high throne, or judgement-ſeate, there to give ſentence for them. Ever, the Churches depreſſing is (as it were) GODS owne humiliation; and their deliverance (after a ſort) His exaltation. For, then He hath the upper hand. And this is the Morall. 3

Now from this we aſcend to the Propheticall ſenſe, to the teſtimonie of Ieſus, which is the Spirit of all Prophecie. For, if in any Captivitie (as of Egypt, of Babylon) GOD be ſayd to be downe: And, in any ſtrange deliverance (ſuch as thoſe were) to be got up on high: in this of Chriſt, of all other, it is moſt pregnantly verified. That, the higheſt up-going; higher than Sion, or Sinai farre: That, the moſt gracious Triumph, that ever was. When the Principalities and powers, that had carried, not Iſrael, but mankinde, all mankinde into Captivitie; they as Captives, were led before His Chariot: attended, as it is in the next verſe before, with twenty thouſands of Angells. What time alſo, the gifts and graces of the HOLY GHOST were ſhed forth plenteouſly upon men; which was, this very day: and GOD, not by a wooden Arke, but by His owne Spirit came to dwell among them. 4 Revel. 19. 10. Verſe 17.

And, in this ſenſe, the true propheticall meaning of it, doth the Apoſtle deliver it to us, and we, to you. That, GOD, which ever and at all times, doth then, and at that time did moſt ſpecially ſhew the valour of His victorie, and the bounty of His triumph, when He went up on high, &c.

To put that in other order, which is it ſelfe, well ordered already, were but to confound it. The order, as it ſtands, is very exact. 1 Chriſts aſcending, firſt: 2 Then, the Manner: 3 And laſt, the end of it. 1 The Aſcending, in theſe: Thou art gone up, &c. 2 The Manner, is triumph-wiſe; and that two waies: 1 Leading His Captives before Him: 2 Scattering His gifts about Him. 3 And then thirdly, all to the end, that GOD, by His SPIRIT (the true Arke of His Preſence indeed) might reſt with us for ever. Or, you may (if you pleaſe) of theſe foure, make two moities: and give the two former, to CHRISTS aſcending; the two latter, to the Holy Ghoſts deſcending, in dona dedit hominibus; the peculiar of this Day. The Diviſion I. II. III.

I.

Christs Aſcending: The motion.

THou art gone up, a Motion: and, on high, a Place. Chriſt, in His aſcendent, going up; Chriſt, on high, is a good ſight. A better ſight to ſee Him ſo, tanquam aquila in nubibus, than tanquam vermis in pulvere; an Eagle in the clowds, than a worme in the Acts 1.9. duſt, as a great while we did. To ſee a cloud to receive Him, than a grave-ſtone to cover Him. Better, leading Captivitie, than himſelfe led captive: Better, receiving gifts for men, than receiving wrong from them. Yet, it is ſtrange, Saint Paul (*Epheſ.*4.) commenting upon this verſe (whereto we ſhall often have recourſe;) as we are loo-

1 From whence king at His going up on high, pulls us backe, and tells us of His being here downe be-

Epheſ. 4.9. low: In that He aſcended, what is it (ſaith He) but that He deſcended firſt? A note, out of ſeaſon, one would thinke. But, he beſt knew, what was proper, and pertinent; and that is, that CHRISTS going up, is aſcenſus poſt deſcenſum.

And this, as it is for His glorie: (For, when one hath beene downe, then to get up, is twice to get up. Far more, for His glorie, than if He never had beene downe. And, the lower He hath beene downe, the more glorious is his getting up. Bis vincit qui victus vincit; Being overcome, to overcome, is twice to overcome: For ſo, he overcomes his overcomers, and that is a double victorie.) As, for His glorie; ſo, for our good. For, His being above, before He was below, is nothing to us. But being below firſt, and then, that He went up, that is it we hold by. As the Sonne of God, He came downe: As the Sonne of man, He went up. If, as the Sonne of man; there is hope, that the Sonnes of men may doe the like.

But, alwaies remember, there muſt be a deſcent before. Aſcendit Angelus & factus eſt diabolus: Why? He never deſcended firſt, and therefore is now in the bottome of hell. But, He that firſt deſcended, and aſcended after, is now in the top of heaven. To teach us, this high top muſt have a deepe root. He that is thus high now, was once low enough. We to be as He was, before we be as He is. Deſcending, by humilitie; con-deſcending, by charitie. For, he that ſo deſcendeth with Him, he it is, and none other, that ſhall aſcend up after Him. This is Saint Paul, upon Aſcendiſti, His Motion.

2 The place whither, On high. Now, will you heare him upon in altum, on high, the pitch of his motion? On high, is ſomewhat a doubtfull terme: if it be but to ſome high mountaine (as they

2 Kings 2.16. thought of Elias) it is on high, that. How high then? The Apoſtle takes the true altitude for us. Neither, to Sion, nor to Sinai, ſet one upon the other, and Pelion upon Oſſa too; it is higher yet. So high (ſaith Saint Luke) till a clowd came and tooke

Luc. 1 9. Epheſ. 4.10. Him out of their ſight. And what became of Him then? That, the Apoſtle ſupplies: He came ὑπεράνω: ὑπὲρ above, ἀνὼ aloft: ὑπὲρ ὑψηλῶν, ὑπὲρ πάντων τῶν ὑψηλῶν, above all the heavens, even the very higheſt of them.

Keeping juſt correſpondence betweene his high, and his low. That, was ad ima terræ, to the loweſt parts of the earth, than which none lower, none beneath them. This was ad ſumma Celi, the higheſt top of the heavens, than which none higher, none above them.

So, Exurgat Deus, the firſt verſe is not enough: that was but from the lower parts of the earth, to the upper parts of it. Aſcendat in altum, Let Him goe up on high;

Pſal. 57.5. Set up thy ſelfe ô LORD, above the heavens; there is His right place. And ſo now, He is where He ſhould be. This for in altum.

But, we muſt not ſtand taking altitudes: This is but the gaze of the Aſcenſion.

Acts 1.11. The Angells blamed the Apoſtles; that blame will fall upon us, if we make but a gaze of it. What is there in it, hominibus, for us men?

Firſt, is He gone up on high? We may be ſure then, all is done and diſpatched here below. He would not hence re infectâ, till His errand were done, He came for.

All

All is diſpatched: for looke to the Text: He went not up till the battell fought, and the victorie gotten. For, the next point is, Captivitie is led captive. So, no more for Him here to doe: Conſummatum eſt. And after it was conſummatum eſt for us, no reaſon but it ſhould be conſummatus ſum with Him alſo. Ioh.19.30. Luke 13 32.

2 But though all be done here, all is not there; there above, whether He is gone. There is ſomewhat ſtill to be done for us. We have our cauſe there to be handled, and to be handled againſt a falſe and ſlanderous adverſarie (ſo Iob found him.) By means of His being there on high, habemus Advocatum (ſaith S. Iohn) we have an Advocate, will ſee it take no harme. And what were ſuch an one worth in place where. Iob 1.10. 2.5. 1 Ioh. 2.1.

3 But as our caſe is (for the moſt part) we rather ſtand in need of a good High-Prieſt, to make interceſsion; than of a readie Advocate, to put in a plea for us. And He is there likewiſe to that end: on high within the ſancta ſanctorum, as a faithfull High-Prieſt, for ever to appeare, and to make an atonement with GOD for our tranſgreſſions. Thus, there, all is well. Heb.2.17.

4 But, how ſhall we do here, if He be gone up on high from us? Not a whit worſe: Aſcenſor cæli, auxiliator (ſaith MOSES, Deut. XXXIII. XXVI.) By being there, He is the better able to helpe us: to helpe us againſt our enemies. For, in that He is on high, He hath the vantage of the high ground; and ſo able to annoy them, to ſtrike them downe, and lay them flat (S. Paul found it:) yea, to raine downe fire and brimſtone, ſtorme and tempeſt upon them. Acts 9.4. Pſal. 11.6.

5 To helpe us againſt our wants. Wants, both temporall; (for, from on high He can ſend downe a gracious raine upon His inheritance to refreſh it:) and ſpirituall; for from on high, He did ſend downe the gifts and graces of the ſpirit, the dona dedit of this Feaſt, and of this Text, both. Looke to the Text. He is ſo gone up, that our enemies are His captives: we ſhall not need to feare, they can goe no further than their chaine. And, though He be gone; dona dedit, He is readie to ſupply us, upon our need, with all gifts requiſite. We ſhall not need to want: for, no good thing will He with-hold from them, that have Aſcenſiones in corde, that have their hearts upon Him and upon His aſcenſion: that lift up their hearts to Him there. Verſe 9. Pſal 84.5.

6 There is yet one, and I keep that (for it ſhall be the laſt.) In that He is aſcended into heaven, Heaven is to be aſcended to: By the new and living way that is prepared through the veile of His fleſh, a paſſage their lieth thither. They talke of diſcoveries, and much adoe is made of a new paſſage found out to this or that place: what ſay you to this diſcoverie in altum, this paſſage into the land of the living? Sure, it paſſes all. And this diſcoverie is here: and upon this diſcoverie, there is begunne a commerce, or trade of entercourſe, betweene heaven and us. The commodities whereof, are theſe gifts: (we ſhall after deale with them.) And a kind of agencie: CHRIST being there, for us; and the Spirit here, for GOD; either Agent for other. It is the happieſt newes, this, that ever came to mankind. For, hominibus, for mankind it is, He is gone up: for, that is to be repeated to all three, and every of them ἀνὸ κατὰ 1 He is gone up on high, for men; 2 Led captivitie captive, for men, 3 as well, as received gifts for men. Heb.10.20. Pſal.27.11.

His going up then, is not all for Himſelfe; ſome part (and that no ſmall part) for us. For, thither He is gone, ut Præcurſor noſter (Heb. VI.) as our fore-runner or Herbenger, Pandens iter ante nos (ſaith the Prophet Mica) to make way before us. To prepare a place, and to hold poſſeſſion of it in our names (ſaith He Himſelfe.) Till (ſay the Angels) as He was ſeene to goe up, ſo ſhall He likewiſe be to come downe againe. Once more to deſcend (it is His laſt:) and upon it, His laſt aſcending into His high Tribunall-ſeate; there, as our favourable Iudge, to give us the Ite benedicti, the immediate warrant for our aſcenſions. And ſo He ſhall take our perſons thither, where He now is in our perſons, that where He is, we may be there alſo. And thus much, for His going up on high. Heb.6.20. Mica 2 13. Acts 1.11. Mat.25.23.

II.

The manner of His aſcending.

Now, the Manner, how He went. Aſcendit DOMINVS in jubilo, ſaith the XLVII. Pſalme, a proper and peculiar Pſalme for this day. For, this is the fiftieth day, and In Iubilee Pſal.47.5.

and fifty is the number of the Iubilee: we muſt looke for a Iubilee ever at Pentecoſt. He went up in Iubilo. Now, to a Iubilee, there goe two acts: 1 The releaſing of Priſoners, one. 2 And the new giving or granting eſtates gratis (dona dedit) the other. And both are here.

In triumph. He went up in triumph, as a Romane Victor up to the Capitol; as David, after his conqueſt, up to Sion: ſo He, to the Capitol in heaven, to the Sion that is above, the high and holy places made without hands. Now, two actus triumphales there were: 1 One, Captives led bound before the Chariot: 2 The other, caſting abroad of new coine, or (as they called them) miſsilia, among the multitude. And theſe two are in this. This, the manner of His going up, like the Iewes Iubilee, like the Heathens triumph. 1 Firſt then, of His valour, in His victorie; leading His captivitie. 2 Then, of His bounty, in His Triumph; diſperſing His gifts.

1 Leading captivitie captive. Of the firſt. Here is a Captivitie led in triumph. A Triumph is not but after a victorie: nor a victorie, but upon a battell: and (ever) a battell preſuppoſeth hoſtilitie; and that, ſome quarrell, whereupon it grew. His aſcenſion is His triumph; His Reſurrection, His victorie; His death, His battell; His quarrell is hominibus, about us men, for another captivitie of ours, that had happened before this.

I aske then, what was this Captivitie here? Of whom? when taken? when led? (For, taken it muſt be, before it can be led in triumph.) Some interpret it by Satan; ſay, it was by Him, and the power of darkeneſſe. Some other, that it was Adam and all his progenie: and ſo, we are in it too. And both ſay well: they and we were taken together. For, when they were taken captives, we that then were in their hand and power, as captives to them, were taken together with them. So both were taken; and by CHRIST, both: but not both alike. Both were taken, but not both led. They were taken, and led: we are taken and let goe. And not let goe barely, but rewarded with gifts, as it is in the Verſe. Both theſe are within the compaſſe of this Pſalme.

To begin with this of the Verſe: we find it more particularly ſet downe, Col. II.

Col.2.19. There, of the Principalities and powers of hell, it is ſaid, CHRIST ſpoiled them, made a ſhew of them, triumphed over them in His owne perſon.

With theſe He had battell at His death, and then He ſeemed to loſe the field. But, up againe He got at His Reſurrection: and then got the day, carried the victorie

1 Cor.15 54. cleare. For loe, as with a trumpet, the Apoſtle ſoundeth the victorie, Abſorptaeſt mors in victoriâ, death is ſwallowed up in victorie.

But what was the quarrell? That, began about us, hominibus: (In every branch, we muſt take in that word.) For no other quarrell had He, but that theſe, whom He leads away captive here, had led us captive away before.

Pſal.138.8. Eſa.64.8. 1 Cor.6.20. 1 Pet.1.15,19. And the quarrell was juſt: for, we were His: twice His. 1 His once, by creation, the worke of His hands. 2 His againe now, by redemption, the price of His bloud. He had no reaſon to loſe that, was His quite. It ſtood not with His honour, to ſee them carried away without all recoverie.

Gen.3.6. Rom.7.23. 1 Pet.5.11. 1 Pet.2 19. But, how came we captives? Looke to Gen. III. There ye find Lex membrorum, (as S. Paul calleth it;) fleſhly luſts (as S. Peter;) a garriſon, that lieth in us, even in our loines, and fight againſt our ſoules. They ſurpriſed Adam (and, of whom one is overcome, his captive he is.) So was he led away captive, and in him all mankind. The effect whereof ye ſee, at CHRIST'S comming. The ſpirit of error had (in a manner) ſeazed on all the world. And, if Error had taken his thouſand; Sinne had his ten thouſand (we may be ſure:) And this was the firſt captivitie, under the power of Satan. For, Sinne and Errour are but leaders under him; take to his uſe: and ſo all mankinde held captive of him at his pleaſure. And, O the thraldome and miſerie, the poore ſoule is in, that is thus held and hurried under the ſervitude of ſinne and Satan! The Heathens piſtrinum, the Turkie Galleyes are nothing to it. If any have felt it, he Pſal.126.4. can underſtand me, and from the deepe of his heart will crie, Turne our captivitie O Lord.

Will

Will ye then ſee this Captivitie turned away, and thoſe, that tooke us, taken themſelves? Looke to His reſurrection. Agnus occiſus eſt, is true; like a lambe He died; but that was, reſpect had to His Father. To Him, He was a Lambe in all meekeneſſe, to ſatisfie His juſtice, and to pay Him the ranſome for us, and for our enlargement, whoſe priſoners juſtly we were. That paid, and juſtice ſatisfied, the hand-writing of the Law, that was againſt us, was delivered Him, and He cancelled it. Then had He good right to us. But death, and he that had the power of death, the divell, for all that, would not let Him goe, but detained Him ſtill wrongfully. With them, the lambe would do no good: So, He tooke the Lion. Died a lambe, but roſe a Lion, and tooke on, like a Lion indeed; broke up the gates of death, and made the gates of braſſe flie in ſunder: trod on the Serpents head and all to bruiſed it; came upon him, tooke from him his armour wherein he truſted, and divided his ſpoiles. (So it is in the Goſpell; So, in this Pſalme.) Till He had right, He had no might; was a lambe. But, He had no ſooner right, but He made His might appeare; was a Lion: Et vicit Leo de tribu Iuda. His right was ſeene in His death; His might, in His Reſurrection.

Revel. 5 12. Col. 2. 14. Heb 2. 14. Luc. 11 22. Revel. 5. 5.

Ye ſee them taken: Now, will ye ſee them led. Of this victorie, this (here) is the triumph. And, if ye will ſee it more at large, ye may, in the Prophet Hoſee 13. and out of him, in the Apoſtle (1 Cor. XV.) death led captive without His ſting: Hell led, as one that had loſt the victorie: The ſtrength of ſinne (the Law) rent, and faſtened to His Croſſe, enſigne-wiſe: The Serpents head bruiſed borne before Him in triumph, as was Goliah's head by David returning from the victorie. And, this was His triumph.

Hoſee 13. 14. 1 Cor. 15. 55, 56.

So then, upon the matter, here is a double captivitie, a firſt and a ſecond. 1. A firſt, and in it captivans, they; and captivata, we. 2. A ſecond, and in it captivans, He; and captivata, they. They tooke us, and He tooke them. And this is the Iubilee; that He, that was overcome, did overcome; and they, that had overcome, were overcome themſelves. That captivans is become captivata, and captivata, is brought out of Captivitie and ſet at libertie. For, the leading of this Captivitie, was the turning away of ours.

The five Kings (Gen. XIV.) tooke Sodome, and caried Lot away priſoner: Comes me Abraham upon them, takes the five Kings, and Lot in their hands: So Lot, and they (both) became Abrahams captives. The Amalekites (1 Sam. XXX.) tooke Ziklag, Davids towne, his wives, children, and all his people. David makes after them, takes Amalek, and with them, his owne flocke too: and ſo became maſter of both. So did the Sonne of Abraham, and the Sonne of David, in this captivitie, here.

For all the world, as an Engliſh ſhip takes a Turkiſh Galley, wherein are held many Chriſtian Captives at the oare. Both are taken, Turkes, and Chriſtians; both become priſoners to the Engliſh ſhip. The poore ſoules in the galley, when they ſee, the Engliſh ſhip hath the upper hand, are glad (I dare ſay) ſo to be taken: they know, it will turne to their good, and in the end, to their letting goe. So was it with us, we were the children of this captivitie. They, to whom we were captives, were taken captive themſelves, and we with them. So, both came into CHRISTS hands: They and we, His priſoners both. But with a great difference. For, they are carried in triumph, to their confuſion (as we ſee) and after condemned to perpetuall priſon and torments. And we, by this new captivitie, rid of our old, and reſtored to the libertie of the Sonnes of GOD. So that, in very deed, this captivitie fell out to prove our felicitie: we had beene quite undone, utterly periſhed, if we had not had the good hap, thus to become CHRISTS priſoners.

Rom. 8. 21.

It is not good (ſimply) to be taken captive: but thus, it is. For, felix captivitas capi in bonum: He is taken in a good houre, that is taken for ſo great a good. A happy captivitie then, may we ſay: indeed, ſo happy, as no man can be happy, if he be not thus taken priſoner by CHRIST. It is the only way to enjoy true liberty. And this, for this great Captivitie here led.

Other inferior Captivities there be, in this life, and thoſe not lightly to be regarded neither:

neither. But, this of Mankinde is the maine: the reſt, all derived from this, and but pledges of it. We have lived to ſee, that Aſcenſor Cœli, was Auxiliator noſter, and Ductor captivitatis noſtræ, even this way.

In LXXXVIII. the invincible Navie had ſwallowed us up quicke, and made full accompt to have led us all into captivitie. We ſaw them led, like a ſort of poore Captives round about this Iſle, ſunke and caſt away, the moſt part of them, and the reſt ſent home againe with ſhame. Eight yeares ſince, they that had vowed the ruine of us all; and, if that had beene, the thraldome of this whole land: they were led captives in the litterall ſenſe, (we ſaw them) and brought to a wretched end before our eyes. So, He, that here did; ſtill can, and ſtill doth lead captivitie captive for the good of His. Take theſe as remembrances here below; but looke up beyond theſe to our great captivam duxiſti here: And make this uſe of both, that we, both theſe waies, being delivered, out of the hands of our enemies, and from the ſlaverie of Satan, might ſerve Him, whoſe ſervice is perfect freedome, in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe before Him, all the daies of our life.

Luc.1.74, 75.

And this for the firſt point of Aſcendit in Iubilo, (a principall part whereof was the releaſing of captives.) And ſo much for the triumph of His Victorie: Now for the bounty of His Triumph. In that, His valour; valour in leading captivitie: In this, His magnificence, magnificence in diſtributing His gifts.

Scattering His gifts.

Accepit dona. All this while, there hath beene nothing, but going up: Here now, there is ſomething comming downe, even Love, with his handfull of gifts, to beſtow them on us: which is the ſecond part; even His largeſſe or bounty, as it were the running of the Conduits with wine, or the caſting abroad of His new coyne, among the lookers on, on this, the great and laſt day of the Feaſt, the concluſion or ſhutting up of His Triumph. This is the day of dona dedit in kinde, and dona dedit, the high honour of this Feaſt. Alwaies, the height of His place, the glorie of His triumph, makes Him not forget us, we ſee by this. He ſends theſe for a token, that He is ſtill mindfull of us.

Foure points there be in it. 1 Received, firſt: 2 Then, gifts: 3 Thirdly, for men: 4 And laſt, an enlargement of this laſt word men; for ſuch men, as of all men, ſeemed leaſt likely to get any of them, Even for His enemies.

Accepit, Dedit.

* Epheſ. 4.8.

Received. The Prophet here ſaith, Dona accepit; the Apoſtle he ſaith, * dona dedit; and both true: Accepit & dedit; for, accepit ut daret: He did give, what He received; for, He received to give. So, what He received with one hand, he gave with the other. For, He received not for Himſelfe, but for others; Not, to keepe, but, to part with them againe. And, part with them He did, witneſſe this day, the day of the giving.

Received, from whom? Whoſoever the party was, He received them from, He ſeemes to ſtand well affected to us. It is the Father. And we ſee, He ſaid true of Him, I goe up to my Father, and to your Father; that is, yours as well as mine. Which appeareth, in His Fatherly goodneſſe, ready to part with them to us. Yet, not immediately to us; but, by Him, to us: that, ſeeing by whoſe hands they come, we might know, know and acknowledge both, for whoſe ſake, both He giveth, and we receive them. We, of Him: He, of His Father; but, for us, and for our uſe.

2 Dona.

Received gifts. Alas poore captives! Never thinke of any: Tantùm libera nos is all, they ſay. Free us onely, and we deſire no more. This one gift is enough, will richly content them, Even the gift of libertie, we even now ſpake of. Enough for them; but, not enough for Him, The Scripture offereth greater grace. He will let them goe, but not let them goe away empty; ſend them away rewarded, and not with one gift, but plurally, dona; with many. So many, as in the next verſe, He ſaith, they be even laden with them. And, not give them againe their former eſtate freely (the Iubilee of the Law;) but, a farre better than that was, even in Heaven, which is farre beyond the Lawes, and is (indeed) the Iubilee of the Goſpell.

To ſpeake of theſe Gifts in particular, one houre-glaſſe will not ſerve, they be ſo many. To recapitulate dona in Dono, all in one: It is the gift of gifts, the Gift of the HOLY GHOST, the proper Gift or Miſſile of this day. O ſi ſcirès Donum Dei (ſaith our SAVIOVR of it) if wee but knew this Gift! And GOD grant, we may know it (that is) that we may receive it; for, then we ſhall, but otherwiſe, we ſhall never know it: For, nemo ſcit, niſi qui acceperit; but he that receiveth it, no man knoweth it. Iohn 4. 10. Revel. 2. 17.

But, GOD it is, this Gift. The Text is direct: This giving is, to the end, GOD may dwell with us. That cannot be, if Hee that is given, were not GOD. So then, Man He carried up to Heaven: GOD He ſent downe to earth: Our fleſh is there, with GOD; His Spirit, here, with us. Felix captivitas, wee ſaid before; Felix cambium, may we now ſay: A happie Captivitie, that; a bleſſed exchange for us, this.

This is but one: it is expreſſed plurally; Dona, many: There be many in it. It is, as the Arke of the Covenant: the Arke was not emptie, no more is this. The two Tables, that teach the heart; the hidden Manna, that feedeth the ſoule; the Cenſer, that perfumeth all our prayers; the Rod, which makes us doe (as it ſelfe did) of withered and dead, to revive and flouriſh againe. Great varietie of gifts there are in it, and all are feathers of the Dove mentioned in this Pſalme (verſe 14.) either, the ſilver feathers of her wing; or the golden of her necke; For, all are from her. They are reduced all to two: 1 The Gifts (1 Cor. 12.) 2 The Fruits (Gal. 5.) The gifts knowne by the terme gratis data: The fruits pertaining to gratum faciens. But the gratum faciens being to every man for himſelfe: The gratis data, for the benefit of the Church in common. Theſe later are ever reckoned the proper, and moſt principall dona dedit of this day. And indeed, they are all in all. For, by them are the Siens planted, on which the other (the fruits) doe grow. 1 Cor. 12. 4. Galat. 5. 22.

And ſo it is. For, what were the true and proper gifts this day ſent downe, were they not a few tongues? And thoſe tongues had heads, and thoſe heads belonged to men, and thoſe men were the Apoſtles. Vpon the point, theſe gifts, in the end, will fall out, to prove men: The Gift ever leading us to the Office, and the office to the Perſons, by whom it is borne. Act. 2. 3.

In the place (Epheſ. 4.) where the Apoſtle comments upon this verſe, and upon this word gifts: aske him, What the gifts be? He will tell us, Ipſe dedit quoſdam Apoſtolos, He gave ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts: Theſe were of the Gifts. Theſe three now are gone, their date is out. But, in the ſame period, Hee puts Paſtors and Doctors too; and them wee have ſtill, and they are all the remaines, that are now left, of the dona dedit of this day. A point, I wiſh to be well thought on: that, for theſe gifts, this Feaſt is holden; that for theſe, wee keepe this high Holy-day. Epheſ. 4. 8.

What, and are theſe ſuch goodly Gifts? Yea, the Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, wee grant: For, wee love to build Sepulchers, as well as the Phariſees: They muſt be dead, yer we eſteeme them. O if we had lived in the Apoſtles dayes, we would have made othergates account of them, that we would. We know, how our Fathers then did; wee would even have done the ſame. For thoſe, we have left, it is daily heard and ſeene, how poore a rate wee ſet on them. This we finde: The Apoſtles themſelves, were faine to magnifie their owne Apoſtleſhip, and to ſay: Well they hoped, the day would come, when their peoples faith were as it ſhould be, that they alſo ſhould be eſteemed according to their meaſure; that is, better than they were. So that, they were undervalued. I will not ſay the ſame of theſe, which are all, that are now left of this dona dedit: that, of theſe Holy-day gifts, there is but a working-day accompt. Yet, theſe are they, that daily doe reſcue men and women laden with ſinnes; 2 Cor. 10. 14.

and ſo captives to Satan, from Satans captivitie, and take them priſoners to CHRIST: Theſe they, by whoſe meanes and miniſtery, are wrought in us thoſe impreſſions of grace, which we call the fruits of the Spirit, the price whereof is above all worldly gifts whatſoever. And, if GOD dwell among us, theſe be they, by whoſe doctrine and exhortation we are edified, (that is) framed and reared up, a meet building for Him.

Act. 20. 28. Truely, if we did but ſeriouſly thinke of Ipſe dedit, who gave; of Spiritus Sanctus poſuit, who placed them; Nay, if but of the Feaſt it ſelfe we hold; it would be better than it is, if not for theirs, for the very Feaſts ſake. For, why keepe we it? For theſe dona dedit, plaine. And how prize we them? I liſt not tell, how meanely. This I ſay then: Either eſteeme them otherwiſe, or what doe wee keeping it? Put downe the Feaſt, wipe the day of Pentecoſt out of the Kalendar, keepe it no more hardly. Never keepe ſo high a Feaſt, for ſo low a matter. But, if we will keepe it, make better reckoning of Dona dedit hominibus, than hitherto we have, or preſently we doe.

3 Hominibus. Now, the parties from whom all theſe: Hominibus. Aſcendit, duxit, dedit, all for hominibus, for men. For men, He aſcended up on high; For men, He led captivitie; For men, He received theſe Gifts. They, the ciſterne into which all theſe three ſtreames doe flow. As GOD, of GOD, He received them; that, as Man, to Man, He might deale them. I will tell you Saint Pauls note upon this word (and indeed, it is the onely cauſe, for which He there bringeth in this verſe:) The number, that it is, Hominibus, not Homini. To men, among them: To every one, ſome; Not to any one, all. For, no one man is hominibus; and hominibus it is, He deales them to. None, ſo compleat, but he wants ſome: none ſo bare left, that he wants all. A note (if well digeſted) which would cauſe this faſtidious diſdaine to ceaſe, we have one of another. The ſpoiles are divided to them of the houſhold (Verſ. 12.) come not all to one mans Heb. 2. 4. hand: They be μερισμοὶ (Heb. II.) by proportion and meaſure, part and part. So that, any man, though he want this gift or that; have not all; if he have but ſome to doe good, and doe good with that ſome, need not be diſmayed. He is within the verge of CHRISTS bountie, of Dona dedit hominibus.

4 Etiam inimicis. The laſt, is the enlargement of His largeſſe of this clauſe in the Grant: For men; Yea, for ſome men, ſome ſpeciall men (may ſome ſay) ſuch as Abraham, and David, GODS friends: but not for His enemies; nor for ſuch, as I. Yes: אף מרדים even for His enemies; even for His Rebels (ſo is the nature of the word) even to them, this day, is He willing to part with His gifts. His enemies? why, the devils themſelves are no more, but ſo, but His enemies: what, for them? No: it is hominibus, etiam inimicis; It is not dæmonibus: So, they are out cleare. But, for men, though His enemies, there is hope in this clauſe. And ô the bountifulneſſe of GOD, that there is hope even for them, that He ſo farre enlargeth the gifts of His Feaſt!

Luke 24. 47. Will yee but heare His Commiſſion given about this point? This it is: That remiſſion of ſinnes (the chiefe gift of all) in His Name, be proclaimed to all Nations. (And, all Nations then (in a manner) were within the Apoſtles Cum inimici eſſemus.) But, that is not it, but the laſt words that follow: That this Proclamation ſhould be made, beginning at Ieruſalem. At Ieruſalem? why, there, all the injuries were done Him, all the indignities offered Him, that could poſſibly be offered Him, that could poſſibly be offered by one enemie to another. Begin there? why the ſtones were yet moiſt with His bloud, ſo lately ſhed, ſo few dayes before, as ſcarce drie at the Proclamation-time. Well yet, there begin: This is etiam inimicis indeed. Enough, to ſhew, He would have His enemies ſhould be the better for this day: Feſtum charitatis, this right.

And will ye now ſee this put in execution? This very day, ſo ſoone as ever theſe gifts were come, S. Peter thus proclaimes, That Holy and Iuſt One ye have beene the betrayers and murtherers of Him (that is inimicis (trow I) in the higheſt degree.) Well yet, repent and be baptized, and your ſinnes (yea even that ſinne alſo) ſhall be done away, and and ye ſhall receive the gift of the HOLY GHOST. They, that had laid Him full low, paſt ever aſcending (as they thought) even they have their parts in His Aſcenſion. They, that bound Him as priſoner, He looſes their captivitie. They, that did damna dare to Him, He doth dona dare to them. All, to ſhew, Etiam inimicis is no more than the truth: and what would we more? Then, let no man deſpaire of his part in theſe gifts; or ſay, I am ſhut out of the Grant: I have ſo lived, ſo behaved my ſelfe; never dwell with GOD, I. Why, what art thou? A captive? Nay, art thou an enemie? Why, if de hominibus, etiam inimicis; if a man, though an enemie, this Scripture will reach him, if he put it not from him. The words are ſo plaine: for men, yea though His very enemies.

See then, what difference is betweene the two Feaſts: The Reſurrection (the firſt verſe of the Pſalme) Let GOD ariſe, and let His enemies be ſcattered, (that is) Inimici dæmones, or men, that put Him from them. But now, at this, Let GOD ariſe, and let His enemies (that were, and would not be) be gathered, and let thoſe that hate Him (and now hate themſelves for it) flye unto Him. It is the feaſt of Pentecoſt to day. This is the day for etiam inimicis: To day, He hath gifts even for them too. And thus much for the latter part, and ſo, for the whole Triumph. Verſ. 1.

III.
The end, that GOD might dwell among men.

The end now, why all this. Hominibus, for men, that GOD may dwell among men. GOD, that is, the whole Trinitie, by this Perſon of it. Why? dwelt He not among men before? He did. I know not well, whether it may be called dwelling; but ſure never ſo did before, as ſince theſe gifts came from Him.

Did not dwell (they call it viſiting) then: went and came, and that was all. But, ſince, He came to ſettle Himſelfe, to take His reſidence; not, to viſit any longer, but even to dwell among them.

2
Among men, at large.
Pſal. 76. 1.
Gen. 9. 27.
Ephe. 4. 10.

Nor among men, before; but, among ſome men. He was cooped up (as it were:) Notus in Iudæâ Deus, and there was all. Since, the fulneſſe of the Gentiles is come in; Iaphet into Shem's tents: All nations, His neighbours; all intereſſed in Him and His Gifts, alike. Saint Paul upon this verſe, He aſcended, Vt impleret omnia. Impleret, His: omnia, ours. Filled with His gifts, He: full, all; that is, all the compaſſe of the earth full of His fulneſſe.

It is for love, even φιλανθρωπία, for His love of men, that makes Him deſire thus to dwell with us. This is evident, by this captivitas ſoluta, and theſe dona diſtributa; by this Captivitie led (that is) by His fighting for it: by theſe gifts given (that is) by His bidding for it; that all this He doth, and all this He gave, and all for no other end but this. So as, quid requirit Dominus? on His part; quid retribuam Domino? on ours; all is but this, ut habitet vobiſcum Deus, that the true Arke of His Preſence (His Holy Spirit) may finde a place of reſt with us.

Our dutie.

What ſhall we doe then? ſhall we not yeelde to Him thus much, or rather, thus little? If He have a minde to dwell in us, ſhall we refuſe Him? It will be for our benefit: we ſhall finde a good neighbour of Him. Shall we not then ſay (as they did to the Arke) Ariſe, O Lord, into thy reſting place. 1 Chron. 6. 41.

To prepare Him a place.

But firſt, two things would be done: 1 The Place would be meet: 2 And the uſage or entertainment according. For the Place, Never looke about for a ſoile, where: The place, are we our ſelves. He muſt dwell in us, if ever He dwell among us. In us (I ſay) not beſide us: שכינה is the word, and ſo it ſignifieth, Sic inter nos, ut in nobis.

And if ſo, then Locus and Locatum would be ſutable. A Dove He is: He will not come but ad tecta candida, to no foule or ſootie place. Ointment He is: powred Hee will not be, but into a cleane, and ſweet; not into a ſtinking or lothſome phiall. To hold us to the word: GOD He is; and Holy is His title: So would His place be, an holy place; and, for GOD, a Temple. You know, who ſaith, Templum Dei eſtis vos: Know ye not, ye are the Temples of GOD, if He dwell in you? 1 Cor. 3. 16.

Verſe 16.

But, it is not the place (though never ſo commodious) makes one ſo willing to dwell, as doth the good uſage, or reſpect of thoſe, in the midſt of whom it is. Here will I dwell, for I have a delight (ſaith He.) It would be ſuch, as to delight Him (if it might be:) but ſuch, as at no hand to grieve Him. For then, He is gone againe; Migremus hinc ſtraight, and we force Him to it. For, who would dwell, where he cannot dwell, but with continuall griefe.

And, what is there, will ſooner grieve Him, and make Him to quit us, than diſcord or diſ-union? Among divided men, or mindes, He will not dwell. Not, but where unitie and love is. In vaine, we talke of the Spirit without theſe. Aarons ointment, and the dew of Hermon (both types of Him) ye know what Pſalme they belong to: It begins with, habitare fratres in unum. It is in this Pſalme before (verſe.9.) where men are of one minde in an houſe, there He delights to be. This very day, they that received Him, were ὁμοθυμαδὸν with one accord, in one place. That ὁμοθυμαδὸν is the Adverb of the Feaſt. And the Apoſtle, in his comment on this verſe: No better way (ſaith hee) to preſerve the unitie of the Spirit (or the Spirit of unitie, chooſe you whether) than in the bond of peace. To ſay truth; who would be hired to dwell in Meſech, where nothing is but continuall jarres and quarrells? Such places, ſuch men, are even as torrida Zona, not habitable by the Spirit, by this Spirit. But for the other ſpirit, the ſpirit of diviſion, they are: Vt habitet dæmon inter eos, a fit place for the Devill, to dwell among ſuch. Thinke of this ſeriouſly, and ſet it downe, that, at Salem is His Tabernacle: and Salem is peace, and ſo the Fathers reade it, In pace factus eſt locus Ejus. Make Him that place, and He will ſay, Here is my reſt, here will I dwell, for I have delight therein.

Ephes. 4. 3.
Pſal. 120. 5.
Pſal. 76. 2.

We ſaid even now: to dwell among us, He muſt dwell in us: And, in us, He will dwell, if the fruits of His Spirit be found in us. And, of His fruits, the very firſt is Love. And the fruit is, as the tree is. For, He Himſelfe is Love, the eſſentiall Love, and Love-knot of the undivided Trinitie.

By the Sacrament.

Now, to worke love (the undoubted both ſigne and meanes of His dwelling) what better way, or how ſooner wrought, than by the Sacrament of love, at the Feaſt of love, upon the Feaſt-day of Love; when Love deſcended with both his hands full of gifts, for very love, to take up His dwelling with us?

You ſhall obſerve; there ever was and will be, a neere alliance, betweene His dona denit hominibus, and His dona reliquit hominibus; The Gifts He ſent, and the Gifts He left us. He left us the gifts of His body and bloud. His body broken, and full of the characters of love, all over. His bloud ſhed, every drop whereof is a great drop of Love. To thoſe which were ſent, theſe which were left (love, joy, peace) have a ſpeciall connaturall reference, to breed and to maintain each other. His body, the Spirit of ſtrength; His bloud, the Spirit of comfort: Both, the Spirit of Love.

This Spirit (we ſaid) we are to procure, that it may abide with us, and be in us. And what is more intrinſecall in us, abideth ſurer, groweth faſter to us, than what we eat and drinke? Then, if wee could get a ſpirituall meat, or get to drinke of the Spirit, there were no way to that. And behold, here they be. For, here is ſpirituall meat, that is, breeding the Spirit; and here we are all made drinke of one Spirit, that there may be but one ſpirit in us. And we are all made one bread, and one body, knead together, and preſſed together into one (as the Symboles are, the bread, and the wine;) So many as are partakers of one bread, and one cup, the bread of life, and the cup of bleſſing, the communion of the Body and Bloud of CHRIST. And, in figure of this, even King David dealt theſe two (bread and wine) in a kinde of reſemblance to ours, when the Arke was to be brought home, and ſeated among them; the Arke in type. And we to doe the ſame, this day, when the Arke in truth did come, and will come to take up His reſt in us.

1 Chron. 16. 3.

Will ye now heare the end of all? By this meanes GOD ſhall dwell with us (the perfection of this life:) and He dwelling with us, we ſhall dwell with Him (the laſt and higheſt perfection of the life to come.) For, with whom GOD dwelleth here, they ſhall dwell with him there, certainly. Grace He doth give, that He may dwell with us; and glory He will give, that we may dwell with Him. So may He dwell; He with us: ſo may we dwell; we with Him, eternally. So, the Text comes about round. It began with an aſcenſion, and it ends with one: began with CHRISTS: ends with ours. He aſcended, that GOD might dwell with us; that, GOD dwelling with us, we might, in the end, aſcend and dwell with GOD. Hee went up on high, that the SPIRIT might come downe to us below; and, that comming downe, make us goe the ſame way, and come to the ſame place, that He is. Sent Him downe to us, to bring us up to Him.

and

Where, wee ſhall no leſſe truly than joyfully ſay: This is our reſt for ever. To which reſt, Aſcenſor cæli, Ductor captivitatis, Largitor donorum, He that is gone up to heaven, the Leader of Captivitie, the Great Receiver, and Giver of theſe Gifts, vouchſafe to bring us: That, as this Feaſt is the period of all the Feaſts of the yeare; So this Text, and the end of it, to dwell with GOD, may be the end of us all: of our deſires, here; of our fruition there. LVKE CHAP. III. VER. XXI, XXII.

Now it came to passe, when all the people were baptized, and that IESVS also was baptized, and did pray, the heaven was opened:

And the HOLY GHOST came downe upon Him, in a bodily shape like a dove, and there was a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved SONNE, in whom I am well pleased.

The Feast of the HOLY GHOST.

The comming downe of the HOLY GHOST upon CHRIST. Dignius. Antiquius.

Communius.

THIS is the Feast of the HOLY GHOST. And here have we in the Text, a visible descending of the HOLY GHOST.

Another there was, besides this, Acts II. But this hath the vantage of it, three wayes: 1 The worthinesse of the Person. Here, it descends upon CHRIST, who alone is more worth than all those there. 2 The prioritie of time; This here was first, and that other, the HOLY GHOST but at the second hand. 3 The generality of the good: That other was proper but to one calling (of the Apostles) only. All are not Apostles; all are Christians. This of CHRISTS concernes all Christians; and so the more generall by farre.

The Feast of Baptisme.

That it is of baptisme, is no whit impertinent neither; for, this is the Feast of Baptisme.

Baptiſme. There were three thouſand, this day baptized by the Apoſtles (the firſt Chriſtians that ever were.) In memory of that Baptiſme, the Church ever after held a ſolemne cuſtome of baptizing, at this Feaſt. And many, all the yeare, reſerved themſelves till then; (thoſe except, whom neceſſitie did cauſe to make more haſte.)

The baptiſme-day of the firſt Chriſtians. Acts 2. 41.

But, upon the point, both Baptiſmes fell upon this day. That, wherewith the Apoſtles themſelves were baptized, of fire. And that, wherewith they baptized the People, of water. So that, even this way, it is pertinent alſo.

The baptiſme-day of the Apoſtles. Acts 2. 3. 41.

To looke into the Text, there is no man but at the firſt bluſh will conceive there is ſome great matter in hand. 1 Firſt, by the opening of heaven: for, that opens not, for a ſmall purpoſe: 2 Then, by the ſolemne preſence of ſo great Eſtates at it: for, here is the whole Trinitie in perſon. The SON in the water, the HOLY GHOST in the Dove, the FATHER in the voice. This was never ſo before, but once: Never but twice, in all; in all the Bible. Once in the Old Teſtament, and once in the New. In the Old, at the creation, the beginning of Geneſis. There finde we GOD, and the Word with GOD creating, and the Spirit of GOD moving upon the face of the waters. And now here againe, at CHRISTS chriſtening in the New.

CHRISTS baptiſme a high myſtery. The preſence of the whole Trinitie. 1 At the Creation. Gen. 1. 1 2, 3. 2 At Chriſts Chriſtening. Exod. 5 20.

The faces of the Cherubins are one toward the other: (that is) there is a mutuall correſpondence betweene theſe two. That, was at the creation: this, a creation too; If any be in CHRIST, he is a new creature of this new creation. That was the Geneſis, (that is) the generation of the World: this, the παλιγγενεσία (the Apoſtles word) that is, the regeneration, or ſpirituall new birth, whereby we be borne againe the Sonnes of GOD. And better not borne at all, than not ſo borne againe.

That, a new creation. 2 Cor. 5. 17. That, a new generation. Tit 3 5.

This then, being every way as great; (indeed, the greater of the twaine) meet it was, they all ſhould preſent themſelves at this, no leſſe than at that; and every one have His part in it (as we ſee, they have.) All (I ſay:) ſeeing the Commiſſion for Baptiſme was to runne in all their Names, and it ſelfe ever to be miniſtred accordingly.

The commiſſion for it. Matth. 28 19. The execution of it.

To lay forth the members of the diviſion: A double Baptiſme we have here: Double for the Parties, and double for the Parts.

The Diviſion 1 CHRISTS. 2 The Peoples.

For the Parties; we have here two Parties. Firſt the People. Then CHRIST.

CHRISTS and the Peoples.

For the Parts; we have here two parts. For this firſt (both of CHRIST and the People) was but Iohns Baptiſme, was but Baptiſmus fluminis (as they call it) water-baptiſme. But, there is another part beſides to be had, even Baptiſmus Flaminis, the Baptiſme of the HOLY GHOST.

In water. In the HOLY GHOST.

That ſecond part is ſet downe in a ſequele of foure:

1 For firſt, after Iohns baptiſme, CHRIST prayes. 2 Then, after His prayer, Heaven opens. 3 After Heaven open, the HOLY GHOST deſcends. 4 Laſtly, after His deſcent, comes the voice. And theſe foure make up the other part, and both together a full Baptiſme.

Of theſe then in order. 1. Of the Peoples baptiſme. 2. Of CHRISTS baptiſme. CHRISTS 1 by water, and then 2 by the HOLY GHOST. In which, the foure: 1 CHRISTS prayer, 2 Heaven open, 3 the Dove, and 4 the Voice.

I. The Peoples baptiſme.

IT came to paſſe, that when, &c. Two Baptiſmes we have here: 1 The Peoples firſt, 2 Then CHRISTS. How it ſhould come to paſſe, the People ſhould be baptized, we ſee good reaſon: but not how it ſhould come to paſſe, that CHRIST alſo. The People, they came confeſſing their ſinnes; and ſo needed the baptiſme of repentance: ſo was Iohns baptiſme. For, the People not being βαπτιζόμενοι, baptized, but (to uſe the Apoſtles word) ϛυθιζόμενοι, even ſouſed over head and eares in their ſinnes, in many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which drowne men in perdition, Tanquam ſus à volutabro, they had need to be waſhed from the wallow of their ſinne, they had long lyen in.

Matth.3.6. For their Sins. Act.19.4. 1 Tim.6.9. 2 Pet.2.22.

And not onely for their ſinne: even their righteouſneſſe (take it at the beſt) even that, was not ſo cleane, but it needs come to baptiſme: Vtpote ſtillantes quotidiè ſuper telam juſtitiæ, ſaniem concupiſcentiæ (they be Pope Adrians owne words) As dropping every other while, upon the web of thoſe few good workes we doe, ſuch ſtuffe; the Prophet reſembles it to ſo homely a thing, as I liſt not tell you, what it is: but it is pannus menſtruatus, engliſh it who will. Reaſon then, for the People: And not onely for fæx populi, but even flos populi, to be baptized. It might well come to paſſe, that.

For their very righteouſneſſe. In quarum Sentent. Eſay 64.6.

The Peoples childrens baptiſme. 1 Pet.2.2. Iob 14.4. Pſal.51.5. Ezek. 16.6. * Iob 14.5.

Yea reaſon, that even they, who of all the reſt, ſeeme leaſt to need it, the Peoples children, ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη, the poore new-borne babes. For, being conceived of uncleane ſeed (Iob:) and, warmed in a ſinfull wombe (David:) at their birth, polluted no leſſe in ſinne, than in their bloud (Ezekiel;) there is not * Infans unius diei ſuper terram (as the Seventie reade it) Not a childe a day old, but needs baptiſmus lavacri, if it be but for baptiſmus uteri; the baptiſme of the Church, if it be but for the baptiſme, it had in the wombe. Let the people then be baptized in GODS name: good and bad, men and children and all.

II. CHRISTS baptiſme.

Sed quid facitis baptizantes IESVM? (As Bernard askes at His Circumciſion, Quid facitis circumcidentes Puerum hunc? What doe you circumciſing Him, in whom nothing ſuperfluous? So here) What doe you baptizing Him, in whom nothing uncleane? What ſhould He doe being baptized? How comes that to paſſe? Goe waſh your ſpotted lambes and ſpare not: this Lambe is immaculate, hath not the leaſt ſpot upon Him. Qui non fecit peccatum (it is Paul;) Qui non novit peccatum (it is Peter:) Neither did, nor knew ſinne: He hath none to repent of; what ſhould He doe at the baptiſme of repentance?

It may ſeeme CHRIST was not to be baptized. 1 Pet.1.19. 1 Pet.2.22. 2 Cor.5.21. Acts 19.4.

One might well aske, Why did not the Baptiſt repell Him finally? Not ſay: I have need to be baptized of thee, (that is) Thou haſt no need to be baptized of me: that was too faint; that, was not enough: But, Thou haſt no need to be baptized at all. Yea, one might well aske the water (with the Pſalmiſt;) Why it fled not, and Iordan, why it was not driven backe, at this baptiſme?

Matth.3.14. Pſal.114.5.

Yet CHRIST was baptized.

Yet the Verſe is plaine: that, with the People, CHRIST alſo was baptized.

It may ſeeme of very humilitie. Iohn 13.15.

How came this to paſſe? Why baptized? Why with the People?

Was it this; though He needed it not, yet for Exemplum dedi vobis, He would condeſcend to it, to give all a good example of humilitie; as He did, at His Maundie, when He waſhed His Diſciples feet?

Indeed, I muſt needs ſay, great Humilitie there was in it; as at His Circumciſion, to take on Him, the brand of a Malefactor: ſo here, to ſubmit Himſelfe to the waſhing proper to ſinners only. 2 Then againe, not to take it alone, but to take it at the hands of one ſo far inferiour to Him, as he reckoned not himſelfe worthy to ſtoope and unlooſe His ſhoolatchet. 3 Againe, that not baptized onely, but baptized with the People. Not, S. Iohn come and baptize Him at home; but, with the multitude, the meaneſt of them: they, and He together. And when? Not upon a day by Himſelfe, but, when they. And where? not in a baſon by Himſelfe, but even in the Common River, with the reſt of the meiny. When, and where, they; Then, and there, He.

This (ſure) was great Humility; and to it we well might, and gladly we would aſcribe it; but that, Himſelfe will not let us ſo doe. For when the Baptiſt ſtrained courteſie at it, He bade, let be, Thus it behoved, implere omnem juſtitiam. Iuſtitiam (marke that:) No courteſie but juſtice; He makes a matter of juſtice of it; as if juſtice ſhould not have beene done (at leaſt, not all juſtice) if He had not beene baptized. Not of humilitie, but of juſtice. Matth. 3. 15.

Why, what juſtice had beene broken? what peece of it? if He had not. To ſhew you, how this comes to paſſe; we are to conſider CHRIST, as having two capacities (as they terme them.) So are we to conſider Him (the ſecond Adam:) For ſo doe we the firſt Adam: as, a perſon of himſelfe; and, as the Author of a Race or Head of a Societie. And, even ſo doe we, CHRIST: Either as totum integrale, a perſon entire (they call it a body naturall;) or, as pars communitatis (which they call a body politike) in conjunction, and with reference to others: Which others are His Church; which Church, is His body. They His body and He their Head (ſo told us often, by the Apoſtle.) And, as by Himſelfe conſidered, He is Vnigenitus, the onely begotten, hath never a brother: ſo, as together with the people, He is Primogenitus inter multos, the firſt begotten among many brethren. The juſtice in CHRIST two wayes conſidered. 1 Cor. 15. 22. Ephes. 1. 22, 23. Iohn 3. 16. Rom. 8. 22.

To apply this, to our purpoſe. Take CHRIST by Himſelfe, as ſevered from us; and no reaſon in the world, to baptize Him. He needed it not. Needed it not? Nay, take Him ſo; Iordan had more need come to Him, than He to Iordan, to be cleanſed. Lavit aquas Ipſe, non aquæ Ipſum, the waters were baptized by Him, they baptized Him not: He went into them, Vt aquæ nos purgaturæ priùs per Ipſum purgarentur (it is Epiphanius) that they which ſhould cleanſe us, might by Him firſt be cleanſed. It is certaine; ſo, Hee received no cleanneſſe, no vertue; but vertue Hee gave, to Iordan, to the waters, to the Sacrament it ſelfe. Not as by Himſelfe from us: In Anchorato.

But then, take Him the other way, as in conjunction cum populo, they and Hee one bodie, and the caſe is altered. For, if He be ſo cum populo with them, as He be one of them; as He be, a part of a body with them (a principall Part I grant, yet part though) reaſon would, He doe as they doe, part and part alike. Inaſmuch (ſaith the Apoſtle) as the children were partakers of fleſh and bloud, Hee alſo tooke part with them. And ſo, inaſmuch as they baptized, Hee alſo tooke ſuch part as they, both went to baptiſme together. For (ut pars toti congrua) a kinde of juſtice there is in it, they ſhould ſo doe. But as part of one body with us. Hebr. 2. 14.

But if we looke a little further, then ſhall we finde greater reaſon yet. A part He is; and parts there be, that in ſome caſe undertake for the whole; as the arme, to be let bloud, for all the body. And it came to paſſe, that ſuch a part He was; He undertooke for us. For, in His baptiſme He put us on; as we put Him on, in ours. Take Him then, not onely as cum populo, but as pro populo; not onely, as nobiſcum, but as pro nobis: Put Him in the caſe, the Prophet doth, Poſuit ſuper Ipſum iniquitates omnium noſtrûm, put upon Him the tranſgreſſions of us all: Put Him as the Apoſtle puts Him, Factus eſt peccatum pro nobis, make Him ſinne, for us; put all our ſinnes upon Him; and then, it will come to paſſe, He will need baptizing: He will need that, for me and thee, that for Himſelfe He needed not, and baptiſme in that caſe, may well be miniſtred unto Him. Not onely as part with us, but as for us alſo. Gal. 3. 27. Ephes. 5. 26. 2 Cor. 5. 21. To waſh off our ſinnes.

Nay then, as in another caſe the Prophet ſaith, that all Lebanon was little enough to finde wood for a Sacrifice: So may we in this, that all Iordan is little enough to finde water to His baptiſme. A whole River too little, in that caſe. For, being firſt baptized (as I may ſay) in ſo many millions of ſinnes, of ſo many millions of ſinners (in ſo foule a puddle;) well might He then be baptized, if it were but to waſh away that His former foule baptiſme. Well might it come to paſſe then. Eſay 40. 16.

One onely ſcruple remaines: How Iordan or any water could doe this; waſh away ſinne? To cleare it ſhortly; the truth is, it could not. It is no [a] water-worke, without What baptiſme waſheth ſinnes off: Not water. a Iob 9. 30.

out ſomewhat put to it, to helpe it ſcoure. But, nothing on Earth: Not, if you put [b] Ier.2.22. to it [b] Nitre, much Sope, Fullers-earth, the hearbe Borith (ſay the Prophets) all will not doe; it will not off, ſo. Therefore, this of His in Iordan did not, could not doe the feat, otherwiſe, than in the vertue of another to follow. For, after this was paſt, Chap.12.50. He ſpake of another baptiſme, He was to be baptized with. And that was it indeed: That,
Zech.13.1. the fountaine, that was opened to the houſe of Iſrael, for ſinne and for uncleanneſſe: that Hebr.9.22. was baptiſmus ſanguinis. For, without bloud, without the mixture of that, there is no doing away ſinne.

But the baptiſme of bloud. [a] Matt. 26.36. [b] Iohn 19.13. [c] Mark.15.22. [d] Iohn 19.34. [e] 1 Iohn 1.7.

And ſo was He baptized. And He had trinam merſionem: [1] One in Gethſemane, one in Gabbatha, [3] and a third in Golgotha. [a] In Gethſemane, in His ſweat of bloud. [b] In Gabbatha, in the bloud, that came from the ſcourges and thornes: and in [c] Golgotha, that which came from the nailes and the ſpeare. Specially, the ſpeare: There, met the two ſtreames, of [d] water and bloud, the true Iordan, the bath or laver, wherein we are [e] purged from all our ſinnes. No ſinne, of ſo deepe a die, but this will command it, and fetch it out. This in Iordan, here, now, was but an undertaking of that, then; and in vertue of that, doth all our water-baptiſme worke. And therefore, are we baptized into it: not into His water-baptiſme, but into His Croſſe-baptiſme; not into His baptiſme, but into His death. So many as are baptized, are baptized into His death: It is the Apoſtle, Rom. VI. 3.

To take our leave of this point. This may be ſaid: If it be juſtice, that CHRIST come to baptiſme; much more, that the People. And how then comes it to paſſe, that there is ſuch ſacrilegious pride in ſome of the People, that (as if no ſuch thing were) ſet ſo light by it as they doe? and that, not Iohns (as this was;) but CHRISTS owne baptiſme? Be ſure of this, if CHRIST thus did, to countenance and credit
Chap.7.30. Iohns baptiſme; becauſe it was the ordinance of GOD: much more His minde is, to give countenance, and to have countenance given, to His owne, which is GODS ordinance, of a farre higher nature.

And, if the LORD, thought not much, to come to the baptiſme of His ſervant: He will thinke much, if the ſervant come not, to the baptiſme of his LORD. This of His then, is but a leſſon to us, to invite us thereto: and we to take it as the voice, that ſpake to Saint Paul (Act. XXII. 16.) Et nunc quid moraris? Surge, ablue peccata tua: And now why ſtay you? why protract you the time? Vp, waſh away your ſinnes, with all the ſpeed you may. For, if when the People was baptized, CHRIST was ſo: much more ſtrongly it holds; when CHRIST Himſelfe is ſo, that then, the People ſhould and ought to be baptized.

The ſecond part of Chriſts baptiſme.

I CHRISTS prayer for ſomewhat yet wanting. 1 Iohn 5.6. For the baptiſme of the Holy Ghoſt. 1 Iohn 5.7,8. Deut.19.15.

Now CHRIST is baptized. And no ſooner is He ſo: but, He fals to His Prayers. Indigentia mater orationis (we ſay:) Want begets prayer: Therefore, yet there wants ſomewhat. A part, and that a chiefe part of baptiſme, is ſtill behinde.

There goes more to baptiſme, if it be as it ſhould be, than baptiſmus fluminis: yea (I may boldly ſay) there goes more to it, if it be as it ſhould, than baptiſmus ſanguinis: CHRIST came in water and bloud, not in water onely, but in water and bloud: that, is not enough, except the Spirit alſo beare witneſſe. So baptiſmus Flaminis, is to come too. There is to be a Trinitie beneath, [1] water, [2] bloud, and [3] the Spirit, to anſwer to that above: but (the Spirit's baptiſme comming too) in the mouth of all three, all is made ſure, all eſtabliſhed throughly. This is it, Hee prayes for as man.

The baptiſme of bloud we are quit of.

For, the baptiſme of bloud, that was due to every one of us (and each of us to have beene baptized in His owne bloud; to have had three ſuch immerſions;) that, hath CHRIST, quit us of. When He was asked, by the Prophet, How His robes came ſo red? He ſayes, He had beene in the wine-preſſe; but, there He had beene, and that He had trod, alone: Et vir de gentibus non fuit mecum, And not one of the People with Him, none but He, there; in that: ſpares us, in that.
Eſay 63.23.

But

But the other two parts, He ſets downe preciſely to Nicodemus (and in him, to us all:) 1 Water, 2 and the HOLY GHOST: Now, the HOLY GHOST we yet lacke: So doth Saint Paul, baptized in the Sea, and in the Cloud: by the Sea meaning the elementary part, by the Cloud the celeſtiall part of baptiſme. Now, that of the Cloud, we have not yet. So doth Saint Peter: the doing away the ſoile of the fleſh (that, Iordan can doe) but that, wherewith the conſcience (or ſoule) ſhould be preſented before GOD; that is ſtill wanting. And the baptiſme of the body, is but the body of baptiſme; the ſoule of baptiſme, is the baptiſme of the ſoule. Of the ſoule, with the bloud of CHRIST, by the hand of the HOLY GHOST: as, of the body, with water, by the hand of the Baptiſt: without which, it is but a naked, a poore, and a dead element.

But not, either of water, or of the Holy Ghoſt. Ioh. 3. 5 & 1 Cor. 10. 2. 2 Pet. 3. 21. Gal. 4. 9.

Saint Paul tells us (Col. II.) that beſides the Circumciſion, that was the manufacture, there was another, made without hands: There is ſo, in baptiſme, beſides the hand ſeene, that caſts on the water; the vertue of the HOLY GHOST is there, working, without hands, what here was wrought. Col. 2. 11.

And for this, CHRIST prayes: that, then it might, might then, and might ever, be joyned to that of the water. Not in His baptiſme onely, but in the Peoples; and (as He afterwards enlarges His prayer) in all others, that ſhould ever after, beleeve in His name. That, what in His (here) was, in all theirs might be; what in this firſt, in all following; what in CHRISTS, in all Chriſtians: Heaven might open, the HOLY GHOST come downe, the Father be pleaſed to ſay over the ſame words, toties quoties, ſo oft, as any Chriſtian mans childe, is brought to his baptiſme. CHRIST hath prayed, now.

See the force of His prayer. Before it, Heaven was mured up, no Dove to be ſeene, no voice to be heard, Altum ſilentium. But ſtraight upon it (as if they had but waited the laſt word of His prayer) all of them follow immediately:

The opening of heaven.

Heaven opens, firſt. For, if when the lower heaven was ſhut three yeares, Elias was able with his prayer to open it (it is our SAVIOVR, in the next Chapter following) and bring downe raine: The prayer of CHRIST (who is more of might, than many ſuch as Elias) ſhall it not be much more of force, to enter the Heavens of heavens, the higheſt of them all, and to bring downe thence, the waters above the heavens, even the heavenly graces of the Holy Spirit?

For ſo, when our SAVIOVR cryed (Iohn VII.) If any be a-thirſt, let him come to me, and I will give him of the waters of life: This (ſaith Saint Iohn) He ſpake of the Spirit. For, the Spirit and His graces are the very ſuperceleſtiall waters: one droppe whereof, infuſed into the waters of Iordan, will give them an admirable power, to pierce even into the innermoſt parts of the ſoule: and to baptize it; (that is) not onely take out the ſtaines of it, and make it cleane; but further, give it a tincture, luſtre, or gloſſe: for, ſo is baptiſme properly, of βάπτω, taken from the Dyers fat, and is a dying or giving a freſh colour, and not a bare waſhing onely. Apoc. 7. 14.

Alwayes, the opening of heaven, opens unto us, that no baptiſme without heaven, open: and ſo, that baptiſme is de cælo, non ab hominibus, from heaven not of men. So was it here: So is it, to be holden, for ever. 2. And from heaven: not clanculùm (as Prometheus is ſaid to get his fire) but ἀνεῳγμένως, orderly, by a faire doore ſet open; in the view of much people: for, all that were preſent, ſaw the impreſſion in the skie. Which doore, was not mured up againe: For, we finde it ſtill open, Apoc. IIII. and we finde, that keyes were made, and given of it, after this. 3. And all this; that, there might not onely be a paſſage for theſe downe: but for us up. For, heaven gate, ab hoc exemplo, doth ever open at baptiſme; in ſigne, he that new commeth from the Font, hath then, right of entrance in thither. Then (I ſay) when, by baptiſme he is cleanſed: For before, Nihil inquinatum, Nothing defiled, can enter there.

2 To ſhew, baptiſme is from heaven. Chap. 20. 5. By a doore open. Apoc. 4. 1. Matth. 16. 19. To ſhew our right to enter heaven. Apoc. 21. 27.

Out of heaven now open, ſomewhat is ſeene, and ſomewhat heard. 1 Seene: a Dove deſcend; the Apparition. 2 Heard; Tu es filius meus; the Voice. Vnder one, the teſtimony Viſus & Vocis, of hearing and ſight both: that, Sicut audivimus, ſic & vidimus, that; that, as we ſee, we heare; and backe againe, as we heare, ſee: which is, as much as can be, to make full faith.

Out of heaven open, what. Pſal. 48. 8.

The Apparition. 1 The Holy Ghoſt.

1. The Apparition. Wherein the points are fix: 1. The HOLY GHOST.] Firſt, that perſon: For, the Perſon, by whom CHRIST was conceived; by the ſame; it was moſt convenient, Chriſtians ſhould alſo be. But to goe higher: The Perſon, that was Author of Geneſis the generation, meeteſt to be Author likewiſe of regeneration. The ſame perſon, and in the ſame element: The element, whereof all were made,

2 Pet 3.5, 6. and wherewith all were deſtroyed after; that, with the ſame, all ſhould be ſaved againe:

1 Pet.3.20,21. the water it ſelfe, now becomming the Arke; the drowning water, the ſaving Arke, as S. Peter noteth. That, as then by His moving on the waters, He put into them a life and heat to bring forth: ſo now, by His comming downe upon them, He ſhould impregnate them to a better birth. That, as His Title is, the Lord and Giver of life, He might Iohn 3.5. Tit.3.5. Symbol. Nicen. be the Giver of true life (that is) eternall life: whereto this life of ours, is but a paſſage or entrie; and not otherwiſe, to be accounted of.

2 Came downe. Pſal.139.7. 2. The HOLY GHOST came downe:] that is to ſay, in His ſigne or ſymbole, the Dove. Otherwiſe, the Spirit of GOD neither goes up, nor comes downe: it is every where; beneath, as well as above: but (by a familiar phraſe in Scripture) what the Dove did, that repreſented Him; that, is He ſaid, to doe.

3 Vpon Him. Gen.1.2. Iohn 1.33. 3. Came downe upon Him:] which, is a degree yet further, than in Geneſis. There, He did but move or flutter over the waters (enough, for that effect, then:) here, He commeth nearer; lights and abides upon Him: (which argues a greater worke in hand.) And which argues too, a greater familiaritie to grow, betweene the Spirit and our nature: For, a bird (we know) is familiar, when it doth ſo; light upon one, and ſtay too. But, all this He doth, not to make Him to be ought; but to ſhew Him onely, to be. Vpon us when He comes, it is to conferre ſomething: Not ſo, upon Him: from the firſt minute of His Conception, He had the Spirit without meaſure. To confer Iohn 3.34. nothing; onely, to declare, that this was He, that to Iohns water-baptiſme, ſhould have power, to adde the HOLY GHOST, and ſo make it His owne for ever after.

4 In a bodily ſhape. Iohn 1.33. 4. Vpon Him in a bodily ſhape.] For, His comming being to beare witneſſe to Iohn, and to all, that this was He: Convenient it was, He ſhould appeare, and ſo have a bodily ſhape, to come into the face of the Court, and there to be ſeene, and taken notice of, as Witneſſes uſe to be. And one end it was, why His baptiſme was ſet, at the time when all the Peoples was: that ſo, all the People might ſee, and ſo take notice of the HOLY GHOST, and indeed of the whole Trinitie.

5 In the ſhape of a Fowle. Exod.25.20. Eſay 6. 2. Iohn 3. 8. Pſal.18.10. 5. What ſhape then? of what creature? All things quicke in motion, as Angels, as the Wind (whereto He is elſe-where compared) are ſet forth with wings: the wings of the wind. Of one with wings then; as moſt apt, to expreſſe the ſwiftneſſe of His operation, in all His workes; but ſpecially, in this. None of the other kinde of creatures, though never ſo light of foot, can ſufficiently ſet forth the quickneſſe of His working. He goes not; He flies, He: Neſcit tarda molimina; that He doth, He is not long in doing: therefore, in ſpecie volatilis, in the ſhape of a thing flying.

6 In the ſhape of a Dove. Cant.5.12. 6. And among thoſe of that kinde, in the ſhape of a Dove, as fitteſt for the purpoſe in hand. Not ſo much, for that, it is noted to love the waters well (ſpecially cleare waters, as theſe now be, after CHRIST hath purified them;) That, is not all: But indeed, ſpeciall choice is made of it, to ſet forth to us the nature and properties of the HOLY GHOST: which have many wayes reſemblance with thoſe of this creature.

And I will not go to Pliny for them, nor to any heathen Writer of them all. For the Word of GOD, the word of GOD hath ſufficient. To that, we will hold us.

1 Noah's Dove, for the olive branch. Gen 8.11. Rom.8 23. Gal.5.22. There, the firſt Dove we finde, is Noah's Dove with the Olive branch in her bill, a ſigne of peace; peace, which is the very firſt fruits of the Spirit. It is Tertullians note, this: That, as after the deluge (the worlds baptiſme, as it were) the firſt meſſenger of peace, was the Dove: So is it here againe juſt; after CHRISTS baptiſme, the deluge or drowning of that which indeed drowned the world (that is) of ſinne, the very ſame apparition of the Dove, and with another manner of peace than that; but, with peace, in both.

2. Next

2. Next have you Davids Dove, for the colour: Pennæ Columbæ de-argentatæ, with feathers ſilver-white: to note candor Columbinus, white as a Dove, not ſpeckled as a bird of divers colours. And (to the ſame effect) Salomons Spouſe, for the eye: three ſeverall times, there ſaid to have, oculos Columbarum, eyes ſingle and direct as a Dove; not leering as a Fox, and looking divers waies: Oculos Columbinos, not Vulpinos.

2 Davids Dove for the colour. Pſal. 68. 13. Ier 12. 9. Salomons, for the eye. Cant. 1. 14. 4. 1. 5. 12.

3. Then Eſay's Dove, for the voice: Gemebat ut Columba, in patience mourning, not in impatience murmuring or repining: For, carmen amatorium, her voice. And no other voice to be heard, from the firſt Church. Now, they are aſhamed of that voice: it is not gemebant ut columbæ, but rugiebant ut Vrſi; to groyne they begin like Beares, but not mourne any more like Doves. No ſuch voice to be heard now: that, put to ſilence.

3 Eſaies Dove for the voice. Eſa. 38. 14. Eſa. 59. 11.

4. And laſt our Saviour CHRISTS owne, that is, innocent as Doves: harmeleſſe, both for bill and claw: not bloudy or miſchievous. Who ever heard of a Dove, that drew bloud, or did any miſchiefe to any?

4 Chriſts Dove for bill and claw. Mat. 10, 16.

Now, qualis ſpecies, talis Spiritus, ſuch as the ſhape was, ſuch is the Spirit: and theſe all foure properties of it, in the Holy Ghoſt. 1 He a Spirit, that loves ὁμοθυμαδὸν men of one accord (as was ſeene this day.) 2 Et qui fugit fictum, cannot abide theſe new trickes, meere fictions indeed, feined by feined Chriſtians; partie propoſitions, halfe in the mouth, and halfe in the mind. 3 And when He ſpeaketh, ſpeaketh for us with ſighs not to be expreſſed, ſuch is His Love, and ſo earneſt. 4 And hurts none: not when He is a Dove (as here:) No not, when He was fire; but innoxius ignis, even then.

The properties of the Spirit, like. Acts 2 1. Sap. 1. 5. Rom. 8. 26. Acts 2. 4.

2. And as theſe in the Spirit, that came downe: ſo the very ſame, in CHRIST, upon whom He came downe. The Spirit a Dove, and CHRIST a Lambe, like natur'd both; what the one, in the kinde of Beaſts; the other, in the kind of Fowles: that we may ſee, the Holy Ghoſt lighted right. Super quem? Vpon whom ſhall my Spirit reſt? ſaith GOD in Eſay: and he anſwers, Super humilem, On the humble and meeke. Humble and meeke? Why, Diſcite a Me, Learne both thoſe of Me (ſaith CHRIST) For I am both, and a Maſter profeſſed in them both. 2 The Spirit of the olive-branch (that is) peace, on Him: For Ipſe eſt pax noſtra, He is our Peace. 3 The Spirit that loves omni fictione carentes (that is) all that hate æquivocations, on Him: For, never was there guile found in His mouth. 4 And laſtly, the harmeleſſe Spirit, on Him: for, He was ſo, too; would not breake a bruiſed reed (He) nor quench flaxe, though it did but ſmoke. Doe no hurt at all.

The like properties were in Chriſt. Ioh. 1. 29. Eſa. 57. 15. 65. 2. Mat. 11. 29. Epheſ. 2. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 22. Mat. 12. 20.

3. Thirdly, what He is in Himſelfe: and what He is, on whom He deſcended: that, the very ſame, ſuch for all the world, doth He make His Church, homogenea cum homogeneis, like nature, like properties, per omnia. And, it is not ſo much (all this) to ſhew His nature, as to ſhew His operation: Nor, what He found in CHRIST, as, what He workes in Chriſtians: Quâ animâ animet, quos ſpiritus ſpiret, what ſoule He puts into them, what manner Spirit He makes them of: That He even endues them, with theſe qualities of the bird, whoſe ſhape He made choiſe of, to preſent Himſelfe in. Quâ ſpecie, in Him: ſhewes quo ſpiritu, in us. To wit, It makes them peaceable, to love ſingleneſſe in meaning, ſpeaking, and dealing, to ſuffer harme, but to doe none.

The like properties to be in Chriſtians.

Peace, ſinceritie, patience, and innocencie, theſe be the ſilver-feathers of this Dove: They be vertues, and (which is more) virtutes Baptiſmales, the very vertues of our Baptiſme: No Chriſtian, to be without them: to be found in all, where the humidum radicale of Baptiſme, is not cleane dried up.

Pſal. 58. 13.

The Holy Ghoſt is a Dove, and He makes CHRISTS Spouſe (the Church) a Dove: a terme, ſo oft iterate in the Canticles, and ſo much ſtood on, by S. Auguſtine and the Fathers, as they make no queſtion, no Dove, no Church. Yea, let me adde this: S. Peter, when the keyes were promiſed, never but then, but then (I know not how) he is called by a new name, and never but there, Bar-jona, that is, Filius Columbæ. But ſo he muſt be, if ever he will have them. And his Succeſſours, if they claime, by any other fowle; painted keyes they may have, true keyes they have none. For ſure I am, Extra Columbam out of that Church, that is, ſuch and ſo qualified, non eſt Columba, there Chriſts Church a Dove. Cant. 2. 10. 14. 5. 3. 6. 8. Mat. 16. 17.

there is no Holy Ghoſt; and ſo no remiſſion of ſinnes. For, they goe together, Receive the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted.

Ioh. 20.22,23.

They that make the Church no Dove.

And, what ſhall we ſay then, to them, that will be Chriſtians (that they will) and yet have, nihil Columbæ, nothing in them of the Dove; quit theſe qualities quite, neither bill, nor eye, nor voice, nor colour: what ſhall we ſay? This; that Ieſuites they may be, but Chriſtians (ſure) they be none. No Doves eye; Fox-eyed they: Not ſilver-white feathers, but particoloured: No gemitus Columbæ, but rugitus Vrſi: not the bill or foot, of a Dove, but the beake and clawes of a Vulture: No Spirit of the Olive-branch, but the ſpirit of the bramble, from whoſe roote went out fire to ſet all the Forreſt on a flame.

Iudic. 9.15.

A chaſing away of this Dove.

Ye may ſee, what they are, they even ſeeke and doe all, that in them lies, to chaſe away this Dove, the Holy Ghoſt. The Dove (they tell us) that was, for the baby-Church; for them, to be humble, and meeke, ſuffer and mourne, like a Dove: Now, as if with Montanus, they had yet, Paracletum alium, another Holy Ghoſt to looke for, in another ſhape, of another faſhion quite, with other qualities; they hold, theſe be no qualities for Chriſtians, now: Where indeed (they grant) for the baby-Chriſtians: for the three thouſand firſt Chriſtians, this day; (poore men) they did all in ſimplicitate cordis. And ſo, to Plinies time: harmeleſſe People they were (the Chriſtians) as he writes, did no bodie hurt. And ſo, to Tertullian's; who tells plainly, what hurt they could have done, and yet would doe none. And ſo, all along the Primitive Churches time, even downe to Gregorie, who in any wiſe, would have no hand, in any mans bloud. But the Date of theſe meeke and patient Chriſtians is worne out; long ſince expired: and now, we muſt have Chriſtians of a new edition, of another, a new faſhion'd Holy Ghoſts making; Gregorie the ſeventh (Saint Gregorie the ſeventh forſooth) who indeed, was the firſt, that inſtead of the Dove, hatched this new miſshapen Holy Ghoſt, and ſent Him into the world.

Acts 2.41. 46.

For, doe they not begin to tell us in good earneſt (and ſpeake it in ſuch aſſemblies and places, as we muſt take it for their Tenet) that they are ſimple men, that thinke, Chriſtians were to continue ſo ſtill: they were to be ſo, but for a time; till their beaks and talons were growne, till their ſtrength was come to them, and they able to make their partie good: and then, this Dove here, might take her wings, fly whither ſhe would, and take her eaſe: then, a new Holy Ghoſt to come downe upon them, that would not take it, as the other did: but take armes, depoſe, deprive, blow up: inſtead of an Olive-branch, have a match light, in her beake, or a bloudy knife.

Pſal. 55.6.

A calling into queſtion of this ſhape of a Dove.

Me thinks, if this World goe on, it will grow a queſtion problematike, In what ſhape it was moſt convenient, for the HOLY GHOST to have come downe? Whether as He did, in the meeke ſhape of a Dove? Or whether, it had not beene much better, He had come in ſome other ſhape, in the ſhape of the Roman Eagle, or of ſome other fierce fowle, de vulturino genere?

Sure, one of the two they muſt doe: either call us downe a new faſhion'd Holy Ghoſt, and inſtitute us a new baptiſme (and if both theſe new; I ſee not, why not a new CHRIST too:) Or elſe, make a ſtrange metamorphoſis of the old; clap Him on a crooked beake, and ſticke him full of Eagles feathers, and force Him, to doe contrary to that He was wont, and to that, His nature is.

1 Cor. 12.4.

But lying men may change; may, and doe: but the Holy Ghoſt is Vnus Idemque Spiritus (ſaith the Apoſtle) changes not, caſts not His bill, mouts not His feathers: His qualities at the firſt, doe laſt ſtill, and ſtill ſhall laſt to the end, and no other notes of a true Chriſtian, but they.

A renouncing of this baptiſme.

1 Sam. 15.23.

It is rather like to prove true, that Samuel long ſince ſaid, Rebellion is as the ſin of witchcraft: For Witches (they ſay) begin, are initiated, with renouncing of their baptiſme. And ſure, theſe prick pretily towards it: For, (ſay what they will) they be in the way to it, when they plainly diſclaime, and renounce His qualities, that was the Author of it. For theſe baptiſmall vertues, they, that take them away, do what in them lyeth, to take away Holy Ghoſt, and baptiſme, and all.

I know, they will flie to the fire (of this day) and ſay, He came in another ſhape. True;

True, but for another purpose. It was to make Apostles, that; not Christians, as this heer. Christians are made in a cooler element. And; we have no Apostles to make now: GOD send us to make good Christians; to yield no worse soules to GOD, then this Dove heer did, so many hundred yeares togither, till new Iesuits came up, and old Christians went downe.

But, give them their fire: it will do them small pleasure, it will not light them a match, nor give fire to their traine. When it came (that) it did no hurt; It sate upon them all, but not so much as sindged, any one of them. Let them shew, this fire, ever blew up any. True, it gave them courage (they needed it, they were to undertake the whole world) but within the bounds of modestie, still (we ought to obey GOD rather then man:) Not in saucie and traytorous termes, of old Latts or rotten figgs: Non est vox columbæ hæc; rugitus ursi, rather. Act. 2. 4. Act. 3. 19. Esa. 59. 11.

In a word, this was none of Elia's fire: and you remember, they that harped upon that string, who said to them, You know not what Spirit you are of; Not, what shape appeared at your baptisme: Not Noah's raven, that delights in dead carcases; but his dove. That shape came downe upon CHRIST: the same, comes downe upon all that are baptized, with His baptisme; and are inspired, with the same Spirit, that He was. This for the apparition. Luc 9. 54. 55. Gen. 8. 7.

Now to the Voice. Accedat verbum, ad elementum. The Dove was but a dumb shew, and shews, what is done in us: The Voice, that speakes plainly, and declares, what is done for us, in our baptisme. The Dove, what the Spirit makes us: The Voice, for whom the Father takes us.

We saw CHRIST's humilitie before, in yielding to be baptized. This heavenly oracle heer, pronounced of Him, is in a sort, a reward for His former humilitie. There, He was among a rabble of sinners, even in the midst of them. One, that had seene Him so, would have taken Him, for none other. This Dove, and this Voice from heaven, testifying so great things of Him (no sinner, no servant, but the very Sonne of GOD, His Love, His Ioy, the In quo, for whom we all fare the better) this so honourable an elogie, makes full amends, for that. He lost nothing by His humilitie. No more did the Baptist, by his Non sum dignus neither. That hand, which he held not worthy to touch His shooe; was dignified, to touch His head, and to powre water on it. Thus they both of them fulfilled righteousnesse: and both of them had a glorious reward for it.

1. First the Holy Ghost's comming, then the voice.

But first marke. Till the Spirit is come, the Voice comes not: all depends, on this daye's worke (the Holy Ghost's comming.) He is the medius terminus, between Christ in Iordan, and the Father in heaven. He it is, that makes the Father speake. Tu (that is) Tu, super quem Spiritus, Tu es filius. Thou (that is) Thou, on whom the Spirit in this shape comes downe, Thou art my Sonne: that, to goe before. So was it in Genesis: The Spirit moved upon the face of the waters, and then Et dixit Deus: but, no dixit Deus, before the Spirit be there first. Gen 1. 3. 4.

2. This voice not for Christ, but for us.

Then, that non propter Me vox ista (as Christ els-where saith) This voice came not for Him, but for us. Spoken to Him indeed; but, to Him, not in His owne, but sustaining our persons. It were fond, to imagine otherwise: that this Voice, or any of the rest, He needed for Himselfe. Either to have heaven opened to Him: it was no time shut. Or the HOLY GHOST come downe to Him: as GOD, the Holy Ghost proceeded from Him; as man, He proceeded from the Holy Ghost, they never parted company. Least of all the Voice, Tu es Filius: who knew not that? It was said, and sung, long before, in the Psalme, Thou art my Sonne. So, all were for us; Voice, and all. Indeed, His whole baptisme, is not so much His, as ours. Ioh 12. 30. Psal 2. 7.

The meaning of Thou art my Sonne.

The meaning is, Thou (Christ) in their persons, art this: Thou art; and for thy sake, all that are in Thee, all, that by baptisme have put Thee on, all and every of them, are to Me, as Thou thy selfe art: Filij, dilecti, complacentes. Galar. 3. 27.

Will ye see what is in them? In Filij first.

1. Enemies we were, Rom. V. Now are we no enimies: but in league with Him, Rom. 5. 10.

Heb.8.9. in the new league (or Covenant) never to be altered, as the former was. [1]So may we be, and yet, ſtrangers ſtill: Nay [2]no ſtrangers, but naturalized now, and of the Com-

Gen.9.23. many degrees do we paſſe, yer we come to this Filius. Go forward now. [6]All ſonnes are not beloved, Cham was not; Sonnes, and beloved Sonnes, a new degree, a ſixt.
C.15.20. [7]And yet againe, all we love, we take not pleaſure in. Even beloved Sonnes, offend ſometime, and ſo pleaſe not. The Father (in the XV. Chapter after) loved his wildri-otous ſonne, but too well; yet, ſmall pleaſure tooke he, in him, or his courſes. But Com-placetum eſt (the ſeventh) that makes up all: a ſonne, a beloved Sonne, his Father's de-light and joy; there is no degree higher. And ſuch are we, by baptiſme, made to GOD in CHRIST, through the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.

The change of the ſtyle from ſervus. Exod.20 2.

Filij. This is a new Tenour now; the old ſtyle is altered. The Voice, that came laſt from heaven before, ran thus; Ego ſum DOMINVS, and that inferrs, Tu es Ser-vus (that is the beſt, can be made of it.) But heer now, it is Tu es Filius, and that ne-ceſſarily inferrs, Ego ſum Pater: For, hæc vox Patrem ſonat, this is a Father's voice to his Child. A great Change: Even, from the ſtate of ſervants (as by creation and gene- Gal.5.5. 2.Cor.5.17. Rom.5.2. ration we were; and ſo ſtill, under the law) into the ſtate of Sonnes, as now we are, being new creatures in CHRIST, regenerate and tranſlated into the ſtate of Grace, wherein we ſtand.

The riſe from a ſinner to an heire.

And not onely a great Charge, but a great Riſe alſo. At the firſt, we were but waſhed from our ſinnes, (there was all:) but heer, from a baptized ſinner, to an adopted Sonne, is a great aſcent. He came not downe, ſo low; but we go up, as high for it.
Gal.5.7. Rom.8.17. For, if Sonnes, then Heires (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſo goes the tenure in heaven: Heires and joint-heires of heaven, with CHRIST, (that is) for the poſſeſſion and fruition of it, full every way as himſelfe: and this He brings us to, before He leaves us.

Rom.8.15. Gal.5.5. We ſpeake much of adoption: would you know, when it was, where, and by what words? Why, now; Heer it is: Theſe, the very adopting words; by them, the act of adoption, actually executed. This, the very Feaſt of Adoption. A feaſt therfore, to be held in high accompt with us; as high as we hold this, (to be the ad-opted children of GOD.)

In whom I am well pleaſed.

But we muſt remember, not onely what we are, but In quo, all this: to whom we owe it all (that is) to CHRIST (the true naturall Sonne.) In Him it is, and out of Him, it proceeds to come to us.

In whom, more then with whō.

The Fathers do ponder this (In quo) to good purpoſe: that it is not, Qui placet, Who pleaſes me well, or (which is all one) With whom, I am well pleaſed: (yet ſo He might have ſaid) but In whom. And, that is more, then both. Who pleaſes me, or With whom I am pleaſed, goeth no further then himſelfe, His owne perſon: But, In whom, (that is) for whoſe ſake, with others. To whom, I beare ſuch favour, as not onely himſelfe pleaſeth me: but in Him, and for Him, others pleaſe me alſo.

Who, or with whom, His nature. In whom, His end

Againe. If it had been, Qui, it had ſhewed, but what, by nature He is: But this, In quo, ſheweth to what end, He was ſent; to be, the In quo, to bring all this about; E-ven, that in Him (the Sonne beloved, and well pleaſing:) we, that neither were ſonnes, but ſervants (and thoſe but bad ones neither:) Nor beloved, but full unlovely: and, in whom no pleaſure at all, diſpleaſure rather: that, in Him we might be received to grace, and made by adoption, what He himſelfe is.

In whom beſt ſeen by without whom. Ioel 1.18. 1 Sam.16.14. Mat.25.30.

The In quo, what we are in Him; we ſhall beſt conceive, by the ſine quo, what we are without Him. For ſine quo, but that He, with the People; none of all theſe, had come to them. Heaven ſhutt ſtill: no Dove ſeene: No, Tues Filius ever heard: we had rotted away in our ſinns, without baptiſme: the evill ſpirit had ſeiſed on us, in ſtead of the Holy Ghoſt: No Sonnes, but caſt out, with the evill ſervant, into utter darkneſſe.

But, In quo, GOD ſo highly well pleaſed with Him, as, at the very contemplation of of Him, but turning to Him, and beholding Him, He layes downe all His diſpleaſure, and is pleaſed to accept us, and our poore and weake obedience; and further, to be ſo pleaſed with it, as even to reward it alſo, In quo complacitum eſt. Pſal. 84. 9.

Complacitum eſt; and here Baptiſme leaves us, and would GOD, there we might hold us; and it might never be, but complacitum eſt. But, when we fall into ſinne, ſpecially ſome kinde of ſinne, we put it in hazard: for He is not, He cannot then, be well pleaſed with us. How then? His favour we may not finally loſe; and, to baptiſme we may not come againe. To keepe this Text in life: Complacitum eſt, It hath pleaſed the Holy Ghoſt, as He applyed CHRISTS bloud to us in baptiſme, one way: ſo out of it, to apply it to us, another way; as it were, in ſupplement of baptiſme. In one verſe, they be both ſent downe, by the Apoſtle, [1] In uno Spiritu baptizati; [2] In uno Spiritu potati. And whom He receiveth ſo, to His table, to eate and to drinke with Him, (and every one that is well prepared, He ſo receiveth) with them, He is well pleaſed againe, certainely. On this day of the Spirit, every benefit of the Spirit, is ſet forth and offered us; and we ſhall pleaſe Him well, in making benefit of all. Specially of this, the onely meanes, to renew His complacencie, and to reſtore us thither, where our baptiſme left us.

A turning from Baptiſme to the Euchariſt.

1 Cor. 12. 13.

I end; onely this: This Voice, it came once more. Two ſeverall times, it came. [1] Once here at His baptiſme: [2] and againe, after, at His transfiguration in the mount: Where He was not onely ſaid to be, but then and there, ſhewed to be, in glorie, as the Sonne of God indeed; His face like the Sun, His rayment like the lightning. And both of theſe, pertaine to us likewiſe: the firſt is ſpoken of us, when by baptiſme we are received into Him, for the poſſibilitie and hope, we have of it, thereby: But time will come, when this ſecond ſhall be ſpoken, and verified of us, likewiſe.

The ſame voice the ſecond time for us alſo. Mat. 17. 5.

Mat. 17. 2.

What time, He ſhall change our vile bodies, and make them like to His glorious bodie, as then it was, and as now it is: and heaven ſhall open, and He receive both them, and us, to eternall bliſſe: where we in Him, and He in us, ſhall have a perfect complacencie for ever.

Phil. 3. 21.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at GREENWICH, on the XIX. of May, A.D. MDCXVI. being WHITSVNDAY.

IOHN CHAP. XX. VER. XXII.

Hæc cum dixiſſet, inſufflavit; & dixit eis: Accipite SPIRITVM SANCTVM.

And when He had ſaid that, He breathed on them; and ſaid unto them: Receive the HOLY GHOST.

EVER, as upon this day, ſomewhat we are to ſpeake of the HOLY GHOST, and of His comming. And this alſo, here, is a comming of the HOLY GHOST. And, not a comming only, but a comming in a Type, or forme, by the ſenſe to be perceived. And ſo, ſuits well with the comming of this Day. For, ſo, this Day He came.

Three ſuch commings there were in all. Once did our Saviour receive the HOLY GHOST, and twice did He give it. Give it on earth, in the Text; and after, from heaven, on the day. So, three in all. At CHRISTS baptiſme, it came upon him, in the ſhape of a Dove (Luk. III.) At this Feaſt, it came upon His Apoſtles, in the likeneſſe of tongues of fire (Acts II.) And here now, in this, comes breath-wiſe; having breath for the Symbolum to repreſent it. The tongues have beene heard ſpeake: the Dove hath had his flight: And now, this third of breath falleth to be treated of.

Luc. 3.22. Acts 2 3.

It is the middle (this) of the three. That of Baptiſme went before it: That ſerves to make Chriſtians. This of breath comes after it: This ſerves to make them (as I may ſay) Chriſtian-makers: ſuch, whoſe miniſterie CHRIST would uſe, to make Chriſtians:

ſtians: make them, and keepe them: make them ſo, by baptiſme; and keepe them ſo, by the power of the keyes, here given them (in the next words) for the remiſſion of ſinnes. Verſe 21.

And, as it followes well after that of baptiſme; So it goes well before the other of tongues. For, firſt there muſt be breath, before there be tongues, wherewith the ſpeech is to be framed. The tongues but faſhion the breath into certaine ſounds, which without breath they cannot, and when that failes, their office is at an end. So, firſt breath; then, tongues. And another reaſon yet. It is ſaid in the VII. Chapter, the Spirit was not to be given them till CHRIST was glorified: and glorified He was in part, at His Reſurrection. Then therefore given in part, as here we ſee. But much more glorious, after, by His Aſcenſion: Given therefore then, in fuller meaſure. Here, but a breath; there, a mightie winde. Here, but afflatus, breathed in; there, effuſus powred out. The Spirit proceeding gradually. For, by degrees they were brought on, went through them all, all three. Baptized, and ſo made Chriſtians: breathed into, and ſo made what we are; had the tongues ſit on them, and ſo made Apoſtles properly ſo called. Chap. 7 39.

But three things may be ſaid of this here: 1. That, of all the three commings (firſt) it is the moſt proper. For, moſt kindly it is for the Spirit, to be inſpired; to come, per modum ſpirationis, in manner of breath: Inaſmuch as it hath the name à ſpirando; and is (indeed) it ſelfe, flamen the very breath (as it were) proceeding à Patre Filioq;. So, one breath by another.

2. Then, the moſt effectuall it is. For, in both the other (the Dove, and the tongues) the Spirit did but come, but light upon them. In this, it comes (not upon them, but) even into them, intrinſecally. It is inſufflavit, it went into their inward parts; and ſo made them indeed θεοπνευστους, men inſpired by GOD, and that within.

3. And laſt, it is of the greateſt uſe. Both the other were but for once, Baptiſme, but once for every one: the tongues but once, for all. This is toties quoties; ſo oft as we ſinne (and that is oft enough) we need it: looke how oft that, ſo oft have we uſe of this breath here breathed (as the next verſe ſheweth) for peccata remiſeritis, the remiſſion of ſinnes.

Now, what is here to do, what buſineſſe is in hand, we cannot but know, if ever we have beene at the giving of Holy Orders. For, by theſe words are they given, Receive the Holy Ghoſt: whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. Were, to them; and are, to us, even to this day, by theſe and by no other words. Which words, had not the Church of Rome retained in their Ordinations, it might well have beene doubted (for all their Accipe poteſtatem ſacrificandi pro vivis & mortuis) whether they had any Prieſts at all, or no. But, as GOD would, they retained them, and ſo ſaved themſelves. For, theſe are the very operative words, for the conferring this power, for the performing this act. The Summe.

Which act is here performed, ſomewhat after the manner of a Sacrament. For here is an outward Ceremonie (of breathing) inſtar elementi; and here is a Word comming to it, receive ye the Holy Ghoſt. That ſome have therefore yeelded to give that name or title to Holy Orders. As (indeed) the word [Sacrament] hath beene ſometime drawne out wider, and ſo Orders taken in: and other ſome, plucked in narrower, and ſo they left out; as it hath pleaſed both the old and the later Writers. And, if the Grace here given had beene gratum faciens (as, in a Sacrament, it ſhould:) and not (as it is) gratis data, but in office or function: And againe, if the outward Ceremonie of breathing had not beene changed (as it hath plainely) it had beene ſomewhat. But, being changed after into laying on of hands, it may well be queſtioned. For we all agree, there is no Sacrament but of CHRISTS owne inſtitution: And that, neither matter nor forme, He hath inſtituted, may be changed.

Yet two parts there bee evidently: 1 Inſufflavit; and 2 Dixit: 1 He breathed, and 2 He ſaid. Of theſe two then, firſt joyntly, and then ſeverally. From them joyntly, two points. Of the God-head of our SAVIOVR firſt: and then, of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt from Him. The Diviſion I.

II. Then ſeverally. Firſt inſufflavit: And in it, three points: 1. Of the breath, and the ſymbolizing of it with the Holy Ghoſt. 2. Secondly, of the parties: [a] He that breathed, CHRIST: [b] They, that breathed into, the Apoſtles. 3. And laſt, of the act it ſelfe: [a] ſufflavit, breathing, [b] inſufflavit, breathing into them. After of dixit, the Word ſaid: [1] Accipite, of the receiving. [2] Then, of the thing received, which is [a] Spiritum, the Spirit. [b] And not every, or any ſpirit, but Sanctum the Holy Ghoſt. [c] And (becauſe, that may be received many waies) which way of them, it is here received.

I. Of the two parts joyntly.

WE proceed firſt joyntly out of both, and begin with matter of faith. Two Articles of it: [1] The God-head of CHRIST; [2] the Proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt from the ſecond Perſon.

1 The God-head of CHRIST: Dixit.

The firſt, riſing out of the two maine parts: For, as inſufflavit argues His Manhood: So, dixit doth His God-head; His ſaying, Receive the Holy Ghoſt: For, hæc vox hominem non ſonat: No man, of himſelfe, can ſo ſay. Verus Homo, qui ſpirare; True Man, by His breathing. Verus Deus, qui Spiritum donare: True GOD, by his bidding them take, and ſo giving them the Holy Ghoſt. To give that gift, to breathe ſuch a breath, is beyond the power of men, or Angells: Is more, than any can doe, ſave GOD onely.

For, that We ſay them alſo, in our Ordering; the caſe is farre different. We ſay them not, as in our owne, but as in His perſon. We bid them, from Him receive it; not, from our ſelves. This point will againe fall in afterwards.

1 The Proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt.

Next, we argue for the Holy Ghoſts proceeding from Him; and that evidently. For, as He gave of His breath: ſo did He, of the Spirit. The breath, from His Humanitie: the Spirit from His Deitie. The breath into their bodies: the Spirit, into their ſoules. The outward act teaches viſibly without, what is inviſibly done within.

Thrice was the Holy Ghoſt ſent, and in three formes, [1] of a Dove: [2] of breath: [3] of Cloven Tongues. From the Father, as a Dove; From the Sonne, as Breath; From both, as Cloven Tongues. The very cleft ſhewing, they came, from two. At Chriſts baptiſme, the Father ſent Him from heaven, in ſhape of a Dove. So, from the Father He proceedeth. After (at His riſing here) CHRIST, by a breath, ſends Him into the Apoſtles. So, from the Sonne He proceedeth. After, being received up into the glorie of His Father, He, together with the Father, the Father and He both, ſent Him this day downe, in tongues of fire. So, from both, He proceedeth. Proceeding from the Father, totidem verbis (*Chap.*15.26.) And proceeding (here) from the Sonne, ad oculum, really. Not, in words onely: we may beleeve our eyes: we ſee Him ſo to proceed. Enough, to cleare the point, à Patre Filioque.

With Reference to quorum remiſeri is

This proceeding, as it holds each other-where, ſo ſpecially, in this of quorum remiſeritis, the remiſſion of ſinnes, For which, it is here given. For, in that, of all other, the HOLY GHOST proceeds from CHRIST, moſt properly. For, inaſmuch as the remiſſion of ſinnes came from and by CHRIST, very meet it was, He ſhould have the diſpenſing of His owne benefit, and the Remitter of ſinnes proceed from Him alſo. One, by the bloud out of His veines; The other, by the Spirit out of His arteries; and Hee, as bleed the one, ſo breathe the other. Hee, that ſhould ſeale the acquittance, from Him that laid downe the money. That (howſoever in other reſpects, in this ſure) from Him and none but Him, the HOLY GHOST to proceed.

Proceed: and proceed by way of Breath, rather than any other way: that, to be the ceremonie, or ſymbolum, of it.

II.

Of the Parts severally.

I proceed now to the ſecond Combination, of breath, and the HOLY GHOST. It is required in a ſigne, that choiſe be made of ſuch a one (as neere as may be) as may beſt ſuit and ſerve, to expreſſe that, is conferrd by it. Now, no earthly thing comes ſo neere, hath ſuch alliance, is ſo like, ſo proper for it, as the breath. (I make two ſtands of it:) [1] Breath and the Spirit: [2] CHRIST's breath and the Holy Spirit.

[1] The ſymbolizing of breath with the Spirit.

Firſt, breath is aire; and aire, the moſt ſubtle and (as I may ſay) the moſt bodileſſe bodie that is; approching neereſt to the nature of a ſpirit, which is quite devoyd of all corporeitie. So, in that, it ſuits well.

But, we waive all, ſave onely the two peculiars of the HOLY GHOST, ſet down in the Nicene Creed. [1] One, the Lord and Giver of life; [2] the other, who ſpake by the Prophets.

For firſt, the Spirit giveth life: and breath is the immediate next meanes ſubordinate to the Spirit, for the giving it: for the giving it, and for the keeping it, both. Giving; at the firſt, GOD breathed into Adam, ſpiraculum vitæ, and ſtreight factus eſt in animam viventem, he became a living ſoule. Keeping; for, if the breath goe away, away goes the life too: both come, both goe together. Gen. 2. 7.

[2] Of Chriſt's breath with the Holy Ghoſt.

And as the Spirit it is, that quickneth: ſo, it is the Spirit, that ſpeaketh, evidently. Dead men be dumb, all. And, the ſame breath, that is organum vitæ, is organum vocis, too. That, we live by, we ſpeake by alſo. For, what is the voice, but verbum ſpiritu veſtitum, the inward word (or conceit) clothed with breath or ayre, and ſo preſented to the ſenſe of hearing? So, vehiculum ſpiritûs it is, in both.

And, as the Breath, and the Spirit: So CHRIST's breath, and the Holy Spirit. Accipite Spiritum gives to man the life of nature: Accipite Spiritum Sanctum gives to the Chriſtian man the life of grace.

And the ſpeech of grace too. For, this breath of CHRIST was it, by which the cloven tongues (after) had their utterance. He ſpake by the Prophets: and the Apoſtles, they were but as Trumpets, or Pneumatica, Wind-inſtruments; they were to be winded. Without breath they could not; no breath on earth hable ſo to wind, that their ſound might goe into all lands, be heard to the uttermoſt parts of the earth. None but CHRIST's, ſo farre; So, that was to be given them. This breath hath in it (you ſee) to make a good Symbole for the Spirit: And CHRIST's breath, for the Holy Spirit. Rom. 10. 18.

It may be, at large, all this: but, how, for the purpoſe, it is heere given for (remiſſion of ſinnes?) What hath breath to do with ſinne? Not nothing. For, if you be adviſed, per afflatum ſpiritûs nequam it came; by an evill breath: and per afflatum Spiritus Sancti, it muſt be had away. The breathing, the peſtilent breath of the Serpent, that blew upon our firſt parents, infected, poyſoned them at the firſt: CHRIST's breath entring, cures it: and (as ever His manner is) by the ſame way it was taken, cures it: breath, by Breath.

For the better conceiving of the manner, how, Yee may call to minde that the Scriptures ſpeake of ſinne ſometime, as of a froſt: otherwhile, as of a miſt, or fogg that men are loſt in, to be diſſolved, and ſo blowen away. For, as there be two proceedings in the wind, and according to them, two powers (obſerved by Elihu, Iob. 37.) forth of the South, a wind to melt and diſſolve: out of the North, a wind to diſpell and drive away. And, as in the wind of our breath, there is flatus, a blaſt, which is a cooler, and which blowes away: and halitus, a breath, that is warme, and by the temperate, moiſt heat, diſſolves: Anſwerable to theſe, there is in this breath of CHRIST, a double power conferred; and both, for the remiſſion of ſinnes: and that, in two ſenſes, ſett downe by Saint Iohn, [1] the one of Ne peccetis, aſtringent, to keepe men from ſinne, and ſo remiſſio peccandi: [2] The other Si quis autem peccaverit, but if eny doe ſinne, to looſe men from it, and ſo remiſſio peccati. Shewing them the way, and ayding them with the meanes to cleere their conſcience of it (being done;) remitting that is paſt, making that more remiſſe, that is to come: As it were to reſolve the froſt firſt, and turne Eſay. 44. 22. Iob. 37. 9. 1. Ioh. 2. 1.

turne it into a vapour: and, after it is so, then to blow it away.

1. And, other reasons there be assigned (why thus, in breath) apt and good: 'One, to shew the absolute necessitie, the great need we have, of this power; how evill we may be without it: As evill as we can be without our breath, so evill can we be without a meanes for remission of our sinnes; ὡς μᾶλλον ἀπνοίας τὸν ἄθλιον. It is Saint Basil. The Christian man he lives not by the aire that he breathes, more than he doth by it. Our owne breath not more needfull, then this breath of CHRIST's: His loving kindnesse in it, better then the life it selfe, and we no longer to draw our breath, then to give Him thanks for it. This for the necessitie.

Psal.63.3.

2. A second, to shew the qualitie; which is mild, of the same temper, the breath is. No spiritus procellæ (which some would thinke perhaps, more meet) to carrie all before it. They know not the Holy Ghost, that so thinke: they remember not the Dove. Violence, in this worke, He could never skill of; His course hath ever beene otherwise. And, not His onely, but theirs, whom He proceeds from.

1 King.19.11. 12. Let them but goe to Elia's vision and informe themselves of this point. There came first a boisterous whirle-wind (such a one, as they wish for) but no GOD there. After it, a ratling earth-quake. And after it, crackling flashes of fire: GOD was in none of them all. Then came a soft still voice: There comes GOD. GOD was in it; and, by it, you may know where to finde Him.

Psal 72.6. And as GOD, so CHRIST: How comes He? He shall come downe like the dew into a fleece of wooll, and that is scarce to be heard. He, He shall not roare nor crie, nor his Esay.42.2. voice be heard out into the street. How unlike them, and their Novices, that will needs beare his Name!

And how the Holy Ghost comes heere, we see. None of all the three Persons, but in gentle milde manner.

It is against them (this) that take delight in these blustering Spirits, and thinke them the onely men; cannot skill of any other. No river they, but the great Euphra- Esay.8.6. tes, that runnes with a huge noyse. The waters of Silo, run too soft for them. Well, the waters of Silo (though) the Prophets commend to us: and to them CHRIST sends us, Psal.46.4. and it is they, when all is done, whose streames shall make glad the Citie of GOD. This is sure, no spirituall grace is ever so truely wrought by these spirits, that take so on, till they be out of breath. The aire they beat, the heart they pierce not. The quiet calme Eccl 7.8. breath shall doe it to better purpose, then these that crackle like thornes under a pott. This breath will thither, to the heart directly: and sinne, never so kindly dissolved, as Iob.4.16. by audivi vocem in silentio (that way.) Tell me not of the mightie winde and the fire; that, was for Apostles. We are none; three degrees lower. And that wind they used very seldome (though:) once or twise perhaps: but, this they used continually. I report me to their Acts, and to their Epistles. For, the wind comes but at times; but, the breath is continuall at all times. And this is sure, when the mightie wind and the fire came, it may be, Peter used it once or twise, and Saint Paul as oft: but, this of the breath, they used more, nay most of all, and by it did more good, then by the other.

For as for this, let it not trouble you, that it is but breath; and breath, but aire, and so (one would think) too feeble; (As indeed what feebler thing is there in man, then it?) the more feeble, the more fit to manifest His strength by. For, as weake in appearance as it is, by it were great things brought to passe. By this puffe of breath, was the World blowne round about. About came the Philosophers, the Orators, the Emperors. Away went the mists of error, downe went the Idols, and their Temples, before it.

Of the Partie. ' From whom: CHRIST.

Which gives us a good passage from the Breath to the Breather, Him that is the Nominative case to insufflavit. For, we are not to looke to the breath altogether, but somwhat too, from whose mouth it comes, whose breath it is. And CHRIST's it is. He it is, that gives the vigor and vertue to it. The touch of His finger, the breath of His mouth, vertue goes from it, sinne cannot stand before it, it sends it going, blowes it away like a little dust.

Take

Take this with you too. It is not CHRISTS breath, any breath of His, but His breath now, after His riſing, and ſo His immortall breath. A mortall He had, which He breathed out, quando emiſit Spiritum, when He gave up the Ghoſt upon the Croſſe. All the while He was mortall, He held His breath. Till it was more than ſo, He breathed it not; till it had in it, the vigour and power of immortalitie: which neither ſinne can endure, but ſcatters ſtraight; nor the man of ſinne, for he alſo ſhall be conſumed with the breath of His mouth. Otherwiſe, unleſſe it be this of Chriſts, there is nothing in our breath to worke this effect: not in any mans, to thaw a froſt, or to ſcatter a miſt. The ſoyle of ſinne is ſo baked on men, they ſo hard frozen in the dreggs of it, our winde cannot diſſolve it. Heare the Prophet, after he had beene long blowing at the ſins of the people: The bellowes (ſaith he) are burnt, the iron of them conſumed, the Founder melts in vaine; for all his blowing, the droſſe will not away (Ier.6.29.) But I (ſaith God) let me take it in hand, let me but blow with my winde, and I ſcatter thy tranſgreſſions as a miſt, and make thy ſinnes like a morning clowd to vaniſh away. Turne we then to Him, whoſe divine power, whoſe immortall breath can doe it: doe it by himſelfe, and if by himſelfe, by others alſo, into whom He will inſpire it; whom in that regard, the Prophet calleth GODS mouth, to ſeparate the precious from the vile.

Chriſt after His reſurrection. Mat.27.50. 2 Theſſ.2.8. Ier.15.19.

Which being of His breath immortall, doth further ſhew, both that there is nothing in this power, but pertaines rather to another life, than to this mortall of ours (even to that, which is the life of the world to come:) and that it ſhall never die (this power) but hold, as long as there is any ſinne to be forgiven. Had it beene His mortall breath, we might have feared the failing, now ſhall it never faile, ſo long as there is any, to open His mouth to receive it. It is His immortall breath.

This for the Partie from whom. Now for in eos, thoſe into whom it came. Much bound we are to our Bleſſed Saviour, for thus ſending; and to the Holy Ghoſt for being thus ſent, for ſeeing us furniſhed with a power, we ſo much ſtand in need of. For, ſinning as we doe, and even running our ſelves out of breath in it, and the wages of that being eternall death: what caſe were we in, but for this breath? I ſee not how we ſhould doe without it. To ſay therefore with them in the Goſpell, Benedictus Deus qui dedit talem poteſtatem, Bleſſed bee GOD for ſending ſuch a power, for ſending it at all.

2 The Parties to whom. Rom.6.23. Mat.9.8.

But then ſecondly, qui dedit talem poteſtatem hominibus, that He gave it to men. For, as the Sonne of man, He gave it; and as man, to men He gave it; to the Sonnes of men upon earth, that we need not ſend up and downe, and caſt, Who ſhall goe up to heaven for us and fetch it thence. That if an Angell ſhould come to us, as to Cornelius there did, he hath not this power to impart, he can but bid us ſend to Ioppa for Peter: He hath it, men have it, Angells have it not.

1 To men. Rom 10.6. Acts 10.32.

In eos, is more yet: to men, and to ſuch men, ſuch ſimple men (for ſo they were, GOD wot) a full unfit and indiſpoſed matter to receive it. Idiots (it is Saint Lukes word) men utterly unlearned: And of no ſpirit or courage at all (the breath but of a Damoſell, quailed the beſt of them.) Probatur Deus per Apoſtolos (ſaith the Schoolemen:) if there were nothing elſe, His very Apoſtles were enough to prove Him to be GOD. For O Lord our Saviour, how excellent is thy name in all the world! Thou, that out of the mouthes of thoſe that were little better than babes, haſt ordained thy praiſe, and ſtilled thine enemies, and put them all to ſilence.

2 In eos, to ſimple men. Acts 4.13. Pſal.8.1,2.

But, there is a worſe matter than that. Not onely Simple; but (which is further off yet) ſinfull men they were. Take their owne confeſſions. Saint Peters: Goe forth from me ô Lord, for I am a ſinfull man. Saint Pauls Sinners, whereof I am the chiefeſt. S. Iames: In many things we offend all; put himſelfe in the number of them that offend many times. S. Iohns: If we (I for one) ſay we have no ſinne (what then, we are proud, there is no humilitie? No; but) we are liers, and there is no truth in us. Even, to ſuch, to ſinners, this power given to forgive ſinnes: to them, that for ſinne, were in feare themſelves to be condemned.

3 To ſinfull men. Luc 5.8. 1 Tim.1.5. Iam.3.2. 1 Ioh.1.8.

Nay (which is not lightly to be paſſed by) all this done, even at the very time, when when they were ſcarce crept out of their ſinne, but three daies before committed, in ſo wretchedly forſaking Him: and ſome more than ſo, and after would ſcarce beleeve, He was riſen, when they ſaw Him: that even then, did He thus breath on them, and made them, that He did. Now bleſſed be GOD, that at all gave ſuch power to men, to ſuch men, ſuch ſimple, ſuch ſinfull men, inſufflavit in eos. To ſecure us, be the men what they will, that have received it, No ſinne of man, ſhall make the power of GOD of none effect. This, for in eos.

3 Of the Act. a Sufflavit.

To the Act now. It is firſt ſufflavit, breathed; and that was, to keepe coreſpondence with His Father at the firſt. By breathing into Adam, the Father gave the ſoule; the author of the life naturall: Ad idem exemplum, the Sonne (here) by breathing gives the HOLY GHOST, the Author of the life ſpirituall, the ſame paſſage; and the ſame ceremonie held by both.

b Inſufflavit.

But inſufflavit is more; breathed it in, into them. This (in) ſhewes, it pertaines within, to the inward parts, to the very conſcience, this act. His breath goeth (ſaith Salomon) ad interiora ventris, and His word with it (ſaith the Apoſtle) through, to the diviſion of the ſoule and Spirit: Thither goeth this breath: and thither, is further than man can goe. For, howſoever the acts and exerciſes of outward Iuriſdiction may be diſpoſable, and are diſpoſed by humane authoritie: yet, this not ſo, of forum internum. Somewhat there is ſtill that comes from CHRIST, and none but CHRIST; ſomewhat, that as it comes higher, ſo it goes deeper, than any earthly power whatſoever. This inward inſpiring, brings us to CHRISTS Deitie againe. The Kings of the Nations, ſend they can, and give power they can, but inſpire they cannot. Array whom they will (as Aſſuerus) with rich attire; arme them at all points, induere, in that ſenſe; but not endue the ſoule with gifts and graces within, not arme their minds with valour and vertue; at leaſtwiſe, not with virtus ex alto: Onely GOD, whom He calls, He gives the inward talents to; and CHRIST, whom He ſends, He ſends His Spirit into. This argueth GOD plainely, and ſo CHRIST to be GOD.

Pro. 18. 8. Heb. 4. 12.

Alwaies this inſufflavit ſhewes, as wherewith He would do it (the Spirit;) ſo, what it is He would work, work upon, and renew. For, if we be renewed in the Spirit of our minds, the whole man will be ſo, ſtraight upon it. There is no indication to that: for, the change of the whole man is a certaine ſight, the Spirit is come into us. As of Saul, it is written, when the Spirit came into him, he was changed into quite another man; no more the ſame Saul, he was before: A new, another Saul then. Which holds, not onely in particular men, but even in the whole world. For, when this breath came into it, in interiora, it was caſt in a new mold preſently, and did even wonder at it ſelfe, how it was become Chriſtian For, the outward rigorous meanes of fire, impriſonment, of the whip, of the terrour of the Magiſtrates ſword: Pilates, Have not I power to crucifie thee, and power to looſe thee? Theſe daunt men, make them aſtoniſhed, make metum peccati, feare to commit the outward act of ſinne. But, odium oportet peccandi, non metum facias, if ſinne ſhall ever truly be left, it muſt come of hatred, not of feare. So, it goes away indeed. And there it is, ſinne muſt be met with; if ever it ſhall rightly be put away, the Spirit to be ſearched, and inward hearty compunction wrought there. And that is, by this breath of CHRIST, piercing thither or not at all. So much for the [in.]

Ioh. 19. 2.

Et dixit.

And now to, & dixit. The words be three, the points according, three, too. 1 Accipite, it is to be received: 2 Spiritum, a Spirit it is, that is to be received: 3 Sanctum, and that Spirit is the Holy Ghoſt. 4 Whereto we adde, the Holy Ghoſt after what manner; for there be more than one.

1 Accipite.

Accipite, agrees well with breath. For, that is received, we open our mouthes and draw it in; our Syſtole, to meet with His Diaſtole.

For

For this Accipite: it is certaine, that at the breathing of this breath, the Spirit was given. He gave them what He bade them take; He mocked them not. They received the HOLY GHOST then, and (if ye will) really. Yet was not the ſubſtance of His breath tranſubſtantiate into that of the HOLY GHOST: None hath ever imagined that: yet ſaid He truely Accipite Spiritum; and no leſſe truely in another place, Accipite Corpus. Truely ſaid by Him, and received by them, in both. And no more need, the bread ſhould be changed into His bodie, in that; than, His breath into the HOLY GHOST, in this: No, though it be a Sacrament (for, with them both are ſo) yet, as all confeſſe, both truely ſaid, truely given, and truely received, and in the ſame ſenſe without any difference at all. This for them.

For us, Accipite ſheweth firſt, it comes from without; it growes not within us; a breath inſpired, not a vapour aſcending; not educta è, but inducta in. It is not meditati ſumus ſicut aranea, we ſpinne it not out of our ſelves, as the Spider doth her webbe. It is not concipite, but accipite: Receive it we doe; Conceive it we doe not. It were too fond to conceive (ſeeing our breath is made of aire, and that is without us) that the Spirit ſhould be made of any thing that is within us. 1 Accipite, not concipite. Pſal. 90. 9.

We ſay againe: it is Accipite, not aſſumite. Aſſumit, qui nemine dante accipit, He aſſumes, that takes that, is not given. But, nemo aſſumit honorem hunc, This honour no man takes unto him, or upon him, till it be given him. As, quod accipitur non habetur, in the laſt; So, quod accipitur, datur, in this. And both theſe are againſt the Voluntaries of our Age, with their taken-on Callings. That have no mitto vos; unſent, ſet out of themſelves. No accipite, no receiving; take it up of their owne accords, make themſelves what they are: Sprinkle their owne heads with water; lay their owne hands on their owne heads; and ſo take that to them, which none ever gave them. They be hypoſtles: (So doth Saint Paul well terme them as it were the mock-Apoſtles:) And the terme comes home to them, for ὑποστολῆς they be Filii ſubtractionis right: worke all to ſubtraction, to withdraw poore ſoules, to make them forſake the fellowſhip (as even then, the manner was.) This brand hath the Apoſtle ſet on them, that we might know them and avoid them. 2 Accipite, not aſſumite. Hebr. 5. 4. Hebr. 10. 39.

We may be ſure, CHRIST could have given the Spirit without any ceremony; held His breath, and yet ſent the Spirit into them without any more adoe: He would not: An outward ceremony He would adde; for, an outward calling He would have. For, if nothing outward had beene in His, we ſhould have had nothing but Enthuſiaſts (as them we have notwithſtanding:) But then we ſhould have had no rule with them: All by divine revelation: Into that they reſolve. For, Sending, breathing, laying on of hands have they none. But if they be of CHRIST, ſome muſt ſay mitto vos; ſent by ſome; not runne of their owne heads. Some ſay accipite; receive it, from ſome; not finde it about themſelves; have an outward calling, and an outward accipite, a teſtimony of it. This for accipite.

Spiritum. A Spirit it is, that is to be received, and much is ſaid in this word (Spirit) it ſtands as oppoſed to many. 1 The Spirit and fleſh (CHRIST, Ioh. 6.) 2 The Spirit and the Letter. (Saint Paul, 2 Cor. 3.) 3 The Spirit and the Soule (Saint Iude.) 4 The Spirit and the minde (Epheſ. 4.) 5 The Spirit and a habit. 6 The Spirit and a Sprite, Spiritus and Spectrum. 7 The Spirit and Hero's Pneumatica, that is ſome artificiall motion or peece of worke with ginnes within it. To all theſe. a Spiritum. The Spirit. Iohn 6.63. 2 Cor. 3. 6. Iude 19. Ephel. 4. 23.

1. Not the fleſh (ſaith our SAVIOVR:) and if not the fleſh, not any humour, for they are of the fleſh: Neither they, nor their revelations profit ought to this worke. 1 Not the fleſh.

2. Not the Letter (ſaith Saint Paul:) not the huske or chaffe: we have too much of them every day. Quid paleæ ad triticum? they rather take away life than give it: A handfull of good graine were better than ten load of ſuch ſtuffe. 2 Not the letter. Ier. 22. 18.

3. Nor animales Spiritum non habentes (ſaith Iude) men that have ſoules onely; and 3 Not the ſoule.

they ſerve them, but as Salt to keepe them, that they rot not. They to have no part or fellowſhip in this buſineſſe; meere naturall men; no Spirit in them at all. Somewhat there is to be in us, more than a naturall ſoule. φύσις, is one thing: φύσησις is another. Some inſpiring needs; ſomewhat of Accipite.

4 Not the minde.

4. Nay, ſaith Saint Paul, Be yee renewed in the Spirit of your mindes. For, the minde is not all: Nor men to thinke ſo, if they once have got true poſitions, true Maximes in their minde, then all is well. If the Spirit be not alſo renewed, it is nothing.

5 Not an habite.

5. The Spirit, not an habite gotten with practice, and loſt againe with diſ-uſe (as are the Arts and morall vertues) againſt the Philoſophers. For, though this bee vertue, yet is it not virtus ex alto (this.) No habituall, but a ſpirituall vertue, this.

6 Not a Sprite.

6. Spiritus, non ſpectrum: for, that is a flying Shadow void of action; doth nothing. But the Spirit, the firſt thing we reade of it, it did hover and hatch and make fruitfull the waters, and fit to bring forth ſomething of ſubſtance.

Gen.1.2.

7 Not Hero's Pneumatica.

7. And laſt (which is by Writers thought to be chiefly intended) CHRISTS Spirit, not Hero's Pneumatica; not with ſome ſpring or device, though within, yet from without; artificiall, not naturall: but the very principium motus to be within. Of our ſelves, to move: not wrought to it, by any ginne, or vice, or skrew made by art: Elſe, we ſhall move but while we are wound up, for a certaine time till the plummets be at the ground, and then our motion will ceaſe ſtraight. All which (but theſe laſt ſpecially) are againſt the automata, the ſpectra, the puppets of Religion, Hypocrites. With ſome ſpring within, their eyes are made to rowle, and their lips to wagge, and their breſt to give a ſobbe: all is but Hero's Pneumatica, a vizor, not a very face; an outward ſhew of godlineſſe, but no inward power of it at all. It is not Accipite Spiritum.

2 Tim.3.5.

b Spiritum Sanctum.

Thirdly, I ſay it would be knowne further, what Spirit: For, Accipite it may be; ſomewhat they may have taken; it may be, a Spirit. But, whatſoever it is, it is not yet home, unleſſe Sanctum come too. Sanctum it would be, if it be right. To be a man of Spirit (as we call them, that be active and ſtirring in the world) will not ſerve here, if that be all. I have formerly told you, there is a Spiritum without Sanctum; Spirit and Holy are two things. Two other Spirits there be beſides: and they well accepted of, and in great requeſt. 1 One which Saint Peter calls the private Spirit: 2 The other, that Saint Paul calls the Spirit of the world: Which two will conſort well together, for their owne turnes, and for ſome worldly end: but neither of them with this. For, they are oppoſed to the HOLY GHOST, both.

2 Pet.1.20.

1 Not Spiritum ſuum.

The private Spirit firſt. And are there not in the world ſomewhere, ſome ſuch, as will receive none, admit of at no hand no other HOLY GHOST but their owne ghoſt, and the idoll of their owne conceit, the viſion of their owne heads, the motions of their owne ſpirits; and if you hit not on that, that is there in their hearts, reject it, be it what it will: that make their breſts the Sanctuary; that (in effect) ſay with the old Donatiſt, Quod volumus Sanctum eſt, That, they will have holy, is holy, and nothing elſe? Men (as the Apoſtle ſpeakes of them) cauſeleſſe puſt up with their fleſhly minde? His word is to be marked: φυσιώσεις, there; φύσησις, here: inflati, they; afflati, theſe: They puffed up, theſe inſpired. If it make to ſwell, then is it but wind; the Spirit doth it not; inſpirat, non inflat. The word is inſufflavit: there is, in ſufflavit, a [ſub] that beareth downward, and carries not up. So, Spiritum Sanctum, is not ſpiritum ſuum.

2 Nor Spiritum mundi.

Nor Spiritus mundi is not Spiritus CHRISTI. Elſe doth Saint Paul wrong to oppoſe them. It is too ſure, ſuch a Spirit there is as the Spirit of the world: and that the greateſt part of the world live and breathe, and move by it: and that it doth well ſometimes, but without any reference to GOD, or CHRIST, or HOLY GHOST. For, even the acts they doe of Religion, are out of worldly reaſons and reſpects: Herod's reaſon, Videns quia placeret populo; ſaw, the world would that way: Demetrius's reaſon, ſon, Periclitatur portio noſtra, It may prove dangerous to their worldly eſtate: The Sichemites: Oh ſet forward that point of Divinitie; for then, all they have is ours. See we not, whence this wind blowes, from what ſpirit this breath comes? from Spiritus mundi, plainely. And I know not how, but as if Christs mouth were ſtopped, and His breath like to faile Him, the world begins to fare, as if they had got a new mouth, to draw breath from; to governe the Church, as if Spiritus Prætorii would doe things, better than Spiritus Sanctuarii, and mans law become the beſt meanes to teach the feare of God, and to guide Religion by. In vaine then is all this act of Christs; Hee might have kept His breath to Himſelfe. But, it will not ſo be. When all is done, the Spirit muſt come from the Word, and the Holy Ghost from Christs mouth, that muſt doe this, governe the Church. Thither we muſt, for Sanctum; even to the Sanctuary, and to no other place. Gen. 34. 23.

And, a certaine note it is (this) to diſcerne the Holy Spirit of God, from the ſpirit of what you will. From Christ it comes, if it be true: Hee breathes it. It cannot but be true, if it come from Him, for He is the Truth. And as the Truth, ſo the Wiſdome of God: that, if it ſavour of falſhood, or folly, it came not from Him; He breathed it not. But, His Breath ſhall not faile; ſhall ever bee able to ſerve His Church, without all the ἴδια ἐπιλυσις of the private Spirit, and without all the additaments of Spiritus mundi. And if wee gape after them, wee make this Accipite more than needs: And if wee doe ſo, I know not what ſhall become of us. John 14. 6. 1 Cor. 1. 3.

But, the Holy Ghost may be received more wayes than one. He hath many Spiramina: Πολυτρόπως, in many manners, Hee comes: And multiformis gratia, Hee comes with. Hee and they carry the name of their cauſe: and to receive them is to receive the Spirit. There is a gratum faciens, the ſaving grace of the Spirit, for one to ſave himſelfe by, received by each, without reſpect to others; and there is a gratis data (what ever become of us) ſerving to ſave others by, without reſpect to our ſelves. And there is χάρις διακονίας, the grace of a holy Calling: For it is a grace, to be a conduit of grace any way. All theſe; and all from one and the ſame Spirit. Which way it is received. 1 Pet. 4. 10. 2 Cor. 8. 4.

That, was here conferred, was not the ſaving grace of inward Sanctimonie: they were not breathed on, to that end. The Church to this day, gives this ſtill in her Ordinations, but the ſaving grace the Church cannot give: none but God can give that. Nor, the gratis data it is not. That, came by the tongues, both the gift of ſpeaking diverſe languages, and the gift of ἀποφθέγγεσθαι ſpeaking wiſely, and to the purpoſe: And (wee know) none is either the holyer, or the learneder, by his Ordination.

Yet, a grace it is. For, the very Office it ſelfe is a grace: Mihi data eſt hac gratia (ſaith the Apoſtle in more places than one; and ſpeakes of his Office and nothing elſe.) The Apoſtle-ſhip was a grace, yet no ſaving grace. Elſe, ſhould Judas have beene ſaved. Cleerely then, it is the grace of their Calling (this) whereby they were ſacred, and made perſons publike, and their acts authenticall; and they enabled to doe ſomewhat about the remiſſion of ſinnes, that is not (of like availe) done by others, though perhaps more learned and vertuous than they, in that they have not the like mitto vos, nor the ſame Accipite that theſe have. To ſpeake with the leaſt: As the act of one, that is a Publike Notary, is of more validitie, than of another that is none, though (it may bee) hee writes a much fairer hand. And this (loe) was the grace here, by breathing conferred to them: of Spiritum, a Spirituall; of Sanctum, an holy Calling: and derived from them to us, and from us to others, to the worlds end. Eph. 2. 7, &c.

But take heed, wee ſucke no errour out of this word Holy; No more than wee doe out of the word Anointed. When time was, it was ſhewed, the anointing was no inward holineſſe, or abilitie to governe by, but the right of ruling onely. So, here, it is no internall qualitie infuſed, but the grace onely of their ſpirituall and ſacred function. Good it were, and much to be wiſhed, they were holy and learned all; But if they be not, their Office holds good though. He that is a Sinner himſelfe, may remit ſinnes for all that, and ſave others he may, though himſelfe be not ſaved? For, it was not propter ſe, he received this power, to abſolve himſelfe; but (as the next word is) quorumcunque, any others whoſoever.

Some adoe wee have to plucke this out: but out it muſt. For, an errour it is, an old worne errour of the Donatiſts: and but new dreſſed over by ſome fanaticall ſpirits, in our dayes, that teach in corners. One, that is not himſelfe inwardly holy, cannot be the meanes of holineſſe to another. And where they dare too, that: One, that is not in ſtate of grace, can have no right to any poſſeſſion or place. For, they of right belong to none, but to the true children of GOD: that is, to none but to themſelves.

Fond ignorant men! For, hath not the Church long ſince defined it poſitively, that the baptiſme, Peter gave, was no better than that which Iudas: and exemplified it, that a ſeale of iron will give as perfect a ſtampe, as one of gold? That as the Carpenters that built the Arke, wherein Noah was ſaved, were themſelves drowned in the Floud: That as the water of baptiſme, that ſends the childe to Heaven, is it ſelfe caſt downe the kennell: Semblably is it with theſe: And they that by the Word, the Sacraments, the Keyes, are unto other the conduits of grace, to make them fructifie in all good workes; may well ſo be, though themſelves remaine unfruitfull, as doe the pipes of wood or lead, that by tranſmitting the water, make the garden, to beare both herbes and flowers, though themſelves never beare any. And let that content us, that what is here received, for us it is received, that what is given them, is given them for us; and is given us, by them. Sever the Office, from the men: leave the men to GOD, to whom they ſtand or fall: let the Ordinance of GOD ſtand faſt. This breath, though not into them for themſelves, yet goeth into and through every act of their Office or miniſtery, and by them conveigheth His Saving grace into us all.

But, leſt we grow diſcontent, that ſome doe receive it, and that we all doe not ſo (For, this being the Feaſt of the HOLY GHOST, and of receiving it, it may grieve any of us, to goe his way and not receive it:) I will ſhew, it is not ſo. For, though as this breath, we cannot all; and, as the firy Tongues, much leſſe: (Theſe are but for ſome ſet perſons:) yet I will ſhew you a way, how to ſay Accipite Spiritum to all, and how all may receive it.

Matth. 26. 26. And that is by Accipite corpus meum. For, Accipite corpus, upon the matter, is Accipite Spiritum, inaſmuch as they two never part, not poſſible to ſever them one minute. Thus, when or to whom we ſay Accipite corpus, we may ſafely ſay with the ſame breath, Accipite Spiritum; and as truely every way. For, that Body is never without this Spirit; he that receives the one, receives the other; He that, the bodie, togethe with it, the Spirit alſo.

And receiving it thus, it is to better purpoſe than here in the Text it is. Better (I ſay) for us. For, in the Text it is received, for the good of others; whereas (here) wee ſhall receive it, for our owne good. Now, whether is the better remiſſion of ſinnes, to bee able to remit to others, or to have our owne remitted? To have our owne, no doubt. And that is here to be had. To the ſtabliſhing of our hearts with grace, to the cleanſing and quieting our conſciences. Which ſpirituall grace wee receive in this ſpirituall food, and are made to drinke (I will not ſay of the ſpirituall Rocke, but) of the ſpirituall Vine that followeth us, which Vine is CHRIST. To that then let us apply our ſelves. Both are received, both are holy, both co-operate to the remiſſion of ſinnes. The bodie: Matth. 26. The Spirit here evidently. And there is no better way of celebrating the Feaſt of the receiving the HOLY GHOST, than ſo to doe, with receiving the ſame body that came of it at His birth, and that came from it now at His riſing againe.

And

And ſo receiving it, Hee that breathed, and Hee that was breathed, both of them vouchſafe to breathe into thoſe holy Myſteries a divine power and vertue; And make them to us the bread of life, and the Cup of Salvation. GOD the Father alſo ſending His bleſſing upon them; that they may be His bleſſed meanes of this thrice bleſſed effect. To whom all, three Perſons, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT HALYRVD Houſe, in Edenburgh on the VIII. of Iune, A.D. MDCXVII. being WHITSVNDAY.

LVKE CHAP. IV. VER. XVIII, XIX.

SPIRITVS DOMINI ſuper Me, &c.

The SPIRIT of the LORD is upon Me, becauſe He hath anointed Me, that I ſhould preach the Goſpell to the poore: He hath ſent Me, that I ſhould heale the broken-hearted, that I ſhould preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of ſight to the blinde, and that I ſhould ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed.

And, that I ſhould preach the acceptable Yeare of the LORD.

WE are fallen here upon CHRISTS firſt Sermon, preached at Nazareth: and upon His very Text. This, I have read you, was His Text, taken out of the Prophet Eſay LXI. Chapter, Verſe 1. There was no feare, CHRIST would have ranged farre from His matter, if He had taken none; yet, He tooke a Text, to teach us thereby, to doe the like. To keepe us within; not to flie out, or preach much, either without, or beſides the booke.

And He tooke His Text for the Day, as is plaine, by His application (verſ. 21.) This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. This day this Scripture. Our Maſters Scripture was for the Day: So would ours be.

For

For the day: and for the preſent occaſion. For, among the Writers, it is generally received, that when our SAVIOVR made this Sermon; that yeare, it was with the Iewes, the yeare of Iubilee. And that therefore, He told them, It was fulfilled in their eares, they might heare the trumpets ſound to it. If it were ſo; this Text of the acceptable yeare, was as appoſite, as could be choſen. That (it ſeemes) He turned the booke purpoſely to finde it: Out of it, to ſpeake to them of the true Iubilee.

And if it were ſo (the yeare of Iubilee) it was the laſt, that ever they held. For, before fiftie yeares came about againe, they were ſwept away: Temple, Sacrifice, Iubilee, People, and all. The Iubilees of the Law then failing, being come to their period, comes CHRIST with His; with a new Iubilee of the Goſpell, the true one (as, whereof thoſe of theirs were but ſhadowes onely:) which Iubilee of the Goſpell, was the acceptable yeare, which Eſay here meant.

Will yee then give mee leave now, to ſay of this Text of our SAVIOVRS, This Scripture ſuits well with this day: is fulfilled in it three wayes? In the 1 comming of the Spirit: 2 the end for which; To ſend to proclaime: 3 the matter which, to proclaime a Iubilee: 4 And a fourth, I will adde, of a preſent occaſion, as fit every way. The Summe.

First, it is of the comming of the Spirit. And, this day, the Spirit came. And the comming of the Spirit, in the Text here upon CHRIST, was the cauſe of the comming of the Spirit, this day, upon the Apoſtles. From this comming upon Him, came the comming upon them: Super Petrum, ſuper Iacobum, ſuper all the reſt; upon them, and upon us all, from this ſuper Me. All our anointings are but drops from His anointing: All our miſſions, and commiſſions, but quills (as we ſay) out of this Commiſſion (here) miſit Me. Sicut miſit Me, Ego mitto vos: He ſent Me; As He ſent Me, I ſend you. By that, and by no other Commiſſion, did they, or doe we, or ſhall ever any come. 1 Iohn 20. 1.

That firſt, and this ſecond: the Miſit, and the Ad. Why came the Spirit on CHRIST? To ſend Him: ſend Him, to what? Ad evangeliZandum. And why came the Spirit on the Twelve, this day, but for the very ſame end? And it came therefore, for the purpoſe, in the ſhape of tongues. It is the office of the tongue, to be a trumpet, to proclaime. It ſerves for no other end. 2

To proclaime, what? The acceptable yeare of the LORD, that is, the Iubilee. Now fiftie is the number of the Iubilee; which number agreeth well with this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. What the one, in yeares; the other, in dayes. So that, this is the Iubilee (as it were) of the yeare (or the yearely memory of the yeare of Iubilee:) That, the Pentecoſt of yeares; This, the Iubilee of dayes. Theſe three for the Day. 3

And may we not adde a fourth, from the preſent occaſion? I take it, we may; and that not unfit neither, as peculiar to this very Yeare, rather than to any other. There falleth out (lightly) but one Iubilee in a mans age. 1 And this preſent yeare is (yet) the Iubilee-yeare of Your Majeſties life and Reigne. 2 And this day is the Iubilee-day of that yeare. 3 And yet further, if we take not Iubilee, for the time, but for the joy, (for, the word Iubilee is taken, as for the time of the joy, ſo for the joy of the time;) And ſo referre it to the late great joy and Iubilee, at your Majeſties receiving hither to Your NaZareth (the Countrie where you were brought up) which then was fulfilled in your eares: Our eares (I am ſure) were filled full with it. So that firſt and laſt, the Text ſuits with the Day; and both ſuit well, with the preſent occaſion. 4

To returne to our SAVIOVR: Who ſtanding now with His loynes girt, ready to go about the errand, He came for; (as the manner is) He was firſt to read His Commiſſion. This it is (the words, I have read) drawne and ready penned for Him, long before, by the Prophet Eſay here, who had the honour to be the Regiſter of this, and diverſe other inſtruments, touching CHRISTS Natures; Perſon, and Offices. And, upon the reading of this, He entered in His Office.

II. You may plainly know, it was His Inauguration (this,) or firſt entring on His office, by the proclamation following, of opening the gaole, and letting the Priſoners goe free: So is (ever) the faſhion of Princes, to make the joy generall, of their comming to their kingdomes; to releaſe thoſe, that ſtand committed; to grant free and generall pardons to all, that will ſue for them; to be at the charge of miſſilia, certaine new peeces of coine, to be caſt abroad among the people.

Accordingly, were there this day of the Spirits comming, by one Sermon of Saint Peters, three thouſand ſet at libertie, that had beene captives before, under Satan. A largeſſe of new tongues (as it were miſſilia) caſt downe from heaven. A generall pardon proclaimed, even for them that had beene the betrayers and murderers of the Sonne of GOD, if they would come in. That it was (indeed) a right day of Iubilee. And this, is the Summe of all.

Act. 7. 52.

The Diviſion. The parts as they lye, are theſe: 1 Firſt, of the Spirit's being on CHRIST:

I. 2 Anointing Him: 3 Sending Him. Theſe three.

II. 2 Then, whereto He was ſo anointed and ſent; to preach the Goſpell, or glad tidings (glad tidings, or Goſpell, both are one:) and that even to the poore.

III. 3 Thirdly, whereof the tidings is: of an excellent Phyſitian; a Phyſitian of the heart, one that can cure a broken heart.

IV. 4 Of theſe hearts. 1 How they came broken firſt, and there are three wayes here ſet downe. 1 By being captives: 2 by being in a darke dungeon, where their ſight was even taken from them: 3 By being there in irons, ſo as they were even bruiſed with them. Three, able (I thinke) to breake any mans heart alive.

2 Then, how they came cured. And that is by good newes. Two proclamations, (for κηρύξαι to proclaime, is twice repeated.) 1 One containing a particular remedy of thoſe three ſeverall maladies: 1 Of a partie, one with a ranſome, or redemption for the captives: 2 with an engine, or toole, to knocke off their irons: 3 with the keyes of the priſon, to let them out. And this to begin with. 2 Then (to conclude with) a ſecond proclamation, that makes up all; of a yeare of Iubilee; and ſo, of reſtitution, of them to their former forfeited eſtates, by GOD's accepting them to favour, this acceptable time.

This, is the Summe of CHRISTS Commiſſion here read. And indeed, a briefe of His Offices all three. 1 In preaching the glad newes of the Goſpell, of His Prophecie: 2 In granting pardon, and enlarging priſoners, of His Kingdome. 3 In proclaiming a Iubilee, of His Prieſt-hood (for, that, the peculiar of the Prieſts Office.) So, all are in, that pertaine to CHRIST. And all, that, to IESVS too: Who ſheweth Himſelfe IESVS, in nothing ſo much, as in being the Phyſitian of a broken contrite heart.

I. Of the Spirit's being on CHRIST.

WE cannot better begin, than with the Bleſſed Trinitie. In the three firſt words, the three Perſons reaſonable cleare. 1 The Spirit: 2 He, whoſe the Spirit (Domini:) 3 He, on whom the Spirit, ſuper Me.

The Spirit, that is, the Holy Ghoſt. He, whoſe the Spirit, GOD the Father. Hee, on whom the Spirit, our SAVIOVR CHRIST. He, the ſuper quem (here.)

Theſe three diſtinct: 1 the Spirit, from the 2 LORD, whoſe the Spirit is: 1 the Spirit, that was upon, 3 from Him, it was upon. Yet, all three in one joynt concurrence, to one and the ſame worke, the Iubilee of the Goſpell.

Vpon Me, is CHRISTS Perſon. But, His perſon onely according to one of His Natures; His humane. The Spirit was not upon Him, but as He was man. Theſe three, 1 To be ſent, 2 to be anointed, 3 to have a ſuper eum, ſavour of inferiority (all) to the Sender, Anointer, Superiour. And ſo (indeed) for us, He became lower than, in Himſelfe Himſelfe) was: In the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, had a Spirit, to anoint Him: In formâ ſervi, had a LORD, to ſend Him about the meſſage here. Rom.8.3. Phil.2.7.

But, that CHRIST ſuffer not in His honour, we ſupply: that the SPIRIT, who is here ſaid to be Spiritus DOMINI, is elſe-where ſaid to be Spiritus CHRISTI (a *Rom.*8.) b The Spirit of the Father (*Matt.*10.) And the Spirit of the c Sonne, both (*Gal.*4.) The Spirit that ſent Him here, ſent by Him elſe-where, d Whom I will ſend (*Ioh.*15.) This ſets Him upright againe. As the one ſhewes Him, to be Man; ſo the other, to be GOD. And, as GOD, Hee hath no Superiour: NO LORD, to owne Him: No Spirit, to anoint Him.

a Rom.8.9.
b Matt. 10.20.
d Ioh.15.26.

And (if I miſtake not) a kinde of inckling of thus much, is even in the very words. The word [LORD] in Eſay, is plurall; and ſo, more perſons than one; whoſe the Spirit is, and from whom He proceeds. And, if you would know how many; In Eſay the words be two: ſo, not a ſingle proceeding, from one: but, a double, from two, as the word is double. Saint Baſil ſaith it ſhort, ὡς θεὸς χορηγεῖ, ὡς ἄνθρωπος λαμβάνει: As GOD, He ſends it; as Man, He receives it. Vpon Him, as Man: from Him, as GOD.

Of Him then, as Man, three things here are ſaid, the Spirit 1 was upon Him: 2 anointed Him: 3 ſent Him. But it is ſaid: the Spirit is upon Me, becauſe He hath anointed me: So as, the anointing is ſet, as the cauſe or cauſe, why He was upon Him. And then, that, (His anointing) as the cauſe, is firſt in nature. But it cannot be conceived, but the Spirit muſt be alſo upon Him, to anoint Him, the Spirit is the Vnction: the Spirit then was upon Him, two ſeverall times, for two ſeverall ends. 1 To anoint Him: 2 And, after He was anointed, to ſend Him; the ſecond. Of this anointing we are to touch, 1 when it was: 2 with what it was: 3 and how it comes to be termed anointing.

2 His anointing.

When was He thus anointed? Not now, or here, firſt: but long before; even from the very time of His conceiving. When the Word became fleſh, the fleſh, with the Word and (by meanes of it) with the whole Deitie, was anointed all over; and by vertue thereof, filled with the fulneſſe of all grace. For, this we are to hold: that CHRIST was ever CHRIST (that is) ever anointed, from the very firſt inſtant of all; He was never un-anointed, not one moment.

1 When was it. Iohn 1.14.

Anointed with what? I have alreadie told you, with the Deitie, by vertue of the Perſonall union of the ſecond Perſon of the Deitie. Why then is the HOLY GHOST called the Vnction? Why is CHRIST expreſly ſaid to be anointed with the HOLY GHOST? why not, with the Father as well?

2 With what.

Why not: To retaine to each Perſon, His owne peculiar, His proper act, in this common worke of them all: or (as the Hebrewes ſpeake) to keepe every word, upon his right wheele.

Father, is a terme of nature. So, to the Father we aſcribe, what the Sonne hath by nature. For, that He is the Sonne, is of nature, not of grace.

But, that the Man-hood is taken into GOD, that was not of nature, but of grace. And, what is of grace, is ever properly aſcribed to the Spirit. There are diverſities of graces, all from the ſame Spirit. And the proceeding of grace from it, not as by nature, but Vbi vult, Blowes where it liſts freely. All then, of grace, proceeding from the Spirit: Accordingly, the Conception of CHRISTS fleſh, and the ſending it with the fulneſſe of grace (or anointing it) is aſcribed to the Spirit.

1 Cor.12.4. Iohn 3.8.

But, this enduing with grace, how comes it to be called anointing? For nothing, but for the reſemblance it hath, with an ointment. An ointment is a compoſition (we know:) the ingredients of it, oile and ſweet odours. By vertue of the oile, it ſokes even into the bones (ſaith the Pſalme:) but, it workes upon the joints and ſinewes, ſenſibly; raake them ſupple and lithe, and ſo the more freſh and active to beſtirre themſelves. By vertue of the ſweet odours mixt with it, it workes upon the ſpirits and ſenſes; cheeres him and makes him glad, that is anointed with it. And not him alone, but all that are about and neare him, qui in odore unguentorum, that take delight in 3 How called anointing. Or.

in his company, to goe and to runne with him, and all for the fragrant ſweet ſent they feele to come from him.

Of which two, the oyle repreſents the vertue of the power of the Spirit, piercing thorow (but gently) like oyle. The odours, the ſweet comfort of the graces, that proceed from the HOLY GHOST. Nothing, more like. And this for His Anointing.

3 His ſending. Now the ſame Spirit, that was thus upon Him, at His Conception, to anoint Him; was even now upon Him againe, to manifeſt, and to ſend Him. When? At His Baptiſme (a little before.) Not ſecretly, as then at His conception, but in a viſible ſhape upon Him, before a great concourſe of people: (To ſhew, there ought to be an outward Calling:) what time, the Dove laid that, which in it, is anſwerable to our hands, upon Him. Luke 3.22.

Not, to endue Him with ought: (that, was done before, long:) but, to manifeſt to all, This was He; This, the Partie, before anointed, and now ſent, that they might take heed to Him. It was the HOLY GHOST'S firſt Epiphanie (this:) He was never ſeene before: But, CHRIST'S ſecond Epiphanie. The other, at His Birth, or comming into the world: This now, at His calling, or ſending into the world. That firſt, to enable Him, to His Office: This, to deſigne Him to it. By that, furniſhed for it: By this, ſent, ſevered, and ſet about the worke, He came for.

But, before wee come to the worke, let us firſt reflect a little upon theſe: they ſerve our turne; are for our direction. Theſe (both) were done to CHRIST, to the end Hee might teach the Church, that the ſame were to be on them, who in CHRIST'S ſtead are impſoyed in the ſame buſineſſe, ad evangelizandum. The HOLY GHOST, to be upon them; upon them, to anoint them, and to ſend them, both: but, firſt to anoint; then, to ſend them. To be, and in this order to be. Vnleſſe they be firſt anointed, not to be ſent; and, though never ſo anointed, not to ſtart out of themſelves, but to ſtay till they be ſent.

The SPIRIT to be upon them; the ſame, that upon CHRIST, though not in the ſame, but in a broad and a large difference or degree of being. Vpon Him without meaſure; Not ſo, on us; but, on ſome, leſſe (the meaſure of the Hin;) on ſome, more (the meaſure of the Epha:) but every one, his Gomer at leaſt. Some feathers of the Dove (as it were) though not the Dove it ſelfe; not the whole SPIRIT entire, as upon Him.

On His head, the whole box of ointment was broken, which from Him ran downe upon the Apoſtles, ſomewhat more freſh and full; and (ever) the further, the thinner, as the nature of things liquid is; but, ſome ſmall ſtreames trickle downe even to us, and to our times ſtill.

This on-being, ſhewes it ſelfe firſt, in that which ſtands firſt (the Anointing.)

I ſhall not need tell you, the Spirit comes not upon us now, at our conception in the wombe, to anoint us there. No: wee behoove to light our lampes oft, and to ſpend much oyle at our ſtudies, yer wee can attaine it. This way, come we to our anointing, now, by bookes: This Booke chiefly; but, in a good part alſo, by the bookes of the Ancient Fathers, and Lights of the Church, in whom the ſent of this ointment was freſh, and the temper true; on whoſe writings it lyeth thick, and we thence ſtrike it off, and gather it ſafely.

You will marke: the anointing is ſet, for the cauſe; the Spirit is upon Me, becauſe He hath anointed Me. Then, ſublatâ cauſâ, and à ſenſu contrario, the Spirit is not upon Mee, becauſe He hath not anointed Me. Againe, becauſe Hee hath anointed Mee, Hee hath ſent Me. And then it followes, becauſe Hee hath not anointed Mee, Hee hath not ſent Mee. No ſpeaking of the Spirits on-being; no talke of ſent by Him, without it. Where be they then, that ſay; the leſſe anointing, the more of the SPIRIT? Indeed, the more blinde, the more bold; and ſo, the fitter to goe on ſome other errand (perhaps) but not this.

No

No no: the Spirit makes none of theſe drie miſſions; ſends none of theſe ſame inuncti, ſuch as have never a feather of the Doves wing, not any ſparke of the fire of this day, not ſo much as a drop of this ointment. You ſhall ſmell them ſtraight, that have it; the Myrrhe, Aloes, and Caſsia will make you glad. And you ſhall even as ſoone finde the others. Either they want odor: Annointed, I cannot ſay, but beſmeered with ſome unctuous ſtuffe (goe to, be it oyle:) that gives a glibneſſe to the tongue to talke much and long, but no more ſent in it, than in a drie ſticke; no odors in it at all. Either odors they want (I ſay:) or, their odors are not layd in oile. For, if in oile; you ſhall not ſmell them ſo for a few ſet ſermons; if they be annointed, not perfumed or waſhed (for, ſuch Divines we have.) If it be but ſome ſweet water, out of a caſting-bottle, the ſent will away ſoone; water-colors or water-odours will not laſt. But, if layd in oile throughly, they will: feare them not. To them that are ſtuffed (I know) all is one: they that have their ſenſes about them, will ſoone put a difference. Pſal. 45.8.

But what? If He be annointed, then turne Him off hardly with no more adoe, without ſtay for any ſending at all? Nay, we ſee here, onely annointing ſerved not Chriſt Himſelfe: He was ſent, and outwardly ſent beſides. Meſsias He was, in regard of His annointing: Shilo, He was too, in regard of His ſending. If you love your eyes, waſh them in the water of Shilo, that is by interpretation, Sent. Or (to ſpeake in the ſtyle of the Text) as He was CHRIST, for His annointing; So was He an Apoſtle, for His ſending. So is He called (*Heb.*3.) the Apoſtle of our profeſsion, with plaine reference to ἀπέσταλκε here, the word in the Text. Ioh. 9.7. Heb.3.1.

Vnction then, is to goe before, but not to goe alone; Miſsion is to follow: and no man, though never ſo *peruncti*us, eo ipſo, to ſtirre, niſi qui vocatus erit ſicut Aaron, Vnleſſe he be called as was Aaron; unleſſe he be ſent as CHRIST here was: for feare of Currebant & non mittebam eos, in the Prophet; Or of, How ſhall they, unleſſe they be ſent, in the Apoſtle. For his life, he knew not (if neither Aaron, nor CHRIST) how any might ſtep up, without calling, ſending, ordaining, laying on of hands; all are one. Heb.5.4. Ier. 23.21. Rom.10.15.

And marke well this, that the Holy Ghoſt came upon Chriſt alike for both: that there is the Holy Ghoſt no leſſe in this ſending, than in the annointing. The very Calling it ſelfe is a grace expreſſely ſo called, *Rom.*12. *Epheſ.*3. and in divers places elſe. Every grace is of the Holy Ghoſt; and goeth ever, and is termed by the name of the Holy Ghoſt uſually. And, in this ſenſe, the Holy Ghoſt is given and received in holy Orders, and we doe well avow that, we ſay, Receive the Holy Ghoſt. Rom.12.3. Epheſ.3.7.

But, we have not all, when we have both theſe; for, ſhall we ſo dwell upon annointing and ſending, as we paſſe by the ſuper Me, the firſt of all the three, and (ſure) not the laſt to be looked after? A plaine note it is, but not without uſe, this ſituation of the Spirit; that He is ſuper. For, if He be ſuper, we be ſub. That we be carefull then to preſerve Him in His ſuper, to keepe Him in His due place (that is) above. In ſigne whereof, the Dove hovered aloft over CHRIST, and came downe upon Him: And in ſigne thereof, we ſubmit our heads, in annointing, to have the oile powred upon; we ſubmit our heads, in ordaining, to have hands layd upon them. So, ſubmit we doe, in ſigne that ſubmit we muſt: That, not onely miſsion, but ſubmiſsion is a ſigne of one truely called, to this buſineſſe. Somewhat of the Dove there muſt be (needs:) meekeneſſe, humbleneſſe of minde.

But lightly you ſhall find it, that thoſe that be neq; uncti neque loti, neither annointed nor ſcarce well waſhed; the leſſe ointment, the worſe ſending, the farther from this ſubmiſsive humble minde. That above? Nay any above? Nay, they inferior to none. That above, and they under? Nay under no Spirit: no ſuper, they. Of all Prepoſitions, they indure not that, not Super: all equall, all even at leaſt. Their ſpirit not ſubject to the Spirit of the Prophets, nor of the Apoſtles neither (if they were now alive:) but beare themſelves ſo high, doe tam altum ſpirare, as if this Spirit were their underling, and their Ghoſt above the Holy Ghoſt. There may be a ſprite in them, there is no Spirit upon them, that indure no ſuper, none above them. So, now we have all, we ſhould: Vnction, out of Vnxit; Miſsion, out of Miſit; Submiſsion, out of Super Me.

Forward

II.

The end whereto.

1 To bring good tydings.

Forward now. Vpon Me. How know we that? Because He hath annointed Me: Annointed, to what end? To send: Send, whereto? That, followes now. Both whereto, and whom to. 1 Whereto? To bring good tydings: 2 Whom to? To the poore.

1. Whereto? If the Spirit send CHRIST, He will send Him with the best sending: and the best sending, is to be sent with a message of good newes: the best, and the best welcome. We all strive to beare them; we all love to have them brought. The Gospell is nothing else, but a message of good tydings. And CHRIST, as in regard of His sending, an Apostle, the Arch-Apostle; So, in regard of that He is sent with, an Evangelist, the Arch-Evangelist. CHRIST is to annoint; this, is a kind of annointing: and no Ointment so precious, no Oile so supple, no Odor so pleasing, as the
2 Cor. 2. 16. knowledge of it; called therefore by the Apostle, Odor vitæ, the Savour of life unto life, in them that receive it.

2 To the poore

2. Send with this, and to whom? To the poore. You may know, it is the Spirit of GOD by this. That Spirit it is: and they that annointed with it, take care of the poore. The spirit of the world, and they that annointed with it, take little keep to evangelize any such, any poore soules. But in the tydings of the Gospell, they are not left out: taken in by name (we see.) In sending those tydings, there is none excluded. No
Acts 10. 34. respect of persons with GOD: None of Nations; to every Nation, Gentile, and Iew: None of Conditions; to every condition, poore and rich. To them, that of all other are the least likely. They are not troubled with much worldly good newes: Seldome come there any Posts to them with such. But the good newes of the Gospell, reacheth even to the meanest. And reaching to them, it must needs be generall (this newes:)

If to them, that of all other least likely, then certainely, to all. Etiam pauperibus is (as if He had said) even to poore and all, by way of extent, ampliando. But, no wayes to ingrosse it, or appropriate it to them onely. The tydings of the Gospell are as well for a Lydia the purple-seller; as for b Simon the tanner: For the c Areopagite, the Iudge at Athens, as for the d Iayler at Philippos, for the e elect Ladie, as for widow f Dorcas: g For the Lord Treasurer of Æthiopia, as for the h Begger at the beautifull gate of the Temple: i for the household of Cæsar, as for the k household of Stephanas; yea and (if he will) for l King Agrippa too.

Mat. 5. 3. But, if you will have pauperibus a restringent, you may; but then, you must take it for poore in spirit, with whom our Saviour begins His Beatitudes in the Mount: the Rev. 3. 17. poverty to be found in all. As indeed, I know none so rich, but needs these tydings: all to feele the want of them in their spirits: No Dices quia dives sum; as few sparks of a Pharisee as may be, in them, that will be interessed in it.

III.

The tydings of a Phisitian for broken hearts.

Well, we see to whom: what may these newes be? Newes of a new Physitian, Καρδιατρος, Medicus cordis, one that can give Physicke to heale a broken heart. And newes of such an one, is good newes indeed. They that can cure parts lesse principall, broken armes or leggs, or limbs out of joynt, are much made of, and sent for farre and neere: What say you to one, that is good at a broken heart? make that whole, set that in joint againe, if it happen to be out? So they understood it plainly, by their speech
Ver. 23. to Him after, Medice cura teipsum.

Eccles 15. 17. The heart (sure) is the part of all other, we would most gladly have well. Give me any griefe to the griefe of the heart (saith one that knew what he said:) Omni custodiâ
Pro. 4. 23. custodi cor (saith Salomon) keepe thy heart above all: if that be downe, all is downe: looke to that in any wise. Now, it is most proper for the Spirit to deale with that part: it is the fountaine of the spirits of life, and whither (indeed) none can come, but the Spirit, to do any cure to purpose: that, if CHRIST, if the Spirit take it not in hand, all cures else are but palliative; they may drive it away for a while, it will come againe worse than ever. Now then, to Medice cura (as CHRIST after saith) to this new cure.

In

In every cure, our rule is first to looke to de cauſis morborum, how the heart can bee broken: then after, de methodo medendi, the way here to helpe it.

IV. Of the hearts 1 How they came broken.

How comes the heart broken? The common hammer that breakes them, is ſome bodily or worldly croſſe, ſuch as we commonly call heart-breakings. There be here in the Text, three ſtrokes of this hammer, able (I thinke) to breake any heart in the world.

1 Captivitie. They be captives firſt: and captives and caitives, in our ſpeech ſound much upon one. It is (ſure) a condition able to make any man hang up his harpe, and ſit weeping by the waters of Babylon. There, is one ſtroke. 1 By being captives. Pſal.137.2.

2 There followes another worſe yet. For, in Babylon, though they were captives, yet went they abroad, had their libertie. Theſe here are in priſon: And in ſome blinde hole there, as it might be in the dungeon, where they ſee nothing. That (I take it) is meant by blind here in the Text: Blind, for want of light; not for want of ſight, though thoſe two both come to one, are convertible. They that be blind, ſay they are darke: and they that be in the darke, for the time are deprived of ſight, have no manner uſe of it at all, no more than a blind man. Now, they that row in the galleys, yet this comfort they have, they ſee the light: and if a man ſee nothing elſe, the light of it ſelfe is comfortable. And, a great ſtroke of the hammer it is, not to have ſo much as that poore comfort left them. 2 In a darke dungeon. Eccleſ.11.7.

3 But yet are not wee at the worſt; One ſtroke more. For, one may bee in the dungeon, and yet have his limmes at large, his hands and feet at libertie. But ſo have not thoſe in the Text, but are in irons: and thoſe ſo heavy and ſo pinching, as they are even τεθραυσμένοι, bruiſed and hurt with them. See now their caſe. 1 Captives; and not onely that, but 2 in priſon. In priſon; not above, but in the dungeon, the deepeſt, darkeſt, blindeſt hole there; no light, no ſight at all: 3 And, in the hole, with as many irons upon them, that they are even bruiſed and ſore with them. And tell me now, if theſe three together bee not enough to breake Manaſſes, or any mans heart, and to make him have cor contritum indeed. 3 And bruiſed with irons there.

They be: but what is this to us? This is no mans caſe here. No more was it any of theirs, that were at Christs Sermon: yet Christ ſpake to the purpoſe, we may be ſure. We may not then take it literally, as meant by the body: Christ meant no ſuch captivitie, dungeon, or irons. That He meant not ſuch, is plaine. Hee ſaith, Hee was ſent to free captives, to open priſons: But, Hee never ſet any captive free, in His life, nor opened any gaole (in that ſenſe) to let any priſoner forth. Another ſenſe then, wee are to ſeeke. Remember ye not, wee beganne with the Spirit? the buſineſſe, the Spirit comes about, is ſpirituall, not ſecular. So, all theſe ſpiritually to bee underſtood. As (indeed) they are all three appliable to the caſe of the Spirit; and a plaine deſcription of all our ſtates, out of Christ, and before Hee take us in hand.

1 There is Captivitie there, wherein men are held in ſlaverie under ſinne and Sathan, worſe than that we now ſpeake of. Saint Paul knew it: ſpeakes of it, Rom. VII. and when he hath ſo, crieth out, Wretched man that I am, who ſhall rid mee of it! Verily, there is no Turke ſo hurries men, puts them to ſo baſe ſervices, as ſinne doth her captives: Give me one, that hath been in her captivitie, and is got out of it, & ſcit quod dico, he can tell, it is true, I ſay. Rom.7.24.

2 There is a priſon too: not Manaſſes priſon. But aske David, who never came in any gaole; what hee meant, when he ſaid, I am ſo faſt in priſon, as I know not how to get out. And that you may know what priſon that was, he cries, O bring my ſoule out of priſon! A priſon there is then, of the ſoule, no leſſe than of the bodie. In which priſon were ſome of thoſe that Christ preached here to: S. Matthew ſaith, they ſat in darkeneſſe and in the ſhadow of death, even as men in the dungeon doe. Pſal.88.8. Pſal.142.7. Matt.4.16.

3 There are chaines too, that alſo is the ſinners caſe, Hee is even tied with chaines of his owne ſinnes (ſaith Salomon) with the bonds of iniquitie (Saint Peter:) which bands Pro.5.22. Acts 8.23.

Pſal.166.16. are they, David thanks GOD for breaking in ſunder. There need no other bonds, we will ſay, if once we come to feele them. The galls, that ſinne makes in the conſcience, Pſal.105.18. are the entring of the iron into our ſoule.

But you will ſay, we feele not theſe neither, no more than the former. No doe? Take this for a rule: If CHRIST heale them, that be broken-hearted; broken-hearted wee behove to be, yer He can heale us. He is Medicus cordis indeed; but it is cordis contriti. It is a condition ever annexed (this) to make us the more capable; and likewiſe a diſpoſition it is, to make us the more curable. That ſame pauperibus (before) and this contritis now, they limit CHRISTS cure; His cure and His Commiſsion both: and unleſſe they be, or untill they be, This Scripture is not, nor cannot be fulfilled in us. In our eares, it may be; but in our hearts, never.

That, as ſuch as come to be healed by His Majeſtie, are firſt ſearched, and after either put by, or admitted, as cauſe is: ſo there would be a Scrutinie of ſuch, as make to-Pſal.119.70. ward CHRIST. What, are you poore? Poore in ſpirit? (for the purſe, it skills not:) No, but dicis quia dives, in good caſe: CHRIST is not for you then; He is ſent to the poore. What is your heart broken? No, but heart-whole, a heart as brawne: then are you not for this cure. In all CHRISTS Diſpenſatorie, there is not a medicine, for ſuch a heart; a heart like brawne (that is) hard and un-yeelding.

CHRIST Himſelfe ſeemes to give this Item, when He applies it after: Many wi-
Verſe 25. dowes, Many lepers (ſaith Hee:) and ſo, many ſinners. Elias ſent to none, but the poore Widow of Sarepta; Eliſæus healed none, but onely Naaman, after his ſpirit came downe, was broken. No more doth CHRIST, but ſuch are of a contrite heart.

Verily, the caſe as before we ſet it downe, is the ſinners caſe; feele he it, feele he it not. But, if any be ſo benummed, as hee is not ſenſible of this; ſo blind, as dungeon or no dungeon, all one to him; if any have this ſame Scirrhum cordis, that makes him paſt feeling, it is no good ſigne: but, it may bee, our houre is not yet come, our cure is yet behind. But, if it ſhould ſo continue, and never be otherwiſe, then were it a Prov.7.22. very evill ſigne. For, what is ſuch a ones caſe, but (as Salomon ſaith) as the oxe that is led to the ſlaughter without any ſenſe, or the foole that goes laughing when he is carried to be well whipped? What caſe more pitifull?

You will ſay: we have no hammer, no worldly Croſſe to breake our hearts. It may be. That, is Manaſſes hammer, the common hammer (indeed:) but, that is not King Davids hammer, which I rather commend to you; the right hammer to doe the feat, to worke contrition in kind. The right, is the ſight of our owne ſinnes. And, I will ſay this for it: that I never in my life ſaw any man brought ſo low with any worldly calamitie, as I have, with this ſight. And theſe, I ſpeake of, were not of the common ſort, but men of ſpirit and valor, that durſt have looked death in the face. Yet, when GOD opened their eyes, to ſee this ſight; their hearts were broken, yea, even grownd to powder with it; contrite indeed.

And this is ſure; if a man be not humbled with the ſight of his ſinnes, It is not all the croſſes or loſſes in the world will humble him aright.

This, is the right. And, without any worldly croſſe, this we might have, if we loved not ſo to abſent our ſelves from our ſelves, to bee even fugitivi cordis, to runne away from our owne hearts; be ever abroad, never within: if we would but ſometimes re-
Eſay 46.8. dire ad cor, returne home thither, and deſcend into our ſelves; ſadly and ſeriouſly to bethinke us of them, and the danger we are in, by them; this might be had: And this would bee had, if it might be. If not, in default of this (no remedie) the common hammer muſt come; and GOD ſend us Manaſſes hammer, to breake it; ſome bodily ſickneſſe, ſome worldly affliction, to ſend us home into our ſelves. But ſure, the Angell
Ioh.5.4. muſt come downe and the water be ſtirred; elſe wee may preach long enough to uncontrite hearts, but no good will be done, till then.

I have been too long in the Cauſe: but, the knowledge of the Cauſe, in every diſeaſe, we reckon halfe the cure. To the healing, now.

The

The word for heale, in Eſay (where this Text is) ſignifies to bind up. The cure beginnes with ligature, the moſt proper cure, for fractures, or ought that is broken. Nay, in wounds and all, as appeareth by the Samaritan. The flaxe is ſo ſtayed, which if it continue running on us ſtill, in vaine talke we of any healing. It is not begun till that ſtay and runne no longer. The ſinne that CHRIST cures, He binds up, He ſtayes (to begin with.) If He cover ſinne, it is with a plaiſter. He covers and cures together, both under one. Luk. 10.34.

This word [broken-hearted] the Hebrewes take not, as we doe; we, broken for ſinne; they, broken off, or from ſinne. And we have the ſame phraſe with us; To breake one of the evill faſhions, or inclinations, hee hath beene given to. So, to breake the heart. And ſo muſt it bee broken, or ever it be whole. Both ſenſes: either of them doth well; but both together beſt of all.

2 How they are cured. Act. 10.6.

This done, now to the healing part. The heathen obſerved long ſince: ψυχῆς νοσήσας ἄνδρ' ἰᾶσθαι λόγοι, the ſoules cure is by words: and the Angell ſaith to Cornelius, of Saint Peter, He ſhall ſpeake to thee words, by which thou and thy houſhold ſhalbe ſaved.

By good tydings.

And by no words ſooner, than by the ſound of good tydings. Good newes is good phyſicke ſure (ſuch the diſeaſe may bee:) and a good meſſage a good medicine. There is power in it both waies. Good newes, hath healed; evill newes hath killed many. The good newes of Ioſephs welfare, we ſee, how it even revived old Iacob. And, the evill, of the arke of GOD taken, it coſt Eli his life. Nothing workes upon the heart more forcibly, either way. Gen. 45 27. 1 Sam. 4. 18.

Proclaimed.

What are theſe newes, and firſt how come they? By κηρύξαι they come: no ſecret, whiſpered newes, from man to man, in a corner: No flying newes. They be proclaimed, theſe; ſo authenticall. Proclaimed: And ſo they had need. For, if our ſinnes once appeare in their right forme, there is evill newes certainely: let the Divell alone with that, to proclaime them, to preach damnation to us. Contraria curantur contrariis, wee had need have ſome good proclaimed, to cure thoſe of his.

Two proclamations here are, one in the neck of another. Of which the former, in the three branches of it, applieth in particular, a remedie to the three former maladies; Is the topique medicine (as it were:) the later is the panacea, makes them all perfectly whole and ſound.

1 The firſt proclamation.

The firſt proclamation. To the Captive firſt, That there is one at hand with a ranſome, to redeeme him. This will make him a whole man.

2 To them in the dungeon; of one to draw them forth thence, and make them ἀναβλέψαι, ſee the light againe.

3 To them in chaines; of one to ſtrike off their bolts and looſe them, to open the priſon-doore; and let them goe: ἀποστεῖλαι, to make Apoſtles of them, and ſend them abroad into the wide world. It is the fruit of Chriſts ἀπῆλθε, this ἀποστεῖλαι; Chriſts Apoſtleſhip was; and is, to make ſuch Apoſtles.

Now, this is nothing but the very ſumme of the Goſpell: 1 Of one comming with a ranſome in one hand, to lay downe for us the price of our redemption from Sathans captivitie. 2 And with the keyes of hell and death in the other. Keyes of two ſorts: 1 One, to undoe their fetters and looſe them; the other, to open the dungeon and priſon-doore (both the dungeon of deſpaire, and the priſon of the Law) and let them out of both. There can be no better newes, nor kindlier phyſicke in the world, 1 Than word of redemption, to captives: 2 Than to ſee the light againe, to them in the Limbo: 3 Than of enlargement, to them in bands: but ſpecially, than of a diſmiſſion, from priſon, dungeon, irons and all. And this is proclaimed here, and publiſhed by CHRIST in His Sermon at Nazareth: and was after performed and accompliſhed by Him, at His Paſſion in Ieruſalem. Revel. 1. 18.

2 The ſecond proclamation.

This is good newes indeed: but here comes better. It is ſeconded with another Proclamation, that makes up all. For in very deed; They that by the firſt proclama- tion were ſo releaſed, for all that; and after all that, what were they, but a ſort of poore ſnakes, turned out of the gaole, but have nothing to take to? Comming thither, they were turned out of all that ever they had. That, their caſe, though it be leſſe miſerable, yet is miſerable ſtill: the languor morbi ſtill hangs upon them.

We lack ſome reſtaurative for that. Here comes (now) phyſicke, to cure that and make them perfectly well, A ſecond κηρύξαι: that they ſhall bee reſtored, to all that ever they had. How ſo? For harke: heere is the acceptable yeare; that is, a Iubilee proclaimed. And then, even of courſe they are (by force of the Iubilee) ſo to bee. The nature of the Iubilee was ſo, you know. Then, not onely all bond ſet free; all priſons (for debt) ſet open; but beſide, all were reſtored then, to their former mortgaged, forfeited, or any waies aliened eſtates, in as ample manner, as ever they had, or held them, at any time before.

A reſtitution in integrum; a re-inveſting them in what they were borne to, or were any waies poſſeſſed of: that, if they had ſold themſelves out of all, and lay in execution for huge ſummes (as it might be, ten thouſand talents;) then, all was quit; they came to all againe; in as good caſe, as ever they were in all their lives. There can bee no more joyfull newes, no more cordiall Phyſike, than this. The yeare of Iubilee? why, that time, ſo acceptable, ſo joyfull, as it hath even given a denomination to joy it ſelfe. The height of joy is Iubilee; the higheſt terme to expreſſe it, is jubilate: that goes beyond all the words of Ioy whatſoever.

And this comes well now: for, the Iubilee of the Law drawing to an end, and this very yeare being now the laſt CHRISTS Iubilee (the Iubilee of the Goſpell) came fitly to ſucceed. Wherein, the primitive eſtate, wee had in Paradiſe, wee are re-ſeiſed of anew. Not the ſame, in ſpecie, but as good; nay better. For, if for the terreſtriall Paradiſe by the flood deſtroyed, wee have a celeſtiall, wee have our owne againe (I trow) with advantage.

A yeare it is called (to keep the terme ſtill on foote, that formerly it went by.) Only this difference: the yeare (there) was a definite time; but here, a definite is put for an indefinite. This yeare is more than twelve moneths. In this acceptable yeare, the Zodiaque goes never about. On this day of Salvation, the Sunne never goes downe. For in this, the jubilee of the Goſpell paſſeth that of the Law: that, held but for a yeare, and no longer: But, this is continuall; laſts ſtill. Which is plaine: in that, divers yeares after this of CHRISTS, the Apoſtle ſpeakes of it, as ſtill in eſſe: Even then, makes Cor 2.6.2. this proclamation ſtill, Behold this is the day, Behold now is the acceptable time. Whereby wee are given to underſtand, that CHRISTS Iubilee, though it began, when CHRIST firſt preached this Sermon, yet it ended not with the end of that yeare (as Revel. 4 6. did Aarons) but was Evangelium æternum: As alſo perpetui Iubilæi; Everlaſting good newes of a perpetuall jubilee, that doth laſt, and ſhall laſt, as long as the Goſpell ſhall bee preached, by Himſelfe, or others ſent by Him, to the end of the world, the time of reſtoAct. 3.21. ring all things.

It is called acceptable, by the terme of the benefit, that happened on, it which was, our acceptation. For then, we and all mankind were made (not δεκτοὶ, that is, acceptable, but as the word is) δεχθοὶ, that is, actually accepted, or received by GOD. Out of whoſe preſence we were before caſt. And being by Him ſo received, we did our ſelves receive againe, the earneſt of our inheritance, from which by meanes of the tranſgreſſion, Ephes 1.4. we were before fallen.

There is much in this terme [accepting.] For, when is one ſaid to be accepted? Not, when his ranſome is paid, or the priſon ſet open; not when hee is pardoned his fault, or reconciled, to become friends: but when hee is received with armes ſpread, as was
Luc. 15.20. 22. the loſt child, in the Goſpell; ad ſtolam primam (as the terme is, out of that place.) Three degrees there are in it; 1 Accepted to pardon, that is συγχώρησις: 2 Accepted to reconciliation, that is καταλλαγὴ: and further, 3 Accepted to repropitiation, that is ἱλασμὸς, to as good 2 Sam. 13.39. 14.23. grace and favour as ever, even in the very fulneſſe of it. They ſhew it, by three diſtinct degrees in Abſalons receiving: 1 Pardoned he was, while he was yet in Geſhur: 2 Reconciled, when he had leave to come home to his owne houſe: 3 Repropitiate, when he

he was admitted to the Kings preſence and kiſſed him. That made up all, then he had all againe. And that is our very caſe.

Nay indeed, that is not all. It is more than ſo: δεκτὸς (here) is in the Text of Eſai רעוּ: and that imports more. For, that word, is ever turned by εὐδοκία, and that is CHRISTS owne acceptation (In whom I am well pleaſed) and the very terme of it. And he that is ſo accepted, I know not what he would have more.

This is the Benefit that fell at this time: and for this, that fell on the time, the time it ſelfe, it fell on, is, and cannot be but acceptable; even eo nomine, that at ſuch a time, ſuch a Benefit hapned to us. And in this reſpect, it ever hath and ever ſhall be an acceptable welcome time, this; and holden as a high feaſt: like as the benefit is high, that befell us on it. Feſtum, a feaſt, for the pardon: Feſtum duplex, for the reconciliation: Feſtum magis duplex, for the being perfectly accepted to the favour of GOD, and by it re-accepting againe our prime eſtate. Mar. 17. 5.

Nay (laſt) it is called not onely Annus acceptus, but Annus Domini acceptus, or acceptus Domino: Not onely, the acceptable yeare; but, of the Lord, or to the Lord; (for ſo the Hebrew reads it, with the ſigne of the Dative; as if to GOD Himſelfe, it were ſo.) And, to Him, ſo it is; and to His holy Angels in heaven, ſo it is. For, if the receiving any one contrite ſinner, by repentance, be matter of joy, to the whole Court of heaven; if the receiving of but one; what ſhall we thinke of the generall receiving of the whole maſſe, which this day was effected? Luc. 15. 10.

Now, if to heaven, if to GOD Himſelfe it be ſo; To earth, to us, ſhall it not bee much more, whom much more it concerneth (I am ſure?) GOD getteth nothing by it; wee doe: He is not the better for it; wee are: Ever, the receiver, than the giver. The giver, more glorie; but the receiver, more joy. That if it be the joy of heaven, it cannot bee but the Iubilee of the earth; Even of the whole earth: Iubilate Deo omnis terra. Pſal. 66. 1.

The Iubilee (ever) it began with no other ſound, but even of a cornet, made of the hornes of a Ram. Of which hornes, they give no other reaſon, but that it was ſo, in reference to the hornes of that Ram, that in the thicket was caught by the hornes, and ſacrificed in Iſaacs ſtead, even as CHRIST was, in ours. To ſhew, that all our Iubilee hath relation, to that ſpeciall ſacrifice, ſo plainly prefiguring that of CHRISTS. Which Feaſt of Iubilee began ever, after the High-Prieſt had offered his ſacrifice, and had been in the Sancta ſanctorum. As this Iubilee of CHRIST alſo tooke place, from His entring into the Holy places made without hands, after His propitiatorie Sacrifice offered up for the quick and the dead, and for all yet unborne, at Eaſter. And, it was the tenth day, that: And this (now) is the tenth day ſince. Levit. 25. 9. Ioſ. 6. 4. Gen. 22. 13. Heb. 9. 11.

The memoriall, or myſterie of which ſacrifice of Chriſts, in our ſtead, is ever Caput lætitiæ, the top of our mirth, and the initiation of the joy of our Iubilee. Like as accipiam Calicem ſalutaris, our taking the Cup of Salvation, is the memoriall of our being accepted, or received and taken againe to Salvation. Wherewith let us alſo crowne this Iubilee of ours. That ſo all the benefits of it, may take hold of us: ſpecially the reintegration of the favour of GOD, and the aſſurance or pledge of our reſtitution to thoſe joyes, and that Iubilee, that onely can give content to all our deſires, when the time ſhall come of the reſtoring of all things. Pſal. 116. 13.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majeſtie at GREENWICH, on the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCXVIII. being WHITSVNDAY.

ACT. CHAP. II.

Sed hoc eſt, quod dictum eſt, &c.

VER. 16. But this is that, which was ſpoken by the Prophet IOEL.

17. And it ſhalbe in the laſt dayes (ſaith GOD*) I will powre out of my* SPIRIT upon all fleſh, and your ſonnes and your daughters ſhall propheſie, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dreame dreames.

18. And, on my ſervants, and on mine hand-maids, I will powre out of my SPIRIT*, and they ſhall propheſie.*

19. And I will ſhew wonders in heaven above, and tokens in the earth beneath, bloud, and fire, and the vapour of ſmoke.

20. The Sunne ſhalbe turned into darkenſſe, and the Moone into bloud, before that great and notable Day of the LORD come.

21. And it ſhall be, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the LORD*, ſhall be ſaved.*

THeſe words may well ſerve for a Sermon, this day: they were a part of a Sermon, preached as this day. The firſt Whitſon-Sermon, that ever was: the firſt Whit-Sunday, that ever was. S. Peter preached it. And this was his Text, out of the ſecond Chapter of the Prophet Ioël. As CHRIST, the laſt yeare, out of Eſay: ſo Peter, this, out of Ioël. Both tooke Texts: both, for the day, and for the preſent occaſion.

The occaſion of this here, was a lewd ſurmiſe given out by ſome, touching the gift of tongues, this day ſent from heaven.

It ſhall be my firſt note. That look, how ſoone GOD from heauen had ſent His firy tongues upon His Apoſtles; the Devill from hell preſently ſent for his firy tongues, and put them in the mouthes of his Apoſtles, to diſgrace and ſcoffe at thoſe of GODS ſending.

Ye

Ye may heare them ſpeake (at the thirteenth verſe:) Well fare this ſame good new wine; theſe good fellowes have been at it, and now they can ſpeake nothing but outlandiſh: ſome little broken Greeke or Latine they had, and now out it comes.

Thus, that which was indeed grande Miraculum, they turned into grande ludibrium. Of the great Myſterie of this day, they made a meere mockerie. Thoſe, that were baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, they traduced, as if they had ſouſed themſelves in new wine. Here is the Holy Ghoſts welcome into the world. This uſe doth the Devill make of ſome mens wits and tongues, to powre contempt on that, which GOD powreth forth, all that ever they can; even to worke deſpite to the Spirit of Grace. Mat. 3. 11. Heb. 10. 29.

Being to make an apologie for himſelfe, and the reſt, (and indeed, for the Holy Ghoſt) Saint Peter firſt prayes audience (at the XIV. verſe.) Then tells them ſoberly, they miſſe the matter quite (at the XV.) It was too early day, to faſten any ſuch ſuſpition, upon any ſuch men as they were (to be gone, before nine in the morning.) But, this he ſtands not on, as not worth the anſwering. The Summe.

Here (at this Verſe) he tells them, it was no liquor, this ſpecially, no ſuch as they ſurmiſed. If it were any, if they would needs have it one, it was the Prophet Ioëls, and none other. Something powred on, nothing powred in. Nothing, but the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt. This is it, that was ſpoken by the Prophet Ioël.

So, habemus firmiorem ſermonem propheticum: and this, which ſeemed to happen thus on the ſudden, it was long ſince foretold; and alleages for it this text of the Prophet, that ſuch a thing there ſhould come to paſſe, an effuſion of the Spirit, and that a ſtrange one. And this they would find it to be; this Prophecie (of the Spirit powred) this day fulfilled in their eares. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

Of which Text, the ſpeciall points be two: 1 Of the Spirits powring: 2 Of the end whereto. The Diviſion

The firſt, I reduce to theſe foure. 1 The Thing: 2 the Act: 3 the Partie by whom: 4 the Parties upon whom. 1 De Spiritu meo, is the thing. 2 Effundam, the act. 3 Dicit Dominus, the partie by whom. 4 Super omnem carnem, the parties upon whom it is powred. I.

Then the end whereto. And in that foure more. The laſt end of all in the laſt word of all, ſalvabitur. That, is the very end: and a bleſſed end, if by any meanes we may attaine to it. Then are there three other conducting to this. Two maine ones; and one acceſſorie, but yet as neceſſarie as the other. 2 Cloſe to it, in the end, there is calling on the Name of the LORD: He, that calleth on the Name of the LORD, ſhalbe ſaved. 3 And fartheſt from it at the beginning, there is prophetabunt, to call upon us to that end: And my ſervants ſhall propheſie. 4 And, betweene both theſe, there is a Memorandum of the Great Day of the LORD. Which is not from the matter neither, nor more than needs. For then (at that day) we ſhall ſtand moſt in need of ſaving: if we periſh then, we periſh for ever. And the mention and memorie of that Day, will make us not deſpiſe prophecying, nor forget invocation; but be both more attentive in hearing of prophecie, and more devout in calling on the Name of the LORD. So, it may well goe for a third conducting meanes, to our ſalvation. II.

Now, to bring this to the Day. This (it is ſaid) ſhalbe in the laſt dayes. Which with Saint Peter here; and with Saint Paul (Heb. 1. 1.) yea, and with the Rabbins themſelves, are the dayes of the Meſſiah. So, of our Meſſiah CHRIST (to us) and of none other. Of whoſe dayes, this is the very laſt. For, having done his errand, He was to goe up againe, and to ſend His Spirit downe, to doe His, another while: which is the worke of this day. As His firſt then, the taking of our fleſh, ſo His laſt, the giving of His Spirit: the giving it abundantly, which is the effundam here.

It remaineth, that wee pray to Him, who thus, of His Spirit powred forth this day, that He would vouchſafe on the ſame day to powre of it on us here: that we may ſo hold this Feaſt (the memorie of it) and ſo heare the words of this prophecie, as may be to His good acceptance, and our owne ſaving in the great Day, the Day of the LORD.

I. Of the Spirits powring. De Spiritu.

OF the thing powred firſt. De Spiritu meo, the Spirit of GOD. Firſt of Him, to give Him the honour of His owne Day.

The Spirit, is of Himſelfe Author of life; and here is brought in, as Author of prophecie. They both are in the Nicene Creed; 1 the Lord and Giver of life, 2and who ſpake by the Prophets. Life and ſpeech have but one inſtrument, the Spirit or breath, both. Of it, theſe foure.

1 Prophecie can come from no nature but rationall: The Spirit then, is natura rationalis. And determinate it is, diſtinct plainly here two wayes: 1 The Spirit, from Him whoſe the Spirit is; Him that ſayes, de Spiritu meo. 2 That which is powred, from Him, that powreth it; Fuſus à Fuſore. Being then natura rationalis determinata, He is a Perſon (for a perſon is ſo defined.)

2 Secondly, effuſion is a plaine proceeding of that, which is powred: as ſpiration is ſo too, in the very body of the word Spirit. So, a Perſon proceeding.

3 Thirdly, being a Perſon, and yet being powred out, He behoves to be GOD. No Perſon, Angell or Spirit, can be powred out, can bee ſo participate. Not at all: but not upon all fleſh, not dilated ſo farre. GOD onely can be that. So, the Perſon, the Proceeding, the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt (all) in theſe words. And not a word of all this mine: but thus deduced, by Saint Ambroſe, and before him, by Dydimus Alexandrinus Saint Hieroms Maſter.

4 But fourthly, you will marke: It is not my Spirit, but of my Spirit. The whole Spirit, fleſh could not hold: not all fleſh. And parts it hath none. 1. Vnderſtand then, of my ſpirit, that is, of the gifts and graces of the Spirit. Beames of this light: ſtreames of this powring. Otherwhere, others: here, the gift of prophecie and tongues.

* Luk.4.18. The text of the laſt yeare

2 Which de Sipritu is alſo ſaid, to keep the difference betweene CHRIST and us. Vpon Him the Spirit was: The Spirit of GOD upon Me, laſt yeare. Vpon us, not the Spirit: but, de Spiritu, of my Spirit onely, this yeare.

2 The Act, Effundam.

The next is the Act, effundam: In it foure more: 1 The qualitie, in that it is compared to a thing liquid, fuſil, powred out. This ſeems not proper. Powring is, as it had beene water; He came in fire. It would have beene kindled, rather than powred. True, but Saint Peter, in proper termes, makes his anſwer referre, to their ſlander: and that was, that it was nothing but new wine, a liquor. Their objection being in a thing liquid, his anſwer behoved to be accordingly. And well it might, ſo: CHRIST had ſo expreſſed it: both lately in His promiſe, Ye ſhalbe baptized with the Holy Ghoſt within few dayes: And formerly, under the termes of waters of life (Ioh. VII.) where Saint Iohns expoſition is, This He ſpake of the Spirit. Not (then) given, but to bee given, ſtraight upon CHRISTS glorifying, which is now this very day. The Holy Ghoſt then, is not all fire.

Ioh.7.39.

And this qualitie falls well with the two graces, of 1 prophecie, and 2 invocation, here given. 1 Prophecie: Moſes (the great Prophet) likened it, to the dew falling upon the herbs, or the raine powred on the graſſe (Deut. XXXII.) And that likening is ſo uſuall, as [מירה Moreh] the word in Hebrew for raine, is ſo for a Preacher, too; that it poſeth the Tranſlators, which way to turne it: and even in that very Chapter of Ioël, whence this Text is taken.

Deut.32.2.

2 And, invocation is ſo too; a powring out of prayer, and of the very heart in prayer.

3 And the third of the later Day may be taken in, too. Then there ſhalbe a powring forth alſo of all the phials of the wrath of GOD.

Ver. 23.

2 The qualitie then firſt: the quantitie, no leſſe. For, powring is a ſigne of plentie:

effundam,

Effundam, not aſpergam (the firſt prerogative of this day.) For, the Spirit had been given before this time: but never with ſuch a largeſſe, Sprinkled, but not powred. Never till now, in that bounty, that now. This was reſerved for Chriſt. For, when there was copioſa ſanguinis effuſio on His part, there was likewiſe to be copioſa Flaminis effuſio, on the Holy Ghoſts. He, as liberall of his grace; as Chriſt of his bloud. That there might bee to us copioſa redemptio, betweene them both, it is effundam copioſe in both. Pſal 103 7.

3 Effundam tells us further, the Spirit came not of himſelfe: not till He was thus powred out. It is no effluet, but effundam. Sic oportet implere, that ſo, order might be kept, in Him (in the very Spirit) and wee by Him taught to keepe it. Not to ſtart out, till wee bee ſent; nor to goe on our owne heades, but to ſtay till wee bee called. Not to leake out, or to runne over; but to ſtay till wee bee powred out, in like ſort. Seeing CHRIST would not goe un-ſent, Miſit me, laſt yeare: Nor the HOLY GHOST run un-powred, this yeare: it may well become us to keepe in, till wee bee powred and ſent, any yeare. And yet, the Spirit is no leſſe ready to runne, than GOD is to powre it. One of theſe is no barre to the other. Ecce ego, mitte me. Ecce ego, Behold I am readie (ſaith Eſai;) and yet, mitte me, Send me, for all that. Effluence, and Effuſion; Influence, and infuſion will ſtand together well enough. Luk. 22. 37. Eſay 6. 8.

4 Laſtly, effundam is not, as the running of a ſpout. To powre, is the voluntarie act of a voluntarie Agent, who hath the veſſell in his hand, and may powre little, or much; and may chooſe whether he will powre any at all, or no. As ſhut the heaven from raining: So, refraine the Spirit from falling on us.

2 And when He powres, He ſtrikes not out the head of the veſſell, and lets all goe: but moderates His powring and diſpenſes His gifts. Powres not all, upon every one; nay, not upon any one, all: but upon ſome in this manner, upon ſome in that: Not to each, the ſame. And to whom the ſame, not in the ſame meaſure though: but, to ſome, five; to ſome, two; to ſome, but one talent. The Text is plaine for this. There are diverſe aſſignations in it: 1 To diverſe parties; Sonnes, ſervants, old men, and young men: 2 Of diverſe gifts; prophecies, viſions, and dreames. 3 And them, of diverſe degrees: one cleerer than the other; the viſion, than the dreame. Singulis prout vult, at the Powrers diſcretion, to each as pleaſeth Him beſt. 1 Cor. 12. Matt. 25. 15. 1 Cor. 12. 11.

3 The Party powring, Dicit Dominus. Pſal. 110. 1.

The Party Powring is Dicit Dominus, the Lord that ſaid. But, Dixit Dominus Domino meo, The Lord ſaid to my Lord: Which of theſe? The later (Domino meo) My Lord, Davids Lord and ours Dominum noſtrum, in our Creed (that is) CHRIST. How appeares that? directly at the thirtie thrird verſe after, He being now exalted by the right hand of GOD, and having received the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father, He hath powred out this, that ye now ſee and heare. CHRIST then. And not the Father? Yes, He too: For, of Him, Chriſt is ſaid to receive it. Not onely Dixit Dominus Domino meo; but, dedit Dominus Domino meo. And ſo, as in the nineteenth of Geneſis, Pluit Dominus à Domino: From the Lord, the Lord powred it. And but one Effundam, with but one effuſion both; as with one ſpiration, Hee came from both. Both, with one effuſion powre Him: Both, with one ſpiration breathe Him. It is expreſly ſo ſet downe, Revelation, Chap. 22. The fountaine of the water of life iſſued from the ſeat of GOD and of the Lamb. So have you here the whole Trinitie: 1 Quis, 2 Quid, 3 à Quo; the Father, by the Sonne, or the Sonne from the Father, powring out the HOLY GHOST. Gen. 19 24. Revel. 22. 1.

2 And may we not alſo finde the two natures of Chriſt heere? Effundam is fundam ex. I will powre out: Out of what? what the ciſterne into which it firſt comes, and out of which it is after derived to us? That, is the fleſh or humane nature of Chriſt: On which it was powred at His conception, fully to endow it; For in Him the fulneſſe of the God-head dwelleth bodily (marke that, bodily.) And it was given to Him without meaſure, and of His fulneſſe we all receive. From this Ciſterne, this day, iſſued the Spirit, by ſo many quills, or pipes (as it were) as there are ſeverall diviſions, of the graces of the Holy Ghoſt. And ſo now we have both à Quo, and ex Quo. The Divinitie, Col. 2. 9. Ioh. 1. 16.

into this Humanitie, powring the Spirit, which from His flesh, was powred downe, this day, super omnem carnem, upon all flesh. Which fitly brings in the next, Super omnem carnem.

4 The parties upon whom. Super omnem carnem. 1 Cor. 9. 9. Ioh. 1. 14.

On whom this powring is (which is the last point:) Super omnem carnem. In which there are three points, as the words are three: 1 Carnem first (that is) men. For doth GOD take care for oxen (saith the Apostle) or for any flesh, but ours? No, not for any flesh; but the flesh which the Word did take. And, for that He doth.

But, wee are Spirit too, as well as flesh: and, in reason, Spirit on Spirit, were more kindly. There is neerer alliance betweene them.

Yet you shall finde the other part (flesh) is still chosen.

1 Super carnem. Esay 40. 6.

1 First, to magnifie his mercie the more, that part is singled out, that seemeth further removed; nay, that is indeed quite opposite to the Spirit of GOD here powred out. For, what is flesh? It is proclaimed (XL. of Esay) It is grasse. And not gramen, but fœnum, that is grasse withering and fit for the Scithe. Is that the worst? I would it were: But caro peccati, sinfull flesh sets it further off, yet. Vpon sinfull flesh, He should have powred somewhat else, than his Spirit.

So, two oppositions: 1 Flesh and Spirit absolutely in themselves. 2 Then, sinfull flesh, and the Holy Spirit. All which commends his love the more, thus to combine things so much opposite. This first.

And withall (that, which right now I touched) to shew the introduction to this conjunction of these so farre in opposition either to other, Even Verbum caro factum, that made this symbolisme. By which, a gate of hope was opened to us (by His incarnation) in spem, of our inspiration, which this day came in rem. For, His flesh exalted to the right hand of GOD remembred us, that were flesh of His flesh, and derived downe this fountaine of living water to it, saliens in vitam æternam; Springing, and raising us with it, whence it came (for, water will ever rise as high as the place from whence it came) that is, up to heaven, up to eternall life.

Hos. 2. 15. Verse 3. Ioh. 4. 14.

2 Super, upon it: Vpon it, is without, on the outside of it. Had not fundam in, been better than fundam super: Into them, than upon them? Not a whit.

Indeed, both wayes, I find the Spirit given. At CHRIST's baptisme, the Dove came upon Him. At His resurrection, insufflavit, He breathed into them. And so hath Hee parted His Sacraments: Baptisme is effundam super, upon us, from without: the Holy Eucharist, that is comedite; that goeth in. Vpon the matter, both come to one. If it be powred on, it sokes in, pierces to the very center of the soule (as, in Baptisme, sinne is washed thence, by it.) If it be breathed in, it is no sooner at the heart, but it workes forth, out it comes againe: Out at the nosthrills in breath; Out at the wrest in the beating of the pulse. So, both (in effect) are one.

Luk. 3. 22. Ioh. 20. 22.

1 But it is Super here, for these reasons: First, that we may know, the graces of the Spirit, they are ἔξωθεν from without. In us, that is, in our flesh, they grow not: neither they nor any good thing, else. And not onely ἔξωθεν, from without; but Saint Iames his ἄνωθεν too, from above, from the Father of lights. Both these are in super: and but for these wee might fall into a phansie, they grew within us and sprung from us; which (GOD knoweth) they doe not.

Iam. 1. 17.

2 Another reason is, for that [upon] is the Preposition proper to initiation, into any new Office. So is the manner, by some such outward ceremonie upon, to initiate. By annointing, or powring oyle upon. By induing [induemini] putting some robe or other ensigne upon. By imposition or laying hands, upon. All upon. Baptisme (which is the Sacrament of our initiation) is therefore so done. So, the Dove came upon CHRIST. The tongues (heere) upon these, to enter them, either, into their new offices.

Verse 3.

A third (last but not least) to enure them to this Preposition super, which many can but evill brooke. No super, no superioritie they; all even, all equall; fellowes and fellowes. The right hands of fellowship, if you will; but not so much, as imposition of hands, super. For, if super, then sub followes: if upon, then we under; if above, then

Gal. 2. 9.

we

we beneath. But no ſub with ſome: ſubmit neither head, nor ſpirit to any. Yet, ſuper Me, ſaid CHRIST laſt yeare: and it may become any that became Him: it may well become ſuper carnem. Super then muſt ſtand, and be ſtood upon: Confuſion will come, if it be not.

2 Super omnem carnem.

Super carnem, ſuper omnem carnem. Vpon fleſh, and upon all fleſh. Not, ſome one: not Iewes-fleſh alone: In regard of whom, this omnem is here ſpecially put in. For, they had in a manner engroſſed the Spirit before, by a non taliter omni. And yet, upon them too; for, upon their ſonnes and their daughters (as it followeth:) but upon them, now, no more than upon any other. This is a ſecond prerogative of this Day. The firſt, effundam, that is. 1 Before, ſparingly ſprinkled; now, plentifully powred. 2 Now againe, ſuper omnem: Before, upon but ſome; now indifferently, upon all.

Pſal. 147. 20.

For ſo, when we ſay all, we meane, none is excluded, but now may have it. He hath put no difference betweene them and us (ſaith Saint Peter.) Non eſt diſtinctio (ſaith Saint Paul.) The partition is throwen downe now. Go but to the letter of the Text, All fleſh. 1 No Sex barred; upon ſonnes and upon daughters: ſo either Sex. 2 No age: upon young men and upon old: The one, viſions; the other, dreames. 3 No condition: on ſervants, as well as ſonnes; on handmaids, no leſſe than daughters. 4 No Nation: for (if ye marke) the Spirit is powred twice: Vpon their ſonnes, in this; And againe, Vpon his ſervants, in the next verſe. His ſervants, whether they be their ſonnes or not; whoſe ſonnes ſoever they bee: though the ſonnes of them, that are (perhaps) ſtrangers to the firſt covenant. (And yet, even then, GOD had ever His ſervants, as well, out of that Nation, as in it.)

Acts 15. 9. Rom. 10. 12. Eph. 2. 14.

Ver. 18.

Now, in ſigne that thus [upon all fleſh;] they heard them ſpeake the tongues of all fleſh, even of every Nation under heaven. That, where before, a few in Iewrie; now many, all the world over: No longer now, Notus in Iudæâ DEVS; His way ſhould be knowne upon earth, His ſaving health among all Nations.

Acts 2. 5. Pſal. 76. 1. 67. 2.

Yet, not promiſcuè though, without all manner limitation. No: the Text limits it. I muſt againe put you in mind, of the two powrings mentioned in it. One, the ſuper omnem carnem, in this the XV. verſe: The other, the ſecond, ſuper ſervos meos, in the next (the XVIII.) And ſuper ſervos meos is the qualifying, of ſuper omnem carnem. Vpon all fleſh (that is) all ſuch as will be my ſervants; as well give in their names to that end; as will call upon me: Quicunque invocaverit, ſo concludes Ioël. As will beleeve and be baptized, ſo concludes Saint Peter, here, his Sermon. This gives them the capacitie, makes them veſſels meet to receive this effuſion. By which, all Turkes, Iewes, Infidels, are out of the omnem: and counterfeit Chriſtians, too; that profeſſe to ſerve Him, but all the world ſees whom they ſerve. And by this, much fleſh is cut off from omnem carnem. But ſo with this qualifying, upon all. For any other, I know not. And this for the powring.

II.

The end, whereto. Saluabitur.

And now, Vtquid effuſio hæc? To what end, all this? For it is not to be imagined, this powring was caſuall, as the turning over of a tub: nor, that the Spirit did run waſt: then it were, Vtquid perditio hæc? An end it had. And that followes now: And your ſonnes, &c. The Spirit is given to many ends; many middle, but one laſt; and that laſt is in the laſt word, ſalvabitur, the End then of this powring, is the ſalvation of mankind. Mankind was upon the point to periſh, and the Spirit was powred, as a precious balme or water, to recover and to ſave it. So, the end of all is (and marke it well) that the Spirit may ſave the fleſh, by the ſpiritualizing it. Not the fleſh deſtroy the Spirit, by carnalizing it. Not the fleſh weigh downe the Spirit, to earth, hither: but the Spirit lift up the fleſh, thither to heaven, whence it came.

Meanes to that end. 1 Prophecie. 2 Prayer.

To this laſt, here are three middle conducing ends more. 1 Prophecie firſt: 2 Invocation, laſt: both which are well here repreſented; three waies: 1 In the tongues (the ſymbole of the HOLY GHOST, this day:) The one, Prophecie, being GODS tongue to us: the other, Invocation, being our tongue to GOD. 2 In the Spirit (Both being acts of the Spirit, or breath:) Prophecie breathes it into us: Prayer breathes it out againe.

3 In

3 In the powring : Both powrings (after a ſort:) that, which Prophecie doth infuſe, powre in at the eare; Invocation doth refundere, or powre forth backe againe in prayer, out of the heart.

And beſide theſe two, a third there is, which is wedged in between them both, as ſtirring us, firſt and laſt both to heare Prophecie more attentively, and to practiſe invocation more devoutly (which I wiſh may never depart out of our minds) the memorie of the later day.

3 Memorie of the later day.

Thus they ſtand, ſubordinate. That men may be ſaved, they are to call upon the Name of the LORD (that at leaſt.) That they may ſo call to purpoſe, they are to bee called on to it, and directed in it, by & Prophetabunt. And that they might performe this, to all fleſh, they were to ſpeake with the tongues of all fleſh; which was the gift (here) of this day (without juſt cauſe ſcoffed at.) But, tongues are but as the caske, wherein Prophecie (as the liquor) is contained: I will ſet by the empty caske, and deale with Prophetabunt, the liquor in it onely.

1 Prophetabunt. Pro. 29. 18. Eſay 32. 14, 15.

Prophecie ſtands firſt in the Text, Without which (ſaith Salomon) the people muſt needs periſh. That ſaying (of Eſay) is much uſed by the Fathers; Tenebræ & palpatio, donec effunderetur, ſuper nos Spiritus de excelſo. All is darke : men doe but grope, till the Spirit bee powred on us from above, to give us light, by this gift of Prophecie.

This terme is kept by Ioël, as well, when he ſpeakes of GODS ſervants (that is) of us, as when of them and their Sonnes : And ever after, in the New Teſtament, it is retained ſtill as an uſuall terme, by the Apoſtle, to the Corinthians, Epheſians, Theſſalonians, all his Epiſtles through.

But not in the ſenſe of foretelling things to come. For, ſo can it bee verified onely upon Agabus, Saint Philips daughters, and upon Saint Iohn : which are too few, for ſo great an effuſion, as this. That (indeed) was the chiefe ſenſe of it, in the Old Teſtament: And well, while CHRIST, was yet to come. CHRIST Hee was the ſtop of all Propheticall predictions. Then, it had his place, that. But now, and ever ſince Chriſt is come, it hath in a manner left that ſenſe (at leaſt, in a great part) and is not ſo taken in the New.

Rom. 10. 13, 14.

The ſenſe, it is there taken in (to expound this place of Peter, by another of Paul, citing this very ſame Text of the Prophet, Rom. 10.) is & Prophetabunt (here) by quomodo Prædicabunt there, Propheſying (that is Preaching.) Whereby, after a new manner, we doe Propheſie (as it were) the meaning of Ancient Prophecies : not make any new, but interpret the old, well; take off the veile of Moſes face. Finde CHRIST, finde the Myſteries of the Goſpell, under the types of the Law; applie the old prophecies, ſo as it may appeare, the ſpirit of prophecie, is the Teſtimonie of IESVS: And, Hee the beſt Prophet now, that can doe this, beſt.

Exo. 34. 33. 2 Cor. 3. 13. Revel. 19. 10.

This ſenſe, we prove by theſe in the Text. The Spirit was powred on them, and they did propheſie. What did they? How propheſied Saint Peter? Hee foretold nothing: All he did, was, he applied this place of the Prophet, to this Feaſt. And a little beneath, the paſſage of the XVI. Pſalme to CHRISTS Reſurrection. And after that, the place of another Pſalme, to His Aſcenſion.

Ver. 31. Pſal. 16. 10. Ver. 34. Pſal. 110. 1. Ver. 11.

And the reſt (on whom it was powred, too) how propheſied they? All (wee read) they did, was loquebantur magnalia Dei, they uttered forth the wonderfull things of God, but foretold not any thing, that we finde. So as, to Propheſie (now) is to ſearch out, and diſcloſe the hidden things of the Oracles of GOD, and not to tell before-hand, what ſhall after come to paſſe.

But, what ſay you to Viſions and Dreames here? Little: they pertaine not to us. The Text ſaith it not. You remember the two powrings : 1 One upon their ſonnes : 2 The other upon His ſeruants. This later, is it by which we come in. We are not of their ſonnes; wee claime not by that, GOD make us His ſervants; for, by that word, wee hold.

Now, in this later powring, on His ſervants (which onely concernes us) viſions and dreams are left out quite. If any pretend them now, we ſay with Ieremie (Cap. XXIII.

Ver.

Ver. XXVIII.) Let a dreame goe for a dreame, and let my word (ſaith the Lord; be ſpoken as my word: Quid paleæ ad triticum, What mingle you chaffe and wheat? We are to lay no point of religion upon them, now: Prophecie, Preaching is it, we to hold our ſelves unto now. As for viſions and dreames, tranſeant; let them goe.

But then, for prophecie in this ſenſe of opening or interpreting Scriptures; is the Spirit powred upon all fleſh, ſo? Is this of Ioel, a proclamation for libertie of preaching; that all, yong and old, men-ſervants and maid-ſervants, may fall to it? Nay: the ſheeſexe, Saint Paul tooke order for that betimes; cut them off, with his Nolo mulieres. 1 Cor. 14.34. But, what for the reſt? may they? For, to this ſenſe hath this Scripture beene wreſted by the Enthuſiaſts of former Ages; and ſtill is, by the Anabaptiſts now. And by miſtaking of it, way given to a foule error, as if all were let looſe, all might claime, and take upon them (forſooth) to propheſie.

Nothing elſe this, but a malicious device of the Devill, to powre contempt upon this gift. For (indeed) bring it to this once, and what was this day falſly ſurmiſed, will then be juſtly affirmed, muſto pleni (or cerebro vacui, whether you will; but muſto pleni) drunken Prophets then, indeed: howbeit not with wine (as Eſai ſaith) but with another as heady a humor, and that doth intoxicate the brain as much as any muſte, or new wine: Even of ſelfe-conceited ignorance, whereof the world growes too full. But it was no part of Ioels meaning, nor Saint Peters neither, to give way to this phrenſie. Eſa. 1. 21.

No? Is it not plaine? the Spirit is powred upon all fleſh. True, but not upon all, to propheſie, though. The Text warrants no ſuch thing. In the one place it is: And your ſonnes ſhall: In the other, and my ſervants ſhall: But, neither is it, all their ſonnes: nor all his ſervants ſhall. Neither (indeed) can it be. There muſt be ſome ſonnes, and ſome ſervants, to propheſie to: to whom theſe Prophets may be ſent: to whom this prophecie may come. All fleſh may not be cut out into tongues; ſome left for eares: ſome auditors needs. Eſle a Cyclopian Church will grow upon us, where all were ſpeakers, no body heard another. Ἀκόει πάντες πάντων οὐδείς.

How then, ſhall the Spirit be powred upon all fleſh? well enough. The Spirit of Prophecie, is not all Gods Spirit; He hath more beſide. If the ſpirit or grace of prophecie upon ſome: the Spirit of grace and prayer (in Zecharie) upon the reſt. So, betweene them both, the Spirit will be upon all fleſh, and the propoſition hold true: Prophetabunt muſt not make us forget invocaverit. All the ſpirit goes not away in Propheſying; ſome left for that too: and there is the quicunque (Quicunque invocaverit) and no where elſe. Zech. 12. 10.

But, if Saint Peter will not ſerve, Saint Paul ſhall: He is plaine, Ye may all propheſie one by one: What, the skippers of Holland and all? I trow not. But (all) there, is plaine. All, that is, all that be Prophets. And, I wiſh, with all my heart (as did Moſes) that all GODS people were Prophets: but, till they be ſo, I wiſh they may not propheſie; no more would Moſes neither. Now, in the ſame Epiſtle, Saint Paul holds it for a great abſurditie, to hold, all are Prophets. With a kind of indignation, he askes it, What are all Prophets? No more than all Apoſtles; as much t'one as t'other. Then, if all be not Prophets; all may not propheſie (ſure.) For, with the Apoſtle in the ſame place, the operation (that is, the act of Propheſying) the adminiſtration (that is, the office or calling) and the grace (that is, the enabling gift) theſe three, are ever to goe together. No act in the Church lawfully done, without them all. Then the Apoſtles [you all may] is, all you may, that have the gift. 1 Cor. 14. 31. Num. 11. 29. 1 Cor. 12. 29.

And not, you that have it neither (the gift) unleſſe you have the calling too: For, as God ſent gifts, ſo He gave men alſo, ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets. Men for gifts; as well, as gifts for men. Miſit, in CHRIST, as well as unxit (laſt yeare.) And, in His ſervants, vocavit, as well as Talenta dedit. Not to be parted, theſe. 1 Cor. 12. 28. Matt. 25. 14.

I conclude then. Et prophetabunt: but ſuch as have beene at the doore of the Tabernacle, as have beene the ſonnes of the Prophets; men ſet apart for that end. And yet even they alſo, ſo, as they take not themſelves at libertie, to propheſie whatſoever takes them in the tongue; the dreames of their owne heads, or the viſions of their owne hearts;

but remember their ſuper, and know, there be Spirits alſo, to whom their Spirits be
1 Cor. 14 32. ſubject. So much for the ſeventeenth and eighteenth Verſes.

2 The Meane betweene both The latter day.

But hownow come we thus ſodainly, to the ſignes of the latter day, and to the day it ſelfe? For they follow cloſe (you ſee.) It is ſomewhat ſtrange, that from Et Prophetabunt, He is ſtraight at Doomes-day, without more adoe.

The reaſons which I finde, the Fathers render of it, are theſe: Firſt, the cloſe joyning of them, is to meete with another dreame that hath troubled the Church, much. And that is, that it may be, there will be another powring yet, after this, and more Prophets riſe ſtill. Every otherwhile, ſome ſuch upſtart ſpirits there are, would faine make us ſo beleeve. Here is a diſcharge for them.

No (ſaith Ioel) looke for no more ſuch daies as this, after this: Therefore to this day, he joynes immediately; from this day, He goes preſently to the latter day, (as if He ſaid, you have all you ſhall have.) When this powring hath run ſo far as it will, then commeth the end; when this is done, the world is done; No new ſpirit, no new effuſion; this, is the laſt. From CHRISTS departure, till His returne againe; from this day of Pentecoſt (a great Day and a notable) till the laſt great and notable day of all; betweene theſe two dayes, no more ſuch Day. Therefore, in the beginning of the Text, He called them the laſt daies, becaule no daies to come after them. No powring to be looked for, from this firſt day, of thoſe laſt. No other but this, till dies noviſſimus noviſſimorum, the very laſt day of all; till He powre downe fire to conſume all fleſh, that, by the fire this day kindled by theſe firie tongues, ſhall not be brought to know Him, and call upon His name.

A ſecond is, Being to ſpeake by and by of ſalvabitur, that we ſhould be ſaved, He would let us ſee, what it is we ſhould be ſaved from. That helpeth much, to make us eſteeme of our ſaving. Saved then from what? From bloud, and fire, and the ſmolder of ſmoke; that is, from the heavy ſignes here: And from that (which is after theſe, and beyond all theſe farre) the Great and terrible Day of the LORD. This ſight of unde, from whence, will make us apprize our ſaving at a higher rate, and thinke it worth our care, then, in that day to be ſaved.

And laſt, it is ſet here, per modum ſtimuli, to quicken us, Vt ſcientes terrorem hunc,
2 Cor. 5. 11. ſaith Saint Paul, that entering into a ſad and ſober conſideration of it, and the terror of it, we might ſtir up our ſelves by it, to prepare for it. And ſet it is betweene both, to diſpoſe us the better to both. To that which is paſt (& prophetabunt) to awake our attention to that: and to that which followes (invocaverit) to kindle our devotion in that; and ſo by both, to make ſure our ſalvation.

The day of the Lord, the Prophet calls it (dies Domini;) as it were oppoſing it, to dies ſervi to our dayes here. As if he ſaid, Theſe are your dayes, and you uſe them (indeed) as if they were your owne. You powre out your ſelves into all riot; and know no other powring out but that: you ſee not any great uſe of Propheſying; thinke it might well enough be ſpared: you ſpeake your pleaſures of it, and ſay, muſto pleni, or to like effect, when you liſt. Theſe are your daies. But, know this, when yours are done, GOD hath His day too, and His day will come at laſt; and it will come terribly when it comes.

Ier. 5. 31. When that day comes, how then? Quid fiet in noviſſimo, the Prophets ordinarie queſtion; What will yee doe at the laſt, How will you be ſaved, in Die illo, in that Day?

We ſpeake ſometime of great dayes here: alas, ſmall in reſpect of this. There is matter of feare ſometime in theſe of ours: Nothing to the terror of this. Great it is, and notable, as much for the feare, as for any thing elſe in it. This, a terrible one indeed, & quis poteſt ſuſtinere, Who can abide it? ſaith Ioel in this very chapter. Looke to it then. On whom He powreth not His Spirit here, on them He will powre ſomewhat elſe there, even the Phials of His wrath: poſſibly before, ſome; but then all, certainely.

And that you may not onely heare of this day, but ſee ſomewhat to put you in minde minde of it, Ecce Signa: Terrible ſignes ſhall come upon earth, Sword and fire: from the ſword powring out of bloud; from fire, a choking vapor of ſmoke, or (as the Hebrew is) a Pillar of ſmoke: which then doth palmizare, goeth up ſtraight like a pillar or a palme-tree, when the fire encreaſeth more and more: for when it abateth, it boweth the head and decaieth; which this ſhall never doe.

Nay further, wonders in heaven. For theſe tongues of heaven thus deſpiſed, heaven ſhall ſhew it ſelfe diſpleaſed, too; the lights of heaven (as it were) for a time put out, for contempt of the heavenly light, this day kindled. The Sun darke, as if he hid his face: the Moone red as bloud, as if ſhee bluſhed, at our great want of regard, in this, a point ſo neerly concerning us.

For (indeed) theſe Eclipſes, though they have their cauſes in nature, as the rainbow alſo hath: Yet what hinders, but as the rainbow, ſo they may be ſignes too, and have their meaning in Scripture, aſſigned; and even this meaning here. This I ſee, that all fleſh are ſmitten with a kinde of horrour and heavineſſe, when they happen to fall out: as if they portended ſomewhat, as if, that they portended, were not good: for dies atri, they have been and are reckoned, all the world over.

But theſe are but the beginnings of evils, ſcarce the dawning of that day: But, when the Day it ſelfe commeth, the great day, then it will powre downe, and who (ſaith Ioël) may abide it? A faire Item for them, that deſpiſe Prophecies; and ſo doing, make voyd the Counſell of God, againſt their owne ſoules. Matt. 24. 8.

I have much marvailed, why on this Sunday (Whit-ſunday, as we call it) the day of the White Sun, the Prophet ſhould preſent the Black Sun thus, unto us. But the Prophet did nothing, but as inſpired by the Holy Ghost: which makes mee thinke, he thought the fire of that day, would make the fire of this burne the cleerer: and, that powring downe make this powring paſſe the readier: that he thought that day, a good meditation for this, and for ſuch I commend it to you, and ſo leave it: And come to Invocaverit, the onely meanes left us now, to eſcape it.

I dare not end with Prophetabunt, or with this; I dare not omit, but joyne invocaverit to them. For what? From Prophetabunt, come we to Salvabitur ſtraight, without any medium betweene? No, we muſt take Invocaverit in our way; no paſſing to ſalvation, but by and through it. For what? is the powring of the Spirit, to end in preaching; and preaching to end in it ſelfe (as it doth with us; a circle of preaching and in effect nothing elſe) but poure in propheſying enough, and then all is ſafe? No: there is another yet, as needfull, nay more needfull to be called on (as the current of our Age runns) and that is, Calling on the name of the Lord. 3 Quicunque invocaverit.

This, it grieveth mee to ſee, how light it is ſet; nay, to ſee how buſy the devill hath beene, to powre contempt on it, to bring it in diſgrace with diſgracefull termes: to make nothing of Divine Service, as if it might bee well ſpared, and invocaverit (here) be ſtricken out.

But marke this Text well, and this Invocation, we make ſo ſleight account of, ſtickes cloſe, is ſo locked faſt to Salvabitur: cloſer and faſter, than we are aware of.

Two errors there be, and I wiſh them reformed: One, as if Propheſying were all we had to doe; we might diſpenſe with Invocation, let it goe, leave it to the Queer. That is an error: Propheſying is not all; Invocaverit is to come in too: we to joyne them, and joyntly to obſerve them, to make a conſcience of both: It is the Oratorie of Prayer powred out of our heares, ſhall ſave us; no leſſe than the Oratorie of preaching, powred in at our eares. 1

The other is, of them that doe not wholy reject it, yet ſo depreſſe it, as if in compariſon of Propheſying, it were little worth. Yet (we ſee) by the frame of this Text, it is the higher end: the calling on us by prophecie, is but that wee ſhould call on the Name of the Lord. All propheſying, all preaching, is but to this end. And indeed Prophecie is but gratia gratis data: and (ever) gratis data is for gratum faciens; a part and a ſpeciall part whereof is invocation. There is then, as a conſcience to be made of both; ſo a like conſcience to be made of both: not to ſet up the one, and magnifie it, 2 and to turne our backe on the other, and vilifie it. For, howſoever we give good words of invocation; yet what our conceipt is, our deeds ſhew.

I love not to daſh one religious duty againſt another; or (as it were) to ſend challenges betweene them. But, as much as the Text ſaith, ſo much may I ſay: And that is, that it hath three ſpeciall prerogatives, by this verſe of the Prophet.

1 Firſt, it is effundam (ours) properly; and effundam Spiritum meum, the powring out of our Spirit (to anſwer that of GODS Spirit in the Text.) Prophetabunt is not ours, none of our act, but the act of another. The ſtreame of our times tends all to this. To make Religion nothing, but an auricular profeſſion, a matter of eaſe, a meere ſedentarie thing: and our ſelves, meerely paſsive in it; ſit ſtill, and heare a Sermon, and two Anthems, and be ſaved: as if, by the act of the Queer, or of the Preacher, wee ſhould ſo be (for, theſe be their acts) and we doe nothing our ſelves, but ſit and ſuffer: without ſo much as any thing done by us, any effundam on our parts at all; not ſo much as this, of calling on the Name of the LORD.

2. The ſecond: This hath the quicunque. We would faine have it, quicunque prophetiam audiverit, he that heares ſo many Sermons a-weeke, cannot chooſe but be ſaved: But it will not be. No: Here ſtand we preaching, and hearing Sermons; and neither they that heare propheſying, nay nor they that propheſie themſelves, can make a quicunque of either. Witneſſe, Domine, in nomine tuo, prophetavimus, and LORD thou haſt preached in our ſtreets, and yet it would doe them no good: Neſcio vos, was their anſwer for all that.

Mat. 7. 22. Luke 13. 26.

And yet how faine would ſome be a propheſying? It would not ſave them, though they were: and is it not a prepoſterous deſire? we love to meddle with that, pertaines not to us, and will doe us no good: that, which is our duty, and would doe us good, that care we not for.

Tongues were given for prophecie. True: but, no quicunque there, for all that: but to whom none are given to propheſie, to them yet are there given to invocate. And there comes it in, the quicunque lies there: de Spiritu meo ſuper omnem carnem, here it comes in; at invocation, not at the other. Let it ſuffice; It is not quicunque prophetaverit here, Quicunque invocaverit it is. The Prophet ſaith it, the Apoſtles ſay it both, πᾶς ὃς ἐαν Peter, here; Paul, Rom. X. XIII.

Laſt, this is ſure; invocaverit is ἐχόμενον σωτηρίας. it ſtands neereſt, it joynes cloſeſt to ſalvabitur: Both one breath, one ſentence: the words touch, there is nothing between them. Salvabitur is not joyned hard to prophetabunt; it is removed farther off. To Invocaverit it is; a degree neerer at leaſt. Nay, the very next of all.

The Text ſhewes this (in a ſort) but the thing it ſelfe more: for when all comes to all, when we are even at laſt caſt, ſalvabitur or no ſalvabitur, then, as if there were ſome ſpeciall vertue in invocaverit, we are called upon, to uſe a few words or ſignes to this end, and ſo ſent out of the world with invocaverit in our mouthes. Dying, we call upon men for it; living, we ſuffer them to neglect it. It was not for nothing, it ſtands ſo cloſe, it even touches ſalvation: It is (we ſee) the very immediate act next before it.

And yet I would not leave you in any error concerning it: To end this point; ſhall invocaverit ſerve then? needs there nothing but it? no faith, no life? Sant Paul anſwers this home: He is direct (X. Rom.) How can they call upon Him, unleſſe they beleeve? So, invocation preſuppoſeth faith. And as peremptorie he is, II Tim. II. Let every one that calleth on (Nay, that but nameth) the name of the LORD, depart from iniquity: ſo, it preſuppoſeth life too. For, if we incline to wickedneſſe in our hearts, GOD will not heare us. No invocation (that) not truly ſo called; a provocation rather. But put theſe two, faith and recedit ab iniquitate to it, and ſo, who ſo calleth upon Him, I will put him in good Sureties, one Prophet, and two Apoſtles, both to aſſure him, he ſhall be ſaved.

Rom. 10. 14. 2 Tim. 2. 19. Pſal. 66. 18.

And that is it, we all deſire, to be ſaved. Saved, indefinitely. Applie it to any dangers, not in the Day of the LORD onely, but even in this our Day: For, ſome terrible dayes dayes we have even here. I will tell you of one; The ſignes here ſet downe, bring it to my mind: A day we were ſaved from (the Day of the Powder-treaſon) which may ſeeme here in a ſort to be deſcribed, bloud and fire, and the vapour of ſmoke: a terrible day ſure, but nothing to the Day of the LORD.

From that we were ſaved: but we all ſtand in danger, we all need ſaving from this. When this Day comes, another manner of fire, another manner of ſmoke. That fire never burnt; that ſmoke never roſe: but, this fire ſhall burne and never be quenched; this ſmoke ſhall not vaniſh but aſcend for ever. I ſay no more, but, in that, in this, in all, Qui invocaverit, ſalvus erit: Invocation rightly uſed is the way to be ſafe. Revel. 19.3.

This then I commend to you. And of all invocations, that which King David doth commend moſt, and betake himſelfe to, as the moſt effectuall and ſureſt of all: and that is, Accipiam calicem ſalutaris, & nomen DOMINI invocabo: To call on His Name, with the cup of ſalvation taken in our hands. No invocation, to that. That, I may be bold to adde (which is all that can be added) Quicunque calicem ſalutaris accipiens, nomen DOMINI invocaverit, ſalvus erit. Another effundam yet, this. Pſal. 116.13.

Why, what vertue is there in the taking it, to helpe invocation? A double. For whether we reſpect our ſinnes; they have a voice, a cry, an aſcending cry, in Scripture aſſigned them. They invocate too, they call for ſomewhat; Even for ſome feareſull judgement to be powred downe on us: and I doubt, our owne voices are not ſtrong enough, to be heard above theirs. 1

But bloud, that alſo hath a voice: ſpecially innocent bloud, the bloud of Abel, that cries loud in GODS eares: but nothing ſo loud as the bloud whereof this cup of bleſſing is the communion; the voice of it, will be heard above all: the cry of it, will drowne any cry elſe. And, as it cries higher: ſo it differs in this, that it cryes in a farre other key; for far better things than that of Abel: not for revenge, but for remiſſion of ſinnes; for that, whereof it is it ſelfe the price and purchaſe, for our ſalvation in that great and terrible Day of the LORD, when nothing elſe will ſave us, and when it will moſt import us; when if we had the whole world to give, we would give it for theſe foure ſyllables, ſalvabitur, ſhall be ſaved. Heb. 12.24.

But it was not ſo much for ſin, David tooke this cup; as to yeeld God thanks for all His benefits. In that caſe alſo, there is ſpeciall uſe of it: and both fit us. As the former, of drowning of our ſinnes cry; ſo this alſo. For, to this end, are we here now met, to render publikely and in ſolemne manner, our thankſgiving, for His great favour this day vouchſafed us, in powring out His Spirit; and with it, His ſaving health upon all fleſh, all that call upon Him: then, to take place, when we ſhall have ſpeciall uſe of it, in the Great Day, the Day of the LORD. And very agreeable it is, per hunc ſanguinem, pro hoc Spiritu, for the powring out of this His Spirit; to render Him thanks with the bloud, that was powred out to procure it [And this is our laſt effundam, and a reall effundam too:] For this effuſion, of both, the one, and the other, and for the hope of our ſalvation, the worke both of the one, and of the other. 2

To the finall attainment whereof, by His holy word of prophecie, by calling on His Name, by this Sacrament of His bloud powred out, and of His Spirit powred out with it, He bring us, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT GREENVVICH, on the XVI. of May, A.D. MDCXIX. being WHITSVNDAY.

ACTS CHAP. X. VER. XXXIV, XXXV.

Aperiens autem PETRVS os ſuum, dixit: In veritate comperi, quia non eſt perſonarum acceptor DEVS: Sed, in omni gente, qui timet Eum, & operatur juſtitiam, acceptus eſt Illi.

Then PETER opened his mouth, and ſaid: Of a truth I perceive, that GOD is no accepter of perſons: But in every Nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteouſneſſe, is accepted with Him.

I Forget not, that we celebrate, to day, the Comming of the HOLY GHOST: and I goe not from it. You ſhall finde in the next Chapter, at the fifteenth, that, to this Text, belongeth a Comming of the Holy Ghoſt.

For, at the uttering of theſe very words, as Saint Peter began to ſpeake them, the Holy Ghoſt fell upon all that heard them. It is (indeed) the ſecond ſolemne comming of the HOLY GHOST. That, in the ſecond Chapter, was the firſt; and this, the ſecond that ever was.

Of which twaine, this is the Comming that comes home to us: and that, two waies: 1 One, in reſpect of the Parties, on whom: 2 The other, in reſpect of the Time, when. The Parties: For, thoſe, whom the Holy Ghoſt came on before, were Gentiles indeed, but yet Proſelytes, that is, halfe Iewes: Out of every Nation under heaven; but that came to Ieruſalem to worſhip: And the ſame was the caſe of the Eunuch in the eight Chapter, Acts 2.5. Acts 8.27.

ter, and not a right Gentile: mong them all. But here now, are a ſort of very Gentiles indeed, in puris naturalibus, ſuch as we and our fathers were: No Proſelytes, ever. This Centurion, the Anteſignanus, the ſtandard-bearer to us, and to all that were meere Heathen men indeed; and this Comming, our Comming properly. Never, in kind; never, to very Gentiles indeed, till now.

It is well ſorted (you ſee:) On the Iewes and Proſelytes, at Ieruſalem, their City: On the Gentiles, at Cæſarea, Cæſars Citie, and of the Cities in Paleſtine, fitting the Gentiles beſt.

Verſe 1.

1 Well obſerved it is, about the calling of the Gentiles, That that, in the Old, and this, in the New Teſtament, they came (both) from one place; from Ioppe, both. Thence, looſed Ionas to Ninive: Thence, ſet out Peter to Cæſarea.

Ion. 1. 3. Verſe 5.

2 Secondly: that, Cæſarea is the Ninive (as it were) of the New Teſtament. Ninive, was the Citie of the great King of the Gentiles, at that time: Cæſarea, Cæſars Citie, as great a King over the Gentiles, at this; from whom went a commandement that the whole world ſhould be taxed.

Eſay 36. 13. Luk. 2 1.

3 Thirdly: that, was performed, by Ionas; this, by Bar-jonas: So, is Saint Peter called by our SAVIOVR, when he made his confeſſion, that CHRIST was the Sonne of GOD: And that was at Cæſarea. Where, what he confeſſed, then, he comes to preach, now. That of Ionas, an Omen (as it were) of this (here) of Saint Peter. Ionas, and Bar-jonas, from Ioppe, they went both: Both, from one place; both to one end; both, to convert the Gentiles; to ſhew, that GOD had given them alſo repentance to life.

Matt. 16. 17. 13. Acts 11. 18.

Alway, this, the better. For, Ionas at Ninive, he ends with Ninive ſhall be deſtroyed. Bar-jonas, at Cæſarea, with Acceptus eſt illi: that, the end of the Text. Or, if you will goe to the end of the Sermon, the end is, ſhall obtaine remiſſion of Sinnes, as good as it, every way.

Ionas 3. 4. Verſe 43.

2 So, the Parties fit well: The Time, as well. The Holy Ghoſt here came upon them, as they were at a Sermon, even as we now are. Peter opened his mouth; they ſtood attentive; the HOLY GHOST came downe. That, to be here, is a diſpoſition to receive the Holy Ghoſt. And, it may pleaſe GOD, the like may befall us, being occupied now, as they then were.

The Summe. Of that Sermon, theſe are the firſt words. Of which words, what can be ſaid more to their praiſe, than that which the Angel ſaith of them, the next Chapter at the fourteenth verſe: That Peter being ſent for, ſhould at his comming, ſpeake words to Cornelius, by which both he, and his houſhold ſhould be ſaved. Thoſe words, the Angel there ſpake off, that Peter ſhould ſpeake, are theſe, I have read: GOD of His goodneſſe ſend them the ſame effect.

In veritate comperi, ſhewes, they are a compertum eſt; and that, is authenticall with a Teſte: So is this; Teſte Cornelio & totâ familiâ, witneſſe he and his whole familie and friends. Such are moſt praiſed; for they are animatæ exemplo, have a ſoule put into them by an example. Specially, when they be ſo reduced to a ſingular, as that ſingular afterward is reduced to a generall: Both which are in this. Beſt preaching of a Text, when the Commentarie ſtands before it, as here: For, what is in the Text propounded, was fulfilled in the auditorie, yer they went.

As fulfilled in them in particular, ſo extended to all in generall: for it hath an omni gente put to it: that, nothing was done to him there, but the ſame ſhall be done to any other. Any, of any nation, that ſhall be found in like ſort diſpoſed, as (we finde) he was: that is, whoſe prayers and almes ſhall come up into remembrance before GOD. GOD ſhall not be wanting to them, but provide them of further meanes requiſite to their ſalvation.

It is a thing well befitting the providence of GOD; all His creatures, when he hath made them, to ſee them provided of ſuch things, as are needfull for them. As He doth (ſaith the Pſalme) for the young ravens; (ſaith the Goſpel) for the poore ſparrowes valued, two of them, at a farthing: Naturas rerum minimarum non deſtituit Deus, the Pſal. 147. 9. Mat. 10. 29.

the ſmalleſt things that be, He leaves them not deſtitute.

If not them, His halfe-farthing creatures, much leſſe men (as He is pleaſed to ſpeake with the leaſt) more worth than many ſparrowes. So, GOD argues with Ionas; if he made ſuch adoe for his gourd, which ſprung up in one night, and withered in another, ſhould not GOD ſpare Ninive, wherein there were ſo many thouſands, that knew not their right hand from their left, Gentiles though they were? Ion.4.10.11.

And, if His care extend to all men, and He make His raine to fall, and his ſunne to ſhine upon the evill and unkinde, ſhall He not bring the raine of His Word (as Moſes calls it, Deut.32.) to fall on them, and make His ſunne of righteouſneſſe (as Malachi calls it) to ariſe upon them that feare Him? A view whereof we may take, in this familie here: even of the Sunne of righteouſneſſe, the White ſunne, riſing upon one that feared GOD with all his houſhold, gave much almes and prayed to GOD daily. Matt.5.45. Deut.32. Mal.4.2.

Written by him, this: but not written for him onely, that it was Whit-ſunday with him; but for us alſo, to whom it ſhall likewiſe be, if we be de gente Corneliâ, expreſſe and follow him in that, which was accepted of in him.

Two points we have to proceed on: 1 The firſt, here is a point newly perceived by Saint Peter. 2 The ſecond, What that was. A point newly perceived, in theſe, 1 In veritate comperi, Of a truth I perceive. 2 What the point was in theſe, that in every Nation, &c. The Diviſion

In that Saint Peter ſaith, Truely I now perceive, as if before he had not (as indeed he had not: For, he was in the mind before, that but in unâ gente; but now he perceives, that In omni gente is the truer tenet:) That, even to Saint Peter, there were ſome things incomperta, ſomething not perceived at firſt, that came to be perceived after. I.

Then, an inſtance: What that was. And it was, about GODS accepting. Both waies: Privativè, what GOD accepts not; Poſitivè, what He accepts. Accepts not Perſons, that is once: But, accepts of ſuch as feare Him and worke righteouſneſſe, of what Nation ſoever (be he an Italian;) of what condition ſoever (be he a Centurion:) All is one. II.

Of which two, the one [feare] is an affection within, of the heart. The other [worketh righteouſneſſe] is an action without, of the hand. Cornelius's heart, and Cornelius's hand: theſe they be. Whence we ſhall learne three points more: 1 One, how we may be accepted to GOD, if we be, as Cornelius here was; and I would, we ſo were: 2 The other, that, when all is done, all is but accepting though. Except He could, to our feare and workes both, and ſo, is not bound; but accept He will though, of His grace and goodneſſe, and (as it followes immediately the next verſe) for His words ſake, which He ſent, preaching peace, by Ieſus, who is Lord over all.

The laſt, whereunto accepted: and that (as appeareth in the XLVII. verſe) was to the Sacrament, and by it, to the remiſſion of ſinnes, and to the receiving the Holy Ghoſt in a more ample meaſure. Opus diei, the proper of this Day. III.

OF a truth I perceive. He that ſaith, Of a truth I perceive now, in effect (as it were) ſaith: before, He did not ſo. For, I perceive now, is the ſpeech of one that is come to perceiving of that, which before he perceived not. 1

A Point newly perceived. Comperi.

On this we pitch firſt. That ſo great an Apoſtle, for all Tu es Petrus, and Rogavi pro te, and Paſce oves meas, doth ingenuouſly confeſſe, that (now) he had found that; which till now, he had not. For, ſince the beginning of the Chapter, he had not. So that all his comperi's were not yet come in. By like, his chaire was not yet made, or he had not yet taken handſell of it. But, how it comes to paſſe after, at Rome, I know not: Matt.16.18. Luk.22.32. Ioh.21.16.

Chap.11.2. not: at Cæſarea, we ſee, it was not ſo. And they, that in the next Chapter, called him coram, to anſwer this Sermon: ſure, they ſeeme (as then) not to have beene fully perſwaded, that Saint Peter could perceive all things, and not miſse in any.

Iob 12.2. IOB, though in miſerie, yet in ſcorne ſaith to ſome in his time, Indeed you, you are the onely men, you perceive all. Moſes did not ſo: There was a caſe, wherein he was

Num.15.34. neſciens quid de eo facere deberet, Moſes knew not, what he ſhould doe, *Num.*15. There was a caſe, whereof Eliſha was faine to ſay, Et Dominus non nunciavit mihi, GOD had

2 King. 4.27. not ſhewed it him (2 Reg. 4.) But when GOD did, might not Moſes and he both have ſaid, as Peter doth here, Of a truth, before, I did not, but now I doe perceive? Yea, but this is Old Teſtament.

Ioh.11.49. And, was it not in the New? There, Caiphas hee ſaith, Tuſh, you perceive nothing: Hee perceived all. But Cephas he ſaith, he perceived not all: For, heere hee now ſaith, he perceiveth ſomething, and all his comperi's came not at once. So ſaith Peter; and ſo

1 Cor.13.9. Paul, All our knowledge is in part, and ſo is all our propheſying too, and puts himſelfe in the number.

Of a truth then wee perceive, Saint Peter comes nothing neere his Succeſſor (that would bee.) Hee perceives all that is to bee perceived, at once: can have nothing added to his knowledge, from the firſt inſtant, he is ſet downe in Cathedrâ; can have no new comperi; his comperi's come in all together; gets Caiphas's knowledge by ſitting in Cephas's chaire.

(They beginne to ſcorne this themſelves, now, and pray him to get a good Generall Councell about him, and he ſhall perceive things never the worſe.)

But, it is not this onely, they differ in: In ſomething beſide. For, Peter tooke Cor-

Verſe 26. nelius up from the ground; His Succeſſor let Cornelius's Lord and Maſter, lye ſtill hardly. Not a Captaine of Cæſarea, he; but even Cæſar himſelfe. Of a truth we may perceive nothing like Cephas in this neither.

Ioh.4.25. Ioh.13.7. Ioh.16.12. The woman, at the well-ſide, ſaid, the Meſsias, when He comes, He will tell us all. Yet, when He came, He told them not all at once. Even to Tu es Petrus, He ſaid, Tu neſcis modò, ſcies autem poſt hæc; and of thoſe Poſt hæc's, this heere was one. As they ſhould bee able to beare (for, all, they were not then able:) And as it ſhould be for them;

Act.1.7. for, it was not for them to know all, Not the times and ſeaſons, and ſuch other things as the Father had put in his owne power.

I ſpeake it for this, that even ſome, that are farre enough from Rome, yet with their new perſpective, they thinke, they perceive all. GODS ſecret decrees, the number and order of them cleerely; are indeed too bold, and too buſy with them. Luther ſaid well, that every one of us hath by nature a Pope in his belly, and thinkes he perceives great matters. Even they, that beleeve is not of Rome, are eaſily brought to beleeve it of themſelves. And out they come with their Comperi's with their great confidence propound them. But, Comperi is one thing: In veritate comperi, another Comperi, they may ſay, and that may be doubted of: but, in veritate comperi, that, is it.

We may take up the Text a point further. In veritate comperi will beare two ſenſes. 1 One, I perceive that, I did not, before: 2 The other, I perceive that, the contrarie whereof, I did conceive before. Not to perceive is but to be ignorant: But Saint Peter, in this, had not onely beene ignorant, but had poſitively held the quite contrarie; ad oppoſitum, Quòd non ex omni gente at any hand. At the fourteenth verſe before, for the Iewiſh meats (we ſee) he conteſts with GOD: Not I Lord; No heatheniſh meat; I never eate any? and at the twentie eight, No leſſe unlawfull to eate with heathen men.

Ignorance is but privative: this, is poſitive, and ſo, an error. An error in the great Myſterie of Godlineſſe, a part whereof was preached unto the Gentiles; that they alſo had their part in CHRIST. And, this is not his error alone: The Apoſtles and Brethren ſeeme to have beene in the ſame; they convented him for this new Comperi, and hee was faine to anſwer for it. That for the time, generall it was (this error;) and (for ought we know) Saint Stephen, that was ſtoned before this, departed the world, in the opinion of In unâ, not omni gente: for, then (ſure) this truth was not perceived, not received publikely.

Then

Then is not every error repugnant to God's election. Why every error, more than every ſinne? God is able to pardon and not to impute error in opinion, as well as errour in practice; and Nonne errant omnes qui operantur malum (ſaith Salomon) Doe not all erre that doe evill? yes ſure. Did not the High Prieſt offer, as well for the errors, as for the tranſgreſſions of the people? And is not Christ made to us, by God, Wiſedome againſt the one, as well as Righteouſneſſe againſt the other? It was Saint Peters caſe here. Pro. 14.22. Levit. 5.15. 1 Cor. 1.30.

This onely we are to looke to; that with Saint Peter, we be not wilfull, if there come a cleere comperi: but as ready to relent in the one, as to repent of the other. That, when we be ſhewed our errour, we open our eyes to perceive it; and when wee perceive it, with Saint Peter here, we open our mouthes to confeſſe it. And that we doe it with an open mouth, and not betweene the teeth, but acknowledge it plainely, it was otherwiſe than we thought. I verily thought (ſaith Saint Paul) I ought to doe, that which now, all the world ſhould not make me to doe. This is Saint Pauls. I now comprehend, or rather am comprehended (for καταλαμβάνομαι will beare both) of which before I could not. This is Saint Peters retraction. Conclude then, if we happen to be in ſome points otherwiſe minded, God will bring us to the knowledge, even of them. Onely in thoſe whereto we are come, and whereof we are agreed on all ſides, that we proceed by one rule, make a conſcience of the practice of ſuch truths, as we agree of, and thoſe wee doe not, ſhall ſoone be revealed unto us, and we ſhall ſay even of them, In veritate comperi. Act. 26 9. Phil 3 12.

II. What that Point is, Privative. 1 God is no accepter of perſons what is meant by Perſons.

What was this, that Saint Peter formerly had not, but now did perceive? That God is no accepter of perſons. Let us take with us, what is meant by Perſons. For, he that feareth God is a perſon; Cornelius was a perſon; ſo were all the perſons in his houſhold. The word in all the three tongues, is taken, as we take it, when we ſet Perſonall againſt Reall, oppoſe the cauſe to the perſon: under it comprehending whatſoever is beſide the matter or cauſe. The Greeke and Hebrew properly ſignifie the face; that (we know) ſhewes it ſelfe firſt, and if it ſhew it ſelfe well, is muta commendatio, carries us, though it ſay never a word; as in Eliab, the goodlineſſe of his perſon moved even Samuel. Vnder the face then, we underſtand (as I may ſay, and as we uſe to call it in apparell) the facing: under the perſon, all by-reſpects that doe perſonate, attire or maske any, to make him perſonable; ſuch as are, the Country, Condition, Birth, Riches, Honour, and the like. And this perſon thus taken, of a truth we dayly perceive, that in omni gente men accept of this, and in a manner, of nothing elſe but this: all goes by it. Well, with God, it is otherwiſe; and with men, it ſhould be: God accepts them not, nor of any men, for them. This is the comperi. 1 Sam. 16.6.

And is this it? Why, this was no newes. Was Peter ignorant of this? It is not poſſible; I will never beleeve, but he had read the five bookes of Moſes: why there it is expreſly ſet downe (Deut. 10.) totidem verbis. Why, by the very light of nature Elihu ſaw it, and ſet it downe too, Iob 34. No not the perſon of Princes. In Samuels choice of David, there it is, 1 Sam. 16. And King Iehoſaphat gave it in his charge. 2 Chron. 19. and in other places beſide: and how could he but know this? Deut. 10 17. Iob 34.19. 1 Sam. 16.7. Chro. 19.7.

You will ſay: Saint Peter knew it before; but not with a comperi, as now he doth. And (indeed) many things we know, by booke, by ſpeculation (as we ſay) and in groſſe, which when we come to the particular experience of, we uſe to ſay, yea now I know it indeed, as if we had not knowne it, at leaſt not ſo knowen it before. The experimentall knowledge is the true comperi in veritate, when all is done. Was this it?

No: for, had he not experience of this, and lay away his booke? Have not all experience dayly? That God, in dealing His gifts of nature: Outward, Beauty, Stature, Strength, Activeneſſe: inward, Wit to apprehend, Memorie to retaine, Iudgement to diſcerne, Speech to deliver: that He puts no difference, but without all reſpect of perſons, beſtowes them on the child of the meane, as ſoone, as of the mighty? So is it in wealth and worldly preferment, He lifts the poore out of the duſt. Nay (you will Psal. 113.7.

beare with it, it is the Holy Ghosts owne terme) the dunghill, to set him with Princes. So is it, in His judgements; which light as heavy, yea, more heavy other while, on the great, than on the small; and shew that that way and every way, there is with Him no respect of persons. And, no man had better experience of this, than he that spake it, than Peter himselfe, that without any respect, of a poore fisherman, was accepted to be Gal. 2. 2. an Apostle, the chiefe of the Apostles. Saint Paul saith well: What they were in times past,
Gal. 2. 6. it makes no matter, God accepts no mans person, This they are now.

What shall we say then? That, though he could not but know the generall truth of this; yet was he once of the minde, that this generall truth might admit of some exceptions; one at the least. Not, of persons, true: but Nations are not Persons; It held not in them. Of one Nation, God accepted before others, and that Nation was the

This had runne in Saint Peters head, and more than his. But now, here comes a new Comperi: He perceives, he was wrong: And, if you aske, how he perceived it? By relation of Cornelius's vision of the Angell; and by conferring it with his owne. He saw, his vision was now come to passe: Moses's uncleane birds and beasts are become cleane all; all, to be eaten, now: and the Gentiles, whom he held for no lesse uncleane, to be eaten with, and to be gone in unto. All in one great sheet; omni gente and all. That the Nation also comes to be understood under the word Person, no lesse than the rest; and none to be respected or accepted of God, for being in one corner of the sheet, (that is, of one countrie) more than of another; that, in CHRIST, neither Iew nor

Rom. 12. 32. upon all. And good reason for it, if it be but that of the Apostles owne framing (Gal. 5. 17.) If the Law which came foure hundred yeares after, could not disanull the covenant made with Abraham so long before; by the same, nay by a better consequence, neither could the Covenant with Abraham make the promise of God of none effect; the promise, that was made in Paradise more than foure times foure hundred yeares before that of Abrahams, to the woman and to her whole seede.

The vision, Saint Peter saw, was at Ioppe: he was gone as farre from Iewrie, as there was any land; hard to the Sea-side, to the very parting place, where they loosed usually, when they went to the lands of the Gentiles. Ionas loosed thence. And, in a Tanners house it was: That, as to Simon the Tanner it was all one, he made leather indifferently, of the badger, as well as of the sheeps skinne; as the skinnes were to Simon the Tanner, so the meat should be to Simon the Apostle. And it was a linnen sheet; which very linnen shewed, they were all cleane: For, in linnen the Iewes wrapped the first-borne of their cleane beasts, if any happened to die before they came to be offered, and so buried it: but, at no hand, any uncleane beasts ever in linnen. But now, in linnen, all: that, if one cleane, all: And so, no Person, Calling, Countrie excepted to, or accepted of, more than another.

2 positive: Whom God accepteth, In every Nation be that feareth, &c.

Well then, no person. But, we like not this destructive Divinitie, that tells us what He doth not, and tells us not; what He doth accept. If not the person, nor the persons Nation, what? Accepts He of nothing? Yes: In every Nation, if any person there be, that feareth GOD and worketh righteousnesse; He that brings these with him, is (to GOD) a person acceptable; Such, He will not let lye, but take them up, and lay them up, where ever He findes them.

Salomon, in effect, said as much long before, at the end of his long Sermon, the book
Eccles. 12. 13. of the Preacher. Will ye (saith he) heare the Summe of all Sermons? Feare GOD (there is, he that feares Him) and keepe His commandements (that is, he that workes righteousnesse) righteouſneſſe) Hoc eſt totum hominis (read ſome) there is all man hath, that God will accept of; Or Hoc eſt omnis homo (read other, and inferre, Si hoc eſt omnis homo, manifeſtum, quòd ſine hoc nihil eſt omnis homo:) This, is man, all that he is; For, whatſoever beſides this, he is, is as if it were not: This is all things, for without this, with all his perſon and perſonableneſſe, he is nothing in God's ſight. This preached Salomon, at Hieruſalem, to the Iew; and this, Peter, at Cæſarea, to the Gentiles: Hoc eſt omnis homo, this is for all men, ſaith Salomon; Omni gente, for every Nation, ſaith Peter.

That feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſſe: Both theſe, and not the one without the other. Neither feare, which is dull and workes not; for, of ſuch Hee accepts not: Nor workes, if they come not from within, from our hearts, from His true feare in our hearts, but be perſonate onely, as were thoſe of the Phariſee. We beginne then there, within: For, any thing that is perſonate in Religion, and proceeds not from thence (μόρφωσις, Saint Pauls maske or vizor of godlineſſe, Saint Peters ἐπικάλυμμα, cloke of Chriſtian libertie) God pluckes them off: He is ſo farre from accepting them, as He caſts them from Him, He cannot abide them.

Feareth and worketh, jointly.

1 Pet. 2. 16.

I forgot to tell you, why not the perſon: God Himſelfe tells Samuel, that He lookes not as man lookes; Man lookes upon the outſide, the face and the facing; God lookes to that which is fartheſt from the perſon; to that which is within, at the center (that is) the heart. The inwards were God's part, in every ſacrifice, reſerved ever to Him alone. By reſerving them, He ſhewes what it is, He chiefly accepts of. Wee muſt then looke to that, firſt. He firſt lookes at the heart, and in the heart, to the affection; (for, the heart is the ſeat of affections:) and of all affections, that of feare; and, of all feares, to the feare of God.

1 Sam. 16. 7.

Of God; why, how comes God to be feared? Feare is not, but of ſome evill; and, evill, in God, there is none. Not, for any evill in Him; but for ſome evill, we may expect from Him, if we feare not to offend Him, by doing that, which is evill in His ſight. Which puniſhment yet, is not evill of it ſelfe; for puniſhment, is the worke of juſtice: but, we call it, as wee feele it, malum pœnæ: And, it we feare; and Him, for it; or any that can inflict it.

Power and Iuſtice are of themſelves, fearefull: Power, to all men; Iuſtice, to evill men. But, Iuſtice armed with power, that, keepes all in aw. Now, in God, there is power: Gods power is manifeſt even to Heathen men. It is a part of the γνωστὸν τῦ θεῦ, that which may be knowne of God (His Power) and goe no further but to the worke of Creation, ſaith the Apoſtle (Rom. 1. 20.) Every man feares the mighty: for, what He will do, we know not; what He can doe, we know, and that ever preſents it ſelfe firſt.

And, in God, there is Iuſtice, and the voice of Iuſtice, If thou doe evill, feare. Which Iuſtice of God, is manifeſt likewiſe without Scriptures, by the Law written in our hearts, the hearts even of the Heathen themſelves, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle (Rom. 2. 15.) wherby, they are either a law to themſelves (the better ſort of them, Cornelius, here) or, if not, their owne thoughts accuſe them for it, and their conſciences beare witneſſe againſt them, and at a Seſſions holden in their hearts, they condemne themſelves. Which Seſſions is a forerunner of the great generall Seſſions that is to enſue.

Rom. 13. 4.

Scientes igitur terrorem hunc (ſaith Saint Paul ſtill. 2. Cor. 5.) Knowing then this fearefull judgement, we perſwade men, and men are perſwaded, either to eſchew evill yet undone, or to leave it if it be done, that it be not found in our hands, not taken about us.

2 Cor. 5. 11.

This feare, to ſuffer evill for ſinne (malum pœnæ) makes men feare to doe the evill of ſinne (malum culpæ:) what they feare to ſuffer for, they feare to doe. Keepes them from doing evill at all, makes them avoid it: or keepes them from doing evill ſtill, makes them forſake it. It prevailed not only with Iob in the Old; but, with the Ninivites: It prevailed not onely with Cornelius, in the New, but even with Felix; made him tremble, though it had not his full work, for he was not ſo happy, as to heare Paul out, but put it off till another time, which time never came.

Ion. 3. 5.
Acts 24. 26.

I
Feare, firſt.
He that feareth Him.

Firſt feare: and why feare, firſt? Becauſe it is firſt. It is called (and truly, for ſo truly truly it is) the beginning of our wiſedome, when wee beginne to bee truely wiſe. In Adam, it was ſo. The firſt paſſion we read of, that was raiſed in him, that wrought upon him after his fall was, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid. There beganne his Wiſedome, in his feare. There began he to play the wiſe-man, and to forethinke him of his folly committed. Feare is φιμὸς φύσεως (as it is well called) of the nature of a bridle to our nature, to hold us in to refraine from evill, if it may be: if not, to check us and turne us about, and make us turne from it. Therefore, Feare GOD, and depart from evill (lightly) goe together, as the cauſe, and the effect; you ſhall ſeldome finde them parted. So then, becauſe it is firſt, it is to ſtand firſt, and firſt to be regarded.

Gen. 3. 10.

Pro. 3. 7.

Another reaſon, is becauſe it is moſt generall. For, it goes through all, heathen and all. It goes to omni gente; For, in omni gente; there is qui timet. For, that they have ſo much faith, as to feare, appeares by the Ninivites plainly. Nay, it goes not onely to omni gente, but even to omni animante too, to beaſts and all; yea to the dulleſt beaſt of all, to Balaam's beaſt: he could not get her (ſmite her, ſpur her, doe what hee could to her) to runne upon the point of the Angels ſword: that they are in worſe caſe than beaſts that are voyd of it. So, firſt it riſeth of all, and furtheſt it reacheth of all.

Num. 22. 23.

And, this feare, I would not have men thinke meanly of it. It is (we ſee) the beginning of wiſedome; and ſo, both Father and Sonne, [a] David and [b] Salomon call it. But, if it have his full worke, to make us depart from evill, it is wiſedome complete, and that from GODS owne mouth, [c] Iob 28. Therefore [d] Eſay bids us make a treaſure of it, and [e] Bleſſed is the man, that is ever thus wiſe, that feareth alwaies: It is Salomon, Proverb. 28. For, howſoever the world goe, [f] this I am ſure of, (ſaith he) it ſhall goe well with him that feareth GOD, and carrieth himſelfe reverently in His Preſence.

So, it is the Alpha, and Omega, firſt and laſt, beginning and end. Firſt and laſt (I am ſure) there is ſovereigne uſe of it.

Rom. 8. 15.

Eſay 11. 2.

Nor regard them not, that ſay, it pertaines not to the New Teſtament; phanſying to themſelves, nothing muſt be done, but out of pure love. For, even there it abideth, and two ſovereigne uſes there are ſtill of it, thoſe two which before we named; [1] One, to begin; [2] the other, to preſerve.

1 To Beginne: We ſet it here as an introduction, as the dawning is to the day. For on them, that are in this dawning, that feare His name, on them ſhall the Sunne of righteouſneſſe ariſe. It is Malachi ſaith it: it is Cornelius here ſheweth it. As the baſe Court, to the Temple: Not into the Temple at firſt ſtep; but, come through the Court firſt: As the needle, to the threed (it is Saint Auguſtine:) that, firſt enters, and drawes after it the threed; and that ſewes all faſt together.

Where, there happens a ſtrange effect, that, not to feare, the next way is to feare. The kinde worke of feare, is to make us ceaſe from ſinne. Ceaſing from ſinne brings with it a good life; a good life, that, ever carries with it a good conſcience; and a good conſcience caſts out feare. So that, upon the matter, the way, not to feare, is to feare: and, that GOD, that brings light out of darkeneſſe, and glorie out of humility, He it is, that alſo brings confidence out of feare.

2 This, for the introduction. And ever after, when faith is entred and all, it is a ſovereigne meanes to preſerve them alſo. There is (as I have told you) a compoſition in the ſoule, much after that of the body. The heart, in the body, is ſo full of heate, it would ſtifle it ſelfe and us ſoone, were it not, GOD hath provided the lungs, to give it coole ayre, to keepe it from ſtifling. Semblably in the ſoule, faith is full of Spirit, ready enough of it ſelfe to take an unkind heat, ſave that feare is by GOD ordained, to coole it and keepe it in temper, to awake our care ſtill, and ſee, it ſleepe not in ſecuritie. It is good againſt ſaying in ones heat, [a] Non movebor (ſaith the Pſal.) Good againſt [b] Etſi omnes, non ego: S. Peter found it ſo. Good (ſaith S. Paul) againſt [c] Noli altum ſapere.

[b] Mat. 26. 33.
[c] Rom. 11. 20.

And

And theſe would marre all, but for the humble feare of GOD: by that, all is kept right.

Wherefore, when the Goſpell was at the higheſt, worke out your ſalvation with feare and trembling (ſaith Saint Paul:) Paſſe the time of your dwelling here in feare (ſaith Saint Peter.) Yea, our Saviour Himſelfe (as noteth Saint Auguſtine) when Hee had taken away one feare, Ne timete, Feare not them that can kill the body, and when they have done that, have done all, and can doe no more; in place of that feare, puts another, But feare Him, that when He hath ſlaine the body, can caſt ſoule and it into hell fire: and when He had ſo ſaid once, comes over againe with it to ſtrike it home, Etiam dico vobis; Yea I ſay unto you, feare Him.

Phil 2.12. 1 Pet. 1.17. Mat. 10.28.

So then, this of feare, is not Moſes's ſong onely, it is the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb both. Made of the harmonie of the t'one, as well as t'other. A ſpeciall ſtrain, in that ſong of Moſes and the Lamb, Apoc. XV. you ſhall find this: Who will not feare thee ô Lord? He that will not, may ſibi canere, make himſelfe muſicke; he is out of their queer, yeathe Lambs queer; indeed, out of both.

Apoc. 15.4.

This have I a little ſtood on; for that, me thinks, the world beginns to grow from feare too faſt: we ſtrive to blow this Spirit quite away; for feare of carnificina conſcientiæ, wee ſeeke to benumme it, and to make it paſt feeling. For theſe cauſes, feare is, with GOD a thing acceptable, we heare: And, that the Holy Ghoſt came downe, where this feare was, we ſee. So it is, Saint Peter affirmes it, For certaine, of a truth: So it is, Saint Peter proteſts it. Let no man beguile you, to make you thinke otherwiſe: No, no; but Fac, fac vel timore pœnæ, ſi nondum potes, amore juſtitiæ: Do it man, I tell thee, doe it, though it be for feare of puniſhment, if you cannot yet get your ſelfe to doe, it for love of righteouſneſſe. One will bring on the other, A timore Domini concepimus Spiritum ſalutis: (It is Eſai.) By it, we ſhall conceive that, which ſhall ſave us. Theſe very words ſhall ſave us, ſaid the Angell, and ſo they did: Here, in Cornelius, wee have a faire preſident for it. And ſo, now I come to the other.

For, I aske, Is GOD all for within: accepts He of nothing without? Yes, that He doth. Of a good righteous worke too, if it proceed, from His feare in our hearts. Feare is not all then: No, for it is but the beginning (as we have heard;) GOD will have us begin, but not end there. We have begun with qui timet Eum; we muſt end with & operatur juſtitiam, and then comes acceptus eſt illi, and not before. For, neither feare, if it be feare alone; nor faith, if it be faith alone, is accepted of Him; but timet and operatur (here) with Peter and fides quæ operatur (there) with Paul: feare and faith (both) that worketh, and; none elſe. If it be true feare, if ſuch as GOD will accept, it is not timor piger, a dull lazy feare: His feare, that feared his Lord and went and digged his talent into the ground, did nothing with it; Away with his feare and him into utter darkeneſſe. GOD will have his talent turned, have it above ground. He will not have His religion inviſible within. No; ſhew me thy faith (ſaith Saint Iames;) thy feare (ſaith Saint Peter here) by ſome workes of righteouſneſſe: Elſe, talke not of it. He will have it made appeare, that men may ſee it, and glorifie Him for it, that hath ſuch good and faithfull ſervants.

But workes withall; And worketh righteouſneſſe. Gal. 5.6. Mat. 25.18. 30. Iam. 2.18.

And they obſerve, that it is not [that doth] but [that worketh righteouſneſſe;] Not facit, but operatur. And, what manner of worke? Saint Peter's word is ἐργαζόμενος here: and for ἐργαζόμενος, ἔργον will not ſerve; it muſt be ἐργασία, which is a plaine trade. Diſcite bene agere (ſaith Eſai) learne it, as one would learne an handicraft, to live by: Learne it, and be occupied in it; make an ἐργασία, that is, even an occupation of it. CHRISTS owne occupation, who (as Saint Peter tells us ſtraight after) pertranſiit bene faciendo, Went up and downe, went about doing good, practiſing it, and nothing elſe: for, that is ἐργάζεσθαι.

Eſa. 1.17. Act. 10.38.

Worketh righteouſneſſe. This righteouſneſſe, to know what it is (beſide the common duties of our calling, either as Chriſtians in generall; or particular, as every mans vocation lyes) we cannot better informe our ſelves of it, than from this partie, hee ſpeakes of (from Cornelius) and what the workes were, he did. And they are ſet downe at the ſecond verſe: where, after Saint Luke had ſaid, he feared GOD, to ſhew his works of righteouſneſſe he addes, 1 he gave much almes, and 2 prayed to GOD continually; and at the thirtieth verſe, that he was found 3 faſting at the ninth houre (that is) three, at after-noone. In theſe three, 1 Almes, 2 Prayer, and 3 Faſting, ſtood his workes of righteouſneſſe: In theſe three; for beſides theſe we find not any other. They bee the ſame, and in the ſame order, as they were figured in the three Oblations of the Magi, firſt fruits of the Gentiles, there in the Goſpell, as the Fathers allot them: 1 Gold, that is, for Almes; 2 Incenſe, that is Prayer; and 3 Myrrhe, bitter myrrhe, for Workes of Mortification, as Faſting and ſuch like; as bitter to the fleſh, as myrrhe to the taſte: both bitter, but, wholeſome, both. But (without all figure) they are the ſame three, and ſtand juſt in the ſame order, that here they doe, where our SAVIOVR teacheth them literally, and that, under the name of Righteouſneſſe (Mat.6.) 1 Almes, firſt: that He beginnes with at the firſt verſe, and ſo heere, it is firſt: 2 then, to Prayer next, at the fifth verſe: 3 and after that, to faſting, even as it is here too. Cornelius's workes were theſe three: 1 gave almes, 2 prayed duely, 3 was found at his faſt by the Angell. This is all wee finde; more wee finde not ſpecified: and theſe are enow, theſe would ſerve, if wee would doe them. Theſe, in him, were; the ſame, in us, will be accepted.

Mat.6.1. 5. 16.

Verſe 2. 3.

II. Of Gods acceptation. He, &c. is accepted.

And now, of GODS acceptation. Accepting is but a queint terme borrowed from the Latine. It is no more than receiving or taking. 1 Firſt then, cleere it is, Hee will take them; but, where they bee to take: But where they are not, take them Hee cannot. In vaine ſhall we looke for acceptation of that, which is not. We are then to ſee, there bee ſome given; ſome, for Him to take. Take us Hee cannot, if there bee not Cornelius's hand to take us by: Come up in remembrance they cannot, if none were done to remember: For, memoria eſt præteritorum, and all ours are yet to come (I feare) in phantaſiâ rather than in memoriâ. Our almes, alas they are ſhrunke up pittifully: Prayer, ſwallowed up with hearing Lectures: and for the third, feaſt (if you will) continually; but, faſt, as little as may be; and, of moſt I might ſay, not at all. The want of theſe, the bane of our Age. He ſtretcheth out His hand, to receive almes; Hee boweth downe His eare to receive Prayer; He beholdeth with His eyes, to take us faſting: There is none to give them, and ſo He cannot receive them. But, by this acceptus eſt (here) we ſee, how we might be accepti.

It is beſide the Text; yet if yee aske, Here is feare, and heere are workes, where is faith all this while, without which it is impoßible to pleaſe GOD, or to bee accepted of Him? Had he no faith? Yes, he would not have ſpent his goods, or chaſtened his body, without ſome faith: at leaſt, call upon GOD hee could not, on whom hee beleeved not.

Therfore he beleeved, ſure: The Gentiles Creed at leaſt, That a GOD there is; that ſought He will be; that, He will not faile them that ſeeke Him, but both regard and reward them.

The Ninivites Creed at leaſt: in whoſe feare, there was faith and hope too: Quis ſcit, Who can tell, whether GOD may not turne and ſpare, and accept of a poore Gentile? There is nothing knowne to the contrarie, and there be preſidents for it.

And ſo he turned, and ſet himſelfe to ſeek GOD, by the three waies we remembred. And thou LORD never faileſt them that ſeeke Thee, but accepteſt them, not according to that they have not; but according to that they have, though it be but a willing mind, they have. GOD forbid, but concupiſcence ſhould be of equall power to good, that it is to evill. If you will reach it further, to faith in CHRIST: living in garriſon among the Iewes, hee could not chooſe but have heard ſomewhat of Him, to move him, to throw himſelfe downe before Him, and He tooke him up, Acceptus eſt Illi.

Pſal.9.10.

2 Cor.8.12.

The flaxe did but ſmoke, CHRIST quenched it not. Crackes there were in the reed, but He brake it not though; but kindled the one, and bound up the other: and in that little ſtrength he had, tooke him, as Hee found him; and tooke order, thus to bring him neerer the waies of his ſalvation.

Eſay 42.3.

But

But now, leſt one error beget another, and the laſt prove worſe than the firſt, take this with you. When all is ſaid that can be ſaid, all is but accepting for all this. That He was, and we ſhall be accepted, that gives us ſome heart: And, that it is but accepted, that takes away all ſelfe-conceit of our ſelves. For, I know not how, if we be but accepted, we take upon us ſtraight, and fall into a phanſie, that well worthy we were, or elſe we ſhould not. Altum ſapere comes, and we ſwell ſtraight; inſomuch as we cannot bee gotten to accept of this acceptus eſt, to accept of any acceptation, but grow to a higher ſtraine of merit and condignitie, and I wot not what. To pricke this bladder, all is ſhut up with this δεκτὸς. Out of which word, we are to take notice of this: it is neither our feare, nor our workes; all is but GOD'S gracious acceptation. And, but accepted.

And, it is not, as they well obſerve, δεκτέον, but δεκτὸς: not δεκτέον, acceptandus, is to be accepted of Him; as if GOD could neither will nor chooſe: No, it is δεκτὸς only, that is, but acceptabilis, at moſt, but a capacitie that He may be; layes no neceſſitie, that He muſt be accepted.

The Schoolemen expreſſe it well, at times, By non deerit Deus, GOD will not bee wanting to ſuch, will accept them: But, non tenetur Deus, He is not ſo bound, but, if He would, He might refuſe; and that He doth not, it is but of His meere goodneſſe: All are but accepted.

The Fathers, thus; (I name Saint Auguſtine for the Latine:) Hoc habet, non pondus humani meriti, ſed ordo conſilii divini: That thus it is, it is no weight or worth of mans merit; it is but the very order and courſe of GOD'S dealing: His favourable dealing, that and nothing elſe, that there is any accepting at all. The Greeke Fathers, thus; (I name Chryſoſtome for them:) It is καταξίωσις, not ἀξία, (that is) dignatio, not dignitas: dignatio Acceptantis, not dignitas operantis. Digni habebuntur, ſaith the Goſpell, and the Epiſtle both; the Goſpell, Luk. 20. the Epiſtle, 2 Theſſ. 1. GOD counts them worthy, and His ſo counting makes them worthy: makes them ſo, for ſo they are not of themſelves, or without it; but, by it, ſo they are. His taking our workes of righteouſneſſe well in worth, is their worth. Luk. 20. 35. 2 Theſſ. 1. 5.

There was another Centurion (beſide this in the Apoſtle) the Centurion in the Goſpell; the Elders of the Iewes were at dignus eſt, about him; dignified him highly: but, hee indignified himſelfe as faſt, was at his non ſum dignus twice, neither worthy that CHRIST ſhould come to him, nor that hee to CHRIST. And even thus it was ever with all from the beginning: Iob (another timens Deum, his like was not upon earth, yet thus, he) Etſi juſtus fuero non levabo caput, All were he juſt, he would downe with his creſt for all that; and what? Et deprecabor Iudicem meum, and plead nothing, ſtand upon no termes, but deale onely by way of Supplication; and that is the ſafeſt way. And why ſo? For Verebar omnia opera mea (ſaith he) hee durſt not truſt any of them. And why not? For, the continuall dropping of our corruption, upon the webb of our well-doing, ſtaines it ſo, as if he would ſtand ſtreining them, hee that now doth accept them, might juſtly except to them, for many exceptions there lye againſt them. He that takes them might let them lie, as not worth the taking up; For, if he ſhould ranſack them they would ſcarce prove worth the taking up; but yet take them up Hee doth, and reward them; Both, for the praiſe of the glorie of His grace: To the glorie of the praiſe of which grace be all this ſpoken. Luk. 7. 4. Verſe 6. Iob. 1. 8. 10. 15. 9. 15. 9. 28. Ephes 1. 6.

All which tends to this (for our worke is this, our labour this, this is all in all, to get men to doe well, and yet not weene well of their well-doing:) To joine firſt, timet and operatur, to feare, and yet to doe good; and when we have done good, yet to feare, with Iob, for Davids reaſon, Cognoſcimus imperfectum noſtrum. Then to joyne againe Operatur, and acceptus eſt. For, that is it if wee could hit on it: we cannot; but, that is it, though. For thinke you, wee can get men to this? No: doe wee evill, wee will not know it, we excuſe, we leſſen it. Do we well, we know it ſtraight; Nay we over-know, and over-priſe it. No remedie, merit it muſt be, and hire it muſt be: Reward, we cannot skill of; Acceptus eſt is nothing, Accepted will not ſerve: we will know, how we ſhall be accepted, of merit or of grace. Fond men! ſo we be accepted, though of grace, are we not well? What deſire we more, but to be taken and not refuſed? The Law, that ſaith: Say not, It is for my righteouſneſſe: The Prophets ſay, It is not for your ſakes: The Apoſtle ſaith, If you ſeeke to eſtabliſh your owne righteouſneſſe, you are gone. Yea, CHRIST Himſelfe ſaith, If you talke much of it (with the Phariſee) LORD, this I am, and this I doe, there is not the pooreſt Publican that goes by the way, but, he ſhall be Iuſtified before you. And therefore be entreated, I pray you, to accept of acceptus eſt: that ſets all ſafe; that, brings all to GOD, and there leaves it.

Deut. 9. 4. Ezek. 36. 22. Rom. 10. 3. Luk. 8. 11. 14.

For, if this fearer, this worker be accepted and not in himſelfe, in whom then? who is it? The Apoſtle tells us directly, He hath made us accepted in His beloved, His beloved Sonne: So Paul. And Saint Peter immediately in the very next words (that follow upon theſe) You know the word, the word of the Word, that was in the beginning and made all, and that in the fulneſſe of time was ſent and healed all; Miſit Verbum & ſanavit eos. In Him and through Him all are accepted that have had, or ſhall have the honor and happineſſe ever ſo to be. In whom then, we are accepted, we ſee.

Ephes. 1. 6. Pſal. 107. 20.

To what end accepted.

Now laſtly, to what; and ſo an end. That being ſo accepted, or received (whether you will, both are one) you may receive, what? plaine it is, it followes, the Sacrament. But they to receive the firſt Sacrament, that of Baptiſme; for they were yet in their Paganiſme, un-baptized. But, they that are Chriſtians alreadie, and paſt the firſt, there remaineth for them to receive, none but the ſecond. And that then, is it. And, that, bound they are to receive. For, though by ſpeciall priviledge ſome are aſperſi Spiritu quos aqua myſtica non tetigit, Sprinkled with the HOLY GHOST, before they had the Sprinkling of water; of which number was Cornelius, and theſe in the Text: though, while they were at the Sermon, the HOLY GHOST came upon them; yet, to the Sacrament they came though, wee ſee. That, was to them, and is, to us all, the Seale of GODS acceptation. That firſt, was theirs; but the chiefe and laſt, is this of ours.

For, this is indeed the true receiving, when one is received to the Table, to eat and drinke, to take his repaſt there: yea ad accipiendum in quo acceptus eſt, to take, and to take into Him, that body, by the oblation whereof, we are all ſanctified, and that bloud, in which, we have all remiſſion of ſinnes. In that, ended they: in this, let us end.

Heb. 10. 10. Ephes. 1. 7.

And this accepting we deſire of GOD: and deſiring it in an acceptable time, He will heare us; and, this is that acceptable time. For, if the yeare of Pentecoſt, the fiftieth yeare, were the acceptable yeare, as Luk. 4. 21. then, the day of Pentecoſt the fiftieth day, this day, is the acceptable day for the ſame reaſon. Truely acceptable, as the Day, whereon the Holy Ghoſt was firſt received; and whereon wee may receive Him now againe: Whereon, acceptus eſt is fulfilled both waies: we, of Him received to grace; and He of us, His fleſh and bloud, and with them, His Spirit. He receiveth us to grace; and we receive of Him grace, and with it, the influence of His Holy Spirit, which ſhall ſtill follow us, and never leave us, till we be accepti indeed, that is, received up to Him, in His kingdome of glorie. Whither, bleſſed are they that ſhall be received.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITE-HALL, on the IV. of Iune A. D. MDCXX, being WHIT-SVNDAY.

()

I IOHN CHAP. V. VER. VI.

Hic eſt, qui venit per aquam & ſanguinem, IESVS CHRISTVS: non in aqua ſolum, ſed in aqua & ſanguine. Et Spiritus eſt, qui teſtificatur, quoniam SPIRITVS eſt veritas.

This is that IESVS CHRIST, that came by water and bloud: not by water onely, but by water and bloud. And it is the Spirit that beareth witneſſe; for, the Spirit is truth.

THIS is IESVS CHRIST; and it is the Spirit. So, the verſe (you ſee) linketh CHRIST and the Spirit together; is a paſſage, from the one to the other. Linketh them, and ſo (conſequently) linketh this Feaſt of the Spirit preſent, with thoſe of CHRIST that are gone before; and under one, ſheweth the convenience of having the Spirit, an article in our Creed; and of having this day, a feaſt, in our Calendar.

For, though CHRIST have done all, that Hee had to doe; all is not done, that is to doe, till the Spirit come too. Wee have nothing to ſhew; we want our teſte; a ſpeciall part of our evidence is lacking: that when all is done, if this be not, nothing is done. CHRIST without water, water without without bloud; His water and bloud, and Hee, without the Spirit, availe us nothing. The Spirit we are to have: and, this day we have it: and, for the having it this day, we keepe a Feaſt. As thoſe hitherto, for Chriſt, complementum legis; ſo, this, for the Holy Ghoſt, complementum Evangelii, which was not complete, donec complerentur dies Pentecoſtes, till the daies of Pentecoſt were fulfilled: till this day was come and gone.

Saint Iohn is every where all for love. Here, in this Chapter (I know not how) he is hit upon faith. Which, with him, is rare: ſo, the more to be made of. Specially in this age, wherein it is growen the vertue of chiefe requeſt. And indeed ἡ χαριεν τι πιστις ἔστιν, ἐαν πιστις ᾖ, an excellent vertue is faith, if it be faith. For, as there is (ſaith Saint Paul)
1 Tim. 6. 20. γνωσεως ψευδωνυμου, a knowledge falſly ſo called, ſo is there a faith: for, faith is it ſelfe but a kind of knowledge.

How ſhall we then make faith, of our faith? Of it ſelfe, it is but a bare act (faith) a thing indifferent: the vertue, and the value of it is, from the object it beleeveth in; if that be right, all is right. And, that is right, if it have for this object, not IESVS CHRIST barely; but (as Saint Iohn ſpeaketh) That IESVS CHRIST. That IESVS CHRIST, is ſomewhat a ſtrange ſpeech, as if there were another. Is there ſo? Yes (II Cor. XI. V.) ye have alium IESVM, and (Gal. I. VII.) aliud Evangelium; Not that; but, another IESVS: Not this; but, another Goſpell.

And as, not that, but another IESVS; So CHRIST Himſelfe tells us, you ſhall have, not that, but another CHRIST. Another, nay many other: yet there is but one true, Mat. XXIV. XXIV. Lo here is CHRIST, lo there He is. Go into the deſart, there you ſhall have Him: Get you to ſuch a conventicle, and there you ſhall not miſſe of Him. Go but to one Citie, I could name, you ſhall have Chriſts enough; and ſcarce a true one, among them all.

Ier. 15. 19. Well then, what ſhall wee doe, to ſever the precious from the vile; That IESVS CHRIST, from others; ſet the Hic eſt ille, upon the right CHRIST? This (ſaith Saint Iohn:) Theſe two wayes: 1 That IESVS CHRIST, that comes in water and bloud jointly; not, in either alone, Hic eſt ille: If, but in one, hee is another IESVS. 2 That Ieſus that hath the Spirit to beare Him witneſſe, is the true; this Witneſſe if He want, Hic non eſt ille. Vnder one, we ſhall learne CHRIST aright. For, as one may learn a falſe CHRIST, ſo may he the true CHRIST falſly. You have not ſo learned CHRIST, ſaith the Apoſtle (Epheſ. 4. 20.) that is, not amiſſe, you have not; meaning, ſome other had. And, as learne CHRIST aright, ſo learne to doe the Spirit his right: not to ſhoot him off, but know, Hee is to have a chiefe Holy day, in our Faſti, as Hee hath a part, and a principall part, in the Teſte of whoſoever ſhall bee ſaved.

The Summe. The Summe is, three Items we have: 1. That wee take not Pſeudo-Chriſtum pro Chriſto: the falſe Chriſt for the true; that is, one that comes in His name, but is not He.

2 Neither, when we have the true one, that we take not Semi-Chriſtum pro Chriſto, a moity or part of CHRIST, for the whole.

3 When we have the whole, that we take Him not, without His Teſte (and that is the Spirit:) For, as good not take Him at all.

The Diviſion I. Three parts I would lay forth: 1 There is CHRISTS part. 2 There is the Spirits part. 3 There is the Sacraments part. CHRISTS part, His double comming, in 1 water, and 2 bloud. In it, theſe: 1 That Chriſt was ſo to come. 2 That Chriſt did ſo come. 3 Not onely did, but doth ſo come dayly to us. 4 As Hee comes to us in both, ſo we to come to Him for both; and (ever) to take heed of the error, of either alone, of turning non ſolum, into ſolum.

II. Then the Spirits part. 1 Of His witneſſe. 2 Of the truth of it. 1. Of His witneſſe, 1 That a witneſſe there is to be. 2 That a witneſſe there is. 3 Nay, not one, but three. 4 Of which, the Spirit is one and the chiefe witneſſe: His witneſſe to 1 Ieſus, to 2 Chriſt that came came, 3 to the water, to the 4 bloud, He came in. This, of His witneſſe. Then, of the Truth of it; and withall, how to diſcerne the Spirit, that is, the Truth.

And laſt, the reverſall to this. That, as not theſe, without the Spirit; So, not the Spirit, without theſe (that is) not without the Sacraments, which are the monuments, and pledges of theſe. And ſo, that we endeavour, that the Spirit, on this day (the day of the Spirit) may come to us, and give His witneſſe, that CHRIST is come to us, and come to us in them; in them both; to our comfort both heere, and eternally. III.

THus it is written, and thus it behoved, that He that was to come, Ieſus the Saviour of the world, when Hee came, ſhould come in water and bloud. His name was ſo called (Ieſus) ſaith the Angell, to ſhew He ſhould ſave His people from their ſinnes. To ſave us from them, by taking them away: For, Hic eſt omnis fructus (ſaith Eſai, and it is a ground with us,) All the fruit wee have, is the taking away of our ſin. Take that away, the reſt will follow of it ſelfe: that (indeed) is all in all. I. Chriſts Part: 1 That He was to come in water and bloud. Mat.1.21. Eſa.27.9.

To take away ſinne, two things are to be taken away. For, in ſinne, are theſe two: 1 Reatus, and 2 Macula (as all Divines agree) the guilt, and the ſoyle or ſpot. The guilt, to which Puniſhment is due: The ſpot, whereby we grow loathſome in GODS eyes, and even in mens, too. For, even before them, Shame and Reproach follow ſinne. Take theſe two away, and ſinne is gone. And there is no people, under heaven, but have ſenſe of theſe two; and no religion is, or ever was, but laboured to remove them both.

To take away ſoyle, water is moſt fit: To take away guilt, bloud. No puniſhment, for any guilt, goes further than bloud. Therfore had the heathen their luſtrations, for the ſoyle; which were ever by water (--donec me flumine vivo Abluero;) and their expiations, for the guilt, by ſhedding of bloud ever (ſanguine placâſtis;) without which they held no remiſſion of ſinnes.

The Iewes, they likewiſe had their ſprinkling water for the uncleaneſſe: had their ſlaine ſacrifice, the bloud whereof done on their poſts, the deſtroyer paſſed by them, the guilt by it being firſt taken away. Num.8.7. Exod.12.22.

But the Prophet tells us, No water (no, not ſnow-water, and put to it nitre and Borith and fullers ſcope, never ſo much) can enter into the ſoule, to take away the ſteines of it. And the Apoſtle he tells us: It was impoſſible, the bloud of bulls or goates ſhould ſatisfie for the ſinnes of men. The water had not the vertue, to get out thoſe ſpots: nor the bloud, the value, to make ſatisfaction to GOD, for mans treſpaſſe. Ier.2.22. Heb.10.4.

Donec venit qui venturus erat, Till He came that was to come; Shilo, with a bloud, and a water, which (becauſe it was the bloud and water of the Sonne of GOD; and ſo of GOD) by his divine power, infuſed into both, gave the water ſuch a piercing force, and gave the bloud ſo ineſtimable high a value, as was able to worke both: to put an end to that which neither the waſhings, nor offerings of Nature, or of the Law could ridde us of. Thus, in water and bloud was He to come, that was to take ſinne away. Gen.49.10.

Thus was He to come, and thus did He come: did come diverſe wayes. In bloud, the bloud of His Circumciſion; In water, the water of His Baptiſme. Began ſo, and ſo ended: In water, the water of His ſtrong crying and teares, whereby He made ſupplication to GOD for us; in bloud, the bloud of His paſſion, the bloud of Gethſemane, His bloudy ſweat; the bloud of Gabbatha, of the ſcourges and thornes; the bloud of Golgotha, of His hands and feet digged. Thus came He. 2 That He did ſo come. Mat.26.36. Ioh.19.13. 17.

Yet is it none of theſe, Saint Iohn pointeth to: (theſe were at ſeverall times:) but, he points to His comming in both together at once. This place of the Epiſtle, referrs to that place of the Goſpell, where at once, with one blow, His ſide being opened, there

Ioh.19.34. Zach.9.11. Zach.13.1. came forth bloud and water both. Bloud, Sanguis Teſtamenti ſaith Zach. 9. the Bloud of His Teſtament, whereby He ſet His guilty priſoners free. Water (ſaith the ſame Zacharie 13.) fons Domui Iſraël; a fountaine which He opened to the Houſe of Iſraël, for ſinne, and for uncleaneſſe. The one, bloud, the λυτρον, the ranſome or price of the taking away the guilt; the other, water, the λουτρον, laver of our new birth, from our originall corruption.

Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina ſacramenta (ſaith Auguſtine.) Theſe are (not two of the Sacraments; ſo there might bee more, but) the twin-Sacraments of the Church. So, but two of that kind; two famous memorialls left us; in Baptiſme, of the water; in the Cup, of the New Teſtament, of the bloud, He then came in.

3 That he comes ſo ſtill. Thus did CHRIST come: did and doth ſtill. For the word is not ἐλήλυθώς, referring to the time paſt, but ἐλθών, which reſpecteth even the preſent alſo. Came not once; but ſtill and ever commeth ſo. The water ſtill runnes; for He opened a fountaine never to be drawen dry; And His maſſa ſanguinis is not ſpent neither; For, it is ſanguis æterni fœderis, and ſo æternus: of the everlaſting Covenant; and ſo, it ſelfe laſting for ever.

Heb. 13.20.

And that, this His comming to us, hee meanes, the order ſheweth. For, when it came from Him, it came in another order; bloud came firſt, and then water: ſee the Goſpell. But here in the Epiſtle, when He comes to us; water is firſt, and then bloud.

Ioh.19.34. Bloud and water, the order quoad ſe: Water and bloud, quoad nos. Ever to us, in water firſt.

But what meanes this, not in water onely, but in water and bloud? To ſay [in water and bloud] was plaine enough, one would thinke. Our rule is in Logike, Non Sufficit alterum, oportet utrumque fieri in Copulativis. Our rule in Divinitie, What God hath joyned, no man preſume to ſever. Yet, when He had ſayd, in water and bloud; He comes over with them againe, with His non in aquâ ſolùm, Not in water onely, but in water and bloud. What meanes this, but to make it yet more plain, that there might bee no miſtaking, no ſlipping of the collar; that one of them will not ſerve our turne; but, as once He came, ſo ſtill and ever we is to come in them both.

4 That wee are to come to Him for both. And as Hee to come to us, ſo we to come to Him. He to us in both; we to Him for both. Hee not to us, in either alone; we not to Him, for either alone. For, if for either alone we make ſuperfluous His comming in the other; we queſtion His wiſedome, as if He came in more than needed, as if any thing He came in, might well enough be ſpared. No, we need both, we have uſe of both, and ſo to come to Him for them both.

Apoc.2.24. Among the profunda Satanæ, this was one; when he could not κωλυσῆν keepe Him out: by a new Stratagem, he ſought λύειν τὸν Ἰησοῦν, ſolvere Ieſum (as the Fathers read the verſe of the Chapter next before) that is, to take Him in peeces. When he could not prevaile in ſetting up a falſe; he ſet ſome on worke, to take in ſunder the true.

Was it not thus? Did they not ſolvere, diſſolve, take in ſunder His Natures: made Him come as onely man; as Samoſatenus: made Him come, as onely GOD; as Sabellius? Diſſolved they not His perſon; made Him come in two, as Neſtorius? And, is not this (here) a plaine diſſolving alſo? He comming intirely in both, to take Him by halves, take of Him what they liſt, what they thinke will ſerve their turnes, and leave the other, and let it lye? So take pars pro toto, a peece of Ieſus for the whole, as if they meant to be ſaved by Synecdoche.

Which very taking Him in peeces, makes Him, that hee is not the true. For if the comming in both twaine, make Him Hic eſt ille; the taking away of either, turnes Him into alium IESVM; and ſo, Hic non eſt ille. This you may call IESVS CHRIST, but this is not that IESVS CHRIST, Saint Iohn his ἐπιστολὴ taught us. There was a ſort of Heretikes, in the Primitive Church, were ſo all for water, cared ſo little for His comming in bloud, as they miniſtered the Communion in nothing but water, and are therefore called Hydropocaſtatæ, or Aquarii. There were others: But it were a world to rake up old errors: what need wee? Have we not now, that frame to themſelves a CHRIST without water, or a CHRIST without bloud, and ſo ſeem to hold

aqua ſola, or ſolus ſanguis, againſt Saint Iohns, non in ſolâ (flat.) 1

See you ſome, that powre out themſelves into all riot, and follow uncleaneſſe even with greedineſſe? CHRIST in water would doe well for ſuch; and they care leaſt for it; by their good will would have none come upon them; would not be clean, would bee as they are, as ſwine in their wallow all their life long. No water, they; but bloud, aſmuch as you will. Frame to themſelves a CHRIST without water, all in bloud. Eph.4.19.

This is that CHRIST, that commeth: How comes He? what brings He? Comes He in bloud, brings He good ſtore of that, that we may ſtrike off the guilt of our old ſcore? He is welcome comming ſo. But He comes with water too. Nay, they can ſpare that (with the Gergeſites, to pray Him to be gone, to depart from their coaſts) they love bloud without water, are all for comfort (as they call it) nothing for cleanneſſe of life. In ſolo ſanguine, theſe. Mat.8.34.

See you ſome other (not many, yet ſome) carefull to their weake power, to containe themſelves, yet through humane frailty overtaken otherwhile: CHRIST in bloud comes for theſe, for theſe in ſpeciall, and alas they dare not come neer it (not His bloud) as utterly unworthy of it. Theſe are but few, in compariſon of thoſe other, the ſoli-ſanguines. Yet, ſome ſuch there are, and for them hath Saint Iohn directed the letter of this Text in this order which it ſtands; that CHRIST came not in water alone, but came in bloud, too. 1 2

Timorous trembling conſciences: thinke, they have never water enough: if they find about them any unclean thing, they are quit caſt downe, utterly dejected ſtraight: as if that CHRIST were Iohn Baptiſt, that came in water alone: nay, were turned into Moſes, that had his name of being taken out of the water; as if He came all in water, nay were all water, had not a drop of bloud in Him. Theſe ſeem to hold in aquâ ſolâ; whereas CHRIST hath both water and bloud, of each alike much, no leſſe of the one, than of the other: Came in bloud, and came in it for them, and to them doth moſt readily applie it, that make moſt ſpare of it.

But, the greater number by farre are thoſe, in the other extreame, that are nothing timorous, farre enough from that; diſſolute, and care not how many foule blotches they have, ſo they may have the guilt and puniſhment taken away: heare, there is remiſſion of ſinnes in His bloud; ſo, lye at His veines continually like horſe-leeches, ſo as if it were poſſible, they would not leave a drop of bloud in Him. As for his water, they have no uſe of it, nor deſire not to have any, let that run waſt; are all for bloud, would not care, if all the water were dreined from Him, nay if (as the waters of Ægypt) all His were turned into bloud. Forgiven, that they would be; Cleane they care not to bee: aſmuch bloud, as little water as you will. Both theſe would be looked to, but this later more, as the predominant errour of our age, wherein the water is even at the low-water-marke. Now, for theſe, wee turne the non ſolum (as by good warrant wee may) both wayes; It is equally true, Not in bloud alone (heare you) but in bloud and water. Will you have no water? then muſt you have no CHRIST: For CHRIST came in water. And further we adde, that as in water and bloud both, ſo in water firſt (for ſo it lieth in the Text) and that which ſtands firſt, wee to paſſe thorough firſt; water, quoad nos, is the firſt before bloud: There to beginne in GODS name. Take that with you too.

They then, that have learned CHRIST aright are to come to Him for both. With the woman of Samaria, LORD give us of this water: with them of Capernaum, LORD, give us of this bread, of this Cup of the New Teſtament in Thy bloud. To come to Him for bloud, for the forgiveneſſe of our ſinnes through faith in His bloud. To come to Him for water aſwell, for the taking out of the ſteynes. Yea (even as Eſai ſayd) Haurietis aquas cum gaudio de fontibus Salvatoris, even with joy to draw waters from the fountaines of our Saviour: with more joy ſo draw water, than to draw bloud from Him. Ioh. 4.15. 6.34. 1 Cor. 11.25. Eſay.12.3.

But (indeed) to looke well into the matter, they cannot be ſeparate; they are mixt; either is in other. There is a mixture of the bloud in the water; there is ſo, of the water in in the bloud: we can miniſter no water, without bloud: nor bloud, without water. In baptiſme we are waſhed with water: That water is not without bloud. The bloud ſerves inſtead of nitre. He hath waſhed us from our ſinnes in His bloud (Apoc. 1. 5.) (waſhed.) They made their robes white in the bloud of the Lamb (Apoc. 7. 14.) No waſhing, no whiting, by water, without bloud. And, in the Euchariſt, we are made drinke of the bloud of 1 Ioh. 1 7. the New Teſtament: but, in that bloud, there is water: for the bloud of CHRIST purifieth us from our ſinnes. Now, to purifie, is a vertue properly belonging to water, which yet is in the bloud: and purifying referres to ſpots, not to guilt, properly. So, either is in other; Therefore, the conceit of ſeparation, let it alone for ever.

To take heed then of dreining CHRISTS water from His bloud; or abſtracting His bloud from His water; of bringing in the Reſtringent (ſola) into either. Every one of us, for his owne part, thus to doe. But howſoever men frame phanſies to themſelves (as frame they will, doe what we can) that our doctrine be looked to; wee are not to teach IESVS CHRIST, but That IESVS CHRIST, that thus came in both. That our Divinitie then, on the one ſide, bee not wateriſh, without all heart or comfort; preſenting CHRIST in water onely, to make feare, where none is. Nor, on the other, that we frame not our ſelves a ſanguine Divinitie, voyd of feare quite, and bring in CHRIST all in bloud, bloud and nothing elſe; with little water, or none at all; for feare of Ex nimiâ ſpe deſperatio.

Gal. 3. 8. Acts 15. 9. Rom. 8. 20. 1 Ioh. 3. 3. Faith, as it juſtifieth (ſaith Saint Paul;) there is bloud: So it purifieth the heart (ſaith Saint Peter;) there is water. Hope, as it ſaveth (ſaith Saint Paul;) bloud: So it cleanſeth (ſaith Saint Iohn;) water. In vaine we flatter our ſelves, if they doe the one, and not the other. Doe wee make grace of none effect? that, we may not (Gal. 2. ult.) Doe we make the Law of none effect, by faith? that, we may not neither (Rom. 3. 10.) not, this day ſpecially, the Feaſt of the Law, and Spirit, both: but rather eſtabliſh it Beſt, if it could be ſet right, the Song of Moſes and of the Lambe: it is the Apoc. 15. 4. harmonie of heaven. If we teach Ne peccetis (water;) To teach alſo (bloud) Siquis autem peccaverit (with Saint Iohn.) If we ſay Salvus factus es (bloud;) to ſay Noli amplius
Rom. 15. 34. 1 Ioh. 2. 1. Ioh. 5. 14. peccare (water) withall, with CHRIST Himſelfe.

This is that IESVS CHRIST, and the true doctrine of Him: neither dilata, and ſo evill for the heart; nor tentans caput, and ſo fuming up to the head: Neither Scammoniate, tormenting the conſcience; nor yet Opiate, ſtupifying it, and making it ſenſeleſſe. And ſo much, for CHRISTS double comming.

II.

The Spirits part.

Well, when CHRIST is come, and thus come, may wee be gone, have we done? Done! we are yet in the midſt of the verſe; before we make an end of it, it muſt bee Whitſontide. The Spirit is to come too. So, a new qui venit; that comes in both thoſe, and comes in the Spirit, beſides. And a new non ſolum; not in water and bloud only, but in the Spirit withall.

Ioh. 19. 30. Not, that CHRIST ſaid not truly, Conſummatum eſt, that He hath not done all.
1 His Witneſſe. Yes, to doe that was to be done, CHRIST was enough; needs no ſupplie; The Spirit comes not, to doe; comes but to teſtifie. That, inter alia, is one of His Offices.

a A witneſſe there is to be. And, a Witneſſe is requiſite. There is no matter of weight with us, if it be ſped authentically (eſpecially a Teſtament) but it is with a Teſte. And GOD doth none of His great workes, but ſo: of which, this Comming is one, even the greateſt of all.
Acts 14. 17. Neither of His Teſtaments, without one. As GOD in nature left not Himſelfe without witneſſe (ſaith the Apoſtle:) So neither CHRIST, in Grace. As then, in the Eſay 8. 20. Old Teſtament, Ad Legem & teſtimonium (ſaith Eſay 8.) So, in the New, Ad Evangelium & teſtimonium, to the Goſpell, to CHRIST and the teſtimonie, calls Saint Iohn here. CHRIST alſo to have his Teſte: We to call for it; and if it be called for of us, to be able to ſhew it.

A wit-

A witneſſe there needeth then, and a witneſſe there is. One, nay three. In ore duorum; that is, in every matter, nothing without two at leaſt. But in this, ſo maine, ſo high a matter, GOD would enlarge the number; have it in ore trium, have it full; no fewer than three: three, to His part; three, to ours.

b A witneſſe there is: nay, three. Deut. 17. 6.

At the ordering of it in heaven, three there were, the 1 Father, the 2 Word, and 3 the Spirit: that the whole Trinitie might be equally intereſſed in the accompliſhment of the worke of our Salvation, and it paſſe through all their hands. And at the ſpeeding it in earth, three more: 1 The Spirit, and 2 Water, and 3 Bloud to anſwere them, that all might goe by a Trinitie, that Holy, Holy, Holy, might be thrice repeated. The truth herein anſwereth to the type. For under the Law, nothing was held perfectly hallowed, till it paſſed three, the 1 cleanſing water, firſt; the 2 ſprinkling of bloud, ſecond; 3 and laſt, that the holy oyle were upon it too (the Holy oyle, the Holy Ghoſts type:) but when any thing annointed with all three, then had it His perfect halydome; then it was holy indeed. And, even ſo paſſe we through three hands, all. 1 Gods, as men: Water notes the Creation: the heavens are of water, and if they, the reſt. Gods, as men; 2 Chriſts, as Chriſtian men, Bloud notes the redemption: 3 And the Spirits, as Spirituall men, which pertaines to all. If any be Spirituall, He knowes this: and you that be Spirituall doe this (ſaith the Apoſtle.) For, Chriſtians that be animales Spiritum non habentes, Saint Iude tells us, there is no great reckoning to be made of them.

Gal. 6. 1. Iude 19.

To let the other goe. The Spirit is a witneſſe, to IESVS CHRIST, that came in water and bloud: Witneſſe, to IESVS CHRIST, that came: witneſſe, to His water and bloud, He came in. In a witneſſe it is required, He be Teſtis idoneus: will you ſee, quàm idoneus, how apt, how every way agreeing? The Spirit and Ieſus agree: Ieſus was conceived by the Spirit. The Spirit and Chriſt agree: in the word Chriſt, is the Spirit; For [CHRIST] is annointed. Annointed with what? With the Holy Ghoſt, the true Vnction, and the truth of all unctions whatſoever. The Spirit and water agree: the Spirit moved on the face of the waters. The Spirit and bloud agree: The Spirit of life is in the bloud; the veſſells of it, the arteries, runne along with the texture of the veines, all the body over.

c The Spirit a witneſſe. 1 To Ieſus Chriſt that came.

2 To the water and bloud, He came in. Gen. 1. 2. Levit. 19. 11.

To His comming, this Spirit agreeth alſo. When He came, as Ieſus, the Spirit conceived Him. When He came, as CHRIST, the Spirit annointed Him. When He came, in water, at His Baptiſme, the Spirit was there: came downe in the ſhape of a Dove, reſted, abode on Him. When He came, in bloud, at His Paſſion, there too: It was the eternall Spirit of GOD, by which He offered Himſelfe without ſpot unto GOD (Heb 9. 4.) So, the moſt fit that can be, to beare witneſſe to all; Præſens interfuit, & vidit, & audivit, was preſent, heard, and ſaw, was acquainted with all that paſſed: none can ſpeake to the point ſo well as He.

To His comming.

Ioh. 1. 32.

The Spirit is a witneſſe, is true every way: But, why is it ſaid, It is the Spirit that beareth witneſſe, ſeeing they both (water and bloud) beare it too; it is water, it is bloud, that beare witneſſe alſo. They (indeed) are witneſſes: but, it is the Spirit, He it is that is the principall witneſſe, and principally to be regarded, before the reſt. Here, He comes in laſt; but He is (indeed) firſt; and ſo as firſt, is placed at the eight verſe, where they are orderly reckoned up. And good reaſon. He is one of the three, both above in heaven, and beneath in earth: third, there above; firſt, here beneath: a witneſſe, in both Courts; admitted ad jus teſtis in both, for His ſpeciall credit in both: the medius terminus (as it were) betweene heaven and earth, betweene God and man.

The Spirit the chiefe witneſſe.

Beſides it is ſayd, It is He, He it is that beareth witneſſe. For, it is neither of the other, will do us any good without Him: the whole weight lieth upon Him. Not the water without the Spirit, it is but nudum & egenum elementum. Not the bloud without the Spirit, no more than the fleſh without the Spirit, non prodeſt quicquam (as ſaid He, whoſe the fleſh and bloud was, CHRIST Himſelfe.)

Gal. 4. 9. Ioh. 6. 63.

Will you ſee a proofe without it, CHRIST came to Simon Magus in water, he was baptized: CHRIST came to Iudas, in bloud, he was a communicant: but Spirit there came none, to teſtifie: they were both never the better. The better? nay the worſe: Simon periſhed in the gall of bitterneſſe; Iudas bibit mortem de fonte vitæ, Acts 18. 13. Mat. 16. Acts 8. 23.

1 Cor.10.16. from the cup of bleſsing dranke downe his owne bane. All, for want of Et ſpiritus eſt. So is it, with the word, and with any meanes elſe.

Ioh 4.14. Ioh.6.17. But let the teſtimonie of the Spirit come, the water becomes a well, ſpringing up to eternitie; the fleſh and bloud, meat that periſheth not, but endureth to life everlaſting.

And even in nature, we ſee this: Water, if it be not aqua viva, have not a ſpirit to move it, and make it runne, it ſtands and putrifies: and bloud, if no ſpirit in it, it congeales, and growes corrupt and foule, as the bloud of a dead man. The ſpirit helpeth this, and upon good reaſon doth it. For, CHRIST being conceived by the Spirit, it was moſt meet, all of Chriſt ſhould be conceived the ſame way. That which conceived Him, ſhould impregnate His water, ſhould animate His bloud, ſhould give the vivificat, the life and vigor, to them both. It is the Spirit then, that giveth the witneſſe.

3 The truth of His witneſſe. Ioh.14.6. Now, in a Witneſſe, above all it is required, he be true: the Spirit is ſo true, as He is the Truth it ſelfe. The Spirit, the truth? Why CHRIST ſaith of Himſelfe, I am the truth. All the better: for, Verum vero conſonat, one truth will well ſort with; will uphold, will make proofe one of another, as theſe two doe prove either other reciprocally. The Spirit, CHRISTS proofe: CHRIST, the Spirits. CHRIST,

1 Ioh.4.3. the Spirits: Every ſpirit that confeſſeth not CHRIST, is not the true ſpirit. The Spirit CHRISTS: CHRIST, if He have not the Teſte of the Spirit, is not the true CHRIST. Alwaies, the Truth is the beſt witneſſe. And, if He be the Truth, on His teſte, you may beare your ſelfe. Not ſo, on water, or bloud: without Him, they may well deceive us, and be falſa and fallacia, as wanting the Truth, if He, if the Spirit be wanting.

That truth to be known. It will then much concerne us, to be ſure, the Spirit, on whoſe teſtimonie we are thus wholly to relye, that that ſpirit be the truth. And, it is the maine point of all, to be able to diſcerne the Spirit, that is the truth: becauſe, as there is a Spirit of truth,

1 Ioh.4.6. 2 Cor. 11.4. ſo is there a ſpirit or error abroad in the world; yea many ſuch ſpirits: and the Apoſtle who tells us of alium IESVM, in the ſame verſe tells us of alium ſpiritum, too. We be then to trie, which ſpirit is the truth; that ſo the ſpirit on whoſe witneſſe we reſt our ſelves, be the truth. How take we notice of the Spirit? How knew they the Angel was come downe into the poole of Bethesda, but by the ſtirring and moving of the water? So by ſtirring up in us ſpirituall motions, holy purpoſes and deſires, is the Spirits comming knowen. Specially, if they doe not vaniſh againe. For

By His ſpirituall motions. Ioh. 5.8. if they doe, then was it ſome other flatuous matter, which will quiver in the veines, (and unskilfull people call it the life-bloud;) but the Spirit it was not. The Spirits motion, the pulſe, is not for a while, and then ceaſeth; but is perpetuall, holds as long as life holds, though intermittent ſometime, for ſome little ſpace.

By newneſſe of life. Yet hold we it not ſafe, to lay overmuch weight upon good motions, which may come of divers cauſes, and of which (good motions) there are as many in hell, as in heaven. The ſureſt way is to lay it on that, our SAVIOVR and His Apoſtles ſo often lay it, that is, on Spiritus vivificat. The life is ever the beſt indicant ſigne of the Spirit. Novum ſuperveniſſe Spiritum, nova vitæ ratio demonſtrat, that a new Spirit is come, a new courſe of life is the beſt demonſtration.

Ioh. 6.63. 2 Cor.3 6.

The notes of that life. Ioh. 3.8. 2 Tim.4.1. 1 Cor.12.11. Now, life is beſt knowen, by vitall actions. Three the Scripture counteth: 1 Spiritus ubi vult ſpirat, by breath: 2 Spiritus manifeſtè loquitur, by ſpeech: 3 Omnia hæc operatur unus idemque Spiritus, by the worke: (theſe three.)

1 Breath. 1 The neereſt and moſt proper note of the Spirit is ſpiration, or breathing. In breathing there is a double act: 1 there is a Syſtole, a drawing in of the ayre (and that is cold) agreeth with CHRIST in water: there comes a coole breath ever from the water. 2 And there is a Diaſtole, a ſending forth of the breath; and that (we know) is warme, and agreeth with CHRIST in bloud. For, bloud is it, that ſendeth a warme vapour into all the limmes.

Agreeable to theſe two, have you the two Spirits, which upon the matter, are but the two acts of one and the ſame Spirit: 1 Inſpired, the Spirit of feare, Eſa. 11. 2. The feare of GOD. 2 Out-breathed, the Spirit of faith, 2 *Cor.*4.12. Faith in CHRIST. Feare comes in water: ſo ſaith Salomon; the Feare of GOD is fons vitæ, the welſpring of of life (*Pro.*14.27.) that is water. Faith comes in bloud; per fidem in ſanguinem Ipſius (*Rom.*3.25.) through faith in His bloud. So, is every one that is borne of the Spirit. And to blow out faith ſtill, and never draw in feare, is ſuſpicious, is not ſafe. The true ſpiration, the breathing aright, conſiſting of theſe two, is a ſigne of the right Spirit.

The next ſigne in the ſame verſe too: And you heare the noiſe of it. For, ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, the Spirit ſpeakes evidently; that is, His noiſe and ſpeech is evidently to be diſtinguiſhed, from thoſe of other Spirits. His comming in tongues this day, ſheweth no leſſe. Which ſigne of ſpeech doth beſt and moſt properly ſort here, with a witneſſe. For, a witneſſe, what he hath to teſtifie, ſpeakes it out vocally. 2 Speech. Ioh. 3.8.

What noiſe then is heard from us? What breathe we? What ſpeakes the Spirit manifeſtly from our mouthes? If curſing, and bitterneſſe, and many a foule oath, If this noiſe be heard from us: If we breathe minas & cædes, bluſter out threatning and ſlaying (that noyſe:) If σαπρὸς λόγος, rotten, corrupt, obſcene communication come out of our mouthes; we are of Galilee, and our very ſpeech bewrayeth us. This, is not the breath of the Spirit; this, He ſpeakes not: evidently He ſpeakes it not. It is not the tongue of heaven, this: Not ſicut dedit Spiritus eloqui, no utterance of the Spirits giving. Some of Chriſts water would doe well, to waſh theſe out of our mouthes. The ſpeech ſounding of the Spirit, is a ſigne of the true Spirit. Acts 9.1. Epheſ. 4. 29. Mar. 14.70. Acts 2.4.

The laſt (but the ſureſt of all) omnia hæc operatur Spiritus. And the worke is as cleerely to be diſtinguiſhed, as the ſpeech. Each Spirit hath his proper worke, and is knowne by it. No man ever ſaw the workes of the Devill come from the Spirit of God. Be not deceived, the workes of uncleaneſſe come from no Spirit, but the uncleane ſpirit. The workes of Cain, from the ſpirit of envie: The workes of Demas, from the ſpirit of the world. All the groſſe errors of our life from the ſpirit of error. But this, this is the Spirit of Truth: And the breath, the ſpeech, the operations of Him, beare witneſſe, that He is ſo. Now, if He will depoſe, that the water and bloud, Christ came in, He came in, for us; and we our parts in them: in them, and in them both: and ſo depoſing, if we feele His breath, heare His ſpeech, ſee His workes according, we may receive His witneſſe then: For, His witneſſe is true. 3 Action. Acts 2.4. 1 Cor. 12. 11. Matt. 12.43. Iam. 4.5. 1 Cor. 2. 12.

Now, that upon this day, the day of the Spirit, the Spirit may come and beare this witneſſe, to Chriſts water and bloud; there is to be water and bloud, for the Spirit to beare witneſſe to. So was there (ever) as this day, in the Church of Chriſt. Water: a ſolemne Baptiſme in memorie of the firſt three thouſand, this day, baptized by Saint Peter. And bloud: never a more frequent Euchariſt, than at Pentecoſt, in honour of this Spirit, to which Saint Paul made ſuch haſte with his almes and offerings. Witneſſe the great workes done by Pentecoſtall oblations; which very oblations remaine in ſome Churches to this day. Acts 2.41. Acts 20.16.

III. The Reverſall

So are we now come to the Reverſall, to the laſt non ſolùm; and here it is. Not in the Spirit alone, but in water and bloud, reciprocè. As not theſe, without the Spirit: ſo neither the Spirit without theſe, that is, without the Sacrament, wherein theſe be. So have we a perfect circle now. Neither in water, without bloud; nor in bloud without water; nor in them alone without the Spirit; nor in the Spirit alone, without them.

This day, Christ comes to us in bloud, in the Sacrament of it (ſo.) But (as we ſaid before) either is in other: Bloud is not miniſtred, but there is an ingredient of the purifying vertue of water withall, in it: So, He comes in water, too. Yea, comes in water firſt; ſo lye they, in the Text: water to goe before, with us. So did it, at the very inſtitution it ſelfe, of this Sacrament. The pitcher of water, and he that carried it, was not in vaine given for a ſigne: went not before them, that were ſent to make ready for it, for nothing. Mar. 14 13.

It had a meaning, that water; and it had an uſe. Their feet were waſhed with it, & their feet being cleane, they were clean every whit. Many make ready for it, that ſee neither Ioh. 13. 10.

water nor pitcher; It were well, they did: their feete would be waſhed; ſo would their Pſal. 26.6. hands, in innocencie, that are to goe to His Altar. In innocencie, that is, in a ſtedfaſt purpoſe of keeping our ſelves cleane: So, to come. For, to come and not with that purpoſe, better not come at all. To finde a feeling of this purpoſe before, and to marke well the ſucceſſe and effect, that doth follow after. For, if it faile us continually, Chriſt did not come. For, when He comes, though it be in bloud, yet He comes with water at the ſame time. Ever, in both: never, in one alone.

His bloud is not onely drinke, to nouriſh; but medicine, to purge. To nouriſh the new man, which is faint and weake (GOD wote;) but to take downe the old, which is Heb 9.14. ranke in moſt. It is the proper effect of His bloud; it doth cleanſe our conſciences from dead workes, to ſerve the living GOD.

Which if we finde it doth, Chriſt is come to us, as He is to come. And the Spirit is come, and puts His Teſte. And if we have His Teſte, we may goe our way in peace; we have kept a right Feaſt to Him, and to the memorie of His comming.

Even ſo come LORD IESVS, and come O Bleſſed Spirit, and beare witneſſe to

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT GREENVVICH, on the XX. of May, A.D. MDCXXI. being WHITSVNDAY.

IAM. CHAP. I. VER. XVI, XVII.

Nolite itaque errare fratres mei dilectiſsimi,
Omne datum optimum, & omne donum perfectum deſurſum eſt, deſcendens a PATRE luminum, apud quem non eſt tranſmutatio, nec viciſsitudinis obumbratio.

Erre not my deare brethren,
Every good thing, and every perfect gift is from above, and commeth downe from the FATHER of lights, with whom is no variableneſſe, neither ſhadowing by turning.

AND, if every good giving and every perfect gift, what giving ſo good, or what gift ſo perfect, as the gift of gifts, this daies gift, the gift of the HOLY GHOST? There are in it, all the points in the Text. It is from above; It deſcended viſibly this day: and from the Father of lights; ſo many tongues, ſo many lights; which kindled ſuch a light in the world on this day, as to this day is not put out, nor ſhall ever be, to the worlds end.

Firſt, the HOLY GHOST is oft ſtyled by this very name or title, of the gift of God. If yee knew the gift of God (ſaith our SAVIOVR) to the woman at the wells ſide. What gift was that? It is plaine there, the water of life. That water was the Spirit: This He ſpake of the Spirit (ſaith Saint Iohn, who knew His minde beſt) as then, not yet given; but ſince (as upon this day) ſent into the world. Ioh. 4. 10. Ioh. 7. 39.

Secondly, This gift is both good and perfect: ſo good, as it is de bonis optimum, of all goods, the beſt: and of all perfects, the moſt abſolutely perfect: the gift of perfection, or perfection of all the gifts of GOD. What ſhould I ſay? Not to be valued (ſaith Saint Peter;) not to be uttered (ſaith Saint Paul;) as if all the tongues that were on earth before, and all that came downe this day, were little enough, or indeed were not enough, not able any way to utter or expreſſe it.

2 Cor 9.5.

Thirdly, nay it is not one gift among many (how complete ſoever) but it is many in one, ſo many tongues, ſo many gifts; as, ſo many grapes, in a cluſter; ſo many graines, in a pomgranate. In this one gift, are all the reſt. Aſcending up on high, dona dedit, He gave gifts: all theſe dona were in hoc Donо; all thoſe gifts in this Gift; every one of them folded up as it were incluſivè. The Father, the Fountaine; the Sonne, the Ciſterne; the HOLY GHOST the Conduit-pipe, or pipes rather (for they are many) by and through which, they are derived downe to us.

Pſal. 68. 18.

Fourthly, and laſtly, not onely in Him, and by Him, but from Him too. For He is the Gift and the Giver both. There is great varietie of gifts (ſaith St. Paul) but it is one and the ſame Spirit, that maketh diſtribution of them to every man ſeverally, even as Himſelfe pleaſeth. Both the thing given, and the Party that giveth it, all derived to us from Him, wrought in us by Him, and by us to be referred to Him.

1 Cor. 12. 4.

At the time of any of GODS gifts ſent us by Him, to ſpeake of Scriptures of this nature, cannot ſeeme unſeaſonable: but, of all other, at the time of this gift, moſt properly. Dona dedit hominibus: what day was that? even this very day. Dies donorum hic; ſo many tongues, ſo many gifts. This day (I ſay) whereto Donum Dei, and Donum Diei fall together ſo happily. We have brought it to the Day.

The Summe.

It will not be amiſſe, to touch the end a little, which the Apoſtle aimeth at in theſe words. It is the old, it is the new Commandement, Mandatum vetus & novum, to make us love GOD. The point, whereto the Law and the Prophets drive; yea, the Goſpel, and the Apoſtles, and all. We cannot love Him well, whom we thinke not well of. We cannot thinke well of him, whom we thinke, evill comes from. Then, to thinke ſo well of GOD, as not to thinke any evill: not any evill; no, but inſtead thereof, all good commeth to us, from Him. So thinking, we cannot chooſe but we muſt love Him.

1 Ioh. 2. 7.

And to this end (at the thirteenth verſe before) S. Iames had told us plaine, God is not the Author of evill: Not tempted Himſelfe, not tempting any to it. As at that verſe, not the Authour of evill: So at this, the Author of all; and every good. Men, when their braines are turned with diving into GODS ſecrets, may conceipt as they pleaſe: but, when all is ſaid that can be, No man can ever entirely love him, whom he thinkes ſo evill of, as to be the Author of evill. We are (with Saint Iames) to teach, and you to beleeve that, will procure you to love GOD the better; not that, will alien your minds, or make you love Him the worſe. That therefore, S. Iames denies peremptorily: No evill; Nemo dicat, Let no man ſpeake it, let it not once be ſpoken. But let this be hardly, That all the good we have or hope for, deſcends downe from Him. And that S. Iames (here) affirmes as earneſtly: Erre not my deare brethren. It is to erre, to thinke otherwiſe: for that abſolutely, Every good giving, and againe over, Every perfect gift, there is not one of them all, but from Him they come. And ſo, wee in all duty to love Him, from whom all, and all manner good proceedeth. This is His end, Love; and that falls fit and is proper to this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Love. For, Love is the proper attribute and proper effect of the Spirit (Per charitatem Spiritus;) the love of GOD is ſhed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghoſt, this day given unto us.

Iam. 3. 11.

Rom. 15. 30.

The Diviſion.

The verſe, to the Chapter, is a cleere and a ſtrict propoſition, but hath in it the force or energie, to make a complete argument. For, if all good from GOD, then no evill. Saint Iames layes it for a ground: Salt or bitter water and ſweet cannot iſſue both from one fountaine; Nor the workes of darkeneſſe, from the Father of lights, never.

But

But we take it onely as a propoſition, with a little Item, at the end of it. If we aske the queſtions of Art concerning it, Quæ, Quanta, Qualis? Quæ? It is Categorically: Quanta? It is univerſall: Qualis? Firſt, it is affirmative: then, true; [Erre not] goes before it: So true, as to thinke the contrarie, is a flat error.

The Rules of Logike divide a propoſition to our hands, into the fore-part (in Schooles, they call it Subjectum:) and into the after-part, which they call Prædicatum. 1. The ſubjectum here is Omne datum, &c. The prædicatum, Deſurſum eſt, &c. The Subject is double: 1 Datum bonum, and 2 Donum perfectum, with an univerſall note to either: Every good and every perfect, to be ſure, to take in all, to leave out none. 2. The prædicatum, that ſtands of three points: 1 Whence: 2 How: and 3 from whom: from the Father of lights. I.

Then comes the Item (I told you of) proviſionally, to meet with an objection, a thought that might riſe in our hearts peradventure: That is, it may be, as the lights of the world, or the children, have their variations, their changes, ſo the Father alſo may have them. But, that He puts us out of doubt of too, with as peremptorie a negative: Be it with the lights as it will; with the Father of lights, with GOD, there is no variation, no change; No not ſo much as a ſhadow of them. In effect, as if He ſhould ſay: from the Father of lights, which is unchangeable; or from the unchangeable Father of lights: and ſo, it ſhall be meere affirmative; but that, there is Major vis in negatione, Deniall is ſtronger. II.

And all theſe he brings in, with a Nolite errare: and that not without juſt cauſe. For, about this verſe and the points in it, there are no leſſe than ſeven ſundric errours. I ſhall note you them as I goe, that you may avoid them. Together with ſuch matter of dutie as ſhall incidently fall in from each. Specially, touching the gift of the day, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

I:

TO take the propoſition in ſunder. 1. The ſubject firſt: and that is double; 1 Datum, and 2 Donum: and either of them his proper Epithet; 1 Good, and 2 perfect. Ioyntly, of both together firſt: after, ſeverally of either part.

Of the Propoſition; 1 The Subject thereof double, 1 Datum and 2 Donum.

Datum, and Donum, they both come of Do; Given they are both. Where (firſt) becauſe it is the Feaſt of Tongues, to ſet our tongue right. For, the world, and the Holy Ghoſt ſpeake not one language: Not with one tongue both. There ſhould not elſe have needed any to have beene ſent downe. The world talkes of all, as had: the Holy Ghoſt, as given. Looke to the Habendum (ſaith the world) the having: that is the Spirit of the Worlds. Religion; looke to Donum and Datum, the giving: that is His. The Heathen calls His vertue ἕξις a habit; that, comes of habendo. The Chriſtian (by Saint Iames here) δόσις, δώρημα, datum and donum; all which come of Dando. Thus doth the Holy Ghoſt frame our tongues to ſpeake, if we will ſpeake with the tongues of this Day. They that doe not, they are of Galilee, and their ſpeech bewraieth them ſtraight.

Of Datum, and Donum joyntly

Will you heare one of them? You know who ſaid, Soule thou haſt enough (haſt:) and you know who ſpake otherwiſe, Quid habes quod non accepiſti? What but that you have received. Receiving and giving (you know) are relatives; which, the other little thought of. You may know each, by their dialect. Luke 12. 19. 1 Cor. 4. 7.

From the beginning: Eſau he ſaid, Habeo bona plurima frater mi, I have goods enough: that is his phraſe of ſpeech; that, the language of Edom. What ſaith Iacob at the ſame time? Eſau asking him, what were all the droves he met, They be (ſaith he) the good things that GOD hath given me. Have (ſaith Eſau:) Given me (ſaith Iacob) Nonne habeo? Have not I power to crucifie thee, and have not I power to deliver thee? You may know it, it is Pilates voice. But our Saviour He tells him: Gen. 33. 9. Gen. 33. 6. Ioh. 10. 10.

Ioh 19.11. Non haberes poteſtatem; Power ſhould he have had none, if it had not beene given him, and given him from above: S^t. Iames his very phraſe (here) from CHRISTS owne mouth. So muſt we ſpeake, if we will ſpeake as CHRIST ſpake.

The I. Error. This then is the firſt error. To have our minde runne and our ſpeech runne, all upon having. Men are all for having, thinke and ſpeake of what they have; without mention or whence, or how, or from whom they receive it, or that it is given them at all. Nolite errare, Be not deceived; for, all that you have, is datum or donum, all; and they both are of free gift; given, all. Thus the tongue that ſate this day on Saint Iames's head taught him to call them. Thus farre joyntly; now ſeverally.

Of each ſeverally: For there is a cleft in theſe tongues. The cleft is Datum and Donum. Would not wrap them all up in one word, but expreſſes them in two. Somewhat there is, in that. We may not admit of any idle Tautologies in Scripture. Two ſeverall ſorts then they be (theſe two) not oppoſite, but differing onely in degree, as more and leſſe. Every gift is a giving: Not every giving, a gift: Every perfect, good; not every good, perfect. We are not to thinke, either all our ſinnes, or all our gifts to be of one ſize. Saint Matthews talent is more than Saint Lukes pound; Caſars penny, than the Widowes two mites, yet good money all, in their ſeverall values. Of theſe two, 1 Datum, and 2 Donum; 1 Bonum, and 2 Perfectum; one is greater or leſſe than another.

1 Datum. He beginnes with the leſſe, Datum. Weigh the word, it is but a Participle: they, have tenſes, and tenſes, time. So, that, is onely temporall.

2 Donum. But Donum imports no time: ſo, a more ſet terme; hath more ſubſtance in it, is fixed or permanent. One (as it were) for terme of yeares: The other, of the nature of a perpetuitie. A datum, that which is ſtill in giving; that, periſhes with the uſe, as doe things tranſitorie; and be of that ſort, that Iob ſpake, GOD hath given, and GOD hath taken away. Donum is not ſo, but of that ſort, that CHRIST ſpeakes, in Maries choice, ſo given, as it ſhould never be taken from her, So, one referres to the things which are ſeene, which are temporall: the other, to the things not ſeene, that are eternall. One, to the body, and to this world: the other to the ſoule rather, and the life of the world to come.

Luke 10 42.

1 Bonum. We ſhall diſcerne it the more cleerely, if we weigh the two Adjectives, 1 Good, and 2 perfect: they differ. Every good is not perfect. We know, the Law is good (ſaith the Apoſtle:) but we know withall, the Law bringeth nothing to perfection; ſo, not perfect. Nature (quâ natura) is good, yet unperfect: and the Law, in the rigor of it, not poſſible; through the imperfection of it. Nature is not, the Law is not taken away; good both: but grace is added to both, to perfect both: which needed not, if either were perfect. This worlds good; ſo doth Saint Iohn call our wealth. Nay, bread, fiſh, and eggs, we give our children, our SAVIOVR Himſelfe calleth good gifts. But what are theſe? not worthy to be named, if you ſpeake of Donum Dei æternum, and the perfections there.

1 Tim. 1.8. Heb 7.19. Ioh. 3.17. Matt. 7.9. 10.

2 Perfectum. Before I was aware, I have told you, what is perfect. The glorie, the joyes, the crowne of heaven. For, when that perfect is come, all this unperfect ſhall be done away. But S. Iames ſeemes not to ſpeake of that: he ſpeakes in the preſent, and of the preſent, what now is, what perfect in this life. And this (lo) brings us to Donum diei, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. For, to be partakers of the Divine nature, is all the perfection, we can here attaine. No higher, here. Now, to be made partakers of the Spirit, is to be made partakers of the Divine nature. That, is this daies worke. Partakers of the Spirit, we are, by receiving grace; which is nothing elſe but the breath of the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of grace. Grace into the entire ſubſtance of the ſoule, dividing it ſelfe into two ſtreames: 1 One goes to the underſtanding, the gift of faith; 2 The other to the will, the gift of charitie, the very bond of perfection. The tongues, to teach us knowledge; the fire, to kindle our affections. The ſtate of grace is the perfection of this life, to grow ſtill from grace to grace, to profit in it. As to goe on ſtill forward, is the perfection of a traveller, to draw ſtill neerer and neerer to his journeyes end. To worke to day and to morrow

as CHRIST ſaid, and the third day to be perfect, perfectly perfect.

Now, as we are to follow the beſt gifts (it is Saint Pauls counſaile) the beſt, the moſt perfect: ſo are we to take notice too of the good, though not all out ſo perfect, as Saint Iames adviſeth us: knowing this, that be it giving, or be it gift; be it good, or be it perfect, he puts an Omne to both; comes over twice, 1 Every good; 2 Every perfect: both we receive, both are given us. Set downe that. There was among the Heathen, one that went for wiſe, that ſaid. To become rich, he would pray and ſacrifice to Hercules; but to be vertuous or wiſe, he would doe neither, neither to Hercules, nor to any GOD of them all; he would be beholden for that, to none but himſelfe. Looke, in this cleft, he tooke to himſelfe the more, left GOD the leſſe. This was a groſſe errour: ſo groſſe, I will not bid you take heed of it. But there be, that will not ſtand with God for the greater: but for the leſſe, that they may be bold with, and take thoſe to themſelves. This is an errour too: Erre not this. No: datum hath his omne, as well as donum; the good, no leſſe than the perfect; given both, one as well as the other. Saint Paul puts us to it with Quid habes? that is, nihil habes: What have you? that is, you have nothing, but you have received it, but hath beene given you, ἀντίϛις and δόσις are relations, one conferres the other.

1 Cor. 12 31. Omne Datum, as well as Omne Donum.

The II Error.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

Away then with this ſecond error. He that made the Elephant, made the Ant; He, that the Eagle, the Flie: He that, the moſt glorious Angel in heaven, the pooreſt Worme, that creeps on the earth. So, He that ſhall give us the kingdome of heaven, He it is, that gives us every peece of bread and meat, and puts us to acknowledge it: In one and the ſame prayer making us to ſue, for regnum tuum, and for panem noſtrum. Be not deceived to thinke otherwiſe. And heare you, you are to begin with datum; Not to deſpiſe the day of ſmall things: It is the Prophets counſaile: to learne to ſee God in them. Cæſars Image, not onely in his coine of gold, but even upon the poore penny. See GOD in ſmall, or you ſhall never ſee Him in great; in good, or never in perfect. This for the ſubject. There is a cleft: all are not of one ſort: ſome leſſe, ſome greater: Greater or leſſe, both are given. Not leſſe had, and great given, but given both. And every one of both kinds, of the one kind as well as of the other.

The Prædicatum, 1 Whence they come, Deſurſum.

We have talked long of good; * Who will ſhew us any good, there be many that will ſay, nay there is not any but will ſay. That, will Saint Iames here. And firſt to ſhew us, turnes our eye to the right place, whence it comes. That is ἄνωθεν from above. There are two in this ἄνωθεν: 1 θὲν from, 2 and ἄνω above. From: that is, from ſomewhere elſe, not from our ſelves: From without; and not out of us, from within. Aliunde ἔξωθεν: and that aliunde is from ἄνω above, not from κάτω, thoſe lower parts upon the earth.

* Pſal. 4. 6.

The III. and IV. Errors.

Erre not then, either of theſe two waies: 1. Firſt, not to reflect upon our ſelves; to looke like ſwannes into our owne boſomes. It growes not there, out of your ſelves: It is the gift of GOD (ſaith Saint Paul.) The very giving gives as much. Of our owne we have it not.

Eph. 2. 8.

2. If we looke forth, let it not be about us, either on the right hand, or on the left, on any place here below. Looke up, turne your eye thither. It is an influence; it is no vapour; an inſpiration, no exhalation: thence it comes, hence it riſes not: our ſpirit luſts after envie, and worſe matter (Iames IV. V.) Why ſhould thoughts ariſe in your hearts (ſaith CHRIST?) If they ariſe, they are not good; if they be good, then they come downe from above. Saint Iohn Baptiſt is direct: A man can receive nothing, unleſſe it be given him, and given him from above. And, of all other, not the gift of this Day: The Dove, the tongues came from on high, both. From our ſelves, is one errour: from any other beneath here, is another. Erre not then, the place is deſurſum, without and above us.

Luke 24. 38.

2 How they come: Deſcendens.

Next, the manner, how; that it deſcends: for, even that word wants not his force. Deſcending is a voluntary motion: it concludes the will and the purpoſe of him, that ſo deſcends. It is no caſualtie; it falls not downe by chance: It comes downe, becauſe it ſo will; a will it hath: Et ubi vult ſpirat; it blowes not, but where it will: and it diſtri-

butes to every one (the Spirit) but prout vult, as it pleaſeth Himſelfe, not otherwiſe.

And this you may obſerve: the Scripture maketh choice (ever) of words ſounding this way. He gives it; He caſts it not about, at all adventure. He opens His hand, it runs not through His fingers. Sinum habet facilem, non perforatum: His boſome is open enough, yet hath no hole in it, to drop through againſt His will. He ſent Acts 10.36. His Word (it came not by hap,) that is, CHRIST. And I will ſend you another Ioh.15.26. Comforter, that is, the Holy Ghoſt. Nor He neither. Of His owne will He begate us: Ver.10. they be the words that follow.

The V Error. It is the fift error, to aſcribe to fortune either datum or donum. Erre not then: as the place is from above, ſo the manner, deſcendens, not decidens; they come, they are not let fall.

1 From whom. A patre luminum. Whence, we ſee, and how: Now, from whom. The partie in a word is GOD. He had ſaid as much before (Verſe V.) If any lacke wiſedome, let him aske it of GOD; How comes He (here) to uſe this ſomewhat unuſuall terme, the Father of lights? It had

Why luminum of light. beene (to our thinking) more proper, to have ſaid, from GOD the Author of all good things. No; there is reaſon for it. For ſay; they are, they came down from above: when we caſt up our eyes thither, we can ſee no further, our ſight can reach no higher than the lights; than the lights there above. And ſo, ſome you have, that hold, they come from them, de luminibus, from the lights: that ſuch a conjunction or aſpect of them, ſuch a conſtellation, or horoſcope, ſuch a poſition of ſuch and ſuch planets, produce very much good. This is in Aſtrologie, but not in Theologie. Μὴ πλανᾶσθε (of which word come the Planets) ſaith Saint Iames, Wander not after the wandering ſtars: de luminibus is not it; de Patre luminum, is the right. So, the Father of lights was purpoſely choſen, to draw us from the lights. That, not they, they are not (not, the children;) The Father, He it is, from whom they come. The lights: No, them He

Heb.1.14. made to doe ſervice. Nay, the Angels above them, He made to be miniſtring Spirits

The VI Error. for our good. Be not deceived, with this neither: To lift up our eyes to the hoſt of heaven, and no further, but beyond them, to the Father of them all, and then you are where you ſhould be.

This may be one reaſon. But further if you aske, Why not rather of all good, as He began; why is He gone from that terme, to this of light? The anſwer is eaſie. If we

Gen.1.3. ſpeak of gifts, light it is princeps donorum Dei, the firſt gift GOD beſtowed upon the world, and ſo will fit well. If of good; the firſt thing of which it is ſaid, vidit Deus quòd

4. bona, was light: and ſo, fit that way too. If you ſpeake of perfect; ſo perfect it is, as it is deſired for it ſelfe, we take comfort in ſeeing it, we delight to ſee it, though we ſee nothing by it, nothing but the light it ſelfe (obſerved by Salomon, Eccl. XI. 5.)

And for good: ſuch is the neareneſſe of affinitie, ſuch (I may ſay) the con-naturalitie betweene light and good, as they would not be one without the other. All that good

Ioh.3.21. Matt.5.15. is, loves the light, would come to the light, would be made manifeſt, deſires no buſhell to hide it, but a candleſtick, to ſhew it forth to all the world. That they might be ſearched with lanthornes; to have the ſecrets, the hidden corners of their hearts looked into, that the Father of lights would grant them ſo to be.

Ioh.1.9. For perfect: ſo perfect a thing is the light, as God Himſelfe is ſaid to be light: 1 Ioh. I. V. His Sonne our Saviour, to be light of lights, the true light that lighteneth every one that commeth into the world. His Spirit, light; ſo is our Collect: God which as upon this day haſt taught the hearts of thy faithfull people, by ſending to them the light of thy Holy Spirit. The Angels that be good, be Angels of light. Yea whatſoever here on 2 Sam.22.17. Matt.5.24. earth is perfect: the King is called, the light of Iſrael; The Apoſtles called, Luces mundi; and the Saints of God, where ever they be in the world, ſhine as lights in it. That upon the matter, Father of good, and Father of light, is all one.

Why luminum not luminis. Pater luminis would have ſerved, if we reſpect but this; but the nature. What ſay you to the number? It is luminum: why, of lights in the plurall? That is, to give light to what we ſaid before, of the diverſe degrees of the givings, and of the gifts of GOD. In the firmament, there is one light of the Sun, another of the Moone, and yet yet another of the ſtarres: and, in the ſtarres, one differeth from another in glorie. Good every one, though not ſo perfect, one as another. He that made the bright Sunne in all his glorie, He made the dimmeſt ſtarre: all alike from Him; He alike the Father of all. 1 Cor. 15.41.

Beſides, He ſets them downe in the plurall [lights] for that the oppoſite (tenebræ) is a plurall word (and indeed hath no ſingular) for, they are many, and ſo need many lights to match them. There is the ſenſes outward darkneſſe, there is the darkneſſe of the inward man; both the darkneſſe of the underſtanding by ignorance and error, and the darkneſſe of the will and heart by hatred and malice, 1 Ioh. 2. 9. There is the darkneſſe of adverſitie in this world, the hither darkneſſe; there is ſome little light in it: And there is the blackneſſe of darkneſſe, the utter darkneſſe of the world to come; No manner light at all. Nothing to be ſeene; but, to be heard: nor to be heard, but weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of teeth. Iude 13. Matt. 8. 12.

To match theſe ſo many darkneſſes there behoved to be as many lights; and ſo, Pater luminum comes in, not luminis. As, to match the many miſeries of our nature, there were as many mercies requiſite; and ſo He, Pater miſericordiarum, not miſericordiæ (with the Apoſtle) of many, not of one alone. We need the number, as well as the thing; to have a multitude, a pluralitie of mercies, to have plenteous redemption, to have χάριν πολυποίκιλον, great varietie of grace, and that over-abundant grace, that we might reſt aſſured, there is enough and enough, in the Father of lights, to maſter and to overmatch any darkneſſe of the Prince of darkneſſe, what or how many ſo ever. 2 Cor. 1. 3. Pſal. 130. 7. 1 Pet. 4. 10. 1 Tim. 1. 14.

Shall I ſhew you theſe lights? Not the viſible, of the Sunne, Moone and Stars, or fire or candle; I paſſe them. Beſides them there is two in us; 1. The light of Nature, for rebelling againſt which, all that are without CHRIST ſuffer condemnation. Salomon calls it the candle of the Lord ſearching even the very bowels (Pro. 20.) which though it be dimme and not perfect, yet, good it is: though lame, yet (as Mephiboſheth) it is Regia proles, of the bloud Royall. 2. There is the light of GODS Law: Lex, lux (ſaith Salomon) totidem verbis, Pro. 6. and his Father, a lanterne to his feet. Nay, in the nineteenth Pſalme what he ſaith at the fourth verſe, of the Sunne, at the eight, he ſaith the ſame, of the Law of GOD; lights, both. 3. The light of prophecie, as of a candle that ſhineth in a darke place. 4. There is the wonderfull light of His Goſpell (So Saint Peter calls it:) the proper light of this day. The tongues that deſcended, ſo many tongues, ſo many lights; For, the tongue is a light, and brings to light what was before hid in the heart. 5. And, from theſe other, is the inward light of grace; whereby, GOD which commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſſe, He it is that ſhineth in our hearts; by the inward annointing (which is the oile of this lampe) the light of His holy Spirit, chaſing away the darkeneſſe both of our hearts and minds. 6. There is the light of comfort of His Holy Spirit, a light ſowen for the righteous here in this life. And 7. there is the light of glorie, which they ſhall reape, the light where GOD dwelleth, and where we ſhall dwell with Him: Even the inheritance of the Saints in light, when the righteous ſhall ſhine as the Sunne, in the kingdome of their Father, the Father of lights. Moſes's Candleſticke with ſeven ſtalkes and lights in each of them. Of all which ſeven lights GOD is the Father, acknowledges them all for His children, and to His children will vouchſafe them all in their order. Pro. 20. 27. Pro. 6. 23. Pſal. 119. 105. 2 Pet. 1. 19. 1 Pet. 2. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 6. Col. 1. 12. Mat. 13 43. Exod. 25. 32.

Now this onely remaineth, why He is not called the Author, but the Father of theſe? In this, is the manner of their deſcending. And that is, for that, they proceed from Him per modum naturæ, as the child from the Father; per modum emanationis, as the beames from the Sunne. So, both Father, and light, ſhew the manner of their coming. Proper and naturall for Him it is, to give good. Good things come from Him as kindly; as doe they: therefore ſaid to be, not the Author, the Lord and giver, but even the very Father of them. It is againſt His nature to doe otherwiſe; to procreate or ſend forth ought, but good: His very loines, His bowells are all goodneſſe, Father of darkneſſe He cannot be, being Father of lights, nor of ought that is evill. For they two (darke and evill) are as neere of kinne, as light and good. This is the meſ- 3 Why Pater not Author.

ſage (ſaith S. Iohn) that we heard of him, and that we declare to you; that GOD is 1 Ioh. 1.5. light, and in Him is no darkeneſſe at all. Neither in Him, nor from Him: Nemo dicat, let never any ſay it; Let it never ſinke into you, Tempted He is not with evill, Tempt He Verſe 13. doth not to evill. Aſcribe it not to Pater luminum, but to Princeps tenebrarum; to the Epheſ. 6. 12. Prince of darkeneſſe, not to the Father of lights. But, aſcribe all good, from the ſmalleſt ſparke to the greateſt beame, from the leaſt good giving to the beſt and moſt perfect gift of all, to Him, to the Father of lights. So we ſee, 1 why light;
2 why lights; 3 why the Father of lights. So much for the Prædicate and whole Propoſition.

II. The Item. The VII. error.

And all this may be: and yet all this being (it ſeemes) ſome replie may be made, and ſtand with the Apoſtles terme of lights well enough, That, what befalls the lights, the children, may alſo befall the Father of them. The great and moſt perfect light in this world, is the Sunne in the firmament; and two things evidently befall him, the two in the Text: Παρήλλαγὴ variation He admits, declines and goes downe and leaves us in the darke; that is His parallaxe, in His motion from Eaſt to Weſt. And, turning He admits; turnes backe, goes from us, and leaves us to long winter nights that is His τροπὴ, in His motion from North to South. One of theſe He doth every day: the other, every yeare. Succeſſively removing from one hemiſphere to the other; when it is light there, it is darke here. Succeſſively turning from one Tropike to another; when the daies be long there, they be ſhort here. And, if we ſhall ſay any thing of the ſhadow here, that way we loſe Him too in part, by interpoſing of the clouds, when the day is over-caſt. So, the night is His parallaxe; the winter His τροπὴ, darke weather His ſhadow at leaſt. Shadowes doe but take Him away in part, that is not good. But darkeneſſe takes Him away cleane; that, is perfectly evill

That it may be even ſo with the Father of lights, as with this it is. Good and evill come from Him alternis vicibus, by turne; and as darkeneſſe and light ſucceſſively, from them. That it may fare with Him as with the Heathen Iupiter: who had (ſay they) in his Entrie, two great fats, both full, one of good, the other of evill; and that he ſerved them out into the world, both of the good and of the evill as he ſaw cauſe; but commonly for one of good, two of evill at leaſt.

It was more than requiſite, he ſhould cleere this objection. So doth he; denieth both (all three if you will.) That though of man, it be truly ſaid by Iob; He never con-
Iob 14. 6. tinues in one ſtay: though the lights of heaven have their parallaxes: yea, the Angels
Iob 4. 18. of heaven, He found not ſtedfaſtneſſe in them: Yet, for GOD, He is ſubject to none Exod. 3. 14. of them. He is Ego ſum, qui ſum: that is (ſaith Malachi) Ego Deus, & non mutor. We
Mal. 3. 6. are not, what we were a while ſince, nor what we ſhall be; a while after, ſcarce what we are: for every moment makes us varie. With GOD, it is nothing ſo. He is that He is, He is and changeth not. He changes not His tenor, He changes not His tenſe; keeps not our Grammar rules, hath one by Himſelfe: Not, before Abraham Ioh. 8. 58. was, I was; but, before Abraham was, I am.

Yet are there varyings and changes, it cannot be denied. We ſee them daily. True, but the point is per quem, on whom to lay them. Not, on GOD. Seemes there any Ierem. 2. 17. receſſe? It is we forſake Him, not He us. It is the ſhip that moves, though they that be in it thinke the land goes from them, not they from it. Seemes there any variation, as that of the night? It is umbra terra makes it; the light makes it not. Is there any thing reſembling a ſhadow? A vapour riſes from us, makes the cloud; which is as a pent-houſe betweene, and takes Him from our ſight. That vapour is our luſt: There, is the apud quem. Is any tempted? it is his owne luſt doth it; that, entiſes him to ſin, that brings us to the ſhadow of death. It is not GOD. No more than He can be tempted, no more can He tempt any. If we finde any change, the apud is with us, not Pſal. 39. 6. Him; we change, He is unchanged. Man walkes in a vaine ſhadow: His waies are the truth. He cannot denie Himſelfe.

Either

Every evill, the more perfectly evill it is, the more it is from below: Either riſes from the ſteame of our nature corrupted; or (yet lower,) aſcends as a groſſe ſmoke, from the bottomleſſe pit, from the Prince of darkeneſſe, as full of varying and turning into all ſhapes and ſhaddowes, as GOD is farre from both, who is uniforme and conſtant in all His courſes.

Shall we now caſt up all into one ſumme, the errors by them, and the verities by themſelves, and oppoſe each to each? The firſt error: to be all for having; never ſpeake of it. The veritie: that all is giving, or gifts; to bee for it. The ſecond error: to thinke, great matters onely are given; the meaner wee have of our ſelves. The veritie: Perfect, as well as good; and good as perfect; they be given both. The third error: to thinke, they are from us, not elſewhere from others. The veritie: they are ἔξωθεν, they grow not in us, we ſpin them not out of our ſelves. The fourth error: they be from below; we gather them here. The veritie: they be from ἄνω, that is above, not here beneath. The fifth error; to thinke, that from thence they fall promiſcuè, catch who catch may, hap-hazard. The veritie: they fall not by chance; they deſcend by providence, and that regularly. The ſixt error; they deſcend then from the ſtarres or planets. The veritie; not from them, or either of them, but from the Father of them. The ſeventh and laſt errour: to thinke, that by turnes, He ſends one while good, other while bad, and ſo varies and changes. The veritie; He doth neither. The lights may varie; Hee is invariable: they may change; Hee is unchangeable: conſtant alwaies, and like Himſelfe. Now, our leſſons from theſe.

1 And is it thus? And are they given? Then, quid gloriaris? let us have no boaſting. Are they given, why forget you the Giver? Let Him be had in memorie, He is worthy ſo to be had. 2. Be the giving, as well as the gift; and the good, as the perfect, of gift, both? Then, acknowledge it in both, take the one as a pledge, make the one as a ſteppe to the other. 3. Are they from ſomewhere elſe, not from our ſelves? Learne then to ſay, and to ſay with feeling, Non nobis Domine, quia non à nobis. 4. Are they from on high? Looke not downe to the ground then, as ſwine to the acornes, they find lying there, and never once up to the tree they came from. Look up: the very frame of our body gives that way. It is natures check to us, to have our head beare upward, and our heart grovell below. 5. Doe they deſcend? Aſcribe them then to purpoſe, not to time or chance. No Table, to fortune (ſaith the Prophet.) 6. Are they from the Father of lights? Then never goe to the children: A ſignis cæli nolite timere: Neither feare nor hope for any thing from any light of them all. 7. Are His gifts without repentance? Varies He not? Whom He loves, doth He love to the end? Let our ſervice be ſo too, not wavering. O that we changed from Him, no more than He from us! Not from the light of grace, to the ſhaddow of ſinne, as we doe full often.

The Duties.

Ioh. 13. 1.

But above all, that which is ex totâ ſubſtantia; that if we find any want of any giving or gift, good or perfect, this Text gives us light, whither to looke, to whom to repaire for them: To the Father of lights. And even ſo let us doe. Ad Patrem luminum, cum primo lumine. Let the light every day, to ſoone as wee ſee it, put us in mind to get us to the Father of lights. Aſcendat oratio, deſcendet miſeratio, let our prayer goe up to Him, that His grace may come downe to us: ſo to lighten us in our wayes and workes, that we may in the end, come to dwell with Him, in the light which is φῶς ἀνέσπερον, light whereof there is no even-tide, the Sunne whereof never ſets, nor knowes tropike, the only thing we miſſe, and wiſh for in our lights here, primum & ante omnia.

But, if we ſue for any, chiefly for the beſt, the moſt perfect gift of all, which this day deſcended and was given. This day was, and any day may be, but chiefly this, day will be given to any, that will deſire, as our Saviour promiſeth (Luke XI.) and will bee as good as His word.

Within us there is no Spirit but our owne, and that luſts after envie, and other things as bad: from beneath it cannot be had: It is donum cæleſte; Simon, if he would give never ſo largely for it, cannot obtaine it. It deſcended ad oculum this day, it was ſeene to deſtend, and ſo will.

Which deſcents from on high, from the Father of lights (there) in the tongues of light, light on us, to give us knowledge, a gift proportioned to light: and to give us comfort, a gift proportioned to light: By faith, to lighten, By grace to ſtabliſh our hearts.

I COR. Chap. XII.

Diviſiones vero gratiarum, &c.

Ver. 4. Now, there are Diverſities of Gifts, but the ſame* SPIRIT.

* Or Diviſions.

5. And there are Diverſities of adminiſtrations, but the ſame LORD.

6. And there are Diverſities of operations, but GOD is the ſame, which worketh all in all.

7. But the manifeſtation of the SPIRIT is given to every man, to profit withall.

TEXT read at this Feaſt, of the Churches owne choice: who (I will ever preſume) beſt knoweth, what Text will beſt fit every Feaſt; and ſo this. It beginnes (you ſee) and it ends in the Spirit, whoſe proper Feaſt this is. The Spirit is in the firſt verſe; and againe, the Spirit is in the laſt: firſt, and laſt, here we find him.

And if we will looke well into it, we ſhall (in effect) find that, which happened this Day, though in other termes. Here have you in this Text, gifts, as it might bee the tongues, which came from heaven this Day: For, what were thoſe tongues, but gifts? And here have you againe diviſions, as it might be clefts, in the tongues: For what is to cleave, but to divide? And, if you lacke fire : here have you in the laſt verſe, manifeſtation, which is by light. For, the uſe of light, is to make manifeſt. So have you the HOLY GHOST in cloven tongues of fire, in ſome more generall termes: the gifts, the tongues; the diviſion, the cleft; the manifeſtation, the fire. Thoſe gifts, firſt divided, then made manifeſt, and that by the Spirit, amounting to the ſubſtance of the Feaſt : that there can be no queſtion, but the Text ſuits to the time, fully.

The Summe. The Vſe we have of the whole Text, is; that in all humble thankfulneſſe, we are to acknowledge the great Goodneſſe of the whole Deitie entire, and of every Perſon in it; So ſeriouſly taking to heart the Churches (that is, all our) good, as (we ſee) they do in a ſort meet here, and aſſemble themſelves, all three, each for his part to contribute, one, gifts; another, callings; a third, workes. And then commit over the manifeſtation of all to the Spirit, ad utilitatem, to the profit (that is) to the generall good of the Church, in whoſe good, is the good of us all.

Now albeit, to authorize and to countenance the Feaſt the more, the whole three Perſons doe here preſent themſelves, in a joynt concurrence to this worke of diſtribution; yet, (you ſee) the HOLY GHOST hath here a double part, and in that reſpect a prerogative above the other twaine. For, the Spirit is in, at both. In, at the diviſion; and ſo are the reſt. And againe, in, at the manifeſtation; ſo are none of the reſt. But, He there; and He alone. For, the tongues are His; and they are too manifeſt: So to Him alone we owe the manifeſting. So, His; and ſo His the honour of the day, which is Feſtum linguarum, the Feaſt of tongues, or (if you will ſo call it) the Feaſt of Manifeſtation. In very deed, the HOLY GHOSTS Epiphanie; allowing, as CHRIST, one, ſo Him another.

The Summe of all, is: That CHRISTS errand being done, and He gone up on high, the Spirit, this Day, viſibly came downe, for Him and in His name and ſtead, to take the charge, and to eſtabliſh an order in the Church : which order or eſtabliſhment is here ſet downe. And thinke not, it holds in the Church alone, but that in it is repreſented unto us a true patterne or mould of every other well compoſed Government. For, happie is the governement, where the Holy Ghoſt beſtoweth the gifts, CHRIST appoints the places, and GOD effecteth the worke, workes all in all.

And as, Rectum is index ſui & obliqui, A ſtreight rule will diſcover as well what is crooked, as what is ſtreight, both: So under one, have we here, as the lively image of a well ordered Societie (for, the preſerving of theſe three aright, makes all well;) So withall the manifold obliquities and exorbitances in the Church, in the Commonwealth, every where; which ariſe from the errors about theſe three, 1 the gifts not regarded, 2 the places not well filled, 3 the workes not work-man-like performed. The not looking to of which three, hath brought, and is like more and more, to bring all out of courſe.

The Diviſion.

The Text (if ever any) is truly tripartite, as ſtanding evidently of three parts: every one of the three; being a kind of Trinitie. A Trinitie 1 Perſonall, 2 Reall, and 3 Actuall.

I. 1 Perſonall, theſe three; 1 the ſame Spirit, 2 the ſame Lord, 3 the ſame GOD.

II. 2. Reall, theſe three: 1 Gifts, 2 adminiſtrations, or offices, 3 operations, or workes.

III. 3 Actuall, theſe three; 1 Dividing, 2 manifeſting, 3 and profiting. Three diviſions from three, for three. The three reall, they be the ground of all, the 1 gifts, offices, and 3 workes. The three perſonall; 1 The Spirit, 2 Lord, and 3 GOD, are but from whence thoſe come. The three Actuall, are but whether they will: 1 Divided; 2 So divided, as made manifeſt; 3 So made manifeſt, as not onely 1 to make a ſhew, but ὠφε; to ſome end; 2 That end to be, not συμφορὰ, the hurt or trouble; but σύμφερον, the good; 3 The good, not private, of our ſelves; but common, of all the whole bodie of the Church.

FIRST,

I.
The Trinitie Perſonall.

FIRST, and before all things, we find here, and finding we adore the holy, bleſſed, and glorious Trinitie: the Spirit in plaine termes, the other two in no leſſe plaine, if we looke to but the VI. verſe of the V. Chapter before, where the Apoſtle ſaith: To us there is but one GOD, the Father, of whom are all things, and wee of Him; and one LORD IESVS CHRIST, by whom are all things, and we by Him. So, by GOD, is intended the Father, the firſt Perſon: by Lord, the Sonne, the ſecond: by the Spirit, the third, the uſuall terme or title of the Holy Ghoſt, all the Bible through. Theſe three, as in Trinitie of Perſons here diſtinct; So, in Vnitie of Eſſence, one and the ſame. For, though to each of theſe three, there is allowed a [the ſame;] yet come to the Deitie, and they are not three [the ſames] but one the [the ſame;] one, and the ſame God-head, to be bleſſed for ever.

1 Once before, are theſe three knowne thus ſolemnly to have met; at the creating of the world. 2 Once againe, at the Baptiſme of CHRIST, the new creating it. 3 And here now the third time, at the Baptiſme of the Church, with the Holy Ghoſt. Where, as the manner is at all baptiſmes, each beſtoweth a ſeverall gift, or largeſſe, on the partie baptized (that is) on the Church; for whom, and for whoſe good, all this dividing, and all this manifeſting is. Nay, for whom and for whoſe good, the world it ſelfe was created, CHRIST Himſelfe baptized, and the Holy Ghoſt, this Day viſibly ſent downe.

The Trinitie perſonall I deale with firſt, that we may know, where and from whom, all the reſt iſſue and proceed. All errors are tolerable, ſave two; about Alpha, the firſt letter, and Omega, the laſt; about primum principium, and ultimus finis; the firſt beginning, whence all flow, and the laſt end, whereto all tend. We erre againſt the firſt, when we derive things amiſſe: we erre againſt the ſecond, when we referre them amiſſe: Divide them right, and referre them right, and all is right. And the right deriving is (as here) to bring all from the bleſſed Trinitie.

From this Trinitie Perſonall, comes there here another (as I may call it) a Trinitie reall, of 1 gifts, 2 adminiſtrations, and 3 operations. I will tell you, what is meant by each. 1. By gifts, is meant the inward indowing, enabling, qualifying, whereby one, for his skill, is meet and ſufficient for ought. A particular whereof to the number of nine, is ſet downe, at the VIII. IX. and X. Verſes after. 2. By adminiſtrations, is meant the outward calling, place, function, or office, whereby one is authoriſed lawfully to deale with ought. Of theſe likewiſe you have a liſt to the number of eight, at the XXVIII. verſe after. 3. By operations, is meant the effect, or worke done, wrought, or executed by the former two (the skill of the gift, and the power of the calling:) But, theſe are infinite (workes:) no ſetting downe of them; onely ſo to be ranged, as every calling to know his owne proper worke, and ſo to deale with it.

So have you three Quotients from three Diviſors: 1 gifts, 2 offices, 3 workes, from the 1 Father, 2 Sonne, and 3 Holy Ghoſt, referendo ſingula ſingulis. 1 Gifts, they from the Spirit: 2 Offices, they from CHRIST the Lord: 3 Workes, they from GOD the Father. The Spirit, He gives wherewith: CHRIST, He appoints wherein: The Father, He workes where-about. The Spirit gives all to all: CHRIST, He appoints all for all: GOD the Father workes all in all.

You are not (here) to thinke theſe three ſo limited, as that all and every of them, every of the three, come not from all and every Perſon of the Trinitie. They come, all, from all. Our rule is the workes of the Trinitie (all, ſave thoſe that reflect upon and betweene themſelves inwardly) all outward, to any without them, are never divided. What one doth, all doe.

To make it plaine in theſe. Gifts here are aſcribed to the Spirit : But Saint Iames ſaith, Every one of them come from above, from the Father : and Saint Paul, he ſaith; CHRIST, when He aſcended up on high, He gave gifts unto men. So, the gifts come from the other two Perſons, no leſſe than from the Spirit. Offices are here aſſigned unto the Lord (that is) CHRIST : yet, by and by (at the XXVIII. verſe) it is ſaid of GOD the Father, that He ordained Apoſtles, and ſo goes on there, with other Offices of the Church. And in Act. XX. XXVIII. of the Holy Ghoſt it is ſaid, Poſuit vos Epiſcopos, that He placed them Biſhops : and they are chiefe Offices. So that, Offices are from the other two, as well as from CHRIST. Workes, they are here appropriate to GOD (that is) the Father : yet in Iohn V. with one breath CHRIST ſaith, My Father worketh hitherto, and ſo doe I worke as well as He: and in this Chapter, ſtraight after (at the eleventh verſe following) thus we read, All theſe things worketh one and the ſame Spirit. So, workes, as they are from the Father, ſo are they from the other two. And ſo, all and every of the three Perſons, equally intereſſed, in all and every of the three.

Iam. 1 17. Epheſ. 4 8. Ioh. 5. 17.

How is it then? How come they thus to be ſorted? Sure, rather in a kind of apt congruitie than otherwiſe; only in a fit and convenient reference to the peculiar, and (if I may ſo call it) the perſonall Attributes, which moſt properly ſuits with each Perſon whence they flow ; As thus. The Spirit is the eſſentiall Love of the Father, and the Sonne. Love then is his perſonall propertie : and love is bounteous ; and from bounty come gifts. So, the gifts, they, from the Spirit. CHRIST, He is the eſſentiall Wiſedome of the Father : and Sapientis eſt ordinare ; that, is Wiſedomes office (ſaith the Philoſopher :) So, the ordering of Places, or Offices fals to Him. GOD, we call Him the Father Almightie ; which ſheweth, Might or power is His proper Attribute ; and power it is, that worketh : So, the worke is His peculiar. And thus come they, thus ſorted. And ſo well we may repaire to each ſeverally for his ſeverall: Yet, with no excluſive to the reſt ; but to all, for all jointly, for all that. This needs not trouble any.

No more needs their order in ſtanding : The Holy Ghoſt, firſt ; and the Father laſt ; otherwiſe than in Baptiſme, or in the Doxologie. The workes appropriate to the Father, though they be in execution laſt ; yet are they in intention firſt. It is (as in a ſolemne traine) noviſſimi primi, the laſt goe firſt, and primi noviſſimi, the firſt come laſt : and yet, are firſt in order, though laſt in place. It is ſure, the worke is the end of both the reſt, and of all. Vnumquodque propter operationem ſuam · Every thing, be it what it will, gift or place, is and hath his being for the worke it hath to do. So, the worke is the chiefe of the three, and He the chiefe, whoſe the worke is, let His ſtanding be where it will.

II.

The Trinitie. Reall.

To the doing whereof, there be required three things. And where there be more than one required, our books teach us, ever to conſider them, firſt conjunctim, joyntly, altogether ; then, ſeriatim, each in order, as they ſtand ; and laſtly, ſeorſim, every one aſunder by it ſelfe.

I Of them jointly.

Ioyntly then. To the doing of ought there is requiſite, 1 habilitie of the partie, 2 authoritie for the partie, 3 and diligence in the partie. 1 Meet, and ſufficient men; 2 they, orderly called and placed ; 3 diligent and painefull at their buſineſſe. To ſupply theſe, here are, 1 A gift wherewith, 2 a place wherein, 3 a worke whereabout to imploy both : and none to take on him the worke, except firſt in a calling ; nor to take on him a calling, except he firſt have a gift meet for it. The Spirit is free of His gifts ; by which, habilitie : CHRIST, He invites us to ſome calling ; wherein, authoritie : GOD, He calls upon us to be at worke ; wherein, diligence is to be ſhewed.

Our duty it ſhall be to come, to be at theſe three doles, or diviſions ; to have our ſhare in them. Out of the firſt : 1 Every one to get himſelfe furniſhed with ſome gift. 2 Out of the ſecond : to ſee himſelfe beſtowed in ſome calling. 3 Out of the third:

third: having both theſe, to apply himſelfe to ſome worke; and namely, that worke, that belongs to his calling. In a word; every one to find himſelfe with a gift, in a calling, about a worke. Not having the gift, not to affect or enter the calling; nor having the calling, not to venture upon the worke.

By all meanes we are to avoide to fruſtrate this meeting of the Trinitie. To doe them this honour, to thinke all the three abſolutely needfull, and not any of the three more than needs. The Wiſedome of GOD, as it is never wanting in any thing that needs; ſo neither is it laviſh in any thing more than needs. And indeed, to hold any of the three ſuperfluous, is (in effect) to call in queſtion, whether ſome perſon in the Trinitie bee not ſuperfluous; namely, that perſon, whoſe diviſion we ſeeme to ſet ſo light by. All three then are to be had: We cannot miſſe any of them. If we miſſe the gift, all will be done unskillfully: if the calling, all diſorderly: if the worke, all unprofitably, and to no purpoſe. Then, not to leave out, or to leape over the gift; that is a contempt of the Spirit: Nor the calling; that is a treſpaſſe againſt CHRIST: Nor the worke; that is an affront to GOD Himſelfe. So much for conjunctim: now for ſeriatim.

2 Of them ſeriatim in their order.

All to be had, and in this order to be had, as here they ſtand marſhalled. The gift firſt; then the calling to authorize; then, the worke to make up all. But the gift, before the calling; and the calling, after the gift: the gift and calling both, before we be allowed to take any worke in hand. The number not abated, the order not inverted. Neither the calling, before the gift; nor the worke, before the calling and gift both be had. But every and each, in his order, and turne. This order kept, the Church will flouriſh, the Common-Wealth proſper, and all the world be the better. Wee have done with conjunctim, and ſeriatim; and now wee fall to ſeorſim, to the ſeverall diviſions. And firſt, to the Spirits, (that is) the gifts, and the nature of them.

3 Of each ſeverally 1 χαρίσματα. The Gifts.

The word is χαρίσματα. It is a word of the Chriſtian ſtyle; you ſhall not read it in any Heathen Author. We turne it, Gifts. Gifts is ſomewhat too ſhort: χάρισμα is more than a gift. But firſt, a gift it is. It is not enough with us Chriſtians, that a thing be had: with the Heathen man, it is: he cares for no more: he calls it ἕξις. Sure he is, he hath it; and that is all he lookes after: The Chriſtian adds further how he hath it: hath it not of himſelfe, ſpinns not his threed as the Spider doth, out of himſelfe; but hath it of another, and hath it of gift. It is given him: Vnicuique datur (it is the X I. verſe.) To every one is given. So, in ſtead of Ariſtotles word, ἕξις, habite, hee puts Saint Iames word, δῶσις or δώρημα: it is a gift, with him. Iam. 1. 17.

Free gifts.

And how a gift? Not do, ut des; give him as good a thing for it, and ſo was well worthy of it. No, but of free gift. And ſo to Saint Iames his word δώρημα, which is no more but a gift, he adds Saint Pauls here, χάρισμα, wherein there is χάρις, (that is) grace, and ſo a grace-gift, or gift of grace. This word, the pride of our nature digeſts not wel: φύσις, and φυσίωσις touch neere: Nature is eaſily puft or blowne up: but, χάρισμα hath a prick in it for the bladder of our pride: as if, either of our ſelves we had it, and received it not; or received it, but it was becauſe we earn'd it. No: it is gratis acceptus on our part: and gratis data, on His: freely given of Him, freely received by us; and that is χάρισμα right. Mat. 10. 8.

Given by the Spirit.

Freely given by Him; Who is that? The Spirit. The naturall man feeles, he hath a ſoule; and that is all the Spirit, he takes notice of, and is therefore called animalis homo (that is) nothing but ſoule: that, is all his Spirit. The Chriſtian takes notice of another Spirit, that is not his owne; (that is) GODS Spirit, the Holy Ghoſt: and that he is beholden to Him, who is one and the ſame Spirit. Elſe, ſo many men, ſo many ſpirits. But, this is but one and the ſame Spirit. Iude 19. Verſe 11.

Which one, and the ſame Spirit makes alſo againſt Paganiſme. For, they had nine Muſes, and three Graces, and (I wot not how many) Gods and Goddeſſes beſides. We goe but to one. All ours come from one, from the ſame Spirit. All our multitude is from Vnitie. All our diverſity is from identitie. All our diviſions from integritie; from one and the ſame entire Spirit. A free gift, from the free Spirit; a gift of grace from the Spirit of grace. So, from GOD, not from our ſelves: for CHRIST, not for our ſelves: by the Spirit, not by either our nature, or induſtrie, not alone: For, without the Spirit, all our nature and induſtrie will vaniſh, and nought come of them.

Thus it ſtands. The Heathen man thanks his owne wit and ſtudy, for his learning; and we ſeclude them not: But, this we ſay: When all is done with all our parts naturall, and all our acts habituall, if the Holy Ghoſt come not with His graces ſpirituall, no good will come of them. Therefore, wee to ſeeke after ſpirituall gifts, and 1 Cor. 14.1. ζηλόῦτε (it is the Apoſtles word) zealouſly to ſeeke them. For, though the Spirit give;
Zech. 12.10. yet we muſt ſue and pray for them. Zecharie makes but one Spirit of theſe two, 1 Grace and 2 Prayer. Prayer, as the breathing out: Grace, as the drawing in: Both make but one breathing. To pray, than: and (more then to pray) to ſtirre them up; the word is ἀναζωπυρεῖν, to blow them, and make them burne, as is uſed to be done to fire; and as is to be done to the firie tongues of this day: Elſe you will have but a blaze of them; and all elſe, but cinders, cold and comfortleſſe geere (God knowes.) But ſo all are to be ſuiters, and to labour, to have a part in this dealing.

By way of Diviſion. From the Spirit then they come: but by way of diviſion. Not, ſo as ſome, all; ſome, never a whit; but by way of diviſion. The nature whereof is, neither all gifts, Verſe 7. to one; nor one gift, to all: But (as it followes) ἑκάστῳ, unicuique, to each ſome: neither donum hominibus, one gift to all men: nor dona homini, all gifts to one man: but dona hominibus, gifts to men: Every one his part of the divident; For, ſuch is the law of dividing.

1 In Kind. Which diviſion is of two ſorts: 1 either of the thing it ſelfe in kind, 2 or of the meaſure. 1. The kind; which the Apoſtle ſpeakes of in the ſeventh Chapter, and ſeventh verſe; To every one is given his ſpeciall, and proper gift; to one in this kind, to another in that. GOD ſo tempering, As the naturall body, that in it, the eye ſhould not have the gift to goe, but to ſee; and the foot not to ſee, but to goe: And as the great body of the 1 King. 5.8. 11. world; In it, Hirams country ſhould yeeld excellent timber and ſtone, and Salomons Country, good wheat and oyle, which is the ground of all commerce: So, the ſpirituall body; that in it, Paul ſhould be deepe learned, Apollo ſhould be of better ſpeech: one need another; one ſupplie the need of another; ones abundance, the others want.

2 In meaſure. But diviſion is not of the kind onely, but of the meaſure alſo. Diverſe meaſures there be in one and the ſame kind. Every one (ſaith the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 4.7.) according (not Matt. 25.15. Luk. 19.13. to the gift, but) to the meaſure of the gift of CHRIST. For, to ſome gave He talents (ſaith Saint Matthew;) To ſome, but pounds (ſaith Saint Luke:) Great odds. And of either, to one gave He five, to another three, to a third but one: in a different degree ſenſibly. To each, his portion in a proportion: His Ghomer the law calls it; the Goſpell, his dimenſum. And remember this well. For, not only the kind will come to be conſidered, but the meaſure too, when we come to ſee, who be in, and who be out at the Spirits diviſion. And ſo much for the Spirit.

2 The places or calling. If we have done with the gifts we come to the places: For where the Spirit ends, CHRIST beginnes. So as, if no gift; ſtay here and goe no further; never meddle with the calling, or worke. But what if we have a gift; may we not fall to work ſtraight? No but a calling is firſt to be had, yer we put forth our hand to it. Which nemo ſibi
Heb. 5.4. ſumit, niſi qui vocatus, No man, to take on him, unleſſe he be called: Though a gift then, though a good gift, not (eo ipſo) to thinke himſelfe ſufficiently warranted to fall a working. There goes more to it, than ſo. We muſt paſſe CHRISTS hands too, and not leape over His head. For, after the Holy Ghoſt hath done with us, CHRIST will appoint every one of us his calling.

Which are divided for order. Of which diviſion the ground is, That every man is not, hand over head, confuſedly to meddle with every matter; but all is to be done κατὰ τάξιν, orderly. Each to know ſome reade diverſities. But it is not ſo well (that.) Things, that are diverſe, may lye together confuſedly on heapes: But each muſt be ſorted to his ſeverall ranke and place; elſe are they not divided. So as, diviſion is the better reading: and diviſion is for order.

And order is a thing ſo highly pleaſing to GOD, as the three Perſons in Trinitie (we ſee) have put themſelves in order, to ſhew how well they love it. And order is a thing ſo neerly concerning us, as breake order once, and breake both your ſtaves (ſaith GOD in Zecharie) both that of Beauty, and that of Bonds. The ſtaffe of Beauty: For, no εὐσχημοσύνη, no manner of decencie or comelineſſe without it; but all out of faſhion. The ſtaffe of Bonds: For, no στρέωμα, no kind of ſteadineſſe or conſtancie, but all looſe without it. All falls backe to the firſt Tohu, and Bohu. For, all is Tohu (empty, and voyd) if the Spirit fill not with His gifts: And all is Bohu (a diſordered rude Chaos of confuſion) if CHRIST order it not by His Places and Callings. Every body falls to be doing with every thing, and ſo nothing done: nothing well done, I am ſure. Every man therefore, what ever his gift be, to ſtay till he have his place and ſtanding by CHRIST aſſigned him. It is judged needfull (this) even in ſecular matters. Write one never ſo faire a hand, if he have not the calling of a publike Notarie, his writing is not authenticall. Be one never ſo deepe a Lawyer, if he have not the place of a Iudge, he can give no definitive ſentence. No remedy then: there muſt be diviſion of places, of adminiſtration, no leſſe than of gifts.

Gen. 1. 2. תהו בהו

Will you know what thoſe places be? Eight of them are reckoned up at the XXVIII. Verſe. Not to trouble you with thoſe that were erected, as needfull at firſt, but were not to endure but for a time: Thoſe that were to endure, are reduced to three, and ſtand together, 1 Teachers, 2 Helpers, 3 Governours. A threefold diviſion, taught even the heathen by the light of nature, in their Religion. They had them all three in their: 1 Ἱεροφάντας, their Teachers; 2 Ἱεροδούλους, their Helpers; 3 Ἱερομνήμονας, their Governours. The very ſame preſcribed by GOD to His people: 1 their Teachers, the Prieſts: 2 their Helpers, the Levites: 3 their Governours, the Sonnes of Aaron, called, Neſiim, as true and proper Hebrew for Prælates, as Prælati is Latine. The ſame is knowen in the Church of Chriſt through all antiquitie: 1 Presbyteri, to teach: Diaconi, to help: 3 Epiſcopi, to governe: And never any other.

What the places be.

All theſe three here goe under the name of Διάκονοι, the proper termie of the loweſt of the three. We turne it Adminiſtration: It is (indeed) miniſterie or ſervice; and that on foote, and through the duſt: For, ſo is the nature of the word. An ill word for pride; who had rather heare of words ſounding of dominion, than of ſervice; ſpecially this ſervice: For, it is but the order of Deaconſhip; and pride would be at leaſt more than a Deacon. Yet, ſo we are all ſtyled here, and no other name for any. The very higheſt are but ſo. The King himſelfe, twice made a Deacon (Rom. 13.) Gods Deacon: no other title. The beſt King that was (David) is ſaid but to have ſerved his time Act. 13. Served, that was all. The glorious lights of heaven are ſaid (Deu. 4.) to be created in miniſterium, but for our ſervice. The Angels of heaven are but miniſtring ſpirits, Heb. 1. Nay CHRIST Himſelfe is ſtyled no otherwiſe (Ro. 15.) but that He was a Miniſter of the Circumciſion. He that is LORD of all, and gives all the offices, calls His owne but ſo.

Rom. 13. 4.
Act. 13. 36.
Deut. 4. 19.
Heb. 1. 14.
Rom. 15. 8.

Theſe places we ſayd before, are divided for order. Now I adde further; they are divided, not ſcattered, or let fall: For, that is caſuall. Dividing is not ſo: but (as it is in the XI. ver.) prout vult; a voluntarie act. He that diſtributes, knowes what, and to whom He doth it. Places therefore are to be divided by knowledge: not ſcattered or ſcambled for, by hap and hazard. The Winde is to blow no man to preferment (Pſal. LXXV.) It is the LORD, that is to diſpoſe of them.

Divided they be; not ſcattered.

Pſal. 75. 6.

And how to diſpoſe or divide them? According to the former diviſions of the Spirit. That theſe ſhould firſt take place: the ſecond depend upon thoſe firſt: none taken to the ſecond, till he have paſt the firſt. For, Chriſts Places, are for the Holy Ghoſts Gifts. Without inſpiring with the grace, no aſpiring to the place there ſhould bee. The Holy Ghoſt is by His gifts, to point out thoſe, that ſhould be taken into theſe adminiſtrations:

miniſtrations. And where Chriſt placeth, ſo it is. For He placeth none, but whom the

No man to CHRIST, but by and through the Holy Ghoſt : nor to the calling, but by and through the gift. Each one to have a calling. What is then to be done, that CHRIST be not neglected, and His call ? That every one betake himſelfe to ſome calling, or other. In the Miniſterie, all : All Miniſters; Miniſters, either of the Church, or of the State and Common-Wealth: But, all Miniſters. According to his gift. To be in ſome calling : but withall, to have a gift meet for that calling. But, if not at the firſt dole (the Spirits) not at the ſecond (CHRISTS:) no gift there, no place here. Can any man deviſe to ſpeake with more reaſon, than doth the Apoſtle (in the

Have you miſ-ſpent the time when you ſhould have laboured for the gift ? CHRIST hath no place for you. Whom the Spirit furniſhed with gifts, for them it is CHRIST provideth places : for them, and none elſe.

In Kind. 1 And yet, not every place for every gift, neither: But to have a calling proper to his gift. Proper to it, for the kind; not to be miſ-ſorted into a place no waies meet: his gift lying one way, his place another. But put the right gift in the right place.

In Meaſure. 2 Proper for the kind, and proper for the meaſure alſo. For, as there be meaſures in gifts, ſo there be degrees in places, to anſwer them. And one is not to thruſt himſelfe into a place diſproportioned to the portion of his gifts (the Apoſtle calls it
1 Cor.10.14. ὑπερεκτείνειν : Ἐκτείνειν, is to extend, to ſtretch himſelfe to the full of his meaſure : ὑπερεκτείνειν, is to ſtretch himſelfe beyond it; to tenter himſelfe farre beyond his ſcantling:) But if a meane gift, a meane calling to content him. Durus ſermo; for their is none ſo meane in gift, that he undervalues his gift, for any place, yea even of the beſt worth. You
2 Chro.26.16. may ſee theſe two: (1 the kind, and 2 the degree :) the kind, in Vzziah : Hee had no calling to his worke of incenſe, of burning incenſe; not at all. What became of him ?
2 Sam.6.7. You may reade in his forehead. The degree, in Vzzah : He had a calling; was of the Tribe : went only beyond his degree; preſſed to touch the Arke, which was more than a Levite might do, and was ſtrucken dead for it by GOD. GOD no leſſe angry with him, that went beyond the degree of his calling, than with Vzziah, that had no kind of calling at all. None that is in therefore, to over-reach or preſume above his degree, but to keepe him within compaſſe.

Now the gifts be dealt, and the places fild: the Spirits gifts put into CHRISTS (that is) into right places. Now fall we to the third, to GODS diviſion, to ſet them to worke. Every thing (we ſaid) hath his being, for the worke it is to doe. Gifts, calling and all for the worke. For, if the worke follow not, the gift is idle; you may caſt it away; the calling is idle, you may caſt it off. A vocation it might bee; a vocation

it is not. The gift is for the calling : the gift and calling (both) are for the worke.

And will you obſerve the proceeding here of the Spirit firſt? The Spirit is neereſt reſembled to breath: Spiro, whence it comes, is to breathe. Breath (you know) is in the noſthrills : they be two; through, and from them both, the Spirit proceeds. To anſwer theſe, GOD the Father, CHRIST the Lord, are two; from them both, by way of ſpiration, comes the Spirit, the ſacred Breath of them both.

Now then ſecondly, as the Father doth beget the Sonne, and from them both proceeds the Holy Spirit; So, the gift to beget the calling (of right ſo it ſhould) and they both to produce the Worke. And as no man comes to CHRIST, but by the Holy Ghoſt : So, no man to the calling, but by the gift. And as no man comes to the Father, but by Chriſt : ſo no man to the worke, but by the calling.

3 The Worke. ἔργον.

Not to the worke. The very word worke (ἔργον) at once condemnes three, ἄεργον, παρεργον, περεργον. Ἄεργον firſt. Such as are idle bodies; doe no worke at all : ſpend their daies in vanitie; conſume whole yeares, in doing juſt nothing. This (of workes) is GODS diviſion : who is not (Himſelfe;) would not have us, idle. Vſque operatur, ſtill He workes; ſtill He would have us ſo to doe. Not as Ionas : get us a gourd, and ſit under it, and ſee what will become of Ninive; but ſtirre not a foot to helpe it. Not to lye ſoaking in the broth (as Ezekiel ſaid of the great men in his daies:) The Citie is the caldron, the wealth, is the broth, and in the broth they lye ſoaking, and all is well. Saint Paul calls them the Lolligoes of the land. His word is καλαργεῖν; The ſixe daies, and the ſeventh, to them both alike; Holy-day Chriſtians. The Poet ſaid Ἄεργοις αἰὲν ἑορτή: every day is Holy day with idle people. Out of this diviſion, out of operations, they.

The next ſort, they will not be idle; but it were as good they were. They will be doing, but it is παρεργον all they doe : Nothing to any purpoſe; from and beſide it quite. Opus quo nihil opus, ſome needleſſe worke; quæ nihil attinet, as good let alone: leaving undone, that they ſhould and are to doe, and catching at ſomewhat elſe, and mightily buſying themſelves about that; and all to no end. Anni eorum meditati ſunt ſicut aranea, ſaith the Pſalme : Very buſy they be; but it is about weaving cobwebs : no body ſhall weare them, or be the warmer for them : to no profit in the world.

Pſal 90 10.

And as theſe deale with quæ nihil attinet; So the laſt (περιεργον) with thoſe, quæ nihil ad eos attinet, that concerne not them at all. That will bee doing, but it is with that, they have nothing to doe. There are diviſions of workes, and they worke out of their diviſion : love to be buſy; to be dealing with any bodies worke, ſave their owne. Which is lightly the buſy-bodies occupation, condemned by the Apoſtle, not in men only (2 Theſſ. 3.) but even in the other ſex, too (1 Tim. 5.) For they alſo will be medling : πολυπραγμων is of both genders.

1 Tim.5.13.

I told you before, the callings were founded upon order, and to keepe them, ſo have their ὁροθεσίαι, limits, or bounds. And they do all ἀτάκτως περιπατεῖν, walke out of order, diſorderly breake the pales, and over they go; that leaving their owne, become (as S. Peters word is) ἀλλοτριεπισκοποι, Biſhops of other mens Dioceſes: Do no good in their own, ſpend their time in finding fault with others. A thing not to be endured in any body. Take the naturall body for example, wherein the Spirit, bloud, choler, and other humors are to keepe and containe themſelves, to hold every one in his owne proper veſſell : as, bloud in the veines; choler in the gall : And if once they be out of them, the bloud out of the veine makes an Apoſtume; the choler out of the gall makes a Iaundiſe all over the body. Beleeve it, this is an evill ſickeneſſe under the Sunne, that the diviſion of workes is not kept more ſtrictly. They are divided according to the callings : Every worke is not for every calling. For then what needs any dividing? But as the calling is, ſo are the works to be : every one to intend his owne, wherein (it is preſumed) his skill lyes; and not to buſie himſelfe with others : For, that is περιεργον. And theſe are the three errors about operations.

1 Pet.4.15.

It will not be amiſſe, if we look yet a little further into this word. For, it is ἐνέργημα, which is more than ἔργον. For ἐνέργημα, is not every worke : it is an in-wrought worke. A worke wrought by us ſo, as in us alſo. And both, it may be. For ἐνεργεία and συνεργεία' take not away, one the other. So then by our ſelves, as by ſome other beſide our ſelves; and that is GOD, who is ſaid here to worke all in all.

All in all. If we take it at the uttermoſt extent, it will reach, then we muſt be well aware to ſever the defect, or deformitie of the worke from the worke it ſelfe; as, well we may. Moving, is the worke; halting, is the deformitie. Moving, that comes from the ſoule, is wrought by it: halting (the deformity) not from the ſoule, whence the moving comes; but that is cauſed by the crookedneſſe of the leg. So is the evill of the worke: The defect, from us; the worke, from GOD, and that His.

But, of all our good, all our well-wrought workes, of them, we ſay not onely,
Ioh. 15.5. Sine Me nihil poteſtis facere, We can doe none of them without Him : But further, we ſay
Eſay 26.12. with the Prophet, Domine, omnia opera noſtra operatus es in nobis : In them, He doth not only co-operate with us from without; but, even from within (as I may ſay) in-ope-
Heb. 13.21. rate them in us; ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, working in you. Then, if there goe another Workeman to them beſides our ſelves, we are not to take them wholly to our ſelves. But, if that other Workeman be GOD; we will allow Him for the principall Workeman, at the leaſt. That, upon the whole matter, if our abilitie be but of gift; if our calling, bee but a ſervice; if our very worke, but ἐνέργημα, a thing wrought in us; cecidit Babylon, pride fals to the ground: theſe three have layd it flat.

But beſides this, there are three points more in ἐνέργημα. I will touch them firſt.
1. In us they are ſaid to be wrought; to ſhew, our workes ſhould not be skrewed from us; woond out of us with ſome wrinch from without, without which nothing would come from us by our will, if we could otherwiſe chooſe: Ἐξεργήματα, theſe properly. But ἐνεργήματα, from within : hath the principium motus, there, and thence: And ſo, are naturall and kindly workes.

2 Next, from within : To ſhew, they are not taken-on-works, done in hypocriſie: So the outſide faire, what is within, it skills not. But, that there be truth in the inward
Pſal. 51.6. parts; that there it be wrought, and that thence it come.

3 And laſt, if it be an ἐνέργημα, it hath an energie (that is) a worke-manſhip, ſuch as that the gift appeares in it. For energie implies, it is not done utcunque, but work-manlike done. Elſe there is an aërgie, but no energie in it. And even the very word [of diviſion] comes to as much. Dividing, implies skill to hit the joynt, right: For, that, is to divide. To cut at venture, quite beſide the joynt, it skills not where, through skin and bones and all; that, is to choppe and mangle, and not to divide. Diviſion hath art, ever. And this for GODS diviſion, the diviſion of workes. And ſo now you have all three.

We have ſet downe the order. Will you now reflect upon it a little, and ſee the variation of the compaſſe, and ſee how theſe diviſions are all put out of order; and who be in, and who be out at every one of them? Firſt, whereas the gift and the calling are (and ſo are to bee) Relatives, neither without the other; There are men of no gifts (to ſpeake of) that may ſeeme to have come too late, or to have beene away quite, at the firſt of the Spirits dealing: No ſhare they have of it; yet what do they? Fairely ſtride over the gifts; never care for them; and ſtep into the calling over the gifts, and ſo over the Holy Ghoſts head. Where they ſhould beginne with the gift, the firſt thing they beginne with, is to get them a good place. Let the gift come after, if it will: or if it doe not, it skills not greatly. They are well : they lye ſoaking in the broth, in the meane time. This neglect of the gift, in effect is a plaine contempt of the Spirit, as if there were no great need of the Holy Ghoſt.

Thus it ſhould be: As one ſpeeds at the firſt diviſion, ſo he ſhould at the ſecond. If no grace from the Spirit; no place with CHRIST. If ſome one, but a meane one, let his place bee according. Hee with the two mites, not in the place of him with the five five talents: (or as one well expreſt it) not little-learned Aurelius, Biſhop of great Carthage, and great-learned Saint Auguſtine, Biſhop of little Hippo. This is a treſpaſſe ſure, againſt the firſt diviſion: which reſpecteth not only the gifts in ſpecie, but in meaſure too. Proportion the places, to the proportion of the gifts: which proportion (wee know) is both waies broken, whether a low gift have a high place, or a rich gift be let lie in a poore place; contrarie to the minde of CHRIST, who would have the degree of the place, as neere as could be, to the meaſure of the gift.

There ſhould be but one GOD. In the Text, there is no more. But here is another. The Apoſtle calls him the GOD of this world: who hath his ἐνεργούμενος, who works too: and his works tend to deface, and damnifie the Church, all he may. 2 Cor. 4.4.

Nor, there is but one Lord here, to divide places. But by a jure patronatus, other Lords there are, that make diviſions, and ſubdiviſions of them: Of whom the poore ſubdivided places may ſay (with Eſay) O Lord, other Lords beſides thee have had the diſpoſing of us. Eſay 26.10.

So, there is but one Spirit. But, another Spirit there is abroad in the world. Hee that carried CHRIST up to the top of the mountaine, and talkt of Tibi dabo, as if he had gifts too. Matt. 4.9.

I ſhall be ſorry to make any other diviſion of gifts, than thoſe of the Holy Ghoſt. But, made it muſt be, which the world hath made, and makes daily; and makes more accompt of them, than of theſe here in the Text. And indeed, ſuch accompt, as the Holy Ghoſt may ſit ſtill, and keepe his gifts undivided well enough. The other Spirit divides other manner gifts, than the Holy Ghoſt hath any. The gifts of the Holy Ghoſt are dona pectoris, came out of the breaſt: You would thinke, the others come out of the breaſt too; but they come but out of the boſome. And in ſpeculation wee ſay, the Holy Ghoſts gifts are farre above theſe; but, in practice, they are daily found to be far above them in power. For, the Wiſe-man ſaith, Dilatant viam hominis, theſe gifts have a power to make away through never ſo thick a preaſe; power, to make any doore fly open afore them. They ſpeake of graces: They make any, that come with them, more gracious, than theſe of Saint Paul. Nay, they will diſgrace them, and marre their faſhion quite. Prover. 18.16.

But then thoſe gifts hold not of this Feaſt; not of Pentecoſt; but hold of the Feaſt of Simon and Iude, they. The Church hath joyned thoſe two Saints, in one Feaſt: And the Divell (in many things elſe, GODS ape) hath made a like joyning of his too, in imitation of the true. His Simon, is Simon Magus, not Simon Zelotes; and Iude, Iudas Iſcariot, not Iudas the brother of Iames; no kinne to him. Simon, he came off roundly, προσήνεγκε χρήματα, offered frankly, would come to the price. And Iudas, he would know what they would give, how thankfull they would be; and it was done, and there goeth a bargaine. Theſe two are like enough to agree. And thus is the Holy Ghoſt defeated: bought out, He and His gifts by Simon ſtill. And thus is CHRIST betrayed in His places; and that, by Iudas ſtill. This wicked fraternitie of Simon and Iude, are the bane of the Church, unto this day. Iudas, that ſold CHRIST, like enough to make ſale of CHRISTS places. Simon, that would buy the Holy Ghoſt (had He beene to be ſold) as like to buy out the Holy Ghoſts gifts, as the Holy Ghoſt Himſelfe. And this fault in the firſt concoction, is never after amended in the ſecond. For, with ſuch as theſe GOD will never co-operate: never comes there any fruit of ſuch. Enough, if any thing were enough. But thus CHRISTS places goe againſt CHRISTS will. Act. 8.18. Matt. 26.15.

Thus have yee a calling without a gift. What ſay you now to a gift without a calling? Theſe, are not for the Holy Ghoſt: Theſe, care as little for CHRIST. Some ſuch there are; no man muſt ſay, but gifts they have, ſuch as they be: But they care not greatly for troubling themſelves with any calling. They are even as well without. Hop up and downe as graſhoppers, hither and thither, but place they will have none; yet their fingers itch, and they cannot hold them; doing they muſt be: and if they have got but the fagg end of a gift, have at the worke; be doing they will, of their owne heads (un-cald by any ſo, that have right to call:) And for default of others, even make no 2 more adoe, but call themſelves: lay their owne hands upon their owne heads; utterly againſt CHRISTS mind, and rule. And ſo over CHRISTS head they come, from the gift to the worke, without any calling at all.

3 Well in theſe two they have ſomewhat yet: Either a calling without a gift, or a gift without a calling. What ſay you to them, that have neither; but fetch their run for all that, and leape quite over gift and calling, CHRIST and the Holy Ghoſt (both) and chop into the worke at the firſt daſh? That put themſelves into buſineſſe, which they have neither fitneſſe for, nor calling to? Yet no man can keepe them, but meddle they will, and in Church-matters ſpecially: there, ſooneſt of all: And print us Catechiſmes, and compoſe us Treatiſes; ſet out prayers and new Pſalmes, as if every forrenner were free, and might ſet up with us. Good LORD, what the poore Church ſuffers in this kind!

4 Yet have you a fourth, no leſſe ill than any of theſe. And theſe be ſuch as have gifts and callings both, it cannot be denied; yet fall ſhort at the worke: Worke not at all. Wrap up their talent: fold it up fairely in a napkin, and lay it by them. Let their calling lie fallow: get them into Ionas gourd, and ſit gazing there; or into Ezekiels caldron, and lie ſoaking there. Worke who will, and worke GOD in whom Hee will; in them He ſhall worke nothing: Nothing (ſo) to any publike good. Theſe have great accompt to make to GOD, for thus treading under their foot His diviſion. Nay, to all three: to CHRIST alſo for the contempt of His calling; and to the Holy Ghoſt too, for burying His gifts.

Luk. 19.20.
Ezek. 11.3.

So have you 1 a calling and no gift; 2 a gift, and no calling; 3 neither gift, nor calling, but worke for all that; 4 both gift, and calling, and no worke not for all that. All awry; all in obliquitie, for want of obſerving the order here eſtabliſhed. Theſe obliquities to avoid.

III. The Trinitie actuall.

It is the will of GOD, that this Trinitie Reall ſhould meet, and grow into Vnitie, as the Perſonall it ſelfe doth: that ſo this here, on earth beneath, may grow, and be conformed to that there, in heaven above. The former three diviſions, in the former three Verſes, all meete in the Vnitie, and manifeſtation, in this fourth Verſe: which is the Spirits Vnitie. And ſo come we now about to the Spirit againe. For, all this dividing is not enough: But when, the doles and diviſions of all three is done, then beginnes the Spirit anew. For, theſe muſt not be concealed, but be all manifeſted. And that muſt be by the tongues of this day. Which is it, that giveth the Holy Ghoſt a more ſpeciall intereſt than the reſt; and makes the Feaſt to be His. For hitherto, they, had as good a part as He.

2 Manifeſting.

If you marke it, dividing and giving, is a kind of inſpiring, or breathing in; uttering and manifeſting, a kind of breathing out againe of that was inſpired. And theſe two are two naturall and kindly acts of the Spirit in us, By Breathing in, to receive; by breathing out, to utter it out, or manifeſt it.

And it hath good coherence, and followes upon the worke well (this manifeſtation.) For, every mans worke is to make him manifeſt. No better way to take true notice of any, than by it. It is not Loquere; it is Operare, ut te videam. CHRIST ſaith not auribus or ſermonibus; but Operibus credite (that is) oculis credite. For, workes be manifeſt and may be ſeene.

Ioh. 10.38.

It followes well likewiſe upon diviſion. For, 1. Firſt, diviſion doth make manifeſt. Things that are propounded in groſſe, eo ipſo are obſcure; and are therefore divided, that they may more diſtinctly, and plainely appeare. 2. And ſecond, manifeſtation it ſelfe is nothing but dividing. For, what is divided unto us by the three Perſons, it is required, that we ſhould divide unto others; and our dividing it among others, is that, which here is called manifeſting. That which we receive, when we make manifeſt, we are ſayd to divide, and to diſtribute that which came unto us from the former three diviſions.

1 Pet. 4.10. But this is ſure without manifeſting, all diviſions availe nothing, all the πολυποικιλος χαρις, χάρις, all the manifold varietie of the graces are to no purpoſe, no more then a treaſure divided into never ſo many bags, if it be hidden and not manifeſt, is to any profit, or any the better for it. Nay it holds in all three. 1. In the gifts. We are not to rake them up, but to ſtirre them up, and make them burne. 2. In the calling. We are not to be aſhamed of it, but to profeſſe it manifeſtly, as he did, Non me pudet Evangelij. Rom.1.16. 3. In the worke. We are not to worke inward, in a back-roome; but to open our ſhop, ſet out our wares, and utter them. Divided and not manifeſted (that is) the tongues are cloven, but they have no fire; nothing to give light by. And light it is that maketh manifeſt. Which light is not to be hid under a buſhell, but to be ſett upon a candleſtick; or (as this Feaſt gives) not to be kept in the ſhadow, but brought out into the Sunne; the bright and White Sunne of this Day. Matt.5.15.

3. Profiting.

Manifeſted then. And why? For μηδὲν εἰκῇ, nothing is to be done in vaine: but in vaine, if to no end. To ſome end then. For πάντα ἐφ' ἑαυτοῖς: and ἐφ' ἑαυτοῖς is heere in the Text. It falls not into a wiſe man (much leſſe, into the onely wiſe GOD) to keepe all this dividing and manifeſting, and all to no end. To know that end then, that we runne not in vaine, labour not in vaine, have not the gifts, take not on us the calling, do not the workes in vaine, receive not the grace of GOD in vaine, nay receive not our owne ſoules in vaine. 2.Cor.6.1. Els, we fall upon the other capitall error, about Omega, about our vltimus finis. To know our part then. For, Ignoranti quem portum petat, nullus ſecundus eſt ventus, He that knowes not whether he is bound, no wind in the skie is good for him. To know our end then, whether to referre all. The gift is for the calling, and they both for the worke, and they all three are for manifeſtation.

But then take heed of making manifeſtation, the end of it ſelfe, and goe no further. There are that make that their end; that do it, φαντασιοῦνται (the Apoſtle's word) to make a faire ſhew: to ſpread their feathers is all the vſe ſome have of their diviſion. CHRIST's kindred would have made it CHRIST's end, and ſhouldred him forward to it: If you can doe, as they ſay you can doe, then get you up to Hieruſalem, ſeeke to manifeſt your ſelfe there, that you may be knowne for ſuch: Winne credit, and become famous. But CHRIST came to another end. And the Chriſtian's rule is, Nothing for vaine-glorie, either by provoking, or by emulation. It is but Omicron, this: it is not Omega, Ioh.7.3.

Wherefore then are we to manifeſt? πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον: heere is our part; this is our end, to profit withall. Whither Paul, Apollo, or Cephas; whether gifts, places, or works, all are for this. This, is the end of all.

Farre they are from this end, that have uſe of all three, but οὐχὶ συμφορᾶι, not συμφέρον (that is) not to doe good, but to doe a ſhrewd turne withall, now and then. Nay, that will not ſticke to boaſt (one there was that did ſo; of whom the Pſalme, Quid gloriaris? was made) how they are hable to doe one a diſpleaſure by their place, and pay him home, if need be. As if officium came of officiendo, of ſtanding in another mans light, of doing other men hurt. Otherwiſe (I truſt) themſelves take no hurt by their offices. But take this for a rule, the Apoſtle gives it two ſeverall times: There is no power given to any to deſtruction, or to doe harme; for edification it is, all that is; to doe good with, and therein to be made manifeſt. We may not hatch cockatrice eggs to doe miſchiefe unto any, as they doe, to ſuch as eate them. Pſal.52.1. 2.Cor.10.8. 2.Cor.13.10. Eſay.59.5.

But all πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον. It is a compound word, and we will take it in peeces. Firſt, φέρω, which is to [1] bring, to [2] bring in, to [3] bring forth, to [4] bring with. To bring in, what? What profit is there (ſaith the Pſalme?) To bring in ſome profit. To bring forth, what? What fruit had you (ſaith the Apoſtle?) To bring forth ſome fruit. To bring with it, what? That I may receive mine owne with advantage (ſaith he that gave the Talents:) To bring with it ſome advantage. Away with all (ſaith Elihu in Iob) of which it may be ſaid, it did me no good, no good came of it. Theſe ſame vana & non profutura away with them (ſaith Samuel) never looke after them. But what ſaith GOD by His Prophet? Ego ſum Deus tuus docens te vtilia: He teacheth us nothing, but that which will doe us good. And what by the Apoſtle? Theſe things are good and profitable for men, when he was in the Theame of good works. For, Pſal.30.9. Rom.6.21. Luk.19.23. Iob.33.27. ולא שוה לי 1.Sam.12.21. Eſay 48.17. Tit.3.8.

as we are forbidden to hatch cockatrice eggs, things that will doe harme: ſo are we Eſay. 59. 5. alſo in the ſame place, to weave ſpider's webbs, things very finely ſpun, but for no bodies wearing; none the better for them. Our ἐργήματα muſt be ἔιρηνήματα, works tending to profit with, els are they not the right works.

Prov. 30. 15. But φέρον is not enough; to bring in. Bring in, Bring in, cries the horſleeche's two daughters, till their skin crack: But it is onely for themſelves; and that is not the right. For, it is not ſingulare commodum (this profit) our owne private gaine. Heere is yet another part. Heere is σύν (that is) con, which ever argues a communitie; a profit redounding to more then our ſelves. For, συμφέρον properly is collatitium, where there be a great many; bring every one his ſtocke, and lay them together, and make a common bank for them all. Iuſt as doe the members in the naturall body. Every one conferrs his ſeverall gift, office, and worke, to the generall benefit of the whole. Even as they did in the Law. Some offered gold; others, ſilke; others, linnen; and ſome, goate's haire; and all to the furniture of the Tabernacle. And ſemblably we to lay together all the graces, places, works, that we have, and to imploy them to the advancement of the common faith, and to the ſetting forward of the common Salvation.

For, the common Salvation, is the profit heere meant. The Apoſtle himſelfe ſaith it
1. Cor. 1. 33. plainely; not ſeeking mine own profit or benefit, but the profit of many. And how? that they may have lands or leaſes? No: But that they may be ſaved. Which is the true profit, redounding of all theſe, and which in the end will prove the beſt profit: which Matt. 16 26. if any attaine not, What will it profit him, if he winne the whole world? To which port we be all bound: to which port, GOD ſend us.

And into this, as into the maine Ciſterne, doe all theſe diviſions, manifeſtations and all run and emptie themſelves. All gifts, offices, workes are for this. Yea the bleſſed Trinitie it ſelfe, in their dividing, do all aime at this. And, this attained, all will be to Pax in terris, the quiet and peaceable ordering of things heere on earth; and to Gloria in excelſis, the high pleaſure of Almighty GOD.

So come we about, and returne againe to the firſt point, we began with (that is) to the bleſſed Trinitie. From them are theſe: and if from them, for them; if from their grace, for their glorie: the glory of them that gave, ordered, and wrought: Gave the gifts to us; ordered the places for us; wrought the workes in us. If we, the profit; they, the praiſe: the rather, for that even that praiſe ſhall redound to our profit alſo: the higheſt profit of all, the gaining of our ſoules, and the gayning of them a reſt in the heavenly kingdome with all the three Perſons.

II SAM. Chap. XVIII. Ver. XXXII.

Cui reſpondens CVSHI, &c.

And CVSHI anſwered, The enemies of my Lord the King, and all that riſe againſt Thee, to doe Thee hurt, be as that young man is.

THAT yong man was Abſalom: And hee was now hanging upon an oke, with three darts through him. Like him doth Cuſhi wiſh, all may be, that doe as he did (that is) bee the Kings enemics, and riſe up againſt him. For, I finde in the Text a dangerous treaſon plotted againſt King David: plotted, but defeated; and Abſalom the author of it, brought to a wretched end. Good newes ther of brought by Cuſhi that ſaw it. And that good newes heere concluded with this wiſh, That all the Kings enemies may ſpeede no better, no otherwiſe than hee ſped. For all the world, like glad tydings doth this Day affoord us, in a like memorable example of GODS juſt proceeding, againſt a couple of like treacherous wretches.

A barba-

A barbarous and bloudy reaſon they imagined againſt our Sovereign. GOD brought their miſchiefe upon their owne heads, Et facti ſunt ſicut Abſalom. And we are here now to renew with joy, the memorie of theſe glad tydings; and withall, to pray Cuſhi-his prayer, and all to ſay Amen to it, That the like end may ever come to the like attempts. Laſt yeare we changed but one word; Dauid into Iames: we change no more now, but the number; one, into two. The enemies of my Lord, be as that young man, ſaith Cuſhi. Say we, The enemies of our Lord, be as thoſe two young men were; thoſe two bre-
Gen. 49.5. thren in miſchiefe: I will not doe them that honour, to name them; no more than Cuſhi did him here.

The words we reade, as a prayer; they may alſo be read as a prophecie: Either, Let them be; or, They ſhall be as that yong man is (for, the verbe is the future tenſe.) They have no other way, in Hebrew, to expreſſe their Optative but ſo: that hard it is, many times, to ſay whether it be a prayer, or a prediction, that ſo runnes in the future; and, for ought I know, it muſt bee left to the diſcretion of the Tranſlator, to take which hee will, ſince it may be both. As, Pſal. 21. either the King ſhall rejoice, by way of foretelling: or, Let the King rejoice, by way of wiſhing. The ſure way is, to take it both wayes: ſo, we ſhall be ſure not to miſſe Cuſhi's meaning. And ſo will we doe (for ſo we may doe) even take it both waies; for it is both: both a good prayer, and a true prophecie. And prayer and prophecie ſort well together: Ὁ τις ϑέλει τοῦτο καὶ οἴεται (ſaith the Philoſopher:) Affectiones facilè faciunt opiniones (ſaith the Schoole man.) Our wiſhes we would alwaies have ominous, and our prayer turne into the nature of a prediction; what we pray for rightly, we would gladly perſwade our ſelves, ſhall be certainly.

The Diviſion Of this propheticall prayer then. 1 As a prayer, firſt: 2 then, as a prophecie. Pray-
I. er is of two ſorts: 1 for, or 2 againſt. As, 1 for good: ſo, 2 againſt evill; both, things and perſons. This is againſt, a kinde of prayer; indeed, an imprecation. Two things give forth themſelves in the prayer: 1 The parties, againſt whom it is; 2 and the wiſh it ſelfe, what it is. The parties, are 1 firſt the Kings enemies: 2 then, thoſe that riſe up againſt him (that is) the Kings rebells. Two diverſe kinds: neither, ſuperfluous. For,
Verſe 10. there be no tautologies in Scripture: no doubling the point there, but with ſome advantage, ever.

The wiſh is, that they may be as Abſalom. And two things are in that wiſh (if we mark them well:) 1 Be, as he; (that is) not periſh onely (that, is not all) 2 but periſh, and ſo periſh as he did. How was that? Vidi Abſalom pendentem; and ſo hanging yet alive, thruſt through with three darts. As he, in his end: as he, in the manner of his end. That the heads that contrive, may hang as high as his: and the hearts that effect, be thruſt through as his was: thrice through, though once would ſerve.

II. And when we have done with it, as a prayer, then will we begin with it, as a prophecie. That, ſo he wiſhed: and that, as he wiſhed, ſo he foretold: and as he foretold, ſo it came to paſſe. All that roſe after, fell as faſt as they roſe: Et facti ſunt ſicut puer iſte.

III. Laſt of all, that this prayer or prophecie, is not pent or ſhut up in Davids dayes: not to end, with him. It reacheth unto theſe of ours: hath his force and vigor ſtill; hath and ſhall have, unto the worlds end. GOD heard him praying, and inſpired him propheſying. As it came to paſſe in Abſalom, ſo did it in thoſe that roſe after him: that roſe againſt David, that roſe againſt many others ſince David, and namely, againſt ours. So it hath beene hitherto: and ſo ever may it be. Cuſhi, not onely a Prieſt, to pray that ſo they be; but a Prophet, to foretell, that ſo they ſhall be.

I.

Of the Text as a prayer against, or curſing.

Fiant ſicut Abſalom, is a prayer (and which more is) an imprecation. Before we pray it, it wil not be amiſſe, to enquire, whether we may lawfully pray any ſuch, or no. I move it, becauſe of ſome ſo tender-hearted men, that they can by no meanes brook or endure any imprecation; to wiſh any ſo evill, as to pray they may come to an evill end. It is nothing fitting (as well ſaith Saint Iames) that with the tongue we ſhould bleſſe GOD, and with the ſame, wiſh evill to man. It is Balaams office, Veni & maledic; and who would ſucceed him in his office? It is Shimei's practice; and who would be like him? And this is Cuſhi's prayer. like himſelfe: Some would have him an Æthiopian; but, ſome black ſwart fellow, as his name giveth.

Iam. 3. 9. Num. 22. 6. Chap. 16. 13.

Againe, theſe were Iewes all; wee are Chriſtians: wee have a charge given us, by Saint Paul not to doe it: not to them, that doe us hurt; Bleſſe them that perſecute you; bleſſe (I ſay) and curſe not. We have a patterne ſet us, by Saint Peter; of Him, qui cum malediceret non, &c. that wiſhed not their evill, that both wiſhed, and did him all the evill they could, both in deed and in word.

Rom. 12. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 23.

And this I know: yet is not all this ſo peremptorie, but that, notwithſtanding even all this againſt ſome, in ſome caſes, ſuch prayer hath beene, and may be uſed. May be? nay, ought to be otherwhile. For, ſuch may the perſons be, as Saint Peter calleth ſome, maledictionis filii: and their facts ſo execrable, as GOD Himſelfe commanded Moſes, to goe up into the mount Ebal, and there, againſt twelve ſundry ſorts of ſuch, pronounce maledictus. Even as we ſee, the Serpents ſinne was ſo exorbitant, as it drew a maledictus, even from GODS owne bleſſed mouth. It is not good then, to be nice or tender in this point; nor I would not wiſh men to be more tender or pitifull, than GOD: whoſe doing of it ſheweth us it ought to be done. For to beginne with the laſt (of Chriſtians;) He that gave us the charge (Saint Paul) for all his charge given, we know what he did to Elymas. And he that ſet us the patterne (Saint Peter) for all his patterne ſet, we know he uſed it againſt Simon Magus. And for the other: it is not Balaam onely but even Moſes, as milde a man, as ever the earth bare, you may read, that he came to it though, Num. 16. Neither was it Shimei onely, but David too (though a gratious and gentle Prince, may Shimei well ſay: yet) what a Pſalme of imprecations hath he penned! I meane the CIX. Pſalme. It was thought, by our Fathers, that there was not a more heavy or bitter curſe could be wiſhed to any, than to ſay Deus laudum upon him, which is the beginning of that Pſalme. Neither was it Cuſhi with his ſwart colour onely, but an Angel as bright as the Sunne, even the Angell of the Lord, that curſeth (himſelfe) and giveth an expreſſe warrant to curſe the inhabitants of Meroz. But what ſpeake we of Saints, or Angels? CHRIST Himſelfe doth it in the Goſpell, as appeareth by His many Væ's. Yea, GOD Himſelfe (we ſee) Gen. 3. againſt the Serpent, and his whole brood. What the Saints, Angels, GOD Himſelfe have done, may be done, I truſt. It may be done then, licet; and ought to be done ſometimes, oportet; and in this very caſe, it ought and muſt; a neceſſitie lyeth upon us, we cannot chooſe but doe it. For pray we muſt for the Kings ſafety; Cuſhi, and all good ſubjects: but, for his ſafety we cannot pray, but we muſt (withall) for the overthrow of his under-miners. Pro includeth Contra; if for him, then againſt his foes. If wiſh him to riſe, and ſtand upright, then, them to fall and become his foot-ſtoole. So that (if all be well weighed) it is not voluntarie; it is even wrung from us.

Iud. 5. 23. Luk. 19. 43. Gen. 3. 14. Pſal. 110. 1.

And that indeed is the only caveat, that it be not voluntary: that we be drawn to it hardly, and uſe it not, upon every ſlight, and trifling occaſion, againſt every thing that croſſeth our humor; but, when the foulneſs of the fact ſeems to exact it: and that caveat is not amiſſe. I like well of the Hebrew proverb: (Garizim is the mount where they bleſſed; Ebal, where they gave the curſe:) they ſay, We muſt creep into Ebal, and leape into Garizim (that is) be ſwift to one and ſlow to the other. We are then not to forſweare going into mount Ebal utterly; but to be well adviſed, yer we goe into it. To doe it, but not to doe it, where God bleſſeth: which Balaam was ſtill itching to doe. The cauſe it is, which maketh the curſe fall; otherwiſe, if it be cauſeleſſe, it will not light but flye over, as a bird. Therfore, to know well, both men and matter, againſt whom we let it flye. And we cannot better know them, than if we take our light from GOD: if we doe it, but where, and when, and for what, GOD doth it, we need not be ſcrupulous: never feare to follow, where He goeth before us. And, by the grace of GOD, we will be well ware, not to wiſh ought to any, in this point, but ſuch, as ſhall have warrant even from GOD'S owne mouth.

1 The Parties curſed.

The ſpeciall point of advice thus being, to know the parties well, againſt whom we ſend it forth, it will concerne us (and our next point it muſt be) to take perfect notice of theſe men. They offer themſelves to us, in two termes: 1 The enemies of the King; 2 They that riſe againſt Him: joined here, and as here, ſo in ſundry other places: Pſal. 3. 1. Pſal. 59. 1. Pſal. 44. 5.

1 The enemies of the King. * Pſal. 55. 12.

The word Enemie is by David himſelfe, gloſſed * Pſal. 55. It was not an enemie did it to me (meaning, a knowen, open, profeſſed enemie;) for then (ſaith he) I could have beene provided for him? ſo may we take it.

2 Thoſe that riſe againſt h.m. Gen. 4. 8. Num. 16. 2.

The other of riſing againſt, the phraſe is firſt uſed of Cain (and lightly, the firſt phraſe is the key of the reſt) when Abel and he were in the field together walking, it is ſayd, Cain roſe up againſt him, and knocked him on the head: So is meant, of ſuch as keepe their malice ſecret, to doe one a miſchiefe ſuddenly. And the next time it is uſed, is of Core, and his Complices: of them, it is ſaid (Num. 16.) They roſe up againſt Moſes. In the former of Cain, it is treacherie: in this latter of Core, it is plaine rebellion. In a word; all that riſe againſt, are enemies; but not backward. For, enemies may be ſuch, as ſtand on even ground; as one King, or State, with another, Riſing, in proprietie of ſpeech, is of ſuch, as are of inferiour place, and yet lift themſelves up, againſt their lawfull Superiours. In the end, both prove enemies, and doe the part of enemies; but, the former have many times no bond of allegiance; the latter ever have.

1 Pet. 4. 12.

We may not ξενίζεσθαι (to uſe Saint Peters owne phraſe) thinke it ſtrange; that both theſe ſorts, Kings have them; Yea, though they be good Kings (as was David) yet that they have them. Heare David himſelfe ſpeake: How are mine enemies increaſed! many are they that riſe againſt me. Neither the place of a King, nor the vertue of a good King, could quit him, but he had both. He had enemies: Iſhboſheth, Hanun, Hadadeſer, the States of the Philiſtins. He had thoſe that roſe againſt him: Abſalom, Achitophel, Amaſa, heere: Sheba, Adonia, Ioab, afterward; he had both. And let us not ξενίζεσθαι thinke this ſtrange, ſince CHRIST Himſelfe; yea, ſince GOD Himſelfe hath them too. For, lo Thine enemies ô LORD, lo thine enemies, and thoſe that riſe up againſt Thee (it is the XCII. Pſal.) That we may ceaſe to marvell, that Kings have them; or thinke, it is, becauſe it is not as it ſhould be. Be they never ſo, as they ſhould; be they, as David, according to GOD'S owne heart; nay, be they as CHRIST, as GOD Himſelfe; both theſe they ſhall have. Let not this make us ſtumble, but that we may goe forward.

Pſal. 3. 1. Pſal. 92. 9. 1 Sam. 13. 14.

Of theſe two then, if wee ſhall fit our ſelves to the preſent, wee ſhall not need to ſpeake of the one ſort, of enemies. The King hath none: No King, nor State, profeſſe themſelves for ſuch; nor never may do. The latter, it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſtay a little, and looke better on, who they be. This dayes perill was; all his perill, both in Auguſt, and November, is from them, that (like Cain) riſe up againſt him. A King by nature is Rex Alkum, ſaith Salomon, Pro. XXX. One, againſt whom there is no riſing: So GOD would have it. Subjects (ſaith the Apoſtle) to lye downe before them: riſing up againſt, is cleane contrarie to that; and ſo, contrarie to GODS will: He would have no riſing. The thought to riſe (voluerunt inſurgere in Regem) is ſayd, of Bigthan and Thares, two of Ahaſhuerus's chamber (marke that voluerunt inſurgere) was enough, to attaint them: the riſing but of the will, to bring them to the gallowes. Nor the tongue is not to riſe, or lift up it ſelfe: Core did but gaineſay; his tongue was but up, and he, and all that took his part, periſhed in their gainſay ing, the gaineſaying of Core. But chiefly none, either (with Iudas) to lift up his heele, to betray; or (with Cain) to lift up the hand to do violence. No partie, no part of any partie, to riſe againſt the King. Yet, riſe they will, and do: both the thought ſwell; and exurgent è vobis (ſaith the Apoſtle) perverſè loquentes, yea and perverſa facientes; lewd ſpeech uſed, and worſe then ſpeech, preſumptuous deeds too.

Theres

Eſth. 2. 21. Iude 11. Ioh. 13. 18. Gen. 3. Acts 20. 10.

Now of theſe, that thus riſe, two ſorts there be: For, either they riſe againſt the very ſtate it ſelfe of Kings; the very authoritie, they exerciſe (that is) would have no Kings at all; ſaying with them, Quis eſt Dominus noſter, Who is Lord over us (as much to ſay as, by their good will, none: Or ſuch, as onely riſe againſt their perſons, as he in the XX. Chapter, that ſayd, We have no part in David; and they in the Goſpell, that ſay, Nolumus hunc, We will not have this man. Rule, they would not have quite taken away, but not this perſon, to rule over them.

Pſal. 12. 4. Chap. 20. 1. Luke 19. 14.

Of the firſt ſort of theſe riſers, are the Anabaptiſts of our age; by whom, all ſecular juriſdiction is denied. No Law-makers they, but the Evangeliſts: No courts, but Preſbyteries: no puniſhments, but Church-Cenſures. Theſe, riſe againſt the very eſtate of Kings: and that ſhould they find and feele, if they were once growen enough to make a partie.

A ſecond ſort there be, that are but buſtling themſelves to riſe; not yet riſen; at leaſt, not to this ſtepp: but in a forwardneſſe they be; proffer at it, that, they do. They that ſeek to bring paritie, not into the common-wealth by no meanes; but onely into the Church. All pariſhes alike, every one abſolute, entire of it ſelfe. No dependencie, or ſuperioritie, or ſubordination. But, this once being had, do we not know their ſecond poſition? Have they not broached it long ſince? The Church is the houſe; the Common wealth, but the hangings. The hangings muſt be made fitt to the houſe, that is, the Common-Wealth faſhioned to the Church: not the houſe, to the hangings: No, take heed of that. And when they were taken with it, and charged with it, how ſleightly in their anſwer do they ſlip it over? Theſe, when they are gott thus farre, may riſe one ſtep higher: and as Aaron, now muſt not; ſo (perhaps) neither muſt Moſes, then, exalt himſelfe above the Congregation, ſeeing that All GOD's people are holy, no leſſe then he.

Theſe two riſe againſt their States. Againſt their perſons, two other ſorts of perſons, both diſcontented. 1 But the one was, of ambition: as Abſalon heere, that thought it was wonderfull great pitie, that all cauſes were not brought before him, conſidering how able a man he was for it, and the King being negligent in looking to his Subject's griefe. But, when he ſpread a tent aloft, and did you know what, not to be told, and that in the ſight of all Iſraël; Sure, he that could commit that villanous act, in the eyes of all Iſraël; He, that could charge Huſai, as with a foule fault, for forſaking his friend, himſelfe then being in armour againſt his owne Father, was not ſo very fitt a man to do juſtice. No matter: ſo he tooke himſelfe; that, was enough, to riſe. 2 The other, out of revenge: the caſe of Bigthan and Thares (and of our two, as is thought.) They were angrie at ſomwhat, it is not ſaid what, nor it skills not what, but, voluerunt inſurgere, riſe they would for it (that they would.) Theſe did not wiſh government quite taken away: onely the King's perſon they heaved at; Him, for ſome purpoſe, they muſt needs have out of the way.

Chap. 15. 2. Chap. 16. 22. Chap. 16. 17. Eſter. 2. 21.

By this time we know theſe parties reaſonable well. Be theſe they, whom GOD, Angels, and Saints hold for execrable? They, whom Cuſhi may pray againſt, and we with him? Theſe be they. It was Core, one of the crue, againſt whom Moſes prayed, they might be viſited with a ſtrange viſitation, and not dy the common death of other men. No more he did. It was Achitophel, another of them, againſt whom David penned the Pſalme of bitter imprecations. They of Meroz, whom the Angell giveth warrant, and charge both, to curſe; wherefore was it? Becauſe they came not to helpe

Num. 16. 29.

helpe the LORD, that is, Debora the Lord's Lievetenant, againſt the forces of Madian. If to be curſed, becauſe they layd not their hand to helpe Him; much more (I trow) if they would ſeek to lay their hands on him, to miſchiefe and make him away.

Mar 14.21. It was Iudas, he was one of theſe, againſt whom CHRIST cryed Væ per quem. And it

Gen.3 14. was the ſerpent, whom GOD curſed: and why, what was his fault? What, but that he ſought to withdraw our parents from their due ſubjection; to riſe againſt GOD, to be GODS themſelves, and never acknowledge Him, or any, for their Superiour. Theſe be they (certainly) againſt whom (GOD, Angells, and Saints approving it) we may ſay Cuſhi-his prayer, every ſyllable of it. May? nay, ought; are even bound to it. Yet, to give full ſatisfaction, that there be no ſtriving, but that all may ſay Amen to it; it ſhall not be amiſſe, if I may, with your good favour, lay before you ſome reaſons, and thoſe ſo enforcing, that we ſhall hold our ſelves ſo bound, as that we cannot avoyd, but yeeld to it. I care not much, if I keep the number of Abſalon's darts: they are three.

The reaſons of this curſing.

I.

Becauſe the enemies of God. Iud.5.31.

First, I hold it for cleere, if we knew any were GOD'S enemie, we would none of us make any queſtion, but ſay (with Cuſhi, we need not, it is ſett downe to our hands) So periſh all thine enemies ô LORD. So? how? Even as Siſara: little difference, in effect, between him and Abſalon. Siſara periſhed with a nayle driven into his head: Abſalon, with a dart thruſt through his heart. To the enemies of GOD, you ſee, we have warrant. But, they that riſe againſt the King, are GOD'S enemies: for, GOD and the King are ſo in a league, ſuch a knott, ſo ſtreight between them, as one cannot be enemie to the one, but he muſt be to the other. This is the knott. They are, by

Exod.4.20. Iud.8.20. 1.Chro.29.23. Pſal.82.6. GOD, of or from GOD, for or in ſtead of GOD. Moſes's rodd, GOD'S; Gideon's ſword, GOD'S; David's throne, GOD'S. In His place, they ſitt; His Perſon, they repreſent: they are taken into the fellowſhip of the ſame name; Ego dixi, He hath ſaid it, and we may be bold to ſay it, after him, They are GODS: and what, would we more? Then, muſt their enemies be GOD'S enemies. Let their enemies know then, they have to deale with GOD, not with them; It is His cauſe, rather then theirs: they, but His agents. It ſtandeth Him in hand; it toucheth Him; in honour, He can no leſſe, then maintaine them, then hold their enemies, for his owne. Saint

And indeed, what was the drift of the firſt tentation, but onely to have made Adam and Eve the adopted children of Belial, that is, to be under no yoke? not GOD'S; much leſſe, mans; to brooke no ſuperior. They are all his, by adoption, that carrie ſuch minds. It cannot otherwiſe be. And if

The one might bee enough. But there were three darts in Abſaloms heart, one would have ſerved the turne; ſo, this one would ſuffice, but I will caſt yet a ſecond, and third at them. If then ſecondly, we knew any that were not only Hoſtis Dei, but hoſtis humani generis, would we yet doubt to pray, he might bee as Abſalom ? I truſt not: eſpecially, ſeeing we ſhould therein but follow GODS owne example. He curſeth the Serpent, even for this cauſe, that he was enemie to the woman and all her ſeed, and ſought the utter ruine of both. Thoſe that are ſuch, well may all men pray againſt them; for, at all mens hands, they well deſerve it. Now thus reaſoneth Saint Paul. Rulers not only come from GOD, but they come from Him in particular; Tibi in bonum, for thy good, whoſoever thou art. Thy good, thou Nobleman, thou Gentleman, thou Church-man, thou Merchant, thou Husbandman, thou Tradeſman: Thy good: (that is) for our good they come, and are ſent for all our good, for the generall good of us all. Vs all: nay, even of all mankind. Mankind ſhould be as a Foreſt (ſaith Moſes) the ſtrong beaſts would devoure the weake; as a fiſh-poole (ſaith Abakuk) the great fiſh devoure the ſmall, were it not for theſe. Without theſe, mankind could not continue. They then, that are enemies to them, mankinds enemies: and ſo, of the ſerpents ſeed certainly, to bee curſed with the ſerpents curſe, conteratur caput eorum.

Now then, of this great Monarchie of Mankind, of the whole world, the ſeverall Monarchies of the world are eminent parts. What the eſtate of Kings is, in the whole; that, is the perſon of every particular Prince, in his ſeverall ſoveraignty: David, in his of Iurie: Ours, in His of Great Brittaine: the health and ſafetie of the Kingdome, faſt linked with the Kings health and ſafetie. The Head of the Tribes (ſo is David called;) The Light of Iſraël; Tu paſces, The Shepheard of the flock; The Corner-ſtone of the building. I will content me with theſe. If the Head be deadly hurt, I would faine know, what ſhall become of the body? If the Light be put out, is ought but darkeneſſe to be looked for in Iſraël? Smite the Shepheard, muſt not the flocke be in perill? If the Corner-ſtone be ſhaken, will not both the walls feele a wrack? Verily, all our weale and woe dependeth on their well-fare, or decay. Therefore bleſſe we them, and they that bleſſe them, be bleſſed; and they that ſet themſelves againſt them, accurſed, even with the capitall curſe, the ſerpents, all our enemie; as the firſt of all, ſo the chiefe of all, as from GODS owne mouth.

To theſe two I adde yet one more, and that by good warrant, both of the Old and New Teſtament. Let them be confounded and turned backward (ſaith the Prophet) ſo many as have evill will at Sion; Vtinam abſcindantur (ſaith the Apoſtle) qui vos conturbant. Againſt them well may we pray, that maligne the peace and proſperitie of the Church: in which and for which we and all the world to pray; as that, for which, all, world and all was made, and is ſtill upholden; For, were the Church once gathered, the world diſſolves ſtraight. GOD is too high (as for any our good, ſo) for any our evill or enmitie to come neere Him. He reckoneth of no enemies but His Churches. They, that perſecute her, perſecute Him; they that touch her touch the apple of His eye. Now they that are enemies to David, are enemies to Sion: ſo neere neighbourhood between David and Sion, the King and the Church, as there is between his Palace and the Temple, both ſtand upon two topps of one and the ſame hill. The King is Nutritius Eccleſiæ: If enemies to the Nurſe, then to the Child; it cannot otherwiſe be. Experience teacheth it daily, when the child hath a good nurſe, to take ſuch a one away, is but to expoſe the Child, to the evident danger of ſterving or pining away. I know not, men may entertaine what ſpeculations they will; but (ſure) in praxi, how much the Churches welfare hath gone by the good and bleſſed inclination of Kings, it is but too plaine. Socrates long ſince truly obſerved it, in the beginning of the fifth book of his ſtorie. Conſider me in the Common wealth of the Iewes, theſe foure Kings immediately ſucceeding each the other; Iotham, Ahaz, Ezekia, and Manaſſes: Conſider theſe foure Emperours in the Primitive Church, likewiſe in ſucceſſion; Conſtantine, Conſtantius, Iulian, and Iovinian: Conſider me here at home, the foure laſt Princes before his Maieſtie, and the waxing and waning, the alteration and alternation of religion, under them; forward and backward, backward and forward againe: and tell me, whether the King and the Church, have not reference, as I sayd; and whether the Church have any greater enemies than such as alien the minds of Kings, and make them heavy friends to her welfare and well-doing. Of such then, safely may we Psal.129.16. say, Bee they confounded; Bee they; as the grasse upon the house top, which withereth before hey-time (that is) let them come to untimely ends; let them be as Absalom;

Psal.83.10. or (as another Psalme wisheth such kind of People) like them that perished at Endor, and became like dung upon the earth. So then being GODS 1 enemies; 2 mankinds, and the 3 Churches; against the enemies of any one of these, the prayer were warrantable: how much more against them, that are enemies to all three? One nayle served Sisera, in his head: so would one speare Absalom, in his heart; but he had three: not without a meaning. A morall allusion they make of it: Three were the faults hee made: three the parties he highly offended, 1 GOD, 2 the State, 3 the Church. Enemie to all three: for every one, a dart. Each, deadly alone; but he had them all, to shew, he deserved them all: and so they doe, that sinne Absaloms sinne. The prayer (sure) is good: Cushi prayed well: all are bound to say Amen to it.

II.
Of the Text, as a prophecie.

But besides that it is a prayer, Let them be; it is a prophecie too, They shall bee. The tenor of the prayer we have heard: Let us see the successe of the Prophecie, what became of it; whether Cushi were a true Prophet, or no. So true, as, from Moses to Malachi, never any of the Prophets more true, in his foretelling, than he in this. All the enemies, all that rose against him, erant sicut, were even so indeed.

Pitie it is, but that a good prayer should be heard, and (as we sayd) turne into the nature of a prophecie. They were three good prayers, we heard: there is none of all the three, but hath a prophecie (that so it should be) answering to the prayer, that so it might be. Against GODS enemies: The prayer, So perish, &c. The Prophecie, For Iudg.5.31. Psal.92.9. Lo Thine enemies ô LORD, Lo Thine enemies shall perish; as if he saw it with his eyes, called others to see it with him; pointed at it with his finger, Lo; twice, onee and againe; (one Lo, not serve;) so sure he is, that so it shall be. 2 Against the enemies of Gen.3.14. 15. mankind: The mish, Cursed be thou above every beast of the earth, the prophecie followeth in the neck of it, Ipse conteret Caput, One there is, shall bruise his head all to peeces.
Psal.129.5. 3 Against the maligners of Sion: Let them be confounded, &c. That is the prayer: The Kingdome or nation, that shall maligne Sion shall perish, and utterly bee destroyed; there is the prophecie. Now, that that is propheticall, in each of those, is no lesse verified in the Kings enemies, in whom they all meet.

Doe but, after this prophecie, enquire what became of them: aske but the question. The King doth (here;) in the forepart of the verse: Is Absalom safe, how doth Chap.20.22. he? He doth, as he deserveth to doe. Aske, how the rest, that after rose against him:
1 King.1.3. within a chapter after, Sheba riseth; how did he? Before the end of the Chapter, his head came over the wall. After him, Adonia was up and spake even broadly, Regnabo. What became of him? His end in bloud. And (that which is strange) with him rose
2.25. Ioab: he that tooke off Shebas head; he that threw these darts; and he that was the true man here, How sped he? He was even drawen from the altar (that, is no Sanctuarie
1 King.2.34. for traitors) and executed by Benaia. Could not take heed by Absaloms example, but came to Absaloms end. They all that sought, that rose to pluck him downe, whom Psal.62.3. GOD had exalted, they were slaine, all the sort of them; were all, as a tottering wall, or as a broken hedge, which every man runnes over.

But this judgement of GOD, was in none more conspicuous, than Absalom. A streight charge was given by the King himselfe, to have him saved: It would not serve; hee was slaine for all that. And slaine by Ioab: one, before, that had highly favoured him, and beene a speciall meanes to restore him to grace; even, by him, was he slaine notwithstanding the Kings charge; and then slaine, when he made full Chap.18.9. account of the victorie. For, else he would have beene better horsed. He was on his Mule, how hee never doubted the event, and yet was slaine. Sure, GODS hand was in it, to ridde the world of a traytor.

Neither

III. The prophecie perpetuall.

Neither was this a peculiar prophecie to King David alone. The prayer is ſaid, and the prophecie taketh hold of other, as well before, as ſince. Aske of Core, he roſe againſt Moſes: How ſped he? He went to hell quicke for it. Aske of Baana and Rechab, that roſe againſt their Lord: Looke over the poole of Hebron; there, ſtand their quarters on poles. Aske of Bigthan and Thares; what of them? Fairely hanged at the Court-gate. Time will not ſerve, to enquire of all. The ſhort is: all that were as Abſalom, came to his end. Some hanged, and their heart opened being yet alive (So was Abſalom:) and their bowels pluckt out, to make them like Iudas. Some their heads ſtrucken off, ſo was Sheba. Some quartered, and their hands, feet and head ſet up on poles, that the Ravens might plucke out their eyes, as Baana and Rechab; that, upon them might come, all the puniſhments due to them, that riſe with Abſalom. For, all the puniſhments of traytours, as now they are in uſe with us, may ſeeme to have beene collected and drawne together, from thoſe ſeverall examples, that ſtand in the booke of GOD.

Numb. 16. 23. 2 Sam. 4. 12. Eſter 2. 23. Act. 1. 18. 2 Sam. 20. 2 Sam 4. 12.

All to ſhew, that a King is Alkum, no riſing againſt him: Or, if any riſe, he had better ſit ſtill. For, no ſooner riſe they up, but our Prophet ſtraight crieth: Riſe up, riſe up, and put on ſtrength, thou arme of the LORD, riſe up as in old time, in the generations of the world. Art not thou the ſame that didſt ſmite Abſalom by Ioab; and art not thou the ſame that didſt ſmite Ioab by Benaia? That ſetteſt thy ſelfe ſtill to bring them downe, that riſe up againſt Alkum, againſt whom there is no riſing?

Prov. 30. 31. אלקום Eſay 51. 9.

For, Kings being from God (ſaith Gamaliel) we cannot ſet our ſelves againſt them, but we muſt be found (even) θεομαχῶν to fight againſt GOD. Being ordained of GOD (ſaith Gamaliel his Scholler, Saint Paul) to reſiſt them, is to reſiſt the ordinance of GOD; and as good put our ſelves in the face of all the Ordnance in the Tower of London, as withſtand GODS ordinance. None might better ſay it, than he to it was told him from Heaven, when he was about ſuch another buſineſſe; perſecuting CHRIST in His Church (and CHRIST is perſecuted in His chiefe members, as well as His inferiour) he was told plainly, in ſo doing, he did but kicke againſt the pricke. His heeles might ake and runne of bloud; the pricke not remove, but ſtand where it did ſtill. Therefore, as here Cuſhi, in the Old, ſo Saint Paul, in the New, falleth to propheſie; they that reſiſt ſhall receive to themſelves damnation, is Saint Paul's prophecie. And, a true prophecie, even as was Moſes's of Core: That they ſhould not dye the death of other men, but be viſited with ſome ſtrange extraordinary viſitation; but have their end in bloud. All, as Cuſhi prayed they might, and propheſied they ſhould. And his prayer was heard, his prophecie came to paſſe, not a word of either fell to the ground.

Act. 5. 39. Act. 9. 5. Rom. 13. 2. Rom. 13. 2. Numb. 16. 29.

And reacheth to our times.

Having now dealt with it as a prayer firſt; and then, as a prophecie; let us now ſee how it ſuiteth with the buſineſſe in hand, and whether the force and vigour of theſe have reached to us and our times.

It is with GOD no new thing (this) to reward ſuch as riſe up againſt Kings. Of that which is with Him no new, but old (as old, as David; nay, as Moſes) He giveth us new examples, every other while, to ſhew, His eare is ſtill open to his prayer; and that His arme is ſtretched out to reach them ſtill. Yea, I dare be bold to ſay, there is no one of His promiſes hath ſo many Seales hanging at it, by way of confirmation of it, as this hath: No one, ſo many judgements, upon record, as it. In every ſtory of every land, there is ſtill ſtanding ſome Gibbet or other, and their quarters hanging on it there ſtill, to put us in minde of the truth of Cuſhi's prophecie.

The Application to the Day.

This very day yeeldeth us one of freſh memory (but ſeven yeares ſince) wherein, in our Soveraigne, GOD hath given a memorable example, of the hearing Cuſhie's prayer, and the accompliſhing his prediction, not in one, but in a couple of Abſalous. A couple of Abſaloms, I may well terme them; In many other points like him, but namely in theſe two: 1 Like, in their riſing: and 2 like in their fall. For, that Abſalom was a ſonne, and theſe but ſubjects, it altereth not the caſe much: Sonnes and ſubjects are both under one commandement, as Pater and Rex, both in one name [Abimelech] the name of the firſt Kings of Canaan. If under one, then under one curſe:

Deut.27 15. If they doe but ſpeake evill, under Moſes's curſe, in mount Ebal; if but looke upon Prov.30.17. them with a ſcornefull eye, under Salomons curſe, that the Ravens picke thoſe eyes out.
1 King.15.1. The ſame, againſt a father, to reach much more to Abiam, Pater populi. (So did Salomon name his nephew;) Abiam, a father of Iuda; even as Debora, was a mother in אבים
Iudg.5.7. Iſrael. In a word: what Noah might wiſh to a bad ſonne (Cham;) and Eliſa wiſh
Gen.9.25. to a bad ſervant (Gehezi;) no cauſe in the world, but Cuſhi might wiſh the ſame to a 2 King.5 27. bad ſubject. All is one caſe. This then breeds no unlikelineſſe; and in all the reſt, exceeding like.

1 As that young man (to keepe the words of the Text.) For, thoſe were young men, too. Their yeares, not many. Not many: nay ſo few, ſo greene, as it may well ſeeme ſtrange, that there could ſuch inveterate malice and miſchiefe be hatched, in ſo young yeares. As he, in that (firſt.)

2 As in yeares, ſo in malice; bloudy-minded both. Said not Abſalom, to his Aſſa-
2 Sam.13.28. ſines, When I give you a ſigne, ſee you ſmite, kill him, feare not, have not I commanded you? Said not they the ſame to him, whom to that end, they had armed, and placed to doe that wicked act? In that like, ſecond.

3 As in this malicious bloudy minde; ſo in raking it up, and keeping it cloſe, divers yeares together. Not only (as Abſalom in this) to ſay neither good nor bad: but in this too; to entreat the King, and all his company to their houſe; to entertaine and feaſt him, and beſides promiſe, and pretend, I know not what, and all to cover and conceale their devilliſh intent. In this like, thirdly: this young man, and theſe.

4 And not in this kinde onely of outward diſſembling; but in a worſe kinde of re-
2 Sam.15.8. ligious hypocriſie. He made a religious vow; it lay on his conſcience, he could not be quiet, till he had got leave to goe pay it; and then, even then, went he about all his villany. And was it not ſo here? He, ſo holy, as to a Sermon he muſt needs; to GODS word; no remedy, he might not be from it in any wiſe: and that, when he truſted, the deadly blow ſhould have beene given. In this, like.

5 And yet fifthly, the ſame man, like Abſalom, when he was in Geſſur. Abſalom in Geſſur, and this in Italy, as devout at his Maſſes then, as he was here zealous for his exerciſe of the Word. Alike at both, as they ſerved his turne. Like in this, too.

6 And, laſt of all, in this too: that for all this goodly maske of religion, when he
Chap.15.10. ſaw his treachery was diſcovered, as Abſalom blew his trumpet, ſo he was content to uncaſe himſelfe, and to ruſh forth and appeare for ſuch as he was. In which act, hee periſhed, as Abſalom: got in his heart, that Abſalom got in his: onely that was a dart, and this was a dagger.

7 For (ſure) being thus like in their conditions, and in ſo many circumſtances beſides, pitie but they ſhould be like in their ends too: And they were. And, that ſo they were, is the matter of the publike gratulation of this day, of the day of the weeke all the yeare long; of this, the day it ſelfe, ſpecially above all: that the prayer and prophecie of Cuſhi tooke place; his prayer heard, his prophecie fulfilled, no leſſe in theſe young men, than in that; no leſſe in the enemies of our King Iames, than in his Lord King David.

In the treaſons, little difference or none: in the Delivery, ſome difference; but, all for the better. For firſt, in farre greater perill was His Majeſtie, farre greater than ever was David. 1. David was but purſued: but he was even caught, and within (I know not how many) lockes and doores. 2. David was all the while without the reach of any blow: how neere the blow was to his breſt, it is able to make any man chill, but to thinke. 3. David had his Worthies ſtill about him: The King Eſay 63.3. was in torculari ſolus, in the very preſſe alone, & vir de gentibus, and not one of his people to ſtand by or aſſiſt him. 4. That David was delivered, it muſt be aſcribed to the providence of GOD; but, in that it was a fought field, his armie muſt take part of the praiſe. It was another manner of providence, that was ſhewed here; of a more neere regard, of a more ſtrange operation. I dare confidently affirme it (I may well well, I am ſure:) GOD's hand was much more eminent in this, than in that: praiſed be His Name for it. 5. And laſt of all, David (here) heard of his delivery by Cuſhi. Ours ſaw it himſelfe: and yet (I cannot tell well, what to ſay) the danger was ſo great, and the feare muſt needs be accordingly, whether it had not beene to be wiſhed, that ſome Cuſhi had rather brought tidings of it, than he ſeene it himſelfe. But ſince it pleaſed GOD, ſo from Heaven to ſhew Himſelfe in it (if ever He did, in any) and though with ſuch feare, yet without any harme, dulcis laborum præteritorum memoria.

David heard his; Segnius irritant: Ours ſaw his, oculis ſubjecta fidelibus; the impreſſion of joy was the greater, and did worke both the ſtronger and the longer. The ſtronger, in a votive thankſgiving then undertaken: The longer, in the continuall renewing it, not onely from yeare to yeare, but from weeke to weeke all the yeare long.

And what ſhall we ſay then? What but as Ahimaaz before, at the 28. Ver. Bleſſed be the LORD his GOD that hath this day given ſentence for him, upon thoſe, that roſe up againſt him. And then ſecondly, with Cuſhi, So be it to all the reſt, as it was with theſe. Though it be to goe into mount Ebal, let us not feare, GOD goeth before us, and ſaith it before us; let us not make danger, to goe after, and to ſay after Him. 1 They be His enemies, ſo proved: ſay we boldly, So periſh all thine enemies, O LORD. 2 They be enemies of mankinde, in being enemies to them, by whom order and peace is kept in mankind, and without whom there would in mankind be nought but confuſion: The Serpents curſe be upon them, and let their heads be trod to peeces. 3 They be Sions malignant enemies: let them be as graſſe upon the houſe-top, as thoſe that periſhed at Endor, and became dung for the earth. Let them be as ſtubble ſcattered, as wax melted, as ſmoke driven, no man can tell whither. Let them periſh; periſh, as Siſera, and Oreb, as Abſalom. Iaels hammer, on their heads; Gideons axe, on their neckes; Ioabs dart in their hearts. One, nay three: one, for the enemies of GOD: another, for the enemies of mankinde; a third, for the enemies of Sion. Let Cuſhi be both Prieſt and Prophet; this his prayer never returne emptie; this his Propheſie never want ſucceſſe. And Let the King ever rejoyce in thy ſtrength (O LORD*). Let Him be exceeding glad of thy Salvation.* Ever thruſt Thou backe his enemies, and tread them downe that riſe up againſt him. Let their ſwords goe thorow their owne hearts, and their miſchiefe light upon their owne heads. Let His eare ſtill heare His deſire upon His enemies, and His eye ſtill ſee the fall of the wicked that riſe up againſt Him. Be hee as David; wee, as Cuſhi: they, as Abſalom. GOD, by whom this prayer was allowed, receive and grant it: GOD, by whom this prophecie was inſpired, make it good, and fulfill it, as this day, ſo for ever: Even for ever and ever, for His CHRIST'S ſake.

A

I SAM. CHAP. XXVI. VER. VIII, IX.

Dixitque ABISHAI ad DAVID, &c.

Then ſaid ABISHAI to DAVID: GOD hath cloſed thine enemie into thine hand this day: now therefore, I pray thee, let me ſmite him once with a ſpeare to the earth, and I will not ſmite him againe.

And DAVID ſaid to ABISHAI, Deſtroy him not: For who can lay his hand on the LORDS Anointed, and be guiltleſſe?

The Summe.

HEre is ſome-body here, in this Text, in danger to be deſtroyed; and the partie is the LORDS Anointed, King Saul. The matter is come to hard hold: Deſtroy him, and deſtroy him not. Abiſhai would have it done: David at no hand; hee cries Ne perdas. But the end was, Saul was ſaved. Thus lyeth the caſe here in the Text.

And, was not the very ſame, the caſe of this day? There was ſome-body in as great danger to bee deſtroyed, this day. It was CHRISTVS DOMINI, GODS Anointed here before us. The caſe was come to the very ſame plunge: Perdas, ne perdas; a King, or no King. Some were of Abiſhai's minde: GOD was faine to ſupply Davids; there was none elſe. But bleſſed be GOD, all ended in Ne perdas. And againe bleſſed be GOD, who then alſo verified the latter part of the verſe, that None ſhall ſeeke to lay hands on the LORDS Anointed; but they ſhall be found, and handled, as guiltie perſons. For, ſo they were; and their bloud was upon their owne heads. Both caſes ſuiting ſo well, this Text might well ſerve for this day.

on

There is, in the former verſe, a motion made by Abiſhai for a blow at Saul, thus: See, &c. There be three perillous motives in it: 1 Inimicum, He is your enemie; 2 Concluſit; here is an opportunitie; 3 Sine me, the act ſhall not be yours, let me alone, I will take it upon me. The Diviſion. I.

There is in the latter, Davids utter diſlike of the motion, thus: Deſtroy not, &c. Wherein, firſt there is a double charge to the contrary: 1 One ad oculum; Deſtroy him not. 2 The other riſing out of the reaſon, yet plaine enough. He had ſaid, Deſtroy him not: Not that; Quis enim miſit manum? for, a leſſe matter than that, you may not doe, not lay your hands, not ſo much: which is (as it were) a ſurcharge to the former; or (if I may ſo ſay) a ſecond edition of Ne perdas. No talke of deſtroying: ſo farre from that, as no ſtirring the hand toward it. II.

1. Then upon this double charge, followeth a double reaſon; two retentives (as it were) againſt the firſt motion. 1 He is the Lords Anointed: that, may ſtay you, if you be a good ſubject.

2. Be you good ſubject or no, if that will not, this muſt; You ſhall not be guiltleſſe. If not guiltleſſe, then guiltie: and what becomes of them that be guiltie, we all know. That is, doe it not; if you doe, it ſhall bring you to guiltie or not guiltie: if you lay your hand, you ſhall hold up your hand for it: it is as much as your life is worth.

3. Thirdly, it is not indeed, Non eris inſons. For, if it had beene ſo, it might have beene thought to have reached to Abiſhai, to this particular, and no further. But he choſe rather, to utter it by Quis? For, by asking Quis? Who ſhall? He plainly implieth Ne quis unquam, that none ever may: Not he, not Abiſhai; nay, not any. So, there is a double charge: 1 Deſtroy not, 2 lay not your hand. A double retentive: 1 He is Gods Anointed; 2 You ſhall not be guiltleſſe: 3 and a Quis upon all, to binde all, and to ſhew, the charge is generall without exception.

1. In all which, there is a protection for Saul the firſt King, and all after him, not onely from perditio, deſtroying, giving of the blow; but from miſſio manus, ſtirring of the hand.

2. There is a neck-verſe for Abiſhai, and all undertakers in that kinde; they are all caſt, they are all found guiltie, yer they come to the barre; they are attainted, every one.

3. There is an Euge for David: who ſheweth himſelfe through all. 1 In his charge (deſtroy not) a good ſubject: 2 In his reaſon (He is GODS Anointed) a good Divine: 3 In his ſentence (Non eris inſons) a good Iudge: 4 In his challenge (Quis mittet?) a ſtout champion, to any that ſhall maintaine the contrary.

4. But for that, beſides this reaſon in the Text (of inimicum tuum,) there have beene other reaſons framed in our dayes, to the ſame end; and all of them in Saul, the partie in the Text: we will take them in too, to rule this caſe once for all. For, Saul's caſe will be found to have in it, all that can be alleaged, why any King ſhould be, if any King might be touched. All (I ſay) will be found in him: But he, for all them, may not be touched: therefore none may.

5. And this done, we will come (as the duty of the day requireth) to lay theſe caſes, caſe to caſe; ours of the day, to this in the Text. Where we ſhall ſee, that we have as great cauſe: nay, of the twaine, the greater cauſe of gratulation, for the happie Ne perdas of this day.

I. Abiſhai's Motion.

THis is Abiſhai's motion. There be three motives in it: 1 The partie is your enemie. 2 GOD hath ſent you opportunitie. 3 I will take it upon me. Enmitie makes us willing to take revenge; opportunitie, able; and if another will doe the act, the rather for that; for, then we ſhall beare no blame: Three ſhrewd motives, where they meet: and here they meet all in one. Let us weigh them: which I doe the more willingly, becauſe all three meet alſo in this day's attempt. 1 Enmitie, that was the colour, an old wrong; ſo, there were in both, the ſame pretence. 2 And the ſame advantage in both. For, the King was ſhut up indeed, and that literally. 3 And he that was at Church, he ſhould not have done it, not he: Abiſhai ſhould have done it, he in the chamber. Of theſe motives then.

1 The firſt motive: Inimicum tuum.

He is an enemie. But not every enemie is to be deſtroyed, but they that would deſtroy us. All enmitie is not deadly fewd: Sauls was; nothing would ſerve him but Davids life; and many wayes he ſought it indirectly. 1 By matching him with his owne daughter, and laying on him, for a dowry, ſo many fore-skins of the Philiſtims, ſo he might fall by their hands. 2 That would not doe: he went to it directly: 1 at three ſeverall times caſt his javelin at him, to have nailed him to the wall. 2 When he eſcaped him ſo: then gave he expreſſe charge openly to all men, to kill him, where ever they met him. 3 When that would not be, ſent to his houſe for him; when word came, he was ſicke in his bed, bade bring him bed and all, that he might ſee him ſlaine in his owne preſence. Was there ever the like? who would not have beene quit of ſuch an enemie?

1 A deadly enemie. Chap. 18.15. Chap. 18.11. 19.20. Chap. 19.1. 19.15.

2 An enemie without cauſe. Pſal. 7.3.

It may be, there was cauſe why: and then it holds not. Nay, no cauſe. To GOD he proteſts, Saul, without any cauſe, was his enemie. For, no cauſe he gave him to be his enemie; He never hurt him: But great cauſe to have beene his good Lord, he had many wayes done him good ſervice. Not to ſpeake of his Harpe (wherewith he had rid him of many a furious fit of melancholy, or a worſe matter:) with his ſling, it cannot be denied, he did him, and the whole Realme good ſervice, in the overthrow of Golias, and tooke away the rebuke from Iſrael. Yea many times after, put his ſoule in his hands (as Ionathan pleaded for him) that is, ventured his life to doe him ſervice in his warres, and ever with good ſucceſſe; and yet for all this, ſought his life. And who would ſave the life of ſuch an enemie?

Chap. 16.23. Chap. 17.49. Chap. 19.5.

3 An enemie not to be won as out of envie. Chap. 18.6.

Yes, there may be hope to winne an enemie, and in that caſe he would not be deſtroyed. Nay, no hope of ever winning Saul. He was an enemie out of envie, and they will never be wonne more. From the time, the fond women made that fooliſh rime of a thouſand and ten thouſand he could never abide to looke right on him. Envie was the matter; that, is the dangerous enmitie, that never will be pacified. Well ſaith Salomon, Anger is fierce, and hatred is cruell, but who ſhall ſtand before envie? As who ſhould ſay, there be meanes, to ſatisfie both thoſe: But the enemie from envie, no appeaſing him, no hope ever to doe it. If ought would, when he ſaved his life at the cave, and ſhewed by cutting a ſhred from his mantle, he might have gone further if he would; Saul himſelfe confeſt, it was a great favour: yet that would not winne him; he ſought his life ſtill: And even after this here, yet he ſought it ſtill. There was no hope to appeaſe him. And who then would not make ſure of ſuch an enemie? Verily if any enmitie might have ſerved, here it was.

Prov. 27.4. Chap. 24.18. 20.

4 An enemie to his riſing. Chap. 16.20. Matth. 21.38.

But there is yet a worſe enmitie than all theſe. Saul was not onely an enemie to David; but Saul's life, an enemie to David's riſing. David was, in reverſion (wee know:) So, Saul ſtood in his way. There was not only the ſting of revenge; but the edge of ambition, to helpe this motion forward. It was but occîdamus eum; here he

he is, kill him and the inheritance is ours, all is ours. Any other enemies ſpare, and ſpare not; but, theſe that ſtand in our light, away with them. It made Abimelech not to ſpare his owne brethren; nor Abſalom, his Father; nor Athalia, her children. Sure, he that weighs it well, that at one blow he might have rid himſelfe of ſuch an enemie, and withall have gained the crowne, will wonder, he let not the blow proceed. Now, lay them together: 1 An enemie, ſuch an one, ſo deadly; 2 ſo without cauſe; 3 ſo without all hope of appeaſing; 4 ſuch a ſtop to his fortunes: who would have ſtayed Abiſhai's hand.

Iud. 9. 5. 1 Sam. 15. 2 King. 11. 1.

This is enough to give his appetite an edge: but, we lacke opportunitie to doe it; and want of opportunitie ſaves many an enemies life. Men muſt deale wiſely, and forbeare, till they find him handſomely, at ſome good advantage. Nay, it is now growne to be good Divinitie, rebus ſic ſtantibus, to be as gentle as David; and Ne perdas is good doctrine. But, as ſoone as time ſerves and ſtrength, if we get him once within locks, penned up, and in our power, then do as we ſee cauſe, deſtroy him and ſpare not. So that, upon concluſit eum ever ſtayeth our concluſion. Why here now, concluſit eum. It was night: Saul lay all wearie aſleepe, in a dead ſleepe, he and all about him. David and Abiſhai came and went; ſaid what they would; tooke what they would; none waked or knew of it. It might have beene done ſafely, there was none to reſiſt them: and beene carried cloſely, none to diſcrie them. An opportunitie it was, and a faire one.

2 The II. Motive, Concluſit Deus.

1 It was night a faire opportunitie.

And (as it might ſeeme) of GODS owne ſending. It was perillouſly put in (that) of Abiſhai, Concluſit Deus; that is was GODS doing, ſure: it was the ſleepe of GOD was fallen on them: none awake; all aſleepe; watch and all. They might ſtay all the daies of their life, and GOD never ſend the like againe. What now?

2 Of Gods ſending (as it might ſeeme.)

Though David wanted no courage to be revenged on an enemie, nor wiſedome to diſcerne this opportunitie; yet, for his reputation, he muſt not ſoile his hands: but poſſibly, if ſome other would take it upon him, he would not be much againſt it. Why, it was undertaken by Abiſhai, that too: he ſhall goe his way, and doe nothing to it: Sine me, you ſhall beare no blame, let that be upon me; you ſhall goe to Church and ſing Pſalmes, and heare the Sermon, and never appeare in it. What now? I know not what can be required more. Thus you ſee the motives: Now, what ſaith David?

3 The III. Motive. Sine me.

Nay firſt, what ſaith Saul? Can we have a better Iudge than him in this caſe? Et inimici noſtri ſint judices, an enemie to be Iudge in his owne cauſe? If you will know, what he ſaith; He it is, that (in the XXIV Chapter, XX.) ſaith thus. Who ſhall finde his enemie at ſuch an advantage, and let him goe free: As much to ſay, Not any; Sure, not he. But if he, or many another had found David, as David did him, in the Cave, he would have cut his skirts ſo cloſe, as he would have made him have bled in the reines of his backe; or, if he had taken him (as he did Saul here) aſleepe, he would have ſet him out of that ſleepe into another, a perpetuall ſleepe, and made him ſure enough for ever waking more. This is Sauls doome, from his owne mouth. And indeed, hæc eſt Via hominis, with fleſh and bloud theſe motives would have wrought. They did not with David: what ſaith he? theſe motives move him not.

II. Davids diſlike.

For all this, all this notwithſtanding, Ne perdas, ſaith he. And firſt, marke; he denieth none of his three motives, 1 that Saul was his enemie; 2 or that the time ſerved fitly; 3 or that the colour was good: but, granting all theſe, for all our enmitie, for all this opportunitie, for all your colourable offer to ſave mine honeſtie; for all this, Deſtroy him not.

I The firſt charge: Ne perdas.

Secondly, marke, it is not negando, a bare deniall, Non eſt faciendum: but, with an imperative, with authoritie, Ne feceris; ſtraightly charging and commanding him, not to be ſo hardie, as to doe it. Et eſt efficacior vetandi ratio quam negandi; by Ne, then by Non: The imperative negative is moſt effectuall.

And thirdly, that this is not the firſt time: once before, he had done the like: and Iteratio præſupponit deliberationem. And indeed, there is a myſterie in this ſame [Sine me] of Abiſhai. They had had him once before at like advantage, in the Cave; (and will you but obſerve, how it went then; it is well worthy your obſerving.) Then they were at David, to have done it himſelfe, Deſtroy him you: What was his anſwer? Who I? GOD forbid, never move it, I will never doe it. Now then, here at this, Abiſhai, knowing by the former, it was in vaine to move him to doe it, he offers to be the doer: It ſhall be none of your act; Sine me: What anſwer now? No, nor you; See you doe it not. Perdas (ſaith Abiſhai) before: Non perdam ſaith David. Perdam (ſaith Abiſhai) now: Ne perdas, ſaith David. So, he will neither doe it himſelfe, nor ſuffer it to be done. The ſhort is: Neither waking, as at firſt; nor ſleeping, as now: neither by day, as in that; nor by night, as in this: neither by himſelfe, nor by other, will David endure to doe it, or to have it done. But, in the one and the other, firſt and laſt, ſtill and ever, Ne perdas (ſaith David:) Saul muſt not be deſtroyed.

4. Yea, ſo far was he after this, from forethinking this ſpeech, or wiſhing it unſaid, that he pleaſed himſelfe in this Ne perdas ſo, that not content to have ſaid it, he made a Pſalme of it, to ſing himſelfe, and all Iſrael with him; and by ſinging it, to ſing their dutie in this point, into all their mindes and memories. A ſigne, the words were good, he would beſtow a dittie and tune upon them, as if he gloried in them. Yea, to make them the more memorable, that they might never be loſt, he hath framed divers other Pſalmes to the ſame tune. You may turne to the LVIII. LIX. LXXV. You ſhall finde all their titles, to the tune of Ne perdas; that ſo, all that then were, and all that were to come might know, how good a ſpeech, he tooke it to be; how meet to be ſaid, and ſung, of all ages.

5. And what would ye more? Not theſe two only, ſaid, and ſung; but in the verſe following, takes his oath, and ſweares to it: As the LORD liveth (ſaith he) GODS hand may, but mine ſhall never be upon him: and his day may come; but, not a day ſooner for me. So that, he ſaid no more in this, than he meant to ſweare to.

2 The Reaſon, or II. charge, Ne manum mittas.

But now to come to looke into the reaſon: we ſhall finde, he goeth further than ſo, than Not deſtroying. For being to give a reaſon of Ne perdas, keeping the rule, he ſhould now have gone on with it, as he begunne, and ſaid, Quis enim perdidit? For who ever deſtroyed a King? He doth not ſo: That (as it ſeemeth) would not ſerve his turne: he changeth his verbe now, and ſaith, Quis enim manum miſit; Who hath but put forth his hand? As if he had given too much ſcope, in ſaying no more, but deſtroy not. Indeed, it was well ſpied; it muſt be ſtopped, before it come to deſtroying. If it come to the deed once, we are all undone: Ne perdas is not enough. Much miſchiefe may be; at leaſt much feare, and fright (as this day there was) and yet, no deſtruction.

To make ſure worke then, ſo farre is he from perdas, as he will not allow manum mittas. By which denying the latter, the former is put paſt all doubt. If the hand be ſtayed, no blow can be given: if order be taken for one, the other will follow of it ſelfe. You may not deſtroy; for, you may not ſtirre your hand, is a good conſequent.

And ſure, GODS care, in this point, is worthy all obſervation; it deſcendeth to ſuch minutes: here in this place we have two reſtraints together, 1 Deſtroy not; Pſal.105.15. 2 and (which is more) lay no hand. In another place, he goeth yet further, Touch not mine Anointed; there needs no hand to that, the finger will ſerve. And yet Prov.30.31. further in another place, Ne Surgas, Riſe not out of your place; or (as the Pſalme Pſal.41 9. expreſſeth it) lift not up your heele: (that is) ſtirre not hand nor foot, to any ſuch end. Men may ſtirre their foot and not riſe, and riſe, and not touch; and touch, but lay lay no hands; and lay the hands on, and not deſtroy. But, GODS meaning is from the firſt to the laſt, to reſtraine all: To have all ſo farre from deſtroying, as not to lay your hand; nay, not touch with your finger; nay, not ſo much as riſe, or ſtirre the foot: but keepe every joynt quiet, from any the leaſt quetching in this matter of Ne perdas. To goe about to doe it, is as much as to doe it.

I
The firſt Retentive: Chriſtum Domini.

We heare his charge: but all this while we ſee not the Retentive, that holds him ſo, that all Abiſhais motives could not move him. He tells us now, what it was: CHRISTVS DOMINI. In which word, is the ſolution of Abiſhais argument, thus. That his militarie Maxime (deſtroying an enemie) which he and many one elſe in the world take to be univerſall, is not ſo. It admits exceptions divers; but among the reſt, and above the reſt, this; if the party be CHRISTVS DOMINI, it holds not. There is more retentive force in CHRISTVS DOMINI, to keepe him alive; than there is motive in Inimicus tuus, to deſtroy him. This is his anſwer. And it is under one, both a ſolution of Abiſhais argument; and a new one propounded by David, to conclude his part, thus. The Lords Annointed is not to be touched (GODS owne expreſſe words, Touch not mine Annointed:) But Saul, what termes ſoever he ſtand in of amitie or enmitie, GODS Annointed he is: Therefore, no touching him. And I obſerve this, that he maketh choice of CHRISTVS DOMINI, for his medius terminus, rather than Dominus Rex, or any other; rather of GODS Annointed, than of his Liege-Lord the King. (Yet there is force in them too; but nothing ſuch, as in this.) To the Sanctuarie he goeth, as to the ſureſt place, and from thence fetcheth this terme of the Lords Annointed, and ſo make the matter ſurer, as he thinketh. For, when all is done, from that place it commeth, that maketh both their Callings, and Perſons ſacred, and holy: therefore, not without ſacriledge to be violated; nay, not to be touched. For, ſuch is the nature of holy things, not to be touched; I ſay, not by any enemie; no, not in warre. For, ſo we ſee, David is diſpleaſed with the Philiſtims, for ſo dealing with Saul, as if he had not beene annointed with oile; as who ſay, it was their duties to have ſpared him, even in that reſpect. Agg 2. 13. 2 Sam. 1. 21.

And ſure, a high terme it is, and not ſlightly to be paſſed over. In another place he calleth them GODS; here, CHRISTOS DOMINI: So, they participate with the name of GOD, and with the name of CHRIST, Annointed; and if they be annointed, it is with the HOLY GHOST and power from above. Which all ſhew a neere alliance betweene GOD and them, CHRIST and them, the Holy Ghoſt and them, ſo as, they are not to be harmed, the leaſt way, if GOD, or CHRIST, or the Holy Ghoſt can keepe them from it. Pſal. 82. 6. Acts 10. 38.

The II Retentive: Non eris inſons.

And this Retentive is ſtrong enough, where there is any ſenſe of Religion. But, it is to be doubted, Abiſhai, and ſome beſides him, have no great feeling that way; and ſo not capable of this. What care they for Samuel or his horne of oile. It muſt not come out of the Sanctuarie, it muſt come from the Barre and the Bench, that muſt prevaile with them. Tell them of Non eris inſons, Guiltie or not Guiltie; and then you ſay ſomething. We ſaid before, there is no more effectuall way to denie, than to forbid; and, it is true, Nec efficacior vetandi ratio, quàm pœnâ propoſitâ, No way of more force to forbid, than ſet a penaltie on it: ſpecially, the great penaltie of all, death. And yet, death a Souldier careth not ſo much for neither, except it be mors ſontica, a malefactors death, and the chiefe malefactors, the traitors death, to be drawen and dragged from his place, as [a] Ioab; hanged, as [b] Bigthan; His bowells pulled out (to ſuite him to [c] Iudas, whoſe guſhed out of themſelves;) To have his heart opened, yet being alive, as [d] Abſalom; His head chopped off, as [e] Sheba; and it and his quarters hanged up, as [f] Baana and Rechabs were: To have [g] their lands and livelyhoods ſeazed on, and given to ſtrangers; [h] Their iſſue miſerable for their ſakes: [i] To be damnatæ memoriæ, their name, and memorie as a curſe: (which three are ſet downe in the hundreth and ninth Pſalme, the Pſalme againſt treacherie.) Tell Abiſhai of this, and this may perhaps ſtay him.

And

And to ſay truth, this was no more than needfull; without it, all that was ſaid, might have beene thought to have had but rationem conſilii & non præcepti; to have beene ſpoken by way of good honeſt adviſe, but to have beene no penall or capitall law. Gently ſaid of David, Ne perdas; And well done of Abiſhai, to forbeare; but, no neceſſitie in it. Therefore he tells them, Theſe words [Ne perdas] are a binding precept: and that ſo, as if they be tranſgreſſed, they will beare an action; yea, an enditement; that who ſo breaketh them, Non erit inſons. And Non erit inſons are judiciall words, and this they import: That, not onely they may be arraigned; but, that no Queſt can acquit them, or finde them not guiltie: that by no Booke, they can; that by this Booke, they cannot be ſaved. But, if they ſtretch forth their hands againſt the Lords Anointed, their necks muſt ſtretch for it; and being found guiltie, they muſt be dealt with as thoſe that are ſo found; and upon them muſt come all that is written in this Booke, which yer-while we recounted.

And yet, Non erit inſons goeth further. For, ſuppoſe ſome of them ſhould happen not to be brought to the barre, it ſhall not ſerve; for all that, Non erit inſons, ſtill. GOD will not hold them guiltleſſe; He will not ſo leave them; but (rather than there ſhould not be holden) hold an Aſſiſe himſelfe, and bring them to the end of guiltie perſons, all the ſort of them. Heaven ſhall doe it by lightning [a] (as *Pſal.*144.) or the earth doe it by ſwallowing up (as [b] Core;) or their owne friend ſhall doe it (as [c] Ioab;) or their owne beaſt (as [d] Abſalom;) or their owne ſelves hang themſelves (as [e] Achitophel;) or burne themſelves (as [f] Zimri.) If they will not ſay Ne perdas to Chriſtus Domini, Chriſtus Domini ſhall ſay perdas to them, and ſend them all to their owne place, the pit of perdition, ſo many as will not ſay Ne perdas, to the Lords Anointed. It was not for nought, that David ſaid to him (II Sam. 1.) How waſt thou not afraid to doe it? There is (ſure) matter of feare in it, every way, to ſtay them: feare of GOD, in Chriſtus Domini, to move David, feare of the Gallowes, in Non eris inſons, to move Abiſhai.

3 Abiſhais owne confeſſion. Verſe 9.

But upon all this, would it not doe well, if we had Abiſhai's owne confeſſion given in evidence againſt himſelfe? That (I ſuppoſe) would take up the matter quite. We have it, 2 Sam. 16. There, in a caſe onely of looſeneſſe in the tongue, where Shemei let goe certaine railing ſpeeches againſt David, could Abiſhai ſay, What ſhall this foule-mouthed curre thus be ſuffered to ſpeake againſt the Lords Anointed? and no remedie; he would needs have gone and fetched his tongue and head and all. Yea, after this returne in peace, when King David had, upon Shemei's ſubmiſſion, given him his pardon, Abiſhai pleaded hard, to have it called backe, and would needs have him die for it; and well worthie he was. And all was but for miſit linguam: and Abiſhai himſelfe is here laying hands, violent hands, on the Lords anointed; a worſe matter by farre. So that, upon the matter, Abiſhai is judged out of his owne mouth, and David juſtified by him, in his Non eris inſons. There are your two Retentives: [1] the firſt for good Subjects; [2] the latter for whomſoever.

4 3 The generalitie of the charge: Quis erit inſons?

Now, leſt any might conceive, this is but a caſe of inſtance; holds in this particular, but extends not to all; ſome bodie, in ſome caſe, may doe it for all this, therefore is it, he carrieth it along through all, with his Quis? to tell us, his meaning is, That not onely Abiſhai, but that Nequis perdat, Ne quis manum mittat; that, none at all deſtroy, none lay hands at all: that his Ne, is generall, without exception of any.

And in this, even his manner of denying, his figura dictionis, the tenor of his ſpeech is ſuch, as I dare make a note of it. There be divers waies of denying, one more full and forcible than another: but of all, the way by interrogative, is holden the fulleſt, and moſt of force. To have ſaid, None did ever attempt it, which was not guiltie; this had beene a deniall, but a calme one. But to ſay: Who ever went about it, but he was found guiltie? there is more life and vigor in it, by a great deale. Indeed, of all Negatives, the ſtrongeſt, the moſt peremptorie, is by Quis? For it is not a bare Negative; but a Negative with a challenge: ſending a challenge to any, if he can for his life, to ſhew ſhew one, that was holden innocent in that caſe. They call it the triumphant Negative; as bearing it ſelfe confident, that none can riſe up againſt it: Who? (that is) ſhew, if ever any ſuch had peace, if ever any were reputed innocent; As much to ſay as, Never was there any, never. If there were, name him, bring him forth; but that you cannot: therefore Quis fuit inſons? maketh the caſe cleere and paſt all queſtion. So you ſee, David told us of Chriſtus Domini, as it were in his Ephod, as a Prophet: Then went he into his long robe, and told us Non erit inſons, as a Iudge: And now he is in his armor, as a Challenger, with Quis unquam? to challenge any, that holdeth the contrarie.

And his challenge will be taken; and there be, that hold the contrarie, in our age; and that dare ſtep forth, and make a queſtion of it for all this: or rather, make no queſtion at all of it, but can tell David, both who may lay his hand on, to deſtroy Gods Anointed; and who ſhall acquit, abſolve, and make them innocent, that ſo doe.

Who ſhall? Quis? marrie Quiſquis, any whoſoever, being warranted. And who ſhall warrant him? That ſhall the High Prieſt, by his laſt cencure.

Theſe fellowes would not ſticke to tell Abiſhai, a cleane contrarie tale, to that of David's. Deſtroy not, ſaith he. Goe to, ſay David what he will, or what he can, we ſay, deſtroy him: what, if he be--? Yea, though he be the Lords Anointed. You ſhall be guiltie then certainly, ſaith David. What ſay they? Say they thus: You ſhall not be guiltie, you may doe it, we will abſolve you? (that were too much:) No; but you ſhall merit by it; you ought to doe it: we will Saint you for ſo doing. This is not matter of talke; we know it hath beene done.

Quis, who? A Iacobine lay his hand: Yea, hand and knife, and thruſt it into the body of Gods Anointed: Yea, anointed with the oile that came downe from heaven (as they tell us) ſent purpoſely to anoint the French Kings and make them Gods Anointed κατ' ἐξοχὴν. What, and not guiltie? Not guiltie: yea, and hardly ſcaped from being a Saint, if the Cardinals faith had failed as well as the Popes did, and if they had not kept Saint Peters ſucceſſor from erring. Be not we fallen into ſtrange times, wherein David muſt be driven to recant, and Abiſhai prove the Prophet? and in which (as if there were no ſuch verſe as this, in the Bible) the illuſion of errour is growne ſo ſtrong with ſome, as they will rather themſelves be deſtroyed, than ſay, the Lords Anointed is not to be deſtroyed.

Sauls caſe a ruling caſe for Ne perdas.

I wil do them no wrong: They will ſay, This text is enough, to condemne this daies attempt, it commeth full home to that caſe. It was upon Inimicum tuum: in which caſe of private revenge, themſelves hold it cleere, quòd non, as well as we. But, when they diſpence with Ne perdas, it is upon other grounds: upon miſgovernment, or (to ſpeake as they doe) tyrannie; upon uſurping power in matters eccleſiaſticall: upon bloudy perſecution, and that of Gods Prieſts; and theſe are not in the Text. Yes they are in him in the Text, concerning whom this Ne perdas was given, every one: and yet Ne perdas ſtands, for all that. And this I ſay, howſoever Abiſhai did looke upon Saul, but with a Souldiers eye, and ſaw nothing in him but an enemie, to move him, to deſtroy him; if ſome of theſe quicke and ſharpe-ſighted Abiſhai's had had the looking into him, they would have ſpied in him other manner of matter, to have reſolved him meet to be made away: they would have found him, not Davids enemie onely, but an enemie to God, and all goodneſſe; and returne him culpable of all thoſe faults, which they uſe to inſiſt on, when they write their bookes to that end.

And I verily thinke, God, in this firſt example, of his firſt King over his owne people, hath purpoſely ſuffered them all to fall out, and to be found in him; even all that ſhould fall out in any King after him, to inforce their poſition: that ſo we might finde them anſwered to our hands.

Notwithſtanding his Miſgovernment and Tyrannie.

To touch them in order. They would eaſily have quarrelled at Sauls miſgovernment. Not at the firſt; he then, was a milde, and a gratious Prince. Never came there there from any Princes mouth, a more princely ſpeech, than the firſt ſpeech, he is recorded to have ſpoken, Quid populo quòd flet? What ayles the people to complaine? A ſpeech worthy everlaſting memory, ſo they complaine not without cauſe. But within a while, he grew ſo ſterne and fierce, as no man might ſpeake to him. Vpon every light occaſion, nay upon no occaſion at all, his javelin went ſtraight to naile men to the wall: Not David onely, but Ionathan his Sonne and Heire apparent, and no cauſe why. In the XIII. Chapter it is ſaid; Saul had then beene King a yeare, and raigned two yeares in Iſrael: yet it is well knowne, his raigne was forty yeares: Their own Writers reſolve it, thus: how long ſoever he raigned, he was a King but two yeares. All the time after, he was ſomewhat elſe, or ſomewhat more than a King. And they let not to tell what; applying to Saul that of the Pſalme, Tyrants that have not God before their eyes ſeeke after my ſoule. And that: Vnder thy wings ſhall be my refuge, till this tyrannie be overpaſt. Yet for all this tyrannie, Ne perdas, ſaith David.

2 Vſurping the Prieſts office.

Yet for all this he fell not into the ſinne of all ſinnes, which they ſtand ſo much on, Vſurping power in things ſpirituall. Yes: and that would they have found too. Why? did he call himſelfe Head of the Church? Indeed no: Samuel did that for him; He it was, that ſaid: When thou wert little in thine owne eyes, the Lord made thee Head of the Tribes of Iſrael (of which, the Tribe of Levi was one:) for that, Samuel muſt anſwer. But Saul went further a great deale; yea, further than Oza: For he tooke upon him to ſacrifice in perſon himſelfe; to offer burnt offerings, upon the very Altar, the higheſt part of all the Prieſts Office: that is, uſurped further than ever did any. And all this David knew, yet it kept him not from ſaying, Ne perdas.

Chap. 15.17.
Chap. 13.19.

3 Shedding the Prieſts bloud.

They never had done with perſecuting and ſhedding Prieſts bloud: was Sauls finger in that too? In that, he paſſed: He put the High Prieſt himſelfe and LXXXIV. more, all in one day, to the ſword: and all but upon the ſingle accuſation, but of Doeg; all proteſting their innocencie, in the fact; and all, loyalty to him: and all but for a dozen of bread given to David. This could not but grieve David exceedingly: it was for his ſake; yet he ſaith, Ne perdas though, for all that.

Chap. 22.18.

4 Being poſſeſſed with an evill ſpirit.

And one caſe more I give in for advantage. It is well knowne, he was a Dæmoniack, one actually poſſeſſed with an evill ſpirit; which is a caſe beyond all other caſes: Yet deſtroy him not Abiſhai, though. So that, if Abiſhai, in ſtead of inimicum tuum, had ſaid, GOD hath ſhut up 1 this Tyrant, 2 this Vſurper, 3 this Perſecutor, 4 this Poſſeſſed partie, this what you will; David would have ſaid no other than he did, Ne perdas, ſtill. I would faine know, which of all their deſtructive caſes is here wanting: They be all here; all, in Saul; all in him, at the time of this motion: yet, all alter not the caſe: David ſaith ſtill, as he ſaid. If then all be in Saul, all incident, all eminent in him; nay if his caſe be beyond all; ſaid it muſt be, that David here ſaith. Though he be any of theſe, though he be all theſe, deſtroy him not; or deſtroy him and be deſtroyed, deſtroy him and be the child of perdition.

Chap. 16.14.

5 There was an High Prieſt Abiathar.

I would be loth to deceive you: There may ſeeme yet to want one thing. Here was no High prieſt to excommunicate him, or give warrant to doe it: yes, that there was too. For Abiathar ſcaped that great maſſacre of Prieſts by Saul: and now, he was lawfull High Prieſt. Now he fled to David thence, and brought the Ephod with him. So as by good hap, the High Prieſt was with David now in the Campe, and the Ephod too. There wanted no juſt cauſe (you ſee) to proceed againſt Saul. There wanted no lawfull authoritie; the High Prieſt we have. There wanted no good will in Abiathar, ye may be ſure, his father and brethren having beene murthered by Saul. So here was all, or might have beene, for a word ſpeaking. All would not ſerve; David is ſtill where he was; ſaith ſtill, Ne perdas; knew no ſuch power, in the High Prieſts cenſure, was not willing to abuſe it: cannot ſee Quis, any perſon to doe it; nor any cauſe, for which it is to be done. Enough, to make a ruled caſe of it for ever. That Abiſhai may not doe it, nor Abiathar give warrant to it. His charge is honeſt, Ne perdas: His reaſon good, Chriſtus Domini: His ſentence juſt, Non erit inſons: His challenge un-anſwerable, Quis mittet manum?

Chap. 22. laſt.
Chap. 23.6.

And

The Text and Day compared.

And, this being cleered, come we now to the principall cauſe of our comming. Which is, in this publike manner, to render our yearely ſolemne thankes to Chriſtus Dominus, for the deliverance of our Chriſtus Domini, this day (a deliverance like this in the Text;) even for His Ne perdas, at Perth. For it, and for both points in it. 1 That His Anointed was not deſtroyed. 2 That they, that put forth their hand to doe it, carried it not away, but found the reward due to guiltie perſons. The two caſes, 1 this in the Text: 2 and that of this day: are both like in the maine: if in circumſtances, diſlike; this of ours hath the advantage. The fact more foule, the deliverance more famous.

To ſpeake then of malitia diei hujus, the malitious practice of this day. Had the King beene an enemie; yea, ſuch an enemie as Saul, it had beene no warrant. But, he was no enemie: No, but many wayes, a gracious Prince to them both. I know, pretence there was, of a wrong. Say it had beene one; what was done, was done by others, in the Kings minoritie. And though done by others, yet juſtly done: and no wrong was it at all, but wrongfully ſo called.

Secondly, the King was ſhut up, it is true; but not as in the Text, by GOD; but by wicked men, who found him not caſually (as Saul was) but trained him guilefully to the place, and there ſhut him up treacherouſly. It was not ſudden, it was a long plot: the malice, the more; the fact, the fouler. And there he was concluſus & derelictus both; ſhut up by Abiſhai, forſaken of David.

Thirdly, and it was not night, nor the King aſleepe, that he might have paſſed away without any fright or terrour. No: it was Dæmon meridianus this, a noone-day devill: He was broad awake, and the feare of death (worſe than death it ſelfe) I know not how oft and many times, before his eyes. Pſal. 91. 6.

Fourthly: And as beyond it in theſe; ſo, in the Principall beyond it too. Both of them lift up: Abiſhai, his ſpeare; this, his dagger, to have given the fatall blow. Abiſhai, but once: This, twice. And certainly, neerer it came the King, than David would ſuffer it come to Saul: So, the danger neerer, and the delivery greater. And yet, there was a Ne perdas in this too; and that a ſtrange one: Not by David, no: Iudge, if it may not ſeeme a miracle, that GOD then ſhewed. When there was none to ſay deſtroy not, elſe; GOD opened, his mouth that was there ſet, himſelfe to be the deſtroyer, to ſay once and againe, ô deſtroy him not, deſtroy not the King. The voyce was Davids; the hands, Abiſhai's. It cals to my minde, what long ſince I read in Herodotus: that at the taking of Sardi, when one ranne at Cræſus the King, to have ſlaine him, that a little boy borne dumbe, that had never ſpoken word in all his life, with the fright and horrour of the ſight, his tongue looſed, and hee broke forth and cried ὦ ἄνθρωπε, &c. O man deſtroy not the King, and ſo ſaved his life. So writeth he, as of a wonder: and ſee, if this were not like it. But ſo we ſee, if there were no body elſe to ſay it, they that are borne dumbe ſhall ſay it; yea, the deſtroyer himſelfe ſhall ſay it, rather than Ne perdas ſhall not be ſaid. This would not ſerve (though it did to Abiſhai;) but they were worſe than Abiſhai, that were here. That GOD therefore might have the honour of the day, he paſſed over to the latter part of the verſe; and when there was none elſe to doe it, he tooke the matter into his owne hands; himſelfe held the aſſiſe, found him guiltie, gave order for his execution, ſent up one to doe it; and one, that formerly had beene his ſpeciall friend, and (if I be not deceived) ſworne brother, as Ioab, to bring Abſalom to his end; that deſtroyed him, for not hearing deſtroy not.

And yet the goodneſſe of GOD ſtayed not here, neither; but, where in the Text, in Saul's caſe, there was but one blow, one danger, one delivery: In this, there were no leſſe than three, one after another. Firſt came Abiſhai; hee and his armed man: GOD delivered him. Then came the other, the Maſter of the miſchiefe, then bewrayed, and (as one bewrayed) deſperately ſet: GOD againe delivered him. Then laſt of all (and that was worſt of all) came the popular tumult, whoſe rage knowes no reaſon, who, as they Num. XVI. called Core and Dathan, the people of the Lord: ſo theſe (little better:) and even then alſo did GOD by his mightie providence turne away the deſtruction. This in the Text was ſoone done; a few words, and away: This of the day, it was long firſt, and much adoe, yer it was done: the longer, and the more, the more is GOD to be magnified for it.

And when all was done there, he that was ſaved was but Saul: but here (envie flatters not, but) if envie it ſelfe ſhould ſpeake, it would ſay, Major Saule hîc, a greater than Saul any: (For, the territory of the leaſt of your kingdomes was greater than that of his:) And melior Saule hîc, a better than Saul was here ſaved; better, without all compariſon. So, the beginning was (as they made account) Concluſit Deus inimicum noſtrum: The end was, as it proved, Concluſit Deus inimicos Domini Regis, GOD, made a concluſion of their wicked premiſſes and their wretched perſons all at once. So, the concluſion was Ne perdas to the King, and Non inſons to the children of perdition.

Now, to that GOD, that when You were ſhut up, forſooke You not, but delivered You à malitiâ diei hujus & à Dæmone meridiano; that in the depth of Your all danger, when there was no tongue on earth could ſay Ne perdas, ſaid it from heaven, and ſaid it thrice over: for that his three-fold delivery, render we three-fold thankes and praiſe; thrice bleſſed bee His holy Name for it. And He grant, that this leſſon of Davids, may take deepe root in all our hearts, that there may never be a Quis in Iſrael to lift up his hand, to the like action; all may be quit, none found guiltie ever of ſo foule a crime. None, on Abiſhai's ſide, to make any ſuch motion; all of Davids minde, to miſlike it, to ſay Ne perdas: Ne perdas, though it be Saul. But, for David, Ne perdas is not enough. To Him, and ſuch as He is, let us with one voyce crie Hoſanna; not onely, not deſtroy, but Hoſanna, LORD ſave, LORD proſper, LORD adde dayes to his dayes, that his yeares may be as many ages. And as this day thou didſt, ſo ſtill and ſtill prepare thy loving mercy and truth, that they may preſerve Him, even for ever and ever.

A

SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT HOLDENBIE, on the V. of August, A. D. MDCX.

I CHRON. CHAP. XVI. VER. XXII.

Nolite tangere Christos meos.

Touch not mine Anointed:

HERE is a speech: but wee know not Whose, nor to Whom, nor yet (well) concerning whom: onely concerning certaine Persons, whom the Speaker (whosoever He is) calleth His Anointed. It behoveth us, to know these three, who they be.

The person, whose the speech is, Persona loquens, He that saith Meos, Him we finde at the foureteenth verse. Ipse est Dominus Deus noster; He is the Lord our GOD: GOD it is, that speaketh here; He, that challengeth them for His, by calling them, Mine. 1

The persons to whom: in the verse before, Non reliquit hominem, He leaveth not a man. So, it is, to all in generall: but specially to some, more quicke of touch than the rest, whose fingers are never well, till some way or other, they be touching, whom GOD would not have touched. 2

The persons, concerning whom (whom, He stileth, His Anointed) will fall out to prove, the Princes of the earth. We must not say it, but prove it (say it now, prove it anon.) 3

Now, as if some body were about to offer them some wrong; here commeth a voice from heaven, staying their hands, and saying, See you touch them not. Quos Deus unxit, homo ne tangat. Whom GOD hath anointed, let no man presume to touch.

Of which, it may well be said, as the Psalmist saith to us, every day, Hodiè si vocem:

To day, if ye will heare His voice, harden not your hearts, and ye may: For, as this day (now ten yeares) from the ſame Perſon, and the ſame place, a like voice there came, concerning His Anointed, in whoſe preſence we ſtand. That GOD would not have His Anointed touched, this Text is a witneſſe, and this Day is a witneſſe: The Text, dixit; the Day, factum eſt.

Referred unto the Text next before, 1 Sam. 26.9.

Touching the ſame point, when time was, in this place you heard, Ne perdas: you ſhall heare it againe now, but, from an higher perſon, under a ſtraighter charge, and with a larger compaſſe.

1 The perſon higher: for, that was David: Sed ecce major Davide hîc, but behold, a greater than David is here. This, is no voice on earth (neither of Prophet nor Apoſtle) we now heare: Audivi vocem de cælo, Wee heare a voice from heaven: And thence, neither of Saint nor Angel, but of GOD Himſelfe. To ſhew His care of them (His Anointed) He would have none give the charge about them, but Himſelfe; Himſelfe in perſon, Non alienâ vocis organo, ſed oraculo ſuâ; from none other, but from His owne mouth.

2 The charge ſtricter: for, there it was, deſtroy not, the worſt that could be: Here it it, Touch not, the leaſt that may be; and ſo, even that way, amended much.

3 The compaſſe larger: That, was to Abiſhai, but one man; and it was, concerning Saul, one King onely; and therefore it was in the ſingular, Ne perdas: This is, Nolite, and Chriſtos: the number altered, of a larger extent farre, even to All men, concerning All His Anointed. Nolite, in the plurall, that is, None of you: Chriſtos in the plurall, that is, None of them. Them, not touched, not Any of them; You, not touch, not Any of you. Non reliquit hominem: He leaveth not a man, but forbiddeth All. Now, out of this plurall, you may deduce any ſingular; Out of Chriſtos, any King: Out of Nolite, any party: Out of Tangere, any hurt: and ſo, not any man, to doe any hurt, to any His Anointed.

This Text, the firſt and great Commandement concerning this point.

A Commandement it is, and I may ſafely ſay, Primum & magnum mandatum, The firſt and great Commandement, touching the ſafegard of Princes.

The firſt: For (as the verſes before ſhew) it was the firſt given, in this kinde, and that before all other, in the Patriarchs time, long before Moſes, under the Law of Nature.

The greateſt, not onely becauſe it is of the greateſt in heaven, and concerning the greateſt in earth: but for that it is the originall maine precept, touching Princes and their ſafety, or (as the phraſe is) the fundamentall Law, upon the which all the reſt are grounded, unto the which all the reſt reduced, and from the which all the reſt derived. Davids deſtroy not, is but an abſtract of this Touch not. Aske him what Text he had for his Ne perdas: hither he muſt come, this muſt be it, and none other. This Nolite tangere is the maine wing of protection; Ne perdas, or any other particular, is but a feather of it.

The Diviſion.

To ſee the parts of it. A Precept it is, and negative; and the negative precept is of the nature of a fence, and the fence leadeth us to the thing fenced. Firſt of all then, we take it in ſunder, in the midſt: meos, whoſe the fence is; and then Nolite tangere, as it were a circle or fence round about them.

I. Chriſtos meos hath in it, two things: Not onely the parties, whom they ſhould not: but the reaſon why they ſhould not touch them. Not touch? Whom not touch? His Anointed. And why not touch? Even becauſe, His Anointed.

In Chriſtos meos taken together, are the parties non tangendæ: Againe, in Chriſtos meos taken in ſunder and weighed apart, are two reaſons couched, de non tangendo.

Why not touched? firſt, they be His: And ſecondly, what of His? His Anointed. Theſe two, be two ſeverall: His Anointed, is more than His: for, all that be His be not Anointed.

1. His

1 His alone, were enough; that they be His, they pertaine to Him, and ſo, Hee to ſee them ſafe.

2 But then beſides, they be the very choice and chiefe of His, His Anointed, and ſo, a more ſpeciall care of them, than the reſt.

3 And then (from the nature of the word) not onely His Anointed, Vncti ejus: but Chriſti Ejus, His Chriſts, which is the Higheſt degree of His Anointed: for higher than that, ye cannot goe.

And laſt, what that is, that maketh them thus, His Anointed: to know whether they may be ſtripped of it, or no.

Then come we to the Circle or Fence, and that we may divide too: for, Nolite tangere, is a double fence; 1 from the act, 2 and from the will. Touch not (ſo we reade) where the touch, the act, is forbidden. Nolite tangere (ſo reade the Fathers) where the will to touch is forbidden likewiſe. Nolite, that is, Have yee not the will, not ſo much as an inclination to doe it. So, both the act and will of touching is reſtrained: the act, in tangere; the will, in Nolite. II. 1 2

In the former, we are to take the extent, of Tangere, and Chriſtos: 1. To what matters Tangere will reach: 2. In how many points, to Chriſtos. And in the latter, to what perſons, in Nolite.

And ſo, ſee we the ſumme of the Text, which is ſufficient enough to keepe Kings from touching, if it ſelfe might be kept untouched: but as the times are, the Text it ſelfe is touched, there needs a ſecond Nolite tangere for it. To that end then, to ſee the Text ſafe and well kept, the three perſons in it, all to joyne together: Kings, touching whom; and Subjects, to whom; and GOD Himſelfe, by whom it is given in charge. And if the two former doe their parts, GOD will not faile in His.

Let me adde one thing more. That this Text, beſides that it is a Commandement, it is alſo a Thankſgiving; But both have but one errand, the Kings ſafety.

A Commandement it is from GOD: the very ſtile, the moode (Nolite) giveth it for no leſſe.

And a Thankſgiving it is to GOD; for it is a verſe of a Pſalme, of a Halleluja-Pſalme, of the firſt Halleluja-Pſalme: (there be twenty of them in all, this is the firſt of them all.)

A Commandement it is; for it is proclaimed with ſound of Trumpet, and that by Banaiah and his company: And a Thankſgiving it is; for it is ſung with ſolemne muſike by Aſaph, and the Queere, at the ſixth and ſeventh verſes before. It is both, and both wayes we to have uſe of it.

Firſt, as of a Commandement from GOD, to teach us this dutie towards GODS Anointed. I truſt, we will performe better duties to them than this: but, whatſoever we doe beſides, what good we doe them, Ne noceat, not to touch them, to doe them no hurt.

And, never ſo much need of this doctrine, as now, when by a late heavie accident, we ſee, wretches there are, dare attempt it: And other (and they the more wretches of the twaine) that did dare to avow it: Did dare (I ſay;) for, now they would ſeeme to diſavow it; but ſo poorely, and faintly, as all they ſay, may hold, and yet another like act be done to morrow.

And then ſecondly, as a Thankſgiving to GOD, who hath ſet the print of this commandement, upon this day; in cutting ſhort this day two wicked Imps, that went about to breake it, by touching, and more than touching, the LORDS Anointed.

And never were we ſo much bound to doe it, as this yeare: For that, this yeare, upon this freſh occaſion, truly we may ſay, He hath dealt thus with us, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi, He hath not ſo dealt with all Nations, nor hath every King found Him ſo gracious. Others, have not in theirs; I ſpeake it with compaſſion: we have in ours; I ſpeake it to our comfort, and to the praiſe of GOD. Both theſe wayes. Pſal. 147. 20.

Christos meos.

Christos meos, who they be.

AN honourable Title to begin with: and begin with it we muſt: the very Gram. mar-Rules lead us to it. Anointed, is but an Adjective, we are to ſeeke the Subſtantive for it. But beſides, we are to finde who they be, whom we are not to touch, leſt we touch them unawares. And as well, that we may know the right, and doe them their right; as, that we may diſcerne them from the wrong: for, wrong there be, that call themſelves Chriſtos Domini, whom the HOLY GHOST never chriſtned by that name.

Marke 13.21. As, of CHRIST Himſelfe, many come and ſay, Ecce, hic eſt CHRISTVS, ecce illîc: Here is CHRIST, and there is CHRIST, and deceive many: So, of theſe Chriſts here likewiſe; See, here is Chriſtus Domini, and there he is, and no ſuch matter. Our firſt point then is to know, who they be.

Patriarchs, Chriſti Domini. Theſe in the Text here, were the Patriarchs, it cannot be denied. They be ſet downe by their names, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, touching whom, primâ intentione; this charge is given, that they be not touched.

And let not this ſeeme ſtrange: For in the firſt world, the Patriarchs were principall perſons, and (as I may ſafely ſay) Princes in their generations, and for ſuch, holden and reputed by thoſe, with whom they lived. I may ſafely ſay it: for of

Gen.23.6. Abraham it is in expreſſe termes ſaid by the Hethites, Audi Domine, Princeps Dei es inter nos, Thou art a Prince of God (that is, a mightie Prince) here among us: As indeed, a Prince he ſhewed himſelfe, when he gave battell and overthrow to foure Kings at once.

Gen.26.16. Of Iſaac no leſſe may be ſaid, who grew ſo mightie, as the King of Paleſtine was glad to intreat him to remove further off, and not dwell ſo neere him: and then, to goe after him in perſon, and ſue to him, there might be a league of amity betweene them.

Verſ.28. Gen.48.22. And the like of Iacob, who by his ſword and bow, conquered from the Amorite (the mightieſt of all the nations in Canaan) that countrey, which by will hee gave to Ioſeph for his poſſeſſion. It was neere to Sichar, well knowne; you have mention of it, Iohn 4.5.

Great men they were certainly, greater than moſt conceive: but be their greatneſſe what it will, this is ſure, they were all the Rulers the people of GOD then had, and beſides them, Rulers had they none. And that is it we ſeeke; Pater was in them, and ἀρχὴ too, father-hood and government: and theſe two made them Patri-

In Pſal.140. archs, & Vnctos ante unctionem (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) Anointed before there was any materiall Anointing at all.

Princes, Chriſti Domini. In them then this terme began, and in them it held ſo long, as they had the government in them. But, Patriarchs were not alwayes to governe GODS people; but Kings, in ages following, were to ſucceed in their places. And ſo did ſucceed them; ſucceed them in the word Pater, and in the word ἀρχὴ both, both in the right of their father-hood, and the rule of their government, as Fathers of their Countries, and Governours of their Common-wealths. Where the Patriarchall rule expired, the Regall was to take place, being both one in effect. For, Abraham the Patriarch is termed a Prince, (*Gen.*XXIII. 6.) and to make even, David the Prince is termed a Patriarch; Let me ſpeake boldly unto you of the Patriarch David, ſaith Saint Peter (*Act.*II.29.) So that two things we gaine here: 1. That jus Regium commeth out of jus Patrium, the King's right from the Father's, and both hold by one Commandement. Then 2. That this Text bindeth, as a Law of Nature, being given for ſuch, to the old world, long before the Law came in any Tables.

Now, that as in other things, ſo in this terme of Chriſti Domini, Kings do ſucceed the the Patriarchs, we have (first) our warrant from the Holy Ghost, applying this terme here, after, to [a] Saul, to [b] David, to [c] Salomon, to [d] Ezekias, to [e] Iosias, to [f] Cyrus: Kings all. Secondly, from the Councells. The third generall Councell of Ephesus; the great Councell of Toledo the fourth; the great Westerne Councell of Francford. Thirdly, from the consent of Fathers. To dispatch them at once, so saith the Councell of Francford, B. Hieronymus & cæteri S. Scriptura tractatores, &c. S. Hierom and the rest of the Writers on Scripture (all) understand it not of others, but of Kings: Yea, lastly from their owne Writters, Cajetan, and Genebrard, who themselves so apply it, upon this very place.

Append. ad Tom. 4. pag. 1097. can. 74. pag. 649. Editio Venet.

Princes onely in Scripture have the title of Christi Domini.

Nay, Kings, they will grant (they can neither will nor choose:) But then, they would hemme in others likewise, to enter-common in the Title; as the Pope, as the Cardinalls, and as any else, save them that be indeed. But that they must doe then without booke: For, in this booke warrant have they none. For, this terme [Christi Domini] here, originally ascribed to the Patriarchs, is ever afterward, without variation, continually appropriate to Kings, and to Kings onely, all the Bible through. The question is, whether we will speake, as the Holy Ghost doth, or no? If we will, then upon a just survey taken of all the places, where the word Christus Domini is to be found in Scripture, three and thirty they be in number. Of which one onely is in the New, and that is of our SAVIOVR Himselfe: the rest, all in the Old. Foure times by God, Mine Anointed; Six times to God, Thine Anointed: Ten times of God, His Anointed: Twelve times in termes terminant, Gods Anointed: Of which, twice it is said of the Patriarchs; Here, and in the CV. Psalme (which two places are indeed but one.) All the rest are said either of CHRIST, or of Kings, all: and never applied to any other, but to them onely. And here we joyne issue: if to any other, the Scripture apply Christos Domini, we yeeld: if to none but them, we carry it. For, what reason have we, if the Scripture appropriate it to them, and none but them; to take it from them, and give it to others; to whom the HOLY GHOST never gave it.

Luc. 2. 26.

Though other persons anointed, yet none called the Lords Anointed.

Yet have I no meaning to deny, but that others, not onely persons, but (if they will) even things too, were annointed under the Law. Persons, as Priests and Prophets: Things, as the Tabernacle, and all the Vessells of it, even to the very fire-forkes, ashpans and snuffers. But though they were so, yet none of the things, nay, nor any of the persons, have ever the name given them, of Christus Domini. No Prophet, of all the fellowship of the Prophets; no Priest, no not the high Priest himselfe; ever so called. It may be, Anointed; but not the Lords anointed: It may be Uncti, not Christi. or, in a corner of one chapter of the Maccabees [Christi] once, but not with his full Christendome, not Christi Domini. Still they fall short: and Christus Domini followes the King, and him onely.

Yea, this yee shall observe in their owne old Translator: that the same word in Hebrew and Greeke, when he speaketh of the Priest, he ever turneth it Unctus; when of the King, Christus ever: as if of purpose he meant by this word, to make a partition betweene them. Any will thinke, there was surely meant them some speciall prerogative more than the rest: that from the rest it is given them, and ever to them, and to none of the rest.

We may well conclude this point then, with the Apostle: They are made so much the more excellent than the rest, by how much they have obtained a more excellent name than the rest. For unto which of all the rest at any time said he, Thou art mine Anointed? Heb. 1. 4, 5. Enough to settle this terme upon Kings. The Holy Ghost attributes it to them, and none but them. We to understand it of them, and none but them. It is, and so let it be, their owne due stile, their proper denomination. Touch not mine Anointed: Who be they? If we goe by the booke, Princes: why then, Touch not Princes.

Meos, the claime whose they be.

Christos meos, who they be, we see. But in these words (we said) there are not onely the parties, whom they should not: but the reason, why they should not touch them. And not one reason, but two at the least. Now then, let us take the words in sunder, and weigh either by it selfe, seeing either word is a reason, de non tangendo. First, whose they be: His meos. Then what of His: His anointed. And His Anointed, is Christi ejus: Which (it may be) will amount to two reasons more. Meos is His claime: Christos, His character, or speciall marke.

Lay no title to them.

Meos, His claime: which word is not slightly to be passed by. It is to the purpose. To claime, is to touch. He that saith Meos, He that claimes them, toucheth them: toucheth their free-hold (as we say.) He that saith, touch them not; saith, claime them not. Some question there is growen, whose they be. Two claimes there are put in, and layd to them, besides. Meos, saith the Pope; and Meos, say some for the People; but neither say true: GOD, He saith Christos meos, and He onely hath the right so to say.

1 Meos, the Popes claime.

Meos, saith the Pope. For he, or some by his commission, used to anoint the Emperours, and because he was master of the ceremony, he would be master of the substance too: and his they were. The Pope, he was Gods; and they were his anointed, and of him had their dependance, and he to depose them and to dispose of them, and to doe with his owne what he list. And this claime, is not yet given over. For, he that shall marke the Popes faintnesse, when some Kings are sought to be touched; nay, are touched indeed, out of his Meos; will easily thinke, he is well enough content they be touched, though they be GODS Anointed, if they be not his too: Touch not his: Not his, as for others, it skilleth not, touch them, who will.

But this claime by the ceremony is cleane marred, by this Text: for when these words (here) were spoken, there was no such ceremony instituted, it was Non ens, no such thing in rerum naturâ. That came not up, till Moses: Now these here in the Text, were in their graves long before Moses was borne. No Meos then; no claime by the ceremonie.

2 Esay 45.1.

And after it came up, no Priest went out of Iury to Persia to carry the ceremony to Cyrus: yet of him, saith Esay, Hæc dicit Dominus, Cyro Christo meo, Thus saith the Lord, to Cyrus mine Anointed, and yet never came there any oyle upon his head. So that even after it was taken up, yet the ceremony and the claime by it, would not hold. The truth is, the ceremony doth not any thing; onely declareth, what is done. The party was before, as much as he is after it: onely by it, is declared to be, that he was before and that which he should have beene still, though he had never so beene declared. The truth may and doth subsist, as with the ceremony, so without it. It may be retained, as with some it is, and with us it is: and it may be spared, as it is with others: Spared, or retained, all is one; no claime groweth that way.

But last of all, where it was used, as by Samuel to Saul, by Sadoc to Salomon: yet they claimed nothing in the parties they anointed, but called them still GODS, and never their owne anointed. They knew no claime lay by it: Nay, if it had beene a Sacrament, as it was but a ceremony: he that ministreth the Sacrament, hath no interest in the party by it, but GOD alone; and then much lesse he, that performeth but a ceremony, is to plead any Meos. So that every way, this claime vanisheth, of Christi Pontificis.

Meos, the Peoples claime. Bellarmine.

Now then, a second claime, another Meos, hath of late begunne to be buzzed of, as if they were Christi populi, and held of them. And whatsoever the matter is, the Cardinall himselfe waxeth very earnest for it; (I thinke, because he seeth the Popes arme groweth short, and loth he is, but that there should be still some hands to touch them;) he will not so much, as give God leave to appoint Saul or David of Himselfe, but he taketh upon him, to suspend them both, untill the people with their suffrage come in, and ratifie GODS doing.

But this claime likewise falleth to the ground, even by this verse: then must we goe mend our Text here. For if ſo: GOD was properly to have ſaid, Nolite tangere Chriſtos veſtros, Touch not your Anointed; for to the people, Hee ſpeaketh. Of all others, Meos cannot be theirs, unleſſe we will gloſſe it thus, Meos (id eſt) non meos; Mine (that is) none of mine, but your owne. And then ſure, He ſhould have done them ſome wrong, to have forbid them to touch that, which was their owne. The Pope ſaith, He can make CHRISTVM DOMINVM, CHRIST the LORD Himſelfe: if he could ſo doe indeed, it were not altogether unlike, he might make Chriſtum Domini. But GOD helpe, if the people fall to make Gods, or make Chriſts, if they ſhall take GODS verſe from Him, and ſay Nos diximus, Dii eſtis, We have ſaid, ye are Gods: yea, and Chriſts Pſal.82.6. too, and change it, Thou ſhouldeſt have no power unleſſe it were, Data deſuper, Given from Iohn 19.11. above, ſaith He; They, unleſſe it were data de ſubter, unleſſe it were given you hence from beneath: then, muſt we goe change all our Texts that ſound that way. Enough to let you ſee, they both claime that is none of theirs, but GODS.

To give in evidence now, for GODS right; That His Meos is the only true claime, 3 that His onely they be. Three times over, it is told us by Daniel in one Chapter, that Meos, Gods the Kingdomes be GODS, and that He giveth them, to whom He will, as having the ſole claime. property of them. And it is ſaid there, that this is Sententia Vigilum, & Sermo Sanctorum. And, if it be Sententia Vigilum, they are ſcarce well awake, that think otherwiſe; Verſe 22. And if it be Sermo Sanctorum, they talke prophanely, that ſpeake otherwiſe. And this Verſe 29. verily was the divinity of the Primitive Church concerning Kings, which of all, had leaſt cauſe to favour them. Cujus juſſu naſcuntur homines, ejus juſſu conſtituuntur Principes; By whoſe appointment they be borne men (and that is, neither by people's, nor by Verſe 14. Pope's) by His appointment, and no other, are they made Princes, ſaith old Iræneus. Inde illis Lib.5. poteſtas, unde ſpiritus; Thence have they their power, whence they have their breath, ſaith Apolog. p.6.5. Tertullian: And that is from neither (I am ſure) but from GOD alone.

His they be: for, His their Crowne, Diadema Regis in manu Dei, Eſay LXII. And Verſe 3. as if he ſaw a hand come from heaven with a Crowne in it, ſo ſpeaketh he in the XXI. Verſe 4. Pſal. Tu poſuiſti, thou haſt ſet a crowne of pure gold upon His head. His, their ſcepter, or rod: Virga Dei in manibus Ejus, GODS rod in his hand, Exod. XVII. of Moſes. His Verſe 9. their throne: Sedebat Salomon in throno Dei, Salomon ſate upon GODS Throne, I Chro. Verſe 21. XXIX. Nay, long before, in the Law of Nature, ſaith Iob, Reges in ſolio collocat in Iob 36.7. perpetuum: He takes them by the hand, and placeth them in the Throne, and that in perpetuum, there to ſit, in themſelves, and their ſucceſſion for ever. His, their Anointing: Pſal.89.21. Oleo ſancto Meo, with Mine holy oyle: The Anointing His, therefore the Anointed. And if all theſe, their Crowne, their Scepter, their Throne, their Anointing His; then His they be, Chriſti Domini. And of Chriſti Domini, we ſhall ſhew twelve faire evidences in expreſſe termes, GODS Anointed. And ten more, wee ſhall bring forth, with an Ejus, a plaine reference to Him, His Anointed. Chriſti Pontificis, Samuel's or Sadoc's Anointed: Chriſti populi, Iuda's or Iſrael's Anointed, non legitur, wee ſhall not finde. His they be then.

Now inferre. His: therefore hand off, what have you to doe with that, is none of yours? what to claime or to touch, that is His? Nolite tangere meos. This onely, and no more but this, in very equitie were enough, Touch not Mine. This, for Meos: Now to Vnctos.

His then: but not as All are, by a generall tenure; but His, as His Anointed, by a Anointed, Vncti. more ſpeciall and peculiar kinde of intereſt. His Anointed, is more than His, for all His are not anointed: for if all were anointed, there ſhould be none left to touch them: we might ſtrike out this verſe, the charge were in vaine, there were none to receive it. If all be Vncti, where ſhould be Tangentes? We muſt then needs leave a difference betweene Chriſtiani and Chriſti. For, holding all that are Chriſtians, all GODS people anointed and holy alike; it will follow, why ſhould Moſes then, or any take up- Num.16.3. on him to be their Superiour? And ſo wee fall into the old contradiction of Core: Iude 11. which is all one with the new paritie and confuſion of the Anabaptiſts, or thoſe that pricke faſt towards them.

But the very Ceremonie it ſelfe ſerveth to ſhew, ſomewhat is added to them, by which which they be His, after a more peculiar manner than the reſt, to whom that is not added. Oyle it ſelfe deſigneth Soveraigntie: powre together water, wine, vineger, what liquor you will, oyle will be uppermoſt: And that is added by their anointing. Beſides then, this generall claime Mine, here is His ſpeciall ſignature, Anointed, whereby they are ſevered from the reſt. His hand hath touched them with His Anointing, that no other hand might touch them. Things anointed of our ſelves we forbeare to touch: but ſpecially, if the anointing have the nature of a marke, that we wrong it not: And this hath ſo, theſe are ſo marked, that we might forbeare them. And yet more ſpecially, if we have a Caveat, not to doe it, as here we have. Nolite tangere unctos, Touch not them that I have anointed.

Anointed, yet not Vncti, but Chriſti, which is more.

This were all, if it were but, Anointed: but, there is yet a further matter than all this. For it is not Vnctos, but Chriſtos meos: We reade it, Mine Anointed, In the Hebrew, Greeke and Latine, it is more full. In Hebrew, my Meſſiah's; in Greeke and Latine, Chriſtos meos, that is, my Chriſts, which is farre more forcible. Somewhat (we may be ſure) was in it, that all the old Writers uniformely forbore to turne it Vnctos, which is enough for Anointed, and all have agreed to turne it Chriſtos, that is, Chriſts, which is a great deale more. It ſeemes, they meant not to take a graine from this charge, but to give it his full weight. And it cannot but weigh much with all that ſhall weigh this one point well, that Princes are taken into the ſocietie of GODS Name, in the Pſalme before; and here now, into the ſocietie of CHRISTS Name, in this: and ſo made Synonymi, both with GOD, and with CHRIST: Specially ſince GOD Himſelfe it is, that ſo ſtileth them; for He flatters not (we are ſure.) GOD Himſelfe is a King, King of all the earth, and CHRIST is His Heire of all, as appeareth by His many Crownes on His head, Apoc. XIX. XXII. Thoſe whom GOD and CHRIST vouchſafe to take into the charge of any their Kingdomes, them they vouchſafe their owne names of GOD and of CHRIST. They two, the firſt Kings, to theſe other the after-Kings ruling under them, and in their names.

Pſal.82.6.

Anointed, not with every ointment, but with holy, and ſo, Sacri.

A third graduall reaſon then there riſeth here. All anointed are not Chriſti: for all anointing is not Chriſme. Chriſme is not every common, but an holy anointing, a ſacred ſignature. * Oleo ſancto meo, with mine holy oyle have I anointed them. Meo, to make them His: Sancto, to make them ſacred. He might have taken this oyle out of the Apothecaries ſhop, or the Merchants ware-houſe: He did not, but from the Sanctuarie it ſelfe, to ſhew their calling is ſacred, ſacred as any, even the beſt of them all. From whence the Prieſts have theirs, thence, and from no other place the King hath his; from the Sanctuary, both. The anointing is one and the ſame. All, to ſhew, that ſacred is the Office whereunto they deſigned, ſacred the Power wherewith they endued, ſacred the perſons whereto it applyed. And for ſuch were they held, all the Primitive Church thorow. Their Writ, Sacri apices: Their Word, Divalis juſſio: Their Preſence, Sacra veſtigia: (the uſuall ſtile of the Councels, when they ſpake of them.) And when they ceaſed to know themſelves for His (that here ſaith meos) and to hold of Him, then loſt they their holineſſe: Hee that tooke from them the one, tooke to Himſelfe the other. Now then, will ye inferre? Holy they be, their Anointing hallowed: therefore Nolite tangere ſacros, Touch not mine holy ones. No more touch Moſes, than the holy Mount, which neither man nor beaſt might touch upon paine of death: No more touch David, than the holy Arke. It is not good touching of holy things. In the XIII. Chapter before, Vzza ſo found it.

* Pſal.89.51.

Exod.19.12. Heb.12.20. Verſ.10.

Anointed, not with every holy oile, but with a ſpeciall above the reſt, and ſo Chriſti.

And yet ſtill me thinks we fall ſhort: for it is not Sanctos neither, it is more than Sanctos, it is Chriſtos: In which word, there is more than in Commune Sanctorum. Omnes Sancti non ſunt Chriſti, at Reges Chriſti. Wee cannot ſay of all Saints they be Chriſts, of Kings we may. Verily, every degree of holineſſe, will not make a Synonymie with CHRIST. He was Anointed, ſaith the Pſalme, Oleo exultationis ſupra ſocios, with an holy oyle, or chriſme above His fellowes. To hold this name then of Chriſtos Domini, it is not every ordinary holineſſe will ſerve, but a ſpeciall and extraordinary degree of it above the reſt, which they are to participate, and ſo doe, from Chriſt whoſe Name they beare, eminent above others, that carry not that Name; as if they did in

ſome kinde of meaſure partake Chriſma CHRISTI, even ſuch a chriſme as wherewith CHRIST is Anointed. And the inference of this point, and the meaning of this ſtile of dii and Chriſti is, as if He would have us, with a kinde of analogie, as carefull in a manner to forbeare touching them, as we would be to touch God, or the Sonne of God, CHRIST Himſelfe. It is not then Meos, nor unctos Meos, nor Sanctos meos onely; but it is Chriſtos meos, Mine, and that Anointed, Anointed with holy Oyle: So Anointed, and with Oile ſo holy, as it raiſeth them to the honor of the denomination of the Holy of Holies, CHRIST Himſelfe. Theſe foure degrees, and from them theſe foure ſeverall reaſons, are in Chriſtos meos.

One thing more of Chriſtos meos: For I ſhould doe you wrong certainely, if I ſhould ſlip by it, and not tell you what this Anointing is, and leave a point looſe, that needeth moſt of all to be touched. Vpon miſconceiving of this point, ſome have fallen into a phanſie, His Anointed, may forfeit their tenure, and ſo ceaſe to be His, and their anointing drie up, or be wiped off, and ſo Kings be un-Chriſted, ceaſe to be Chriſti Domini, and then, who that will, may touch them. What this Anointing is.

They that have beene ſcribling about Kings matters of late, and touching them with their pens, have beene fouly miſtaken in this point. Becauſe, anointing, in Scripture, doth otherwhile betoken ſome Spirituall grace; they pitch upon that, upon that taking of the word: and then, anointing it muſt needs be ſome grace; ſome gratia gratum faciens, making them religious and good Catholikes; or ſome gratia gratis data, making them able or apt for to governe. So that, if he will not heare a Maſſe, no Catholike, no Anointed. If after he is anointed, he grow defective (to ſpeake their owne language) prove a Tyrant, fall to favour Heretikes; his anointing may be wiped off, or ſcraped off; and then, you may write a booke De juſtâ abdicatione, make a holy league, touch him, or blow him up as ye liſt. This hath coſt Chriſtendome deare: It is a dangerous ſore, a Noli me tangere; take heed of it, touch it not.

Before I tell you what it is, I may ſafely tell you, that this it is not. It is not Religion, nor vertue, nor any Spirituall grace, this Royall anointing. Chriſtos Domini is ſaid not onely of Ioſias, a King truely Religious, by Ieremie; but of Cyrus a meere Heathen, by Eſay: not onely of David a good King, but of Saul a Tyrant, even then when he was at the worſt. Religion then is not it, for then Cyrus had not beene; nor Vertue is not it (eſpecially the vertue of clemency) for then Saul had not beene GODS Anointed. If it were Religion, if that made Kings; then had there beene of old no Kings, but thoſe of Iuda: and now, no Kings but thoſe that be Chriſten. But by Cyrus's caſe we ſee, one may be Chriſtus Domini, and yet no Chriſtian. It is no ſpirituall grace. Lam. 4. 20. Eſay 45. 1. 2 Sam. 19. 21. 1 Sam. 26. 9.

Among Chriſten, if the Orthodox truth were it: Conſtantius, Valens, Valentinian the younger, Anaſtaſius, Iuſtinian, Heraclius, I know not how many, had beene no Emperours: yet alſo acknowledged, by the Chriſtians of their times.

Then, if Religion make them not, Hereſie will not unmake them. What ſpeake I of Hereſie? Harder is the caſe of Apoſtacie, yea hardeſt of all: yet, when Iulian from a Chriſtian fell away to be a flat Pagan, his anointing held, no Chriſtian ever ſought, no Biſhop ever taught to touch him. And it was not quia deerant vires, that their hand was too ſhort, it is well knowne, farre the greater part of his Army were Chriſtians, and could have done it, as appeared inſtantly upon his death, by their acclamations to Iovian his Succeſſor, Chriſtiani ſumus.

Will yee ſee it in the Patriarchs? Theſe in the Pſalme here, were holy and good men. But, twelve Patriarchs there were preſently after, of whom, Simeon and Levi, were two very Tyrants; Reuben, ſcarce honeſt; nor Iuda, no better than he ſhould; Iſſachar, by his bleſſing, ſhould ſeeme none of the wiſeſt (as it might be Roboam:) yet were they numbred with the twelve, and were Patriarchs ſtill, no leſſe than the other. Gen. 49. 5, 6, 7. and 35. 22. and 38. 26. and 49. 14.

And after the Patriarchs, Saul the firſt King (that there might be no miſtaking) with his anointing, there came no grace to him. The Spirit of GOD came indeed upon him, but he was anointed, and gone from Samuel firſt: And the ſame Spirit as it came, ſo it went, and left him afterward: and GODS Anointed he was, before it came, 1 Sam. 10. 9, 10. 1 Sam. 16. 14.

came, and Gods Anointed he remained after it was gone againe, and that no leſſe than before, and is ſo termed by David ten times at the leaſt.

It is Ius regnandi.

Vnxit in Regem, Royall unction gives no grace, but a juſt title onely, in Regem, to be King: that is all, and no more. It is the adminiſtration to governe, not the gift to governe well: the right of ruling, not the ruling right. It includes nothing but a due title, it excludes nothing but uſurpation. Who is Anointed? On whom the right

He was no anointed, nor any that ſo commeth in. But on the other ſide, David, or he that firſt beginneth a Royall race, is as the Head; on him is that right of ruling firſt ſhed; from him it runs downe to the next, and ſo ſtill,

Not, but that it were to be wiſhed, both Anointings might goe together, and that there might goe, as there doth, a fragrant odor from the precious oyntment which is ſhed upon them, at their Crowning: ſo a like ſent from their Vertues, and they no leſſe venerable for their qualities, than for their callings; and happy the peo-

Cant. 1.4. ple, qui currunt in odore unguentorum Principis ſui, that can trace their Prince by ſuch a ſavour. This we are to wiſh for, and pray for daily, and uſe all good meanes it may be. But, if it be not, ever hold this, Allegiance is not due to him, becauſe he is vertuous, religious, or wiſe; but, becauſe he is CHRISTVS DOMINI. Let this be ſtill in your minde; GOD ſaith not, Touch him not, He is a good Catholike; or, endued with this vertue, or that: Touch him not, He deſerveth well, or at leaſt doth no harme. No, theſe would faile, He ſaw; or be ſaid to faile, though they failed not: We ſhould never then have done, never have beene quiet. But, this He ſaith, He is mine Anointed. Marke that well, God giveth no other reaſon here, nor David after, in as evill a Prince as might be. That is the true reaſon then, and we to reſt in it, and let other phanſies goe.

Tangere, the act forbidden.

Now, by whoſe appointment they be ſet, by His Commandement they be fenced: Fenced from touching, and that is the lighteſt and leaſt; conſequently, from whatſoever is greater or worſe. What talke you of Non occîdes, or Ne perdas? I tell you, Ne tangas, Touch them not.

Yet, are we not ſo ſillily to underſtand it, as if one might not touch them at all, not for their good: For how can they be Anointed, but they muſt be touched? No, the verſe before telleth us, it is for their hurt, this touch is forbidden. Non permiſit nocere, He ſuffered no man to doe them hurt; to that end ſaying, Touch them not. Yea, the very word it ſelfe, without any gloſſe, giveth as much, which is נגע properly plaga, and that is tactus noxius, a hurtfull touch, that leaveth a marke behinde it, Qui tangit, & angit, as the verſe is. For, it is good yee underſtand, this phraſe is taken from the Divell: and good reaſon: for whoſe-ſoever the fingers be, his the touch is, when Iob 1.11. and 2.5. Gods Anointed are touched. He calleth it but touching Iob; but touching, when he did him all the miſchiefe he could deviſe. And his nature, and the nature of hurtfull things, is well ſet out by it. Few things are ſo good, ut in tranſitu proſint, as they only touch, and doe good: Evill is farre more operative, if it but touch and away, if it but blow, or breathe upon any, it is found to doe miſchiefe enough.

The extent of Tangere: how many waies touch.

To ſpeake then of this touching, and the extent of it. Where the Scripture diſtinguiſheth not, neither doe we: but let the word have his full latitude. Nolite tangere is generall, no kinde is limited; then, not to touch any manner of way.

I There is none ſo ſimple, as to imagine there is no touch, but that with the fingers end, immediate. The mediate, with a knife, or with a Piſtoll, that is a touch: if we touch that, whereby they are touched, it is all one.

Againe,

Againe, be the touch ſo as we feele it, or be it by meanes unſenſible, as of poyſon, or ſorcery, it is a touch ſtill, and theſe no leſſe guiltie: No leſſe? nay a great deale more, as the more dangerous of the twaine. One ſhall be touched and know not how, when, or by whom. Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly, ſaith the Law. His neighbour? much more his Prince, betweene which two there is as great a diſtance, as betweene Non occîdes, and Non tanges. In a word, as it is the lighteſt, ſo it is the largeſt terme Hee could chooſe. For, non eſt actio niſi per contactum (ſaith the Philoſopher) Nothing can be done, but a touch there is, ſome touch, ſuperficiall or virtuall, immediate or mediate, cominus or eminus, open or privie, and all come under tangere. For it is no Nolite ſic tangere, touch not this way or that: but, Nolite tangere, touch not any way at all; let nothing be done at all, to doe them hurt. Deut. 27. 34.

2 And is there no touch, but that of the violent hand? The virulent tongue, doth not that touch too? and the peſtilent penne as ill as both? Venite percutiamus eum linguâ, ſay they in Ieremie, Come let us ſmite him with the tongue. If ſmite him, then touch him (I am ſure.) There is (ſaith Salomon) that ſpeaketh (and is not there alſo, that writeth?) words, like the pricking of a ſword. Et qui, quos Deus ungit, eos pungit, commeth not he within the compaſſe of this charge? Yes, they be Sathans weapons, both tongues and pennes; have their points and their edges: their points, and prick like a ſword; their edges, and cut like a razor; both touch, and with the worſt touch that is, tactus dolore cordis; therfore the worſt becauſe of the beſt part. Theſe, it is GODS meaning to reſtraine: you may ſee it by the verſe before: Non dimiſit hominem calumniari, ſaying, Nolite tangere. So that even calumnia is a touch. You may ſee it exemplarily, in the Patriarchs: One of GODS Nolite tangere's was touching Laban to Iacob, and this it was: Vide nequid loquare durius: See you give him no ill language, no foule words, for they touch too: Touch him not ſo. As well to Shemeis tongue, as to Iacobs hand, is this Nolite tangere ſpoken. Ier. 18. 18. Pro. 12. 18. Gen. 31. 24.

3 Is this all? What ſay you to the touch with the foot? the foot of pride upon the necks or Crownes of Emperours (though no cricke or bodily paine enſued?) Will not Nolite tangere, reach to Nolite calcare? Yes certainely; This Nolite tangere, was a ſtronger Text againſt it, than Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum, was a Text for it.

4 Yea, I goe further: by an undecent and over-familiar touch, voyd of the reverence that is due to them, læditur pietas, duty taketh hurt, and wrong is offred to His Annointed. Marie Magdalen was not about to have done our Saviour any harme, when after His reſurrection ſhee offered to touch Him; only becauſe ſhe did it as to one mortall (where the caſe was altered now,) and not with the high reverence pertaining to His glorified eſtate, ſhe heard, and heard juſtly, Noli me tangere. The touch which any way impeacheth the high honour of their Annointing, Nolite tangere takes hold of that too.

I The extent of Chriſtos, how many wayes they touched.

Touch them not; not them. And when we ſay, Not them, meane we their perſons onely, and not their States? Are not they touched, when thoſe are wronged? They that touch their Crowne and dignity, their Regalia, ſhall we ſay they touch them not? Yes, no leſſe; nay rather, more. For then the Annointed are properly touched, when their Annointing is, and that is their State and Crowne, as deare every way, and as precious to them, as their life. Indeed touch one, and touch both. If there State hold not holy, no more will their perſons. It hath ever been found, if their Crowne once go, their life tarrieth not long after. And even in this point alſo, it may ſafely be ſaid, that the looſe and licentious touching their State, with Marie Magdalens touch, without the regard due to it, as if it were a light matter, that might be lifted with every finger, falleth within the reach of this Nolite. I liſt not dilate it, it would be looked to. Theſe light and looſe touchings, are but the beginnings of greater evills.

2 Againe, Not them. Sathans motion was twofold: 1 One, that he might touch that was Iobs: 2 The other, that touch himſelfe: and in either of theſe, he reckoned that he ſhould touch him home. They are touched, when that is touched, that is theirs. It was ſo here directly. Pharaoh, one of them, to whom originally, nay the very firſt of all, to whom this Nolite was ſpoken, touched not Abraham himſelfe; it was Sara was wronged: In Sara was Abraham touched. So GOD eſteemed it, and gave his firſt Nolite tangere in that point. So, even unto her wrong, doth this touch extend, take in her too, as being the one halfe, yea, one and the ſame perſon with the LORDS Annointed.

3 Not them. One more yet: For two kinds of Annointed, I find in Scripture: Sauls and Davids: the one in eſſe, the other in fore: one in being, the other to be. If David had been touched (Saul yet living) though but Annointed to ſucceed, I make no doubt this Commandement had been broken: For we are bound by it, to preſerve the annointing, not onely upon the head, but even in the ſtreames running downe from it: that with the King himſelfe, the whole race Royall is folded up in this word, every one of them in their order, that not one of them is to be touched neither.

Nolite: The will forbidden. This bar then, is ſet to the touch every way, and to the touch of them, and every of theirs, every way. But there is a further matter yet. For (if we marke it well) it is not, Ne tangite, but Nolite tangere: Nolite, (that is) have not ſo much as the will, once to goe about it: So that, not only tactus, the touch is forbidden, but voluntas tangendi, the very will to doe it: For that will is tactus animæ, the ſoules touch, the ſoule can touch no way but that. And GODS meaning is abſolute: neither body nor ſoule ſhould touch; neither the body by deed, nor the ſoule by will.

And Nolite ſtandeth firſt, beginneth the Text: for indeed, with that, is the right beginning. The Divell toucheth the will, before the hand ever touch GODS Annointed: He doth mittere in cor, put a will in the heart, before any doe mittere manum, put forth their hand to doe it. Therefore, even velle tangere was to be made a crime, and Ver ſet 1. that a capitall crime. And ſo it is: for, in the attainder of the two Eunuchs (Eſth. II.) there was no more in the Inditement, but voluerunt, they would have done it, they would have touched Ahaſhuerus: that being proved, was enough; they died, and died juſtly for the will, though no touch followed. Pity it ſhould be otherwiſe. He toucheth not alwaies, that hath a will to touch; hath a will to touch the throat, toucheth but a tooth. What though? To breake Nolite, voluit is enough; and voluit, he would have touched, at another place.

They that laid the Powder ready, and lighted the match, it was but voluerunt, (as God would) it touched not any: But righteous and juſt was their execution. To teach them, or others by them, Ne tangite is not it: Nolite tangere is the charge: and, if you breake Nolite onely, it is enough, though Tangere and it, never hap to meet.

The extent of Nolite, to whom it reacheth. Of which Nolite, I hold it very pertinent to touch the extent alſo (as I did even now of tangere, the touch it ſelfe) and of the perſons, to whom it may reach; that we may ſee it, it is true in the verſe before, Non reliquit hominem, he leaves not out a man, he exempts not any from it. I will not once ſpeake of Subjects, no queſtion of them: 1 over whom they are Annointed, them it toucheth neereſt, and bindeth them faſt. But 2 this, I ſay, that even forrenners, borne out of their Allegiance, are within it. The 2 Sam. 1. 9. Amalekite was a ſtranger, none of Sauls lieges, borne out of his dominions; yet died 13. for ſaying, he had touched Saul: And that ſheweth, that even Aliens here ſortiuntur forum ratione delicti, and that they are intended, within this Nolite.

3 Yea, even ſuch Aliens as are in open hoſtilitie, even at that time, they are in Campe and in Armes againſt a King, they are barred by this Nolite, and are to ſpare 2 Sam. 1. 21. him. So ſaith David in his mourning-ſong for Sauls death: He blames there the Philiſtims, as if they had done more than they might, in ſo touching Saul, conſidering hee was a King with holy oyle annointed, as if they ought, even in that reſpect, to have ſpared him. So that this Nolite is a Law of Nations, making their perſons ſo ſacred, as even in the battell, they are to be forborne, and their lives ſaved.

Yea, if we look to the words next before, it is given even to Kings, this Touch not. The parties were Pharaoh King of Ægypt, and the two Abimelechs Kings of Gerar, and even they in particular charged, Not to touch (for Pharaoh did touch:) not to will to touch (for Abimelech went no further.) Kings not to touch them, none but God to touch touch them: As if it were another Law of Nations, not one King to touch another; but by vertue of this Nolite, each to ſpare, and to ſave the others life.

And the difference in Religion maketh here no let: for, theſe being Ægyptians and Philiſtims, to whom it was given; there can be no greater difference, than between them and the Patriarchs in the worſhip of GOD: for all that, not to touch them though. Which is ad erubeſcentiam noſtram, to our ſhame, that Heathen men, and Idolaters, were kept from it by this charge, and now (I will not ſay) Chriſtians, but holy Religious men, Friers, and Prieſts, yea and Martyrs forſooth, will not be held in by it, but they will be touching. 1 Cor. 6. 4.

And laſt of all, this reſtraint of will and deed, it is not in the ſingular, Noli, to this or that private man; it is in the plurall, Nolite, and ſo reacheth to whole multitudes. Nolite, will ſerve even people and Countries, to reſtraine them alſo. I wonder at it; It is Gods manner, to give His precepts in the ſingular: Witneſſe the whole Law, and all the ten Commandements in it. How happeneth it, the number is here changed? Some what there is in that. He ſaw, multitudes might aſſay it, as well as ſingle men, & take liberty to themſelves, thinking to be priviledged by their number. To make ſure, he putteth it in a number that encloſeth them too. For, be they many, or be they few, Nolite, will take them in, all. So, neither Subject, nor Alien, nor Enemy, nor King, nor People; nor one Religion, nor other; nor one, nor many; Non reliquit hominem, None left, none exempt, not any to touch them, not any to will to touch them. For, with Nolite, God toucheth the heart: and ſo many as God toucheth their hearts, will have idem velle, & nolle, make His will, their will, & will obey it. This is the ſumme of the Charge; Here is the Double Fence I ſpoke of. Touch not, By which He raiſeth (as it were) an high wall about them, that none may reach over to them. And then, with Nolite, diggeth deep even in profundum cordis, the very depth of the heart; caſteth a trench there: & ſo they be double fenced. Or you may (if you will) call them the Cherubim's two wings ſpred over His Annointed, to protect them: Touch not, one wing; Nolite, the other, reaching, as the Cherubim's wings did, from one wall to the other, covering them from all, that none may come any way to do them hurt. And by this we ſee the full of this Text. We ſee it, but we are to feele it alſo; and ſee whether the Text be whole, whether it be well kept, and have taken no hurt. 6

How this Text is obſerved.

The Charge is ſhort, yee ſee; an Hemiſtichion, but halfe a verſe; Touch not mine Annointed: foure words only, and but ſix ſyllables: One would thinke, it might well be carried away, and well be kept. But, as ſhort as it is, we ſee it is not though; For, the verie Text is touched and broken. And, I ſpeake not of inferior touchings, that every tongue is walking, and every pen buſy, to touch them and their rights, which they are to have, and their duties which they are to doe; And if they doe not, then I know not what, nor themſelves neither. This is too much, but I would it were but this.

Hands have been buſie of late, and that in another more dangerous manner. Two fearefull examples we have, in two great Kings. One, no very long time ſince; the other, very lately made away: not ſo farre from us, but that they may, and (I truſt) doe touch us. What ſhall I ſay? I would this were the worſt.

Yea, I would this were the worſt: for, this hath happened in former times too. This Pſalme, he that indited and ſet it (David) he living, Iſhboſheth his neighbour King was ſlaine upon his bed. The like hath happened then: broken it hath beene, in former ages. But then, upon revenge, or ambition, or hope of reward, or ſome other ſiniſter reſpect: never, upon conſcience, and religion, till now. Nolite tangere, was ſtill good Divinitie, till now. The Text it ſelfe never touched, never taken by the throat before, and the contradictory of it given in charge, [Touched they may be, Touch them notwithſtanding:] Never bookes written, to make men willing to GODS Nolite, before. Baanah, he upon hope of reward, ſlew Iſhboſheth: Bigthan, upon revenge, would have done the like to his Liege-Lord. Zimri, upon ambition, ſlew his Maſter. But Religion came never forth with the knife in her hand, till now: a Kings life was never a Sacrifice to expiate ſinne, before.

The Text it ſelfe touched, and a Nolite given to it.

1 And will ye but conſider the great odds betwixt thoſe Touchers, and theſe of late? They, ever, yer they went about it, caſt how to eſcape; and when they had done it, fled and hid themſelves, as guilty to themſelves of evill they had done: theſe ſtirre not an
2 inch, as if they had done that, they might well ſtand to. Thoſe formerly grew ever contrite, at their end deteſting the act, and crying GOD mercie: theſe now rejoyce in 3 it, as if by it they had done GOD a peece of good ſervice. Then yet it was ever a
1 crime, and a grievous crime, and they that did it, were generally upon the firſt report, Mariana. ever condemned by all men, none to defend them: Now it is, multis laudantibus (you Pag. 54. know the Booke) it findeth many to juſtifie, nay to praiſe it, & immortalitate dignum
2 judicantibus, and thinke them worthy immortalitie, for their worthy act. Yea, write
Pag. 60. they not further? Præclarè cum rebus humanis ageretur, ſi multi; It were a merrie
3 world, if there would many ſo exerciſe their fingers, to keepe them in ure. And to Pag. 61. Kings themſelves (GODS Annointed) dare they not to ſay? this is ſalutaris cogitatio, an wholſome meditation for them next their heart, to thinke ſe câ conditione vivere, they live in that caſe or condition, ut non ſolùm jure, that they may not onely be ſlaine lawfully, ſed cum laude, & gloriâ perimi poſſunt; but to the praiſe and glory of them that ſhall doe it. How now! What is become of our Text? Of Nolite tangere with theſe? Are we not fallen into ſtrange times, that men dare thus print and publiſh, yea, even prædicare peccatum ſuum, preach and proclaime their ſinnes, even theſe ſinnefull, and ſhamefull poſitions, to the eyes and eares of the whole world? Whereby, GODS Annointed are endangered, mens ſoules are poiſoned, Chriſtian Religion is blaſphemed, as a murtherer of her owne Kings, GOD in His Charge is openly contradicted, and men made beleeve, they ſhall goe to heaven, for breaking GODS Commandements.

The Cenſure upon Mariana idle. But now, we have all great cauſe to rejoice: The Booke is condemned, if we may beleeve it. Whether condemned or no, that we know not: this is too ſure, eleven yeares agoe, ſet out it was, and that authorized, and ſo went eight whole yeares, by their owne confeſſion, and even the whole eleven, for ought that wee know. How went it forth ſo allowed at the firſt? How went it ſo long uncontroled; without an Index expurgatorius at leaſt?

But now lately wee have newes, that ſome few yeares ſince, it was cenſured in a privie Provinciall Councell. But, that was as ſtrange a Cenſure, as ever was heard of, a Cenſure ſub ſilentio, kept cloſe, and none knew of it but themſelves: faſt or looſe; Cenſure, or no Cenſure, as they pleaſed. If any ſuch cenſure were, why made they it not as publike as their Approbation? The Approbation the world ſeeth: their Cenſure we but heare of, and peradventure it is but a tale, neither. Why came it never to light, till the deed was done; and it was too late? Why heard we not Iacobs voice, till wee had felt Eſau's hands? But this is all they have to ſay for themſelves: after ſo great a loſſe, this we muſt be faine to take for payment.

But, I aske, is it condemned? Indeed no, but the matter ſo faintly carried, as all they ſay ſtanding for good, hee that will give the like attempt againe, may. For, what ſay they? An Vſurper may be depoſed, ſo they all agree. And is it not in the power of Rome, to make an Vſurper when it will? If hee have no right, he is an Vſurper: If he be lawfully depoſed, his right is gone: If he but favour Hereticks; nay, though hee favour them not, the Pope may depoſe him, Non hoc tempore, ſed cùm judicabit expedire: and that done, he hath no right, then is he an Vſurper, and ye may touch him, or doe with him what ye will.

What ſay they then further? A private man may not doe it, by his owne authority. Not by his owne, but may he by ſome other? Belike, ſome other then there is, whereby he may. Authority then there is, and it may be given, and when it is given him, he may doe it. And ſo we are where we were before. And this is their condemning: indeed the condemnation of the world, if they love darkeneſſe ſo well, as to be deluded by it.

First,

First, they will doe it: will doe it? Have done it, touched, touched in the highest degree, against Tangere. It may bee against their wills; nay voluntarie, have done it wittingly, and willingly, against Nolite. But, it may be, repent themselves: Nor that: For, they give a charge against this charge, willing men, and making men willing, to doe flat against it, to touch, even the Text, and breake it, and spare not: by holding, They may be touched for all it.

The Text it selfe to be preserved and kept untouched

What is then to bee done of us? The more busy they, to suggest the Devills motion, Mitte manum, & tange; the more earnest wee, to call on GODS charge here, Nolite tangere Christos Ejus. The more resolute they, to be touching; the more carefull we, to looke to their fingers. The more they endeavour to breake down this double fence; the more we to labour to strengthen it. How will that be? Our selves not to touch them? I will not speake of that, for shame. I trust, GOD hath so touched all our hearts, as we detest the least thought that way. Never was any, truly partaker of the inward Annointing of a Christian man, but he was ever fast and firme to the royall Annointing. That wee will doe: and that is not all; (I trust) wee will doe more than so, even provide a Nolite tangere for the Text too, keepe that from touching, and that will keepe GODS Annointed untouched: Keepe one, keepe both.

By the three persons in the Text.

Three persons there be in the Text: 1. GODS Annointed themselves, touching whom it is given. 2. We all, Non reliquit hominem, not leaving a man of us out, to whom it is given. 3. And He that saith Meos, GOD that giveth it. The two first, to doe their parts toward it, we to looke to ours; and God will come in at His turne, and not faile with His part, we may be sure.

1 Gods Annointed.

Let me beginne with Christos Domini, whom it toucheth: that they would bee touched with it, and not lay themselves open to this touch, nor carelesly goe where they may bee within the reach, or fall into such fingers, as tickle to be touching them: Not to put it upon, what shalbe, shalbe. Non est bonæ, & solidæ fidei, sic omnia ad voluntatem Dei referre, & ita adulari, ad unumquemque dicendo, Nihil fieri sine jussione Ejus, ut non intelligamus aliquid esse in nobis ipsis. It is Tertullian: and most true it is, that it is neither good nor sound Divinity, in these cases, to put all upon the will of GOD, and every one to flatter himselfe or others saying; Nothing can be done without GOD will, but to conceive aright, that withall there is somewhat that belongs to our part. Therefore subordinately to serve GODS providence, with our owne circumspect foresight and care, knowing, that His providence doth not alwaies worke by miracle. This day it did: every day it will not doe so. That Hee gives His Angels charge over them that tempt him not, that doe not mittere se deorsum, cast themselves wilfully into danger. That Baltazars daies were numbred, when he forgat his duty, not before. That He hath indeed promised to save His Annoynted: but He promised Saint Paul also his life, and all theirs with him in the ship, and that by an Angell: for all that, Paul would not let the Mariners goe away with the boat, but cut the rope, and sayd, If these tarry not in the ship, we cannot be saved, for all the Angels promise. Let His Annointed say, and doe the like: keepe your Mariners about you in the name of God, keepe your selves with that state and guard, that is meete for the Majestie of Princes: and thinke God saith to you, Christi mei, nolite tangi, be you willing to keepe your selves from being touched, and I for my part, will not be behinde.

Psal. 91. 11. Matt. 4. 6. Dan. 5. 26. Psal. 20. 6. Act. 27. 30, 31.

This way onely is now left them. Another way there was, that Gods Annointed might not bee touched; to set lists about them, as about the holy Mount, that is, Lawes; whereby (that desperate wretches might not touch Gods Annointed) Gods Annointed might touch them first. I finde Abimelech made a Law to strengthen this Law of God, made a list about this very Nolite, a Law upon paine of Morte morietur. And this was wont to keepe them from approaching. But, if that which should give strength to the Law, and make it a Law to the conscience, Divinitie, if that be corrupted, if it be a matter of the will, as appeareth by Nolite, and the will be made wilfull (an horible sinne, being now become an heroicall and holy act:) these lists will not hold them, the Law commeth too late. For, if men grow wilfull,

Exod. 19. 12.

Gen. 26. 11.

it is well knowen, Vitæ alienæ Dominus est, quisquis contemptor est suæ. And who would not be Contemptor suæ, if he may be sure to be Comprehensor æternæ? Then do but once perswade them, that for their touching they shall straight goe to heaven, and no Annointed shall ever stand before them. Nolite is gone then: take order for Tangere how we can.

2 The Subject.

Our part then is (and to us it is spoken, and to us properly doth Nolite belong.) Every man in his place to do his best. They that are His Priests, by bowing their knees daily, and lifting up their hands to God: They that in the place of Counsell, by all the waies of wisedome: They that in the Seat of Justice, by just and due execution: All, by all the meanes they can, --hanc talem terris avertere pestem, to devise and procure (if it may be) ne velint, that evill disposed hands would not: but howsoever, ne possint, that they may not be able (if they would) to touch His Annointed. It must be in part, by carrying a continuall eye, and keeping a continuall watch over them; or a shorter way, by removing them far enough off, that are in any likely-hood to doe it: and those be such, as hold, Gods Annointed be tangibiles, and may be; nay in some case, be tangendi, and ought to be touched.

Num. 16.21. 24.

GOD Himselfe in Core's case and Dathan's (who went about to touch Moses and Aaron, not in their persons, but estates onely) sheweth us the best way: He gave order, that a generall Nolite tangere went out against them and theirs, that no man should come neere them, but all shunne them and their company, as having them in a generall detestation. Gods course would be followed; that seeing their consciences are seared, and they feare not Gods voice here from heaven, they might feele the full discoverie, of His vengeance upon earth, and might assure themselves, upon the least measure of but a will to touch, but a will to doe that execrable Act, to incurre an universall detestation, to have all rise against them, to have all the hatred of earth powred upon them and theirs, to be the out-casts of the Common-wealth, and the Maranatha's of the Church; yea, they and their names for ever to be an abhorring to all flesh. Nothing in this kinde is too much: this way, if no way else, to keepe them from it: which is lesse than they should suffer, but all that we can doe.

3 GOD Himselfe will joyne with them.

The best is, if we faile not in our duty; though neither we, nor the Annointed, can take perfect order against them, the Annointer can; can, and will, as this day He did. And the rather He will doe it, in the time to come, if we turne to Him, to thanke Him for that is past. To Him then let us turne, that He may take the matter into His owne hand. If His Nolite tangere will not prevaile, His Nolo tangi, will: and if He say, Nolo tangi, have they never so bent a will, doe what they can, they shall not (for their lives) be able to doe them hurt.

Two points there be in this Charge, both expressed in the verse next before, Non permisit, He suffered none to attempt it; Sed corripuit, but them that did, He put them to rebuke. Put to rebuke, we turne Corripuit; it is properly to take up short, and that is, by a touch, or rather by a twitch. And so He hath ever done, and so He will ever doe: Tangentes tangentur, or rather tangentes corripientur, if they touch, they shall bee twitched, bee taken short, and cut short for it (all the sort of them.) Have beene (I am sure.)

By Corripuit.

I begin with Corripuit: for that never faileth: for sure, God will not suffer His Annointed; nor Christ, His Synonymo's, those of His name, to be touched for nought: if not His name it selfe to bee taken, neither those that bare it to bee touched in vaine. And there is nothing more kindly, than for them that will be touching, to be touched themselves, and to be touched home, in the same kinde, themselves thought to have touched others. You may see it in the first, in Pharaoh, the very first, that touched the Patriarch Abraham. It is said, GOD touched him for it (and it is the very same word which God useth here in willing not to touch:) God touched him and touched him, tactibus maximis, with many a grievous touch: we read, plagued him with many plagues. And indeed He toucheth them so, that He plagueth them that have been busie in this kinde. Greevous are the touches they are touched with here on earth; of pincers red-hot, and boiling Lead: but, who knoweth the touches of the place, whether (being unrepentant) they

Gen. 12. 17.

they muſt needs goe? which, beſides that they are maximi (in another manner of degree than theſe here) are æterni withall, and not ended in an howre or two; as theſe are. Tactibus maximis tangentur, they ſhall bee touched indeed throughly, as the firſt was.

And looke, as He began in the Patriarchs, ſo hath He ever held on in His Annointed, the Kings that enſued. The firſt that ever touched his Kings, Baana and Rechab, were touched for it: and cut ſhorter, both by the hands, wherewith they touched, and the feet, wherewith they went about it. Aske the reſt, if it were good touching. Shemei touched, but with the tongue; his neck was touched with the ſword. Bigthan and Tharez ſaid nothing, did nothing, but only with their will: their neckes were touched with the halter, tactibus maximis, the greateſt touch or twitch that is heere. And ſo (to make ſhort) were all the reſt, even to thoſe two that were this day put to a foule rebuke, and cut ſhort in their going about it. Beſides the Cherubims wings then, to protect Kings, here you have, in Corripuit, the blade of a ſword ſhaken, to keepe the way to them. 2 Sam. 4. 12. 1 Reg. 2. 46. Eſter 2. 23.

But what comfort is it, if Corripuit come to the malefactor, if he be cut ſhort, and if the King miſcarrie withall? Baana and Rechab, they that killed Iſhboſheth, were cut ſhort, ſhorter by the heads; but Iſhboſheth, he died for it. I confeſſe, there is ſmall comfort in Corripuit, unleſſe Non permiſit nocere, goe withall; in ſhortning them, without ſaving His Annointed. And that is our comfort, the comfort of this day, which we meet to give thankes for, that both theſe went together, Non permiſit nocere, and Corripuit, both. By Non permiſit.

You know, at the beginning I told you, beſides that it is a Commandement, it is alſo a Thankſgiving. It is ſo, in that it is a verſe of a Pſalme of Halleluja, the firſt Pſalme of Halleluja, of all the twenty. The thankſgiving.

1 Now in that He hath placed this duty, and ſet it in a Pſalme, His will is, men ſhould come to it with pleaſure, cheerefully, and as it were ſinging. When we ſpeake of it, we doe it ſpeculatively; when we ſing it, that would be with affection. Pſal. 119. 54.

2 In that it is in the firſt Halleluja of all, it ſheweth (as I thinke) that GODS Annointed are the perſons, which (ſaith the Apoſtle) Ante omnia, before all, we are to pray for: which (ſaith the Prophet here) before all, we are to praiſe GOD for; for them, and their keeping out of evill hands. Their ſafety we are to put in our firſt Halleluja. 1 Tim. 2. 1.

3 This Halleluja is a Pſalme purpoſely for the bringing home of the Arke. And that ſheweth, His Arke, and His Annointed are allied, and that no ſooner is the Arke well come home, but this Commandement goeth forth ſtraight from it, firſt of all, before all other: That all may know, what account they were to make of this duty, how high regard to have His Annointed in, in that the Arkes welfare and theirs, are ſo inſeparably knit together. And indeed, experience hath taught it; The well ſetting of the Arke, dependeth much upon the ſafetie of the Prince. Verſe 1.

4 Now this Pſalme, as it was ſung with all the muſicke could be invented, of wind, of hand, and of voice, to ſhew, the preſervation of Kings is a benefit extraordinarie, that requireth ſo ſolemne a thankſgiving: Verſe 5. 42.

5 So beſides, it is ordered every day after, to be ſung jugiter coram Arcâ (that is) to be the ordinarie Antheme of their daily ſervice: to ſhew, it is a dutie perpetuall, that needs ſo daily a remembrance, to wit, the care of their preſervation. Verſe 37.

6 For laſt of all, that all the praiſe and thankes here in the Pſalme, are for this Nolite, that all the Pſalme was ſet to come to this verſe; it is plaine. There be ninetie two verſes more in the Pſalme it ſelfe (it is the hundreth and fift Pſalme.) But aſſoone as ever they once come to this verſe, all the reſt, all the verſes following, are cut off; they go no further in the Pſalme, than till they come to it; and then breake off all thoſe behind, and ſtraight goe to another Pſalme: (for, this is all of the hundreth and fift, and the next verſe is the firſt of the ninetie ſixt Pſalme.) So that, this verſe plainely was the end and up-ſhot of all the Pſalme beſides.

Of this Verſe then, of His Nolite tangere, and of His Noli tangi, beſides of a famous Non permiſit nocere in this kinde, this Day is a memoriall to us, and to all our poſterity, even to the children yet unborne: In GODS Annointed, not touched I cannot ſay, for touched he was, and more than touched: But, in the touch, there is no great matter (we ſaid) but for the hurt; ſo that in the end, not hurt, is as good, as not touched. As good, nay better, for a Halleluja. For to be touched, as he was, and to take no hurt, is a greater delivery farre, than at all not to be touched. To goe through the Red ſea, and not wet a threed: To have beene in the fornace, and no ſent of the fire; that, is the miracle. So, to have been touched, and taken by the throat (that the marke was to be ſeen, many daies after;) To be thruſt at, and throwen downe, as He was, and yet no harme (Hîc eſt potentia) Here was the power, and here was the mercy of GOD; Here it was certainely, and that ſo ſenſibly, yee might even touch it.

1 And here Halleluja firſt: and we to praiſe Him, that when Nolite tangere, would not ſerve in word, made Non permiſit nocere, to ſerve indeed: Came forth, firſt, with Non permiſit nocere, as with His ſhield, and ſo ſhielded him, that He ſuffered him not to take any hurt at all; Annointed the ſhield, made it ſlippery, their hands ſlid off, their touch did him no harme. Non permiſit, was as His ſhield, that He brought forth to ſave
2 him. But beſides it, He brought forth His ſword too, and cut them ſhort: Corripuit eos, was His ſword, touched them with it, and twitched them for touching His Annointed, touched them with Pharaoh's tactus maximi, that the markes of it will be ſeene upon them and theirs, for ever.

3 For either of theſe ſeverally, a ſeverall Halleluja: but eſpecially, for not ſevering them, but letting them meet and goe together; Eripuit, and Corripuit, both joyntly arme in arme. Not either alone, this or that. Not permiſit nocere, ſed corripuit, ſuffered them to doe hurt, but rebuked them: No, but Non permiſit, & corripuit both, ſuffered them not to doe any hurt; and rebuked them, and cut them ſhort too beſides.

And this happy conjunction of theſe both, is it, which maketh the ſpeciall increaſe of our thanks this yeare, more than the laſt, or any before. For that, ſince, and very lately, GOD, that ſuffered not Him, hath ſuffered ſome other King, to be touched, as farre as his life. True: Hee that did that execrable act, Corripuit eum, GOD touched him, touched him as he did the Mountaines, Tange montes, & fumigabunt, touched Pſal. 144. 5. him, till he ſmoked againe. What of that? In the meane time a great Prince is fallen. But permiſit nocere, Hee ſuffered the King to take hurt: And as for non permiſit nocere, GOD did not Him that favour.

1 Not him, but Ours He did: And did it, for the manner, not without miracle, if we compare the caſes. For, He was then ſitting in the midſt of divers his Nobles. No likely-hood, that any would come neere Him, to offer but to touch Him: If he did, there was odds, there would have been many a non permiſit, he ſhould never have been ſuffered to doe it. One man, for all that, one, and no more, did it; Divers were neere him; None of them, All of them kept Him not from his harme. But Ours, was all alone, ſhut up, and ſo left as one forſaken; not many, nay not any, no help at all, neere him. And not one alone, and no more, but three there were to touch him: yet even then, even in that caſe, GOD non permiſit nocere, ſuffered not, not any of them, nor all of them, to touch him, ſo as they did him any hurt.

And even in the manner of the Non permiſit, GOD ſhewed himſelfe more than marvellous: for, it was not, GOD only ſuffered him not to be hurt; but miraculouſly he made, that of them, that came to breake His Nolite, even of them, one, that was ſet, that was ready armed to have touched, and to have hurt him, he, even that partie, Non permiſit, would not, did not ſuffer the other to doe him any hurt; ſed corripuit, but rebuked him, gave the Noli tangere to the other, ſpake this very Text, and ſtayed his hand, that would have done it. This was a Non permiſit indeed, worth a Halleluja, and after it, came there at the leaſt three other Non permiſit's more. But I have preſumed too much already: I will not enter into them, but end.

The

The more they were, the more are we bound to magnifie GOD, and to bleſſe His holy name; yearely, yea weekely, yea daily to ſing our Hallelujа of praiſe, and thanks to Him for this daies Non permiſit, and for this daies Corripuit, for them both. That, what He ſpeakes in this Text, He made good upon this day: Shewed, He would not have His Annointed touched: Shewed, He was diſpleaſed with them, that did touch him: kept Him without hurt, and cut them ſhort: ſhortned their armes, they could do Him no harme, ſhortned their lives for attempting to do it: ſcattered them firſt, in the imaginations of their hearts; and then after, made them periſh in that their wicked Enterpriſe: And hath made this Nolite, this Precept, to us, Præceptum cantabile, a Precept Pſalme-wiſe, that we may ſing it to Him. There is another, in another place, of another dittie and tune, wherein, he takes up a dolefull complaint, thus: But thou haſt caſt off thine Annointed, and art diſpleaſed with him. The daies of his life haſt thou ſhortned, and caſt his Crowne downe to the ground. With them indeed it is, Præceptum flebile, but with us, Cantabile. Praiſe we Him for it. Pſal.119.54. Pſal.89.38. 44.45.

And withall, pray we alſo, that as this day He did not, nor hitherto He hath not; ſo henceforth Malignus ne tangat eum, the malignant wicked one may never touch Him: never may any have the will; or if have the will, never have the power to do Him hurt: Suffer Him not to be touched, or, if ſuffer him to be touched, ſuffer not their touch to doe him any harme, no more than this day it did: Make all Nolentes, with his Nolite; if not, come with His Non permiſit, that he may ever be ſafe; and ſtraight after, with His Corripuit, that they may ever be taken ſhort, that offer it. This day He ſuffered them not: nor let Him ever ſuffer any. This day He cut thoſe ſhort; ſo may He ever doe them all: And ever make this Statute, our Song, all the daies of our Pilgrimage. This is now the tenth yeare, and ſo theſe the Decennalia of it: That as this day it is, ſo it may ſtill be celebrated, from ten yeares to ten yeares, many ten yeares more. Which GOD grant, &c. 1 Ioh.5.18.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT Burleigh neere Okeham, On the V. of Auguſt, ANNO DOM. MDCXIV.

()

PSAL. LXXXIX.

VER. 20. I have found DAVID My ſervant : with My holy oile have I annointed him.

21. My hand ſhall hold him faſt (or ſtabliſh him : ) and Mine arme ſhall ſtrengthen him.

22. The enemie ſhall not bee able to doe him violence : the ſon of wickedneſſe ſhall not hurt him.

23. But, I will ſmite downe his foes before his face : and plague them that hate him.

WE have found here a Text, wherein (we ſee) God found David : and wherein, David found God. God, found David His ſervant : and David found God, his good and gratious Lord : firſt, to annoint him, then to deliver him : So to deliver him, as his enemies did him no hurt : Nay ſo, that the hurt came to themſelves ; And they (as wee read) were ſmitten downe before him.

And doe not this text and this day ſomewhat reſemble one another? To my thinking they do. For, who is there that hearing in the Pſalme this, that violence was offered to David by a ſonne of wickedneſſe ; but withall, he ſhall thinke of the wicked attempt of this Day. Who, that (for all that) they did David no harme : but Your Majeſties like deliverie, will will come into his minde? Who, that Davids enemies were ſmitten downe: but it will lead him ſtraight to the very ſame end of Yours. And who can doubt, that it was the ſame hand and arme, and of the ſame GOD in both? And that Hee, that did the one, did the other?

King David, He is in Scriptures, not perſona Regis onely, the perſon of a King; but perſona Regum, a perſon repreſenting all Kings to come after him; ſuch ſpecially, as with David, ſerve and worſhip GOD in truth. We doe ſafely therfore, what is ſaid to him, applie to them all, ſince he is the type of them all.

But moſt ſafely, to ſuch a King (if any ſuch be) where, there is a correſpondence of like events betweene David and him: that; what was Covenanted to the one, is performed to the other. For there GOD Himſelfe is our warrant, and even points us ſo to applie it.

As here now; I finde a prophecie, or a promiſe. A prophecie of Ethan (his is the Pſalme) or a promiſe of GOD. And I finde this prophecie fulfilled: and this promiſe made good to Your Majeſtie. What promiſed to David, made good to You; and made good this Day: What is ſaid in the Text, done on the Day. What doubt wee then to applie it to the preſent? And, ſince it fell on this day, what better day than this, for me to treat, or You to heare, or for us all to thanke GOD for it.

The Summe. The Text hath the name, from the firſt word of it, I have found. A finding it is.

Two waies, may a thing be found: One, when a thing is found at firſt, and never was before: Another, when it is afterward loſt, and found againe: Both here; David is twice found.

Found firſt, and annointed at the I. verſe. Found againe, and delivered, at the III.
Pſal. 78. 71. GOD found him firſt among his ewes, tooke him thence, anointed him, and of a Shepheard made him a King. And being a King, found him after among his enemies, in danger to loſe both crowne and life: and ſo, being as good as loſt, found him again. It is hard to ſay, whether of theſe, is the greater: We will not ſtrive, both are in the Text. And either hath his day (I ſought but for one day, but I found two) and both for our turne.

According to which (ſomewhat ſtrangely, but for our purpoſe, fitly) I may divide it into the XXIX, or XXV. of Iuly, the day of Your firſt finding for Your Annointing or Coronation; And the V. of Auguſt, the day of Your later finding, for Your deliverance or preſervation.

The Verſes are foure: The points in them, eight (two in each) Of which eight, ſome be paſt, ſome to come in the text: (All paſt with You.) Paſt two, [1] Inveni, [2] Vnxi, the finding, the annointing. To come, all the other ſix; all in the future, ſhall or will. Two ſhall's, [1] My hand ſhall, [2] My arme ſhall. Two ſhall not's, [1] The enemie ſhall not, [2] The ſonne of wickedneſſe ſhall not. Two will's, [1] I will ſmite, [2] I will plague. And, all ſixe compriſed in a League or Covenant, which GOD is pleaſed to make with David, upon his annointing: and are as ſo many clauſes or articles of it.

Which league is made, pro & contra. Pro, with and for David, in the ſecond: And Contra, againſt his enemies, in the two laſt. And that, both defenſive, in the third: And offenſive, in the fourth. So, a perfect League.

The Diviſion. Wee ſhall purſue it thus. 1. Of his finding, firſt. 2. Then of his annointing. 3. Thirdly, of GODS covenant-making with him. 4. And to this of the covenant-making, we will adde a fourth of the covenant-keeping. Which, is indeed out of the text, but not out of the day though. And, we preach on the day, as well as on the text. Which keeping of the covenant, I hold to be a part full as neceſſarie, though it bee without, as the making of it, though it bee within the text. That then, bee our fourth, and this our order.

The

THe firſt word, is I, that is, GOD. He, is the ſpeaker and beſpeaker: the finder and the anointer: the faſt-holder and the ſtrengthener: the reſcuer and the revenger of David, and in him (as the type) of all Kings. Not one of theſe, but is within the very letter of the Text. For, this firſt perſon [I,] goeth cleane through to the end, and (as it were) engroſſeth them all to Himſelfe. Of the finding firſt. I. I (that is) GOD.

The points in it are foure: 1. The Perſon firſt, GOD it is that found. 2. Then the manner, Inveni; found by ſeeking. 3. Thirdly, the cauſe why He found David; for He found him Servum Meum. All theſe three are inventio. 4. And, having found Him laſtly, He proclaimes it here, cryes εὕρηκα, I have found (that is) Inventi prædicatio.

All Kings, are found by GOD: But in David, there is ſomewhat ſingular. Hee was not a King onely, but a King (as we may ſay) of the firſt head. For, before he was found, hee was a private man: GOD found him, and anointed him (that is) of a private perſon, made him a King. His ſeed alſo, were to ſucceed him, by vertue of the entaile, Verſe 4. But, he was the firſt King of his race: as in every race of Kings, there was ſuch an one, that at firſt was found out. In him, in ſuch a one, finding is moſt needfull: In them that ſucceed, there ſhall need no ſuch ſeeking, they are found to His hand; Onely anoint them, and no more adoe. GOD found David.

This then, we finde firſt; that Kings were of GODS finding at the firſt. GOD (we ſee) takes it to Himſelfe, I have found. They are then, no humane invention, deviſed or taken up by man; but found by GOD. They came not out of mans braine; but ex cerebro Iovis, Inventum Dei, of GODS finding forth. I

As of his finding, in this verſe: So of his exalting, in the very next before. I have exalted one, one choſen out of the people. Looke you, there comes two at once; exalted and choſen. Neither choſen, nor exalted by the people; but by GOD, out of the people. Not they, out of themſelves: but GOD, out of them. Marke that point well.

As, for his finding in this, and exalting in that: ſo (within a verſe or two following) of his adopting too. There, GOD ſaith; He (that is) the King ſhall call Me, Thou art My Father. Where we ſee, whereto he was choſen; whither exalted: even, to be the Sonne of GOD. And not every ſonne neither: but His heire, His eldeſt. For, ſo it followeth, I will make him my firſt borne. So Filius Dei he is, primogenitus Dei: and what would we more? Then is not David, Filius populi, GOD forbid. Never father him upon them. No adoptive, no foundling of theirs. His finding, chooſing, exalting, adopting, GOD takes them all to Himſelfe.

Shall I let you ſee it ad oculum, this; that it was none, but God? Not the people (no colour for them.) Full little knew they, or any of them; Not the Elders of Bethlehem: Nor did ever imagine any ſuch thing in hand, when Samuel went about it, when David was firſt found. 1 Sam. 16. 4

Nay, nor the Saints found him not neither, till GOD (as it is in the verſe next before) ſpake to them in a viſion, and told them of it. Verſe 19.

Nay, not he, of whom there is moſt likelihood, the Prophet himſelfe (Samuel:) he found him not, he could not finde him, till GOD did it for him, and ſaid to him, This is he. All this is, 1 Sam. 16. Thus, GOD, in David, would let us ſee at firſt, that it was He that found Kings, and none but He. If Samuel the Prophet had beene let alone, it had not beene King David, but King Eliab: he would have found him. If Abiathar the High-Prieſt had had his will, it had not beene King Salomon, but King Adonijah, it is well knowne. So then, neither People, nor Saints; nor Prophet, nor Prieſt; but GOD it was, of Himſelfe and by Himſelfe. He to have the honour of this invention. 1 Sam. 16. 6. 1 Reg. 1. 7.

And if Kings be the invention of GOD, then are not their inventions of GOD, (theſe I meane that have beene broached of late) that finde Kings, or found Kings upon any but GOD: that make Prophet, Prieſt or People, King-finders, or King-founders, or aſcribe this invention to any, but to him in the Text. This for the perſon, I have found.

2 Found him inveni.

How found (the ſecond?) By hap? No, it is inveni: in that word, is the manner of it. Every tongue hath a proper word to ſever things ſought and ſo found; from things found without ſeeking: you know --Tu non inventa, reperta es. David then, was not; Kings are not reperti, hit upon at adventure, or ſtumbled on by chance: they are not ἐκ τυχόντων. No, they are inventi: firſt ſought, and ſo found upon ſearch. Will yee heare it, totidem verbis? Quæſivi mihi hominem, ſaith GOD of David, I have ſought me out a man, 1 Sam. 13.14.

Not, that any is hid from Him, that He need ſeeke him; It is but in our owne phraſe to expreſſe to our capacities, how GOD ſtood affected to the having of Kings. So ſet to have them, that rather than not have them, Hee would doe as we doe, even take the paines to ſeeke them out. Now, the endeavour to ſeeke, is from no velleitie, no faint will; No, it is from a deſire that faine would finde. And that deſire, is from no meane conceit (if it come, ſo it is; if not, no great matter:) but from ſome ſpeciall good conceit, we have of that, we ſeeke for; that we hold it worth the time we ſpend, worth the labour we beſtow about it. All is, but to ſhew us the worth of this invention. For it is no meane thing (we may be ſure) that GOD will ſeeke. Seeking them, He ſhewes, He holds them for ſuch, as He would not be without them Himſelfe; He would not have His people in any wiſe, be without them. And that He would not have them thought as good loſt as found, but eſteemed for ſuch by us, as if we had them not, we would (by His example) ſet our ſelves to ſeeke them ſeriouſly, and never leave, till we have found them. This for the manner.

3 Found him His ſervant.

But then thirdly; ſeeking, why found He David, rather than any other? Wee finde the reaſon of that, in Servum meum, becauſe He found him His ſervant. For a ſervant He ſought, to whom He might commit the higheſt point of His ſervice, the care of His people. And Hee found him ſo zealous for his flocke, to keepe them from being a prey to ſtrange beaſts, as He thought him meet, to be made of Paſtor ovium, Paſtor hominum. He found him ſo devout at His ſervice, that He ſet him in ſuch a place, as if he were the Servant of GOD he might make ten thouſand more, beſide himſelfe.

Theſe two words then, we may not ſlip over; the claime of the Covenant (after) lyeth by them. And if the Covenant hath not beene kept with any, it hath beene for default of this, that Hee hath found him; him, but not him, His Servant.

Yea, if any King be found by GOD before he doe, or by courſe of nature can doe Him any ſervice (ſuppoſe in his cradle;) yet even to ſuch a one, is not this word, without fruit. It hath his uſe (this) not onely in making them to be found, but in keeping them from being loſt. For the ſame, that was the way to be found at firſt: the very ſame, is the way not to be loſt ever after. And it concernes David or any, as neerely, not to be loſt againe, as it doth at firſt to be found.

Now, if David looke well to theſe two words, and loſe them not, GOD will not loſe him (hee may be ſure) but be at hand ſtill, readie to defend him. Vnleſſe David loſe them, hee cannot loſe GOD: and unleſſe hee loſe GOD, he cannot be loſt. David ever loſt them, before his enemies could doe him any harme. Numb. 31. 16. All Balaam's curſing will doe him no hurt; nothing but his wicked counſell, to unmake him His ſervant, and ſo to loſe GOD, and ſo to be loſt of GOD; and ſo to be loſt, utterly loſt. Lay up this then; The way to ſervari à Deo, is to ſervire Deo. And lay it up well; It is the onely article of Covenant on Davids part: Vpon theſe two words depends all that followes (upon Servum meum.) If they be ſure, all is ſure. And this for inventio.

GOD tels it, I have found.

But, I find here, inventi prædicatio beſides. To find is one thing, to cry εὕρηκα inveni, I have

I have found another. One may finde, and keepe his owne counſell: (ſo men doe for the moſt part.) But GOD here proclaimes His finding; tells all, He hath found. And none doe ſo, but ſuch as are ſurpriſed with joy: as the partie in the Canticles, Inveni quem quæſivit anima mea; I have found whom my ſoule ſought, and I would the world knew it, I am not a little glad of it. Commonly, where there is care in ſeeking, as before, there is joy in finding. Ioy then: and it is not joy alone (for, one may gaudere in ſinu, keepe his joy to himſelfe) but gaudium cum gloriâ, this. For, he not onely joyes in his invention, but glories in it, and even boaſts of it, that doth inventum Prædicare. The word (which he uſeth) εὕρηκα, is made famous by Archimedes, who in a great paſſion betweene glorying and rejoycing, firſt cried it, when he had found the ſecret of King Hiero's Crowne. But no leſſe famous, by Saint Andrew, Ioh. I. 41. Who, upon the finding of CHRIST, came running to his brother Saint Peter, with Archimedes's crie, We have found him (the Meſſias) wee have found Him. Meſſias in Hebrew, is nothing elſe but anointed: and, wee ſhall ſee David anointed ſtraight. And ſure, next to the joy of CHRIST (Chriſtus Dominus) we may place the joy of Chriſtus Domini; and take up, our next εὕρηκα, for Him. GODS word will well become us, to uſe.

And to whom is this? To His Saints: to them, He tells it (looke the laſt verſe before:) As if they had their part in this finding, ſo invites He them, to the fellowſhip of the ſame joy. Tells them, that ſuch an one He had found; and for them, and for their good He had found him. They, to reape ſpeciall Benefit by it, by this finding; therefore, they to take ſpeciall notice of it, they ſpecially to rejoyce with him for it. Ioy to His Saints by it.

And what ſhould I ſay, but as this Pſalme ſaith a little before, Beatus populus qui ſcit jubilationem; Bleſſed are the people that can skill of this joy, that can skill of their owne good: What it is to have a King, a King found to their hand, but ſpecially a King, that is GODS ſervant. Verily, if GODS Ioy, bee our joy: it is to bee with us, as with GOD it was; this εὕρηκα, the εὕρηκα of joy. And truely, all this Text, both that which is paſt (His care in ſeeking, and His joy in finding) and that which followeth, His honour in anointing, His mercie in making this Covenant, His truth in keeping it: His reſcuing them, from; His revenging them, upon their Enemies: all is, but to ſhew us how much Hee doth, and (if wee will doe, as He doth) how much we are to doe, even to ſet by, even to joy, and glory with Him, in Inveni Davidem Servum Meum. And this for his finding. Now no more adoe, but proceed to his anointing. I Ioy of the finding.
Verſ. 15.

To what end then, found? To anoint. Very many are found, very few ſo found, ſcarce one of many millions. But they, that are ſo found, are eo ipſo the greateſt perſons, and of the higheſt Calling upon earth. So much is there, in this word anointing. And this alſo, GOD takes to Himſelfe: unxi, no leſſe, than the former, inveni. Findes, and anoints both. Found to anoint.
GOD the Anointer.

And both the Act His, and the oyle His. Vnxi, I did it; and oleo meo, My oyle it was I did it with. So findes Kings, and findes oyle, and findes fingers, and all. Nothing goeth to them, but it is GODS. The oyle is GODS.

It ſeemeth otherwiſe. Samuel could not finde him indeed: but we finde, he did anoint him, though. He did ſo, but not as of himſelfe: what he did, in the Perſon of GOD he did it. And the Law is, what one doth by another, not, that other; but himſelfe is ſaid to doe it, to be the Author of the deed. For this muſt ſtand true, that GOD here ſaith Himſelfe, That whoſe fingers ſoever were uſed, GOD it was that anointed him. And anointed him with oyle, holy oyle, His holy oyle. 1 Sam. 16. 13.

Oyle: We can never finde Kings in Scripture, but ſtill wee finde this word with them. We finde them in oyle, and oyle is for continuance. The colours of the Crowne are not water-colours, to fade by and by; they be laid in oyle, to laſt and to hold out all weathers. So, in oyle, not in water. I

Luke 10. 34.

And in oyle, not in wine. For though the Samaritan have both, and there is uſe of both, in time and place: Yet here, onely with oyle. There is no acrimony, nothing corroſive, in it: it is gentle, ſmooth, and ſuppling. All to teach them, a prime quality of their calling, to put in oyle enough; to cheriſh that vertue, that the ſtreames of it may be ſeene, and the ſent of it may be felt of all. For, that will make David to be David: that is (as his Name is) truely beloved.

2 With holy oyle.

Oyle, and holy oyle. Holy, not onely to make their Perſons ſacred, and ſo free from touch or violating (all agree of that:) but even their Calling ſo, alſo. For, holy unction, holy function.

Now, this holy oyle troubles the Ieſuite ſhrewdly, and all thoſe, that ſeeke to unhallow the Calling of Kings. For, if the holy oyle be upon them, why ſhould they be ſequeſtred quite, from holy things, more than the other two, that have but the ſame oyle? Indeed (as they ſay) if they were but to deale with common matters, common oyle would have ſerved well enough (and ſo, they would faine have it;) but this place, choakes them: This holy oyle here. And their Calling, by vertue of this, being holy, what ſhould let them, in their kinde to deale with thoſe, either perſons or matters, that are but as the oyle is, wherewith they are anointed? How fond is it, to imagine them to be anointed with holy oyle, to deale onely in unholy matters, and not to meddle with any thing that holy is?

3 With His holy oyle.

Holy oyle, and His holy oyle. For, His holy, is more than holy. His, is another manner oyle, than the materiall, in the Prophets horne, or in the Prieſts viall. His drops immediately from the true Olive, the HOLY GHOST (He the true Olive, as CHRIST the true Vine.) Samuel's, is but a ceremonie: this, the ſubſtance of the anointing. It is, in this, as in Baptiſme: there, Iohn with water; CHRIST with the HOLY GHOST: And, that is the ſoule of Baptiſme. So here, Samuel ſheds on the oyle of the Tabernacle, GOD He addes His from Heaven; the ſame, and no other than CHRIST was anointed with: that oyle is it: that, the anointing indeed. He indeed above His fellowes, for Hee had the SPIRIT above meaſure: But Hee ſo above them, as Hee with them, and they with Him; with His, with the ſame anointing, both.

Pſal. 45. 8. Iohn 3. 34.

2 Ioy of the anointing. Pſal. 45. 8.

And, it is not from the purpoſe, that His oyle, is by the Pſalme called the oyle of gladneſſe: That, as we are glad even now, for his finding: ſo, may we alſo now, for his anointing. And by and by, glad againe, for his delivering. And ſo, glad in him, GOD make us, for them all. It is a day of Ioy: I would not omit any thing, that might tend to it. And this for the firſt verſe, finding and anointing, and (if yee will) for the twenty ninth of Iuly. Now to the ſecond verſe.

Verſe 21. The League.

Having anointed his, the firſt thing Hee doth, is to enter a league with him. And, wee are glad of that. For, having found him now, wee would be glad to keepe him. And, there is no ſurer way for that, than to joyne him in a league, with the mightieſt King (by farre) of the whole world, the King of Kings, GOD Himſelfe.

And, GOD Himſelfe is willing with it, offers it. And ſure He hath reaſon ſo to doe. Seeing He hath found him, He will not ſee him loſt. David ſerves Him, He will ſervare ſervum. He anointed him, and made him holy, He will not ſee him uſed prophanely. But, the Eye that found him, ſhall watch over him: the Hand that anointed him, ſhall be at hand to defend him.

It is a League or Covenant.

So hitherto, GOD found David. Now, David findes GOD, willing to undertake his quarrell: and even to covenant with him, ſo to doe. For, it is not a bare promiſe this: it is a Covenant, and ſo termed expreſly, at the III. and XXVIII. verſes. And that, a Covenant ſolemnly ſworne, bound with an oath, at the IV. XXXV. And here now manus mea cum eo, He giveth him His hand upon it. His covenant, His oath, and His hand, what can there be more? This Covenant is made as ſure, as can be; And as ſurely kept, we ſhall ſee anon.

manus

The firſt Article of this Covenant, the article of Inprimis, is that His hand ſhall hold him faſt, or eſtabliſh: the ſecond, that His arme ſhall ſtrengthen him: (that is) covenants for the continuall preſence, and aſſiſtance of His power, ever to joyne with him, and ſtill to be ayding to him. The firſt and ſecond articles of the Covenant; Pro, for David.

This power, of it ſelfe is but one, as GOD is one: but is ſet downe thus, here and elſe-where, in two words; the hand and the arme, the mighty hand and the out-ſtretched arme, to ſet forth two degrees of it. Both great, but one greater. That of the hand, is great; as we reade, XIII. verſe before, yet but ordinary. That of the arme, is greater, and commeth forth, but upon extraordinary occaſion: Every thing, we put not, to the armes end. GODS hand: GODS arme.

Not, that theſe degrees of difference are in the power it ſelfe, which is entire, quoad ſe; but onely, to proportion it, and make it anſwerable, to our perils: which are not alwayes alike, but leſſe or more, at one time, than another: and ſo, ſeeme to us, to require a degree of power, according. For the leſſe, the hand ſeemes enough: but for the more, the arme; a greater degree of power, as our perill is greater.

No day goeth over our head, but the horſe we ride on, the ſtaires we goe up and downe by, the very meat we eat, we are in danger, leſt it goe the wrong way. For, theſe, for every dayes dangers, we cannot miſſe the hand; and the hand is enough, if it doe but hold us faſt.

But this day, the fifth of Auguſt, and ſuch another, the fifth of November, the caſe is altered: then, Riſe up, riſe up thou arme of the LORD, riſe up and ſtretch out thy ſelfe: another manner of jeopardie, then. So, in a word, the hand for all the yeare: the arme for the fifth of Auguſt. Now there is no jeopardie ſo great, but the arme, if it ſtretch it ſelfe out, will ſerve to preſerve us. And this arme is ever ſtretched out, when GOD vouchſafeth ſome ſtrange miraculous deliverance: as this day He did. For this, was Dies brachii: on it, the arme of the LORD was revealed. Eſay 51. 9. Eſay 53. 1.

Both theſe: And either hath his proper attribute: the hand, to eſtabliſh, and the arme to ſtrengthen.

To eſtabliſh: (that is) to make ſteady, that he ſtand faſt, and be not moved. It is ἰσχὺς the paſſive power, to reſiſt: ſuch, as of the anvile, or of the rocke. Hand, to ſtabliſh him.

To ſtrengthen: (that is) when we are further to encounter our perill actively, and are too weake for it; for, that giveth δύναμις, the active power, that ſtrikes them downe; as the ſword, or halberd in the hand of the mightie. Arme to ſtrengthen.

Both theſe: and both neceſſary, for the performance of this league: Which is, both defenſive in the next verſe, to keepe them, that they take no hurt: And offenſive, in the laſt verſe, to pay their enemies their due, and to ſtrike them downe.

This then, is the ſumme of the two firſt articles. The hand ſhall never be off him, but on him, all the yeare long, for every dayes danger. But, if further need be, if ſome very great hazard, if the fifth of Auguſt, then out comes the arme. But ſo, as both; both hand and arme, and every ſinew in them, are ready ſtill, and at hand as occaſion ſhall be, to ſtabliſh or ſtrengthen him. This, for the ſecond verſe, the league: And all this is for him: Pro.

Why, what needs all this? this holding, this fortifying? Is there any harme toward? I cannot tell: it was ſomewhat a ſuſpicious word (in the verſe paſt) of holding him, and holding him faſt; as if there were ſome ſhooving at him. The Greek is more full Συναντιλήψεται. For, in that word, there is λῆψις GOD holds him: and then ἀντίληψις, as it were, another pluckes at him: and then Συναντίληψις, GOD holds him harder or faſter than before. This was but ſuſpicious. But here now, it is paſt all ſuſpition: for here, are a couple, making toward him (1 the enemie, and 2 the ſonne of wickedneſſe:) It is to be doubted, The third and fourth articles Contra, againſt Davids foes: Defenſive.

doubted, for no good. Here is now the fifth of August: Here comes GOD'S ſecond finding him. For in his enemies hand now he is, get out how he can.

The Devils finding or invention.

I told you before, that Kings were GOD'S invention: here now comes the Devil's invention. For, as GOD finds Kings, ſo the Devill finds Traytors. GOD finds David, the Devill finds Abſalom: GOD, your Majeſty; the Devill, thoſe of this day.

And (as evill ever is more fertill) for one King, there are two, in the Text: and there were two, on the day: and I would to GOD, two were all. But this is to be counted of, Satan the Arch-enemie (ſo ſignifies his name) will be ſure to finde Kings enemies. The father of wickedneſſe, will finde his whelps, ready ever for ſo wicked an enterprize.

And now, theſe are they, contra quos, whom againſt this league is made: For by vertue of the league, GOD and David, they have friends and enemies in common. Enemie to one (the King;) and enemie to both (GOD and the King.) 1. Of the parties firſt. 2. Then of their attempt. 3. And laſt of their ſucceſſe.

The parties. The enemie. The ſonne of wickedneſſe. Son exegeticè. Prov. 31. 3.

The parties. Two titles they have in the Text, 1 the enemie, 2 the ſonne of wickedneſſe. Exegeticè ſome take them, both for one; and then, the later gloſſeth the former: and then the meaning is, that Davids enemies are all of them the ſonnes of wickedneſſe. And indeed ſuch they were, and none but ſuch. For GOD forbid, any good man ſhould be Davids enemie. In this ſenſe it is true. For, all of them Qui vias dant ad perdendos Reges, but much more, qui vias docent; that would have them loſt, whom GOD even now, with ſuch joy found; that ſeeke to deface GOD'S invention: You may boldly pronounce of them, they be the ſonnes of wickedneſſe all: as flat againſt GOD, as perdere is againſt invenire, perdition againſt invention; and their will, againſt His will. For His will is, Quos Deus invênit, homo ne perdat: and Quos Deus invênit, homo perdat, ſay they. And this, if both be for one.

The enemy, the ſon of wickedneſſe two diſtinct. Verſe 12.

But if (as the words give, and the beſt Writers take them) they ſtand for a paire, for two diſtinct: then, by the enemie, is meant he that is ſo profeſſed: Plaine, by the LV. Pſalme, It was not an open enemie: where the word is the ſame, that here; (that is) ſuch a one as Golias was. But by the ſonne of wickedneſſe, is meant, the cloſe hollow Traytour, ſuch as was his wicked ſonne.

They be the ſonnes of wickedneſſe.

And it is good, they know their pedigree theſe fellowes, of what linage, they are. That is, wickedneſſes owne ſonnes: as if the other, the enemie, were but allyed to it, in ſome degree; but theſe, the true off-ſpring, the lively image of the Devill. For, if they be the ſonnes, and he the Father, they be as neere of bloud, as may be. So, they ſee their true deſcent, ſonnes of wickedneſſe.

What wickeneſſe it is. 1 Ihn 15. 25. Pſal. 109. 5.

And it is worth the while to know, of what wickedneſſe. Evill it is, to be wicked upon what pretence ſoever: But, oderunt me gratis is worſe; for that is, of meere malignitie. But mala pro bonis, is worſt of all. And ſuch are theſe, ſuch their wickedneſſe. Sonnes of עולה: which עולה the Hebrewes tell us, is properly the naughtineſſe of ſome evill natur'd children, that bite the nipple, which giveth them milke. That is עולה right: (the worſt and moſt wicked wickedneſſe of all others.) To bite and ſucke, both at once. But ſuch there are, the better they be dealt with, the worſe ſtill, yee ſhall finde them.

The ſonne of wickedneſſe the more dangerous.

Now of the twaine, theſe are farre the more dangerous: as you may ſee by the very courſe or ſtanding of them in the Text. For referendo ſingula ſingulis (as we uſe to doe:) the hand before (as the former there) properly referres to the enemie (as the former here:) But the arme, the later there, that referres to the ſonnes of wickedneſſe, even by the courſe of the two verſes. As if, for the enemie, the hand were ſufficient: but for theſe, arme and all, were little enough.

And ſure, ye ſhall obſerve, that David, that the ſonne of David, CHRIST; that CHRISTVS DOMINVS, and CHRISTVS DOMINI both, hath ever beene moſt in danger of this kinde of cattell. David, he was once in danger, and never but once, by Iſhbonob, an open enemie. But his great dangers, were by theſe here, the ſonnes of wickedneſſe, his wicked ſonne Abſalom, his wicked Counſellour Achitophel: And indeed, all his great, were by this ſecond ſort.

2 Sam. 21. 16.

And

And our SAVIOVR CHRIST' His furious enemies, they that would have throwne Him headlong downe the hill, they that would have ſtoned Him, they did Him no hurt: but, that falſe harlot Iudas, that ſonne of wickedneſſe, he did. And I pray to GOD, he may; and I beſeech David heartily, He would take this to heart, and take heed of theſe. The danger of theſe, the ſonnes of wickedneſſe, it was the danger of this day. Luke 4.29. Ioh 8.59. 10.31.

Will ye now ſee their proceedings and practiſes? They be in theſe three words; 1 violence, 2 wickedneſſe, 3 hurt. Violence they meane, that is their end, and with wickedneſſe they cover it (that is) with one wicked preſent or other, the better to make the way, to doe the hurt they intend. Alas, nothing but a vow at Hebron (ſaid wicked Abſalom) when he vowed indeed, to deprive King David, both of his Kingdome, and life. Not loſe the Sermon, for any good (ſaid He of this day;) when he had in his heart, violence and hurt, no leſſe hurt, than the loſſe of your Majeſties life. This is the way of them all: Violence wrapped about, with a vow, or a Sermon, or I wote not what; that, before it be ſeene, it may doe the miſchiefe, that is meant. This holy wickedneſſe, is ſimply the worſt of all. O LORD, what dangers are they in, that are in this caſe! How neere being loſt! Now, the Succeſſe. 2 Their attempt. Violence, Wickedneſſe, Hurt. 2 Sam.15.8.

For, at the name of Violence, at but the mention of hurt, every good heart is moved, and come running in about David, to ſee, if any hurt. But there is no hurt done (God be bleſſed) None done: what ſoever meant, none is done. And, he falls (if you marke:) No violence; Nay, not ſo much, as the leaſt hurt. For they be two, theſe, violence and hurt: and hurt, is the more larger. Any violence done? Nay none: Any hurt at all? Nor that neither. Neither? all is ſafe then. 3 Their Succeſſe. No Violence, No Hurt.

Where we ſee, the firſt uſe of this hand, and arme; to repell and keepe backe violence, to beare off the blow, that ſhould doe them hurt. This is the defenſive part. And it is much to their comfort, that this hand ſo holds them, and this arme, is ſo over them, as it is ſtill betweene them and their harmes: as it lights on Gods arme and hand, and muſt hurt them, before it come at David. But them, it cannot hurt, neither violent wickedneſſe, nor wicked violence prevaile againſt them: And ſo be they ſafe, from both. And no way to prevaile againſt Kings, but to binde this hand firſt, and pinion this arme. Otherwiſe, evill men there may be, and evill meaning; but no evill ſucceſſe, for all that.

But, I would pray you, to take good heed, to the Tenor of this Covenant. No promiſe is here made, but that ſuch he ſhall have: and ſhall have of both ſorts, open and ſecret: open, to offer violence; ſecret, privily to ſeeke his hurt. No, though he be David (that is) lovely, or as lovely, as ever was he, yet he ſhall have thoſe that hate him; hate him gratis, hate him though favours done them; though they lie in his lap, and are fed with his milke, yet bite him for all that. No part of the Covenant this, but ſuch he ſhall have, but ſuch there ſhall be. 1 Not, There ſhall be no enemies, No Sonnes of wickedneſſe.

Nor, no promiſe neither, but as they ſhall be, ſo they ſhall be doing (as we ſay:) not ſit idle, but be plotting and practiſing, ever and anone. It is but, non proficient (ſo read the Fathers this verſe) the Covenant in the Text: it is not non facient. No, facient, facient quod ſuum eſt iniquitatis filii (ſaith S. Auguſtine well;) the ſons of wickedneſſe ſhall be doing, and doe their kind, that is wickedly; Entend Violence, pretend ſome wicked wile or other. No part of the Covenant, but ſuch there ſhall be: Nor no part of the Covenant, but thus they ſhall doe. Let it not ſeeme ſtrange: looke for it. 2 Not, They ſhall not be doing.

But, this is the Covenant, and this is all. The former part, Be they ſhall and be doing they ſhall, ſed non proficient in eo, they ſhall doe no good on him (in their ſenſe) that is, no evill (in ours.) 3 But, They ſhall not doe it.

And, very fit is the word non proficient: that is, though they goe to Schoole all their daies about it, yet ſhall they prove but non proficients, and never proceed ſo far, as to doe it. So in the latter part non apponent nocere; No non proponent. Not, ſhall not have the purpoſe; but, ſhall not have their purpoſe. Not, ſhall not have the will; but, ſhall not have the power to doe hurt. Proffer they ſhall, but not profit. Deviſe, but what they deviſe, not be able to performe: Imagine, but be ſcattered in the imaginations of their hearts. Non proficient in eo. Non apponent nocere. Pſal. 21.11. Luk. 1.51.

hearts. So that, come when they will now, they come a verſe too late: David is provide of an hand and arme (in the verſe before) that will ſee him take no hurt: that will be hurt themſelves, rather than he take any: that will ſo fence him, as neither furie ſhall be able to do him any violence, by force; nor wickedneſſe to doe him any hurt, by fraud. Neere loſt, as good as loſt, he may be: but quite loſt he ſhall not be, God ſhall finde him againe. And ſo the laſt verſe.

Verſe 23. The fift and ſixt Articles Contra. Againſt his enemies Offenſive.

I will ſmite downe.

Pſal. 7. 16.

Very well then, David is eſcaped from their violence and hurt, but ſhall they eſcape ſo? No: there is a further matter in it. All this, is but the defenſive part: But the league (we find) was not only ſo, but offenſive too; as well to offend and annoy them, as to defend and reſcue him. And here now, is the active power, we ſpake of before, of the ſtrengthening of the arme. That, there is not onely worke for the hand to ſtay him, or hold out a ſhield, to beare off, that ſo no hurt to him; but for the arme alſo, to draw out a ſword, and lay on, that ſo all the hurt ſhall come to themſelves. And ſo, their imaginations not onely ſcattered, but returned upon their owne heads. For violence they entended, and were brought themſelves to a violent end. Hurt they meant, and they are hurt themſelves, and that incurably, ſmitten downe and periſh.

I

Yea, Though no harme done, yet ſmite downe.

2 Sam. 20. 21. Pſal. 41. 9. Eſter 1. 21, 22.

Three points I touch onely. What? ſmite them downe and no harme done? Yea, no matter for that; downe with them, though. To lift up an hand, or an heele here, is enough. To offer violence, but to intend hurt, here enough. That there was none done, thanks be to God and the good hand, that held them: Bigthan and his fellow, hang them up though. Not, quia nocuerunt, No: upon no other enditement but quia voluerunt, they would have done the King hurt, though they did him none. That is enough, ſmite them downe.

2

Yea, At the firſt ſmite downe

1 Sam. 21. 8.

Againe: What? at the very firſt, ſmite them downe? Yea; theſe at the very firſt. With others, He proceeds not ſo roundly: ſmites them firſt, before He ſmite them downe; ſmites them a blow with the hand, in mercie; before He ſmite them downe with the deadly blow of His arme, in rigor. But theſe, downe with them, at the very firſt. Wote you why? Abiſhai he deſired, he might have, but one blow, at the King, he would never deſire a ſecond. Pay him, with his owne money: let him have but one blow, but the firſt; and no more.

How ſmite downe.

And what blow is it? to aſtoniſh him or to fell him, for the time? No: it is ἐκκόψω, ſay the Seventie. The nature of which word is, out to fell the ſtemme or the trunke of the tree, but to hew in ſunder the very roots, that it never grow againe: So to ſmite them downe, as they never riſe more. I will ſmite downe.

And plague them.

And, as if this were not enough, he followes them yet further. Before, he fell: No violence; nay not any, the leaſt hurt: Here, He riſes, ſmite them, nay plague them, that is ſmite them downe with the plague, which is yet more fearefull. And it is truly turned, for מג פה is properly, the ſtroke of the plague.

The plague is a death that we would not die of to chooſe; if ſmitten downe, not ſmitten downe, with that axe. Not, becauſe it is deadly for the moſt part, and paſt recoverie: (that is not it:) But, becauſe they that be ſo ſmitten, there goeth from them, a peſtilent noyſome vapour, that makes all ſhun them, or (as the LXX's word is) ἀποφεύγειν, runne away, yea and fly away from them. And even ſo, from theſe, there goeth a ſent, as from a plague-ſore (you will beare with it, it is the HOLY GHOSTS owne terme) that taints their bloud, corrupts their name, makes them and their memorie odious, yea, even an abhorring to all fleſh. Say what they will, this is the plague of plagues when all is done. And, it is GODS owne will, God Himſelfe would have us, ſo reckon of them. Of Coreh (the firſt we read of in this kinde) GOD calls to MOSES, Charge the people all, that they get them from about them. And MOSES he cries, Away, away from their Tents, touch not any thing that is theirs: as if he ſhould ſay, they have the plague, it is infectious. So, GOD would have us thinke of them: And ſo (I pray God) all may take warning from him

Plague them in this life.

Eſay 66. 24.

The plague in Gods account.

Num. 16. 24. 26.

him, and ſo thinke of them, and ſhunne them as perſons contagious, that have ſores running on them.

Now, this is but their plague on Earth (to be plagued in their end, their bloud, their name;) but all this, is nothing to their plagues in Hell: whither certainely they goe, ſo many as in flagranti crimine, in the very act of treacherie, are taken away. No man ſhall need to wiſh them, more hurt: They periſh, and come to a fearefull end. It is truly ſaid by them, I will plague them. Plague them in the other life. Pſal. 73. 19.

Yet one more, that makes up all. For (if ye marke) the perſon is changed. The laſt verſe, it was, they ſhall doe no violence, they ſhall doe no hurt: Conſequently, he ſhould have gone on, they ſhall be ſmitten, they ſhall be plagued: that had beene enough. It is not ſo, but, in the firſt perſon, I will ſmite, I will plague: as if, God himſelfe would be the doer of it, and doe it even αὐτοχειρ propriis manibus, with His owne hands. And ſurely, ſo ſenſible hath beene the demonſtration of the hand of his power, in the fall of theſe; that (to hold us to the terme of plague) Gods tokens have beene ſeene upon them: as if He had ſent His hand from on high, to plague them indeed. Vpon theſe this day; upon others ſince theſe, God hath from heaven, ſhewed, how much theſe attempts diſpleaſe Him, by making even the prints of His hands, to be ſeene upon the attempters; that men have beene even forced to acknowledge, it was no humane or earthly, but ſome ſupernaturall divine power, that brought it to paſſe: And that, though other hands were in it, yet God it was, that ſtrooke the ſtroke. This is the end, that in the end, ſhall come to all theſe from the LORD, ſo many as have any hand in the hurt of the Lords Anointed. He that is the founder of Kings, will be the Confounder of all Conſpirators. Carrie it, as cloſely as they can, His hand ſhall finde them out, finde them out and ſmite them, ſmite them and plague them, plague them here and for ever. This is the Covenant here made with David, in the name of Kings.

1 (That is) God Himſelfe will ſmite. He will plague.

Pſal. 144. 7.

And (I promiſe you) this, is a faire Covenant, and a full: but, might we ſee ſome proofe of it, how it was kept? For that, is Sal fœderis, the proofe, the keeping of it. For, many faire Covenants here in the World, take winde, for want of this Salt of the Covenant (the true keeping.) Application to His Majeſtie.

Of David, there is no doubt, it was kept with him, but the time will not ſerve. And this time requireth rather, to ſhew the proofe of the preſents in Your Majeſtie. That, this whole Text (mutato nomine) hath beene kept with You, from point to point: and the faithfull mercies of David (as Eſay calls them) as faithfull to You, as ever they were to him. Of that, then. Eſay 55. 3.

I finde then, both theſe daies, and on them, both theſe waies, You were found by God; found, the twenty ninth of Iulie, and anointed, found, the fifth of Auguſt, and delivered.

1 The twentie ninth of July Found in the Cradle and anointed.

Found firſt: and that, ſooner a great deale than David: for in your cradle: There He found You, and anointed You. David was come to yeares of diſcretion firſt, to doe Him ſervice: But you, by His preventing grace found, before you were, or could be in caſe, to doe Him any. An antecedence even in this.

2 The twentie ninth of July and the twentie fifth both Twice anointed. 2 Sam. 2. 4. & 5. 3.

Nay He found you twice, to anoint you. Once, before you did, or could ſerve him: And after you could, and did, once more. Found you, the twenty ninth of July, and the twentie fifth both. David was twice anointed too; but he, but of two pieces of one Kingdome: but you, of two entire Kingdomes, or (indeed) of three, the leaſt of them, greater than that of his, when both pieces were together. So an anointing alſo, more than he.

3 Found in the womb, and delivered, before ever anointed.

Some difference I finde, but with vantage ſtill, on your ſide. For in the Text, David is firſt anointed, and after delivered. But you, were delivered, before ever anointed. For, before He found you in your Cradle, there to anoint you; He found you in the wombe (before ever you came into the world) there to deliver you: Even there, His hand was over you, that, even there, a Sonne of wickedneſſe did you no hurt. This is more, than is in the Text; more, than ever David could ſing of.

4 Delivered before anointed; Delivered againe the fifth of Auguſt.

But He not onely thus delivered you before your birth, and ſo before your anointing: but, after it alſo, no leſſe: Witneſſe this fifth day of this moneth. So, were you you delivered first, and then anointed; and then, delivered againe from this day, and from being loſt on it. And thus farre the Text.

5 Anointed the ſecond time 25 of July, and Delivered after it 5. of November.

But then, were you anointed againe after that, and delivered againe after that, from a fifth day too, though of another moneth. For, either of your anointings, have had a famous deliverie, to ſecond it. So we double the point here. A deliverance in the wombe, an anointing after that deliverance; A deliverance after that anointing; And then, an anointing againe; And then, a deliverance againe, upon that. So upon the matter, foure findings, with you; Twice to anoint, and twice to deliver: beyond David, beyond the Text heere. So the Text, kept with you, over and over againe.

Application to the fift of Auguſt, the Day it ſelfe. Verſe 2. Then found and found by GOD.

But, to let the reſt goe and to hold us to this day. This day, if daies could ſpeake, (and daies can ſpeake, ſaith the nineteenth Pſalme) would certifie, that this Covenant was kept with you, in every clauſe of the ſix, on this your finding-day.

For, your finding-day well may it be called; well may it be ſaid, you were found on it, and found by GOD on it. Found; for ſure you were loſt: And found by God; for men had loſt you. They that gladly would, knew not how to find you, or get to you. Great oddes then, but you had beene quite loſt. It was God that found you then, and made you to be found of them, not by any skill of their own, or by any direction, but His. By hap, it might ſeeme: but your ſelfe do, and we all acknowledge the hand of God in it. His providence, that ſo guided them; His doing it was, that they did it: So that God it was, that found you then, or, we had not now found you heere. It may then truly, be called your finding-day; and God truly ſay, the ſecond time, εὕρηκα, I have found. Of it then, of this day.

1 No enemie profeſſed, but two Sonnes of wickedneſſe for it.

We ſhall faile a little, in the firſt point. Here is an enemie profeſſed: And you had not then, you never had any, profeſſed. To make amends for that, there is but one ſon of wickedneſſe in the Text: You found not one, but two; and they found you.

2 A Sonne of wickedneſſe he was.

Sonnes of wickedneſſe, well might they be called. For, if no Religion, taking Religion upon it, be wickedneſſe (as it is double wickedneſſe) a Sonne of wickedneſſe he was. If witch-craft be wickedneſſe (as it is wickedneſſe in the higheſt degree) he was a Sonne of it, it was found about him. If to doe evill gratis; to doe evill for good, be wickedneſſe (and it is the wretchedeſt wickedneſſe that can be) you had done them many favours; and, to bite the breſt then, that had given them milke, theſe are they in the Text right, יולה בני if ever, there were any.

3 Meant violence wickedly covered it. How neere the doing it.

Theſe then, violence they intended, and with wickedneſſe they covered it. Wickedly they entiſed you and drew you along, till they had you faſt ſhut up: And then violent hands they layd on you (the markes were to be ſeene many a day after.) And were you not then, within the compaſſe of the Text, of violence and hurt, that is, of hurt by violence? Yes, ſo neere you was the hurt, that the hurtfull point touched your naked breſt. Was David ever ſo neere? Never: He was indeed hard beſtead and forced to fly, but he never came in their hands; you did: He never was under locke; you were: He never had the daggers point at his heart; you had: And when you had, all the world then certainely, would have given you loſt.

4 Yet did it not. Non proficiunt. Non apponent.

Did they you any harme for all this? Not any (to ſpeake of.) We may take up that before, Fuerunt & fecerunt, ſed non perfecerunt; ſo farre from that, as non profecerunt. Such here were, and doing they were, but it would not doe; for it was not done (the violence they intended.) Propoſuerunt nocere, ſed non appoſuerunt; a purpoſe they had, an offer they made, that was all; further they went not: You were not loſt, we finde you here now, and we find you ſerving God, ſafe and well (thanks be to the great Finder of Kings) as ever you were.

5 The cauſe they did it not. The hand and arme of GOD to ſtabliſh you. The defenſive part of the Covenant.

What was it then, that it came ſo neere you and yet did you no hurt? It was the good hand of God, His holy arme that was upon you, held you, held you faſt: you faſt, from taking hurt; and them faſt, from doing any.

Can any doubt that it was the hand of God? He that ſtood there armed for that end, when he was ſo ſtrucken ſuddenly, as he had neither heart nor hand, to doe that he came for; was it not the hand of God, that ſo ſtrucke him?

When

When his hand held the others hand, that was ready to give the deadly blow; ut non opponeret nocere (they be the very words of the Text:) And was it not the hand in the Text then? 2

That You were ſo ſtabliſhed, as to reſiſt; that You were ſo ſtrengthened, as to prevaile (the two effects, ſet downe in the verſe both:) And yet was it not the hand there ſpecified? 3

The Popular tumult that roſe after this, enlarged by odious ſurmiſes, was it not Gods hand that layed the raging of the waves then, that ſtayed the madneſſe of the People? 4 Pſal. 65.

When the violence was over, the hurt was not: The lewd tongue of Shemei doth hurt, no leſſe than the ſword of Abiſhai. It would not be beleeved, that all this was true, there were that ſlandered the footſteps of His Anointed (Davids caſe in the end of this Pſalme:) was it not God then, that ſo touched the heart of him, that was eſcaped unknowne, that he had not the power, to be true to himſelfe, to keepe it in, but was even driven, by remorſe, to bewray himſelfe (though with evident hazard of his owne life) was not this digitus Dei? 5 Verſe 15

And ſince that, by a further ſtrange diſcoverie, hath He not ſet your innocencie in the ſight of the Sun? that now the mouth of all wickedneſſe is ſtopped, ſo that neither Abiſhai's ſword, nor Shemei's tongue now, can doe you any hurt? And was not the hand and arme of God in this? Yes, the whole arme, and every joynt; the whole hand, and all the fingers of it. Yet lacke we the laſt verſe. Pſal. 63. 11.

Here was the hand with the ſhield: but where was the arme with the ſword? Here too; and it ſmite them, ſmite them downe, downe it ſmite them both, both in the very place where they deſigned your hurt, and in the very wickedneſſe of the act: both were ſmitten downe ſtarke dead, and there ſtarke dead you ſaw them both lie before you (as the verſe is) before your face. Non profecerunt: Nay defecerunt, & in ipſo ſcelere perierunt: their ſword went through their owne heart and their bloud was upon their owne heads. God found you then, and you found Him, certainely. O, let Him ever finde you His ſervant, whom you then, found your ſo gracious good Lord. 6 The hand and arme to ſmite them: the offenſive part of the Covenant. To ſmite them downe before your face. Pſal. 37. 15. 1 Reg. 2. 32.

But, they muſt be plagued too (to make the Text up full.) So were they: For, as if they had beene ſmitten with ſome peſtilent foule diſeaſe; ſo, from them, from their mention, there goeth an odious ſent, odious and abhorred of all: Yea, the very houſe, as if the plague of leproſie had beene in it, razed downe: and, that there might no infection come from this plague of theirs, their very name put out, from under heaven. And, all this, ſo done, and with ſuch circumſtances, as all that heare it, muſt acknowledge, it was GODS doing, and that from heaven came the hand that did it; Factum eſt, & a Domino factum eſt, both. 7 To plague them. This done by God himſelfe. Pſal. 64. 9. Pſal. 118. 23.

And ſo, you are found: and they (as the children of perdition ſhould be) are loſt. Here are you: And where are they? gone to their owne place, to Iudas their brother. And (as is moſt kindly) the Sonnes, to the Father of wickedneſſe; there to be plagued with him, for ever. The ſame way, may they all goe; and to the ſame place, may they all come: all, that ſhall ever once offer, to doe the like. Thus, to the very laſt ſyllable, of the laſt verſe, is this Text found true in you; and this Covenant made good to you. All the ſix points of it, all of them in futuro, in the Text; ſhall and ſhall be: Comes me the day, and puts them all in præterito to you, changeth ſhall and ſhall be, into was and did. That, thus we reade it now; His hand did hold you faſt, His arme did ſtrengthen you: the Enemie was not able to doe you any violence, no more was the Sonne of wickedneſſe to hurt you. But He did ſmite downe your foes, and did plague them that hated you. So, the Covenant was fully kept with you, and ſealed, even with the bloud of them, that brake it. Acts 1. 25.

And now, let all them, that tooke any joy in the firſt finding and anointing, here renew their joy afreſh, for this ſecond, when you were thus in a manner loſt, and found againe. When it was juſt, as in the Goſpell, Periit & inventa eſt. And if he in the Goſpell for his ſheepe; and ſhe, for her groat, called all their friends together, and cryed, Congratulamini mihi: how much greater a Congratulamini belongs to this? Where 3 Ioy for your delivering. Luke 15. 6, 9.

Mat. 22. 20. nor a groat, but he that is the Image and ſuperſcription of all our groats, yea all our Coyne, ſilver and gold, is found againe.

To find ſome praiſes of God for this finding. And what? ſhall this be all? No I truſt: having thus, at the hands of God, found the faithfull mercies of David; we will ſtay a little, and looke out ſome of the faithfull prayers of David, to render Him, for this, for ſuch a finding. Let us doe ſo I pray you.

The firſt Verſe of the Pſalme, Cantabo. Pſal. 145 9. And we ſhall not need to goe farre, not any further than our owne Pſalme, and but even to the very firſt words of it, Miſericordias Domini in æternum cantabo. Vpon another, no leſſe worthy Deliverance, I well remember, you then tooke up the like, Miſericordiæ Domini ſuper omnia opera Ejus. Very fitly that, but this agrees rather with us now; For it is the beginning of the Pſalme, whereof the Text is a part: Made, as it were, the Antheme for this Sermon.

Mercie in making this Covenant. Will ye ſee how it agrees? There was mercie, in making this Covenant, there was truth, in keeping it. See then, how aptly he hath ſet it; My ſong ſhall be alwaies of the mercies of the LORD, (that made it;) with my mouth will I be ſhewing His truth (that kept it) from one generation to another. And ſhall not we ſing of His mercie? And Truth in keeping it. ſhall not we ſet forth his truth? Sing of His mercie that made this Covenant: ſhew forth His truth, that made it good, every article, and ſuffered not one word of it, to fall to the ground?

The ſecond verſe of the Pſalme, Ego dixi. But, if we cannot well ſing it, for lacke of a Queere: He hath taken order for that, too. For the very next, the ſecond verſe of the Pſalme, that he begins with, Ego dixi, I have ſaid: that if we cannot ſing it, we may yet ſay it. And it is but the ſame over againe: I have ſaid, Mercy ſhall be ſet up for ever: Thy truth ſhalt thou ſtabliſh in the heavens. What truth? It followeth in the third verſe, this truth of His Covenant, to David. To ſing that, and to ſay this: to make our ſongs, on this ground; and our ſermons, on this theme. He hath ſaid it, to ſet up His mercie: He hath done it, to exalt His truth.

To doe it in æternum: ſpecially this day. Luke 19. 19. Ever to doe this, in æternum: In æternum is the word of the verſe (if our dulneſſe could endure it) all the daies of the yeare. But, of all the dayes in the yeare, this day not to faile of it. Hodiè ſalus facta eſt domui huic, Nay regno huic, Nay Regnis his: This day then, not to faile of it. For, having found this mercie, and felt this truth, this day; ſhall we not, at the leaſt, this day, thanke Him for this day? Shall the Sun of this day ariſe, and goe downe upon us, and not ſee us together, to render Him praiſe, for this ſo loving a mercie, for this ſo faithfull a truth? Shall He finde hand and arme, to ſuccour and to ſave us, and ſhall not we finde mouth and lips, to bleſſe and magnifie Him for it? GOD forbid.

Application to Vs. Let us then, ſing that: My ſong ſhall be alwaies of the mercies of the Lord (record it, at leaſt) Or for default of it, ſay this: I have ſaid, Mercie ſhall be ſet up for ever, thy truth ſhalt thou eſtabliſh in the heavens. Be they never ſo falſe upon Earth, thou in heaven ſhalt ſtabliſh it. Say it,

By way of preaching. per modum Concionis; ſo we have: Say it then, per modum Orationis, ſo let us doe, and ſo an end.

By way of prayer. Even ſo LORD, ſo let it be, Set up this thy mercie for ever, for ever ſtabliſh the truth of this thy covenant, with thy Servant our Sovereigne, that it never faile Him, as not this day, ſo not at any other time. Let thine hand be ſtill upon Him, and thine arme about Him for ever, betweene Him and His armes. Violence and hurt, never come neer Him: The ſonnes of wickedneſſe, be ever far from Him. Let them be non proficients, all the ſort of them that ſtudie or practiſe this wicked leſſon. Never loſe thou Him, or ſuffer Him to be loſt: Ever find Him (good Lord) to ſuccour and ſave Him; and let thy right hand find out His enemies, to ſmite and plague them: with the ſame blowes, thou didſt ſmite; and with the ſame plagues, thou didſt powre on theſe, of this day. The deſtinie of this day, come on them all.

And, for Him, let His annointing ſtill be freſh on Him, and His crowne ſtill flouriſh on His head. Let Him, all the day walke in the light of thy countenance, and at night, reſt under the covering of thy wings. This day, as once it did, and as ever ſince it hath, So let it, long and many yeares, riſe proſperous and happie to him. This day, and all dayes. That he, that we all may ſing thy mercie, and ſet forth thy truth, all the dayes of our life. Heare us, O LORD, and grant it for thy SONNE's ſake, our SAVIOVR, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, IN THE Cathedrall Church at Salisbury, on the V. of August, A. D. MDCXV.

PSALME XXI. VER. I, II, III, IV.

The KING ſhall rejoyce in thy ſtrength, O LORD: Exceeding glad ſhall he be of thy ſalvation.
Thou haſt granted him his hearts deſire: And haſt not denied him the requeſt of his lips. Selah.
Thou haſt prevented him with the bleſſings of goodneſſe: and haſt ſet a Crowne of pure gold upon his head.
He aſked life of Thee, and Thou gaveſt him a long life: Even for ever and ever.

UPON a day of joy, Here is a Text of joy. Vpon a day of joy for the King, a Text, of a King in joy. For ſo, wee ſee, there is in the Text, a King: and hee joyfull and glad. Glad firſt, for ſtrength ſhewed by GOD, in ſaving him: Glad againe, for goodneſſe ſhewed by GOD, in ſatisfying, yea (more than ſatisfying) preventing his deſires; and that, in the matter of his crowne, and of his life, both.

This King, was King David (no doubt;) The very Title of the Pſalme ſheweth as much: And the Sonne of Syrach (of whom, I reckon as well or better, than of any Commentary) theſe very words (here) hee applyes to King David, Chap. 47. verſe 7.

Originally

Originally then, he: But neither ſolely, nor wholly he. His meaning was not, to make this ſaving, his owne caſe, alone: Nor to engroſſe this joy, all, to himſelfe: ye may ſee it, by the very ſetting it downe. It is not (as, of himſelfe) I, will rejoyce: But (as of a third perſon) The King, ſhall: The King, indefinitely. So, entailing it, rather to his Office, than to his perſon: And leaving it at large, appliable to any other, a King, as well as himſelfe.

To any other King (I ſay.) Specially any other ſuch King, that ſhould be as ſtrangely ſaved by GODS ſtrength; As fairely bleſſed by His goodneſſe, as ever was he. That ſhould finde the like favour that he did: and be vouchſafed the like gracious deliverance, that, he was. Any ſuch King in ſuch wiſe ſaved, to be equally intereſſed, in this joy with him: And to have this Pſalme, ſerve for a Sermon, or for an Anthem, no leſſe than He.

And, by this, we hope in GOD, this rejoycing here, ſhall not be ſhut up, againſt us. For, that, which is here left indefinite, we ſuppoſe, we can definitely apply, to a King (in whoſe preſence we ſtand) To whom, the ſame ſtrength, and the ſame goodneſſe, and of the ſame LORD, have ſhewed forth themſelves, in ſaving him, ſaving both his Crowne and life, no leſſe than Davids. 2 Cor. 11. 10.

This, comes well to the Text. But what doth this concerne us now, more than any other time? Yes; for, here comes the day, and claimes a propertie, in it: How that? Remember ye, how the Apoſtle (when he had cited the place out of Eſay, I have heard thee, in an accepted time: in the day of ſalvation, have I helped thee) Behold, (ſaith he) now is the accepted time: Behold, this is the day of ſalvation. The ſame (for all the world) ſaith this day: The King ſhall be glad of thy ſalvation: Ecce hodie, dies ſalutis hujus. Behold, this is the Day of that ſalvation. For, ſo it is, indeed. The very ſalvation-day, it ſelfe (this.) 2 Cor. 6. 2. Eſay 49. 8.

For, this day, was his life ſought, and he ſet on, to have beene ſhamefully made away: And, this very day, ſaved he was; and in virtute, mightily ſaved; and in virtute Dei, by the mightie hand and helpe, even of GOD Himſelfe.

Since then, this bleſſing fell upon this day, If we will take a time (And a time we will take to rejoyce and to give GOD thankes for it) that, which the day pleads for, is moſt reaſonable; that you will take this day, rather than another: For, if hodie, dies ſalutis; If, to day, the day of ſalvation; No reaſon in the world, but to day the day of rejoycing for it.

But I will forbeare, to take any notice, or to mention any but David, at the firſt going over: The Text (that) requireth a ſurvey of courſe (firſt) and ſhall have it: But then, if the Day ſhall pray a review after, I ſee not how in right, we can deny it.

Be theſe then the two parts: The Survey, and the Review. And in either of theſe two principall points preſent themſelves. The Diviſion. I. II.

1. The joy, 2. and the ground or cauſes of it. The joy, in the front of the Text; And the cauſes, in the ſequele of it.

The cauſes are, as the number of the verſes; foure: 1 The ſaving of the King, by the ſtrength of God. 2 The ſatisfying; yea, the preventing his deſire, by the goodneſſe of GOD. 3 The ſetting on his crowne, by the hand of God, Tu poſuiſti. 4 The prolonging his life, by the gift of GOD. Theſe foure.

Now, every of theſe (the joy and the cauſes, and indeed the whole Text) ſeemes to ſtand upon Triplicities. In the laſt verſe of the Pſalme, GOD is ſaid to exalt His ſtrength. His ſtrength in exaltation, makes the joy, in triplicitie.

The triplicitie of joy (firſt.) The King 1 ſhall rejoyce, 2 ſhall be glad, 3 exceeding glad ſhall he be. 1 Lætabitur; 2 exultabit, 3 vehementer.

The like, in all the cauſes: Why glad? (firſt) for, the King 1 was ſaved, 2 ſaved by GOD, 3 by thy ſtrength (O LORD.) 1 Salute, 2 virtute, and 3 Tuâ Domine.

Vpon this, of ſtrength; followeth a new triplicitie of goodneſſe. Therein, 1 the deſire of his heart, 2 the requeſt of his lips: And beſides them, 3 the bleſſings of goodneſſe: Of theſe three, the firſt, granted; the ſecond, not denied; and prevented; with the third:

Of 1 which bleſsings, there are two ſet downe in particular: 1 His crowne: and 2 His life.

His crowne: and the triplicitie of it. 1 Corona, 2 Coronatio, and 3 Coronans: the 1 Crowne, 2 the Coronation, or ſetting it on by another: 3 And that, other, GOD: None, but He, Tu poſuiſti.

His life: and there another (the laſt) triplicitie. 1 Life, 2 long life, and 3 life in ſeculum, & in ſeculum ſeculi. Long life in this world, life for ever in the world to come.

And for this ſtrength, in thus ſaving; and this goodneſſe, in thus ſatisfying his deſire, in the ſafetie both of His crowne, and His life; is all this lætabitur, and exultabit: All this joy and jubilee of the Text.

This Survey done, the day will further pray a Review: truſting, it will fall out (all this) to prove the caſe of the day, juſt. That all theſe cauſes, will coincidere into it. 1 Salutem miſit, 2 Deſiderium conceſſit, 3 Coronam poſuit, and 4 Vitam dedit: And if theſe; then the joy too (without faile.)

And that, two wayes: Vpon two powers, that be in the word (ſhall.) 1 Shall, the Bond, de præſenti: binding us, to accommodate our ſelves, to the preſent occaſion: to this joyfull ſeaſon of GODS ſending: 2 And then (ſhall) the Tenſe, which is not the preſent, but the future: And ſo (ſhall) not onely, for this preſent day; but ſhall, ſtill; ſtill ſhall, for many dayes, of many Auguſts, in many yeares more; the ſame lætabitur, the ſame exultabit, ſtill. So we all wiſh, it may.

I.
The ſurvey.

Domine lætabitur. We begin with joy. Auſpicatum principium, a faire front (onward) a luckie beginning.

I
The Joy.

In joy: and that not ſingle, but three in one, a triplicitie of it. We will but touch at it, now: We ſhall come to it againe, yer we end. Begin, and end, with joy, to day: So may we begin, and ſo end ever.

In this triplicitie, two words there be, to expreſſe this joy: 1 lætabitur, and 2 exultabit: and one to give it the ſize, or meaſure, 3 vehementer.

1. Lætabitur. שמחה

The two former (1 lætabitur, and 2 exultabit) are as it were the body and ſoule of joy. The firſt (lætabitur) the ſoule. For, the nature of that word, and the uſe, noteth joy, within: joy of the boſome (ſay the Heathen;) joy of the Spirit (the Scripture) And my Spirit hath rejoyced. There, in the Spirit, is the fountaine of true joy. If there it be not, how well ſoever the countenance counterfeit it, it is but counterfeit, for all that. And no joy right, if we cannot ſay the two firſt words [Domine lætabitur] to GOD; and we cannot ſay them, to Him, if there it be not, within.

Luk. 1. 47.

2. Exultabit.

There then, to begin: but not there to end. Lætabitur is not all, Exultabit is called for too: Which is nothing but an out-let or overflowing of the inward joy, into the outward man; of the heart into the fleſh: My heart and my fleſh, ſhall rejoyce. Not one, without the other. Joy, to be ſeene and read in the fore-head (the joy of the countenance.) To ſound forth, and be heard, from the lips (the voice of joy and gladneſſe.) This, doth exultabit adde. There, is the body and ſoule of joy, now.

Pſal. 84. 2.
Verſe 6.
Iſaſ. 118. 15.

3. Vehementer. מה מאד

But it is not every meane degree, will content in theſe. Not any [glad] but exceeding glad. The Hebrew is, O quam! O LORD, how wonderfull is thy name! ſaith the VIII. Pſalme, ver. I. So here: O LORD, how joyfull and glad ſhall he be! The meaning is; ſo very glad, as he cannot well tell, how to expreſſe it. Elſe, asking the queſtion, why doth he not anſwer it? But that, hee cannot. But that he hath never a Tam, for this quàm: But is even faine to leave it, to be conceived, by us. So doe we; But σφοδρὰ vehementer, exceeding it muſt be. So ſay the tranſlations, all.

Thus

Thus have you a briefe of the triplicitie of joy. 1 Ioy within, 2 Iubilee without, 3 both menſurâ ſupereffluente.

And (which is ſomewhat ſtrange) theſe, not onely permitted, but even injoyned; given in charge: ſhall rejoyce, ſhall be glad; a neceſſitie laid on him: but, a bleſſed neceſſitie, to be bound to that, our nature and we (in all our libertie) ſo well love, and like of. Luk. 6.38.

2 The cauſes of it.

And now, to the cauſes. For, exceeding Ioy, without a cauſe ſomewhat ſuitable, is but exceeding folly; but as the crackling of thornes under a pot: great noiſe, but no great cauſe (for, all is but a whin-buſh.) If there be an exceeding in the Ioy, there would be an exalting in the ſtrength: If exceſſe in that, no defect in the ground. We take meaſure ſtill, of one of theſe by the other. Eccleſ. 7.8.

Have we then a good ground? That have we: foure (for failing) every of them ſuitable, in each reſpect. For, a triplicitie in either of them.

The cauſe. 1 Salvation, or being ſaved, Salus.

The ground of all (the firſt) is, Salvation or being ſaved: and that, is ground ſufficient. For who doth not rejoyce, is not glad, exceeding glad, that is ſo, ſaved? But ſpecially (which was Davids caſe here) ſaved, from a ſudden and a ſecret miſchiefe, imagined againſt him. There is no joy (when all is done) to the joy of one, ſo ſaved. Be it, who it will; even unus de minimis hiis: any, any one of the meaneſt.

Salus Regia.

But, the perſon addes a great weight to the joy; that, it is Rex in ſalute: Salus Regia, a Salvation royall; for the ſaving of a King. For He (by the Scriptures owne valuation) is ſet at ten thouſand. There be ten thouſand Salvations in one, when a King is ſaved. That, as Rex is the perſon, above all: So Salus Regis, is the Soveraigne Salvation, of all. 2 Sam. 18.3.

2 Saving by ſtrength.

Saved, then. And ſecondly how? In virtute: Saved by ſtrength. For, though it be good being ſaved, by what meanes we can; Yet, if we might be at our choice, we had rather have it, by meanes of ſtrength; rather ſo, than by craft, or by running away. For, that is not in virtute. Salus in virtute, is ever, the beſt ſaving. And a King (if he have his right) would be ſaved, no other way: Not by ſlight, or by flight; but in virtute, Rex.

So have you two, Virtus and Salus, ſtrength and ſalvation: Note them well: for not virtus without ſalus; nor ſalus without virtus, neither without other is full: nor both, without Tua Domine.

Virtus in ſalute.

In virtute, is well: ſo it have in ſalute after it. For, no not in ſtrength is there matter of joy (every way conſidered.) No, not in GODS ſtrength: No joy in virtute Dei, if it have not an in ſalute, behind it. They, in the latter part of the Pſalme found GODS ſtrength, but ſmally to their joy. This makes it up: that it is not onely, virtus, ſtrength: but virtus ad ſalutem, ſtrength to ſave. Strength, not, as to the Kings enemies, to ſmite them downe, and plague them: But, ſtrength, as to David himſelfe, to ſave and deliver him. Strength is indifferent, to both: but in ſalute following it, determines it, to the joyfull ſide. Verſ. 8. Pſal. 89.23.

Salus in virtute.

Now then, turne it the other way. For, as in virtute, if it end with in ſalute, is juſt cauſe of joy: So (vice versâ) in ſalute, if it goe with an in virtute, makes the joy yet more joyfull. I meane, that as it is virtus in ſalute, ſtrength to ſave, might to deliver; So, it is ſalus in virtute, a ſtrong ſalvation, a mightie deliverance. No petie, common one; but a ſtrong, and mightie one. This reciprocation ſets it higher yet: that, not onely ſtrength ſet forth; but ſtrength to ſave, protect, and preſerve: Nor that neither, quovis modo; but mightily to ſave, ſtrongly to protect, and ſtrangely to preſerve: So as the Salvation may juſtly be ſaid, Tua Domine, GODS owne ſaving. Pſal. 68.28.

3 By GODS ſtrength, Tua Domine.

For, yet we are not, where we would be. It is much to the matter of joy, whoſe the ſtrength is, from whom the ſalvation, who the partie. For, not undecunque, or abs quovis, yeelds full joy: not by every one (hand over head.) The better the partie per quem, the more the joy ſtill. The Salvation is made the more precious, by the Author of it. That as it is ſalus Regia, on his part that receives it: So it is ſalus Divina, on His that gives it, that is, Tua Domine.

But to this [Domine] there belongs two Tua's. To virtute and ſalute, either of them, a Tua; virtute Tuâ and Salute Tuâ: and this doubling of the point, we ſhall finde, concernes the joy much.

1 Virtute Tua, not aliena. Ionas 4. 10. For, that it may not be, as Ionas's joy in his Gourd, up in one night, downe in another (that is) vaniſhing and unſure; but ſound and permanent; it is beſt, our Hoſannah be in the Higheſt: beſt, that the Hypoſtaſis or ſubſtance of this our rejoycing, be in the Pſal.20.7,8. ſtrength of the LORD. Not in chariots and horſes; we ſee what became of them (the Pſalme before:) Hii ceciderunt, Downe they went, and downe went their joy with them. That, was in virtute alienâ.

Nor Sua. * Pſal.44 6. 2 Sam. 24. 10. Nor, in * his owne bow, or ſword, or number of his People (that, proved not well neither;) that, was in virtute ſuâ: In virtute Tuâ (we ſhall finde) is the ſafer.

Ionas 4. 7. Not, but that, in theſe humane ſtrengths, we may rejoyce in ſome ſort, with ſome caution: but that, they be all ſubject to the worme, Ionas's Gourd was (mortall and mutable all;) not ſo ſoone had, but as ſoone loſt, and ſooner, a great deale: there is no hold of them, quotidiè diffluunt, we finde it, we feele it, daily.

Pſal.36.7. Therefore, well-fare in virtute Domini, the might of the Almightie. In it, there is the ſound joy. O, it is good rejoycing in the ſtrength of the arme, that ſhall never wither, or wax weake: and in the ſhadow of thoſe wings, that ſhall never caſt their feathers: In Him, that is not there yeſterday, and here to day; but the ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever. Heb.13.8. For, as he is, ſo ſhall the joy be. In virtute Tuâ, then: And Salute Tuâ too.

2 Salute Tua. Nay, virtus Tua, but ſalus ſua; the power, that may be GODS; but the ſalvation, that is the Kings (one would thinke.) And, ſo it is: But he rejoyces not, in it, as it is ſalus ſua (at leaſt, not ſo much) as, that it is ſalus Tua, GODS; of and from GOD, who wrought it, and brought it to paſſe. Nay even in ſalute Tua (it ſelfe;) not ſo much in ſalute, as in Tuâ; in the gift, as in the partie, that gave it. So doth no worldly man: he goes no further, than in ſalute (that he hath it, that ſafe he is;) cares for no more; for no Tuâ, he. But Davids joy, and the joy of the Godly, is not ſo much, Pſal.68.28. that he is ſaved, or had ſtrength ſo to be; as, that it was GOD, ſent forth His ſtrength, ſo to ſave him. Luke 1.47. Nay, nothing ſo much in Salute, as in Tuâ; in the ſalvation, as in GOD his SAVIOVR.

And, why ſo joyfull, for this Tua Domine, more than the reſt? I ſhall tell you, why: For, this is the very exaltation, the higheſt point, of the whole triplicitie.

There was none of the Emperours (upon ſuch an eſcape as this) but he tooke to himſelfe preſently, as an high honour, the Title of Θεοφύλακτος, Preſerved by GOD; and uſed it ever after, as an addition to his Style, as glorious, as Alamannicus or Parthicus, or any Title of them all.

A King thus ſaved by GOD, is more, than a King: (I meane) more than another King, not ſo reſpected, by GOD. More, I ſay, than another: 1. More to be ſet by, in the ſight of His owne people: tanquam ſpeculum propitii Numinis, as a mirrour of GODS favour; when they ſee him, thus taken into GODS ſpeciall protection. Verſe 5. The very next words are, His honour, is great, in this ſalvation.

Pſal.20.8. 2. As, of his owne people: So more eſteemed of his neighbours; when they ſee, their owne, thruſt in with knives, and ſo caſt downe and fall; but him, after hee was caſt downe, to riſe, and ſtand upright: Hii ceciderunt, helpes it much.

3. And laſtly, more feared of his enemies; when they ſee, the eye of GODS providence, the ſhadow of His wings, the ſtrength of His arme, ſtill over him; ſtill, ſet to ſave him, and doe him good; they will be afraid to plot ought againſt him, when they ſee, it is in vaine, GOD ſtill defeats them and upholds him ſtill: when they ſee, Tua Domine in great letters, upon him.

And now, are we come, to the Spring-head, to caput lætitiæ; Tua, Tua, Domine. And when we have brought our joy up thither; up, to Him: we turne it looſe, let it exceed then: No where elſe; but, in Him, let it. If it be gaudete in Domino, Nay then, then, Iterum dico gaudete (ſaith the Apoſtle) Then, to it, againe and againe; double it and treble it, and ſpare not. Good leave have you. Phil.4.4.

Now then: for this ſalus Regia and ſalus Divina (both) joyne the triplicities; ſee, if they ſuit not, this and the firſt (of joy.) In virtute, Gods ſtrength, the very promiſe, and hope of it, yeelds joy within; there is lætabitur. But, made apparent in ſalute, is further matter of exultabit (without.) But, Tua, Tua, Domine, to that, belongs ô quam! there is, his place: O, how greatly, ſhall David rejoyce within, triumph without, in the Lord; being ſaved by Him, ſo mightily, and ſo mervellouſly ſaved by Him! Theſe two triplicities, are in the firſt verſe (both.)

There is new joy, in the ſecond verſe, upon a new ground (the goodneſſe of God.) And ſtrength, and goodneſſe doe well together; neither without other ſaveth. Strength alone, it could well; but will not, till goodneſſe come to it. Both, did it, here: For, in this verſe, ſaved by ſtrength: and in the ſeventh verſe, In the mercie of the moſt High he did not miſcarrie. By ſtrength; that, by no arme of fleſh: By mercie; that, by no merit of his owne. The II. cauſe. In ſatisfying the deſire. 1 Of his heart. 2 Of his lips.

But, His goodneſſe is over all His workes, over ſtrength and all. For, it ſheweth it ſelfe, not in ſaving onely (which is a matter of neceſsity;) but over and beſides that, in ſatisfying his deſires (and that is matter of meere bounty.) Pſal.145.9.

And indeed, no way doth His goodneſſe ſo ſhew it ſelfe, as in ſending us our deſires. Nor nothing, is ſo properly, the name of joy, as the deſire ſent. The denying of our deſire; Nay, the but delaying it, is an abatement to our joy: But the deſire accompliſhed, that, is the Tree of life (ſaith Salomon:) And the Tree of life, was in the midſt of the Garden; the very center of Paradiſe, and all the joyes there. The ſatisfying his deſire. Pro.13.12. Gen.2.9.

To ſatisfie, is one thing: and to ſatisfie by prevention, another. Betweene them two, they make up a new triplicitie. For the former, of ſatisfying the deſire, is ſet downe; either, as conceived in the heart (Deſiderium cordis;) or, as expreſſed with the lips (Prolatio labiorum.) It is much, to ſatisfie theſe two; His goodneſſe, gives ſatisfaction both to the one, and to the other: ſatisfaction, to the heart, by granting the deſire; ſatisfaction, to the lips, by not denying the requeſt. And upon theſe two (in the verſe) there is a Sela. For theſe two (one would thinke) were able to content any.

But, this Sela, is no Sela to GOD. He hath a Sela, or an Ela above this Sela. He hath, not onely a ſatisfying, but a ſatisfying by prevention: not expecting either, but preventing both: granting that, which neither the lips ever mentioned, nor the heart once imagined: never came out of the mouth, nay, never came into the minde. And this, is the præveniſti of His goodneſſe.

As for the heart and the lips, we will not be curious, nor ſtand ſcanning their order, which ſhould ſtand firſt, the heart, or the lips. I know, though the tongue be the pen of never ſo readie a writer, the heart can endite faſter, by much. But what skills it which is firſt? Both together (I am ſure) can deſire more, than either alone; and He will ſatisfie them both. Pſal.45.1.

Satisfie the lips: Petite & dabitur, Speake and ſpeed. Satisfie the heart: Ave & habe, wiſh and have. Not onely, open thy mouth: but enlarge thy heart, never ſo wide, and He will fill it. This, is able, to ſatisfie David (I thinke) and to make him ſing Sela, which is their διαψαλμα. Mat.7.7. Pſal.81.10.

This, may ſatisfie David. But this ſatisfies not God, in His goodneſſe to David: No ſatis, with Him, but ſatis ſuperque. And indeed, both theſe (make the beſt of them you can) are ſtill, but a poſt-veniſti, the heart and the lips goe before, and Gods goodneſſe comes after. Nay, till His goodneſſe get before; till it be, a præveniſti; it ſatisfies Him not. And, that is; not when He ſtaies for us, till we come to Him with our petitions; Nor till He meet us; He with his mercie, us with our prayers: But, when He prevents us, before we ſtirre a foot: and heares us, not when, but antequàm, before we requeſt; and anſwers us, not while, but yer even we deſire: opening, ſending 3 In preventing both, with His goodneſſe. Eſay 30.18. Eſay 65.24. Matt.7.7.

ding and giving; before we ſeeke, knocke, or aske: that (lo) is the præveniſti; that, the bleſſing of goodneſſe indeed.

The bleſſing of goodneſſe. The bleſſing of goodneſſe: And as to ſatiſfie, is one thing (quovis modo;) To doe it by prevention, another: So, to prevent with goodneſſe, is one; and with the bleſſing of goodneſſe, another. For, that is (as the fat of the ſacrifice) the beſt, the moſt chiefe, the moſt choice, the moſt bleſſed part of it; bleſſed it ſelfe, and making David bleſſed, to whom He vouchſafes it.

Not, but that the other (the granting, the not denying) are good bleſſings, and very good: but in them, though there be the goodneſſe of GOD, yet not it alone; there is ſomewhat of David too, his devotion (at leaſt) in making his requeſt. But in this, GODS goodneſſe, is all alone; David doth nothing, neither ſpeake, nor thinke. That he never asked, never thought to aske, before any, without any asking, he is prevented with, by this bleſſed goodneſſe: and without any cauſe elſe. The Fathers read it, benedictio dulcedinis, and well: For, while we ſtand waiting for the poſtveniſti, our eyes faile many times, our heart pants, we flote betweene hope and feare: And this reliſhes not well with us, it is a little bitter. In præveniſti there is none of theſe. And the cutting off of theſe, makes it benedictio dulcedinis indeed, as having none of that unpleaſant mixture with it. This is benedicta bonitas.

But (all this while) we ſee not, what need of this preventing? It is more than needs, ſure. The other two, the not denying, but granting, might ſerve our turnes well enough. Yes, there is more than need of it, in the matter of ſaving, many times. The danger comes upon us, and ſurprizes us ſo, of a ſudden, as we have no time, to gather our ſelves together; the heart no ſpace to thinke, nor the lips leaſure, to frame a requeſt. Both faile us.

And this holds chiefly, in ſecret plots and practices. No man ſuſpects; or miſdoubts them: No man prepares for them: Vnawares on a ſudden, they breake out, and even oppreſſe us, ſo as they prevent lips and heart, and all. Such was the danger, in the Pſalme: Such, the danger of the day. In theſe, if it ſhould be put to a poſtveniſti, we were gone. A prevention muſt be. In theſe preventing dangers then, is the time; there, is the place, of this preventing goodneſſe of God. Who ſeeing, what David would doe, if he were not taken ſhort: ſupplieth (of His bleſſed goodneſſe) that defect, and before either of both, releeves and ſave him. This is the bleſſed goodneſſe, and Bleſſed be GOD for this goodneſſe, above all: We all at ſometimes or other, fare the better for it.

Will ye ſee now, how theſe three come againe exactly to that of the joy? The inward deſire of the heart, for that granted; lætabitur, the inward joy of the heart: The outward requeſt of the lips, for that not denied; exultabit, the outward voice of gladneſſe. But thou haſt prevented them both (both mentall and vocall petitions) without ſuit at all: O how glad ſhall David be, for the other twaine, but for this third eſpecially! For, this is the goodneſſe, ô quàm! This exceeds all.

The ſpecialities of that goodneſſe. 1 In his crowne 2 In his life.

Well: but all this while, we walke but in generalities: might we ſee ſome ſpecialitie of this bleſſing of goodneſſe thus preventing him? Yes, we may. There follow more; but here in the Text, are two particulars, both matter of GODS prevention, both matter of his deſire. For, what would a King deſire to have ſaved, or wherein to be bleſſed, but in 1 his crowne, and 2 his life? And here, they be both. And in either of both, a ſeverall ſort of preventing: Granted, and not asked at all (as in his crowne:) more granted, than asked (as in his life.)

1 His crowne firſt.

But firſt: will ye marke, that here, Corona prævenit vitam, the Crowne takes the place of his life, hath the precedence of it: that his deſire, is carried ſtraight, to his Crowne firſt, before to his life, as to the bleſſing (of the twaine) more to be deſired. Thus we finde them: and we may not ſtirre them, they are of the Holy Ghoſts owne marſhalling. Thus ſets He them downe, as if His will were, they ſhould ſo be apprized: the Crowne before life.

Marke well: Poſuit coronam, and then vitam petiit: with his crowne on; ſo, he deſires life. But Coronam depoſuit, take away his crowne, and then vitam non petiit, he will not aske life; he will not thinke it worth the asking. If he would aske it, it would not be given him: He, that takes away his crowne, will have his life not long after. Fond to imagine otherwiſe: and it is the pooreſt comfort and conceipt, that ever was; to tell them, their crowne they muſt part with, but be of good cheere, their lives ſhall be ſaved, that they ſhall. No: vivis & regnas, take regnas and take vivis too; both, or neither here.

This is the Crowne. And this crowne in David was a prævenisti, cleere: a poſuit without any petiit. For when he followed * his ewes great with yong, little dreamt he of any crowne. It never came into his lips, it never entered into his heart; his ſoule (as himſelfe ſaith) was weaned from any ſuch matters, from ſo much as once phancying them: The crowne was in him a meere prevention. 2 That crowne a prævenisti in David. * Pſal 78.71. Pſal.131.2.

Nay, two crownes (we reade) he came to. Firſt Sauls crowne; the Amalekite brought him that, and his bracelets. To ſhew, it was a prevenisti meerely: Not ſo much as an Iſraelite, brought it. That was ſet on, firſt. Some thirtie yeares after, we finde he came to another crowne; the King of Ammons crowne, at the winning of Rabba: a more maſsie crowne, finer gold, richer ſtones in it, than his firſt. That was ſet on too. This here in the Verſe, was the ſecond (ſay all the Interpreters:) and this, a prævenisti likewiſe. If you will but remember what caſe he ſtood in, to Godward, at the comming of this ſecond crowne (it was preſently upon the matter of Vrias and Bathſabe) you will ſay, he was rather in caſe of Miſerere mei Deus, than of ought elſe: that God crowned him then, in mercie and loving kindneſſe. At this ſecond crowne, it was veniam petiit, and nothing elſe. And his ſecond crowne. 2 Sam.1.10. 2 Sam.12-30. Pſal.51.1. Pſal.103.4

And at his firſt crowne, it was vitam petiit, and nothing elſe. All he askt then, was his life; it followes ſtraight next verſe. And ſure, time was, in the daies of his Predeceſſor; when, partly by Sauls owne jealouſie; but much more, by the wicked ſuggeſtions of Doeg, and ſuch like, he needed to aske it. There was often (to uſe his owne words) but a ſtep, betweene him and death. He asked life, then; and ſo that might have beene aſſured him, would have ſtrained his prayer no further. 1 Sam.20.3.

We muſt thinke, when he was couped up, one while in ſuch a Cave; another in ſuch a Wood; put to flye for his life, to Moab, to Gath (I wote not whither:) in danger ſtill to be made away, by one treacherie or another: when, he received every houre the ſentence of death, in himſelfe; all his minde ran upon vitam petiit then: then, this crowne, or the gold of it, or the fineneſſe of the allay, never troubled his head, ye may be ſure: life he asked then, and more he asked not, and well had beene him, if he might have had but ſecuritie of that; I ſay, ſecuritie of his life, and let the crowne goe. 2 Cor.1.9.

Behold then, the bleſſed goodneſſe of GOD, that gave him both. Both, that he asked, life (we come to it, by and by) and the crowne, and another crowne too beſides, that he asked not. Satisfied him, in that: prevented him, in this: Nay, prevented him, in both; as ye ſhall ſee ſtraight. 3 The crowne ſet on by God.

But, yer I paſſe to that: here is a point or two about crownes, I thinke good not to paſſe. 1 The firſt is, againſt uſurpers of the crowne, Nemine ponente, niſi ſe ipſo; God not ſetting it on, none ſetting it on, but themſelves: That, not ipſe ſibi, ſed Deus ipſi; Not ipſe poſuit ſuper caput ſuum, but Deus ſuper caput ipſius. 2 The ſecond, is againſt Vſurpers of a power, to take off that, they never ſet on (deponendi, quod non poſuit) and thereby intruding upon, Tu poſuiſti.

1. Firſt (the crowne) he raught not at it, caught it not, and clapt it on himſelfe: it was brought him, he came orderly to it; it was ſet on, not by himſelfe, but by another. And, that other, was the right Setter, Tu poſuiſti, GOD. Who will never ſet it on a wrong; never, but on the right head, if it be of His ſetting: and if it be not of His ſetting, it will never proſper, never flouriſh (be ſure.) Tua Domine, here too: the crowne is in GODS hand, ſaith Eſay; and His hand ſets it on Davids, ſets it on all their heads, that lawfully weare it. It made the Emperours to ſtampe their coyne, with an hand comming out of the clouds, holding a crowne and putting it on their The impoſing Gods onely. Eſay 62.3.

their heads: And accordingly, to ſtile themſelves, Θεοστεφεῖς, à Deo coronatos, crowned by God: as well they might (this, Tu poſuiſti, here, is their warrant.)

And the depoſing.

2. Secondly, againſt uſurping of a power, to depoſe. God alone, is in the Poſuiſti, at the ſetting it on. None but He, there: God hath ſet it on. Now what God hath ſet on, let not any preſume, to take off. Not any, but he that ſet it on. What, by Him alone done, by him alone, to be undone. The law is; Ad quem inſtitutio, &c. To whom the Inſtitution belongs, to Him and none other the deſtitution. To whom the impoſing, to Him and none other, the depoſing: none to interpoſe himſelfe in that buſineſſe, but He.

And now, there comes a Tu interpoſuiſti; and He, will have to doe with that, this Tu poſuiſti, put on. Hath not poteſtatem ponendi (he confeſſes, and all the world knowes) and yet would have poteſtatem tollendi, to take up that, he layd not downe. But, if no Ponent, no Deponent. If none but God, at the Poſuiſti, at the ſetting it on; none, but He then, at the depoſuiſti, at the taking it off. The Crowne, the Coronation, the Coronant (all three) bleſſings of His goodneſſe: but the laſt, the chiefeſt (the Tua Domine and à Te) the Tenure of it of Him, and Him onely.

Now then, to joyne theſe three, to the firſt three. Allow the crowne a lætabitur, and to the Coronation, or ſetting it on, an exultabit: but ô quam! is for Tu poſuiſti (the Coronant.) To whom, they owe it; of whom, they hold it, without any Tu interpoſuiſti, at all: And now, to his life.

Gods goodneſſe in granting him: 1 Life.

For, what is coronam poſuit, without vitam dedit; a crowne, without life to weare it? Here is that then: and that, in a new triplicitie, 1 life it ſelfe, 2 a long life, and 3 a life for ever.

Vitam dedit, But Vitam petiit firſt.

Vitam petiit. It is not, his firſt vitam petiit, this (we ſpake of even now, in Sauls time:) it was, after his ſecond crowne was ſet on; as is evident, by thus ſtanding, after it. And this vitam petiit, bodes no good matter. For by petiit, it ſhould ſeeme (by all likelyhoods) he was in caſe, to aske it, and ſo in hazard to loſe it; it, and crowne, and all (a worſe matter, than any yet.) It was not for nothing (the laſt verſe, before this Text) they crie, O Lord ſave the King; by like, the King was in ſome danger, of periſhing. And ſo he was, as appeareth by the Sequele of the Pſalme, and that, by a Mezimma, a ſecret miſchiefe, imagined againſt him: were it, that of Abſalom, or ſome other like exigent. But hard beſtead he was, when it touched his life.

Verſe 11. מומה

Pſal. 119.175. 2 Sam. 26. 21.

In that ſtraight, here was the ſumme of the deſire of his heart, of the requeſt of his lips: O let my ſoule live, O let the ſoule of thy ſervant, be precious in thy ſight.

And now, upon this Petiit, as upon a ground, followes ſtraight vitam dedit. And herein, firſt appeared the goodneſſe of God, in granting his deſire, in not denying his requeſt: Vitam petiit, and Vitam dedit; life he asked, and life he had: No ſooner asked, but obtained. This was ſatisfying.

2 A long life.

But then, he ſtayed not there; but prevented him further: gave it him, with advantage, with that he asked not. Life He gave him, So farre his petition, ſo farre no prevention: but He gave him, long, too; long was not in the petition, and ſo a meere prevention (the ſecond kinde of preventing, that before we ſpake of.) Life, was in the requeſt, long was not; He gave it him, with long too, Dies ſuper dies Regis adjiciendo, Adding daies to the Kings daies, till it was length of daies (that is) a long life, and a long reigne both. Which very point of (long) makes, that this Text will not fall in fit with every King, unleſſe he have lived and reigned, as long (Davids time, that is fortie yeares:) for, ſo he muſt, yer dediſti longam, can be ſaid or ſung of him.

Pſal. 61.6.

3 A like for ever.

But yet, here he ſtayes not, neither: but heapes upon him more ſtill, and goes on to vitam in ſeculum ſeculi. For (to ſay truth) what is long life, yea, never ſo long, if it be not Saint Hieroms long, Nihil longum quod finem habet. If ye ſpeake of long, that is truly long, that ſhall laſt for ever, that never ſhall have end. Our long, is but a ſhort long; which goes, but by compariſon, of a ſhorter. Elſe, what is it, to live out the full compaſſe of mans uttermoſt age, if he live not ſo, in this life, as after this, he may live for ever? The meaning is: what is long life, without it be, be, a religious life; without it bee, with the true feare and worſhip of GOD: which only, hath the promiſe of in ſæculum ſæculi: without which, a ſhort life is better than a long life; and no life at all (but an untimely death) better than both. Otherwiſe, the Heathen have hit upon coronam poſuit, and vitam dedit, yea, and longam too: they be but Lætitiæ Gentium theſe. But the life for ever, that is a Non omnibus datum; they among the Heathen never had it: that, is lætificans Davidis; that, the bleſſing of bleſſings; the tranſcendent bleſſing of all, to have the end of this life the beginning of another life, that never ſhall have end: and that by the true ſervice of GOD, in His Sanctuarie. Mat. 19.12.

Reckon this then, inſtar omnium, even worth all, and the very conſummatum eſt, the higheſt perfection, GOD can beſtow on David, That God gave him, to bring back the Arke, to pitch a Tabernacle for it, to lay up and leave a great maſſe of treaſure for the building it a Temple, himſelfe devoutly to worſhip, and to make lawes and ſet orders for a more ſolemne and ſeemely worſhip of God, than he found: He ſaid himſelfe, this was the joyfulleſt day, hee ſaw in all his life; that one day worth a thouſand. And for this his care of the Sanctuarie, came this help to him, out of the Sanctuarie (ſee the ſecond Verſe of the Pſalme before) that ſaved him, ſaved him both his crowne and life: and that after received him to everlaſting Tabernacles, to a crowne and life, that ſhall endure for ever. And further than this, we cannot goe. 1 Chron. 13. 15. 28. 24. 25. 26. Pſal. 84. 10. Luke 16.9.

So have we the particular of that was ſued for and granted: and of that was granted and not ſued for, by the ſpeciall priviledge of Gods preventing goodneſſe. Himſelfe ſaved, his deſire ſatisfied, his crowne faſt, his life aſſured, here and for ever.

And judge now, whether David had good cauſe to rejoyce or not. And whether, we may not here againe (for a farewell) once more, over with our firſt triplicitie of joy againe. Lætabitur to go to vitam (if you will;) and (if need be) exultabit to longam: But ô quàm, to be reſerved, for in ſæculum ſæculi. There it is in kind. So it was never, before. There it is ô quàm! indeed. For there, is a crowne, life, and joy that exceed all that we can deſire; and there he ſhall receive them, and ſay O quàm! indeed.

II.

And what ſhall we ſay now of all this? Truly no more, than muſt needs be ſaid; No more, than the Text it ſelfe drawes from us. Here is, a faire Major (layed forth to our hands.) A King, that hath in this manner, found the ſtrength of GOD, ſhew forth it ſelfe in his ſaving: and felt the goodneſſe of GOD, in thus preventing his deſires, touching both his crowne and his life: Any ſuch King may (for he hath good cauſe;) Nay ſhall and ought (for he is bound) to be exceeding, both joyfull and glad. The HOLY GHOST gives His word; ſayes, he ſhall ſo be.

The Review or Application to His Majeſtie.

If this be King David, He: If any other, He too. King David's we have ſurveyed (as the time would give us leave.) Shall we now pray a Review, to ſee, if any other may be found beſides, as deepe in the cauſes, as he. For, if as deepe in the cauſes, as deepe in the effect: If the ſame in virtute, and the ſame in ſalute, the ſame lætabitur (all will grant.)

And here now, chooſe, whether we will refraine our lips and keepe backe GOD'S mercy and truth from the great Congregation: If we would ſo, and hold our peace, the day, even this fifth of Auguſt would not: but would (as the Pſalme ſaith) eructare verbum, breake forth and tell us, that ſuch a King there is, and who it is. That if there be, or ever there were a Prince upon Earth, that found and felt this virtutem and ſalutem Dei, the mighty hand and helpe of GOD, in ſaving him, ſaving him miraculouſly; Verily, this day ſaith (not as Nathan, Tu es homo, but) Tu es Rex, You are that King, certainly; even in all theſe foure, in the Text, from point to point. Pſal. 40.9, 10. Pſal. 19.3. 2 Sam. 12.7.

I

For your ſaving firſt. This day, you were like to miſcarry: in danger to periſh, to loſe your life, and (that which to you is dearer than your life) your crowne, by ſome that hated you, and had contrived a Mezimma, a dangerous practice and plot, againſt them both. You, being then and there, over-ſet with ſtrength, came this virtus Dei: You then then being upon the point to periſh, came this ſalus Dei, and ſaved You ſtrangely. There is the firſt verſe.

In his ſaving. Verſ. 7. Verſ. 8. Verſ. 11.

2 In the ſatisfying his deſires Eſay 38.14. Mat.14.30.

For your deſire ſatisfying. In that diſtreſſe, I doubt not, but You might and did liſt up Your ſoule to GOD, in ſome ſhort Hoſanna; that of Hezekia, Domine vim patior, Lord I am oppreſſed, ſuccour thou me: Or, that of the Apoſtle ſinking, Helpe Lord, I periſh. If you did ſo, He granted your deſire, He denied not your requeſt: ſet a Sela then. But if being ſurpriſed with the extreme ſuddenneſſe of the aſſault, you did not, you could not doe it: Then did He more, even prevent you, with His goodneſſe: His ſweeteſt, His bleſſedeſt goodneſſe of all.

וזומים Ver.8. Ver.12. 9. 9.1 10.

And beſides your ſaving (which you had reaſon to deſire) that which you never would have deſired, I dare ſay; that gave He You too. Exalted His ſtrength, that You might, Your triplicitie. And thoſe ſame Zamzummims, the contrivers of the miſchiefe, His hand found them, and they found it, He ſet His ſtrings full againſt the face of them: deſtroyed them in His wrath, even in the very place: hath caſt them into the firy furnace (where even now they frie:) rooted out their fruit from the earth, and their name from among the children of men. All theſe, are word for word, every of them in the ſequele of this very Pſalme. All this, He did: You deſired not all this, not their eternall deſtruction (I know;) yet even with this alſo, He prevented You.

3 In the ſetting on his crowne.

For your crowne: this is ſure, if ever any were prevented with a crowne, he was, that was ſo, in his cradle; had it ſet on his head there: when he was not, as a weaned child (morally;) No, nor a weaned child (litterally;) but indeed a child, not yet weaned (not ſo much;) had neither lips to ſpeake, nor heart then, to deſire any ſuch thing: he was prevented ſure.

4 In giving and prolonging his life.

Further yet: if any found favour in ſetting on his crowne, yea crowne upon crowne: and ſaving upon ſaving: After his firſt crowne, in danger to miſcarry, and even throwen downe (as upon this day:) And after his ſecond, in danger againe to miſcarrie, and to be blowen up (upon another day) and ſaved in both: He was fairly bleſſed by His goodneſſe (ſay I.) Which very ſaving (upon the matter) was a ſecond crowning: even a new ſetting on that, that was ſliding off. So that, Tu poſuiſti the ſecond time, may truly be affirmed of this day.

And, what ſhould I ſay? If any, that his crown ſaved, and his life ſaved (under one;) Saved and prolonged both; ſo that now theſe fifteene yeares together, you have held this day with joy: and (which is worth all the reſt) beſides length of this life, bleſſed with Gods holy truth, the pledge of everlaſting life, the beſt of his bleſſings: Such an one, this Text doth warrant us to ſay, hath cauſe; great cauſe, exceeding great cauſe his ſoule to magnifie the Lord, and his ſpirit to rejoyce in God his Saviour. Such an one, to performe all the three (here ſpecified:) ſo many triplicities of favour, would have more than a ſingle rejoycing.

Luc.1.46.

And ſhall not I adde this? As to rejoice in God, ſo to ſeeke and ſet himſelfe, to deviſe and doe ſomewhat, for which God may rejoice in him: Somewhat for the Sanctuarie; from thence came his helpe, and from no other place: Somewhat I ſay, that this joy may be mutuall, as of you in God, ſo of God in You againe.

Sure, there is a bond, an obligation to it, in Lætabitur; the King ſhall rejoyce, ſhall be glad, ſhall doe it, ſhall not be diſpenced with, not to doe it: Shall not pleaſe God, if he doe it not.

Our Duty.

But, where are we all this while? excluded from this rejoycing? The King ſhall (it is ſaid) what, and none but hee? None is mentioned, but he: Wee would not let him (I dare ſay) doe it alone; there be many thouſands of us, that would not ſtand by looking on, if we had any warrant to rejoyce too. Give me leave then, to looke out a warrant for us: we would be loth to ſit out, and to loſe our part in this Joy.

This

This Pſalme, and the Pſalme next before it, are two ſiſter-Pſalmes. That, a prayer for the Kings ſafety; the laſt words of it are, Lord ſave the King: Why, the King is ſaved, they have that they prayed for; and ſhall not then their Hoſanna reſolve into a Halleluja? Their carefull Hoſanna, into a joyfull Halleluja? Yes, and ſo it doth, in this. For, as the laſt words of that Pſalme are, Lord ſave the King: ſo the laſt of this, So ſhall we ſing; ſing for very joy of it.

They promiſed as much, there (in that Pſalme) to rejoyce at the V. verſe. We will rejoyce in Thy Salvation. Lætabitur Rex, here it is: Lætabimur nos, there. They promiſe it there: and they will be as good as their word; and ſo they are: For even in this Pſalme, Lætabitur Rex is the firſt verſe; Cantabimus nos, is the laſt: That, if he rejoyce, at the firſt: wee come in, at the laſt. If his at the beginning, ours at the end.

We have no part in David, is the voice of a rebell. All good ſubjects have a part, have an inheritance in him, or (as the new taken up terme is) a birthright in him; and in him, before his Law. 2 Sam. 20. 1. 1 Reg. 12. 16.

In the 2 Sam. 19. 43. They fall there to ſhare the King among them (the Tribes) and to reckon up, what part and portion, each hath in him. Have they a part and portion in him? Why then, in his griefe, and in his joy. And if they in theirs: wee, in ours. So that (to uſe the Apoſtles phraſe) If hee bee ſorry, who can make us glad? and if hee be glad (to uſe the Apoſtles phraſe againe) he may truly ſay (and ſo may every good King, of his people) This truſt have I in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all. Thus come we to have our part in his joy. And if (as it is well noted) Iuda is in David, the very name of the one (with a very ſmall tranſpoſing) in the others name: if Iuda, in David; then Iuda's joy, in Davids: That if it bee true, lætabitur David; it will alſo be, lætabitur Iuda, & exultabit Iſraël, Iuda will rejoyce, and Iſraël be right glad. Looke ye, there is now a warrant, there is Scripture for it. 2 Cor. 2. 21. 2 Cor. 2. 3. Pſal. 53. 6.

Now then, if we have Scripture for our rejoycing, let us doe it: and doe it thoroughly; even, by and through all this tripartite joy. 1

Begin with lætabitur: Rejoyce in the ſpirit within. A good ſigne we doe ſo; if we can but ſay the two firſt words here [Domine lætabitur] unto GOD. The whole Text, is a ſpeech directed to GOD: He, made witneſſe of our joy. Therefore ſee it be hearty and true: there is no halting with Him; ſee it bee ſo, or tell not Him, it is ſo: He will finde you ſtraight, and give you your portion with hypocrites, if you ſay to Him, Lord thou knoweſt thus I am, and yet thus you are not. Mat. 24. 51.

In very truth, the Pſalme ſeemes to be penned for the nonce, that no diſſembler might ſay it. He, to whom it is to be ſayd, is not man, but GOD: and He, can tell whether we ſpeake as we thinke, or not.

But all true hearts will ſay it, and ſay it with confidence, and what even to GOD Himſelfe, that knowes the ground of the heart: Lord, thou knoweſt, what is within me, thou knoweſt that I am truly joyfull, even there within. 2

There within, we muſt have it firſt: but there within, we muſt not keepe it; nay, there within, it will not be kept, if there be this ſpirit and life of inward joy, in it. Out it will, with an exultemus: And, even ſo. GOD would have it. No concealed joy, no Apocrypha to day. All the ſeven ſeales of it opened. Shine out, as a beame; flow forth as a ſtreame, into a viſible and audible exultation: Shew it ſelfe as Gods joy doth (in the 6. Verſe) in the joy of the countenance. That if any tell you, he is glad within (that he is) and hath the clouds in his forehead; if it will not ſerve: you may aske him, but where is your exultabit? We muſt ſee, you are ſo. There is ſome levin of malignitie within, if there be not the voice of joy and gladneſſe, that it may be heard to the eare; if there be not the habit, geſture, and other ſignes of it, to be ſeene to the eye: that it may give evidence, to both ſenſes. Apoc. 5. 5. 1 Cor. 5. 8. Pſal. 118. 15.

Both theſe: and both, in no ſcant meaſure; no pinching to day: but good meaſure, running over; exceeding is the word of the verſe. Exceed firſt, in this leaſt, and loweſt of all; in the low voice of joy and gladneſſe, in theſe Panegyricks of praiſe, and joyfull acclamations. But, exceed me them: how? by cantabimus, the hymnes 3 Luc. 6. 38.

and musick of the Church (that is lowder) and to helpe them to exceed, all the Organs and other Instruments of the Queer below. But exceed wee them, too: How? with the bells, the Instruments of the Steeple above: and with the sound of the Trumpets, that wilbe heard further off. And yet exceed them too: How? With a peale of Ordinance (if it be to be had) that wilbe heard, fartheſt of all.

Exceeding is the word in the Text. Exceeding to be, in and through all; that our Hoſanna may be in the Higheſt to day. And ſo for the other ſenſes: in ſhewes, and Triumphs, Feaſts, and Fires and other ſignes of Iubilee; whatſoever we uſe, when we uſe to exceed in gladneſſe; when we would ſhew, wee exceed in it: that ſo, ô quàm! may be ſaid of it, it doth ſo exceed. All are but due, to this deliverance, to thus many triplicities in it.

Wee to exceed: for God Himſelfe (we ſee) exceeds here. His ordinary is, but to give leave, or (at moſt) to call us, to rejoyce. But here, He doth not give leave, or call us to it, with a jubilate; Nay, ſhall (here) is more, than a jubilate: that but exhorts; this binds us: ſhalbe glad; that is, neither will nor chooſe, but be ſo. Yea He makes us, ſpeake to Him, Domine; and makes us promiſe Him, we will ſo: and having promiſed, lookes we ſhould make it good. GOD injoynes it: And if GOD injoyne it, the Day doth moſt juſtly intercedere, even plead for it, that if ever we will doe it, we would now doe it, on the ſalvation-day it ſelfe. And never may he ſee day of joy, that joyeth not in this day: nor have cauſe of gladneſſe, that for this cauſe, is not glad. And this, for ſhalbe glad; and for the bond, de præſenti, that is in (ſhall).

But beſides it, there is a tenſe, de futuro, in (ſhall) too. We may not loſe it, for
Joh. 15.12. feare of tolletur à vobis. But, admoniſhed by that Tenſe, bethinke our ſelves, how to draw it further than the preſent tenſe, even into the future (ſtill ſhall.)

Lætetur or lætabitur Rex; the Hebrew will beare both. But ours, and ſo all tranſlations chooſe lætabitur rather. Not lætetur: that, is not ſo well; for, that is true, if it be done now, and but now, for the preſent, for this once: Lætabitur, is better; for there, the doing it, is in the future ſtill, ſtill to come; ſtill more joy behinde.

For [the King ſhall rejoyce] of this day, wilbe over ſoon at night. What, ſhall we end our rejoycing then, with this day? No (I truſt.) But by vertue of this (ſhall) ſhall rejoyce next yeare againe; and when that is come, ſhall the yeare following; and ſo
Heb. 3.13. then againe, the yeare after that: and ſo from yeare to yeare; donec cognominetur (ſhall) ſo long as it is called (ſhall;) ſo long as we looke into our bookes, and find, ſhall rejoyce, there. So long, and no longer.

Now, that the joy may ſo continue, the cauſes muſt continue too, there is no remedie. It is they, muſt keep our lætabitur, ſtill alive: The cauſes were, ſalutem miſit, deſiderium prævenit, coronam poſuit, vitam dedit. To performe our vowes then (Vota publica, I truſt) to deſire, that this chaine of cauſes, may keepe whole ſtill, and not a linke of it be broken, or loſt: that they may paſſe into the future, all: ſtill ſalutem mittet, deſiderium prævenict, coronam ponet, and vitam dedit.

I will not goe through them all: onely touch the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt: and ſo I have done. Lætabitur, and vitam dabit ſtill.

Pro. 14.30. 16.24. Lætabitur, joy firſt: if it be but for vitam dedit. For, joy is a prolonger of life, dulcedo carnis, & ſanitas oſſium (as Salomon calleth it:) And even for that cauſe, we begin with it. But (to ſay truth) leave out lætabitur, and what is there wiſh-worthy? Truly, without it, neither ſaving, nor crowne, nor life, worth the wiſhing. For who would be ſaved to live ſtill in ſorrow? And the crowne it ſelfe it is not corona deſiderii, if it be not corona gaudii. Yea, and who would wiſh life, but to take ſome joy and comfort
Gen. 3.8. 10. in it? I will ſay more: let one be in Paradiſe, as Adam was; Even there, when Adam had loſt his joy, Paradiſe it ſelfe, was no Paradiſe: as good in a drie deſart, as in it: without joy, Paradiſe it ſelfe is not worth with wiſhing. Ioy is all in all. Let that Pſal. 45.7. then be caput voti: that the oyle of gladneſſe, may runne downe through them all, and Pſal. 132.18. over them all: make His ſaving precious to Him; His crowne flouriſh; His life, vitam vitalem, and worth the deſiring. That, joy may be the unitie, of this Trinitie, 1 ſalutis, 2 coronæ, 3 vitæ.

But

But then, laſt, becauſe all foure of them hold upon life; to the end, they may hold, that that may hold; hold, and hold long. Some thinke, it is long enough already (and ſo long may they thinke.) I know not what to thinke: For (I cannot tell how) long and ſhort, are ſaid but comparativè: that ſo, a life may be long, and not long, diverſly compared. To ſtand rating it, as the Law doth, ſeven yeares to a life; ſo, ſeven lives already: ſo compared, it is (in a ſenſe) long. But, we will none of that. Nor as compared with the Princes round about Him: For he hath ſtood them all, and longer than any of them all: and hath had the honour long, to be Primogenitus inter Reges Terræ, GODS firſt borne now of all the Kings of the Earth: and long may He have it. Long, if thus. But then againe; not long, if compared with the deſires of our hearts, with the requeſts of our lippes: Not long, is compared with that, that may be: and whatſoever may be in this kind, we wiſh, it might be: even as long, as nature poſſibly can draw it out. Let this then, be our Omega, our ſumma voti; and that in no other words, than the uſuall words, of the old Countells, to the Emperours or Kings, then preſent among them. Pſal. 89. 27.

IACOBO REGI, à DEO coronato, à DEO cuſtodito, Vitam longam, Annos multos.

To KING IAMES, crowned by GOD, preſerved by GOD, Many yeares, Long life. So long, till He change it, for a longer: till there come eternall ſalvation, an immortall crowne, life in ſæculum ſæculi, nay in ſæcula ſæculorum, and make all conſummate. And ſo I end.

But before I end, in any wiſe let us not be ſo raviſhed, with our lætabitur; but that we remember, Tua Domine withall. He, that ſent this ſalvation, fulfilled this deſire, the Setter on of theſe Crownes, the Giver of this life. So rejoyce, as in every of them, our joy come up to Him. So take calicem ſalutis (as we tearme it, I pray GOD, we ſo tearme it, and ſo take it aright:) but, aright we ſhall doe both, if we forget not to call upon His Name, even the Name of the LORD. That He, which ſaved to day, may ſo ſave ever: that fulfilled his deſire, may keep it ſtill full: that He that ſet on His crownes, may hold them on, hold them on faſt: and laſt of all, adde to the crowne, life; and to life, long; and to long, for ever and ever. Pſal. 116. 13.

And even ſo, conclude we, as the Pſalme doth: addreſſing our ſpeech to heaven. Be thou exalted O Lord, in Thine owne ſtrength: Thou wert ſo, this day: Be ſo ſtill, againe and againe. So ſhall we ſing and praiſe Thee for it. We now do ſo, for this dayes ſalvation, and all the joyfull triplicities of it: So may we ſtill: So may we long: So may we ever.

And (Good Lord) exalt Thou this thy ſtrength, and treble theſe thy triplicities to us; that we may for theſe thy exaltations and triplicities, double and treble our thankes and praiſe to Thee: As this day, ſo all the dayes of our life. And this with one heart and voice, beſeech we Thee, to grant, &c.

ESTHER Chap. II.

Eo igitur tempore, &c.

VER. 21. In thoſe daies, when Mardochai ſate in the Kings gate, two of the Kings Eunuches (Bigthan and Tereſh) were wroth, and ſought to lay hands on the King Ahaſhueroſh.

22. And the thing was knowen to Mardochai, and he told it unto Queene Eſther, and Eſther certified the King thereof, in Mardochai's name; and when inquiſition was made, it was found ſo, therefore they were both hanged on a tree: And it was written in the book of the Chronicles before the King.

IN thoſe daies; So beginnes the Text: In theſe daies; ſo may we beginne. Nay, come yet neerer, on this very day. For, on this very day there fell out that, hath made, either beginning may well ſerve: In thoſe daies, or In theſe daies. In diebus illis, wee read there was a King, and hee in danger: in danger to have hands laid on him; and that by two; two of his owne people: for no cauſe, but that they were angry; and it appeares not why. And, the iſſue was, the King delivered; and they that ſought his, brought to a wretched end.

As we have read, ſo have we ſeene in diebus illis. One of the ſame condition, a King too; and in the very ſame danger of hands layd layd on him, and by the ſame number, two : and of his owne Subjects and Servants; and for no cauſe, but they were angrie; and for no cauſe, that neither. And the iſſue here againe, the King preſerved, and they alſo came both (as theſe here did) though not the ſame, yet to a farre more fearefull end.

I ſpeake, before underſtanding hearers: and (I know) there was not any but upon the reading of the Text, his conceipt did lead him preſently, who was meant by King Ahaſhuerus, and withall did even thinke of the Bigthan and Tharez of this day. And ſo made the compariſon, with your owne ſelves, before I could make it.

The Summe.

We ſhall gaine, this yeare, by this Text, ſomewhat onward more, than the former wee did. Till now, wee have beene all in Divinitie; that, a heynous ſinne it is, there (this attempting on Princes:) But now ſhall wee goe to the Common Law, what it is there. For, here is an Aſſiſe brought againſt two, and the matter enquired, and a verdict found, and they had ſentence and were executed: For what? Even for Voluerunt inſurgere, as the Fathers read it, or (as we) Quæſiverunt mittere manum; for but ſeeking, for but having a will, to lay hands on the King.

And that, not the Iewes law. There, we were, in the yeares paſt: now, we are not in Iewrie, where GOD was knowne; wee turne us to the Gentiles; wee are in Perſia now. And this we doe, by the Prophets warrant: Get you (ſaith he) to the Iles of Kittin and behold, ſend to Kedar and enquire, if there were any ſuch thing ſought there and were not condemned. For if there, Ad erubeſcentiam veſtram dico, I ſpeake it to your ſhame, that would be held the People of GOD, if any ſuch thing ſhould be found with you. They are worſe than Pagans, that ſo ſeeke; we will empanell no Chriſtian, a queſt of heathen men ſhall ſerve to attaint them.

Pſal. 76. 1.

Ier. 2. 10.

1 Cor. 5. 6.

This is no law of the braine; it is written: Twice written, 1 written downe, firſt in the Chronicles of Perſia, by direction from the King: 2 After, written out of them, and enrolled here in this place, by direction from God. Enrolled I ſay, and properly: For, this of Eſther is not called a booke, as others are (not the booke) but, the Roll of Eſther. Originally it was but Perſian law (this:) and it had not beene much, if that had beene all; but, by vertue of this enrollement, it is made the law of GOD alſo. That, from henceforth, it is cleere at both Lawes, the law of the Iewes, and the law of the Gentiles; the law of man, and the law of GOD; that all ſeekings of like nature are made criminall, and capitall, and the ſentence of ſuſpenſi ſunt, upon them, holy, and juſt, and good.

Laſtly, written law and old law. For, of this (whether Divinitie or Law) this we may ſafely ſay; It is no new Portugall Divinitie, this almoſt three yeare old, taken up in diebus hiis. Nor no new Law of heri and nudiuſtertius: nay, not of Edward the third then, Et à principio non fuit ſic. No: it is old this, in diebus illis; in thoſe daies. And, thoſe daies are as old, as the Second Monarchie, the famous Monarchie of Perſia: the reports of which Nation are more ancient, than any ſave thoſe of the Iewes: no book, but the Bible, ſo ancient as they.

Mat. 19. 8.

And this me thinkes is not amiſſe, when we can bring this book to juſtifie the juſtice, or any way to give ſtrength, to the law of the land: It is pittie, but it ſhould bee ſo; either ſupport other mutually, facultas Iuris, and facultas Theologiæ. As here now, we have the Roll of Eſther, and in it a Report of Bigthans caſe, long before there were any Year-books or Reports at the Law. We are willing to bring forth this Roll of ours (which, till an ancienter can bee ſhewed, muſt be the leading caſe, to make Voluerunt, treaſon) to ſhew the Country Law, in this, to bee no other, than GODS is: that it is no otherwiſe, at the one, than at the other: treaſon, by Law; treaſon, by Divinitie, by both.

Well may wee talke of Law, the Law of the Land; but when all is done, never doe men reſt, with that quiet and full contentment, as when they ſee, it is warrantable by the Word of GOD; hath the ground there: as this hath the ground there. Every word here, hath in it, his warrant: Quæſitum eſt, for the tryall; Inventum, for the verdict; Suſpenſi ſunt, for the execution.

The Diviſion. The maine points are (as the verſes are) two: 1 the Kings danger, in the former, the verſe of danger; 2 the Kings delivery, in the latter, the verſe of deliverie.

I. In either, the meanes of either. His danger: 1 Of what, 2 by whom, 3 what moving them.

1 Of what? Of having hands laid. 2. By whom? by Bigthan and Tharez. 3 What moving? Nothing, but angrie they were.

II. His deliverie, 1 by what meanes, 2 of whom, 3 and how. 1. By what meanes? by notice taken and given of it. 2. By whom? by Mardochæus. 3. How? even caſually, as he was ſitting in the gate.

But, the Kings deliverie, it is not meet it ſhould goe alone: It is therefore attended with their ruine, that ſought his.

That, is (as it were) the traine borne up after it.

His danger by Bigthan and Tharez. In them two things, 1 what they ſought, and 2 what they found.

1 What ſought they? To lay hands on the King: What found they? One laid hands on them for it; appenſus eſt uterque eorum in patibulo.

2 His delivery by Mardochæus. In him, two more: 1 His notice taken, by caſuall over-hearing them, ſitting as he ſate. 2 His notice given, by his faithfull diſcoverie of the whole to the Queene; and to the King, by her meanes.

Then ſhould follow the legall proceeding, but I will ſpend no time in it. It is all out of our caſe this day. Our Bigthan and Tharez had no enquirie: No Iurie went on them, they were not executed in forme of law. No further goeth our caſe, than the Kings danger, his deliverie, and the cutting off thoſe, that ſought his life; and no further will we follow it; Not that.

III. But this we will, the ſolemne ſetting downe and recording all this, 1 in the Kings Chronicle, as a memorable accident: 2 in GODS Roll, as a famous caſe: 1 Of the treaſon of the two, to their eternall infamie: 2 Of Mardochæus's good ſervice, to his everlaſting praiſe: 3 Of the Kings happie deliverie, to the univerſall joy of all his Subjects.

And there, come we in. For, we may not, nor we will not forget in diebus hiis. And I ſhall make it appeare (I truſt) that, whether wee take the Kings, or the parties; the danger ſought, or the deliverie found; diebus hiis, will match and overmatch diebus illis, in all points. And ſo, the joy of this day (our joy) to doe the joy of them accordingly.

I. The Kings Danger.

IT is a deliverie, they and we celebrate: No delivery, but from a danger precedent, ſo was there heere. The King in danger evidently. And he no ſooner out of danger of theſe two, in this Chapter; But, the Queene in danger of Haman, in the next. So, the eſtate of Princes is not exempt from danger.

Chap. 3.

1 Of hands laying on him.

And of no ſmall danger neither; no leſſe matter, than having hands laid on them, that is, even of being made away. This King heere (ſaith the Apocryphall booke of Eſther, ſaith Ioſephus, ſay the beſt Writers) was Artaxerxes ſurnamed Long-hand. If he: his Father was ſlaine by Artabanus. The Father was, and the Son (we ſee) was ſought to be; neere it, ſcaped it narrowly.

2 By his owne.

And by whom this? neither by enemie, nor by ſtranger, but by his owne. Of his owne Subjects, of his owne houſhold, of his owne chamber, and the chiefe of his chamber then, too.

3 Becauſe they were angry.

And why? for no evill of his. He was, for his morall parts (as all write of him) a good a good Prince. That, would not ſerve: his life was ſought, though. And no cauſe, but they were wroth; and no cauſe appeareth. All which ſheweth Princes; that, for all their might and greatneſſe, for all their innocencie and goodneſſe, for all the favours they vouchſafe others, it is not in them, their ſafetie conſiſts. It is in the mercy of the moſt High they doe not miſcarrie: His hand, that holds them faſt; His arme, that ſtrengthens them, that the enemie is not able to doe them violence, nor the Sonne of wickedneſſe to hurt them. To looke up to Him, to hold good termes with Him, who in all their danger either by Mardochai (as in the Text:) or without Mardochai (as in the day) can worke their deliverance. Pſal. 22.7. Pſal. 89.21, 22, 23.

Deliverance from danger: Danger, whereof? Deliverie, where-from? Executed wherfore? All lead us to the fact next; which indeed ſeemes no fact, for nothing was done, ſought only to have beene. The Danger. I. The laying bands on any, a ſinne.

To lay hands is one thing: To but ſeeke to lay, is another. To lay hands is, of it ſelfe (I know) a thing indifferent, thereafter as the hand is. It may be a helping hand as GOD S is, and then Mitte manum (ſaith the Pſalme) lay it and ſpare not. But if it bee Satans mitte manum, upon Iob, to doe miſchiefe; then ſtay it, lay it not. And ſuch were theſe hands heere; For, it is ſaid, they were angrie and ſought to lay hands. Angrie hands, it is well knowne, are hurting hands. Either Ieroboams, lay hands on him, to ſurpriſe his perſon; or Herods lay hands on Peter, to doe by him as he did by Iames, to murder and to make him away. Pſal. 144.7. Iob 1. 11. 1 King. 13. 4. Act. 12. 3.

So to lay, is a ſinne certainely, be it one never ſo meane a perſon. But, in Regem, is a Sinne of ſinnes. For, the ſinne (we know) is ſtill by ſo much the more grievous, by how much the partie is the more eminent, againſt whom it is. Now, there is not on earth a perſon more eminent, nay, ſo eminent as the King. A Deo primus (ſaith Tertullian) poſt Deum ſecundus: Count not GOD, he is the very firſt; Count GOD, and he is ſecond. None ſo high as he; and ſo no ſinne ſo high as it. To lay hands on him? it is too rancke that; away with it. Specially on the King.

But that is not the caſe. It is not miſerunt here: none were laid. No matter for that, it is mittere quæſiverunt, and that is enough. To lay, and to ſeeke to lay, though one be worſe, both be naught, even miſſio and quæſitio both. The ſeeking to lay hands, is a ſinne.

Seeking is a plowing for ſinne, and that is ſin (ſaith Iob;) Is a hatching of a cockatrice-egge, and that (ſaith Eſay) is poiſon, no leſſe than that, comes of it. Iob 4. 8. Eſay 59. 5.

Sinne, to lay; ſinne, to ſeeke to lay. As to lay though you hurt not: ſo to ſeeke to lay, though you lay not. Ever, in what degree ſoever, Aſſuerus danger, is Bigthans ſinne: the Kings danger, their ſinne, that ſeeke it.

But if that be all (ſinne;) we ſhall doe well enough. What care men for ſinne, if there be no action at the Common Law for it? None but Weſtminſter-hall ſins do men care for. GOD ſaw it would come to this; Men learne no more duty, than penall Statutes did teach them; He tooke order therefore, to bring it within them too. We ſay further then, by vertue of this Text, beſides that it is a grievous ſinne, prejudiciall to the ſtate of the ſoule, it is an heinous crime, a capitall crime, amounting to ſuſpenſi ſunt, as much as their neck is worth to ſeeke this. I will beare, not an action onely, but an enditement of life and death. A Capitall ſinne.

But it muſt be in Regem then, againſt Him: Againſt others, it is not ſo. This, is a prerogative Royall. And, as many other waies, ſo hereby appeareth, what a King is. That whereas, in other mens caſes, as touching the law of life and death, to ſeeke to lay, and to lay, are much different: in the Kings caſe, they be all one. Quæſiverunt, if it be no more but ſo, the Law in that caſe to any other, is (I take it) favourable; and for a bare purpoſe, if no hurt enſue, no man ſhall ſuffer death. Not ſo, with the King; voluerunt, againſt him, is death, if it may be diſcovered; and quæſiverunt, if he but ſeeke, though he find it not. If upon the King

This helpes us to underſtand the Text, Ego dixi, Dii eſtis. Dii, for other cauſes; and this for one, that they participate this divine priviledge; that, as againſt GOD, ſo againſt them, the heart is enough. Quæſiverunt, the ſeeking, whether they find or not. Voluerunt, the will, whether the deed follow or not. Thou ſhalt not ſpeake evill of Pſal. 82. 6. Eccles. 10. 20.

the King: how? not with thy lipps? No, not in thy ſecret thoughts, ſaith the Preacher. If not, ſpeake evill in heart; doe evill in heart, much leſſe.

Two Commandements (when time was) we ſaid, there were in Nolite tangere, Pſal.105.15. 1 Touch not, the act: 2 Have not the will to touch, the intent. Two caſes there bee upon theſe two: 1 Baana and Rechabs, that did lay hands upon King Iſhboſheth (2 Sam. 4.) 2 And Bigthan and Tharez caſe here, that did but ſeeke it, to King Aſſuerus. Both guiltie, both ſuffered. Yea, Baana and Rechab, hang them, and well worthy; they murdered the King: But Bigthan and Tharez? Nay, and them too; hang them, though they found it not, only for ſeeking.

This then, I would have all beare away, it is the ſubſtance of the Text: diſtillatio ſui (as I may call it) drops of it ſelfe without any ſtreining. We find (here) in the Bible, a ruled caſe. Bigthans caſe, that held up his hand, not for laying his hand, but for ſeeking to lay it, Planè ſuſpenſus eſt uterque, put to death they were both. Why? Quæſiverunt; for nothing, but that they ſought to doe it: they did it not; they might plead, Non eſt factum, they did it not. It would not ſerve, they died for it, for all that, upon no other enditement than quia voluerunt. Voluimus is enough to attaint any: If, that can be proved, no pleading not guiltie.

And this is the Law, not of the Perſians alone (which yet was the Law of a hundred twentie ſeven Provinces;) nor ours alone (and ſo may ſeeme to be the Law of Nations) but, that which ſtrikes it home, by vertue of this enrolement here, is the Law of GOD; GOD by thus recording it, hath made it His owne; that if there were no Law for it, they might bee executed by this booke, and this verſe of it. Sit ſtill then, and ſeeke it not: for if you doe, this is your doome, expreſly ſet downe here, by the pen of the Holy Ghoſt. Take it as a ſentence from GODS owne mouth; Qui quæſiverunt, ſuſpenſi; qui quærent, ſuſpendendi ſunt. They that ſought, went; they that ſhall ſeeke, to goe the ſame way.

2 The parties, by whom.

Yet for all this, ſought it was then, and ſince, even the Kings life; Sed va per quos. And that, per quos, by whom, is the next point. The crime is bad; In Regem makes it worſe: But the ſeekers, worſt of all; for they of all other ſhould not have ſought it.

Two, in number. Gen.34.25. 2 Sam.4.5. 2 King.12.21.

Two they were in number: For (I know not how, but) for the moſt part they goe by Two's: Simeon and Levi, to the murder of Sichem; Baana and Rechab, to that of King Iſhboſheth; Iozebed and Ioſacar, to that of King Ioas; Bigthan and Tharez, to this attempt here againſt Aſſuerus; and the very ſame number to that of this day. Treaſon is in Hebrew called קשר a binding together: Two there muſt be, to be bound, at leaſt: Two, to conſpire, or put their breaths together, to make a conſpiracie. Vpon the point there is in all, never leſſe than three: For, inter duos proditores Diabolus eſt tertius. All that doe conjure, conjure up a third to them: The Divell makes them up three; for he is one ſtill: he, the faggot-band, that binds them: hee the ſpirit that inſpires all Conſpirators. For (indeed) theſe unnaturall treaſons do not ſo much ſteeme or vapor up out of our nature (bad though it be) as they be immiſſiones per angelos malos, ſent into it by ſome meſſenger of Satan, or rather by Satan himſelfe. Poſtquam miſit Satanas in cor Iudæ, After Satan had put it in his heart. For, hee it is, that puts in their hearts, to ſeeke to doe it; and to doe it, if GOD breake not the band, choke not the breath of them; as here he did choke it in theſe, with ſuſpenſi ſunt. Luk.22.3.

Two in number, what were they? Nobly borne (I doubt not) to be in the place they were.

What place? There bee that thinke, Bigthan and Tharez were not their proper names; but the names of the roomes they held. And they have reaſon for it; Bigthan (as the word goes in that tongue) is Dapifer; Tharez, is Pincerna. Thoſe (we know) were roomes ever counted of ſpeciall faith and truſt.

Of the Kings Chamber.

But plaine it is, they were of his Chamber. Not of his lieges alone, or of his houſhold, but (which is more) of his Chamber. It is a wonderfull thing, the State, that the Perſian Monarchs kept. No man, upon paine of death, to come ſo neere, as into their inner inner baſe Court, uncalled; if he did, he died for it, unleſſe the King, by holding forth his Scepter, pardoned him his life. You will eaſily then imagine, in what place they were, that had free recourſe into his innermoſt Chamber, to goe and come thither at their pleaſure. Chap. 4. 11.

Not onely to doe ſo themſelves, but to be thoſe, by whom all others were to go or come: No man to come thither, but by them. For that is meant by Lords of the threſhold, or qui in primo limine præſidebant, as the Fathers read it, the very chiefe over his Chamber.

The Septuagint (who ſhould beſt know the nature of the word) they turne it ἀρχισωματοφύλακες. Φύλακες firſt, keepers; σωμα]Θ of the bodie. And many they had (for, many ſuch Kings need have:) But theſe two, they were ἀρχὲς, the chiefe, the Arch-keepers: had, if any more than other, the chiefe charge, the very principall of all. GOD doe ſo and ſo to me (ſaith King Achis to David) if I make not thee the keeper of my head: and in ſo ſaying thought, he promiſed him as good a place, as he had. He could make him no more. To this place had the King advanced theſe two: and thrſe two were they, that ſought this. That it ſhould be ſought at all, evill: that theſe ſhould ſeeke it, too bad. They, that if others had ſought it, ſhould have ſtaid their hands; theſe to lay on their owne, to ſeek it themſelves! 1 Sam. 28. 2.

All men know, it was no meane preferment, early and late to be ſo neere Aſſuerus's perſon; They had meanes thereby to doe themſelves much good. So had they, to doe others much hurt, if they were not the better men. But, for others, hurt it skills not, if they had not thereby had the meanes to doe Aſſuerus himſelfe; if the Devill prevailed ſo farre with him as he did. Of his chamber Dapifer, his diſh; Pincerna, his cup: Keepers of his body, principall keepers: if they ſeeke to lay their hands, they will ſoone find what they ſeek: the more dangerous they, the more his danger by them, a great deale. And is not this heavineſſe to death, when they that were ſo honoured, proove ſo unkind, when they that ſo truſted, ſo untrue; and may we not take up the Wiſe mans Oh, O wicked preſumption, whence art thou ſprung up to cover the face of the earth! Ecclus. 37. 3.

Stay a little, and looke upon them, as ye would upon a couple of monſters. 1 To ſeek this, in Regem alone, were too much: to breake their Duty to their Liege Lord, if there were no more but that: to lay their hands on him, for whom they ſhould lay downe their lives. 2 Adde then: not to a King onely, but to ſuch a King, nor to their Liege Lord alone, but to ſo good and gracious a Lord, that had done them ſo great favours, placing them ſo neere him, truſting them ſo farre, honouring them ſo greatly. (For, no honour, to truſt; no truſt, to the chiefe truſt of all.) More than heatheniſh wickedneſſe this, to render evill for good; and whoſe wealth they of all other bound to ſeek, to ſeek his ruine. 3 And they came not to that place, but they were ſworne: to vilifie their oath then, and to teare in peeces the ſtrongeſt band of religion: The hands that had taken that oath, thoſe hands to lay on him! 4 To betray their truſt to him, that had layd his innocent life in their hands, and to make their truſt, the opportunitie of their treacherie! 5 In a word: of the chiefe Keepers of his body, to become the chiefe ſeekers of his bloud, the chiefe enemies of his body, and life and all! What can be ſaid evill enough of theſe? Say it were lawfull in any caſe (it is not lawfull in any; but ſay it were) to lay hands on a King: yet they (in all reaſon) of all others, ſhould not have beene the doers: Etſi ille dignus perpeti, at non tu qui faceres tamen. Were not theſe monſters then? was not their condemnation juſt? It grieves me, I have ſtayed ſo long on them, yet if I have made them and their fact odious, it grieves me not.

What was the matter? what could move them, thus to play the wretches? Why they ſhould not, many and good reaſons we ſee. Why they did, none in the Text, but that they were angrie: and that is no reaſon, but a paſſion, that makes men goe cleane againſt reaſon many times. Bigthan was angrie, and Thares as angrie as hee. 3 The cauſe, wherefore. They were angry.

Yet, if it be but a little anger, it will over. Indeed (ſuch it may be) it will. What manner manner anger was it? The word is a ſhrewd word; ſignifies an anger, will not goe downe with the Sunne, will not be appeaſed. What ſpeake we of the word? their deeds ſhew as much. We ſee, nothing would ſatisfie them, but his life: Nothing ſerve, but lay hands on him. That, they ſought; ſo angrie they were.

Ephes. 4. 25.

What angred them then? No cauſe is ſet downe. And, none I thinke there was. If there had, we ſhould have beene ſure to have heard of it. For men, to be angrie without a cauſe, and even with Superiors, it is no new thing.

Well: if no cauſe, ſome colour yet: if not that, ſome ſhadow at leaſt. Somewhat we are to ſeeke, why they did ſeeke this.

If there be in the Text any thing to lead us to it, it is in the firſt words, or not at all: In thoſe daies. In thoſe, angrie they were: as much to ſay as, before thoſe daies, they were not; but, in thoſe, then, they were. Elſe, there is no cauſe to mention that, of the daies, but to make this difference: Out of the Text, nothing can be picked elſe.

Why what daies were thoſe? That goes immediately before: The dayes wherein Aſſuerus had made choice of Eſther, to match with her, and make her his Queene; and had made a great feaſt upon it. At the feaſt (it ſeemes) they ſurfeited, they could not brooke that match, at any hand: Some ambitious deſire of theirs diſappointed by it; likely, that was the cauſe. This was faine to ſerve for the occaſion, for lack of a better: A bad one (we ſay) is better than none.

Angry, for Aſſuerus choice of Eſther.

What, the Great King of Perſia finde no match in all his owne brave Nation? Never a Perſian Lady ſerve him, but he muſt to this vile baſe people (the Iewes) his captives, his ſlaves, to picke him a match thence? What a diſparagemens in this, to all the Perſian bloud! It would make any true Perſian heart, riſe againſt it.

Nay then, a worſe matter: (now, ye ſhall ſee them grow godly on a ſudden and wax very zealous, as the faſhion is.) Nay then, now we ſhall have a Queene of a contrarie Religion, we ſhall now be all Iewes. One that cares, neither for Mithra nor Oromaſdes; One by all likely-hood brought in, to be the utter ruine of the Ancient Religion eſtabliſhed in Perſia, yer ſhe came there.

This was it (they tell us) and like enough ſo to be: As (ever) ye ſhall obſerve marriage-matters are made occaſions oft, to ſerve to many purpoſes. For, Aßuerus may not marrie, but where Bigthan and Tharez appoint. Elſe, they will be wroth and fall on ſeeking. If any be in the Text, this was it. And was not this (trow you) a goodly occaſion, and a ſubſtantiall, to make them quit their allegeance, forget their oath, caſt behinde them all his favours, betray their truſt, truth and all; loſe all theſe? For, all theſe muſt they loſe, before they could ſeeke that, they ſought.

But, why found they it not? It was not ſo eaſie for them to find at firſt, by reaſon that, for any to come there, in the Kings preſence, with a weapon, nay, but having his hands out to be ſeene, not having them hid, held cloſe under their garments, it was death: Cyrus put to death two of his kin for it: That ſo, they might well ſeeke: and ſo I leave them ſeeking that, I pray to GOD they may never finde. But the true cauſe was, GOD was angrie with this anger of theirs, that their ſeeking ſucceeded not.

II.

His deliverie.

I

The meanes of it.

By notice given 2 By Mardothai.

And now are we come to the Cataſtrophe, or turning about of all. For by this time innotuit res Mardochæo, Mardochai came to the knowledge of it: forth it came. Nay, if it come forth, the King ſhall doe well enough. To diſcover the treaſon, is to deliver the King.

This was by Mardochai: what was he? No Perſian (to begin with) but a ſtranger by birth, and by Religion; and a Captive, beſides: One that had better reaſon to have ſought it, than they. Hee had as great cauſes, as any are by them alleaged, that favour ſuch ſeekings. For, this King held him, and all GODS people with him (to uſe Eſthers owne termes) in bitter captivitie, as a Tyrant. And this, worſe he was (at leaſt, as evill, as an heretick) for he was an Idolater. One would thinke, it had been a worke meeter for him (this:) He, to ſeeke; and they to keep him, from finding that he ſought; they him, not he them.

And

And how came hee to it? It skills not how, but as hee ſate in the gate, he came to it. This is all; he ſtirr'd not, but ſate ſtill. And ſate not in any lurking corner, but even in the broad gate; and there came he to it, or it to him. This was GOD's doing ſure. Their anger boyled, ſo ſignifies חמה and boyled over, it ſhould ſeeme, and brake out into ſome words: Elſe how ſhould Mardochai take notice of it? They would never truſt him with it (ye may be ſure) being a ſtranger. A Iew, with their diſpleaſure, at the match with a Iew, never: but, ſome bigge words came from Bigthan, that by Mardochai were over-heard.

3 As he ſate in the gate.

What in the gate, in preſence of a ſtranger? The Targum (the moſt ancient expoſition wee have) ſaith, GOD ſo tooke away their wits, as they forbore not to talke of it, he ſitting by, but did it in a forren ſtrange language. Knew him a Iew; thought he could ſpeake no language but his owne, or a little broken Perſian perhaps: not the tongue, they had their conference in. Which (it fell out) Mardochai underſtood, as well as they. And thus all came out, GOD would ſo have it: who ſo aſſorted them, to make a way, as to His mercie, for the ſafeguard of the King; ſo, to His juſtice, to bring that upon their owne heads, they ſought to have brought upon the Kings.

And Mardochai, when he had it once, he kept it not: Made it knowen, not to him he next met with: but diſcreetly, where he knew he well might, to the Queene. She was, by bloud and bringing up, faithfull to him; and ſo did ſhe ſhew her ſelfe: for, what he brake with her, ſhe told the King, not in her owne, but in Mardochai's name. The faſhion is otherwiſe with ſome; to tell it in their owne names, and never ſpeake a word of Mardochai, from whom in truth it came. Well, the iſſue was, what ſhe told the King, ſeemed to him no idle phanſie of ſome vaine man, but ſuch as was meet to ground an equity upon. So, they were apprehended, and committed, and ſo to the Law wee leave them. Well, by this meanes the danger is over, and the King ſafe, thankes be to GOD.

And many waies doth GOD give juſt cauſe, to mankind, to admire His high providence, in bringing to light ſuch attempts as this, againſt His Annointed: ſuch varietie, ſo diverſe ſtrange meanes He hath, to effect it by; as here, in this, I note foure unto you.

2 The ſtrangeneſſ of the meanes.

1 The partie firſt, Mardochai, that by him. That this health ſhould come to the King of Perſia, neither by Mede, nor Perſian; not by any of his owne people, but by a ſtranger, who was none of his lieges, borne out of his allegiance, a Iew, a meer alien; that this ſhould come forth by him, and by no other meanes. But ſo is GOD, wonderfull in His waies: and will by an honeſt ſtranger ſometimes, ſave that, a bad ſubject would deſtroy. That in default of his owne, GOD would have him ſaved by a ſtranger, rather than not at all.

2 Obſerve againe: that, to this ſtranger it came no otherwiſe, but as he ſate in the gate. We may not paſſe that; it ſtands in the front of the Text, as the ſpeciall means of all. That it thus came and no other way, as he ſate ſtill; ſtill, and went not up and downe ſearching: In the gate, a publike place, not any privie corner or lobby; hee not diving into their boſomes, but onely there ſitting, it ſhould thus happen; hee ſhould over-heare them talking together in a ſtrange tougue (though to him not ſtrange:) by a meer caſualty, one would thinke (all this:) Indeed by a high and wonderfull diſpoſition of GOD's heavenly providence, this; that, even as he there ſate, it ſhould be brought to him thus.

And very oft doth GOD bewray bad enterpriſes by ſuch (one would think them) meere caſuall events. But, in maximè fortuitis there is minimum fortuiti, & quæ fortuna fieri videntur, fato fiunt. It ſeemes chance, that is (indeed) deſtinie. And never let them looke for other (all the Bigthans of them.) One ſhalbe by a wall, or at a window under the houſe eaves, neer one cranny or other; GOD will ſo diſpoſe, ſomebody ſhall be within the hearing, when they full little thinke. For, GOD will have it out certainely: Rather than not, by ſome meere accident, ſome that ſitts by chance in the gate, ſome that goes by the gate ſhall bring it out, rather than it ſhall not bee brought out.

3 And may I not adde this for a third, that all this came out by occaſion of that which they pretended for their occaſion. That very match, which was ſo great a mote in their eye, that they ſo maligned at, they muſt needs ſweare the Kings death for it; that very match was the meanes that brought Mardochai thither, to the gate: for thither he came to hearken, not for any ſuch matter as this, but how the new Queene (his Neece) behaved her ſelfe; what report went of her. And as it fell out, this (which he came not for) there he heard: his thither comming, by this hap, was the happie meanes for this happie diſcoverie: happie for the King; happie for the whole land. But all came by his reſort thither, by meanes of the marriage. So, that, they made their occaſion, was made the occaſion of their ruine.

Pſal. 63. 8. Pro. 6. 2. Luke 19. 22.

4 And let this be the laſt, that even from their owne ſelves, He brought it. They that goe about the like, their owne hands ſhall make them to fall, they ſhall be enſnared in the words of their owne lippes: rather than it ſhall not come forth, it ſhall come forth ex ore tuo ſerve nequam; come out at their owne mouthes, as here it did. Their owne tongues ſhall fall on babling, their owne penns on ſcribling: GOD will have it out certainely; even by themſelves diſcloſed, rather than not at all. And this for GODS mercie, He had here, and ſtill hath to bring ſuch plots to light, marvellous in our eyes.

Mardochai to be our example.

Now of Mardochai, the meanes of all. For, though as this dayes deliverie was, we have no great uſe of him, there was no Mardochai, no diſcouerie there; this dayes was another manner of deliverie, of a higher nature than ſo: yet is there great good uſe of him for all that. Indeed Mardochæus, exemplum noſtrum, he is our patterne: Ours, that be true men. He ſet before us a mirrour of a faithfull good ſubject, one according to GODS owne heart. For, this is a perfect Scripture, we have in it both what to flie and what to follow. As there be in it, two bad; ſo thanks be to GOD, there is one good. To avoid them: to be like to him.

Like to him three wayes: 1 Like him in his innotuit: 2 Like him in his nunciavit: 3 But above all, like him in that which was the ground of all: that he was a faithfull ſubject to a ſtrange and to a Heathen Prince.

1 In his innotuit.

Like him firſt, in his innotuit. Not to turne the deafe eare to Bigthan and Tharez, as if we heard them not; nor to look through our fingers at them, as if we ſaw them not. None knew, he underſtood the language they ſpake in: He might have carried it ſlily, made as if he had knowne nothing, not knowen that, he knew: nothing to compell him, but his conſcience, to take notice of it. But Salomon ran in his mind, Save him that is deſigned to death, Wilt thou not deliver him that is led to bee ſlaine? Any; but the King more than any, If thou ſaiſt, I know not of it, He that ponders the heart, doth not He underſtand? He that keeps the ſoule, doth not He know the contrarie? And ſhall not He pay every man (and ſo thee) according to thy worke? Well, for innotuit, ſince from the gate it came, good therefore that Mardochai ſit there, or (which is all one) that they which ſit there have ſomewhat of Mardochai in them: Be, if not curious and inquiſitive, yet vigilant and attentive. And yet curious and inquiſitive I would allow, in the caſe of a Princes ſafetie. And the King and the Queene to have their eyes, and their eares abroad (both of them) and all little enough. We ſee, for all the Kings Wiſe men, that knew the times, never a one of them knew this time. This good (we ſee) came by Mardochai, came on the Queenes ſide.

Pro. 24. 11. Pro. 24. 12.

2 In his nunciavit.

Like him in his innotuit, to know; Like him in his nunciavit, to make it knowne. Carefull to get notice, faithfull to give notice of it in due time. GOD, whoſe will it was, it ſhould thus happily come to him; His will it was, it ſhould as faithfully come from him. Hee knew, by the Law hee was bound, if hee heard the voice of conſpiracie and uttered it not, it ſhould bee ſinne to him (Leviticus. V) Hee knew (by the Pſalme) what it was to partake with other mens ſinne, what to have his part with a thiefe or an adulterer; and if with them, with a traitor much more. He knew by the Proverbs, hee was now in as deep as they, as good lay his hands on him, and ſeek

Lev. 5. 1. Pſal. 50. 18. Pro. 24. 12.

it,

it, as lay his hand on his mouth and not ſeeke to prevent it, keepe it in and conceale it. He knew (for he told it Eſther after) that if he had not bewrayed it, GOD wanted not His meanes to have brought it out ſome other way. And laſt, he knew, by the Prophet, GOD would have ſet His face againſt him, for ſo cloking it, and have rooted him out. All this he knew: but, the myſtery of the ſeale of iniquitie (the Seale of Confeſſion) it ſeemes he knew not. It was not graven then, that ſeale; nor many hundred yeares after. That ſhuts up treaſon, as a treaſure, under a ſacred ſeale, at no hand to be broken: no, though all the Kings lives in Chriſtendome, lay on it. This act of Mardochai's marres the faſhion of that Seale quite. Chap. 4 14. Ezek. 14. 8.

And, this may be ſaid of him, he would never have laid any hands on himſelfe: for then he would have let it proceed, and not hindred it, by his bewraying, as he did. This alſo: hee that did thus diſcloſe, for a need would have taken an oath to diſcloſe: Sure I am, would never have taken oath, or Sacrament, not to diſcloſe it: would never have ſtucke at the oath of Allegeance (that is once:) but it may be, would have ſtucke at the Seale of Confeſſion, for ever comming upon his lips.

This for nunciavit. And all this he did, yea, though himſelfe were no Subject borne to Aſſuerus, nor he his naturall Prince; but borne out of his dominions, farre off, in Iewry. Did it, not for Ioſias, or Ieconias, or ſome King of his owne: Did it for Aſſuerus King of Perſia, one that held him and his Country-men captive and thrall; yet, to him he did it. 3 In his loyaltie to Aſſuerus a ſtranger.

Yea, more than that yet, this did he, to Aſſuerus not onely a ſtranger, but more than ſo, to Aſſuerus a heathen man, an Idolater, one that worſhipped the Sunne, and the fire, every day. As, that did not hinder him, that of a diverſe Nation: ſo neither did this, that of a diverſe, and that of a falſe Religion. For, though he were of a diverſe Religion from the King, yet was he of GODS true Religion, that teacheth men to be true to their Prince. Be he Iew, or be he Gentile, Aſſyrian, Perſian, or what he will; Be he a right worſhipper, or be he an Idolater; Be his Nation, or be his Religion, what it will be: Though the King be (as Aſſuerus) a Pagan, though they be (as Mardochai) the onely true Church and people of GOD; to be true to him though. But none of that Religion, that is faſt to the Catholike, looſe to the Hereticke. If it be Ioſias, O then ſtay your hand: but, if Aſſuerus, if Ethnicus, or quaſi; if excommunicate, then fet Bigthan and his hands freer to ſeeke, and to finde, and to lay them on and ſpare not. This Religion was none of Mardochai's (nor let it not be any of yours) witneſſe this act of his, an holy and good act. For which (though not preſently, yet) not long after, hee was highly rewarded by the King, and for which, he is ſet here (his name, and his act both) among the Righteous, to be had in everlaſting remembrance. A Heathen.

Of the traine now a word. I ſaid I would tell you, what they ſought and what they found. That they ſought, they found not. Not that: but pitie it is, but they ſhould finde ſomewhat, ſeeking as they did: and ſo they did. They found ſomewhat in ſtead of it, which had beene better loſt than found: they found a halter ſcarce worth the finding: they found their owne perdition: and the wotſt kinde of it, perditio tua ex te, themſelves the authors of it. Ex ore tuo, by that which came from themſelves, out of their owne mouthes: the Devils quærite & invenietis, right. The Traine. What Bigthan and Thares ſought and found. Oſee 13. 9. Luke 19. 22.

And will you ſee how fitly every thing fell out? They ſought, and they were ſought into; quæſitum eſt. They ſought, and found not: they were ſought into, and found. They were wroth with the King, and GOD with them; the heavie wrath of GOD was upon them. They would have laid hands on the King; hands were laid on them for it: up the Gibbet they went, and off they went, and the world was well rid of a couple of traytors. Before they could finde, they were found themſelves, and their fact, found: the Law was not to ſeeke; that, was found and founded long before. A Law, that now hath received the approbation from GOD: and ſo now, a right Perſian law, never to be altered. Dan. 6. 15.

III. The ſolemne Recording of his.

Have we done? not yet, this muſt be entred firſt, written: Nay written over twice, a Duplicate of it. [1] Written firſt in the Chronicles. And that before the King: (of ſuch importance the King thought it.) [2] And then this writing here of the King, is here written over againe, a new order from GOD. So, two Conſtat's: One, in the Kings Chronicles, the other in GODS Canonicall Scripture, of this act. Two Copies extant, one in Rotulis Regiſtri, the other in Archivis Eccleſiæ; One among the Kings Records, the other in the Churches Monuments. What ſhould this meane? Something there is ſure, in the adding of this clauſe, about the writing it up. I know no meaning, but that GOD liked well of the writing of it in the Kings, that he would have as much done in his owne Records.

Why the King would have it Chronicled, is eaſily ſeene. It was a very memorable event, worthy to be ſet downe there. But why GOD? Sure He ſaw, theſe Chronicles would not laſt ſo long, as His will was, this example here ſhould. And indeed they being now loſt, we had beene little the better, if it had beene there onely; He made it therefore to be entred into His owne Chronica Chronicorum, that never ſhould be loſt. Well it was, it ſhould ſtand in the Perſian ſtory while it did laſt; but GOD for failing, provided further, to have a memorandum of it in His owne Sacred ſtory, that laſt, as long as the world ſhould laſt. That, that is there, is ad perpetuam rei memoriam, indeed.

Another reaſon. Being in theſe Chronicles, it would have ſpread no further than Perſia, or the hundred twenty ſeven Provinces at the furtheſt. GODS eye looked further: that not Perſians onely, but Iewes; Nor both thoſe, but Chriſtians too: Not the hundred twenty ſeven Provinces alone, but all the Provinces in the earth ſhould take notice of it. I ſpeake with the Apoſtle, Hath GOD a care of Perſia? either writ he not this for our ſakes? Yes, for our ſakes no doubt He wrote it, that we alſo might be the better for it. 1 Cor. 9. 9.

The better: two wayes: [1] Firſt, to know GODS cenſure of both theſe, in diebus illis, for the preſent: The due praiſe of Him by whom the delivery, The juſt condemning of them by whom the danger; that none that ſo ſeeke ſhall be ſaved by His booke: For, that (we ſee here) brings them to the gallowes, and there leaves them. [2] Or rather there leaves them not, but by this Scriptum eſt ſets up their quarters, there to ſtand and be ſeene, by all that looke in it, to the worlds end. And this is worſe than hanging, yea in chaines; for, the carcaſſes of thoſe, in time will conſume and droppe away and come to nothing; ſo ſhall theſe never, but remaine as freſh ſtill, as the firſt day, they were ſet up, to all generations to come. It is that, that grieveth the noble generous nature (I dare ſay) more than the execution it ſelfe, there to hang upon the file in Bigthan and Tharez's infamous blacke roll; their names to be read there, for ever.

But, this was written alſo for them that come after, and a double uſe there is of it that way: As the parties, and their facts, be good or bad, that there are regiſtred. If bad, then (as in the ſeventy eighth Pſalme) Ne ſint ſicut, not to be like this Bigthan and Tharez. Ne ſint ſicut, not to be like them in their wicked attempt; Ne ſint ſicut, that they be not like them in their wretched end. Pſal. 78. 8.

Not like them; but like Mardochai (A ſint ſicut there:) that comming to the notice of ſo wicked a deſigne, tooke himſelfe bound in conſcience to detect it: yea, though it were againſt a ſtranger to him in nation, a more ſtranger in Religion to him, yet to doe it. Here, Inſpice &c. (ſaith GOD, in His Law:) Vade tu & fac ſimile, (ſaith CHRIST, in His Goſpell.) In a word: this was written to the end, to tye up all hands from ſeeking as they did; And to open all mouthes, to diſcloſe, as he did: To make men loyall to their Princes, though Heathen Idolaters, ſuch as Aſſuerus. Exod. 25. 40. Luke 16. 37.

And if this were the end; if any ſhall goe quite croſſe (in a manner) in their Scriptum eſt's to this Scriptum eſt, in all theſe three: [1] Let looſe the hands to that, theſe (here) ſought and are condemned for it: [2] Stop up the mouthes from diſcloſing of that, Mardochai (here) did, and is commended for it: [3] And both theſe, not in the caſe of Aſſuerus, but even of a Chriſtian Prince; what thinke you by them? What doe they ſay in effect, but Sint ſicut Bigthan & Tharez, Ne ſint ſicut Mardochæus.

I report me to your conſciences: GOD thus ſkoring up theſe, that but ſought to lay their hands on a Heathen King, would He ever approve of ſuch, as under-hand ſet on Subjects, to goe paſt ſeeking, even to lay their hand on Chriſtian Princes, Moſt Chriſtian ſtian Princes, their owne Princes; Owne by nature and nation, Owne by maſſe and religion too, as in diebus hiis we have ſeene two in France (a Bigthan and a Tharez, both) one after another?

And what for Mardochai? They ſweare men, they give them their Maker upon it, never to diſcloſe that, which Mardochai is (here) honoured for diſcloſing. Yea, and approve, nay more than approve of ſome, for doing cleane contrary to that, Mardochai did here; even for concealing, nay, for ſealing up (and that under a holy Signature) as foule and wicked a treaſon, as ever was.

This hath beene done. But, we are in writing, what ſay ye to that? Will yee compare but the writing of diebus illis, with ours in diebus hiis? Let there be a Booke written, ſaith GOD (this of Eſther) that no man ever doe the like to theſe two; that no man ever ſeeke to conceale thoſe that ſhall ſo ſeeke: Let there be a Booke written (ſaith ſome bodie elſe) as it were an Anti-Eſther to this Booke of Eſther, to ſet men on to ſeeke that, theſe here ſought, and to teach them the way how to finde it; to point out, who ſhall be Bigthan, when and how they ſhall ſeeke to lay, and lay both: As it might be a booke written by Suarez in defence of Tharez (his name, of the two names, neereſt) in ſome caſe to licenſe the ſeeking: and to command the cloſe keeping of ſuch geere as this.

But yet, we have not all: Writing a Record, making up a Roll, is more than writing a booke. Every authenticke Record (as is this) is of the nature of a preſident, to doe the like; of a copie ſet for us to write by. So, here we have further, a warrant, to make up our Records, by this Record: to record all, that lay their hands, for ſuch as Bigthan and Tharez; and all that diſcloſe them, for ſuch as Mardochai. Ever, upon like occaſions, to make like entries. Shall we doe it? Write them downe (ſaith the King) in the Chronicle. Write them downe (ſaith GOD) in the Bible, for traytours, theſe two. Write mee downe ſome ſuch as did the like or worſe, for other manner perſons in another manner Regiſter, even for no leſſe than Martyrs: You know, who it is.

Regiſter me Mardochai (ſaith the HOLY GHOST) for a partie well deſerving, for uttering his knowledge of ſo wicked a treaſon. Paint me up ſuch an one (ſaith another Ghoſt) ſtraw and all, and in the border print me him holy martyr, for not diſcloſing as foule a treaſon, nay fouler a great deale.

But trow you this to be GODS Vicar, that thus makes act againſt act; checkes GODS Records with counter-Records of his owne; affronts GODS Chronicle with his New Calendar on this faſhion? Or Saint Peter's Succeſſour? Nay not his: of all others, his leaſt: Hee laid his hand on his weapon, for his Maſter; So would hee teach, and not otherwiſe. Iudas, hee indeed laid none himſelfe, but he it was gave the watch-word; This is Hee, lay hands upon Him. So that, Iudas's crue (it ſeemes) they be, that ſo doe; and no better than Iudas himſelfe, that ſo teach. No Apoſtle bid ever lay hands, but Iudas; He did: his Diſciples they be; his Succeſſours (not Saint Peters) that bid it. Matth. 26. 51. Matth. 26. 48.

We may and will then, by this warrant, be ſo bold as to enter them traytours in the Chronicle before the King: By what warrant, they may regiſter them for Martyrs, in the Calendar before the Pope, let them looke. Ours we ſhew, let them ſhew but the like, and carry it: Elſe, if he ſee, allow, and print bookes with priviledge, that tend to the manumitting of Tharez's hand, and to the Sealing up of Mardochai's mouth; if under confeßion he animate Tharez, and with his Seale of confeßion, muzzle up Mardochai; if GOD write one way, and he another, in effect; write King, write GOD, what they will, write me him martyr; We will be ſo bold as to write him up with Saint Paul, for Ἀνσεκείμενον, one that oppoſes himſelfe flat againſt this booke, and the Writer of it; which Booke ſtayes all hands from laying, and opens all mouthes to the bewraying ſuch as theſe. 2 Theſſ. 2. 4.

The comparing of Diebus hiis with Diebus illis.

I will pray you, I may rather forget my ſelfe a little, than forget in diebus hiis after all this: wee promiſed to ſhew, that they match and over-match In diebus illis. That they match in many points. That Kings both, both in danger, in the ſame danger, both; by the ſame number, and by thoſe of the ſame ranke; and upon the ſame motive, great anger for little cauſe. Againe, that both were preſerved, and both ſtrangely; that the ſeekers in both, in ſtead of finding that they ſought, found their owne confuſion.

But, as in many, they match; So, in many more, doth this day overmatch thoſe dayes. More degrees in our dyall, than in theirs; the day goes beyond the Text: and not this Text here alone, but any other, that ever yet I could finde. The more (ſay I ſtill) are we all bound to GOD for His goodneſſe, that hath ſo magnified His mercies toward His Anointed, and in him to us all, as He hath vouchſafed him ſuch deliveries in diebus hiis, as He never vouchſafed in diebus illis to any King of His owne peculiar choſen people, or of any other under the Sunne. Such to be found in our Chronicles, as not the like in the Chronicles of Perſia: Nay, not, of the Kings of Iuda or Iſrael: But are ſine exemplo, ours; none comming home, all falling ſhort of them.

Which (me thinks) I can let you ſee ſenſibly; and ſo, that we have greater cauſe to rejoyce in this of ours. In the Kings firſt. The King in diebus illis (make the beſt of him) was but a Pagan, a worſhipper of Idols: theſe be barres in his Armes. The King in die hoc, neither Heathen (I am ſure) nor that can have the leaſt touch of Idolatry faſtned on him: he that ſhamed not to ſay [No Chriſtian] and hath beene faine ſince to eat his word, he durſt not ſay an Idolater; that, would ſoone have rebounded backe upon himſelfe. And no Idolater is a Chriſtian; nor Chriſtian, an Idolater, I am ſure.

This firſt vantage then we have here yet: Alwayes the very ſtate of Kings, in it ſelfe, without any other addition is deare unto GOD (we ſee.) Aſſuerus here doth aſſure us of that, who was thus preſerved, onely becauſe he was a King, and for no cauſe elſe. But I hold clearely, a Chriſtian King to be more than a King; more than a Pagan King: and ſo Major Aſſuero hic, and de majore majus gaudium; and ſo wee, of the twaine, more cauſe to rejoyce.

Next, as both Kings, yet not both like; ſo both in danger, and that not like neither. The danger of in diebus illis, was but of hands-laying: the danger of this, of hands laid. On Aſſuerus, no hands were laid: it came not to that. It came to that, here. On they were, come off how they can. Thoſe in the Text, but ſought: They on the day, found what they ſought. It was paſt quæſiverunt; it was plaine miſerunt. That was the caſe, this day. No ſuch thing in thoſe dayes. Aſſuerus was not offered the point of a naked dagger; not taken by the throat; not graſped and tugged with, till both lay on the floore. All his danger was but de futuro; ſought to have beene, and might have beene; but was not. This was de præſenti, preſent danger, of being preſently made away, in a corner, by the hands of bloudie wretches; that not onely ſought to lay, but found that they ſought, and did lay. Now, the greater the danger, the greater the joy for the delivery (ever;) and ſo our Ioy the greater. For, no compariſon betweene the dangers: that is cleare.

No more was there betweene the Actors, by whom the danger grew. Bigthan, bad enough (I grant;) but behold a worſe, a bigger than Bigthan here. Bigthan and his fellow might have gone to ſchoole to them. They were angry, and ſo ſhewed themſelves to be, and the leſſe dangerous for that. Theſe were as angry as they, but ſhewed it not. They brake forth in termes, that it came to Mardochai's eare. Theſe had learnt their leſſon better; not an evill terme came from them, no ſhew of anger appeared, but faire and falſe ſemblant all. So much the more likely to doe miſchiefe (ſay I;) ſo much the more like Iudas's treaſon, the worſt that ever was. For, no betraying, to betraying with a kiſſe. Give me angry Bigthan, rather than fawning Iudas: to welcome one kindly, and ſet one privily, with Iudas watch-word, This is He, lay hands on him; from ſuch, GOD deliver us. The more the parties ſuch, the more our joy, You eſcaped out of their hands.

Matth. 26. 48.

Both

Both Kings were delivered: ſo farre, equall. But then againe, great inequalitie in the manner; very great. That, in thoſe dayes, by a Mardochai: All was regular, went the common ordinary way, upon a diſcovery. Quotidiana ſunt hæc, to be ſeene, to be read in every Chronicle. But on this day, there was never a Mardochai to diſcover ought: Mardochai failed here. A conceit there was, ſomewhat ſhould have beene diſcovered in another kinde; but the plot it ſelfe, no diſcovery of it, till the very inſtant; till one appeared in armes, till out went the dagger, till the dagger diſcovered it ſelfe: GOD was faine to be Mardochai, to ſupply his part: though he were wanting, GOD was not. By whom (it is true) Aſſuerus was delivered: but, You delivered, after a more ſtrange manner. (I report me to all.) Now, the more ſtrange the manner, the more the joy ever. Then, Mardochai did ſomwhat toward it: This, came meerely from God; neither Mardochai, nor any elſe; ſitting in the gate, or out of it; there or any where elſe.

Yet let me adde this, that you might be beholden to GOD (even that way too) He hath fitted you that way alſo. This fifth of Auguſt, without a diſcovery: the fifth of November, with a diſcovery. So, with Mardochai; and without Mardochai, hath GOD wrought for You, in diebus hiis: that we might every way be bound to Him, and that, every way, our joy might be full.

Now, in both, as the hand of GOD was ſtretched over both Kings to ſave them; So was the ſame hand ſtretched out againſt both thoſe, that ſought their lives, to bring them to evill ends; both which may ever be the ends of ſuch beginnings. There was no wonder in theirs; there, all was done by a Legall courſe, a faire judiciall proceeding, they indited, convict and executed by courſe of juſtice. Good LORD, with what eaſe was Aſſuerus delivered, even ſitting ſtill! There was no wonder, in this, at all. So was it not here: Here was old pulling, and wreſtling, and weapons out, and drawing of bloud; and a kinde of battell fought dubio Marte, a good while, but at laſt the victory fell on Your ſide. And this winning of it, as it were, and ſeeing Your enemies lye dead at Your feet, made the delivery the more wonderfull; and ſo the more welcome; and ſo Your Ioy the greater. And if one might take joy in the fall of his enemies, the fall of yours was worſe for the manner. For, they died not like Subjects, but as open enemies or rebels: Not as penitent ſinners, but as damned reprobates, loſt not onely their lives, but their ſoules too.

Thus, every way, doth this day goe beyond thoſe: the King beyond, as a Prince Chriſtian: the danger beyond; for, the extremitie neerer. The parties that ſought, beyond; for, the leſſe they appeared, the more perillous they were: the delivery beyond; for, without any Mardochai at all: And their fall beyond; for, ſtrucken downe in the place, like ranke rebels; and tumbled into hell like reprobates, without ſpace or grace, without fruit or ſigne of repentance. And, if thus many wayes beyond, allow for every of theſe, a degree of Ioy, and I have that I would.

Of this writing, one ſpeciall end was for Ioy. A double joy: for either verſe, one. 1 In the former, Rege incolumi gaudendum; Ioy for the Kings ſafety. 2 And in the latter, Stratis hoſtibus gaudendum; joy, that his enemies lay where they lay, on the floore.

For the Kings ſafetie we to rejoyce; but without a Mardochai. He parts not with GOD, in ours: it is entire without him. So it is not in the Text: GOD and Mardochai, there; here, GOD alone, and Ioy in GOD alone.

Then, for Stratis hoſtibus, in regard of them. Firſt, that they ſped not; then, that they were ſped themſelves: that their anger was vana and ſine viribus; did no hurt: that GODS anger to them for it, was both ſure; paid them home: and ſwift; did it out of hand. That they fell; and fell before him: He ſaw them lye ſlaine at his feet: Pſal. 91. 11. that his eye ſaw his deſire upon his enemies; nay more than his deſire, that he was faine to pray for them, that had not the grace to doe it for themſelves.

A little after in this Booke, for the ſaving of the Queene from the laying on of Haman's hands, we finde, there was great joy and a double feaſt, the fourteenth and fifteenth of Adar. And can we imagine, but there muſt needs be as great (nay, Feſtum magis duplex) for the King here? If for Her, a ſtranger: for their owne naturall Liege, much more. Was ſo with them In diebus illis, and with us to be In diebus hiis. Chap. 9. 17, 18.

Or rather in die hoc; For (there) it was plurall, more dayes went to it than one; many dayes in doing: here, it was dispatched sooner. No diebus here; begun, acted, ended, all in a day; nay, halfe a day, betweene noone and night. And this shall be the first, that it was not long in doing. Short as it was, yet may I take upon me, there is as great oddes betweene this day and them, as is betweene the fifth of Auguſt (ours) and the fifteenth of Adar, that is, December (theirs:) that is, betweene a long and a ſhort, a Summers and a Winters-day.

There is not, in all the Scriptures, a booke that expreſſeth ſo plentifull joy, for Chap. 9. 21. the ſaving of a Prince, as doth this of Eſther: the whole ninth Chapter (in a manner) is ſpent in it. There is gaudium and lætitia, and hilaritas, and convivium, and tripudium. I cannot tell how many times over; and the day chriſtened by the name of Dies feſtus, a Feſtivall day. There is joy in Suſan, the Citie; there is joy in the Villages; there is joy in the hundred twenty ſeven, every Province of them; joy all over: and all this allowed, nay, a Statute made, to keepe it. So, a day of joy to all poſteritie, and all this Chronicled ſo. A joy in the Chronicles; what would you more?

Hence have we warrant for this day of ours; and for all and every of them, on this day of ours; the ſame joy full out, the ſame that was for that in every degree, let be for this; and more for this, as this is more (as hath beene ſhewed;) as by the ſeaſon of the yeare, the day is longer, the Sunne brighter, the skie clearer, the weather fairer, in Auguſt then December. As this caſe more famous, GOD'S might and mercie more marvellous; More fit for a Chronicle, more worthy to be engroſſed in the great roll, ours than theirs.

And in one we ſhall be above them, that we begin our joy in the houſe of GOD; whereas they in Perſia, had none to begin it in: Here doe we begin it, as GOD would have us begin it, in the Houſe of prayers, with prayers.

A prayer for Bigthan and Tharez, we cannot (either theſe of the Text, or thoſe of the day:) But, a prayer, that by their examples, both Ruina præcedentium may be admonitio ſequentium, the deſtruction of thoſe that are gone before, may be the inſtruction of all thoſe that ſhall come after. This the firſt part; and if this will not be, the ſecond. So may they ever finde, that ſo ſeeke; If ſeeke as they ſought, finde as they found.

A prayer for Mardochai, that for his ſo ſitting in the gate, he may ſit in a better place: that ſo, many may follow him in his good example.

A prayer for the King. But firſt a praiſe (the principall cauſe we come hither for.) Praiſed be GOD ever, that ſaved in Perſia, Aſſuerus from his two: that ſaved in Scotland, your Majeſtie from your two: the SAVIOVR of Kings, Maximè fidelium. Then, the prayer: That thoſe dayes, and theſe dayes may never faile him, nor hee ever ſee other.

No more Bigthans (good LORD) but Mardochai's for them. That Mardochai may never faile him; but, if he doe, that Thou wouldſt not (no more than this day Thou didſt:) but ever ſave, ever deliver, ever preſerve him, and make them that ſeeke his ruine, finde their owne. Either hang aloft, as theſe in the Text; or lye on the floore, as thoſe of the day.

And even ſo, let the end of this, be the beginning of the other, even of the joy of the whole day. For the day, for it, for this happie event on it; for the King, the Subject of it; To the cauſe of it, and of all our joy, GOD the Father by which, and through CHRIST in the unitie of the Holy Spirit, be all bleſſing, honour, praiſe, glory and thankſgiving, this day and all dayes, for ever and ever.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVINDSORE, On the V. of August, A. D. MDCXXII.

I SAM. CHAP. XXIV. VER. V.

And the men of David ſaid unto him: See, the day is come, whereof the Lord ſaid unto thee; Behold, I will deliver thine enemie into thine hand, and thou ſhalt doe to him, as it ſhall ſeeme good to thee. Then David aroſe, and cut off the lappe of Sauls garment privily.

6. And afterward David was touched in his heart, becauſe he had cut off the lappe which was on Sauls garment.

7. And he ſaid unto his men, the LORD keepe me from doing that thing unto my Maſter the LORDS Anointed, to lay my hand upon him: For, he is the Anointed of the LORD.

8. So David overcame his ſervants with theſe words, and ſuffered them not to riſe againſt Saul. So Saul roſe up out of the cave, and went away.

ECCE Dies veniet, Behold the day is come: So beginnes the Text: ſo ſay Davids men. And Behold the day is come; ſo may wee beginne, and as truly ſo ſay of this Day, as ever did they of that. The firſt words agree well: So doe the laſt. Abiit Rex viam ſuam, the King roſe up and went his way: ſo ends the Text and ſo ended this day too. And not onely the firſt and laſt words, but the midſt and all fall out as fitly. For indeed, what is the whole Text, but a report of a King, in danger to have beene made away, and that cloſely in a cave, and a motion made to that end, and a knife drawen, and Davids men up againſt him and all? Yet (ſee the goodneſſe of GOD!)

the King did well enough for all that; and went his way, without any hurt done him.

And, comes not this home to the day? Saul at Engedi, in the cave there, may he not ſeeme (as I may ſay) a type of His Majeſtie, at Saint Iohnſton, ſhut up (to uſe Sauls words) in the cloſe corner there? In ſtead of a knife, was there not a dagger drawen there, and ſomewhat elſe; and more ſought than a corner of his cloake? And, as Davids men roſe here; So, roſe there not a popular tumult there?

And yet, being in that extremitie, was he not delivered out of their bloudy hands? and did not all end, as the Text ends, The King roſe up and went his way? And this our meeting now, in this publike ſolemne manner, is to no other end, but to rejoyce together in the preſence of GOD, and to render unto Him our anniverſarie ſacrifice of praiſe and thanks, that Ecce dies venit, Behold the day is come, wherein he ſcaped ſo faire, and went his way ſo happily.

And, ſhall we not withall, put our incenſe to our ſacrifice (that is) adde our prayers to our praiſes; that, as this day there was, ſo ſtill and ever, a way may be made him to eſcape all his dangers?

King Saul (here) in the Text, was the firſt King, hat ever the people of God had. In him (the firſt) would God have all ſucceeding Kings to reade their deſtinie: that as they are placed high; ſo, their high place is no exemption from danger; a provoking it, rather. Here now, Saul is in danger in the vale Engedi. Once before had we him in as great a plunge; and that was in the hill Hachila: Abiſhai would faine have had a blow at him; and but one blow. But David came then betweene with his Ne perdas.

1 Sam. 26. 8.

That did not ſo well fit our turne. It was night then: Saul was in his bed aſleepe. That, was not our caſe: this here comes neerer. This fell on the day. Saul was awake: So was His Majeſtie. We may ſay Ecce dies, Behold it was day, and that day is now come. Betweene them both, they make up thus much; that ſleeping or waking; by night, or by day; in Hachila, the high lands, in Engedi the low vallies, out of danger they goe not, if the hand of God be not over them, as here over Saul it was.

The Diviſion. Firſt and laſt, we may recapitulate the whole Text into one word. It is all but a Delivrie. Ecce tradam in manus, a Deliverie into their hands: Ecce abiit, a Deliverie out of them. Which two make the two maine parts of the Text. The former, the Deliverie into, laſts to the laſt verſe: And, in the end of the laſt, comes the latter, the deliverie out of; The King roſe up out of the cave, and went his way.

I. Ecce tradam in manus is of two ſorts: 1 Into Davids hands, and 2 into his mens hands. Or thus: Sauls danger here, is double: 1 One the danger of Davids mens motion; 2 the other, of their Commotion (for, riſing they were, and David ſuffered them not to riſe.)

1. In their Motion. 1 What was moved to David by his men: and 2 what David did upon it. That which was moved, was mittere manum, to lay hands on the King. That, he did upon it, was, he went and layd his hand on Sauls mantle, and cut off an end of it, and that was all. This, the fact: then, the Cenſure of this fact.

When David had done this, what he thought of it: 1 What he, and 2 what his men. He thought not well of it, he did penance for it, his heart ſmite him for doing but ſo much. His men thought not well of it neither; but ex alio capite they, for not doing more than ſo.

2. What followed of this? The neglect of their motion, turned his men to a Commotion: they were riſing againſt Saul, if they had not beene ſtay ed. The ſecond danger, this: farre the worſe of the twaine: The riſing of Davids men, than the drawing of Davids knife. Thus farre the Epitaſis.

II. Then followes the Cataſtrophe. For, the iſſue was, Davids men were ſtayed by him, and kept from riſing: Davids victorie. And how? by certaine words ſpeaking. Thoſe words are in the third verſe: Davids ſpell, I may call them.

And

And upon all this followed, the King was ſaved, twice ſaved, from both dangers (thankes be to God) and away he went, ſafe without any harme. Onely, loſt a peece of his mantle: and I would never greater loſſe might come to him.

Thus lye the parts in this order; which, when all is done, we muſt crave leave to reflect upon, and review againe; to ſhew, that the Ecce of this our Day is farre above the Ecce of that of theirs. III.

Now, by the ſpeciall providence of GOD, it ſo fell out, that all this was not paſſed and done in ſilence. There was arguing the point, reaſoning on both ſides. The whole Text is but a kinde of Dialogue betweene Davids men and him, what was to be done with Saul their enemie, now they had him in the cave; kill him, or let him goe? And it fell out well, that this point was thus argued. For, out of this their debate, might thoſe two wretched men this day have learned (if they had had grace) and may all true men and good ſubjects learne, what to doe or not to doe, in like caſe. For, a cleere reſolution here is, to be held for ever, taken out of Davids Abſit here, God forbid that ever any ſhould lay his hands on the Lords Annointed. Yea, though he ſhould catch him in a cave (or as good as a cave, as this day he was.)

Nay further, GOD ſo providing, here falls a matter in upon the By (of Sauls mantle) that removes it from the maine (Sauls perſon) quite. Sauls perſon, David touched not; went but to his mantle. And even for going but to that, did his heart ſmite him. Which (by à minore ad majus) puts this queſtion paſt all queſtion, as being a protection for the Kings robe: and, if for it, for his perſon much more.

And let me ſay two things of this Text to you: One, that as Saul was the firſt King; ſo, this the firſt caſe that ever was, wherein the making away of a King, was put to the queſtion. So, the leading caſe (as they call it) to all the reſt. Reſolved here by David (and we cannot reſolve our ſelves by a better) and reſolved once, reſolved for ever. No more Quære's of it now. 1.

The other, that it is the onely caſe (this) that ever I read of in Scripture, of Dixit Dominus alleaged for killing a King; of killing Kings by Divinitie. The more worthy it is your attention, the neerer it comes to the late phrenſie of this Age of ours. 2.

And two uſes there be of it, as the chiefe perſons in it are two. 1 In Saul, to let Kings ſee their danger: 2 In David, to let ſubjects ſee their dutie. To let Kings ſee their danger, that they may looke up continually to their Deliverer out of evill hands. In David, to let ſubjects ſee their dutie, and the extent of their dutie, as to themſelves, ſo to others.

Two dangers were like to befall Saul here. From David firſt: His men perſwaded him to diſpatch Saul: perſwaded him, but prevailed not; He did it not: So Saul ſcaped once. Second: when that would not doe, they were upon riſing (themſelves) to have done it. David diſſwaded them: diſſwaded them and prevailed; They did it not neither: There he ſcaped twice.

In which two, David is two wayes our example, to learne us, the two duties (I ſpake of.) 1 Would not doe it himſelfe: 2 would not ſuffer others to doe it: Would not be perſwaded by others to it: did diſſwade others from it. I will ſay with our Saviour, Vade tu & fac ſimiliter, Let every good ſubject goe and doe likewiſe. Neither doe it, nor ſuffer it to be done: And he ſhall be according to David's, who was a man according to Gods owne heart. Luke 10.37.

Saul

I. The first deliverie: Ecce tradam in manus.

SAVL was now in the cave. What Davids men would have had him doe to Saul. Even what was good in his eyes (a good mannerly terme; but even what pleased him.) What is that? What meant they by it? The meaning is, they would have had him lay hands upon Saul. Plaine by Davids answere: What? lay hands on him? GOD forbid. More plaine yet, by Davids report of it to Saul (the eleventh Verse) And some bade me kill thee. Lo, there yee have it in plaine English.

To make this motion seeme good in his eyes, they use here a perilous motive; or rather three in one. 1 Inimicum tuum, the motive of enmitie or deadly feud. 2 Ecce dies venit, now is the time come; the motive of opportunitie. 3 And de quo dixit Dominus, the motive of GODS word, of doing it by Divinitie.

1 Inimicum tuum

Inimicum tuum: that, is the ground of all: (a motive well beseeming them that make it; even fit for a Souldiers mouth:) he is your enemie, he would kill you; what should you doe but kill him? should not we kill them that would kill us? This goes current in the Campe, this is bonum in oculis, a good motion in their eyes.

Now, if this hold for good, if an enemie be to be slaine; It is sure, Saul was Davids enemie: GOD Himselfe calls him so, Inimicum tuum: they be Gods owne words, one that (even as David saith himselfe) hunted for his soule (Verse 12.) And, even at this very instant had him in chase, and was so eager on it, as up the rockes he went after him, among the wild goates (ver. 3.) and followed him so hard, he was faine to take a cave (here.) In which cave, what taking he was in, ye may read in the LVII. Psal. (made, when he fled into this cave) even at Miserere Mei Deus, miserere mei: One miserere, would not serve him; in a greater agonie of feare. For, if Saul had but knowen it, David had never gone his way thence, as Saul did his. It is well knowen, Saul sought his life. That was not all: there was a further matter than so. Will you heare it from Saul himselfe? Looke to the 21. ver. I know (saith Saul) thou shalt be King after me. Yea, shall! then was it inimicum tuum (indeed) in another sense; then was Sauls life, an enemie to Davids rising. David stands in his owne light, if he doe it not. Doe it then, and besides the assurance of Your life, the crowne is Yours. These two layd together, any would wonder, what eyes David had, that this seemed not good in his eyes. And, this for inimicum tuum.

2 Ecce dies venit.

But, many an enemie scapes with his life, because we meet not with an Ecce dies, a fit time and place to doe it in. Verily, opportunitie it selfe is is a shrewd motive. The common saying is, Occasio facit furem: that which one was farre from, would never have imagined, there will come so faire an offer, such a faire shoote (as they say) as will make a man doe that, which but for such an occasion, he would never once have thought on. We are all to pray to GOD to take from us the opportunitie of sinning: So fraile we are, it is no sooner offered, but we are readie to embrace it (GOD helpe us.) What say they then? Why Ecce here is a time, and here is a cave, as fit a place as can be for such a motion. Such an opportunitie, as if you take it not, you shall not meete with againe, all your life long. To have your enemie light into your hands, in a darke cave, where you may dispatch him, and no body the wiser who did it, or how it was done. Well then, wisedome is seene in no one thing more, than in taking opportunitie. Goe to, shew your selfe a wise man: you know, what you have to doe.

Ecce tradam.

Nay, it is not onely Ecce dies, but Ecce tradam; and there, is an Ecce. For, there is much in tradam; he is even delivered, even taken, and put into your hands:

I weigh

I weigh the word tradam. It is one thing to ſay, Your enemie is fallen; another to ſay, He is delivered. Falling is caſuall; Deliverie imports a deliberate act of an Agent to doe it, to deliver him: So, this is more than chance, more than hap-hazard: It is not cecidit, it is tradam.

Againe; One thing to ſay delivered: another, delivered by God (now I weigh the perſon.) Ego tradam; it is God that ſpeakes it. One may be delivered, and by man, by ſome falſe traitor (it was not Sauls caſe, this, it was the Kings.) But here, God is the deliverer גואל the giver. Take him then as donum Dei. God hath even given you him, and having given Him, would have you take Him, and I hope it will ſeeme good in your eyes ſo to doe, and not let GOD give you Him for nothing. Ego tradam.

Nay, yet there is more. (Now, I come to weigh dixit Dominus.) For one may be delivered by God, ſeeing it, and ſaying nothing to it, but ſuffering it: by Gods permiſſion. So are all things. Of many of which (though) God ſaith nothing, ſpeaks never a word: but of this, God ſpake to you before, ſpake to you with His owne mouth, and ſpake it with an Ecce; Ecce tradam: gave you warning of it, gave you His word for it, I will deliver him: and is now as good as His word, hath delivered him. See if He have not. 3 De quo dixit Dominus.

Will ye collect theſe three, 1 Not caſually fallen into your hands, but purpoſely delivered: 2 And delivered not by man, but by God Himſelfe: 3 And by GOD, not quovis modo, at adventure, but plainely propheſying and promiſing He would ſo doe. Of this (ſure) God muſt needs be the Author that He foretells thus, and promiſes before-hand. So have you (here) God made acceſſorie, nay, principall to the murther of a King.

And now are we come indeed to the perillous point of all. This (lo) is it. They would have Saul made away; and for this, they alledge de quo dixit Dominus, as if God had beſpoken a ſet day for the doing of it. This, goes to the quicke. Inimicum tuum is but a revelation of fleſh and bloud, that; but dixit Dominus, that is the will of our heavenly Father. So, not onely lawfull now, but a matter of conſcience, to kill Saul אמר, God hath ſaid it.

Where, firſt, you ſee, it is no new thing, this, to kill Kings by Divinitie. This geere is but newly raked up from hell againe. It is but the old divell new come abroad, that had beene in the world before. For, ever ſince there have beene Kings over Gods people, this hath beene abroach; broached firſt in the cave here at Engedi, and dixit Dominus pretended for it (you ſee) in the firſt Kings daies of all.

The griefe is, they were not Sauls, they were Davids men, the better ſide, that alledge this. But Davids men all, are not of Davids minde: Johns Diſciples ſometimes are found with the Phariſees; and the Apoſtle ſaith, Of our ſelves, there ſhall ariſe men ſpeaking perverſe things. Therefore never mervaile at it. Goe not after the men: Goe after the Maſter, David himſelfe. Mat. 9. 14. Acts 20. 30.

Well yet, I muſt needs ſay for theſe good fellowes (here) they goe roundlyer to the point, than doth Suarez, or any of them have beene blundering about this geere of late. They be all triflers to Davids men, here. For, upon the matter, all they have beene able to ſay, is; it hath beene done. King Eglon was killed; ſo was Athalia. Neither of them, a true lawfull Prince (as God would have it:) uſurpers both. So, nothing to the matter. But, ſay they had beene lawfull: yet all this is but Homo fecit; it is not Deus dixit. Never a dixit Deus comes from them. Nothing but poore Paſce oves: which (ſure) is a full unlikely Text to perſwade a man to become a butcher, and cut his ſheepes throtes. One Abſit of Davids here, One Ne perdas, One quis erit innocens, able to daſh twentie ſuch, and all they can ſay, to peeces. Not one of them comes off to the point, as doe theſe in the Text, with dixit Dominus, Gods expreſſe word for it. Iud. 3. 21. 2 Kings 11. 11. Ioh. 21. 16.

There is no remedie, we muſt ſtay a little at this, at dixit Dominus. What He ſaith, we may: nay, we muſt doe. To His dixit, there is no contradixit. If GOD ſpeake once, let all fleſh keepe ſilence. Zech. 2. 13.

I will not trouble you with, when God ſpake this, or where. Extant it is not.

Yet

Yet ſeeing David traverſes it not, denies not but that God ſpake it, we will take it for good, that they truly alledged GOD. For, it is not unlikely, that at ſome time when David was in ſome great diſtreſſe, GOD might ſend to him by the hands of Nathan, or Gad, his Seers, he ſhould take a good heart to him, he ſhould be ſo farre from being delivered into Sauls hands, as the day ſhould come, Saul ſhould be delivered into his, to doe with him what ſeemed good in his eyes.

Well then, take it, God ſaid all this: and all this might God ſay, and yet Saul not touched. Ye ſhall ſee as little force in this Dominus dixit, as in their Homo fecit. Neither of them, to the purpoſe they are brought. You ſhall ſee withall, what it is when Sword-men will be medling with Dominus dixit, with our profeſſion; what trim conſequences we ſhall have, to make, What ſeemes good in Davids eyes, and to murther Saul, to be all one. And withall, that it is good for Kings to be learned, and to be learned in Gods Law. For, had not David beene the better Divine, he might well have beene overtaken and made beleeve, there is a way to deſtroy Kings, even by the word of God.

To ſcan them a little. Dixit Dominus, God ſaid. What ſaid He? The day ſhould come: well, it is come: that GOD would deliver Saul into his hands: well, that is done too. And David ſhould doe to him, what? What ſeemed good in his eyes. What is that? To deſtroy Saul? No indeed: Bonum in oculis, will beare no ſuch matter. We might diſpatch all in a word, all is put upon Davids eyes, and in his eyes it ſeemed not good. But to touch them ſhortly.

Facies ei quod bonum eſt in oculis tuis.

Firſt, facies ei here, injoynes nothing, leaves him but to himſelfe: that is all can be made of it. Nay, they deſire no more, but ſo to be left. And when one is ſo left, what then, may he doe what he liſt? Suppoſe, he liſt to doe that which is evill or forbidden? Adam will tell you, no: That conſequence we all pay full deere for. It undid him and us all. Gods ſo leaving us, gives not any leave to doe any thing that evill is; puts but power in our hands, to trie how we will uſe it. For, when power is ſo put, Ipſa ratio dictat, even by the rule of reaſon, we are ſo to uſe it, as we take the better, and leave the worſe ever, and reach not our hand to the forbidden tree.

Not, bonum in oculis: but in oculis tuis.

When God leaves a man to doe that which is good in his eyes, he had beſt wipe his eyes, ſee they dazle not. If they doe, that may be bonum in oculis, which is not bonum indeed. They be not all one, theſe two, [1] Bonum in oculis, and [2] Bonum: Take heed of that. That which is evill, may ſeeme good to an evill eye. And no man is ſo fond, to thinke, God would have any evill done.

Therefore He ſaith not, bonum in oculis, and ſtayes there: but, He adds tuis; in oculis tuis. For, much is, as the partie whoſe the eyes are. For, as the partie is, ſo is his eye. And the partie here, is David. God would not have ſaid this to every one. To David Hee did, and He knew what He did, and that Saul was ſafe enough for all that. He knew his eye, was ſingle and good, that nothing that was evill in Gods eyes, would ſeeme good in his. He would never have ſaid ſo much to Saul, of David: not to Davids men, of Saul. Never have ſaid to David, Quod bonum eſt in oculis tuorum: If it had beene what ſeemed good in their eyes, Saul had beene gone. No, He had not ſo good a conceipt of their eyes: of Davids He had. To him therefore he ſaid it: and he deceived not Gods expectation. Pepercit tibi oculus meus (ſaith he at the XI. Verſe.) All then reſolving into Davids eyes; it ſeemed good in his eyes, to ſpare Saul. And, this is ſure, they have not Davids eyes in their heads, to whom it ſeemes otherwiſe. For, to doe what ſeemed good in his eyes, was, to doe Saul no harme. Looke to tuis then, that the eyes be Davids, and all is well.

In oculis tuis non tuorum.

Then, ſeeing Davids eyes are ſo cleere and ſo good, how were it to be wiſhed, David would ſee with no other eyes, but his owne: would ſtill doe, what is good in his owne, not in his mens eyes!

So this was their Elench. It ſeemed good in their blaud-ſhotten eyes, to lay hands on Saul; and they ſtrongly imagined, what ſeemed good in their blaud-ſhotten eyes, would have ſeemed ſo, in his too. The ſequele ſhewes, it did not. Why ſtand we any longer then upon it? but leaving the Motion, let us now ſee how it moved him, what he did upon it.

Some

Some thinke it moved him, till he came to the very puſh; and then God ſtrucke his heart, and his heart ſtrucke him, and ſo his minde changed. Others thinke, that it ſtirred him not a whit (for the blow came after all was done.) Yet, as if it had moved him, he moved upon it. Somewhat to ſatisfie them, he would ſeeme to doe ſomewhat. So, up he roſe and toward Saul he made, גלם, as ſoftly and as ſecretly as he could. And when he came at him, cloſe behind him, out went his knife, as if he meant to uſe it. (His men, I dare ſay, hoped, to ſome other end.) Stay here. And he that had ſeene David thus, in this wiſe, comming cloſe behinde the Kings backe with his knife drawen in his hand, would he not have taken him for Ravilliac? What difference? I promiſe you, this was not Bonum in oculis, no very good ſight. And then knowing, Saul was his mortall enemie, and even now at this very inſtant time come forth to ſeeke his life, and ſeeing them thus in a blinde cave, and David hard at his backe with a naked knife, would he not have given Saul for dead, paſt (for ever) abiit viam ſuam?

b What David did upon this motion.

Well: when all came to all. Firſt, it ſeemed not good in Davids eyes, to uſe ſpeare or ſword, but his knife. Why, a knife will doe miſchiefe enough. 2. Then, to goe to worke with it, not punctim, but caſim, not with the point, but with the edge onely; thruſt not, cut onely. Yet that will hurt too. 3. But cut, what? Neither fleſh nor skin, not them: Nay, not his ſhirt or doublet; his mantle onely, and but a peece of it. 4. And, it was no great peece neither, he cut no skirt: It was ſo ſmall, it was not miſſed. Sauls fellowes ſpied it not, till David came after them, called to them, held it up and ſhewed it them: and then they looked well, and ſaw a peece was gone, but not before. The word כנף, πτερύγιον, ala, ſignifieth a wing: and thoſe (we know) are but additionalls, no part of the entire garment: the garment is whole without them. So, it was not in the whole cloth neither, he cut. His knife he drew, but drew no bloud with it; went not to Saul himſelfe, his perſon, but to his mantle; tooke but an edge of that and away he goes: and ſo may Saul goe his way, for any hurt, David hath done him. And this (lo) is all, came of the motion; and more than this, ſeemed not good in Davids eyes.

What, and is it but this? This and no more? No more but a ſhred of his mantle, and is that all? All, yea: and too much of that too. For, now it followes, in the ſecond verſe, when David reflected upon what he had done, how, this he had done, ſeemed in his eyes. It ſeemed good to them to doe but thus much, or rather thus little, and after it was done, it ſeemed not good to him, not this little he had done neither: but it even ſeemed good to him, to repent when he had done it, as little as it was, or as it ſeemeth to us to be. Repent? Yea, that he had done no more. Nay, that he had done thus much; had cut his mantle, had cut at all. That which any would thinke, was highly to be commended in him, he went no further, you ſhall ſee him doe penance for it, as if he had gone too farre, as if he ſhould not have gone ſo farre as that.

c His cenſure of it.

Will ye ſee David doe penance indeed for it? Penance I ſay, in all the parts, the Schoolemen make of it. 1 Contritio cordis, in this verſe: his heart ſmit him for it. 2 Confeſſio oris, in the next; The Lord keepe me from doing more, this was too much. 3 Satisfactio operis, in the laſt verſe, in making amends, by not ſuffering his men to riſe, but converting them from ſo ſinfull a purpoſe. And beſides, in leaving behind him ad perpetuam rei memoriam, a monument of all this, a Pſalme, מכתם that is, a golden Pſalme (ſo he calls it) the LVII. Pſalme, made as the Inſcription ſhewes, at this his being in the cave. Of it, and there, both in word and deed: of ſaying deſtroy him not, which is the title of the Pſalme. Though ye get Saul in a cave, yet deſtroy him not. Other Pſalmes there be of the ſame title; but the LVII, that is the firſt of them all, purpoſely ſet upon this occaſion, and at this time and place.

1 His contrition. Percuſſit cor ſuum.

For his Contrition. It is ſaid, after he had done it, his heart ſmit him, and told him, why? Even but for making a hole in Sauls mantle. It is ſtrange, that his heart, that (one would thinke) ſhould have ſprung for joy, that he did no more but that: falls to ſtrike, and to beat him for doing but that: in ſtead of exultation, that he had done well, done the King no harme; a palpitation, a pang or paſſion of feare takes him, leſt he had done more than he could well anſwer. And, it is the more ſtrange, the great valiant David, one of the nine Worthies, whom neither the beare daunted nor the lion; who without all feare encountred the giant great Golias, and ſmit him downe; whoſe heart ſerved him, fainted not then: here, for doing I wote not what, a ſhred of Sauls mantle, it ſerves him not; but beats and throbs, as, in feare, it is uſuall for the heart to doe.

Bonarum mentium eſt (ſaith Gregorie:) Good mindes will ſometimes feare and acknowledge a fault, where none is. Peradventure David doth ſo; is more ſcrupulous, than needs. Nay indeed. For, to doe but this, to the garment of any private man, ſuch as our ſelves, to cut or to marre it, is a treſpaſſe (I take it) and will beare an action. And if ſo; then muſt it needs be a higher, a more heynous offence to offer it, to any the Kings robes; to mangle or deface them in any ſort. The materiall part of it, cannot (ſure) be juſtified. Only the formall part (as in Schooles we ſpeake) non tam quid, quàm quo animo, that may in ſome ſort ſeeme to qualifie his act, and helpe to excuſe him; that he did it, with no other minde, nor to no other end, but, by the little ſhred taken off, to make it appeare, he did not ſo much as he could have done, if his minde had beene ſo bad to Saul, as Doeg and ſuch as he, would faine make him beleeve: teſte vel ſegmento hoc, which he gave in, by way of evidence (verſe 12.) When I cut off this lappe, I kill'd thee not; as, going a little farther, I might have done: Might have done, but did not. Might have gone otherwiſe to worke: with a ſword and not a knife; with the point, and not the edge; thruſt, and not cut: or, if cut, taken away a collop of his fleſh, as well as a corner of his cloake. Yet, for all this, though his heart were privie to no evill intent, it ſmit him though. For, in caſes touching the King ſo neere, it is not enough to ſay, I meant not that, but this. So, a fault it was; and as for a fault, his heart ſmit him.

There is no ſmiting, but for a fault. Specially, not of the heart. For, the heart ſtrikes not us, but it is it ſelfe ſtricken firſt. And if you aske, who ſtrikes it? that doth GOD: for, this (of the heart) is nothing elſe, but the reverberation of Gods ſtroke, His knocke at our hearts, to fore-thinke us of what we have done amiſſe, when we have cut where we ſhould not.

And it is no light fault, the heart ſuffers for. The heart is the chiefe part, and the Eccles. 15. 57. blow of it is the greateſt blow. Give me (ſaith the Wiſeman) πᾶσαν πληγὴν, any ſtripe, any griefe, rather than the griefe of the heart. Cardiaca paſſio is the worſt paſſion of all. Therefore, as a fault; ſo, no light fault it was.

2 Sam. 24. 10. We may patterne it with the numbring of the people, after. Then, it ſmit him, too; and then he cried, Peccavi valdè: and the ſame reaſon is of both, as miſgiving him in both, he had in both done farre otherwiſe than he ſhould. But this (here) was the Pſal. 105. 15. firſt blow, the firſt diſcipline given him, as if he had gone too neere Saul; as if Nolite tangere did reach further than the perſon, even to the robes Royall.

Luk. 18. 15. And herein is his contrition. For, we uſe to ſtrike our breſts with the Publican, becauſe we cannot come at our heart to ſtrike it, for not ſtriking us, when we made a fault. But, when the heart needs not be ſtricken for it, when it ſtrikes us firſt, when we
1 Kings 5. 38. feele plagam cordis (as Salomon calls it, in expreſſe words) upon making a fault; that our heart corrects us, gives us diſcipline for it; then is our penance begun, then is our Contrition in a good way.

Now Good Lord, if but for a ſlit in Sauls cloake, his heart went and came thus; how would it have taken on, how contrite would it have beene, if his hand had happened to ſerve a little, and done him any hurt! How many blowes then, what ſharpe penance for that!

Will ye now lay theſe together. How ſcrupulous, how full of feare David was, good men men were, in that world: Not his mantle or cloke; not an edge of it. And how desperately audacious, how past all feare some are growen in this: Not cut (now) but thrust: or, if cut, cut thorow cloke, coat, skin and all. And, their heart never smites them for it. Nay there be, whose hearts would have strucken them, they had strucken no deeper: as did his, that he had hit the tooth, and missed the throat: and that, if the knife had beene in their hands, would have cut his skirts so close, the bloud should have runne downe the reines of his backe.

To such; David (in effect) saith thus: It was a lesse matter farre, that I did, than laying hands on Saul: If you will be ruled by me, meddle not so much as with laying hands on his mantle: if you had felt such a blow at your heart, as I did at mine, you would never offer. What? not mittere manum in illum? nay, not in pallium illius. Never talke of his person: So farre from that, as not to the very corner, but of his cloke.

And this is the remove I told you of at first. Thus did GOD suffer this à minore ad majus to fall out in this first attempt upon a King, that we might inferre thereof a further matter, and yet no other than our SAVIOVR CHRISTS owne inference. May not a man put a knife in Saul's rayment? by this blow of the heart (here) it seemes he may not: May he not? and is not the body more worth than the rayment, O yee of little faith? Matth. 6. 25.

Alway, this we may count of, and so conclude this point: that, he whose heart did thus smite him for doing this; he would not doe that, his heart smit him for, if it were to doe againe. Not goe thus farre, since he felt it at his heart, his going but thus farre; though nothing so farre, as his men would have had him. And so much for percussio cordis, Davids contrition.

VER. VII.

2 Davids confession.

All this while we goe but upon collection; feele but by his pulse, how his heart beateth. Will ye have an ore tenus, a full and a flat confession from him, heare him distinctly speake his minde to this very point, of laying hands on Saul; and give you the true reason, why he did it not; why, neither they, nor any should ever doe it? That followes now in the third verse.

What Davids men thought of it.

But first, let me tell you, this cut of Davids was not well taken, of either side. David (we see) thought not well of it: No more did his men. He, that he had done so much: They, that he had done no more. Evidently to be gathered, that his men when they saw, he made no more of their motion than so, that he came backe with his knife in one hand, and a snip of Saul's mantle in the other, and his knife had no bloud on it; and that he had done as much as he would doe, and no more was to be looked for at his hands (for, he looked like one heart-striken, that, if it had beene now to doe, would not have done that, neither:) they fell into a rage, a mutinie, a plaine rising; as resolved, if he would not, they would: If it were not good in his eyes, in theirs it was. It was not an end of a mantle should serve their turne; they would make him sure for ever going his way: as knowing, if he went away, he would prove worse than ever, as (indeed) so he did. So, when David was downe, his men were up.

2 Sauls second danger: Davids mens commotion.

Here now, is there a second danger toward Saul, from Davids men, a multitude ready to rise and runne upon him. Plaine: for, it is said in the next verse expressly, David suffered them not to rise. Which could not be said properly, unlesse they were on rising. But, an insurrection there was toward, and at Saul they would have beene, had not David interposed, and opposed himselfe, with these words which now follow, and with those words overcome them, and stayed them, that they did not rise.

Davids dissuasive to them.

So that, the words we now come to, serve for two purposes: Not so much for an Apologie for himselfe, that he did it not (though, that they doe too:) as for a Dissuasive, or Retentive to them; and in them, to us, and to all, that none should ever attempt it. You saw even now, how evill his heart brooked it: you shall heare (now) his mouth utterly renounce it, ever to hold that for good, that seemed good in their eyes.

First, a flat deniall it is. But, that is not so much: the manner of it, is all. It is not soberly ſoberly and coldly. No, I will not doe this thing. No: but it is with very much vehemencie, as the manner of men is, when they ſpeake in great paſſion. If ye marke it, it is with ſhort turnes: GOD forbid: What, Doe this? To my liege Lord? To GODS Anointed? lay my hands on him, and he GODS Anointed? A pawſe, at every word; as if he were halfe out of breath, as if his heart did beat ſtill. Weigh them a little: חלילה לים. There is not, in the Hebrew; there is not in any Tongue, ſo earneſt, ſo paſſionate an abnegation, abjuration, abrenunciation, as it: It was the word they uſed, when they rent their clothes at blaſphemie. We turne it, as our Tongue will beare, as the poverty of it will ſuffer us. To turne it to the quicke, there is more in it, than can in any one phraſe be expreſſed. So, not being able to doe it in one, the Interpreters have aſſayed to doe it in more than one. Every one, as their owne Idiome will beſt beare. The LORD keepe me from doing this thing (ſaith ours.) So, it is of the nature of a prayer againſt it. Μηδαμῶς, Out upon it, Away with it, By no meanes; Or Μὴ γένοιτο (ſaith the Greeke:) never let me, let any, never let it be done. So, it is an utter deteſtation. Abſit mihi à Domino (ſaith the Latine) Never let me come where GOD hath to doe, Accurſed be I of GOD, all evill come to me, if ever I doe as you would have me. So, is it a bitter execration. It beares all. Vnder one, it is both a hearty deprecation or prayer againſt it, a deepe deteſtation, and a feareſull execration, if ever he be brought to doe it, to lay hands on Saul. Theſe three will amount to an oath of Allegeance at leaſt.

The reaſons of it.

1 Domino meo.

2 Chriſto Domini.

You will ſay, here is paßion indeed; but it is reaſon, and not paßion, muſt carry things when all is done. Nay, here is reaſon too, and reaſon upon reaſon, couched in theſe words, why not to doe it. Domino meo, firſt; To his liege Lord, or Soveraigne: Not to him. Then, if that will not hold, Chriſto Domini, To the LORDS Anointed, not to him: That will. For, two he alleages; Domino, and Chriſto Domini; The firſt is from the earth, earthly; Domino meo, his earthly Lord. The ſecond, Chriſto Domini; Domini, is the LORD from heaven. The firſt he ſtands not on: this ſecond, that, he ſtands on; that, he iterates once and againe, ſets up his reſt upon that: as indeed, when wee have ſtudied all that ever we can, we ſhall never be able, to finde a more forcible. It can never be anſwered, if we care either for heaven or earth, Chriſtus or Dominus, CHRIST or GOD; any thing at all. It cannot be; the LORD of heaven ſhould ever endure (where his hand hath beene, to anoint) any hand ſhould be, to violate to doe any violence to that party. Doe but ſee how he utters it: Lay hands on him? and he GODS anointed? and ſo breakes off, as if he held it for a foule indignity, for a groſſe abſurdity in reaſon, once to queſtion it. So, for laying hands but on his mantle, Davids heart checked him: But, for laying hands on his perſon, that is paſt cor pœnitentis, it is vox clamantis that, μὴ γένοιτο, Abſit; farre be it from me; Never that, never.

Will ye now obſerve how, in this ſpeech, he returnes upon them and their three motives? GOD forbid, (ſaith he) to that, for which they alleaged Dixit Dominus. To their GOD ſaid, he ſayes, GOD forbid: anſwers Dominus dixit with Dominus interdixit. Of which GOD ſaid, No, no, GOD forbid, and that חלילה לו, forbid with a curſe. And what GOD did then forbid, he doth forbid ſtill; what, to him he did forbid, he doth to us (to every good body, that cares either for his bidding or forbidding it.) They that lay their hands care for neither. Doe that, which (as we uſe to ſay) is againſt all GODS forbode.

Then, for inimicum tuum, he replies to that with Chriſtum Domini: oppoſing, as his GOD forbid, to Dominus dixit; ſo, the LORDS Anointed, to his enemie, to weigh downe that. And ſo it doth: there is, there will ever be more vertue in Chriſtum Domini, to keepe him alive, than in any inimicum tuum, any enmitie in the world, to deſtroy him.

Laſt, where they ſay, Ecce tradam in manus, He is now even put into your hands; but not mittere manum (ſaith he) not to lay any hands on him. So that, for all Dominus dixit, or inimicum tuum, or Ecce tradam in manus, David is ſtill where he was, anſwers with reaſon, every part of their reaſon; GOD forbid, for any of them, or for all them, Saul ſhould have any harme, but goe his way quietly for him. And this for his Confeſſion.

But

But, you will remember I told you, all this was ſpoken not ſo much for Davids defence, why he did it not; as to let them ſee a good ground, why they ſhould not doe it; to keepe them from riſing. For, riſing they were, Riſing (ſay the LXX.) ἀναστάντα ἀνεῖλον, to have ſlaine Saul. They ſtarting up (as it were) in a kinde of indignity, that David had thus ſerved them, to doe that themſelves, which they hoped, hee would have done, but did not: for, done it ſhould be, if not by him, by them; that was reſolved. 3 Davids ſatisfaction.

Sure, had David had any edge to Saul's making away, here now was another, a ſecond, a faire opportunitie offered it ſelfe: as plauſible a pretence as he could have wiſhed, to have let Saul beene taken away in a militare tumult, a mutiny of Souldiers. As for David, he had refuſed it, he had good witneſſe of it: if they roſe rudely and ranne upon him, what could he doe withall? it was their fault, not his; hee had no hand in it. But, in all this, hee ſhewed himſelfe a moſt loyall ſubject, in thus putting himſelfe betweene Saul and them; in taking paines and even ſtriving till he had appeaſed them. Which ſheweth plainly, his heart was upright in all this buſineſſe, in ſaving the Kings life now ſecundò. Elſe, what he liſted not to doe himſelfe, he might have let them doe.

So then: doe it he will not; nor ſuffer it to be done, neither: neither per ſe, nor per alium, by himſelfe, or any other: thought it not enough to ſay, I will have no hand in it; but neither his owne, nor any mans hand elſe, if he can ſtay it. Not onely Abſit à me, but abſit à meis: firſt and laſt, Abſit (ſaith David) to both. Not, non faciam onely, let not me doe it: but μὴ γένοιτο, ne fiat, let not any, let it not be done. And what? not onely not mittere manum, but mittere de manu or de manibus (rather) ſend him out of their hands, ſend him away ſafe. To this ſecond end, were theſe words ſpoken by him, and (as the Text is) directed to his men; to quiet them, and not onely to cleare himſelfe. Now to Davids victory.

II. The ſecond delivery. Ecce abiit.

Et vicit verbo hoc, and he even overcame them with theſe words, ſaith the Text. Here, is Davids victory. But, if he overcame them, then was there a ſtrife. So hee even ſtrove to ſave Saul. And if he ſuffered them not to riſe, then were they buſtling up at leaſt, and ready to have riſen.

The Text-word in the Hebrew, is full of force: שסע, it is to cleave properly, or to rive in ſunder. So, either they were cluſtering (as the manner is in mutinies, to runne together on an heape) and he made them ſhead and ſever themſelves, and returne to their places againe. Or yee may referre it to their hearts, that with theſe words were even ſmitten or cleft quite, and broken off their purpoſe, for proceeding any further in ſo bloudy an enterprize. Their motion did not ſo much as enter into him; his, did into them: entred into them, and as his heart ſmit him, ſo, he ſmit theirs; ſmit them, and even cleft them; made them leave, and let goe their reſolution quite, and let Saul goe.

The LXX. ſay, ἔπεισε, that is, he perſwaded them with theſe words: (the beſt overcomming ever, by words, by perſwaſion.) Overcame them (our Text turnes it;) and ſo David had here a victory: Nay, a double victory. 1 Over himſelfe, one: and that is a great one: Great Victours have failed of it. 2 Over his men, another; He kept them too. And ſo, by theſe two, ſaved the King twice. And many victories he had; but of them all, none like this: this the greateſt. For in thoſe other, he but ſlew his enemies; but in this here, without a drop of bloud-ſhed, he ſaved his Princes life. And now, this victory obtained, David and his men are agreed; and they are ſatisfied, not to riſe, but ſit ſtill, and let Saul riſe quietly, and goe his way. By which, ſome amends was made him for the peece of his mantle. This, for Davids ſatisfaction, and for his Victory both in one. For, this victory was (in a ſort) his ſatisfaction, and ſerved for it.

And now we have ſet the King ſafe, that he may goe when pleaſes Him, would I begge a little leave to returne to Davids words; to his ſpell (if I may ſo call it) to this cleaving word שסע: that David did not onely ſmite, but even cleave his mens hearts.

With what axe did he this? (for, it is the act of an axe properly:) Even with theſe words; (they were Davids axe:) Shall we doe this? ſhall we ſo? lay hands on him? and he GODS Anointed? and the edge of his axe were theſe two, Chriſtus Domini; they did the feat; all the force was in them. And (indeed) of great force they ſeemed to David, and were of great uſe with him, came from him oft. To his companies, here. To Abiſhai (a chapter after.) To the Amalekite (the next Booke after, I. Chap.) Twice, here: Thrice, to Abiſhai: Twice, to the Amalekite. Seven times in all. And ſtill, nothing but Chriſtus Domini; as if they had beene a kinde of a Spell, to charme any from riſing, to any ſuch end.

Chap.26.9. 11. 16. 2 Sam.1.14. 16.

And (ſure) a marvellous energie there ſeemes to have beene in theſe words. Davids men (here) were riſing: theſe words kept them downe, they roſe not. Abiſhai after, he was even ſtriking: they ſtaid his hands, he ſtruck not. David himſelfe, he was but thinking a thought that way, they ſmit his heart, made it to ake, made him give over.

Now, when I fall to conſider what vertue theſe words had in thoſe times, to hold mens feet from riſing; their hands from ſtriking; yea, their very heart from thinking any ſuch thought; O I am forced to wonder, they ſhould not have in our times the force they then had. David could not overcome ſome men now: his men would riſe, doe what he could: feet, hands, and heart, fly looſe now, theſe words notwithſtanding. They have not the power to breake men, men have rather the power to breake them.

Davids men were brave Souldiers; Abiſhai, one of his three Worthies: Himſelfe more worthy than they all. Power they had, to ſtay theſe ſo many men of armes: and have not now the power to make a ſilly Frier hold his hands. What is become of their vertue now? Of the cleaving force they then had? It ſhould ſeeme, Davids men were othergates men than many (I will not ſay of our Souldiers, but) of our Ieſuites and Friers, are of late: had magis ſubacta pectora, breſts of a better mould; had, at times, beene brought by David to know what GOD was, what it was to be GODS Anointed, how precious their bloud was in His ſight, how no man could lift up his hand againſt them, and be innocent. So, they ſoone tooke an impreſſion of this his abſit, ſo paſſionately, ſo pithily (withall) delivered by him.

Pſal.116.15. Chap.26.9.

Mens breſts are now made of a tougher metall, the words meet with harder hearts in the Cloyſter (now) than here they did in the Campe. Some mens hearts (now) leave not ſtriking them, till they have ſtriken Saul to the heart. Turne Davids Abſit mihi à Domino, into Adſit mihi à Domino facere rem hanc: turne his execration into a prayer, nay, into many prayers, roſaries, and maſſes, for GODS aſſiſtance, to an act, which his very ſoule abhorreth. And this is the reaſon. The words are not rebated; they have not loſt their edge: but, men have in ſtead of hearts now, flint-ſtones. Elſe, the words being the ſame, the ſame effect would ſtill follow, if the hearts alſo were the ſame.

For, the ſame effect doth ſtill follow, in all, whoſe hearts GOD hath touched, on whom the Spirit of GOD is come. For, where the Spirit of GOD is, there the word of GOD will worke: and where it workes not, we may ſafely ſay, there is no Spirit to worke on.

To trie then, on whom the Spirit of GOD is come, there comes to my minde a pregnant place (it is the XII. of I. Chron.) full to this point, and it will even bring us home to our owne Text againe. Amaſa there, when the queſtion was asked, whom they would take part with, he and his: cried, Thine are we O David, and on thy ſide thou ſonne of Iſhai. And it is there in expreſſe termes affirmed, that the Spirit of GOD came upon him, that made him thus to crie. If then the ſame Spirit of GOD be upon us, that was upon him, it will make us take up the ſame words, Thine are we, and on thy ſide O David: Thou haſt a teſtimony in holy Writ, to have beene a man according to GODS owne heart: what was in GODS heart, was in thine: then are wee to thinke, ſay, and doe, as thou diddeſt, and ſo the Spirit of GOD is upon us, indeed.

1 Chro.12.18.

1 Sam.13.14.

Will we then be as David, with him, on his ſide? (If GODS Spirit be upon us, we will:) now come we to our Text. For, here is in this our Text, a vive anatomie, of David in each part: his eye, his hand, his heart, his mouth and all.

1. His eye, full of compaſſion to Saul his Soveraigne. It was not good in his eyes, to doe doe him any hurt; good to ſpare him. Pepercit tibi oculus meus (11. verſe.) There is Davids eye.

2. His hand not able to ſtirre, not mittere manum in Chriſtum Domini, to lay any hands on him. O ne ſit manus meas ſuper te, he twice cries (13. 14.) Let not my hand be upon thee. There is Davids hand.

3. His heart ſmote him (we ſee) for putting but his knife into the edge of Sauls mantle. There, is Davids heart.

4. His mouth: from that we heare vox clamantis, Abſit mihi a Domino, with great vehemencie of paſſion. There is Davids mouth.

5. So ſayes David: and will ye heare how he ſings? Heare it upon his harpe? how his heart and harpe agree; heare him ſay it and ſing it both? Ye may: For, to keepe for ever this day in memorie, he made a Pſalme of Sauls being in the cave here, and of his ſcaping out of it: And gives it this title, deſtroy not; no not in the cave: deſtroy not. By this meanes to ſing into his mens minds; their dutie in this point. And not into theirs alone, but into the hearts and mindes of all poſteritie; not to give their waies to deſtroy Kings: No, though they have them in a cave, as theſe had Saul. Even there, to ſing deſtroy him not. Ne perdas, in the cave, is worth all.

So have you David at full: if any be of his ſide, thus to ſee, and ſay, and ſing, and thinke, and doe. ---Sic ille oculos, ſic ora ferebat. If you would know, what his heart beleeveth touching this point, percuſſit eum cor; that, gave him a ſhrewd checke, for but a ſhred taken off Sauls cloake: he beleeves, he did not well in it. If what his mouth confeſſeth, Abſit mihi facere rem hanc. Abſit, ſaith his mouth; Ne ſit, ſaith his hand; Ne fiat, ſaith his heart; Ne perdas, ſaith his harpe. All keepe time, all ſound one way; this way, all.

It ſeemed not good in his eyes to doe it: that, is the Text: Nor, to his hand, Let not that be upon him. Nor to his mouth, he ſpit it out with an Abſit. Nor to his heart; leaſt of all to that, that for a leſſe matter, for but drawing his knife, though without minde of drawing a droppe of bloud, fell on beating, and caſt him into a cardiack paſſion. And any, who thinking but a thought that way, if his heart ſmite not him, let him ſmite it hardly. Elſe is he not according to Davids; and ſo, not to Gods heart.

III. The Ecce of this our day: Pſal. 48. 8.

Thus have our eares heard of a King delivered in the Text. And the like, may our eyes ſee, of a King delivered on this day. Sicut audivimus, ſic & vidimus, is the Pſalme: but Plus vidimus quàm audivimus, may it truly be ſaid of this day of ours. I report me to You, if it may not: if there be not a greater Ecce; nay, many greater Ecce's on this day, than on that.

Many waies (I know) the ballance is even. Kings, both: in danger, and danger of Ecce tradam, both. Both, in a cave (for, all caves are not under ground; ſome above ſtaires.) And, of a knife, or worſer than a knife, both. And of a tumultuous riſing, both: and yet both preſerved from both. Thus farre, even. But then, in other points, they are not: No, nor even in theſe. For, weigh them well, and Saul will be found (as Balthazar was) Tekel, minus habens: too light in the ballance. And this of ours to over-weigh, to weigh him and all his downe, many waies. Dan. 5. 27.

To reflect a little on this. I have ſaid a great deale; I have ſaid nothing, if nothing be ſaid of this. It is the life of all. If, of the twaine, the Ecce dies of this day, be the greater, if more Ecce's upon it: The more of them, the more Beholds, the more beholden are we to GOD: the more marvellous His mercies have beene to us, the more plenteous our thankes be to Him for them.

The Ecce dies, is as the Ecce diei. Ever, the more remarkeable the day, the more the things are ſo, that happen upon it. The Ecce diei is of two ſorts: [1] Ecce tradam, [2] Ecce abiit Rex. Tradam, the deliverie into the danger: Abiit, the deliverie from it.

And, ever this we hold, the worſe the Tradam (that is, the danger;) the better the Abiit, the eſcaping from it: and the better it, the more is our joy; and the more our joy is, the more our thankes ſhould ever be, Iehovæ Liberatori. And, O that ſuch an Ecce might be on our thankes, as there is on the day, as it and the Ecce's of it doe well deſerve at our hands.

1. To ſhew them, the Tradam is worſe; I beginne with the Tradent, or Traditor. Ecce tradam, Behold, I will deliver him; it is GOD that ſaith this: this was GODS doing, Sauls deliverie into. Here is no treccherie in the Text. Into the cave he came of his own accord; was caſually found there, not guilefully drawen thither. So, was it not to day; but the King trained thither moſt treacherouſly. Ecce; Behold then, it is farre worſe, when wretched men by wicked alluring meanes, ſhall toule one meaning no harme at all, into a ſecret corner as evill as Sauls cave every whit; and there ſet on him. Worſe, I ſay; for here, the devill betrayes; GOD delivers not. Suffers, I grant; but is not agent in it. GOD never co-operates with treaſon. So then, no day (this) de quo dixit Dominus: rather de quo dixit diabolus, a day (in reſpect of them and their treacherie) of the Devills owne beſpeaking. This then the firſt ods, that A Domino factum eſt illud, a diabolo factum eſt hoc: that of Gods; this of the divells owne tradam: and ſo the Traditor worſe (I am ſure) with an Ecce.

And, who was delivered? Inimicum tuum, an enemie in the Text. Some reaſon, in that. Saul was ſo indeed, Davids enemie. You were not theirs: they were Yours, without a cauſe. Nay, cauſe to the contrarie: Nay, cauſes more than one. And, in that regard, worſe. Worſe, to deliver an innocent than a deadly enemie.

And delivered whither? The Text is, into a cave. Where Saul (indeed) ſaith, he was ſhut up: but to ſay truth, ſimply he was not ſo: the caves mouth was open, he might have come forth, his men might have come to him at his call. But, with us, in our cave, the King was ſecundum literam in the literall ſenſe, ſhut up indeed. Many locks and doores faſt upon him, no going out for him, no comming in for others. The worſe his caſe. Nay, a worſe could not be. So doth the Holy Ghoſt deſcribe the hardeſt caſe of all, by theſe three: 1 Concluſus, 2 derelictus, 3 & non erit auxiliator. All three, here: ſhut up, quite left, none to helpe. In farre worſe taking, than ever was Saul in the cave.

2 Reg. 14.26.

There is no hurt in a cave, if there be no hurtfull thing in it: But David ſaith in the Pſalme, his was; and ſure it is, Your ſoule was there among Lions. The Text is, Tradam in manus tuas: Tradam in manus; I aske, into whoſe hands? for, in danger, it is ever good lighting into good hands. Into what hands light You? No compariſon, there. Saul light into Davids hands: His in manus tuas, where Davids, and Davids were gentle hands. His heart ſmit him, for doing but ſo much, as You have heard. If their heart ſmit them this day; it was not for doing ſo much, but for doing no more. David was touched with his dutie to his Soveraigne, ſtricken with the Majeſtie of Chriſtus Domini: Theſe, they trode under foote, Dutie, and Majeſtie, and Chriſtus, and Dominus, and all. Nothing like David; quite contrarie, worſe with an Ecce.

Pſal. 57. 4.

Nay, not like Davids men. For firſt, in the Text, here is a diſpute betweene them and David, and the parties divided. Saul the more likely to ſcape: as he did. Where the enemie is divided, the danger the leſſe. But to day, in the Kings, no debate at all. It was concluſum in cauſâ, reſolved on both ſides long before, what to doe with him; if ever they got him. No way but one, then.

Againe, Davids men (how ever evill minded at firſt, yet) after relented, were overcome. Theſe of the day, of farre another Spirit; their malice invincible. Davids men overcomming was with words: Here, it came to blowes and to gripes, and all would not ſerve. Davids men, they were overcome willingly and did yeeld: Theſe were overcome too (thankes be to GOD) but it was maugre their wills, they never yeelded till they both lay dead on the floore. The more the parties, the more their hands ſuch, the more your perill: the more it, the more the faire grace of GOD, you eſcaped ſuch parties hands.

Now

Now to & facies illi; what was done. At Saul there was a knife drawne; or rather not at Saul, but, at his mantle. A dagger, not at your mantle, but at You. Betweene these two, a dagger and a knife, there is some odds; but certainely betweene a daggers point, and a knives edge, there is. And, this was Your case.

And what to doe with it? (that sets it further yet.) To doe nothing to Saul, and, no great thing, to his mantle: left a peece of that behind. His dagger, with farre another minde, and at farre another marke, than Davids knife. More was sought here. You to lose more than so. What talke we of a peece? I would a cloke, I would a whole wardrobe would have served the turne, would have satisfied them, or excused You. No cloke-matter, here. Your best bloud was sought; Your brest aimed at; and not the edge, but the point bent, and too neere You.

And, to be short, for the last point, Bonum in oculis. No more than a shred, seemed good in his eyes; no lesse than Your life, seemed good in theirs.

Thus every way from point to point, the Ecce still greater, in Tradam, the deliverie to: In Ecce abiit, in the deliverie from, how holds it there?

In his extremitie, Saul found one yet to crie, Absit, to deliver him. Never an Absit, here. Never an one? Yes: one there was, and that a strong one. When that wretched creature, that was set to doe the fact, in a sort hindred it for once. But, so faint an one it was, as that would not serve, as Davids did Saul. GOD was faine to step into Davids roome: And, when there was never a tongue on earth to say it, to say it from heaven; thence to give the true μὴ γένοιτο, Ne fiat; I would not have it done. From heaven He sent You helpe; not by the caves mouth, but miraculously another way; by them that knew not, whither they went, but unwittingly were led by God, to the place of your danger.

Let me see: at the most, there were but two attempts against Saul. So, he scaped but twice. Two and two against You: Twice and twice escaped Your Majestie, foure times in all; foure distinct dangers, and as many preservations: 1. That of him that stood ready armed: 2. That of the dagger of the first: 3. That of the sword: Nay (more than one) Ecce duo gladii, of the second brother. 4. And, that of the popular tumult, worst of all. These were but upon rising, in the Text; they rose not: They were not upon rising, but were risen up indeed. So, two Ecce's more in Yours.

And, of all this perill, Saul had no sense at all. Awake he was, but he might even as well have beene asleepe. Of all that was said, he heard not a word: Of all that was done, he perceived nothing; had an easie escape, he. So was it not with Your Majestie. You heard and saw all, and felt somewhat of that, was said, and done; escaped the perill, but not the fright and feare, oftentimes worse than the perill it selfe.

Vpon the matter, in Sauls, somewhat was offered to be done, but nothing acted: No doing. Here, there was doing: doing and suffering, both.

In Saul, it never came to manum mittere, not on his person: hands were layd on his cloake; his person, that not touched. Yours was: hands were layd, bloud was drawne; the marks on your jaw, the hurt on your hand remained to be seene a good time after: So, Sauls comes not home; falls short in every point. More Ecce's in Yours; Your day, Your danger, Your deliverie: the more of them, the more is God still to be magnified by You, and by us all.

All fell out well in the end though, with both. It was meant, you should neither have risen; Saul, nor You. You both rose. And, either of you went viam suam; viam, not eorum, but suam; went not the way, they would have sent you, the wrong way; but viam suam, your owne, the right way, the way of safety and peace. And thus ended Sauls danger, and thus Yours: Thus the Text, and thus the day.

Nay, Yours ended not so. The goodnesse of God stayed not there. Yours had a plus ultra, another, a further, a greater Ecce yet, beyond that of Saul. There, as Saul went his way, So did his enemies their way too: He scaped them, and they him. Non sic impii, non sic: It was not so with Yours. You scaped them, they scaped not You. Quia ecce inimici tui Domine, Ecce inimici tui. For, Lo thine enemies ô Lord, lo thine enemies Psal. 1. 4. Psal. 92. 10.

ſhall periſh (and ſo they did;) and all the workers of wickedneſſe ſhall be deſtroyed (and ſo they were:) Miſit manum in manum mittentes, He ſtretched His hands againſt them that ſtretched theirs againſt You. And becauſe their hearts ſmit not them in this ſo foule an attempt, they were ſmitten to the hearts, the ſword went through both their hearts. The very place they had deſigned for Yours, became to them the place of their periſhing: periſhing here, and periſhing eternally. The day of which they ſayd, Now is the day come, it came indeed; but came, and proved a diſmall day to them: the rubricke of it written in their owne bloud, with an Ecce; the laſt Ecce of all, Behold our fearefull end, and let every one feare to doe the like.

They ſaid not Abſit nobis a Domino: GOD therefore ſaid Abſit Dominus à vobis. And ſo He is; He from them, and they from Him, as farre as the bottome of the nethermoſt hell, is from the top of the higheſt heaven.

And ever the ſame hand of GOD be ſo layd on them, that ſhall offer to lay hands on GODS Annointed. So may they all ſhut their eyes, as many as it ſhall ſeeme good in their eyes, to doe the like. So, may their hearts be ſmitten, that Play 55.3. ever hatch in their hearts any thought that way tending. And the faithfull mercies of David be upon them, whoſe eye and hand, heart and tongue, ſhall ſee, and ſay, and thinke, and doe, as he did. And let the King live, live yet many yeares, to ſee the renewing of this bleſſed day, and to refreſh the memorie of Gods mercies, upon it, ſhewed him; and in him, ſhewed us all.

And now to returne to the beginning. We may (I truſt) now ſay, Ecce dies venit, Behold the day is come, with an higher accent. A day, in regard of the deliverie into their hands, de quo dixit diabolus: but in regard of the deliverie from them, de quo dixit Dominus, which GOD did beſpeake. Beſpeake, but in a better ſenſe: not thus; in quo tradam in manus: but rather in quo eripiam de manibus: not deliver You into, but to deliver You out of their hands. And yet, it is dies in quo tradam too: but the edge turned toward them. Not, in quo tradam te illis; but in quo tradam illos tibi: not deliver You into your enemies; but deliver your enemies into Your hands. The beginning was, they made full accompt, You had beene given over into theirs; and that the good ſhould have beene in their eyes. The end, as is happily proved, they were given into Your hands, and the good was in Yours; removed thither: And you have done, and they ſuffered what was good, not in their, but Your owne eyes: heaven and earth approving it and rejoycing at it.

Now then, as if they had done to You, that was good in their eyes, it had made many weeping eyes, it had beene Ecce dies funeſtus: ſo, ſeeing they have ſuffered what was good in Yours and even in Gods eyes, and thereby made many a glad heart, Pſal.118.15, 16. ſhall it not be Ecce dies feſtus; a day of joy and health in the dwelling of the righteous; wherein the right hand of the Lord had the preeminence, the right hand of the Lord brought

Holy (I ſay it) for let God have the honour of the day, for ſetting ſo many Ecce's upon it. For which, all daies, but ſpecially as the day it ſelfe returnes, we to make returne of our thanks upon it. Even upon it, upon this day, for this day, for the many Ecce's of this day; to God the Author of them, for the King and his ſafetie, the ſubjecta materia of them; for the Ecce ſurrexit è ſpeluncâ, his riſing out of the cave, in effect as good as his riſing out of the grave, or (as David in this Pſalme calls it) his de-

There is a Pſalme (as I ſaid) the LVII. purpoſely ſet (of his being there in the cave, and ſcaping thence:) the Pſalme is like the day; repreſents it fitly. The fore-part of it, full of danger and feare: Miſerere mei Domine, miſerere mei, and My ſoule is among Lions: well befitting You when You were under their hands. But the latter part, the Cataſtrophe, full of joy and triumph. When You were got out of the cave, and were now upon Your way, then it was (I truſt) and ever will be as there it followeth: My heart is ready, O GOD, my heart is ready, I will ſing and give praiſe: Awake up my glory, awake Lute and Harpe, I my ſelfe will awake up early: I will praiſe thee among the people, I will ſing unto thee among the nations: For, thy mercy is great toward me, it reacheth even up to the heavens, and thy truth above the clouds: Set up thy ſelfe, O LORD, above the heavens, and thy glory over all the earth; as this day thou didſt indeed. So, ends the Pſalme, and a better end there cannot be. So, will we end, with glory and praiſe, bleſſing and thankes, to all the three Perſons of the glorious Trinity: To whom for this day, and the Ecce of this day, be aſcribed this day all theſe,

Even this day, and for ever.

A SER-

A SERMON PREPARED TO BE PREACHED VPON THE V. OF AVGVST, A. D. MDCXXIII.

GEN. CHAP. XLIX. VER. V, VI, VII.

Simeon & Levi fratres, &c.

Simeon and Levi brethren in evill, the instruments of cruelltie are in their habitations.

Into their secret let not my soule come; my glory, be not thou joyned with their assembly: For, in their wrath, they slew a man, and in their selfe-will (or fury) they digged downe a wall.

Cursed be their wrath, for it was fierce; and their rage, for it was cruell: I will divide them in Iaakob, and scatter them in Israel.

I Have read you a Text, out of a peece of Genesis: a part of Iacobs last words, before he went out of the world; or (as they call it) a Clause of his last Will and Testament. There is in it, a Censure upon a couple of his sonnes. In which censure (I take it) I have read the destiny of another couple; in attempting (both) of a like foule designe, they as these, and these as they: As Simeon and Levi, the brethren of the Text; so these two, the brethren of the day.

To open the case here in the Text; (The day will open it selfe sufficiently.) You are to imagine, You see Iacob, being now about to goe out of the world, lying at the very point of death; lifted up in his bed (for so he was) his Sonnes Sonnes ſtanding before him, all twelve in order, according to their ſeverall ages, as they came into the world. He had ſomewhat to ſay to them (it ſhould ſeeme:) and comming to theſe two (his ſecond and third Sonnes) he called to minde a foule outrage by them committed, upon Hemor and Sichem, and the whole Citie. Of which you may reade before, at the XXXIIII. Chapter.

This, though it were done and paſt many yeares before, that it might ſeeme to have beene forgotten, yet it comes freſh to his minde, and troubles him (now) at the houre of his death. The nature is ſuch (ever) of the ſinne of bloud.

This fact of theirs, he did not thinke good to ſlip over in ſilence; but, even then, to tell them of it, and to tell them his minde about it. No time, to keepe it from them now. He was going to God; and ſo, ſtirred in Spirit, not to leave the world, till he had left a good teſtimonie of his deepe diſlike of attempts in that kinde. It was the will of God: ſo, as he ſpared not his eldeſt ſonne Reuben, for a foule fact of another nature (for inceſt;) So neither did he theſe two, for another, of bloud-guiltineſſe. Bloud and Inceſt take heed of them.

Beſides, it might prove dangerous (he knew) if he did not declare his minde, and ſet a cenſure upon that, and the like attempts; and that he could not diſcharge his conſcience, if he had ſaid nothing to it. That others therefore hearing of it, might feare to doe the like; firſt, he condemnes their counſell, with a Ne Veniat, Let never my ſoule come in any ſuch counſell or companie: 2. Then layes his heavy curſe on the fact it ſelfe, and on their thirſt of revenge, the cauſe of it. 3. And laſtly, cenſures them doubly for it: [1] by diſ-heriſon, depriving them, and not them onely, but all their poſteritie, for ever having lot of inheritance of their owne, as all the other Tribes had: [2] And then Scattering them abroad up and downe all Iſrael. For, theſe are two diſtinct: [1] To diſ-inherit, is one thing; and, [2] to ſcatter abroad, is another.

The Summe is, Iacob their Fathers curſe, and the diſ-heriſon of theſe two brethren Simeon and Levi; for conſulting firſt, and after purſuing ſo wicked a counſell, as the murder of Sichem. The Summe.

Culpa and Pœna will divide the Text; the fault, and the puniſhment. In it doe but adde the perſons, to make the parts three; Simeon and Levi, the Parties, that made the fault, and upon whom, the puniſhment came. The Diviſion.

The fault, was either the fact it ſelfe; or two weightie circumſtances of it. I. [1] The fact was, they ſlew a man, they brake downe the wall. This for this fact, and for the two things in it; [1] Firſt, that there was a meeting and conſulting before, about the doing of it. [2] Then, that there was crueltie after, ſhewed in the doing of it. Conſulting, and plotting, before: Rage and fury, after.

The puniſhment, or cenſure is of two ſorts: You may thus reduce them. II. [1] The one is a Church-cenſure: [2] The other, a Civill penaltie; and ſo the ſemence of both Courts. [1] Maledictus, of one Court, that is Spirituall: And [2] Diſpergam, of the other, that is Temporall.

You ſhall obſerve, all here ſtands upon two's. [1] Simeon, and [2] Levi: [1] they, [2] and their bloudy weapons. 1. In the Plot, two: [1] Counſell, and [2] Company: whence Iacob removeth two, [1] his ſoule, and [2] his glory. 2. In the fact, two: [1] Murder, and [2] Burghlary: done upon two; [1] Vpon the men, [2] and upon the very walls. 3. In the manner, two: [1] Anger, and [2] fury: and they two, two Epithets; the Anger [1] ſtrong, in the beginning; and the Rage [2] indurate, in purſuing: killed the men, in their anger; brake downe walls, in their fury. 4. In the cenſure, two: [1] The Curſe, [2] and the Penalty. One lookes backe; the other lookes forward: One, to the fact, the Curſe: The other, to the perſons, the Penall part. In the Penalty, two: [1] The dividing, and [2] the Scattering; dividing their perſons in the family of Iacob; Scattering their poſteritie, in the common-wealth of Iſrael. III.

What is now the uſe, we have of it? Firſt, the not comming to any ſuch counſels;

the condemning of all ſuch attempts, the holding for accurſed, all ſuch outrages, as this was. Which (I truſt) we will now doe at the laſt. We have ſeene it condemned in Perſia, in Iewrie, and now, in Ægypt. In Perſia, by the Heathen: In Iewrie, by Kings and Prophets: And now in Ægypt, by the Patriarchs. By the Heathen, in the caſe of Bigthan and Tharez: By the Kings and Prophets, in the caſe of Abſalom, and Abiſhai: and now by the Patriarchs, in the caſe of Simeon and Levi. And all this even up as high as Geneſis, up before the Prophets, before the Law, long yer Moſes were borne, in the Patriarchs daies: and (now) higher than Geneſis, further than the Patriarchs, we cannot goe.

Kings and Prophets you have heard: to day, you ſhall heare a Patriarch lay his curſe upon it; and not, in his life time onely, but at the very point of death. All, to ſhew, how hatefull a ſinne this is; and how GOD will be ſure to require it at their hands, whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed bloud. And, this was a good doctrine then, and Eſay 59.7. hath beene ever ſince, till our unhappie daies; wherein, ſome that have attempted it, have ſcaped the Patriarchs Maledictus, and have much adoe to ſcape the Popes Benedictus and being made Saints for it.

I: The Parties; Two.

SIMEON and Levi are the Parties. He joynes them together in the Proceſſe, for ſo they were in the fact: either, as deepe as other, and ſo, their cauſes proceeded in joyntly.

Two they are: and two are more than one. It is hand in hand, this; a double-twiſted cord. Hand in hand is the ſtronger: double, than ſingle iniquitie.

Prov. 11.22.

Two brethren. And, this is true of any two: but more yet of theſe two; for, theſe two are brethren. And, that very bond of Nature and naturall affection, workes yet more ſtrength. For,
Prov. 18.19. ſtrong, as the bars of a palace, ſo is frater qui à fratre adjuvatur (ſaith Salomon.)

The firſt thing, that makes us muſe, is, that Iacob calls theſe two Brethren, as if
Gen. 42.32. the reſt were not ſo: were nothing of kin to them. They were twelve brethren; themſelves ſay ſo, to Ioſeph. But, not of whole bloud, you will ſay. True: but, ſix of them (theſe two named, and foure beſides) they had all the ſame father (Iacob) and the ſame mother (Lea.) And, why then theſe two, two brethren, and not they? We muſt ſeeke out ſomewhat, wherein theſe two were, and the reſt were not. And we will not ſtirre a whit from the Text. They two were brethren (firſt) 1 in wearing of weapons of violence (in this verſe) 2 and (in the next) brethren, in wicked counſell: 3 and (third) in the rage of revenge: 4 And (laſt) in a bloudy murder. And, as in theſe, that make up the fault; ſo, in the puniſhment. In all theſe, were theſe two, brethren; and theſe two onely: The other, nothing of kinne to them, no fraternitie in theſe.

If Rabbi Salomon be right, that μάχαιρα in Greeke be all one with Mechera in Hebrew; then it is, the ſwords they were girt with, were weapons of violence. But if (as others take it) Mechera be a tent; then, it muſt be, the weapons of violence were to be found in their tents: that, in their tents they had them, though not at their ſides. The 1 Brethren, in wearing weapons. other were of a more quiet diſpoſition: So were not theſe; but, their ſwords out, ready to offer violence upon every occaſion. The other had weapons too, but not מכרה weapons of violence: and, tents they had; but, cruelty dwelt not in them. Weapons of crueltie then, is their firſt difference.

Why, may not one for a need, have by his ſide, or in his houſe, weapons? Yes: But, כלי חמס theſe were Chele chamas (that is) weapons of violence: and violence implies wrong, ever. Weapons, he may: of wrong, he may not. All, even our very hands and members themRom. 6.13. 2 Cor. 13.10. ſelves, are to be weapons of righteouſneſſe. GOD never intended to arme injuſtice. There is no power given to deſtroy, or doe violence withall. The Law allowes no Chele chamas: no man to have them in his houſe, no man to weare them by his ſide. No
Deut. 32.35. ſword is allowed to private furie or revenge: Mihi vindictam, Revenge is GODS, for He will doe juſtice. The ſword of it is His; and no mans, but whom GOD girdeth with with it, by vertue of the words in Geneſis, By man ſhall his bloud be ſhed. But, that man is not every man: that ſword hangs not at every mans girdle; nor is, by every hand to be drawne forth. Gen.9.6.

There is one caſe only, where the party would, and cannot ſtay for the Magiſtrates ſuccour: the aſſailant comes on him ſo fierce and furiouſly, that either he muſt uſe it, or loſe his life, and yeeld it to the rage of his enemie, being a private man, as himſelfe. In that caſe, if he cannot otherwiſe keepe off violence from himſelfe, it is lent him pro hâc vice tantùm; and the uſe of it made lawfull, by the unwritten Law, the Law of Nature; Vim vi: Yet (as we ſpeake) cum moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ, or (as our Law) Se defendendo. And never, but upon that occaſion: and in that caſe, the ſword is but a weapon of defence, to keepe off violence. And out of that caſe, this one except, not to be allowed. Even they, that carry the ſword in their name (Gladiatores) we call them Fencers: and ſo doe they themſelves, their ſcience, the Science of defence, that is, Skill to uſe their weapons only to that end. For (ever) a Cherethite is eo ipſo to be a Pelethite. Theſe two were but one: their weapons, to defend and ſave: to deliver from wrong; to doe none. To make the ſword, the weapon of cruelty, is to abuſe the ſword: Every abuſe is naught: And ſo, theſe two, Brethren, non tam naturâ quàm nequitiâ, not ſo much in nature, as in naughtineſſe. As, we know a place, where many ſuch there be: no kinne at all by nature, yet ſworne brethren they call themſelves: making Sacramentum pietatis, vinculum iniquitatis; binding themſelves by the oath of GOD, to ſerve the Devill: As they all are, whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed bloud. So, the Patriarch implies thus much: that of all his ſonnes, theſe two were by nature, of a revengefull, of a bloudy diſpoſition. And as they were, ſo were their weapons. For, who will blame the ſword, or lay any thing to the weapons charge? The weapon is, as the man is; as he will uſe or abuſe it. Of it ſelfe, not violent, if he be not ſo, that weares it. But, theſe were ſo: and ſo, the fault, in the men, and not in the weapons. Brethren of bloud they were; and not ſo, but Brethren in bloud. And ſo paſſe we from this bloud. Eſay 59.7.

You may gheſſe at their diſpoſitions, not ſo much by their weapons as by their counſell; In conſilium eorum: He tells of a Councell taken about it, where they met, and ſaid one to another, their ſwords ſhould doe violence: their ſiſter was wronged, they would be revenged: and no revenge ſerve them, but death and deſtruction; death of the men, deſtruction of the towne, yea, of the very walls of it. It was a plot or conſpiracie then: a very match made betweene them. a In counſell.

And what was their counſell? In dolo, deceitfully contrived. Marry they would their ſiſter, to Sichem; and all ſhould be well, if they would be circumciſed. Whereas, their purpoſe was, when they were ſoreſt of their circumciſing, when the wound was at worſt, and they could not ſtirre; then, to ſet upon them, and make a maſſacre of them all.

Here, Iacob cannot containe himſelfe, but burſt out, from ſuch Matches GOD keepe me. At the very firſt, at the doing, Iacob miſliked it: Miſliked it then, and ever after; and even now, at his death, he cryes, Ne veniat, Never let my ſoule come among them, or have to doe with them.

It troubled him much, at the time, it was done. He ſaw, he loſt his reputation by it. Loe, here is the holy Patriarch! Here be Impes of his breeding, and bringing up! That they made him even ſtinke (you will beare with it, it is the HOLY GHOST's word) before the Nations round about. Chap.34.30.

Beſide, they put him in feare, and hazard of his owne, and all their lives. Very like it was, they would all have beene over-runne by the bordering people, but that GOD, ſeeing Iacob's innocencie, even for his ſake ſent His feare into the heart of the Nations adjoyning, that they purſued them not to death with the like cruelty. Theſe were motives for the preſent: but here now, ſo many yeares after, he takes it on his death, he was never partie nor privie to it. Never was he, to that; nor ever would be, to any ſuch, as we ſee by his ſo deepely deteſting it, and proteſting againſt it. For, it is, as if he ſhould ſay: I here declare openly before GOD and the World, it went againſt my very ſoule, this counſell of theirs: I had no hand in it, neither art, nor part (as they ſay) neither had, nor ever meant to have: But was, and ever will be innocent from all that belong to it, violence, counſell and all. Never let my ſoule come among ſuch.

And why not come in any ſuch counſell? For, where two or three are at counſell about any ſuch matter, Inter duos proditores Diabolus eſt tertius, where two are conſulting of any treachery, the Devill is the third. Miſit Satanas in cor; was in Iudas, is the rule of all traytours. The firſt miſsion, the firſt motion, is (ever) from him: he, the prime Counſellour of the three. And blame not Iacob, if he would not be one of, or one at any counſell of his, or have his ſoule at the end of any ſuch treatie.

Luke 22. 3.

This, on their parts, makes it the more hainous, that they did it not of any ſudden paſſion, but conſultò, in cold bloud: ſlept upon it, roſe upon it, were in it three dayes: Did all adviſedly of malice pretenſed: met about it; tooke counſell, how to effect it, the counſell of the ungodly: Put off the execution, till after three dayes.

Pſal. 1. 1.

Iacobs twofold abhorring of it.

1 Non veniat anima in conſilium.

2 Non ſit gloria in cœtu eorum.

On Iacobs part; two things he ſpeakes of: 1 That neither his ſoule ſhould ever come in ſuch counſell: (So, it is a ſoule-matter; a counſell, and an act, which brings with it the hazard of the ſoule.) 2 Nor his glory, or reputation: (ſo that, it is a thing which toucheth ones honour and reputation neere; a blemiſh to the glory of a man.) As pollutes his ſoule, ſo taints his bloud; is the loſſe of both. To ſave both theſe, he doth (we ſee) and we muſt diſavow all ſuch counſell and Counſellours. All are bound under the ſame paine, to make the ſame proteſtation: to ſay the ſame Ne veniat anima mea, all that are of the Iſrael of GOD, Let never my ſoule come into any ſuch counſell, let never any ſuch counſell come into my ſoule. Marke thoſe two words: 1 his ſoule, and 2 his glory: the two things of higheſt regard with all; 1 What ſhall become of our ſoules, 2 What Name we ſhall leave behind us. All, to thinke, that in ſuch company, they doe but caſt away their ſoules, they doe but loſe the honour of their name for ever.

And yet, a farther matter there is. For, marke theſe two words, Counſell, and Aſſembly, Sod and Kahal: for, by them, two ſeverall partakings he ſeemes to ſet out. 1 One, of their ſecret privie meetings, that is Sod. 2 The other is Kahal, which is any publike meeting or aſſembly of theirs; and namely, their Church and Congregation. He ſpeakes to his glory, never to make one in any ſuch aſſembly, never to be joyned to any ſuch congregation: ſo, makes a matter of Religion of it. Never, of that Church, which ſhall give countenance, that there may be any meetings, to any ſuch end. It is no Kahal, no Church, no religion for Iacob, that favours any man that is ſo minded.

סוד קהל

If then we will like or diſlike with the King and Prophet David, we muſt ſay Chalila li, GOD forbid, I ſhould once lift up my hand to any ſuch act. If we will like or diſlike with the Patriarch Iacob, wee muſt ſay, Ne veniat in conſilium anima mea. You obſerve, the Patriarchs and the Prophets agree well: Iacob's Ne veniat, with Davids Abſit mihi à Domino. Not onely to have cleane hands from it, not to lift them up, or ſtretch them out to the Act; but, a cleere ſoule: never once to conſult, but to deteſt, not onely their conſultations, but even the congregations of ſuch conſulters, that be that way given. Neither Civilly, nor Eccleſiaſtically; neither in Church nor Market (as they ſay) to have to doe with them.

חלילה לי

And for a farewell to this point, let me tell you; there be, that interpret Iacobs ſpeech, in this ſenſe. Not, let not me, nor my ſoule be preſent, or partaker of any ſuch; but, let not my ſoule or life, be the matter or ſubject of any ſuch conſultation: Ne tractent de animâ meâ in conſilio tali, ut ſicut Sichemitis fecerunt, ſic facerent & mihi: GOD keepe my ſoule, ſave my life from any ſuch Conſultours, for ever comming to be treated or debated of, by any ſuch. Let never any ſuch meet in counſell, about my ſoule or me. Both will ſtand well: 1 Neither I, about any mans; 2 nor any, about mine: either, 1 to conſult about the life of any other; or, 2 my life to be conſulted of, by any other like them.

From

From the counsell we come to the fact, to the hatching of it. There is too much in the Counsell; that was fault enough, if no fact followed: But, here followed a fact too, and that, a foule fact. Which is of two sorts: expresſed firſt in two words, [1] Interfecerunt, and [2] ſuffoderunt, that is, Murder, and Burglary: and two more; killed, whom? it is ſaid, a man, virum, in the ſingular, but one; the number doth but aggravate, the fact is all one, one or more, both to be condemned. II. The Fact. 1 Murder. Interfecerunt.

But ſure, Iacob, in ſaying Virum, a man, meant but, and aymed but at one, principally. Virum: At quem virum? what man was it? Hemor the chiefe man, the Ruler, the Lord of the Citie, and the territory about. Of no great circuit (perhaps:) That comes all to one: But, being the Soveraigne Ruler and Lord, ſuch a man is worth many men: that, in killing him, they may be ſaid, in one to have killed many. And, as if Iacob thought, they might be quit of the reſt, ſo they had let that man (the chiefe Magiſtrate) alone. Virum.

But, they killed more than one: Even every mothers ſonne, all the males in the Citie. This is an outrage: not to leave a man to kill; to kill them all, as if they were but one man; to leave no one alive! Chap. 34. 25.

And why? what was the offence? Sichem had deflowred their Sister. Say, there was a fault in Sichem: what, no remedy, but kill and ſlay him? But, if his were the fault, let him alone be ſlaine. But, what was his fathers fault? He, ſought to make amends, by mariage, for the wrong done, and gave them a blancke for her iointer, to put in what they would: Agreed to be circumciſed, he and all his people: All that ever in reaſon could be required. Why was he (then) ſlaine? For being his father. Nothing elſe can be alleaged. But, all the men in the Citie, the poore people, what had they done? They went about their buſineſſe, medled nothing in the matter: Yet, they went to the pot, too. So, it is murder of many, and thoſe many, innocents all. Innocent and nocent together, to be ſwept away? ſhall the Iudge of the world doe it? ſhall any Iudge in the world doe that, which the Iudge of the world would not doe? They ſaid: ſhould he abuſe our Sister? No: But, ſhould he doe it, and all they ſuffer for it? But, what had their wives and children deſerved, that they ſhould be led captive, and all they had, either in houſe or field, taken for a prey, made ſpoile of, and carried cleane away? But, what had the walls and houſes hurt them, that not onely the houſe-walls, but even the Towne-walls muſt be laid flat for it? was there ever heard of a greater havocke? Gen. 34. 2. Gen. 34. 11. Gen. 34. 24. Gen. 18. 25. Gen. 34. 31.

And, ſo eager upon it they were, that, to commit the murder, they commit Burghlary firſt: Firſt, downe with the houſe-walls, that after, downe with the men. So greedie to kill, as breake downe walls, breake up houſes, to make their ſlaughter. For, either it muſt be, they broke through the houſes to come at the men and kill them: Or, when they had killed the men, they pull'd downe the houſes and all. Both (it may well be) they did: But, one it muſt needs. And, that one, is too foule and barbarous. 2 Burglary. Suffoderunt murum.

Now, put to the circumſtances, which are ever of importance (ſpecially in a ſtorie) and well worthy to be weighed, in a matter of fact. Here was no warre, wherein ſuch things are done: (for, the name of warre covers many a foule fault.) But, warre it was not; but a treatie of peace. So, they ſhed the bloud of warre (that is), that bloud, which but in warre ſhould not be ſhed:) made ſpoiles as in warre; razed downe Townes, as in warre, and all this in peace. 1 King. 2. 5.

Nay, not onely a treaty of peace, but of a match and marriage, contracting affinity, of a firme league, of amitie perpetuall. Nay, of unitie in Religion, taking upon them the ſame ſeale of the Covenant. That, they violated all three, [1] Iura Fœderis, [2] Connubii, [3] Religionis. And that, in all theſe, their counſell was fraudulent, Bemerma, without any good meaning, coloured onely with theſe three pretences. Which they did not onely violate, but above all abuſed the holy [1] ordinance of Matrimonie, [2] abuſed the Sacrament, [3] and made the ſacred Seale of righteouſneſſe, a cloake for their bad and barbarous intent. בְּמִרְמָה

peccati there ſhould be plagarum modus. Here was no meaſure kept. A whole Citie ſackt, a whole Countrey ſpoil'd, all the men ſlaine, all the reſt led away as priſoners; and all for a fault, to which they were no wayes acceſſory.

And that, all this they did, with a kinde of contempt of Iacob their father, and his authority: never acquainted him with it, never conſulted him about it. He was bound not to come in their counſell: they were bound to come to him for his; who, if they had come, would have counſelled better.

The concluſion is: Reaſon they had none, nor colour of reaſon. Onely, it is ſaid, בריגם Birtſonam, for their will and pleaſure, did they all this. A wretched pleaſure, to take delight in ſo wicked a deſigne.

The Root of theſe:
1 Anger.
2 Furie.

To this, adde the root of all, ſet out in two words, 1 Rage, and 2 Outrage, or Anger and fury. That their anger ſhewed it ſelfe cruell; that their fury ſhewed it ſelfe indurate. It was not Aph onely, that is, anger; but Gebrath, which is paſt anger, gone beyond it; indeed, very furie. They did it furiouſly. And, that furie was hard, אמץ עברה hard as ſtone; caſt off all compaſſion, without pitie or mercie ſpared none; Not the poore people, that made no fault; not the women and children, but made bootie of them: No, not the walls, but downe with them too. And (which is worſt of all the reſt) ſpared not GOD neither: did all theſe in the very act of Religion. If they had done it, when they were (yet) Heathen men, it had beene the leſſe: but now, in their being circumciſed to doe it, as they were comming on to be the people of GOD, and were within the Covenant, by receiving it alreadie: Now to doe it, inferreth well, Curſed be the wrath, yea, thrice accurſed, that outrage; for, the like was never heard. Anger (we know) is furor brevis: And, ſi gravis, brevis, being ſo vehement, it ſhould not be long by courſe of nature: But this was long too, continued; not to be ſatisfied, but implacable; Nothing could appeaſe them, or turne them from their outrage, till they ſaw walls and all lye flat upon the ground. Here, wee looke backe. Their כלי weapons (above) were Chele, which is (properly) vaſa, veſſells. So as, their paſſion was not powred out like water, and ſo let runne away, but it was kept or reſerved, as liquor in a veſſell; barrelled up, to be broached, when they ſaw cauſe. Without reaſon, in the beginning; without appeaſing, in the end. Such was the malice of theſe men: Such theirs of this day.

III.

The Cenſure.
1 A Maledictus, to the fact.

Now, ſuch rage, ſo outragious, juſtly deſerves a Maledictus: Such wrath, ſo qualified beyond all account, ſo exorbitant, ſo inſatiable. On ſuch wrath, Iacob layes his Curſe, curſeth them here. Which Curſe was (after) by GOD renewed in Mount Ebal: Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly; Againe, Curſed be he, that lieth in wait, to ſhed innocent bloud. The two laſt, and heavieſt curſes there, to which all Iſrael was to ſay Amen.

Deut. 27. 24, 25.

From Iacob.

While it was but in conſultation, Iacob cries, Ne veniat, Away with the Counſell, come not at it. But, when it comes into act, then he cries, Maledictus, Curſed be the execution; at no hand, be an Actour in that. Nay, not onely have no part in it your ſelves, but condemne them that have ſo, and hold them as people accurſed, even by Iacobs owne mouth.

Weigh a little this Maledictus of Iacob. Maledictus is a word, we would not heare from the pooreſt or meaneſt body, that is. But, there is much in the Party, who is (here) a Patriarch: and they vertuous, holy, and grave perſons. To be curſed of one of them is much: for, whom they curſe, GOD curſeth alſo. And, not onely a Patriarch, but a Father, to whom GOD hath given power to bleſſe, and to curſe; and whoſe curſe ever accompanieth a father's; eſpecially ſuch a Father, as is like Iacob. So that, this puts them under GODS curſe certainely.

Numb. 24. 9.

On his death-bed.

Weigh alſo the circumſtance, the time. For, this time was the time of bleſſing: Lying on their death-beds, men commonly give their laſt bleſſings to their children. So did Iacob to Iuda here, and ſo to the reſt. At this time (then) to do it, is ſomewhat yet more ſtrange, than at another; Nay, than at any other time. Bleſſing-time with others, is curſing- curſing-time with them. When he bleſt others, to curſe them, and that there, on his death-bed! For, the curſe of the death-bed is of all other the worſt: ſuch as are ſo curſed, ſome evill will come to them.

Yet ſomewhat to eaſe it. This curſe (if you marke it) is not on their perſons: their nature, as men, is not toucht; but onely by reflexion upon their affection of anger. And yet, not on that neither (For, there is good uſe of them alſo: for, one may be angrie and ſin not:) But, as it was tranſcendent, too much and too long; paſt the bounds of all reaſon and moderation. And this was their puniſhment ſpirituall. Ephes. 4. 26.

Maledictus, that goes to the fact: Diſpergam to their perſons; which he denounceth, ſhall fall upon them. And, he doth not this by way of Prophecie, they ſhall be divided and ſcattered: but pronounced it by way of ſentence. Not, it ſhall be done: but he will doe it himſelfe. It ſhould be his owne act, and he would never leave it, till he ſee it put in execution. And, though it were not done in his time, yet it was as good as done; as certaine and ſure, as if, at that time, it had had the performance. 2 A Diſpergam to the Perſons.

You may referre Dividam to Simeon, and diſpergam to Levi. Simeon was divided into peeces: A peece, in Iudah; a peece, in Dan; a peece, in mount Seir of the Amalekites. Levi was ſcattered here and there, up and downe in every corner of the land. Or (if you will referre it to both;) they were divided, while Iacob continued a familie: they were diſperſed, when they after came to be a ſtate.

And (if you marke) the puniſhment is very proper, and well proportioned to the fault. The fault was a bad union: their puniſhment is a juſt diviſion. Their fault was hand in hand, they were too neere: their puniſhment is, they ſhall be ſet farre enough aſunder, for taking any ſuch counſell more. So, whom the divell hath joyned, GOD puts in ſunder. And, a righteous thing it is, it ſhould ſo be. For, puniſhments ſhould have in them the nature of a medicine: They, cure (ever) by contraries: Heat, by cold; drought, by moiſture. Even as this doth; an evill joyning, by a juſt diſperſion.

There was great wiſedome in this puniſhment. For, them that be evill, if we deſtroy them not, we muſt take order to weaken them: and to ſeparate them, is to weaken them. Vnited force is the ſtronger; diſ-united, the weaker ſtill. Vndoe the faggot-bond, and when the ſtickes be ſevered, you ſhall ſticke by ſticke, deale with them, and keepe them under. A ſticke will eaſily be broken; a faggot will not. So as, to ſcatter them, is to weaken them.

And ſo to be, is good for Simeon and Levi themſelves. It takes from them, hability to doe hurt: pares their nailes, breakes off their hornes, doth them good againſt their wills. For, if the worſt come to the worſt, they can hurt but ſingly or by one. And therefore we ſay; Conſultum eſt malis, ut à ſociis dividantur: they that are ill affected, it is good for them and their fellowes, to be put aſunder.

And, if it be good for them; certainely, for the other Tribes, much more: They ſhall all live the more quietly. For, if theſe two ſhould ſtill continue together, they might the ſooner, the more eaſily, againe in like ſort combine, and confederate themſelves together againſt the other Tribes, if they gave them but the leaſt occaſion. Now, they ſhall be ſo ſcattered, and ſet, where they ſhall do no great harme any more: as no more they did. And ſo, as it was good for them, ſo we ſay, Conſultum eſt Reipublicæ ut dividantur ſocii ad malum; Good for the Common-wealth, if any be that way given, to remove them either from other at leaſt. So, they the weaker, and the reſt the ſafer. But ſcattering will not alwaies ſerve: for, even ſcattered, ſome doe miſchiefe enough. And therefore, it is as good policie, to coope them up, if ſcattering they doe harme; as it is, to ſcatter them, if they prove the worſe for being together.

To ſpeake a little of the grievouſneſſe of the puniſhment: theſe degrees are in it. The grievouſneſſe of the puniſhment.

1 Firſt, it concludes the diſheriſon of them, the loſſe of having any lot at all of inheritance of their owne, as the reſt of the Tribes had. It kills not the men, but it pulls downe their wall, and layes them to the Common, wherein every man had as much right, as they. And ſure, God of His goodneſſe, not intending to proceed the way Himſelfe 1 Diſ-inheriting.

had ſet, that, having ſhed mans bloud, by man ſhould their bloud be ſhed (for ſo, they ſhould have beene rooted out cleane, and two Tribes had beene loſt in Iſrael:) The next was, to let them have no inheritance, entirely by themſelves, as had all the reſt. As the Pſalmiſt ſaith: Slay them not, leſt my people forget, any ſuch thing was done, but ſcatter them abroad, and ſo put them downe that way, as chaffe is either to be burnt, or the winde to ſcatter it, no man can tell whither.

2 Scattering.

A ſecond degree is, not onely to be diſ-inherited, but to be ſcattered: for, that was Cains puniſhment, divided and caſt out from GODS preſence, all his life long: To wander up and downe, he knew not whither. That was, for bloud too, the bloud of Abel. It is the Iewes puniſhment: (and that was for bloud too; the bloud of CHRIST;) that they are ſcattered all over the earth (as, to this very day they be;) and never could get together, to make an entire ſtate, no more than theſe did.

Gen. 4.12.

3 Even of their poſterity.

The third degree is; That all this did light upon their whole poſteritie, rather than upon their owne perſons. For, to have all, that came of them, ſo diſperſed abroad, was a more heavy hearing to them, than if it had light on themſelves: of that I make no queſtion. It is the courſe, God holdeth in His Law, to viſit the ſinnes of the fathers upon the children. But, this is yet heavier: for, there, it is but to the third and fourth, but this is to endure throughout all generations. The father, which is little moved with his owne loſſe, if it ſhall turne to the dammage of his children, it will move him the rather: As, this ever hath done, and ever ſhall.

Exod. 20.5.

4 And that, upon record.

And let this be the laſt: That Iacobs Maledictus, and his Diſpergam, doe remaine and ſtand thus of Record, and ſo ſhall ſtand to the worlds end. The curſe on their heads, a blot on their names, a ſcattering upon their ſeed and poſteritie for ever.

But, let me adde this: That, though it appeares, their nature was none of the beſt; they were no good natur'd men, as given to bloud, and ſo to be diſliked: yet was not their nature exempted from grace though, but place left for grace, and ſo, they to be releeved that way. For, it may well be thought, this ſo ſevere a cenſure, ſpecially at this time now inflicted, and by their owne father, being to goe out of the world; that it wrought upon theſe two brethren, and wrought in them deepe contrition of that their outrage. Wherewith God being appeaſed, turned their curſe into a bleſſing, Pœnam diſperſionis in præmium Sacerdotii (ſay the Fathers.) For, the curſe, which Iacob inflicted, Moſes reſerved, (not for their diſperſing, which came through their fathers fault:) Scattered they were, but ſcattered with honour: One having the Office of Prieſthood, and teaching men: the other, of Scribes and Schoolemaſters, training up their children all the Tribes over.

The Application of the Text.

Let us ſee now, if you can finde in theſe men, the men of this day; and, in this fact, theirs; and ſo for the puniſhment likewiſe. 1 Two they were, this day: So the number agrees. 2 And brethren they were, as neerly allyed. 3 And weapons they had both. 4 And made of the ſame metall (of violence) that theirs here. 5 Counſell they tooke, into which Iacobs ſoule would never have come. 6 And coloured it with falſe ſemblance (Bemerma) no leſſe than theſe: (One, of diſcovering of (I wote not what) Secret: the other, of not being from the Sermon in any wiſe: his Sermon, like their circumciſion.) 7 Did as much as in them lay, to execute their counſell: offered to ſtrike, offered to binde, lay hands, graſped, fell to the ground. 8 And, from the ſame root they came both, from deſire of revenge. Their furie no whit leſſe, no leſſe cruell, no leſſe implacable. Thus farre their likeneſſe holds.

But now, in two things, diſlike: 1. One, theſe in the Text had ſome cauſe: their Siſter was deflowred. Not the leaſt colour, here. Their ſiſter was honoured; themſelves dealt with but too well. No cauſe in the world, they. Diſlike, in this firſt.

2. And then, if you come to the iſſue, in that, diſlike too. It was not interfecerunt indeed (we thanke God for that, it was not:) Yet they did their good will (Birtſonam;) And, it was a judged caſe in Perſia, Voluerunt was enough.

בירצנם

But,

But, when we come to the Virum, there (I am ſure) is great oddes. Ours, another manner of Virum, than theirs, and put Hemor and Sichem both together. Many a yeare after this, there were in that land thirty one Kings, whereof Hemor (at the moſt) had but one part: The leaſt of your three Kingdomes, is greater than all the thirty one put together. So, there holds no proportion in Virum.

Will ye ſee now the puniſhment: that though hand were in hand, they were not unpuniſhed. Iacobs Legacie came on ours too. Vnder Iacobs curſe they died, His curſe upon their ſoules, under which their ſoules lie, and ſo ſhall for evermore. And upon their glorie and honour; for, that is gone and loſt for ever, and, as their ſoules, ſo their memorie accurſed. And upon their Tribe or Houſe; for, that is ſcattered as duſt before the winde, and come to nought.

And one degree further, wherein ours were diſlike. Simeon and Levi, for all this lived out their time; ſlew, but were not ſlaine. But, here this day with theſe, inſtead of Interfecerunt, it was Interfecti ſunt. This Simeon and Levi, they lay both dead on the floore, with their weapons of cruelty in their hands, with their wicked counſell and purpoſe in their hearts. Which hearts of theirs, the weapons of juſt defence went through; and their counſell turned to their confuſion.

And now our Benedictus Deus, to GOD: Bleſſed be He for this Maledictus of Iacob, for the Patriarch's curſe, that light upon them and theirs. And yet our Maledictus too, to them, their weapons, their counſell, their furie, their ſoules, and their memories. And, from ſuch bloud-thirſtie curſed men, GOD ever bleſſe You.

Let me tell you this, for a farewell. Iacob doth here two things: [1] Delivers us a Document; [2] and denounceth a dreadfull puniſhment. His Document is, Ne veniat anima mea: His puniſhment is, Maledictus and Diſſipabo. And chooſe, they that will not ſay, Ne veniat with him, he will ſay, Maledictus, his curſe be upon them. But, as Iacob ſaid, ſo we to ſay all, all to ſay after him, Ne veniat both paſſive, and active. Paſſive: Never be their counſell taken about Iacobs ſoule; or his ſoule, that is to us, Iacob, even the Feeder, the Paſtor, and Stone of Iſrael; never come his ſoule, to be the ſubject, or matter treated of in any ſuch counſell. Active: and never let any true ſubjects ſoule come in any ſuch counſell; nor ever any good Chriſtian come in that Church, wherein ſuch Counſell, or Counſellors are harboured and mainetained; or that hold any doctrine that favours any ſuch conſultations.

But if any will not thus ſay Iacobs ne veniat; we to be ſo bold as to ſay Iacobs Maledictus, to him, his ſoule, his ſeed, his memorie and all. Let all ſuch inherit the curſe, let it be their legacie. Exurgat Deus & diſſipentur inimici, Let God ariſe, and theſe His enemies be ſcattered; As the ſtubble before the winde, and as the ſmoke, let them vaniſh and come to nothing. Let their lives be for the ſword, their names be put out; their ſoules for the curſe, their houſes pull'd downe and deſolate. So periſh all thine enemies ô LORD, &c. Pſal. 68. 1, 2. PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL, On the V. of November, ANN. DOM. MDCVI.

PSAL. CXVIII. Ver. XXIII, XXIV.

A DOMINO factum eſt iſtud, & eſt mirabile in oculis noſtris.

Hæc eſt Dies quam fecit Dominus; exultemus & lætemur in ea.

This is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

This is the Day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoyce and be glad in it.

TO entitle this time to this Text, or to ſhew it pertinent to the preſent occaſion, will aske no long proceſſe. This Day of ours, This fift of November, a day of GODS making; that which was done upon it, was the Lords doing. CHRISTS owne application (which is the beſt) may well be applied here: This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in our eares. For, if ever there were a Deed done, or a Day made by God, in our dayes; this Day, and the Deed of this Day was it: If ever He gave cauſe of marvelling (as, in the firſt;) of rejoycing (as in the ſecond verſe) to any Land; to us this day, He gave both: If ever ſaved, proſpered, bleſſed any; this day, He ſaved, proſpered, and (as we ſay) fairely bleſſed us. Luk. 4 21.

 The

The day (we all know) was meant to be the day of all our deaths; and we, and many were appointed, as ſheepe to the ſlaughter; nay worſe than ſo. There was a thing doing on it, if it had been done, we all had been undone. And, the very ſame day (we all know) the day, wherein that appointment was diſappointed by God, and we all ſaved, Verſe 17. that we might not die but live, and declare the praiſe of the Lord: the Lord, of whoſe doing, that marvellous Deede was; of whoſe making, this joyfull Day is, that wee celebrate.

Pſal. 111. 5. This mercifull and gracious Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 111. 5.) hath ſo done His marvellous Works, that they ought to be had, and kept in remembrance. Of keeping in remembrance, many waies there bee: Among the reſt, this is one, of making Dayes; ſet ſolemne Daies to preſerve memorable Acts, that they be not eaten out, by them, but ever revived, with the returne of the Yeare, and kept ſtill freſh in continuall memorie.
Exod. 12. 3, &c. God Himſelfe taught us this way. In remembrance of the great Deliverie from the deſtroying Angell, He himſelfe ordained the day of the Paſſe-over yearely to be kept. The Church, by Him taught, tooke the ſame way. In remembrance of the diſappointing of Hamans bloudie lotts, they likewiſe appointed the daies of Purim, yearely Eſter 9. 26. to be kept. The like memorable mercie did He vouchafe us: The Deſtroyer paſſed over our dwellings, this day: It is our Paſſe-over. Haman, and his Fellowes had ſet the dice on us, and wee by this time had beene all in peeces: It is our Purim day.

Wee have therefore well done and upon good warrant, to tread in the ſame ſteps, and by law to provide, that this Day ſhould not die, nor the memoriall therof periſh, from our ſelves, or from our ſeed; but be conſecrated to perpetuall memorie, by a yearly acknowledgment to be made of it throughout all generations. In accompliſhment of which order, wee are all now here in the preſence of God, on this day, that He firſt, by His Act of doing, hath made; and we ſecondly, by our act of decreeing, have made before Him, His holy Angels, and men, to confeſſe this His goodneſſe, and our ſelves eternally bound to Him for it. And, being to confeſſe it, with what words of Scripture can wee better or fitter doe it, than thoſe wee have read out of this Pſalme? Sure, I could thinke of none fitter, but even thus to ſay, A Domino factum, &c.

The Diviſion. The treatie whereof may well be compriſed in three points: 1. The Deed or doing: 2. The Day, and 3. The Dutie. The Deed, in theſe: This is the Lords, &c.
I. The Day, in theſe: This is the day, &c. The Dutie, in the reſt: Let us, &c. The other
II. two reduced to the Day, which is the center of both. The Doing is the cauſe; The
III. Dutie is the conſequent: from the Day groweth the Dutie.

To proceed orderly, we are to begin with the Day. For though (in place) it ſtand after the Deed; yet to us, it is firſt: our knowledge is à poſteriori. The effect ever firſt, where it is the ground of the reſt. Of the Day then firſt.

1 That ſuch Daies there be, and how they come to be ſuch. 2. Then of the Doing, that maketh them: wherein 1 that this of Davids was; and 2 that ours is no leſſe, rather more. 3. Then of the Dutie, how to doe it; by rejoycing, and being glad, for
Ioh. 16. 22. ſo, gaudium erit plenum, theſe two make it full: How to take order, that we may long and often doe it, by ſaying our Hoſanna, and Benedictus; for, gaudium noſtrum nemo tollet à nobis, thoſe will make, that our joy no man ſhall take from us.

I.

Of the Day; Such daies, there be.

THIS is the Day: This? Why, are not all daies made by Him? Is there any daies not made by Him? Why then say we, This is the day the Lord hath made? Divide the daies into naturall and civill; the naturall, some are cleere and some are cloudie; the civill, some are luckie daies, and some dismall. Bee they faire or foule, glad or sad; (as the Poet calleth him) the Great Diespiter, the Father of daies hath made them both. How say we then of some one day, above his fellow, This is the Day, &c.

No difference at all, in the dayes, or in the moneths themselves: by nature, they are all one. No more in November, than another moneth: nor in the fifth, than in the fifteenth. All is, in GOD'S making. For as, in the Creation, we see, all are the workes; and yet, a plaine difference between them for all that, in the manner of making: Some made with יהי Sit, Let there be light, a firmament, drie land; Some, with Faciamus with more adoe, greater forecast, and framing, as man, that master-peece of His works, of whom therfore, in a different sense, it may be said: This is the Creature, which GOD hath made (suppose, after a more excellent manner.) In the very same manner, it is, with daies; All are His making, all equall, in that; but, that letteth not, but He may bestow a speciall Faciamus upon some one day more than other; and so that day, by speciall prerogative, said To be indeed a Day, that GOD hath made.

Gen. 1, 14. 26.

Now, for GOD'S making, it fareth with daies as it doth with yeares. Some yeare (saith the Psalme) GOD crowneth with His goodnesse, maketh it more seasonable, healthfull, fruitfull, than other. And so for dayes; GOD leaveth a more sensible impression of His favour, upon some one, more than many besides, by doing upon it some marvellous worke. And, such a day on which GOD vouchsafeth some speciall factum est, some great and publike Benefit; notable for the time present, memorable for the time to come, in that case, of that Day (as if GOD had said Faciamus diem hunc, shewed some worke-manship, done some speciall cost on it) it may with an accent, with an emphasis bee said, This verily is a Day which GOD hath made, in comparison of which, the rest are as if they were not; or at least were not of His making.

Psal. 65. 11.

As for blacke and dismall dayes, dayes of sorrow and sad accidents; they are and may be counted (saith Iob) for no dayes: Nights rather, as having the shadow of death upon them; or, if dayes, such as his were, which Sathan had marr'd, than which GOD had made. And for common and ordinarie daies, wherein as there is no harme, so not any notable good, we rather say, they are gone forth from GOD, in the course of nature (as it were) with a fiat, than made by Him; specially, with a faciamus. So, evill dayes no daies, or daies marr'd: and common daies, daies; but no made daies: Only those made, that crowned with some extraordinary great Favour, and thereby get a dignitie, and exaltation above the rest: exempted out of the ordinarie course of the Calendar with an Hic est. Such, in the Law, was the Day in the Passe-over, made by GOD, the head of the yeare. Such, in the Gospell, of CHRIST'S Resurrection, made by GOD, Dies Dominicus; and to it, doe all the Fathers applie this verse. And we had this day our Passe-over, and we had a Resurrection or παραβολή, as Isaac had. But, I forbeare to goe further in the generall. By this that hath beene said, wee may see, there bee daies of which it may be fately said, This is the day, &c. and in what sense, it may be said. Such there bee then; that this of ours, one of them; that if it bee, we may so hold it, and doe the duties that pertaine to it.

Iob. 3. 3. 6.

Exod. 12. 3.

Heb. 1. 2.

II. Davids day was such.

Davids day here, was one certainely, dictante Spiritu; and they, that are like it, to be holden for such: so that, if ours be as this was, it is certainely dies à Deo factus. Now then (to take our rule from the former verse) Factum Domini facit diem Domini. It is GOD S deed, that maketh it GOD S day: and, the greater the Deed, the more GOD S day. There must be first, Factum est, some doing: and secondly, it must be à Domino, He the doer: and thirdly, that somewhat must be somewhat marvellous: and fourthly, not, in it selfe, so; but, in our eyes. These foure goe to it; these foure make any day, a day of Gods making. Let us see then these foure: First, in Davids here, and then in our owne; and if we finde them all, boldly pronounce, This is the Day, &c.

In it there was 1 A factum est, A deliverance.

First, the factum est, in Davids; what was done, set downe at large in the fore-part of the Psalme. It was a deliverance: all the Psalme runneth on nothing else. Every deliverance is from a danger; and, by the danger, we take measure of the deliverance. The greater that, the greater the Deliverie from it: and the greater the Deliverie, the greater the Day, and the more likely to be of GOD S owne manufacture. His danger first: what should have beene done. He was in a great distresse. Three severall times, with great passion, he repeates it, that his Enemies 1 came about him; 2 compassed him round; 3 compassed and kept him in on every side: were, no swarme of bees so thicke: That they gave a terrible lift or thrust at him, to overthrow him; and very neere it they were. And at last, as if he were newly crept out of his grave, out of the very jawes of death and despaire, he breakes forth and saith, I was very neere my death; neere it I was, but non moriar, die I will not now, for this time, but live a little longer to declare the workes of the LORD. This, was his danger: and, a shrewd one (it seemeth) it was. From this danger, he was delivered. This, the factum est.

From danger. Verse 10, 11, 12.

Verse 13.

Verse 17.

2 A Domino: By GOD, not by man. Verse 8, 9.

But, man might doe all this; and so it be mans day, for any thing is said yet. Though it were great, it maketh it not Gods, unlesse God, God (I say) and not man, but GOD Himselfe were the Doer of it: and, if He the Doer, He denominates the Day. This then was not any mans, not any Princes doing, but GODS alone, His might, His mercie, that brought it to passe: Not any arme of flesh, but GODS might; not of any merit of His, but of His owne meere mercie. This was done by His might: Thrice he tells us of it; It was the right hand of the Lord, that brought this mightie thing to passe. This was done by His mercie; His ever-enduring mercie: foure times he tells us, it was that, did it. With that he beginnes, and makes it the key of the song. Then, as we have factum est, so we have A Domino: The Deed and the Doer both.

Verse 15, 16.

Verse 1,2,3,4.

3 Et mirabile, and Marvellous it was. * Zech. 4.10.

GODS doings are many, and not all of one size. The Prophet * Zecharie speaketh of a day of small things; and, even in those small, must we learne to see God, or we shall never see Him in greater. Yet, so dimme is our sight, that unlesse they be great, commonly we see Him not: nay, unlesse it be great Vsque ad miraculum, so great, that marvellous withall, we count it not worth a day, nor worthy GOD: unlesse it be such. But, if it be such, then it is GODS, Qui facit mirabilia solus, Who only workes great marvells: then, man is shut out; and then, God's must the Day be. A Domino factum, & mirabile.

Psal. 72.18.

4 In oculis nostris, even in our eyes.

And yet this is not enough. The truth is, all that GOD doth, all His workes are wonderfull: Magna, sed ideo parva quia usitata. Great, wonders, all: but, not wonderfull; seeme small to us, because they be usuall: His miracles are no more marvellous, then His ordinarie works, but that, we see the one daily, and the other, not. Therefore he addeth [In our eyes] for a full period: His doings, all marvellous in themselves; but, not marvellous, in our eyes, unlesse they be rare, and the like not seene before: But then, they be; and then we say, Digitus Dei est; It is the finger of GOD; nay, the right hand of

of God, that brought this mighty thing to passe. Then we give the day for Gods, without more adoe. Now then, we have all that goeth to it: 1 A Deliverance wrought; 2 wrought, by God; 3 a wonderfull deliverance; 4 and that, even in our eyes. These make Davids day, a day of Gods making.

Will these be found in ours, and then ours shall bee so too? They will, all of them certainly; and that, in an higher degree, in a greater measure; match Davids day, and overmatch it in all. 1 We were delivered, and from a danger, that is cleere. How great? (for, that makes the odds.) Boldly I dare say, from a greater than Davids. Thus I shew it, and goe no further than the Psalme it selfe.

Our Day was such.

These foure in ours.

Factum est: 1 A deliverance from a danger, a greater danger.

1 David called upon GOD in his danger; he knew of it, therefore. We did not: we imagined no such thing; but that, all had been safe, and we might have gone to the Parliament, as secure as ever. The danger never dreampt of, that is the danger.

2 His was, by compassing and hemming in; that is above ground, and may be descried from a watch-tower. Ours was by undermining, digging deep under ground; that none could discerne.

3 One cannot bee beset, but hee may have hope to breake through, at some part. But here, from this, no way, no meanes, no possibilitie of escaping. The danger not to be descried, not to be escaped, that is the danger.

4 His were a swarme of bees (he calleth them so:) they, buzze and make a noise when they come. Ours, a brood of vipers, mordentes in silentio; still, not so much as a hisse, till the deadly blow had beene given.

Verse 12.

5 His was but of himselfe alone; so he saith, I was in trouble, They came about me, kept me in, thrust sore at mee: But one person, Davids alone. Ours, of a farre greater extent; David, and his three Estates with him. Now though David himselfe were valued by them at ten thousand of themselves (and not over-valued neither, for hee is worth more; And all Kings like him, no lesse worth:) yet he and they too, must needs be more, than he alone. Not only King David had gone, but Queene Esther too: and not only they, but Salomon the young Prince, and Nathan his Brother. Nor these were not all. The Scriptures recount, David had Iehosaphat for his Chancellor, Adoram his Treasurer, Seraja his Secretarie, Sadoc and Abiathar, and twenty two more, the chiefe of the Priests, Admo his Iudge, Ioab his Generall; all had gone: His forty eight Worthies or Nobles, all they too. The Principall of all the Tribes in the kingdome: All they too; and many more than these; no man knoweth how many. It is out of question it had exceeded this of Davids here.

Verse 11. 13.

2 Sam 18.3.

2 Sam. 26. 14.

2 Sam. 23.

6 One more. His danger (he confesseth) was from man: He goeth no further, I will not feare what man doth unto me. This of ours was not: meerly mans, I denie it; it was the Devill himselfe. The instruments (not as his; a swarme of Bees, but) a swarme of Locusts, out of the infernall pit. Not men; No not Heathen men: Their Stories; nay, their Tragedies can shew none neere it. Their Poëts could never feigne any so prodigiously impious. Not men; No, not savage wild men: the Hunnes, the Heruli, the Turcilingi, noted for inhumanitie, never so inhumane: Even among those barbarous people this fact would be accounted barbarous. How then? Beasts: There were at Ephesus, beasts in shape of men; and θηριότης, brutishnesse is the worst, Philosophie could imagine of our nature. This is more than bruitish; What Tiger, though never so inraged, would nave made the like havock? Then, if the like, neither in the nature of men, nor beasts to be found (it is so unnaturall;) we must not looke to paterne it upon earth, we must to hell; thence it was certainely, even from the Devill. He was a murderer from the beginning, and will be so to the ending. In every finne of bloud, he hath a claw; but all his clawes, in such an one as this: wherein so much bloud, as would have made it raine bloud; so many baskets of heads, so many peeces of rent bodies cast up and downe, and scattered all over the face of the earth. Never such a day; all Ioëls signes of a fearefull day, bloud, and fire and the vapour of smoke. As hee is a murtherer; so wee see (in Marke) by his renting and tearing the poore possessed child, he

That you may know it for that perfectly, conſider but the wickedneſſe of it, as it were in full oppoſition to GOD, and you muſt needs ſay, it could not be His doing: GOD forbid (ſaith Abraham) thou ſhouldeſt deſtroy the righteous with the wicked. Kill not dam and young ones both (ſaith Moſes in the Law.) You ſhall not touch mine Annointed (ſaith GOD in the Pſalmes.) You ſhall not pull up the good corne, rather let the tares ſtand (ſaith CHRIST in the Goſpell.) You ſhall not doe evill, that good may come of it (ſaith Paul in his Epiſtles.) One more yet: that this abomination of deſolation, (ſo calleth Daniel; ſo calleth our Saviour, the uttermoſt extremitie of all that bad is: ſo may we this truly:) that this abomination of deſolation tooke up his ſtanding, in the holy place.

Dan.9.27. Matt.24.15.

1 An abominatian: ſo it is; abhorred of all fleſh, hated and deteſted of all, that, but heare it named; yea, they themſelves ſay, they ſhould have abhorred it, if it had taken effect. It is an abomination.

2 Every abomination doth not forthwith make deſolate. This had. If ever a deſolate kingdome upon earth, ſuch had this been, after that terrible blow. Neither root nor branch left, all ſwept away: Strangers called in; murtherers exalted; the very diſſolution and deſolation of all enſued.

3 But this, that this ſo abominable and deſolatorie a plot, ſtood in the holy place, this is the pitch of all. For, there it ſtood, and thence it came abroad. Vndertaken with an holy oath; bound with the holy Sacrament (that muſt needs be in a holy place;) warranted for a holy act, tending to the advancement of a holy Religion, and by holy perſons called by a moſt holy Name, the name of IESVS. That theſe holy religious perſons, even the chiefe of all religious perſons (the Ieſuites) gave not onely abſolution, but reſolution, that all this was well done; that it was by them juſtified as lawfull, ſanctified as meritorious, and ſhould have beene glorified (but it wants glorifying, becauſe the event fayled, that is the griefe; if it had not, glorified) long yer this, and canonized, as a very good and holy act, and we had had orations out of the Conclave in commendation of it. (Now I think, wee ſhall heare no more of it.) Theſe good Fathers they were Davids bees here, came hither, onely to bring us honie, right honie they; not to ſting any bodie: or (as in the XXII. verſe) they (as builders) came into the land, only for edification; not to pull downe, or to deſtroy any thing. We ſee their practice, they begunne with rejecting this Stone, as one that favoured Heretikes at leaſt, and therefore excommunicate, and therefore depoſed, and therefore expoſed, to any that could handle a ſpade well, to make a mine to blow him up; Him, and all his Eſtates with him to attend him: (The corner ſtone being gone, the walls muſt needs follow.) But then, this ſhrining it (ſuch an abomination) ſetting it in the holy place, ſo ougly and odious; making ſuch a treaſon as this a religious, miſſall, ſacramentall treaſon; hallowing it with oriſon, oath, and Euchariſt; this paſſeth all the reſt. I ſay no more, but as our Saviour concludeth, when you ſee ſuch an abomination ſo ſtanding, qui legit intelligat; nay, qui videt. GOD ſent them, that (not reade of it, but) ſee it, and had like to have ſmelt of it, to learne that, they ſhould, by it: and ſo I leave it.

Verſe 22.

Matt 24.15.

Tell

Tell me now, if this were not His doing, and if it ſhould not have beene a Day of His making, the Devills owne making?

This ſhould have been done; this, the danger: what was done? This, the factum fuiſſet; what the factum eſt? All theſe were undone, and blowen over; all the undermining diſappointed; all this murder, and crueltie, and deſolation defeated. The mine is diſcovered, the ſnare is broken, and we are delivered. All theſe, the King, Queene, Prince, Nobles, Biſhops, Iudges, both Houſes alive, all: not a haire of any of their heads periſhed; not ſo much as the ſmell of fire on any their garments. Give thanks ô Iſraël, unto the Lord thy God in the congregation, from the bottome of the heart; here is little Benjamin, thy Ruler, the Princes of Iuda, &c. that they are here and we ſee them here, and that the Stone theſe Builders refuſed, is ſtill the Head-ſtone of the corner. That, ſhould have been done; this, was done: and we all, that are here this day, are witneſſes of it; Witneſſes above all exception of this factum eſt. Dan. 3. 27. Pſal. 68. 26, 27, 28, &c.

But by whom, whoſe doing? Truly, not mans doing this; it was the Lords. A Dæmone factum eſt illud, or fictum eſt illud. It was the Devils doing, or deviſing (the plot:) A Domino factum eſt hoc, This was Gods doing (the deliverance.) The blow was the Devils: The ward was Gods. Not man, but the Devill, deviſed it: Not man, but God defeated it. He that ſate in heaven all this while, and from thence looked down and ſaw all this doing of the Devill and his limmes, in that mercie of His, which is over all his workes, to ſave the effuſion of ſo much bloud, to preſerve the ſoules of ſo many innocents, to keep this Land from ſo foule a confuſion, to ſhew ſtill ſome token, ſome ſenſible token upon us for good, that they which hate us may ſee it, and be aſhamed; but eſpecially, that that, was ſo lately united, might not ſo ſoon be diſſolved; He took the matter into his owne hand, And, if ever God ſhewed, that he had a hooke in the Leviathans noſe; that the Devill can goe no further than his chaine: if ever, that there is in Him more power to helpe, than in Sathan to hurt; in this, He did it. And, as the Devils clawes to bee ſeene in the former; ſo Gods right hand, in this mightie thing (Hee brought to paſſe) and all the fingers of it. 2 A Domino. Pſal. 86. 17

1 To ſhew it was He. He held His peace and kept ſilence, ſate ſtill, and let it goe on, till it came neere, even to the verie period, to the day of the lot; ſo neere, that we may truly ſay (with King David) as the Lord liveth, Vno tantum gradu, nos morſque dividimur, there was but a ſtep betweene death and us. We were upon the point of going to the hill, all was prepared, the traine, the match, the fire, wood and all, and we readie to be the ſacrifice, and even then and there, In monte providebat Dominus, God provided for our ſafetie, even in that very place, where we ſhould have been the burnt offering; from heaven, ſtayed the blow. It was the Lords doing. 1 Sam. 20. 3. Gen. 22. 7. Verſe 8.

2 When treacherie hath his courſe like water, and creepes along like a ſnaile (it is the fiftie eight Pſalme) then, to make it like the untimely birth of a woman, never to ſee the ſunne (not, as in this, arſerunt ſicut ignis in ſpinis, was but a blaze, as in a buſh of thornes: (nay, if it come ſo farre, it had gone wrong with us:) but, as in that, priuſquam intelligerunt ſpinæ, or ever the thornes gat heate or the powder fire;) then, ſaith he there, Dicit homo, Vtique eſt Deus, Men ſhall ſay, verily there is a God, and this was His doing. Pſal. 58. 8. Verſe 9. Verſe 11.

3 And not only, that is was bewrayed, but that Hee made them the bewrayers of it themſelves; and even according to the place (Eccl. 10.) made things with feathers to diſcloſe it: When (as in Pſalme 64.) their owne tongues (or, which is all one, their owne pennes) make them to fall: all that conſider it, ſhall beamazed; and then all men ſhall ſay, This hath God done; for they ſhall perceive it plaine, it is His workes. They ſhall be charged in confeſſion, they ſhall ſweare, they ſhall take the Sacrament not to doe it; and yet, contrarie to all this, it ſhall come out by themſelves. Was not this Gods doing. Eccleſ. 10. 20. Pſal. 64. 8.

4 Yet further, to ſhew it was ſo: This which was written, was ſo written, as divers of profound wiſedome, knew not what to make of it. But then commeth God againe (God moſt certainly) and (as in the Pro. 16. 10.) puts קסם, a very divination, a very oracle; Pro. 16. 10.

oracle in the Kings lippes, and his mouth missed not the matter; made him, as Ioseph the revealer of Secrets, to read the riddle: giving him wisedome to make both explication, what they would doe; and application, where it was they would doe it. This was GOD certainely. This, Pharaoh would say, none could, unlesse he were Gen.41.38. filled with the spirit of the holy GOD. It was A Domino factum.

5 Lastly, as that, when it was come forth they were not reclaimed; not then, when they saw, the hand of GOD was gone out against them, and that it was even GOD, they starve withall: no but even then, from hidden treacherie, fell to open rebellion, and even perished in it (if God shewed not a miracle of His mercie on them) perished there, and perished eternally: as this I say did (that it was factum à Damone, who never left them, till he had brought them thither:) So, that (before they came thither) GOD cast their owne powder in their faces, powdred them, and disfigured them with it; and that their quarters stand now in peeces, as they meant, ours should: It is the Psal.109.27. case of the CIX. Psalme, And hereby shall they know, that it is Thy hand, and that Thou
29. Lord hast done it, How? in that, they are thus clothed with their owne shame, and even covered with their owne confusion, that they fall, as fast as they rise; are still confounded, and still thy servants rejoyce. These five (as prints) shew, it was Gods hand: It was Psal.21.13. the Lord, that made the Day; it was the Day, that the Lord made. Be thou exalted Lord in thine owne strength: It was thy right hand, that brought this mightie thing to passe.

3 Et est mirabile. This will not serve the turne. His doing makes it not the Day; His doing a miracle, that makes it: and, that it is too. I take no thought, to prove this point: by the Law, the Prophets, the Gospell. To put them to it; Moses: Enquire now of the daies
Deu.4.32. that are past, that were before us, since the day that God created man upon earth, and aske from one end of heaven to the other, if there came to passe such a thing as this, whether any such like thing hath beene heard; and, if we cannot suit it, or set such another by it,
Ier.2.10. we must needs yeeld it, for one. By the Prophets: Goe to the Isles and behold, send to Kedar and take diligent heed, and see, if you can possibly finde the like: if not, confesse it for marvellous. Come hither (saith David) and behold, how marvellous God is! and what is that? that such, as are rebellious, are not able to exalt themselves: We need not goe so farre, wee have it here to see; Wee may say to him, Come hither. By Luke 5.26. Mar.2.12. Matt.9.33. the Gospell: for so doe they (there) acknowledge our Saviours for miracles: Sure, we have seene strange things to day: We never saw it on this fashion: The like was never seene in Israël, therefore marvellous certainely. It is now no miracle, no strange thing, to have a King delivered: every other yeare, we see it, and therfore wonder not at it. But, to see King, Queene, their seed, all their Estates delivered, that is mirabile, Ier.32.27. that is a new thing created on the earth. I conclude: as, that was the Devills doing, and was monstrous in our eyes; so this is Gods doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. And againe, upon all these marks, that, as this was a day, the Devill would have marred; so, this is a day, that the Lord made.

4 In oculis nostris, in our eyes Psal.126.2. Marvellous then it is: yet, hath it not (as we say) his full Christendome, unlesse it be so in our eyes. For the time, it was; and that (of the Psalme) fitts us well, When God (saith he) turned away the captivitie (say we, the destruction) of His people, then were we like to them that dreame. No man, but stood in a maze, as if he knew not well, whether he saw it making, or dreamt of it, it was so strange.

In the eyes of others. Psal.126.2. And let mee goe further. Not, in ours onely; for (sure I am) that which followeth there, is true (Then said they, inter Gentes) of other nations; The Lord hath done great things for them: and we are too blame, if we answer them not, with the Echo
Verse 3. there following, Yea indeed, the Lord hath done great things for us; for which wee have cause to rejoyce. If strangers thinke it strange, and say, and write, A seculo inauditum, The like was never heard before: if it were marvellous in their eyes, it were very marvellous, it should not be so, in our eyes too.

Of the very Actors. I adde, they that were the Actors of it, in their eyes, it is so; and that of the Apostle ſtle may fitly be applied to them. Behold, ye Deſpiſers, and wonder, and vaniſh, for God hath wrought a Worke in your dayes, a Worke which you your ſelves that were the doers, ſhall ſcarce beleeve, when it ſhall be told: that even aſtoniſhed themſelves, to ſee it goe forward ſo long, and ſo ſuddenly caſt downe. Nay, I goe further, to make it a miracle conſummate. I doubt not, but it was ſtrange newes, even in Hell it ſelfe, inſomuch as even that place had never hatched the like monſter before. You ſee the welcome they in Hell gave him of Aſſur (Eſay XIIII.) What art thou come, that makeſt the earth to tremble, and doeſt ſhake whole kingdomes? And yet it is well knowne, all his ſhaking was but in a metaphore: He never made it ſhake actually, as theſe would have done: and therefore, this of greater admiration, and (I doubt not, but) more wonderfull in their eyes: And ours are very dimme, if in all other it be, and be not ſo in ours. Acts 13.41. Eſay 14.16.

III. The Duty.

Then, if ſuch dayes there be, if this of ours be one of them, if the fore-part of the verſe doe, then muſt the latter alſo belong to us: If this, the day, the Lord hath made; then, this, the day, wherein we to rejoyce: When He makes, we to make; and our rejoycing in it, is our making of it.

To rejoyce, no hard requeſt, nor heavie yoke, let it not be grievous to us. We love to doe it, we ſeeke all meanes to doe it in all caſes elſe: then to aſſay to doe it here. This (ſure) the Prophet would not require, nor make it the office of the day, but that upon ſuch dayes, God Himſelfe calls us to joy.

And even as, when God calleth us to mourning, by blacke dayes, of famine or warre, or the like; then to fall to feaſting or revelling, is that that highly diſpleaſeth God: ſo, when God, by good dayes, calleth us to joy; then to droope, and not to accommodate our ſelves to ſeaſons of His ſending, is that which pleaſes Him never a whit.

What? (ſaith Nehemias, upon ſuch a bleſſed day as this) Droope you to day? Nolite, at no hand to doe it, Dies enim feſtus eſt, it is a feſtivall day: What then? why it is eſſentiall, it is of the very nature of every Feaſt (ſaith God in His law) omnino gaudere, by any meanes, in any wiſe, therein to rejoyce. And Nehemias promiſe is to incourage us, that if the ſtrength of the Lord be our joy, the very joy of the Lord ſhall be our ſtrength. Nehem. 8.9, 10. Num. 10.10. Deut. 16.11.

To conclude: Sure I am, that if the plot had prevailed, it would have beene an high Feaſt in Gath, and a day of Iubilee in Aſcalon; The daughters of the uncircumciſed would have made it a day in triumph. Let us not be behinde them then, but ſhew as much joy, for our ſaving, as they would certainely have done, for our periſhing. 2 Sam. 1.20.

Exultemus & lætemur. God loveth our joy ſhould be full; it is not full, except we have both theſe, the bodie (as it were) and the ſoule of joy: the joy outward of the bodie, and gladneſſe inward of the ſoule. (So much doe the two words ſignifie, in all the three tongues.) Both He will have: for, if one be wanting, it is but ſemiplenum, halfe full. Exultemus and Lætemur both.

Exultemus; the outward joy.

And he beginneth with Exultemus, the outward: Not, to our ſelves within, which we call gaudere in ſinu, Ioy of the boſome; but ſuch, ſo exuberant, as the ſtreames of it may overflow, and the beames of it ſhine and ſhew forth, in an outward ſenſible exultation. It is a day: ſo would He have us rejoyce, that, as by day light, it might be ſeene in our face, habit, and geſture: Seene, and heard both: Therefore hee ſaith (at the XV. Ver.) the voice of joy is in the dwellings of the righteous. And in the dwelling it doth well: But yet, that would not ſerve his turne; but, open me (ſaith he at the XIX. Verſe.) the gates of righteouſneſſe, that is, the Church-doore (his houſe would not hold him) thither will I goe in, and there, in the Congregation, in the great Congregation, give thankes to the Lord: And that ſo great a congregation, that it may conſtituere diem ſolennem in condenſis uſque ad Cornua altaris, that they may ſtand ſo thicke in the Church, as fill it from the entrie of the doore, to the very edge of the Altar. This ſame joy, that is neither ſeene nor heard, there is ſome levin of malignitie in it; he cannot skill of it. He will have it ſeene in the countenance, heard in the voice; not onely Verſe 15. Verſe 19.

preaching

preaching, but singing forth His praise. And that, not with voices alone, but with instruments, and not instruments of the Queer alone, but instruments of the steeple too, bells and all, that so it may bee Hosanna in altissimis, in the very highest key we have. This for exultemus.

Lætemur, the inward joy.

But, many a close Hypocrite may doe all this, and many a counterfeit Shemei and Sheba did all this, to David; got them a fleering forced countenance, taken-on joy: And therefore the other; that God will have his joy, not be the joy of the countenance alone, a cleere face, and a cloudie overcast heart; hee will have the gladnesse

Psal. 16.9. of the heart too, of the inner man: Cor meum & caro mea; the heart, as well as the flesh, to be joyfull. The joy of the soule, is the soule of joy: not a bodie without a soule, which is but a carcasse. Strange children may (and will) dissemble with me (saith the Psalme Psal. 18.44. XVIII. XLIV.) dissemble a gladnes, for feare of being noted; and yet within, in heart, you wot what. But, God calleth for His de fontibus Israël, which we read, from the

Psal. 68.26. ground of the heart. That is (indeed) the true fountaine of joy, that our lips may be

Psal. 71.21. faine, when we sing unto Him, and so may our soule, which He hath delivered. Nay, Hee delivered both: and therefore, both the bodie to rejoyce, and the soule to be glad. This doth Lætemur adde, to exultemus.

How to order our joy.

If then we be agreed, that we will do both, I come to the last, how to order our joy, that it may please Him, for whom it is undertaken. It is not every joy, that He liketh.

Hos. 7.5. Merrie they were, and joyfull (they sought) that kept their Kings day (Hos. VII.)

Mal. 2.3. by taking in boule after boule, till they were sick againe. So they that Malachi speaks of, there came nothing of their feasts, but dung (beare with it, it is the Holy Ghost his owne terme) that is, all in the belly, and belly-cheere. So they, that sate downe to eate and drink, Exod. 32.6. and rose up to play, and there was all; that is the Calves feast: a Calfe can do as much.

1 Cor. 10.5. But with none of these was God pleased: and as good no joy, as not to the purpose; as not to please Him.

That it may bee to the purpose, that God may take pleasure in it, it must beginne

Verse 9. at Hosanna, at Aperite mihi portas Iustitiæ, at the Temple-doore; there must it goe in, it must blesse, and be blessed in the house of the Lord. I will first make joyfull in my house of Esay 56.7. prayer (it is God by Esay:) the streame of our joy, must come from the spring-head of Religion.

Well then, to the Church we are come: so farre onward. When we are there,

Verse 25. what is to be done? Somewhat we must say, we must not stand mute. There to stand still, that, the Prophet cannot skill of. That then, we may (there) say something, he here frames, he here endites us a versicle, which after grew into such request, as no Feast ever without it, without an Hosanna: it grew so familiar, as the very children were per-

Matt. 21.9. fect in it. The summe and substance whereof (briefly) is no more, but (which we all desire) that God would still save, still prosper, still blesse him, that in His name, is come unto us (that is) King David himselfe, whom all in the House, and all of the House of the Lord blesse in His name.

And to very good purpose doth he this: for, joy hath no fault, but that it is too short, it will not last, it will be taken from us too soone. It is ever a barre, in all joy, tollitur à vobis; subject to the worme, that Iona's gourd was. It standeth us therefore in hand; to begin with Hosanna, so to joy, as that we may long joy to pray for the continuance, that it bee not taken from us: ever remembring, the true temper of joy,

Psal. 2.11. is (exultate in tremore) not without the mixture of some feare. For, this day, we see

Pro. 27.1. what it is, a joyfull day: we know not (saith Salomon) what the next day will bee: and if not what the next day, what the next yeare much lesse. What will come, wee know not; what our sins call for to come, that we know; even that God should call to judgement, if not by fire, by somewhat else. If it be but for this, it concernes us neerly, to say our Hosanna, that the next yeare be as this. It is our wisedome therefore, to make the meanes, for the continuance of it, that God would still stablish the good worke, Hee this day wrought in us; still blesse us, with the continuance of the same blessings.

And

And this that we may doe, not faintly but cheerefully with the lifting up of our ſoules therefore, as farre as art or ſpirit can doe it, he hath quickned his Hoſanna, that he may put ſpirit and life in us, to follow him in it, with all fervor of affection: foure times, twice with Anna, and twice with Na; either of them before, and after; but eight words, and foure of them interjections: all to make it paſſionate; and that ſo, as (in the originall) nothing can be deviſed more forcible; and ſo, as it is hard, in any other tongue, to expreſſe it; which made the Evangeliſt let it alone, and retaine the Hebrew word ſtill. But, this, as neere as I can, it ſoundeth: Now good Lord ſave us yet ſtill, now good Lord proſper us yet ſtill. Be to us, as laſt yeare, ſo, this, and all the yeares to come, IESVS a Saviour, yeſterday and to day and the ſame for ever. Verſe 25.

And three things doth he thus earneſtly pray for, and teacheth us to doe the like. 1 To ſave, 2 proſper, 3 and bleſſe.

1 To ſave: that ſhould be firſt with us; it is commonly laſt: We have leaſt ſenſe of our ſoules. To ſave us, with the true ſaving health; (it is a word whereof our Saviour IESVS hath His name) it importeth the ſalvation of the ſoule; properly to that it belongeth, and hath joyned to it Hoſanna in the Goſpell (Hoſanna in excelſis) to ſhew, it is an high and heavenly ſalvation. Matt. 21. 9.

2 Then, to proſper. If He but grant us the former alone, to have our ſoules ſaved, though without proſperitie, though with the daies of adverſitie, it is ſors Sanctorum, the lot of many a Saint of His, of farre more worth than we: Even ſo, we are bound, to thanke Him, if, even ſo, we may be but ſaved. But, if He adde alſo proſperitie of the outward, to the ſaving of the inward man, that not ſo much as a leafe of us ſhall wither, but looke what we doe ſhall proſper; and that, whatſoever men of evill counſells do, ſhall not proſper againſt us; if He not only vouchſafe us Hoſanna in excelſis, but Hoſanna de profundis too, from deep cellars, deep vaults, thoſe that dig deep to undermine our proſperitie; If He adde the ſhadow of His wings, to ſhelter us from perills, to the light of His countenance, to ſave us from our ſinnes, then have we great cauſe to rejoyce yet more: and, both with exultemus from without, and lætemur from within, to magnifie His mercie, and to ſay with the Prophet, Prayſed be the Lord, that (not onely taketh care for the ſafetie, but) taketh pleaſure in the proſperitie of His ſervants. Pſal. 1. 3.

3 Laſtly, becauſe both theſe, the one and the other; our future ſalvation, by the continuance of His Religion and truth among us, and our preſent proſperitie (like two walls) meet upon the Head-ſtone of the corner; depend both, firſt, upon the name of the Lord, and next upon him, that in His name, and with His name, is come unto us (that is) the King: (So, do both the Evangeliſts, Saint Luke and Saint Iohn ſupply; and, where we read, Bleſſed be he, there they read Bleſſed be the King that commeth:) ſo that neither of them ſure, unleſſe hee be ſafe; that He would bleſſe him, and make him beſt, that, in His bleſſed Name, is come amongſt us. The building will be as mount Sion, ſo the corner ſtone be faſt; ſo the two walls, that meet, never fall aſunder. If otherwiſe: but, I will not ſo much as put the caſe; but as we pray, ſo truſt, it ſhall never be removed but ſtand faſt for ever. Luk. 19. 38. Ioh. 12. 15. Pſal. 125. 1.

This then wee all wiſh that are now in the Houſe of the Lord, and wee that are of the Houſe of the Lord, do now and ever, in the Temple and out of it, morning and evening, night and day, wiſh and pray both, that He would continue forth His goodneſſe, and bleſſe with length of dayes, with ſtrength of health, with increaſe of all honour, and happineſſe, with terror in the eyes of his enemies, with grace in the eyes of his Subjects, with whatſoever David, or Salomon or any King, that ever was happie, was bleſſed with; Him, that in the Name of the Lord is come to us, and hath now theſe foure yeares ſtayd with us, that he may be bleſſed, in that Name, wherein he is come, and by the Lord, in whoſe Name he is come, many and many yeares yet to come.

And, when we have put this incenſe in our phialls, and bound this ſacrifice with cords, to the altar faſt, we bleſſe you and diſmiſſe you, to eat your bread with joy, and to drink your wine with a cheerefull heart: for, GOD accepteth your worke; your joy ſhall pleaſe Him: this Hoſanna ſhall ſanctifie all the joy, ſhall follow it.

To

To end then. This Day, which the Lord hath thus made ſo marvellouſly; ſo marvellouſly and mercifully; let us rejoyce in the Maker, for the making of it, by His doing on it that deed, that is ſo marvellous in our eyes, in all eyes; returning to the beginning of the Pſalme, and ſaying with the Prophet: O give thankes to the Lord for hee is gracius, &c. Let Iſraël, let the houſe of Aaron, yea, let all that feare the Lord, confeſſe that His mercie endureth for ever.

Verſe 1, 2, 3, 4.

Who onely doth great wonders. Who remembred us when wee were in danger.
And hath delivered us from our enemies, with a mighty hand and ſtretched out arme. And, as for them, hath turned their device upon their owne head. And hath made this day, to us, a day of joy and gladneſſe.

Pſal. 136. 4. 23. 24. 12.

To this GOD of GODS, the LORD of heaven, glorious in holineſſe, fearefull in power,
doing wonders, be, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the V. of November A. D. MDCVII.

PSAL. CXXVI.

In convertendo DOMINVS captivitatem SION, &c.

VER. 1. When the LORD brought againe the Captivitie of Sion, we were like them that dreame.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter and our tongue with joy: Then said they among the Heathen, The LORD hath done great things for them.

3 The LORD hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoyce.

4 O LORD, bring againe our Captivitie, as the Rivers in the South.

THE word Captivitie is enough to give us light, when and why this Psalme was first indited; namely, upon their returne from the Captivity: Of which returne of theirs, it may truly be said, it was one of the greatest; nay, it was the very greatest Delivery that ever GOD vouchsafed His people. Their estate no where so miserable as there; witnesse the booke of Lamentations. Their case never so joyfull, as returning thence; witnesse this booke of Psalmes. No benefit so much celebrated: None, so many Psalmes as it. Divide the whole booke into foure parts, one fourth part is, for this returne: either directly of set purpose (as here are fifteene together) or recorded in Psalmes, though made upon other purpose: still, as the greatest Delivery that ever they had.

Yet, this I confeſſe unto you, that this Delivery of theirs (ſuch as it was) falls ſhort of that of ours as on this day, wherewith yet I ſhall be faine to match it. But, this I muſt tell you before-hand: to have this of ours fully patterned in all points, we muſt not looke for it; The Scripture hath it not. They had no powder, then, it was not found. If they had had, they would have uſed it, but for the murder of perſons: they knew no other murder. But, to murther all three Eſtates of a Realme at a clap! Facti ſunt ſicut ſomniantes, or rather, Facti non ſunt ſicut ſomniantes, they never dream't of any ſuch. And what then is our caſe, thinke we, that have received from GOD ſuch a Deliverance, as we can finde no match for it?

But well, though theſe Pſalmes, of the Captivitie, come not fully home, be not altogether like ours; yet, becauſe there be none liker, none that come neerer, wee muſt content our ſelves with theſe, and either take our Texts hence, or take none at all.

In taking this then, and applying it to the preſent, there ſhall need but one word to be altered, that is, the word Captivitie. But for it, all elſe would runne very cleere and currant: if we might but change that one word, and in ſtead of reading, When the LORD turned away the Captivitie of Sion, we might thus reade, When the LORD turned away the blowing up of Sion: all beſides, every word elſe, would ſuite well, and keepe perfect correſpondencie.

It is true, it was not a Captivitie, that was turned away from us. And yet it is hard to ſay, whether it might not have proved to that too: and whether GOD, in turning it away, did not happily turne away a Captivitie. But, if not a Captivitie, that He turned away from us, was worſe than any Captivitie. This Pſalme ſheweth it; They that are Captives, how miſerable ſoever their caſe be, yet have hope of returning, as theſe had and did. But, if this of ours had taken place, we had beene ſure enough for ever returning: we had beene (all) paſt ſinging, In Convertendo.

This one word being changed (and that without wrong to the Text, for it is for a greater) all elſe will fall in and follow of it ſelfe. 1. As that of theirs, ſo this of ours, for all the world like a dreame. 2. As they, among the Heathen, then ſaid of them: So, they, of other Nations, now ſaid of us: that GOD had beene our good LORD, for bringing us againe, if not from the captivitie of Babylon, from Babylon (I am ſure) that is, from a horrible and fearefull confuſion, which He turned away from this land, and from us all.

The Summe and Diviſion.

To ſet then this Pſalme, firſt for them, and then for our ſelves. It is a Pſalme of Degrees (the title is ſo:) and two degrees there be in it. No new ones, but the uſuall; which we muſt ſtill fall upon, if we deale with the Pſalmes: (All the Pſalmes are reduced to them, even to thoſe two words Halleluja and Hoſanna, Praiſes and Prayers; Halleluja, Prayſes for Deliverance obtained; Hoſanna, prayers for obtaining the like, upon the like need.) 1. The Halleluja in the foure firſt verſes: 2. The Hoſanna in the laſt. I durſt not ſever them; they proſper not, where they goe not together.

1. The Halleluja or praiſe, hath two degrees, which (as in all other things, ſo in this make it praiſe-worthy.) 1 The Stuffe, and the 2 Workmanſhip.

The Stuffe (or matter) I call, The turning backe the captivity of Sion: and two degrees in it: 1. That Sion is ſuffered to goe into captivitie. 2. That GOD turneth away the captivitie of Sion. This is Halleluja for the Stuffe.

And againe, Halleluja for the Workmanſhip. That GOD did not deliver Sion Vincunque; but, ſo deliver her, as the manner was memorable. The manner is ſet downe in two degrees (Which two are, as it were, the embroidery of the other.) 1. Turned it ſo ſtrangely, as, when it was done, it ſeemed rather a dreame, than a thing done waking, Facti ſumus, &c. 2. Againe, turned it ſo memorably, as the Heathen talked of it, Tum dicebant, &c.

Which Dicebant divides it ſelfe, 1 into the ſound amongſt the Heathen (in the ſecond verſe,) and the 2 Eccho of it in Iſrael (in the fourth.)

Then

Then commeth the Concluſion (the beſt concluſion of all) Facti ſumus, &c. This their Halleluja.

Their Halleluja is no ſooner done, but cloſe upon it commeth their Hoſanna. To their knees they get them, and pray Converte Domine. And in this alſo two degrees: 1 Firſt, they pray to turne it. 2 And then, ſo to turne it, as the ſtreames in the South. In the South (that is) the wilderneſſe; likening their captivitie to a deſart, and their returning to ſtreames of water. And what more needfull, or what more welcome than water in the wilderneſſe? Theſe are the degrees and ſteps, in theirs. The ſame ſteps will we tread in our owne; to ſhew, that we may with good right convert to our owne uſe, this Pſalme In Convertendo. II.

Hallelujah firſt for the worke, then for the workmanſhip: The worke is, The LORD turned away the Captivitie of Sion: 1 Firſt, of the Captivitie of Sion; 2 Then, of the LORDS turning it. VER. 1. I. Hallelujah. I For the Worke. 1 The Captivitie of Sion.

The Captivitie of Sion: I aske firſt, why of Sion? why not the captivitie of Ieruſalem, Iuda, Iſrael? Ieruſalem, Iuda, Iſrael, were led away Captives, no leſſe than Sion. They, the greater, and more generall: why not the Captivitie of them; but of Sion? It ſhould ſeeme, there is more in Sion's, than in the reſt, that choice is made of it before the reſt. Why? what was Sion? We know, it was but a Hill in Ieruſalem, on the North-ſide. Why is that Hill ſo honoured? No reaſon in the world, but this; That, upon it, the Temple was built: And ſo, that Sion is much ſpoke of, and much made of, it is onely for the Temples ſake. For whoſe ſake it is (even for His Church,) that the LORD loveth the gates of Sion, more than all the dwellings of Iacob. Loveth her more, and ſo her captivitie goeth neerer Him, and her delivery better pleaſeth him, than all Iacob beſides. This maketh Sions captivitie to be mentioned chiefly, as chiefly regarded by GOD, and to be regarded by His. As (we ſee) it was: When they ſate by the water of Babylon, that which made them weepe, was, When we remembred thee, O Sion: that their greateſt griefe. That, their greateſt griefe, and this their greateſt joy; Lætati ſumus, when newes came, (not ſaith the Pſalme, in domos noſtras, We ſhall goe now every one to his owne houſe, but) in Domum Domini ibimus, Wee ſhall goe to the houſe of the LORD, we ſhall appeare before the GOD of Gods in Sion. Pſal. 48. 2. Pſal. 87. 2. Pſal. 137. 1. Pſal. 122. 1.

Sion, GOD loved and favoured high: yet, how deare ſoever Sion is in His ſight, for Sions ſinnes, propter peccata populi mei, ſhe ſometimes is forſaken, and afflicted by Him. Though He take not His mercie utterly from her, nor ſuffer His truth quite to faile, yet He viſiteth her offences with the rod, and her deeper tranſgreſſions with ſcourges: and among the reſt, with this ſcourge of Captivitie. Pſal. 89. 33. 32.

To be plagued at home, in their owne land, is but a rod in compariſon: Captivitie is a ſcourge, in reſpect of it, and a ſharpe one. To be bereft of all we have, and of (that, which they have, that have nothing elſe) libertie; to be carried into a ſtrange land; to be made bond and thrall to the proud commands of an Enemie, Woe is mee for Sion (ſaith Ieremie.) And no man ſhall need but to reade his Lamentations onely. There is, in particular, to be ſeene, the evill of captivitie, how ſharpe a ſcourge it is. The Booke was made for that end.

But, of all Captivities, none ſo evill, as that of Babel: If any other be a ſcourge, that is a Scorpion. In Ægypt, their caſe was more tolerable: their ſoules were free there, howſoever their bodies in Servitude; they might ſerve GOD yet, they were not compelled to fall downe before Iſis or Oſiris. Only, the Captivitie of Babel is the captivity of ſoules, no leſſe than bodies. There, they muſt fall downe before the great Idoll in the field

Dan.3.1,6. Dura, or be throwne into the furnace. Babel is the worſt place that is, for Sion to be carried captive to. And this is the firſt degree, Sion is afflicted, and that with Captivitie; with the Captivitie of Babel. Now to In Convertendo Dominus.

2 The Lord's Turning of it. Lament. 4. 9. They that fell by the ſword (ſaith Ieremie) were in better caſe than they that went into captivity, ſave onely that, this poore hope they had left. They might returne againe. They might returne, and ſo they did. Sion went into Captivitie; but her captivitie went not ſo farre, but it turnes againe. It is one of the Songs of Sion. Many a time

Pſal.129.1,2. have they afflicted me from my youth up, &c. And againe, Many a time have they afflicted me, &c. that is, many and many times more; but yet, they have not prevailed againſt me finally. Here is a proofe of it. Though brought to Babel, yet not left there; though led into Captivitie, yet reſtored to libertie. There may be ſnares, for her,

Pſal.124.7. but the end is, laqueus contritus eſt; there may be bonds, but the end dirupiſti vincula, Pſal.116.16. Thou haſt broken my bonds in ſunder. Sions captivity is ſtill turned backe.

But who ſhall turne it? In Convertendo Dominus. Cyrus may ſeeme to have done it: But alas, Cyrus is a great Monarch, and they a ſort of poore Captives. Beſides, he is a Heathen man, an Idolater, a ſtranger to them and their Religion; no

Marke 16.3. wayes like to turne, or to be turned; Quis revolvet nobis hunc lapidem, what engine ſhall bring this about? Dominus, the LORD ſhall. For, though the hearts of Monarchs be as rivers of many ſtreames, yet In manu Domini cor Regis (ſaith a great Mo-Prov.21.1. narch) in His hand their hearts be; Et quocunque vult convertit, and He can turne them, as the ſtreames in the South. (This verſe referring to that of Salomon.) It is the LORD then, the great Καρδιοστρόφος, the great Turner of the greateſt Monarch's hearts, that

Pſal.118.23. thus turned Cyrus's heart. Cyrus being turned, his Decree came forth for their returne. A Domino factum eſt iſtud, It was His doing; they ſaw it, they noted it; and they had beene to be noted of great blindneſſe, if they had not noted it. But, note

Pſal.124.1,2. it they did. So they beginne one of their Songs, Niſi quia DEVS; and againe they repeat it, Niſi quia DEVS, If the LORD had not done it, it had not beene done. But for Him, they had beene in Babel, ſtill. Thus much [1] for Sion's captivitie, and [2] the LORDS turning: The LORD turned away the Captivitie of Sion. So have yee the worke: Hallelujah for the worke.

2 Hallelujah. For the workmanſhip, or manner. And againe, Hallelujah for the Workmanſhip. To eſcape a Captivitie, is enough, it ſkills not now; howſoever, it is well; thanks be to GOD. But, it receiveth encreaſe, and is made capable of a higher degree, by the Manner: and that greatly. All captivities are grievous; ſpecially, that of Babel: And all returnes joyfull; ſpecially, from thence. Yet is even that made more joyfull, two wayes; ſet higher by theſe two degrees: 1. That it was like a dreame. It is ever a ſigne of a very ſtrange event, when men, at the ſeeing ought, though they be awake, yet thinke they are not; though they doe not dreame, yet thinke, they are in a dreame. 2. That they among the Heathen talked of it. It is ever a ſigne of a famous accident, when other men (ſpecially, other Nations) ſpeake, and ſpeake magnificè of it.

So ſtrange as like a dreame. 1 Vnlookt for. Facti ſumus ſicut ſomniantes, We were as it were in a dreame, it came ſo unlook't for. For, ſo come dreames (we know) without looking for: (Men know not, when they goe to bed, what they ſhall dreame of.) And it is a benefit, to have a benefit come, like a dreame, without waiting longer for it.

2 Without labour. Then, it came without any labour of our parts: That, that commeth in a dreame, commeth to us ſleeping; we doing nothing to it, or toward it, more than if we had beene faſt aſleepe. And, it is a benefit to have a benefit come like a dreame, without paines-taking for it.

3 Beyond hope. But, neither of theſe is it: That it was unlaboured for, or that it was unlook't for. But, that it was ſo ſtrange, as no man would ever have looked for it; ſo ſtrange, as well might we dreame of ſome ſuch thing, but (awake) never any ſaw the like. The nature of dreames is ſuch: Men, in dreames, have ſuch ſtrange things appeare to them, as

Gen.28.12. 37.9. Dan.2.31,32. would never come into the minds of any, that were awake. They ſee ladders ſo long as will reach up to heaven: They ſee the Moone and Starres worſhipping them: They ſee men with heads of gold and breſts of ſilver, and I wot not what things: incredible things, of the phanſies figuring, but never of the ſenſes apprehending. This maketh things, by all likelihood, to ſeeme like dreames. And ſuch was their caſe, at the comming out of Cyrus's proclamation, for their returne. It was ſo little looked for, that ever it ſhould come; it was ſo above all they could hope for, when it did come; that, what with the ſuddenneſſe, and what with the ſtrangeneſſe, for the preſent, it ſeemed to them a dreame of the night, rather than any viſion of the day. Well might they ſay, Facti ſumus, &c.

A dreame it was. To ſpecifie what kinde of dreame. Iacob dreamed, and was much comforted with it: Nebuchadnezzar dreamed, and was exceedingly frighted with it. This (here) was of the nature of Iacob's; a comfortable, pleaſant dreame: You may ſee by the effects in the ſecond verſe; Tum repletum eſt, &c. And ſure, the impreſſion of the phanſie, no where ſheweth it ſelfe more powerfull, than in dreames; Men ſhall be ſo affected, as they ſhall even laugh out, as they ſhall even talke aloud; yea ſo, that they ſhall even wake with it many times. This here was ſuch; Ioyfull, it filled their hearts full of joy; ſo full, as it even brake forth, and ranne over, over into the countenance, Os riſu; over into the tongue, Lingua jubilo. The face is a mirrour, to ſhew, how the minde is affected: The tongue a trumpet, to ſound out the ſecrets of the heart. You might ſee their joy, in their face, as in a mirrour: you might heare it from their tongue, as from a trumpet. A ſigne it was, the Fountaine was full, when both the Ciſternes thus runne over. A pleaſant Dreame. Gen. 28. 15. Dan. 4. 5.

But, what is it for a dreame, to be pleaſant, if it be not true withall? Nay; there is no more miſerable caſe, than of him that dreameth the pleaſant Ivory-dreame, and when he awaketh findes it nothing ſo. Dreames, he is at a feaſt, and waketh all hungrie: dreames, he is rich; and waking, findes nothing in his hands. This, was not ſuch: it was per corneam portam, a true one; not to be let goe for a dreame, for it proved more than a dreame, a reall thing indeed. For, when they came out of their dreame, all the Countrey about rang of it, Tum dicebant, &c. And true withall.

And, there can be no better way, to come to a true judgement of what befalleth us, than by dicebant, what other men ſay of it. Men are commonly over-ſenſible of their owne joy: a truer eſtimate would be taken, from them, that are no parties to it. Beſt, heare what they ſay.

Eſpecially, if it be not onely Dicebant inter Homines, but inter Gentes too; if they be not ſingle men, but whole Nations. Their Dicebant is yet a degree further. For, many a deliverance there is, the world never talkes of, and yet, great for all that: but, thoſe, that fill the eyes and the mouthes of whole Nations, muſt needs be primæ Magnitudinis: and ſo was this then. Notice was taken of this, by thoſe inter Gentes; and no other talke for the time, but of it. This ſheweth, it might well be as ſtrange, as a dreame, but was no dreame indeed.

The Heathen were either ſtrangers, and regarded them not; or enemies, and maligned them. No feare, that ſuch (eſpecially, the later ſort) ſhould dreame too. No; Envie ſleepes not. And waking and ſeeing it; no feare, they will be partiall and confeſſe more than truth. Commonly, their nature is to abate, diminiſh, extenuate: no feare of amplifying at their hands. If they ſay, it is great; it is great indeed. And here, both ſtrangers, and enemies confeſſe it; therefore, we may be ſure, it was no vulgar or ordinary turning.

And truely, great reaſon they had ſo to ſay; It could be no policie (they ſaw) for Cyrus, to ſend them backe. He had them now ſafe, and well broken to ſervice, by ſeventie yeares continuance. They might prove ſlippery, and revolt; and ſo hee repent his ſending them home. Beſides, he ſent none backe, of all the reſt of his Captives, being (yet) of his owne Religion, which theſe were not. They ſaw (then) no reaſon for it, in the world. Then, to let them goe; and in ſuch ſort to let them goe; with ſo ample a commiſſion, with ſo rich rewards, to build againe: This, when it came to their notice, it made them muſe, it found them talke; it even drew from them this dicebant. ſo memorable as the Heathen talked of it.

VER. 2. The Sound amongſt the Heathen.

Then ſaid they of the Heathen.] And, what is it they ſaid? It is to the purpoſe. In this (as in many other) the Heathen's ſaying cannot be mended. This they ſay: 1. That they were no quotidian, or common things; but great. 2. Then, theſe great things they aſcribe not to chance; that they hapned not, but were done. 3. Then, done by GOD Himſelfe: they ſee GOD, in them. 4. Then, not done by GOD at randome, without any particular ayme; but, purpoſely done for them. 5. And yet, there is more in magnificavit facere (if we looke well.) For, magna fecit would have ſerved all this: But, in ſaying magnificavit facere, they ſay magnifecit illos, ut magna faceret pro illis, He magnified them, or ſet greatly by them, for whom He would bring to paſſe ſo great a Worke. This, ſaid they among the Heathen.

And it is pitie, the Heathen ſaid it, and that the Iewes themſelves ſpake not theſe words, firſt. But, they were ſo raviſhed with joy at the firſt, as they were to be borne with. But now, finding the Heathen ſo ſaying; and finding, it was all but true, they ſaid; they muſt needs finde themſelves bound to ſay at leaſt ſo much: (And more they could not: for, more cannot be ſaid.) So much then, and no leſſe than they. And this addeth a degree to the dicebant. That the ſound of it was ſo great among the Heathen, as it made an Eccho even in Iury it ſelfe.

VER. 3. The Eccho of it in Iſrael.

That Eccho then followeth (in the III. verſe.) The perſon onely changed; Nobiſcum, for Cum illis: there's all. And indeed, Sion ſhould have beene much to blame, if the Heathen ſhould ſee thoſe things for great, and GOD to be the Doer of them, and Sion ſhould not diſcerne them for ſuch. If the Heathen ſhould ſay magnificavit Dominus facere, and Sion ſhould not magnifie Him for this ſo magnificent a worke; if this Confeſſion ſhould even be wrung from the Heathen, and ſhould not come voluntary from the Children of Sion, whom it more neerely concerned a great deale.

But what, ſhall there be no difference betweene Sion's and the Heathens dicebant, but onely Nobiſcum? Yes: for though the words be the ſame, there may be oddes in the uttering. GOD forbid, but Sion ſhould ſay, in another manner key, at the leaſt.

The Concluſion: Facti ſumus lætantes.

And yet, there is ſome amends for Sion: The words are not all out the ſame. Here is a hemiſtichium more in Sion's; in which, they plainely expreſſe the oddes, betweene their affections and the Heathens. This it is; Facti ſumus lætantes: That is, the Heathen ſay it; but, rather wondring, than rejoycing at it. They ſay it, becauſe they cannot chooſe but ſay it, it is ſo evident; but they bite the lippe when they have done; they could have beene well content, to have ſpared the ſpeech; well content, that GOD had not done it, that they might not have ſaid it. In a word: they ſay it without a lætantes; But, Sion ſaith it joying, and joyeth in ſaying it: ſaith it; and, in ſaying it, ſay at the end of it, Facti ſumus lætantes. And this (here) is true joy, grounded upon the due conſideration of the matter, by occaſion of the Heathen's ſpeech. The other (before) was like the laughing in a dreame. But, this, true joy; and, in ſigne thereof, it was at the firſt but facti ſumus ſicut ſomniantes; but here, it is facti ſumus (not ſicut, but) verè lætantes, truely joyfull indeed. And this maketh up their Halleluja.

VER. 4. II. Their Hoſanna.

Pſal. 73. 20.

Their Halleluja thus performed, they come to their Hoſanna ſtraight. And why ſo ſtraight? They were ſicut ſomniantes; ſo they ſay: And, dreames (we know) have this quality, they are but ſhort. And, they were facti lætantes; and, joy commonly is of the ſame nature, laſteth not much longer than a dreame, but vaniſheth quickly, as a dreame when one awaketh. Dreames, and joyes, as ſoone had, ſo ſoone loſt. That therefore their lætantes prove not ſicut ſomniantes, to keep their joy waking, this they think, their wiſeſt way: No ſooner to make an end of Halleluja, but ſtraight to beginne their their Hoſanna, make the next verſe to their thankes for In Convertendo, a petition, Converte. And that to Him, that granted that; to grant this. In convertendo Dominus, Converte Domine: (that is, Hoſanna to Him in the higheſt.)

Converte Domine: Why how now? But very now, they prayſed Him for turning it away, and doe they now pray Him, to turne it away? How hangs this together: to pray to have that turned, that is turned already? They may ſeeme to be ſcarce yet out of their dreame. Not ſo: Theſe two Converte's, and theſe two Captivities are not all one. Saint Auguſtine ſaith well (upon ſolutis doloribus inferni, Acts II.) that, two manner of wayes, a thing is looſed: [1] Either, after we are already ſnared; [2] or elſe beforehand, that we be not ſnared with it at all. CHRIST looſed thoſe ſorrowes, this latter way, which is farre the better way of the twaine. And even ſo, two waies is a captivitie (or any miſchiefe elſe) turned away: [1] by an after-deliverie, when it is come: [2] or by a fore-hand prevention, yer it doe come. The Grecians expreſſe it, by Prometheus and Epimetheus: the Latines, by Antevorta, and Poſtvorta; The Schoolemen, by præveniendo, and ſubveniendo: But, prevention is ever the better. Better a good Buckler, to keepe off the blow; than a good Plaiſter, to heale the hurt of it. Better never ſee Babel, than returne from it. The captivitie of the firſt verſe was come, and is now come and gone: Who knoweth, whether there be any other to come? If there be, Converte Domine, turne it away beforehand; take order there never come any more. So, it is plain, for all the former In convertendo, they may well pray this laſt too, notwithſtanding. They may well pray it; and good reaſon they have, to pray it. The children of Edom, and the reſt of their evill neighbours, that ſhewed their goodwill in this captivitie paſt, are the ſame men ſtill; ſtill carry the ſame minds. No yeare, no day goeth over their heads, but they wiſh and contrive, to bring another, either captivitie, or ſome miſchiefe elſe, I know not what. Therefore Converte Domine is no more than needs.

1 They pray to turne it.

Acts 2.24.

Pſal.137.7.

Now, as Converte Domine is, what they wiſh done: Sicut torrentes is, the manner how they wiſh it done. Turne it and ſo turne it, as the ſtreames in the South. By the South, underſtanding the South climate; on which ſide, lay Arabia deſerta. All, South-ward from them, was nothing but a drie and waſt wilderneſſe. It is of the nature of a wilderneſſe to be without water. And what ſtreames are there then in the wilderneſſe? None, but ſuch as they call Land-waters. And how are they turned or brought thither? No other way, than by melting the ſnow on the great high hills there, which being diſſolved by the ſummer-ſun, come downe ſo plentifully, that all the pooles are filled with water ſo ſtrongly, that they turne the courſe of mighty rivers. Their meaning then is: 1. They have as great need of deliverie, as the South-climate hath of water. 2. Captivitie is as congealed ſnow, and they frozen faſt in it, that they cannot ſtirre. 3. They would have it turned, but by no violent way, but even onely by thawing and melting the hearts of Princes (Cyrus and the reſt) ſet againſt them (whoſe hearts Salomon compareth to theſe ſtreames:) by that, rather than by any other way. 4. That never was water-ſtreame more welcome to the way-faring man, in the wilderneſſe, than this ſhall be to them. For, we reade of two manner of turnings they had. [1] One out of Ægypt, in violent and tempeſtuous manner: The ſea fled, Iordan was driven backe; Pharao was drowned; Sehon and Og ſlaine; very great adoe there was. [2] And now this, out of Babylon; neither by an armie, nor by maine ſtrength, but by my Spirit (ſaith the Lord) breathing upon Cyrus, and in milde and gentle manner melting his heart: and there was all. A converſion (not as that of Pharao, but) as this of Cyrus: not, as the rivers of the North; but, as the ſtreames in the South, is it they pray for. So pray they, and ſo will all pray that are well-adviſed. Thus farre their Hoſanna.

2 The manner of turning it.

Now to alter the property of all this, and to convert it to our own uſe: and to ſhew firſt, that both this Halleluja; and then that this Hoſanna, will no leſſe agree to us, and our Queer (if not more; but certainly more;) a review muſt needs be granted, of all the former points. And in them (there is no remedie, but) we muſt fall to meaſuring; that it may appeare, there is great ods, betweene this of ours, and that of theirs. Conſequently, that we are bound to give thanks with another manner of Hallelu ja, than ever did they. And that, whether we looke to that which was turned away; ours was worſe: to the manner of turning it ſelfe, ours was better: to the meanes of this turning; ours to be preferred: to the likeneſſe of a dreame, to the dicebant inter Gentes, to the facti ſumus lætantes: in all and every point, we are ſtill beyond them.

The Application.

Our turning and delivery the greater far.

1 For that which was turned away.

That which was turned away, in them, was a Captivitie, for terme of yeares: In us, was an utter deſolation: as much ods betweene them, as betweene lying in priſon, and flying in peeces. Captivitie (as we ſee by this) is Vox convertibilis, hath hope to turne againe; utter deſolation being uncapable of in convertendo, paſt all hope or poſſibilitie of ever returning more.

And what manner of deſolation? For, we may find Captivities to match theirs: For a People to be carried away captive, is no new thing upon earth. But, this deſolation of ours puts downe all that ever were. What ſhould I ſay, but as the Apoſtle of that which paſſeth the ſpeech of all ſpeakers, Oculus non vidit, &c. The like never was ſeene, heard, nor entred into the heart of man.

1 Cor. 2.9.

2 For the manner of turning.

And our turning, therefore, the better: and not onely therefore; but in it ſelfe, ſimply. Two turnings we ſaid there were: 1 By prevention, yer it come: and 2 ſubvention, after it is come; and prevention the better, and that was ours. Theirs was by Poſtvorta; light upon them firſt. Ours came not at us at all; and yet, very neere us it came, as neere as could be, not to hurt us; and even then, away it was turned. So much the better (ſhould I thinke) we will reckon of it. That the blow, or blowing up was turned, and we not hurt; rather than we hurt, and lye long on the Chirurgians hand and at laſt be cured. That of theirs lay heavie upon them for a long time, yer it was turned away: Seventy yeares full. Ours was turned, in the turning of a hand. And we know, it is a doubling of the pleaſure, to doe it at once.

3 For the means.

As in the manner, ſo in the meanes of this turning, we paſſe them farre. In that of theirs, the immediate cauſe of their turning, under GOD, was the turning of Cyrus the Kings heart, which GOD hath in His hand, and turneth as the ſtreames of water. And was not ours ſo too? And yet ſtill, after a more excellent manner. Theirs, a Heathen; ours, a Chriſtian Prince: theirs, a ſtranger; ours, our owne. To the ſtrange turning of whoſe heart, to turne the letter into a ſtrange conſtruction, next to God Himſelfe, we may all truely aſcribe our deſtruction then turned away. This for the 1 turning, the 2 manner, and 3 meanes of it.

4 For the likeneſſe to a dreame. Ezra 1.1.

Now at the time of this turning, if they were ſicut ſomniantes, we were more. 1. They were delivered by a proclamation: proclamations (we know) come not forth, till it be well on of the day, when the ſtreets are well filled with people to heare them; but never early in the morning. But, the newes of ours came betimes, when a great part of us were not out of our beds, and ſcarce well awake: ſo, it might be affirmed of us literally, we were then in good earneſt, ſicut ſomniantes.

Acts 12.7.

2. Saint Peter was awake, broad awake, when the Angels made his chaines fall off: he clothed himſelfe, ſhod himſelfe, girt himſelfe, went through three gates one after another, and after that, through a whole ſtreet; yet that that happened, was ſo exceeding ſtrange to him, that all this while, he thought he was but in a dreame. Our caſe was Saint Peters for all the world; we were truely delivered, and yet many of us got up, and were fully ready, yer we could get our ſelves ready to beleeve, but that we did ſtill Viſum videre: Sicut ſomniantes, & ecce vigilantes.

Acts 12.9.

3. They had ſenſe of their captivitie, their mind ran on it; the more their mind ran on it, the more like to dreame of it. We had not ſo much: it was the further end of our thought, and therefore more like a dreame, more unlooked for.

4. They were not faſt aſleep, they did ſomewhat toward their deliverie; with long, often and earneſt prayer, they did ſolicite GOD; they and their Prophets for them. We prayed not, we knew no cauſe to pray: nothing at all did we to it or toward it, it ran into our nets, while we were on ſleepe.

5 For the Joy of the dreame.

Shall I ſay any thing of the joy of the dreame? This I may: that we paſſe them in that that. They were in a ſtrange countrie; they muſt looke more demurely, they muſt ſpeake more ſparingly. We were in our owne, we might doe it the more freely, both in countenance and ſpeech. And for the time, ſo we did.

And will ye now ſee, we paſſe them in dicebant. Theirs was dicebant; but of ours, not onely dicebant, but Scribebant and excudebant; ſaid it, writ it, and printed it. And what, as this here, Magna? Nay Magna, Et à ſeculo inaudita; ſuch, ſo great, as the like was never heard before. 6 For dicebant.

This for dicebant. And for inter Gentes, we paſſe them there. For, who talked of theirs? a handfull of nations, in compariſon; but thoſe that bordered about. They in effect ſay as much: Not Gentes, not all; but inter Gentes, ſome among them. A ſmall part of the World, compared to ours: more tongues a great deale went to our Dicebant. I may ſafely ſay, Quæ regio in terris, What land is there, whither the fame of it is not gone, where it is not ſpoken of? and we by meanes of it renouned and made famous over all the earth; even to Turkes and Infidels (for, thither alſo it is come, how God hath dealt with us.) Yea, even our very Enemies themſelves (I doubt not) when it was told in Gath, and publiſhed in the ſtreets of Aſcalon; even in Rome it ſelfe, even they in the Conclave, even the Pope himſelfe, helped to make up this dicebant; though not aloud that their voice might be heard in the ſtreets, yet among themſelves, in private, were forced to ſay as much: that, the greatneſſe of ours received witneſſe from the mouth of our enemies. 7 For Inter Gentes.

Our dicebant is double to theirs then, and ſo is our facti ſumus lætantes: There is, as a joy for our owne deliverie; ſo likewiſe another joy, for the fall of our enemies: They had the former only: We, both former and later. For, in theirs, they to whom they had beene Captives, let them goe; and there was all; and they were glad of it: but they of Babylon became not Captives to Sion. But in ours, not only the Captivity was turned away; but we led captivitie captive, which is the greateſt Ioy of all. They that meant ours, inſtead of ours, found their owne: were taken in their owne turne, became captives themſelves; and as they entended, our members ſhould, ſo theirs (now) tent, and ſtretched one from the other. So, in every point, they fall ſhort of us; and we, in all and every, are ſtill beyond them. 8 For facti ſumus lætantes.

And now let me a little ſtay, and ſay as much for our ſelves, as for the Iewes. If we ſhall but enter into our owne hearts for a moment, we cannot but thinke thus: What, doth this our deliverance draw thus much, even from other nations, that are our enemies? Why then (belike) it muſt be ſome extraordinarie great one. Why (me thinkes) it toucheth not them, this; it toucheth us: it is we, that were delivered and not they: and, ſhall they ſay all this of us, and ſhall not we ſay as much of our ſelves? Shall we come behind them, or rather, ſhall we not come behind them, ſince they are got before in this Dicebant? The words we cannot mend, they are ſo full; Great were the things, and very Great: They chanced not; they were done; done by God, He was the Doer; He the Doer of theſe great things, and we the people, for whom theſe great things were done: And ſo, a people highly magnified by Him in His mercie; and ſo, a people deepely bound to magnifie Him for all His mercies, but for this, above all, that all the World ſpeaks of.

And, though we cannot, with other words than they; yet can, and will (I truſt) with farre other affections. GOD forbid, but facere nobiſcum ſhould be ſounded in an higher key, than facere cum illis. In dangers (I am ſure) it is; never any mens dangers touch us as our owne: Never they from the ſhore, cry ſo heartily, Lord ſave them, that they ſee in danger of drowning upon the Sea; as they in the ſhip, themſelves cry, Lord ſave us. GOD forbid, but we that felt it, ſhould take up our Hallelujã in a higher ſtreine than they, that were but lookers on; heard of it, and ſpake of it, but were not partakers as we were of it.

Let this be the difference: that we ſay the ſame, that they ſay: but they ſay, Magnificavit Dominus facere cum illis, and facti ſunt gementes; and we, magnificavit Dominus facere nobiſcum, & facti ſumus lætantes.

And, ſince our caſe doth ſo many waies ſurpaſſe this of the Iewes, in all the points along;

along; our Halleluja muſt needs doe ſo too. It is but reaſon I will require. Theirs (here) went no further, than their mouth and their tongue, Os & lingua: more they mention not. But, in a certaine place, the Pſalmiſt, when he would expreſſe a far greater joy, thus he ſaith, All my bones ſhall ſay, Lord who is like thee? This, I thinke reaſon, that ſeeing our bones ſhould have beene ſcattered in every corner like as chips, when one heweth wood on the earth; (ſhould have, but were not:) Not onely our mouth and tongue (as theirs;) but our very bones ſhould ſay, Halleluja, Lord who is like thee, who haſt rid us from a danger, the like whereof never was? I adde further: that, if we and our bones would hold our peace, the ſtones ſhould crie it. For, timber-work, and ſtone-worke, and all had flyen in peeces (we know) then; even (as Abakuk ſpeaketh) that the beame out of the timber-worke, and the ſtone out of the wall, may crie one to another; the beame to the ſtone, Halleluja; and the ſtone, to the beame againe, Halleluja, To Him, that hath kept them faſt, and not made Ieruſalem as an heape of ſtones. Even they, to cry: Every bone to have a tongue; and every ſtone and beame to have a tongue, to put downe theirs, and to make our dicebant, our Halleluja, our magnificavit the louder.

Pſal. 35. 10. Pſal. 141. 7. Luk. 19 40. Habac. 2, 11.

Our Hoſanna.

And now, ſhall we ſtay here and end with Halleluja, and cut off Hoſanna quite? I dare not: I ſeldome ſee Halleluja hold long, if Hoſanna forſake it, and ſecond it not. For I aske; What, are they all dead, that ſought our lives? Say, they are: Is the devill dead too? If he be not, it skills not, if they were. His powder-mill will ſtill be going; he will ſtill be as buſie, as ever, in turning over all his devices, in turning himſelfe into as many ſhapes as Proteus, and all to turne us to ſome miſchiefe. The more it concernes us, not to be too long at our Halleluja, but, when we have done it, before we ſtirre, to take up our Hoſanna; not to forget it in any wiſe. After we have praiſed Him for in convertendo, that ſo it is: to returne, to our Converte Domine, that ſo it may long be. The wheele will ſtand, it will not turne on ſtill, without it.

Then, in the perſon of humble ſupplicants cry we all, Hoſanna to the higheſt, and Converte Domine, to Him, that is Lord of Ezekiels wheeles, and of all their converſions. The rather, for that there is no one deſigne, hath more layd open and let us ſee the defects and weakeneſſe of all humane wiſedome and watchfulneſſe, than this. There wanted neither, but it went beyond both. No, nor any deſigne hath let us ſee, how dangerous and undiſcoverable plots, the devill is able to poſſeſſe his limms withall. All to let us ſee, what need we have, to turne to Him, with our Converte, that can ſee what they doe at mid-night, in the vault, as well as what is done at noone-day, on the houſe-top: can ſee, and diſcover; diſcover it, and turne it away. That He would, as many as are comming this way, turne them all away.

Ezek. 1. 15.

And turne them all away, by the way of prevention; not ſuffering them to light on us (as theirs did) and then after remove it; but averting it, before it come; leſt after, it be too late.

And (that we forget not Sicut) that He turne it by ſuch, and no other meanes, than the ſtreames in the South; that is, with no great adoe: not, in boiſterous or rigorous meanes, as that of Ægypt; but, in milde and calme manner, as this of Babel, and as our owne. By the ſame meanes ſtill; even by the turning of the heart, which is in His hands; which as the ſtreames in the South He now did turne; and ſo ſtill and ever may. That, from that fountaine (ſtill) may flow the ſtreames, that may give us refreſhing in time of our need. That, if it be His bleſſed wil, that may ever be the Sicut, as now it was.

And now, turne our captivitie ô Lord, paſt and to come; turne both; that, as the ſtreames of the South, they may melt, fall away, and come to nothing; that our future dangers may ſtill be ſicut ſomnia, ever as dreames, but never viſions: that, as we have beene now matter of praiſe to the Nations, for our former deliverie, ſo we never become a by-word to them, for any after calamitie: but that, our concluſion may be ever, facti ſumus lætantes, ſtill in joy, and this joy may never be taken from us; that we ſtill may laud and magnifie thy glorious Name, evermore prayſing thee and ſaying, Magnificetur Dominus. The Lord hath magnified his power and goodneſſe toward us, this day, for which His holy Name be magnified, this day, and for ever.

Ioh. 16. 22.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the V. of November A. D. MDCIX.

LVKE CHAP. IX. VER. LIV, LV, LVI.

Cum vidiſſent autem Diſcipuli, &c.

And when His Diſciples Iames and Iohn ſaw it, they ſaid: Lord, wilt thou that we command, that fire come downe from heaven, and conſume them, even as Elias did?

But Ieſus turned about and rebuked them, and ſaid: Ye know not of what Spirit ye are:

For the Sonne of man is not come to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them.

WE have here, in this Text, a whole town of Samaria, in danger of being deſtroyed; of being deſtroyed, by fire: and they ſcaped it narrowly: ſo neere it was, there lacked but dicimus, a word ſpeaking. Of the Diſciples, ſome were very forward in the motion: but, CHRIST rebuked them: and the end was, the Towne was ſaved. And was not this, under the termes of Iames and Iohn and a Towne of Samaria, our very caſe; this day foure yeare? We were then in danger of deſtroying; and deſtroying by the ſame element, fire; and ſo neere it we were, it would have beene done as ſoone, as a letter burnt. There were then, that forwarded theſe fire-workes, with their dicimus, all they could: and they they ſaid, they were Diſciples of IESVS's ſocietie. But IESVS ſhewed Himſelfe, to be (in heaven) of the ſame minde, He was, on earth. And as He was then better, to this Towne, than His Diſciples; ſo, to us He was better, than the Fathers of His Societie, and rebuked them too: and bleſſed be GOD, as the Text ends, ſo did the matter; in Non perdere, ſed ſalvare: none deſtroyed, all ſaved.

Finding here theſe words [Non perdere] in the Text, which amount to as much as Ne perdas, it brings to my minde, that this Text will ſecond well Davids ne perdas. As, when time was, we had Davids Ne perdas, to ſave a King: ſo, here we have now the Sonne of Davids (CHRISTS) Ne perdas, to ſave (a towne in the Text; but with us) an Aſſembly more worth than Samaria, and all the Townes in it.

This Ne perdas of CHRIST, beſide the Sabboth it ſelfe, is to us (this day) matter
Luke 6.1. of a ſecond Sabboth: and ſo, this (like that in the Goſpell) δευτεροπρωτον, a ſecond beſides the firſt, two Sabboths in one; wherein, the voice of prayſe and thankſgiving is here, and is all over the land, for the happie non perdere, ſed ſalvare, of this day.

The Summe. The whole Text is a queſtion, upon a Caſe: the Caſe, this. CHRIST was journeying from Galilee, to Ieruſalem: Being in that countrie upon His way, He ſent to this towne, to take up lodging: No lodging would be had; a generall reſtraint; no
Verſe 53. man to receive Him: the quarrell, becauſe His face was toward Ieruſalem; would not worſhip with them, in their mount. Vpon this Caſe, this queſtion: Whether this towne, for not receiving CHRIST, upon pretence He was not of their Religion, might not be conſumed? Or make the Caſe (if you will) blowne up with fire. Some little difference there is, and but little: Vis, dicimus deſcendat (ſay they;) Vis, facimus aſcendat (ſay ours:) deſcendat, or aſcendat, both end, in conſumet eos, deſtruction of them and us. In this queſtion, we ſhall divide CHRIST and His companie. For, of them, two here named were readie to doe it, and therefore reſolve, it might be done. But CHRIST ruleth the Caſe, for the Towne, that it ought not to be done; No, not for this quarrell, Non receperunt Eum; No not upon theſe parties, Samaritans; No not by that meanes done by miracle.

It was an error (this) of the Diſciples; we ſee it plaine, by Neſcitis: but, of it may well be ſaid, that Gregorie ſaith of another of theirs, O ſalutaris error, qui totius mundi ſuſtulit errorem! A bleſſed error it was; for, by it the world was rid of the like error, ever after. Rid of the error of this day: What CHRIST anſwered in this caſe, He would have anſwered in ours, à fortiori; If not a poore towne, not ſuch an Aſſembly. If not, by a ſupernaturall and miraculous; not, by an unnaturall, and monſtrous act. If not, for Himſelfe; not for Saint Peter. So that, this daies caſe determined here by CHRIST, before ever it was propounded: and determined quite contrarie, by IESVS, to His Diſciples, then; or to His Societie, of late. We are all much bound to Saint Luke, for recording it, or to the Holy Ghoſt rather, for inſpiring him, ſo to doe. For, ſo long as this Verſe ſhall ſtand in this Goſpell, it will ſerve for a reſolution to this queſtion. Whether upon pretence of religion, CHRIST will allow, the Iew ſhould blow up the Samaritane? Vpon non receperunt eos, any of His Diſciples may doe that, which they (here) would have done? This rebuke here of theſe, will reach to all undertakers in the ſame kinde. This Non perdere ſed ſalvare, ſaves all our Townes, Cities, and States, from conſuming by fire, from any of CHRISTS companie.

The Diviſion. To paſſe then to the entreatie. In the former verſe, there is a Motive, and a Motion.
I. 1 The Motive in theſe: And when His Diſciples, Iames and Iohn, ſaw this. 1. The Motion in theſe: They ſaid, Lord, wilt thou that we, &c. 1 Somewhat they ſaw, to move them: and what they ſaw, is in the verſe before; Non receperunt Eum: CHRISTS
Verſe 53. ſuffering repulſe; and for no other cauſe, but becauſe His face was to-Ieruſalem-ward:
II. that is, were not affected, as they were in religion. 2. The Motion, 1 to have the towne deſtroyed for it: 2 deſtroyed by fire: 3 by fire from heaven: 4 from heaven, onely by dicamus, ſpeaking a word onely: and 5 this, upon warrant, Sicut fecit Elias, Elias's example.

In

In the latter, CHRISTS cenſure. Firſt, He giveth no leave nor liking any way to the Motion. 1 Magiſter, vis dicimus (ſay they:) ſed, Magiſter non vult dicere. 2 So farre from that, as He rebukes them, that moved it. The rebuke of the movers, is a diſlike of the motion. 3 Rebukes them not, for ſome one point, or circumſtance in it, but even for the whole, for moving to Him, any ſuch thing. 4 Nay, He goeth further: likes not the motion; nor likes not the ſpring it comes from. 5 In His rebuke, tells them, Neſcitis, they are much miſtaken: miſtaken themſelves, and miſtake Him, both. Themſelves, to move any ſuch matter: Him, to move it, to Him: it being neither meet for them, to move; nor Him, to grant. Them, to move: for, they were of another ſpirit, if they could hit on it. Him, to grant: For, He came to another end, than either to heare, or yeeld to motions of that nature: tells them they are not of Elias's ſpirit, but of His, if they be His Diſciples; and ſo, muſt come as He came, Non perdere, ſed ſalvare. III.

But (becauſe we come not now to learne onely; but to give thankes, as the dutie of the Day requireth) after this, we will lay the two caſes together, caſe by caſe; this of the Day, to this in the Text: by which, it will eaſily appeare (I doubt not) that wee have as great cauſe every way, of joy, and thankſgiving; nay, of the twaine, the greater, for the happie Ne perdas, CHRISTS Ne perdas, of this day.

OR yer we come to the motion, let us begin with that, that was the beginning of all this quarrell; that is, Diſſent in religion, betweene the Samaritan, and the Iew. We ſee the fruit of it here, and what ſpirit it maketh men of. On the one ſide: Be they Iewes, goe they to Ieruſalem? let them have neither meat, drinke, nor lodging; (that is to ſay) ſtarve them. On the other: Be they Samaritans, Sectaries? pitie of their lives; put fire to them, burne them, blow them up. Mutuall and mortall hatred breaking forth, upon every occaſion. The woman of Samaria expreſſeth it; by Non co-utuntur, They uſe not, one ſide the other. She might even as well have ſaid, co-abutuntur, they abuſe each the other; ſo they doe; forgetting humanitie and divinitie too, on either part. Here is the fruit: this, the ſpirit it breedeth. And theſe two, the Samaritan, and the Iew, they made not an end of this, till it made an end of them. Look in Ioſephus, you ſhall ſee in the dayes of Claudius (Cumanus then Deputy) the very like quarrell to this (here) upon the very ſame occaſion, taken wholly by the Zelotæ, and purſued hard, opened the way to the Iewes warres, which never ended, till the utter rooting out and deſolation of them both. Thus it was: and thus it will be: and by this we ſee, how neceſſary CHRISTS Pax vobis is; and the Peace-maker, that could make the peace, how bleſſed he ſhould be! bleſſed here, and bleſſed everlaſtingly. I. The Motive. Iohn 4.9. Iohn 20.26. Matth. 5.9.

But, let me tell you this withall: this Spirit was not then, in all; neither all the Diſciples, nor all the Samaritans. Some there were, on both ſides, more moderately affected. The Diſciples (I doubt not) did all of them (the other ten, too) much diſlike this diſcourteſie offered CHRIST: yet, all cried not for fire: Two onely, theſe two onely of the twelve. On the other ſide; the Samaritans neither, all were not thus inhumane. Though this Towne received Him not, it is ſaid (in the laſt verſe) they went to another Towne, and there He was received. So all, neither all the Diſciples thus ſpirited; not all the ſonnes of thunder; ſome the ſonnes of raine, as Bartholomew is interpreted: nor all the Countrey of Samaria; GOD provided better, for both. All had gone to a generall combuſtion, if all had beene of this deſtructive ſpirit: and all did goe, when thoſe ſpirits gate the upper hand. Verſe 56. Marke 3.17.

And for their comfort, that are ſuch, this: that our SAVIOVR CHRIST was none of the Zelotæ, but ſhewed Himſelfe on that ſide, that enclined to humanity and peace. There was no fault in Him. It was ſtill His deſire co-ũti Samaritanis, to uſe, Iohn 4. 7. and be uſed by them; He would have had water, and asked it of the woman of Samaria: Sent His Diſciples to that towne, (there) to buy meat; and now, to this Towne here, to take up lodging: ſhewed Himſelfe (ſtill) willing, to breake downe this partition-wall. In this very journey, after this repulſe here, yet He healed (among others) a

Luke 17. 16. Leaper, yea, though a Samaritan. Yea, ſo favourable that way He was, and ſo readie to be uſed, as He was counted and called a Samaritan for His labour. Well then, let Iohn 8. 48. this Towne, and theſe two Diſciples pleaſe themſelves, in their conſuming zeale: that other Towne, in the laſt verſe, and the other ten were in the right. CHRIST was in the right (I am ſure:) and it is ſafe for us, that the ſame minde be in us, that was in CHRIST IESVS. And ſo now to the Motion: But firſt, to the Motive, And when they ſaw, &c.

Let me ſay this, for Saint Iames and Saint Iohn; They ſaw enough, to move any to indignation. A great indignitie it is, that, which is done by common courteſie, to every ordinary traveller (harbour for a night) to deny that, to any: Omni animantium generi pabulum & latibulum, fodder and ſhelter, they are due to all living creatures
Verſe 58. by the law of nature. Within a verſe after, CHRIST ſaith: Vulpes foveas habent, &c. Not to allow a man, ſo much, as every Fox is allowed, a hole for his head; a very great inhumanitie, to any: who could chooſe, but be moved?

2. And, if to deny this, to any were too much: it received increaſe, by the perſon. It was CHRIST, that was thus repelled: of whoſe well uſing, it ſtood them upon, to be jealous, and not to ſhew themſelves cold, in putting up any diſgrace offered to their Maſter. We muſt needs allow their zeale, in their Maſters quarrell.

3. And, when was this? For, that circumſtance addes much, here. It was even then, when He was newly come downe from the Mount, from His transfiguration: immediatly upon that, came this. Him whom a little before, they had ſeene glorified from heaven; to ſee him now thus vilified upon earth, would it not move any?

4. And, who were they that did it? A pelting country-towne; and they in it, a ſort of Samaritan-heretikes, whom the world were rid of; at whoſe hands, who could endure, to ſee Him thus uſed? Comming from hatred of hereſie, how can it chooſe but be a good motion?

5. And now, why was it, they did Him this diſgrace? For no other cauſe, but for His Religion: becauſe His backe was to their Mount, and His face to Ieruſalem. And here, zeale is in his prime; Never ſo plauſible, as when it hath gotten Religion for his pretence, and the Catholike cauſe for his colour; then they may ſet fire on the Towne. Put theſe now together. [1] A barbarous indignitie, harbour for a night denied: and [2] denied CHRIST: [3] CHRIST ſo late in all His glory: [4] and that by a ſort of heretikes: [5] and onely, for that He was well affected in Religion. The caſe is home: when they ſaw this, it moved them to make a Motion. Never talke of it: the motion cannot be miſliked; ſpecially comming commended by the Movers, two of His Diſciples: and none of the meaneſt of them, two Pillars (as Saint Paul calleth Gal. 2. 9. Iohn 21. 7. them) and he, whom IESVS ſo loved, one of the two.

II. The Motion.

We ſee, what moved them. Now, let us ſee what they move, and upon what warrant. They move to have them deſtroyed, by fire, from heaven. Their Warrant, ſicut fecit Elias: whom they had ſeene a little before in the mount, and who (they are ſure) would never have endured it.

In their motion (me thinkes) two things they take for granted: [1] one, that deſtroyed they muſt be: no leſſe puniſhment ſerve. [2] The other, that it ſhould be by fire. They make no queſtion of theſe two, nor ſo much as conſult with CHRIST of them; [1] whether it be meet they were deſtroyed: [2] then, whether fire were not a fit kinde of death for ſuch. They runne away with theſe two, and paſſe ſentence upon them. Die they muſt: die they muſt, and then limit the kinde; being heretikes, beſt even burne them and make no more adoe.

They

They onely adviſe with CHRIST about the meanes, whence they will have their fire, and how. Whence, from heaven: how, by dicimus. And hitherto, the caſe like. Both, to be deſtroyed: both, by fire: both, upon one pretence, they and we. Now, they breake company, IESVS's Diſciples, and IESVS's Societie. For, when it comes to the meanes, IESVS's Diſciples will take no indirect courſe: doe it, like Diſciples, or not at all. They will goe to worke, on GODS name: call it downe, not conjure it up: from heaven, His owne ſphere; not from any infernall place, not rent the earth to bring it up. Saint Iohn (as an Eagle) flyes up to the clouds: not (like a Mold-warpe) creepes into a vault, to doe it. De cælo doe it, like Prophets; not, like incendiaries, fetch fire the wrong way.

The like may be ſaid, of Dicimus: not, from heaven, by any optike inſtrument (as ſome had, before that time, fired whole navies;) no, but onely by Dicimus, ſaying the word and no more. No powder, but from the clouds: no match, but their tongue: No Vis fodimus, to pickaxes to digge; nor boats to carry, nor traines to kindle it: but, Vis dicimus, by way of miracle, or not at all. This, the motion. Now, to the Warrant.

A good Warrant will doe well. CHRIST without it (they know) likes of nothing done. The quo Warranto (to winne CHRIST to be willing, to obtaine His fiat) they alleage, one would thinke a good one: [1] Sicut fecit; ſo, no noveltie; a preſident for it: [2] and ſicut fecit (no leſſe Prophet, than) Elias. They had ſeene him but lately; they did the more eaſily call him to minde. Moſes they ſaw then too; but, they could not ſerve themſelves of him. He was taken out of the water; No good ſicut for them, that were about fire-workes. And he was the meekeſt man on earth: and it was no meeke matter; and ſo he no meet man, for the purpoſe they were about. Elias, is Scripture, as well as he: the authoritie of ſo great a Prophet is enough, to doe no more than he did, upon like occaſion. Nay, not like; here, the occaſion is greater: behold Plus quàm Elias, a greater than Elias, ſuffereth diſgrace here; and therefore ſicut Elias is but reaſonable. And here againe, our motioners will fall ſhort too. For, if the motion to CHRIST had beene Vis fodimus? whom would they have alleaged, whoſe example or authoritie, ſicut fecit? Who, who ever did the like? Which of the Prophets, or Patriarchs? Their motion muſt have beene without a ſicut fecit.

2 The Warrant.

Exod. 2. 5.

Numb. 12. 3.

For the matter, all is one (ſaith Sanders) all one. Elias, when he commanded fire from heaven, might even as well have commanded any on earth: Run upon them, runne them thorow; had as great power over the metalls on earth, as over the Elements in the skie. And it is like enough, if Sanders had lived till Anno Domini MDCV. and had beene conſulted with, he would have ſaid ſtraight: All one, Elias might as well have bid put fire under the Towne, from beneath; as let fire fall on the Towne, from above. But, by his leave, there is great odds betweene theſe. For firſt, Elias muſt doe, as his Commiſſion was to doe it, from heaven: Hee might not inter-line his Commiſſion, and put in, by metalls, or Gun-powder, or what hee liſted. And againe: who ſees not, that Elias's fire, and Samſon's Foxes are not all one? GODS arrowes (as lightning from heaven) and theſe tela ignita Satanæ, Satan's traines and fire-workes, from under the ground. In one, the hand of GOD muſt needs be: in the other, the paw of the devill, the malice of man, the fury or treachery of forlorne creatures may have no place. No ſuch authoritie, no ſuch feare to touch the conſcience, as the act of GOD hath; therefore, that is not ſicut Elias. And laſtly, if it were, yet is, nothing gained by it: CHRIST repeales it by and by; and forbids in this, either the act or ſpirit of Elias.

Epheſ. 6. 16.

But now, they that ſay thus (not Magiſter dicito tu, but) Magiſter vis dicimus nos; feele, in themſelves (belike) no lacke of ſtrength. The Cardinall cannot ſay of them, Id non fuit, quia deerant vires, that was not done, becauſe there wanted force. So that, if after, they loſt any of their due, it was not, becauſe they lacked power, to maintaine it. Saint Paul denieth it flatly: Having (ſaith he) in a readineſſe, vengeance againſt all diſobedience. Had it; had it, in a readineſſe; and, againſt all diſobedience. And ſure, they

2 Cor. 10. 6.

Acts 13.11. 5.5. that could thus doe, call fire from heaven; ſtrike Elymas blinde; ſtrike Ananias ſtarke dead, in an inſtant; need not loſe their intereſt, which they had (forſooth) in this ſame temporall dominion, for lacke of ſtrength. Now, it is well knowne, it was the caſe, here in the Text: Diſcipulus potuit, ſed Magiſter noluit. It was, for want of vis, this in the Text: Vis, of volo, of will in CHRIST: not, for want of vis, or vires, power in them. It went not, by vires aderant, vel deerant: It went, by Magiſter vis; CHRISTS will was wanting, and nothing elſe. That was their caſe (here:) who therefore (becauſe two things goe to the act, 1 their power, and 2 CHRISTS will) howſoever they felt their owne power, and themſelves able to doe it, yet would not doe it, on their owne heads, without His privitie, or leave: and ſo now, they aske it; Magiſter, vis dicimus. By which very manner of propounding it, in this confident ſtyle, it ſeemeth, little doubt they made to carry it cleere; made full reckoning of CHRISTS volo, and that He would be moved with their motion.

III. CHRISTS cenſure and rebuke of them. And with their motion, He was moved; for, it is ſaid, He turned with it: but, it was, the wrong way. At the turning, it may be thought, they looked for ſome good turne; that CHRIST ſhould have commended them, and ſaid: I con you thankes, I ſee you have care of my credit; you are even worthy for it, to ſit one on my right hand, the other on my left, for ſhewing your ſelves my Champions: your motion is good; forward with it.

But, it falls out, His turning is the wrong way: He turned on the left ſide, To rebuke them. This CHRIST did. Now I will tell you, what He ſhould have done. For, according to the new taken up reſolution, of the grave Fathers of the ſociety, He ſhould have taught them firſt, to take a paire of ballances, and weighed, whether the good that would enſue would over-weigh the loſſe of the towne: If it would, up with it and ſpare not. That it would certainly. For, it would ſtrike ſuch a feare (the burning of this Towne) into all the Townes about, that CHRIST ſhould never after want receiving: and it would ſalve CHRISTS reputation much, who had beene thought too great a favourer of theſe Samaritans: and it would be much for His credit, that He had Diſciples could doe as much as ever could Elias.

But, CHRIST never ſtands weighing theſe: but, for all the parties were Samaritans, parties not to be favoured: for all it is made His quarrell, non Eum: for all their meanes ſhould be by miracle, which cannot be miſliked: for all this, turnes and rebukes them. Never thinkes the motion worth the anſwering, as being evill ex totâ ſubſtantiâ: but, rebukes them for moving it, rebukes the ſpirit, it came from: and rebukes them of ignorance of their owne ſpirit; Yee know not, what ſpirit yee are of. As much to ſay as, If yee did, ye would make no ſuch motions: that you doe make any ſuch, it proceeds from Neſcitis. That, would be marked. They are in ignorance; and the worſt ignorance (of themſelves) that move for fire. They knew not, what ſpirit they are of; but, whatſoever it is, a wrong ſpirit it is; for, here it is rebuked, by CHRIST.

1 For Neſcitis. That which CHRIST rebuketh is, Neſcitis; that is their fault: There is no word, on which His rebuke can fall, but that. It can be no good motion, that comes from Neſcitis. For, from Neſcitis commeth no good; without knowledge, the ſoule it ſelfe is not good. Neſcitis quid petatis; No good prayer: Adoratis quod neſcitis, no good worſhip; and ſo ignorant devotion, implicite faith, blinde obedience, all rebuked. Zeale, if it be not ſecundùm ſcientiam, cannot be ſecundùm conſcientiam; matter of conceit, it may be; of conſcience, it cannot be. It is but κακοζηλία: and κακοζηλία is not to be allowed (we ſee) no, not in CHRISTS owne cauſe.

Matth. 20.23. Iohn 4.22. Rom. 10.2.

2 For Neſcitis cujus ſpiritus. Prov. 16.2. And, it is not every ignorance, this: not, of the act; but, of the ſpirit, He chargeth: which is more. For, Spirituum ponderator DEVS, GOD weighes the ſpirit: men looke to the acts; He, to the ſpirit: therefore, trie the act; but, the ſpirit, rather. We

We may be deceived in any act, if we know not the ſpirit, it comes fro. One and the ſame act proceeding from diverſe ſpirits, good for one; for another, not ſo. Therefore, Probate ſpiritus is ever good counſell; and diſcretio ſpirituum, a principall part of knowledge. 1 Iohn 4. 1. 1 Cor. 12. 10.

And if this import us, to doe in other mens ſpirits, not to be deceived in them; much more in our owne: that we deceive not our ſelves, which is the third degree. Neſcitis, cujus ſpiritus; cujus vos; the foule elench of all, ab ignoratione proprii ſpiritus, to fall into this fallax. For indeed, many blinde actions come from men, by reaſon of ignorance, of this third. And this we are to looke to the rather, for that we ſee two ſo great Apoſtles, like to precipitate themſelves into a bloudy act, for miſtaking this point. 3 For Neſcitis, cujus ſpiritus vos.

1. There are (ſure) many Neſcitis, they were in. Elias (firſt) did not that, they would doe: that, is one. His fire tooke hold of none but Delinquents; every one as deepe in the ſame fault, as another. Here is a great many women and children in the towne, not acceſſory to this. GOD would not ſuffer the wicked and innocent to periſh together, no not in Sodome; would not ſuffer Ninive to be deſtroyed, becauſe there were in it many, that knew not their right hand, from their left. This did not Elias. Gen. 18. 23. Iohn 4. 11.

2. Then, it was but quod fecit Elias; not, ſicut: there is another. For, what Elias did, he did by ſpeciall inſpiration, had a particular Commiſſion, and (as it were) a Privie Seale for it. And, that, we muſt ever diſtinguiſh, in the Prophets, when they proceed by their generall calling (therein we may follow them:) and when an act is executed, and done by them, by immediate warrant: for, ſuch warrant paſſes not the perſon; no precedent to be made of it. Elſe, without their revelation, we may doe quod fecit Elias, and not Sicut. And, that is a great Neſcitis, and doth much harme: for many a lewd attempt, it is ſought; and, if they get it once over their heads, they thinke they are ſafe. For killing of Kings, Sicut fecit Ehud: of Queenes, Sicut fecit Iehoiada: for rebelling, Sicut Libna. No, no: Quod fecit, not Sicut fecit; what they did, they doe: as they did, they doe not. Iudg. 3. 21. 2 King. 11. 20.

3. But, if it were Sicut fecit too, it would not ſerve; It is a Neſcitis ſtill; and this is our SAVIOVR CHRISTS, directed to their allegations of Elias. I obſerve, they aske of the act; and CHRIST anſwers of the Spirit. So that, Sicut fecit Elias, is not enough; is but a weake warrant; you muſt be of his ſpirit, as well as doe his act. His Sicut will not beare your act, unleſſe you have his ſpirit, too. It is not enough to ſay, thus did Elias, unleſſe you adde, I am of the ſame ſpirit.

4. Then, it remaines, they muſt ſay, they are of Elias's ſpirit; and into ſome ſuch phanſie (it ſeemes) they were fallen: but, that, is another Neſcitis. Why, what harme is that? Elias's ſpirit (I hope) was no evill ſpirit. No: but, every good ſpirit, as good as Elias's, is not for every perſon, place, or time. Spirits are given by GOD, and men inſpired with them, after ſeverall manners, upon ſeverall occaſions, as the ſeverall times require. The times ſometime require one ſpirit; ſometime, another; Elias's time, Elias's ſpirit. As his act good, done by his ſpirit: ſo his ſpirit good, in his owne time. The time changed, the ſpirit (then, good) now, not good. For both are faultie: the act, without the ſpirit; and the ſpirit, without the time. And, ſo it may fall out, that at ſometime, one may be rebuked, for being of Elias's ſpirit well enough, when Elias's ſpirit is out of time.

5. But, why is it out of time? That is another Neſcitis, which CHRIST ſets downe plainely, when He renders the reaſon? For, the Sonne of man is come: (for, we may well make a pauſe there.) As if He ſhould ſay: Indeed, there is a time to deſtroy (ſaith Salomon, Eccleſ. 3.) that, was under the Law: Ignea lex, the fiery law, as Moſes calls it: then, a fiery ſpirit would not be amiſſe; then, was Elias's time. But, now, the Sonne of man is come: yee know not, what manner of ſpirit yee are of. The ſpirit of Elias was good, till the Sonne of man came; but, now He is come, the date of that ſpirit is expired. When the Sonne of man is come, the ſpirit of Elias muſt be gone. Now ſpecially: for, Moſes and he reſigned lately, in the Mount. Now, no Law-giver, Eccleſ. 3. 3. Deut. 33. 2.

no Prophet, but CHRIST. CHRIST now, and His Spirit, to take place. You move out of time: will yee be of Elias's ſpirit, and the Sonne of man is come? A plaine Neſcitis.

6. The Fathers worke out another Neſcitis, out of the Emphaſis [Vos:] Cujus ſpiritus Vos. Vos, is no idle word: it makes a plaine ſeparation, betweene them and Elias. Vos, You: why, you are my Diſciples (I trow:) you muſt anſwer, to Cujus ſpiritus vos? Cujus ſpiritus Tu. CHRISTS Diſciples, and Elias's ſpirit? that, cannot be. Chooſe yee now: for, of whoſe ſpirit yee are, his Diſciples yee muſt be. If you be his, what doe you here with me? get you to his Tabernacle. If ye be mine, off with Elias's mantle and ſpirit both. The Diſciple, and the Maſter are of one ſpirit. To make a Diſciple, is nothing, but to doe, as GOD did, at the doore of Deut. 31. 14. the Tabernacle; take off the Maſters ſpirit, and put it on the Diſciples. But, if ye be of Iohn 1. 32. My Spirit, My Spirit is in ſpecie Columbæ, not Aquilæ; not of the Eagle, that carrieth
Gen. 8. 11. Iupiter's thunder-bolt; but, of the Dove, that brings the Olive-branch in her bill, the ſigne of Non perdere, ſed ſalvare. If this ſpirit be in you, let all your motions ſmell of the Olive-branch, not of the thunder-bolt; come from ſaving grace, and not from conſuming Zeale.

7. But yet, the worſt Neſcitis is behinde. For worſe it is, to be miſtaken in CHRIST, than in our ſelves. And Him they miſtooke, in that, they would move Him, to that, whoſe comming was contrary, quite contrary to that, they would have Him doe. This is a Neſcitis, indeed. Verè neſcitis, qui petitis à Magiſtro manſuetudinis licentiam crudelitatis. A neſcitis, to ſeeke at the hands of Him, that is the Maſter of all meekeneſſe, a licence to commit ſuch crueltie.

The very title of the Sonne of man, is enough for this. For, whatſoever as the Sonne of GOD, He may doe; it is kindly, for Him, as the Sonne of man, to ſave the ſonnes of men. Specially, being the Sonne of ſuch men, as Hee was; the Sonne of
Gen. 18. 24. Abraham, who entreated hard, that even Sodome might not be deſtroyed. The Sonne

(As CHRIST doth here, of the ſons of Zebedee: who (as if indeed, they had beene borne of a thunder-cloud, and not of a man) were ſo readie, to make havocke of the lives of men.) It coſt the Sonne of man more to re-
Pſal. 49. 8. deeme men, than to have them blowen up ſo lightly. And, if Iames and Iohn were to pay for them, at His price, they would not be ſo evill adviſed, as to make ſo quicke riddance of the lives of men.

CHRIST doth here warrant us, that, to tell cujus ſpiritus, the way is, by ad quid venit? what ſpirit is he of, by, to what end comes he; whither blowes it, which way is his face, to ſalvare, or to perdere? For, to the end of His comming, GOD hath framed His ſpirit. You may know it, by His firſt Text. The Spirit of the LORD
Luke 4. 18. is upon me, to heale the broken, to deliver the captive; to ſave that was loſt, Hee ſent me: therefore He was ſent, and therefore He came. You may know it, by His Name, IESVS, a SAVIOVR: you may know it, by His Similies (no deſtroying creatures;) a [a] Lambe, no Wolfe; a [b] Hen, no Kite; a [c] Vine, no bramble, [d] out of which came fire to burne up all the trees in the forreſt. Of His comming, cleane contrary to this, ſpeakes the Prophet, [e] Hee ſhall come downe like the raine; (ſpeakes the Apoſtle) [f] Hic eſt ille IESVS qui venit in aquâ, that came in water, to quench; not, in fire, to conſume.

[a] Iohn 1. 29. [b] Matth. 23. 37. [c] Ioh. 15. 1. [d] Iudg. 9. 15. [e] Pſal. 72. 6. [f] 1 Iohn 5. 6.

Againe, that Hee doth not this [non perdere, ſed ſalvare] by accident, as it hits; but, on ſet purpoſe: It was the cauſe, the finall cauſe, the very end, GOD ſent Him, and He came for.

In which point, to take away Neſcitis cleane for ever, he ſets it downe poſitively, and privatively both: wherefore Hee came not; and wherefore Hee came: Came not, to deſtroy; but, came, to ſave: this, is plaine dealing. But firſt, not to deſtroy: that, they, which cannot ſave, may yet be ſure, not to deſtroy any; but; if they can, not onely not deſtroy, but ſave too, as CHRIST doth. But, of theſe, CHRIST came but to one end; hath but one office; came not, to the other; and this would be marked.

marked. The Cardinall begins his booke to the Pope, Duplex Petri officium, Pascere & occidere: CHRIST had but one; to feed, to save: Another there is, was Homicida ab initio. But, if Saint Peter have gotten two offices, he hath one more, than CHRIST. CHRIST came to save onely, with a flat exclusive, of the other. Iohn 8.44.

And, where they move Him, in specie, for a destruction by fire; He (not content to deny that alone) denieth it in genere, not to destroy at all; neither, by fire, nor any other way. Here, we have a case of fire: will yee have another, of the sword? Shall we doe it by fire? (say Iames and Iohn, here;) Domine si percutimus gladio? (saith Saint Peter, after) in a greater quarrell farre than this, when they laid hands on Him, to carry Him to His passion. That, He denieth too, and in that quarrell; and saith, Sinite, let alone your sword: Out with your fire, Iames and Iohn; up with your sword, Peter. So that, neither by fire, here: nor by sword, there: neither, by miracle (as here) nor without miracle (as there) doth CHRIST like of these motions. What then? shall not CHRIST be received? yes: He is most worthy so to be. I adde, they that refuse it, are worthy any punishment: but, that every man is to be dealt with as he is worthy, would prove but a hard peece of Divinitie: hard for all, and even for themselves, too. If, so oft as CHRIST suffers indignitie, fire should come downe from heaven, Domine quis sustinebit? we were all in hard case: Iewes, and Samaritans, and all: yea, Disciples; yea this Iames, and Iohn, and all. The Samaritans, they received not CHRIST; they were gone; burnt all. For Ierusalem's sake, because His face was that way (here) He was not received. When He came to Ierusalem, how was He received there? Why, there He was murthered: worse used than in Samaria. Then, we must call for more fire: Ierusalem must be burnt, too. Now, for the Disciples, Iames and Iohn, how carried they the matter? It is true: they had received Him; but, when most need was, thrust Him from them, renounced Him, utterly denyed, that ever they knew Him. Then, we must trouble heaven once more: call for fire, for Iames and Iohn, too. Nay then, the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not, nor received Him not: why then, the world is at an end, facti sumus sicut Sodoma; all, a heape of ashes, if this doctrine goe forward. Best, take Phaëton out of the chariot, that he set not all on fire. Sure, this (I take it) is a Nescitis: For, who receiveth CHRIST, as he should? yea, who refuseth not one time, or other, to receive Him? Who, of the Disciples, who at Ierusalem? Then, all must be turned out and in: Non venit salvare, sed perdere. Then, this will follow; if no place for repentance, then no use of CHRIST. For, whom shall He save, when Iames and Iohn have consumed all to ashes? But, it will be well to leave CHRIST somebodie, to save: not disappoint CHRIST of His comming, and send Him backe without His errand. Chap. 22.49. Psal. 129.3. Iohn 1.10,11. Rom. 9.19.

Now, out of this Nescitis, to frame our Scitis. 1. By this time wee know CHRISTS Spirit (as He teacheth us) by His comming. His comming was not to destroy: they that came a destroying, came not in His company. 2. Then, our owne spirits: if they doe spirare Christum, they have the same journey's end. 3. We know their spirits, that hatched alate this question anew; Vis facimus ascendat ignis? And theirs too, that never turned and rebuked it, but gave allowance to it, both before, and after it was done: yea, bound them to it by oath, and set it forth, with both Sacraments, 1 of Penance, and of the 2 Altar: and (what should I say?) resolved, flat against CHRIST, in the very same point; and did not (as He) cast water, but put oyle to the flame. Our Scitis, out of this nescitis.

Can these be the Societie of IESVS, and the spirits blow two contrary wayes, and their commings be, to two contrary ends? His, not to destroy: theirs, to destroy: His, to rebuke; theirs, to allow of such motives?

To know, what spirit they be of, looke what manner of spirits they make choice of, and by their wills choose, and cherish none other; eager, fierce, boisterous

Matth.21.5. 11.29. ſpirits. O, Elias's ſpirit, is a goodly ſpirit! but CHRISTS Ecce Rex tuus venit manſuetus; or Diſcite à me quia mitis, it is not worth a mite: that ſpirit is too weake, and too faint, to forward their fire-workes.

And, if yet ye doubt, no better way to be reſolved, than by Ad quid venit? aske that, and it will reſolve you ſtraight. Wherefore came Doctor Morton, a little before the Rebellion in the North? Wherefore came Doctor Sanders into Ireland? Wherefore Cardinall Allen, into the Low-Countries in LXXXVIII? To what end, came he out of the Arch-Dukes campe hither? was it, to ſave mens lives, or to deſtroy them? By theſe markes, we cannot but know, Cujus ſpiritus.

It ſufficeth, that CHRIST rebuketh this ſpirit: that if they be the Societie of IESVS, it is Alius Ieſus, another Ieſus than this in the Text: Bar-jeſus, for he, by interpretation, is Elymas, that is, a deſtroyer. CHRIST likes no deſtroying: no, though the Towne be full of Samaritans, He likes it not: no, though the colour be non receperunt Eum, yet He likes it not: no, though we could miraculouſly doe it, like Elias, yet likes He it not. It is not GODS will, in the Old Teſtament, that Sion ſhould be built in bloud: Nor, in the New, that His Church, on the aſhes of any eſtate: Nor, that His not receiving ſhould be pretence, for the extirpation of any Towne; much leſſe, Kingdome or Countrey.

Our duties

This we learne. But, we come not onely for that, but to congratulate this poore Towne, that ſcaped the fire, and our ſelves no leſſe, that ſhould have periſhed by the ſame element, though not from heaven, yet another way; though not by dicimus, yet by another meanes: and in publike manner to render our yearely ſolemne thankſgiving, that we alſo, by the Sonne of man, were delivered, from the powder laid ready to conſume, and from the match light to give it fire; that they were rebuked, yea (more than that) deſtroyed themſelves, that ſought our deſtruction. Every way, our caſe hath the advantage: and therefore bindeth us, to greater dutie.

Will yee conſider it, in the parties. This, was againſt Samaritans; and, by the Apoſtles: Came commended, by the movers; they were Apoſtles: aggravated, by the parties, againſt whom; they were of the Sect of the Samaritans. We are no Samaritans (I truſt:) but, they no Apoſtles (I am ſure:) no Apoſtles, nor of no Apoſtolike ſpirit, which would authorize that, which was rebuked in the Apoſtles themſelves. And, for Samaritans (which falls to our turne;) it may be, they count us and call us ſo: it is no matter, they called CHRIST Himſelfe ſo, then. This (I ſay:) had we beene ſuch, as they would have us to be; ſuch, as theſe (here) very Samaritans, we were to finde as much favour, at the hands of the Society of IESVS, as did the Samaritans, at the hand of IESVS Himſelfe; if their ſpirit, their comming, their faces ſtood, as His, to Non perdere.

But we are none. No, if we goe by the markes, the Scripture ſets downe of them, the Samaritans will light on their ſide. For, let it be enquired, whether part, in the worſhip of GOD, uſeth more ritus Gentium, they or we (the marke of the Booke of the Kings:) of whether of us, it may more rightly be ſaid, You worſhip, you know not what (which is CHRISTS owne marke.) In a word: let this be the caſe, Whether Religion have more windowes open to Ieruſalem: whoſe face lookes more fully that way. No: the looking to Ieruſalem, is not the quarrell; the not looking to Rome, that, is the matter.

2 King.17.8. Iohn 4.22.

And ſure, this quarrell is much after one in both: That, in the Text, was made a matter in Religion, but, was none: no more was this of theirs. Non receperunt, is no act of hereſie: Non credidérunt, that, is. But it is not their miſ beleeving, moved them in the Text: nor theſe neither. It was the not-harbouring makes all this adoe. So they would entertaine them, they might beleeve as they liſt. Vpon the matter then, it falls out to prove, not zeale againſt their hereſie, but zeale for their owne entertainment; which will not, but directly, be made matter of Religion.

Now, if ye weigh the deſtruction, ye ſhall finde, though in the maine, they agree (for upward, and downeward makes ſmall difference) yet, ours was the worſe.

Worſe;

Worſe, for, it ſhould have beene ſudden, which is worſe for the ſoule; therefore ſimply worſe. Worſe: for that would have waſted but to the ground, and there left: but, this ſhould have fetched up foundations and ground, and all. Worſe certainely: for, that ſhould have conſumed but Samaritans onely: but this, for the good of the Catholike cauſe, Samaritans and Iewes, both. Yea, ſuch as themſelves were, Diſciples, and Iames and Iohn too, if they had beene there, for companie. Worſe: for, this had the ſhew of an example, Sicut fecit Elias: but ours, Sicut fecit who? Not, Sicut fecit Elias: No; Sicut without example. Never the like entered into the heart of any, that carried but the ſhape of a man. So, ſtill the advantage, on our ſide.

Now, for the deliverie, when all is done, that which was ſaved here, was but a poore towne without a name. I ſhould much wrong that famous aſſembly, and flower of the Kingdome, if I ſhould offer to compare it with that, either in quantitie, (alas, like little Zoar to great Ninive) or in qualitie, when, in ours (to ſay nothing of the reſt) One there was, more worth than ten thouſand ſuch as they; we have good Scripture for it. 2 Sam. 18.3.

Theſe, here, were rebuked but verbally, on earth: Ours, really rebuked from heaven. Really rebuked, in their intention, by miraculous diſappointing the execution: And themſelves put to a foule rebuke beſides: GOD firſt blowing their owne powder in their faces, to write there ſinne there; and after, making their bowels, their mercileſſe bowels, to be conſumed with fire, within the very view of that place, which they had meant to conſume with fire, and all Vs in it.

CHRIST came to ſave us: There be manifeſt ſteps of His comming. Apparant firſt, in that Hee made them, they could not containe their owne ſpirits, but brought them out by their owne dicimus: made them take pen and paper, and tell it out themſelves, and ſo become the inſtruments of their owne deſtruction, which is the worſt of all.

Againe He came, when He gave His Majeſtie underſtanding to reade the riddle of [ſo ſoone as the letter is burnt:] to conſtrue the dialect of theſe unknowne ſpirits, and picke it out of a period, as darke, as the cellar was darke, where the powder lay.

There is but one comming in the Text: He came not to deſtroy, but to ſave: Here, were two in ours; both commings, of CHRIST. 1 He came not to deſtroy, but to ſave us, in mercie: 2 He came not to ſave, but deſtroy them (His ſecond comming) in judgement. To conclude: This one notable difference there is, on our ſide: They ſhould have beene deſtroyed by miracle; and we were ſaved by miracle: The right hand of the LORD brought it to paſſe; which is, of all others, the moſt welcome deliverance. Pſal. 118.16.

And ſhall I then, upon all this, make a motion? Maſter, wilt thou, we ſpeake to theſe whom thou haſt delivered; that ſeeing thou tookeſt order, the fire ſhould not aſcend to conſume them, they would take order, their prayers may aſcend up, and as the odors of the Saints phials, burne before Thee ſtill, and never conſume, but be; this day ever, a ſweet ſmell in Thy preſence? Their fire, they came to put under the earth, CHRIST would not have burne; another fire, He came to put upon earth, and His deſire is that it ſhould burne: even that fire, whereon the incenſe of our devotion, and the ſacrifice of our praiſe burne before God, and be in odorem ſuavitatis. We were appointed, to be made a ſacrifice: If Iſaac be ſaved, ſhall nothing be offered in his ſtead? Shall we not thanke God, that He was better to them, than Iames and Iohn: and to us, better, than thoſe were, that will needs thruſt themſelves, to be of His ſocietie? That, when this dicimus was ſaid of us too, ſtayed it at dicimus, and never let it come to perficimus; miraculouſly made knowne theſe unknowne ſpirits: that He turned and rebuked the motion, and the ſpirits that made it; that He came, once and twice, to ſave us, and deſtroy them. Luke 9.49. Eph. 5.2.

If we ſhall, let us then doe it; let our ſoules magnifie the Lord, and our ſpirits rejoyce in God our Saviour: that the beginning of the Text and of our caſe, was fire, to conſume them (in the firſt verſe:) that the end was, non perdere, ſed ſalvare (in the laſt.) Such Luke 1.46.

may ever be the end, of all attempts to deſtroy us. So may He come ſtill; and ſtill, as here, He came; never to deſtroy, ever to ſave us. And, as oft as He, to ſave us; ſo oft we, to praiſe Him.

And God grant, that this anſwer here of CHRIST may ſerve, for a determination of this caſe for ever; and every Chriſtian be ſo reſolved by it, as the like never come in ſpeech more, by any dicimus. But if (as we know not what ſpirits are abroad,) that every deſtroying ſpirit may be rebuked, and every State preſerved, as this towne here was, and as we all were, this Day. And (ever) as He doth ſave ſtill, we may praiſe ſtill; and ever magnifie His mercie, that endureth for ever. Amen.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the V. of November, A. D. MDCXII.

LAMENT. CHAP. III. VER. XXII.

Miſericordiæ DOMINI quia non ſumus conſumpti: quia non defecerunt miſerationes Ejus.

It is the LORDS mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe His compaſsions faile not.

THE verſe is not amiſſe; The booke ſuits not ſo well. For this joyfull day of our great and famous Deliverance, CHRISTS, tibiis cecinimus is more meete, than Iohn Baptiſts Planximus; and Davids harpe, than Ieremies Lamentations. This (I know) commeth to your mindes, at the mention of this melancholike booke. But yet, if wee weigh our caſe well; not, what it fell out to be, but what it was meant to have beene; the very booke will not ſeeme ſo out of ſeaſon. For, this very day, ſhould it not have beene a day of lamentation to the whole land? was it not ſo marked in their Kalendar? And they had had their will would they not have given matter of making Luke 7.32.

making a booke of Lamentations, over this State; and that another manner Booke, with more, and with longer Chapters, than this of Ieremie's? By the mercie of God, it proved otherwiſe. But what? ſhall we ſo intend the day, what it is, as we forget, what it was like to have beene? No: the booke and the verſe Iuxta ſe poſita will doe well; one ſet out the other, as the blacke-worke doth the white. The Booke put us in minde, but for GODS mercie, in what caſe we might have beene. The verſe by Gods mercie, what we are. And even to thanke Him, that our lot was to hit the verſe, and miſſe the booke; to fall within the one, and without the other.

The truth is, I had a deſire that Miſericordiæ Domini might have their day: and this day I thought to dedicate chiefly to them. We have formerly moved and reſolved the queſtion, out of the Goſpell; we have once or twice called to joy out of the Pſalmes. The barbarouſneſſe of the act, and the parties to it, hath beene juſtly inveighed againſt: A time given to each of theſe. And ſhall we not allow one day to the magnifying of Him, and His mercies, that was the cauſe of all? It ſhould have had the firſt day by right, and we were pointed to it, by Miſericordiæ Domini ſuper omnia opera Ejus: Well, at laſt now in this ſeventh yeare, this annus Sabbaticus, let us make it our Sabboth, reſt upon it, and put it off no longer. Be this day dedicated to the celebrating of them.

Pſal. 145. 9.

To this end, though all the Scripture over, GODS mercie be much ſpoken of (for where ſhall ye light, but ye ſhall finde it upon one occaſion or other?) yet, to fit this day and our caſe, as it fell out this day, (in my poore conceipt) none in any other booke, falleth out ſo juſt, commeth ſo home, as this verſe to this day, It was the mercies, &c. as upon the opening will fall out. Which though it be in the booke, yet is nothing of the nature of the booke.

The Summe and Diviſion.

The verſe is a Recognition or acknowledgement: I may adde, a juſt and joyfull recognition. And that double, 1 That we were not conſumed, and 2 Why we were not. So, it ſtandeth on two parts; 1 That we were not, a happie effect: 2 Why we were not; it was Gods mercie, the cauſe of that and all other our happineſſe.

I. The effect is in theſe words: Non ſumus conſumpti. Of which, 1 Conſumpti, is the danger; and 2 Non ſumus the deliverance.

II. The cauſe in theſe words, Miſericordiæ Domini quòd non: And there firſt, 1 Non, we were not. 2 And then there was a cauſe quòd non, that we were not: 3 Then, that cauſe was GODS mercie. 1 Which we take in ſunder: It was GOD firſt, that did it: 2 Then, it was His mercie that moved Him to it. In the mercie, three things wee finde: 1 Miſericordiæ, more than one, many mercies. 2 Compaſſions, or (as the native ſignification of the word is) bowels, the bowels of mercie; that ſpeciall kinde. 3 And thoſe have this propertie, they faile not, or (which is all one) conſume not: not they; and ſo not we. Their not-conſuming is the cauſe, we were not conſumed.

III. Then laſt our Recognition. That ſeeing, His mercies faile not us, that we faile not them; ſeeing they conſume not, nor we, by their meanes; that our thankefulneſſe doe not neither, that it fall not into a conſumption. But that, in imitation of the three, wee render Him 1 plurall thankes; 2 and theſe from the bowels: and 3 that inceſſantly without failing. And this, not in words onely, but in ſome realitie, ſome worke of mercie; tending to preſerve thoſe, that are neere conſumpti, pining away.

Plaine

PLaine it is, a danger there was: Else, vaine were the Recognition. That danger is set downe in the word Conſumpti: ſome conſuming there ſhould have beene: ſome ſuch matter was in hand. A word, even (as it were) of purpoſe choſen, for us; for, it ſorteth juſt with our danger as may be. I. The Effect. I The danger.

Conſuming may be more wayes than one: but, no way ſo proper, as by the element of fire, Confector & conſumptor omnium (ſaith the Heathen man) that makes away and conſumes all things. It is the proper peculiar Epithete of that Element, Conſuming fire; and the common phraſe of the HOLY GHOST is, conſumed by fire. This fits us right. Fire it was, conſuming fire, ſhould have conſumed us: it was a firy conſumption. Conſumpti igne. Heb.12.29. Luke 9.54.

Then Con-ſumpti, in proprietie, is nothing but ſimul ſumpti: Con is ſimul in compoſition. All taken, all put together, and an end made of all. And was it not ſo with us? King and Prince, Lords Spirituall and Temporall; Iudges, Knights, Citizens, Burgeſſes, and a great number beſides of ſpectatours and auditours, that day, out of all the flower of the Kingdome: all couped up together under one roofe, and then blowen up all. This is ſimul ſumpti, and conſumpti, both. 2 Con-ſumpti i. ſimul ſumpti. 1 Perſonally.

Will ye any more for company? This was but perſonall; take the reall too: lead, ſtone, timber, windowes, walls, roofes, foundations and all, muſt have up too: an univerſall deſolation of all, both perſonall and reall. That the ſtone out of the wall, and the beame out of the frame, if they could ſpeake, might ſay, and we are in; ſimul ſumpti, and conſumpti, too; all laid waſte, not one ſtone ſtanding upon another. This, was right conſumpti, ſpent indeed, where nothing left, perſon or things with life or without: utter havocke made of all. 2 Really. Habac.1.11. Matth.24.2.

Thus farre might Ieremie goe, and match us in theſe three. I will touch two or three more beyond him, that wee may ſee, our caſe ſhould have beene more lamentable, than the booke of Lamentations it ſelfe.

1. There was no fire in Ieremie's time; none but of wood and cole, and no conſuming but that way: and that fire conſumes by degrees, peece and peece, one peece fire while one is wood, ſtill; ſo that one may ſave a brands-end for a need. But this was a fire, Ieremie never knew of, nor many ages after was ever heard of: takes all at once. No brand here, no pulling out of the fire, no ſaving any; here is quicke worke, all done and paſt, as ſoone as the paper burnt. Zech.3.2.

2. Another: In this of the Prophet's they had faire warning. There was a campe pitched three ſeverall times in Iehoiakim, Iechonias, Zedechia's dayes: they had time to make themſelves ready. But in ours, facti eſſemus ſicut Sodoma, our deſtruction had beene like that of Sodome; no campe pitched there, but ſuddenly, in a moment: to the hazard of many a ſoule, that were (I doubt me) but evill prepared, if they had beene thus ſuddenly ſurpriſed. And that had beene a lamentable conſumpti (indeed) of both bodie and ſoule: the body here, the ſoule eternally. A terrible blow indeed, and wee ſhould not have knowne who would have hurt us. Rom.9.29.

3. Now we doe, as hap is; and therein we leave Ieremie behinde againe. It was not an open enemie offered this: Vſually, deſtruction commeth from them. So did this, in the Text: from the Chaldees, not only ſtrangers, but in open hoſtility with the Iews. But, in ours, they were not ſo much as ſtrangers, but borne ſubjects of one and the ſame Countrey, tongue, and allegiance. The more lamentable, to be conſumed by our ſelves; to be ſhot thorow with an arrow, the feathers whereof grew on our owne wings. So they were, naturally: but, when they fell once to this unnaturall deſignement, when they fell on conſuming, they were no longer men, all humanitie was quite conſumed in them. And this was the danger.

To make a danger dangerous, two things are required: 1 The ſureneſſe, and 2 the neereneſſe. If it be uncertaine, we reckon not of it; nor, though it be certaine, if it be farre away. Let us ſee, both was it.

1 The certainty of the danger.

To make it certaine, theſe are required: 1 It be ſoundly reſolved: 2 ſurely bound: 3 and ſeriouſly put in execution. Firſt upon good reſolution, a ſentence given quod eramus conſumendi, we were to be made away: and rather than we ſhould not, their owne friends, allies, and kindred; yea, their owne deare Catholikes to goe the ſame way, to have beene in the Conſumpti, as well as we. This was to have it certaine, to make ſure worke.

2 Gravely reſolved; and faſt bound, as funiculus triplex, the three immutable things of their Religion could binde it. 1. Bound by oath: their Sacramentum militare, they ever tooke firſt, never to diſcover, never to deſiſt.

2. Bound againe by their Sacrament of Penance. Thither they went in an errour, as if it had beene ſome fault; but, they found more, than they went for: went for abſolution; received a flat reſolution, it was not onely no ſinne, but would ſerve to expiate their other ſinnes. And, not onely expiate their ſinnes, but heape alſo upon them an increaſe of merit. In effect, that our conſumption would become their conſummation.

3. Bound laſt, with the Sacrament of the Altar, and ſo made as ſure, as their Maker could make it. Theſe three; ſure now, paſt ſtarting (I trow.)

3 But goe too: Oathes and Sacraments conſume nothing. True: It was therefore not onely ſolemnely bound, but ſadly ſet upon. They fell to their Pick-axes, laid in their powder, by ten and by twenty barrels at once: and I know not how much iron, and how many huge ſtones; Fervebat opus, in earneſt they were. Of all which wee may ſay (with Saint Iohn) That which we have ſeene with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, that preach we, in this point. That, very ſure it is, wee were very farre gone in our conſumption.

3

3 The neereneſſe of it.

And all this while, it may be, it was in dies multos, farre enough away; to be done a good while after, we know not when. How neere was it? Nox una interpoſita, but a night (nor that neither: neither a whole night, nor a whole day;) but a few houres we had to ſpend. The traine readie, and the match; three for failing. They ſtayed but for the con, for the time, till all were con (that is) ſimul ſumpti; and then conſumpti ſhould have come ſtraight upon all.

This was our caſe, thus dangerous, thus ſure, thus neere; Inſomuch as, we were even given for dead. The letter ſhewed as much. Their being together, and waiting for it, at their meeting-place, ſhewed as much. They made full reckoning, we were little better; than even conſumpti in the preterperfect tenſe. And neerer we cannot come. It is well knowne, David was never deſtroyed indeed finally, yet (often in the Pſalmes) he ſaith, He was brought backe from the deepe of the earth againe; from the gates of death: yea even from the nethermoſt hell: His meaning was, he was exceeding neere it. And ſo were we as neere as was poſſible, and not be ſwallowed up of it. And this is the meaning of conſumpti. And thus much for it.

Pſal. 71.18. 9.14. 86.13.

2 The deliverance. Eſay 37.3.

Now are we to put Non ſumus to it, and we are ſafe ſtraight. Which two words containe our delivery. So as, though we were deſtinate as fewell, to this fire; though venerunt filii ad partum, though they were come to the point, to be delivered of that they had ſo long travelled withall; though like we were, and ſure we were, and neere we were, yet conſumed we were not. We were not: for, here we are, bleſſed be GOD. Here, and elſe-where (ſome few except which ſince be gone to their graves in peace.) The place ſtandeth, the perſons ſtill alive. Non ſumus conſumpti; this is ad oculum, it admits no further diſcourſe. But this it admits, that we may ſtay a little and lay our Non ſumus, to this of Ieremie in the Text; and we ſhall finde ours, another manner of preſervation, by oddes; that ſo we may provide our ſelves of another manner of recognition.

1 The comparing of theirs and ours.

2 In the perſons. Chap. 21.

Non ſumus conſumpti (ſaith Ieremie:) when for all that, in every corner of the ſtreets, they lay ſlaine. Onely he, and a handfull more in compariſon, were ſpared. This

ſerved

ſerved him to ſay; yet, we be not all gone: A cold comfort (God knoweth.) This for perſons.

For things. The gates of Ieruſalem were burnt with fire, and a great part of the Citie; howbeit not all. A remnant there was left, though but a poore one (God wot:) yet, enough in his ſenſe, to ſay Non conſumpti, all is not conſumed. 1 Will ye ſee now them with us? With them, ſome few left alive, the moſt ſlaine: with us not one ſlaine, but all ſtill alive. 2 With them, a part of the buildings left, though the farre greater part conſumed: With us, neither ſticke nor ſtone touched, nor burnt; nay, not ſo much as ſinged. All ſafe: all, in toto; and all, in qualibet parte. 1 Vpon the matter, thus it is. They were not conſumed, that is, not all: We were not conſumed; that is, not at all. All were not conſumed, with them: None at all, with us. 2 Some were ſaved there: Both all and ſome here; neither perſon, nor thing miſcaried. 3 Ieremie could not ſay: It is Gods mercie, wee are all ſafe: He was faine to give it in the negative, We are not conſumed. We may ſay it, and put it in either: both in the affirmative, All ſafe; and, in the negative, None conſumed, no not one. 2 In the things.

There be indeed two Non conſumpti's: 1 One commeth after, after it is burnt a great while, with water to quench it. 2 The other goeth before, and keepes it from taking fire at all: and that is ours. In which caſe, Non conſumpti is no terme diminuent. Nay, the precurrent negative is better by much. Aske the ſpeculative Divine, if it be not ſo: If Ne nos inducas, be not better, than, Libera nos; Leade us not in, than, Deliver us out. Not to Sinne, than, to be forgiven it; not to fall, than, to be lift up againe; And (to inſiſt in this preſent) not to kindle, than, to quench. For, the latter is from Subſequetur me miſericordia, Mercie ſubſequent, which is good; the former from Citò nos anticipent miſericordiæ tuæ, from the anticipation of mercie, which is farre the better of the twaine. The Difference of ours above theirs. Pſal. 23. 6. Pſal. 79. 8.

2. One great difference we ſee betweene the two Non ſumus's. Another now, no whit leſſe. For the greateſt of all their miſeries, and which touched Ieremie neereſt, was the proud inſolencie of their enemies (the Chaldees) over them; worſe, than the conſuming, was their inſulting upon them. This, worſe than all the reſt. Thankes be to GOD, ſo did not ours. They had no cauſe to triumph over us: we, over them, rather. Non ſumus conſumpti: Non nos, at illi. Will yee obſerve that? Wee were not: but our enemies were conſumed themſelves. Et viſcera impiorum crudelia, the cruell bowels of thoſe wicked men, conſumed; and that with fire; and that, before, and in the ſight of the very place, to which they had vowed deſtruction, and, in which, the deſtruction of us all. That the ſaying of the Prophet might bee taken up over them: Væ qui conſumis, Nonne conſumeris & ipſe? You that will needs be a conſuming, ſhall not you your ſelves be ſo ſerved? In the pit you digged, in the net you ſpread, in the element you made choice of, your owne bowels burned. Behold, yee Deſpiſers, and tremble, and feare; your miſchiefe is turned upon your owne heads, and your conſumption lights upon your owne bowels. This then doubles the point: that not onely we were not, but that they (our conſumers) were. Prov. 12. 10. Eſay 33. 1. Pſal. 9. 15. Acts 13. 41.

3. Yea I adde (for a full triplicitie in this point) even that we were cured of our conſumption ſleeping (for ſo we were) and never dreamed of any danger, till we had ſcaped it. This alſo is a maine difference, and encreaſeth our Non ſumus a great deale, above theirs. For, as that, the miſerie of all miſeries, when a man is, and yet knoweth not himſelfe to bee miſerable: So (ſay I) that, the deliverie of all deliveries, when we know not our perill, till we be paſt it: And that was our caſe. Much trouble of feare, and care, much anguiſh of ſpirit is ſaved by it; which the poore Iewes, were even worne, ſpent, and conſumed withall; and which Ieremie (GOD wot) was in, a long time. We, not a moment. But without heavineſſe for a night, we had joy in the morning. Sure, if this be a benefit, So they cried unto the LORD, and He delivered them out of their diſtreſſe: what call yee then this, They never cryed unto the LORD; yet He delivered them out of their diſtreſſe? Pſal. 30. 3. Pſal. 107. 6.

Then put theſe together: 1 We were not conſumed at all. 2 There ſhould have beene fire: there was not ſo much as ſmoke. 3 All ſhould have gone: not a man, that periſhed. 4 All ſhould have periſhed, and periſhed utterly: not an haire of any of their heads fell to the ground. 5 We were not conſumed at all; our conſumers were conſumed. 6 And we without any care taken, were rid of our conſumption: We were not; our enemies were. We without conſuming our ſelves with thought, and anxietie of minde delivered from our danger before ever we knew it. And remember withall (not, Non taliter fecit omni populo, but) Non taliter fecit populo ſuo: He did not deale ſo, not with His owne people, as He did with us.

Pſal. 147.

II. The Cauſe. I It was G-d. Eſay 65. 11.

The effect we have; we were not: what was it, that we were not? Firſt, an It there was; a בִּי, a Quia it had (that is) a cauſe, certainely. It was not forte fortunâ, by hap hazard. No, it was no caſualtie (this fire;) no more was the ſaving us from it: neither caſuall; but cauſall both. We will not then (with thoſe in Eſay) libare fortunæ, no healths to fortune, but ſeeke out this It, even the cauſe that wrought it. In Philoſophie, they count him a happie man, that can finde the cauſe: But ſure, in Divinitie, miſerable and unhappie we, if we find it not; but (with ſwine) feed and fill our ſelves with the Acornes, and never once looke up to the tree, whence they came. A dangerous errour, no leſſe than the danger it ſelfe.

2. Our next caution muſt be, to take heed of Non cauſa pro cauſâ. Where let me tell you this. There is a diſeaſe under the ſunne (and it is one of ours:) as to put all faults from our ſelves, to others; ſo, good deeds (as neere as we can) to plucke all to our ſelves from others. Others (I ſay:) not onely men; but even God Himſelfe. And that two waies: 1 If any good be done, it was our owne arme, or our owne head did it: ſomthing in us: GOD is left out. But, if it be too evident, He had a hand in it; then it was God, 2 but not His mercie, not of Himſelfe, but ſomething from us there was, that moved Him to doe it. So, either ſomething in us, or ſomething from us: whereof the one is againſt It was God; the other, againſt It was His mercie: not God, or not Gods mercie; but we or ſomewhat of ours. Ever our manner is, never to ſeeke further than our ſelves: there, we would faine find it. And there, if we can find any colour of a cauſe, in any wiſedome, or foreſight of our owne, it is as a miſt, or cloud, to take God out of our ſights, the firſt originall true cauſe, the cauſa cauſarum of all ſuch miraculous divine preſervations, as this was.

And yet ſecondarie cauſes there be (I know:) And even in this, man may ſeeme to have a part. It was the letter that was ſent, it was the Kings divination, which I reckon the higheſt cauſe upon earth. This it was; and that it was: But, GOD it was (I am ſure) above both. He, that did infatuate him, that ſent the letter: that made them falſe among themſelves; falſe to their oath, falſe to their ghoſtly father, falſe to their maker. And GOD it was, that inſpired that divination into His Majeſtie: Logike, or Grammar, could not reveale it. GOD onely could; could, and did, direct to that moſt true, but (withall) moſt ſtrange interpretation. Let God then have that is His: Non nobis Domine, non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo da gloriam, Not unto us LORD, not unto us, but to thy Name be the glory of it given.

2 It was Gods Mercie.

God it was: but, what in God? For (we ſee) it is not enough to aſcribe it to Him; but (for ſome reaſon) we muſt go yet further. God may do it, and be bound to do it, and did us wrong, if He doe it not. What then in God? 1. His power may ſeeme to claime the chiefe place, in a deliverance. But power, and wiſedome, and other ſix (that is) all the reſt of the divine Attributes, be but Communiter ad duo (as the Schoolemen terme them:) No prime cauſes themſelves; but, attendants only, and ſet on worke by the two Maſter-Attributes, i Iuſtice, or ii Mercie. So that, Iuſtice it was; or Mercie it was. Mercie it was (ſaith Ieremie) and ſo may we all, in and by his mouth that ſtraight upon it pronounced, Miſericordia Domini ſuper omnia opera Ejus. For, if it had not been that Mercy, nay if (as Saint Iames ſaith) it had not been Miſericordia ſuperexaltat judicium, Mercie had not been above all His workes; even juſtice and all, it had had beene evill with us. Mercie it was; Iuſtice it was not. For then, our owne good deſerts might procure it, as due to them; and ſo we come about againe, to finde the firſt cauſe in our ſelves, becauſe we were this or that. All commeth to one: if it were our owne fore-ſight, it was not God; and if it were our owne merit, it was not He neither.

Pſal 145. 9.
Iam. 2. 13.

But, for this, I appeale to our ſelves. For (I verily thinke) if we would but call to minde (and here now, I would, that every man would call to minde) in what caſe he was, for his ſoule to God-ward, at that very time; whether in ſtate of ſinne or of grace: Sure, if we did but returne to our hearts, and there (as Salomon ſpeaketh) cognoſcere quiſque plagam cordis ſui, every man feele how his heart beates; that heart of ours would ſoone tell us. Beſt claime not by juſtice: Beſt, even confeſſe (with Ieremie) It was God, and Gods mercie, without more adoe. 1 Reg. 8. 38.

We were in conſumpti, if it were but our conſuming ſins: 1. If but of what then was and (may I not ſay) ſtill is conſumed and waſted? What huge ſummes in ſuperfluitie, riot, of belly and backe, and worſe matters! 2. Our time: if but the conſuming of it, in eaſe and idleneſſe, and too well knowne fruits of them both. 3. Of the Service of God, that is quite conſumed by moſt of us, now: fallen to, but a ſermon, if that; and how little like a Sermon, we heare it, and leſſe (I feare) after regard it! 4. Of Gods Name that runnes waſte; and our bleſſed SAVIOVR, that is even peecemeale conſumed in our mouthes, by all manner oathes and execrations, and that without any need at all. Theſe, with other ſinnes, that fret like a moth, and creepe like a canker, to the conſuming of our ſoules, we ſhould finde: that, as it was our enemies purpoſe, we ſhould have beene conſumed; ſo, it was our deſert, to have beene conſumed: and that, it was His mercie onely, wee were not conſumed. This is the true cauſe, GODS mercie.

In which, note theſe two: how fitly it anſwereth and meets both with 1 our conſuming, and 2 with us.

1. As the crueltie of man was the cauſe, we ſhould have beene; ſo (full againſt it) the mercie of God, the cauſe we were not. The true cauſe of our ſafetie, Gods mercie; as of our deſtruction, mans crueltie.

2. Againe, to provide, that being out of our conſumption, we fall not into preſumption, and ſo plucke a worſe judgement upon us. The mercie of God, againſt our deſert. Our deſert it was, to have beene: His mercie it was, we were not. His juſtice, for our deſerts, would have come upon us: It was His mercie turned His juſtice from us, upon them. His juſtice would have ſubſcribed the ſumus: His mercie it was that gave the Non, and ſtayed it; Glorie be to God, and to His mercie for it.

Which mercie yeeldeth us three things to be obſerved: 1 The number, 2 the nature; and 3 the propertie.

1. The number: that it is not miſericordia but miſericordiæ; not one, but many, even a pluralitie of them: A multitude of them, becauſe a multitude of us; They many, becauſe we many: We many, and our ſinnes many more, and where ſinnes are multiplied, there a multiplicitie of mercies is needfull, Ne forte non ſufficiant nobis & vobis, leſt there be not enough for both Houſes, and for all three Eſtates, in them: For ſo is it to be wiſhed, there may be a repreſentation of all His mercies, as that Aſſembly is the repreſentation of all the Realme: that ſo there may be enough for all. His mercies 1 Their number. Mat. 25. 9.

2. But then, of mercie, the cauſe here is ſet downe; (another cauſe;) becauſe His compaſſions faile not: How hangs this together? Thus: the word, which here is turned compaſſions, in very deed properly ſignifieth the bowells. It is to ſhew, that not mercies, nor a number of them at large, from any place or any kind, would ſerve for this worke: but, a certaine ſpeciall kind of choice mercies was required; and thoſe are they, that iſſue from the bowells: miſericordiæ viſcerum, or viſceræ miſericordiæ (which you will.) You ſhall finde them together in ſome ſpeciall workes of God, ſuch as this was. 2 Their nature.

Theſe are the choice: for, of all parts, the bowells melt, relent, yeeld, yerne ſooneſt. Conſequently, the mercies from them, of all other, the moſt tender, and (as I may ſay)

the mercies moſt merciſull. The beſt, 1 both becauſe they are not drie, but full of affection, and come cheerefully: (An eaſie matter to diſcerne between a drie mercie, and a mercie from the bowels.) 2 And becauſe to mercie one may be inclined, by ſomewhat from without; when that failes, where are we then? But, the bowels are within Him, and when we have brought the cauſe within Him, we are ſafe. Quando cauſam ſumit de Se & viſceribus Suis, that mercie is beſt, and yeeldeth the beſt comfort.

But, in this word of the Prophets, there is yet more than bowels. מעים were enough for them: רחמים are more; are the bowels, or veſſels neere the wombe, neere the loynes: In a word, not viſcera onely, but parentum viſcera, the bowels of a father, or mother, thoſe are רחמים which addes more force a great deale. See them, Luke 15.20. in the parable, of the father towards his riotous lewd Sonne; when he had conſumed all vitiouſly, his fatherly bowels of compaſſion failed him not though. See 2 Sam. 18.8. them, in the Storie, in David, toward his ungratious impe Abſalom, that ſought his crowne, ſought his life, abuſed his Concubines in the ſight of all Iſrael; yet, heare the bowels of a father, Be good to the youth Abſalom, hurt him not, uſe him well for 1 Reg. 3.26. my ſake. See them, in the better harlot of the twaine: Out of her motherly bowels, rather give away her childe quite, renounced it rather, than ſee it hurt. This is mercie; here is compaſſion indeed: ô paterna viſcera miſerationum! when we have named them, a multitude of ſuch mercies, as come from a fathers bowels, we have ſaid as much, as we can ſay, or can be ſaid.

And, mention of this word is not unfit, whether we regard them (our enemies) per quos, itum eſt in viſcera terræ (in which place, GODS bowels turned againſt them and toward us:) or whether we think, that His bowels had pitie on our ſo many bowels, as ſhould have flowen about, all the ayre over, and light ſome in the ſtreets, ſome in the river, ſome beyond it, ſome I know not where.

3 Their propertie. Now, that which maketh up all, is the propertie laſt put; quia non deficiunt, or (which is all one) non conſumuntur; faile not, or (as yee may reade it) conſume not. And ſo, as we begunne, we end with Non conſumpti. There cannot be a more kindly conſequence than this; our not failing, from their not failing; we doe not, becauſe they doe not. If they did, we ſhould: But, quia non conſumpta illa, non conſumpti nos; for, they are not conſumed, no more are we. And why doe they not faile? Becauſe He Himſelfe doth not. He is the ſame ſtill, He failes not: His bowels are as He is, ſo, they faile not, no more than He.

And in this [Quia non deficiunt] is all the comfort we have. For, ſince Ieremies time, one would be amazed, to conſider (the huge number of foule enormities, that have beene committed, and yet the parties that commit them not conſumed;) where there ſhould be mercie to ſerve; for them all. One would thinke, by this, they ſhould have beene drawen drie. So they had, but for this לא כלו It can never be ſaid, Now, there is all; there is (now) no more left. No: an inexhauſt fountaine, there is of them; never dry, but floweth ſtill freſh and freſh. And looke, even the next words, Ieremie tells us, they renew every morning: No morning comes, but a freſh ſupplie of them. And even this morning, this 7th of November, we had a good proofe of it. Yea, they are never perfect, the ſumme is never made up: There is ſtill added every day; and they ſhall not be conſummate, till the conſummatum eſt of the world.

And but for theſe bowels, that ſtill melt; and for theſe compaſſions ever flowing and never failing, they, (our enemies) had not failed of their purpoſe. But, becauſe theſe failed not, they failed; becauſe theſe conſumed not, wee were not conſumed. They are not onely plentifull, as in the plurall; and choice, as from the bowels, the bowels of a father; but perpetuall: (what talke we of perpetuall?) they are eternall. Theſe three, their 1 multiplicitie, their 2 ſpecialtie, their 3 eternitie, theſe three we hold by.

III. Our Recognition. And now to our Recognition. To performe it to the full, as it deſerveth, that (I know) we cannot. Worthily to celebrate, and ſet forth His mercies therein, according ding to their merit, what tongue of men or Angels can doe it? But, ſhall we not therefore doe it, as we can? We were not conſumed: ſhall our thankfulneſſe fall into a conſumption? His compaſſion failed us not, ſhall our recognition faile them? Shall we not finde our tongues as well to praiſe His mercies, as to pray for them? Can wee powre out petitions in time of need, and can we not drop forth a few thankes when we have what we would? No, let this be the firſt: that we anſwer, Miſericordiæ non conſumptæ, with gratiæ inconſumptæ; that our thankes fall not into an hectike.

Then, that we imitate the three properties of this vertue, that ſaved us, and to whom we owe our ſelves; no other, than thoſe, that be expreſſed in the Text.

1. That we keepe the number, doe it plurally. Not ſingle thankes, for plurall mercies: that agrees not. Iterate them over and over, as much as we may. In the weight, we ſhall ſurely fall ſhort; let us make amends with the number. Doe it oft, and many times; in hope, that Sæpe cadendo, they ſhall effect that, which, Vi, by any force in them, they are not able.

This for every one, to give as many as we may, make them many. Now, as many, as we are many. As we ſhould have gone all together, as we ſhould have gone; ſo, and no otherwiſe, let us, together, here, all acknowledge His mercies, this day, ſhewed us, and praiſe Him all of us for them: Praiſe Him King and Queene, &c. Pſal. 148.11, 12, 13.

Yea, not onely Dicat nunc Iſrael, but Dicat nunc praies, praiſe Him walls and windowes, praiſe Him lime and ſtone, praiſe Him roofe and foundation, Let them praiſe the name of the Lord: for He ſaid but a word, and they ſtood faſt; He commanded, Non, and they were not ſtirred. Ieremie ſpeakes to a wall to weepe (Chap. 2.18.) we may, with as good reaſon, to rejoyce, and give thankes. All, that ſhould have periſhed together, praiſe Him together. Pſal. 118.2. Pſal. 148.5,6.

2. Next: that we put Him not off with certaine (I know not what) hollow thankes, that have no bowels at all in them. But doe it, De viſceribus, De intimis fibris, from the very bowels, from the innermoſt veines and the ſmalleſt threeds of them: with Him, Praiſe the Lord ô my ſoule, קדבי ובל and all my bowels, all that is within me, All my bones ſhall ſay, &c. When the bones (the bones that ſhould have beene ſhivered in ſunder) when the bowels (the bowels, that ſhould have beene ſcattered abroad) ſpeake, that is the right ſpeaking. If every one of us, to himſelfe, would but ſay the very words of this verſe only, as they ſtand, It was, &c. It was, &c. even this onward, were worth the while; if it be not for forme, but feelingly ſpoken: Dic, Dic, ſed intus dic; ſay it, but ſay it from within, let the bowels ſpeake it; though our words faile us, they doe not. And (indeed) the conſumption ſhould have beene with fire; ſhall our recognition be frozen? no ſparke, no vigor igneus, no fervor at all in it? How agree theſe, a firie deſtruction, and a frozen confeſſion? It ſtandeth us upon to be delivered, no leſſe from cold thankes, than from [illegible] Pſal 103.1. Pſal. 35.10.

3. And that we never [illegible] doe it. No yeare to intermit it, no weeke, and (I would I might adde) no day neither. Anſwer Miſericordia Ejus manet in æternum, with Miſericordias Domini cantabo in æternum: and not, mercies that never faile, with ſhort thankes and ſoone done; ſpecially, ſeeing, their not failing lyeth upon our not failing them. Pſal. 136.1. Pſal. 89.1,2.

Now, it would doe well to ſeale up all with a Recognition reall; that is, the praiſe of mercie, with ſome worke of mercie. What was done upon us, this day? our preſerving: A worke of mercy it was. This worke can no way ſo lively be expreſſed, as by a worke of like nature, nothing ſo well (ſaith S. Iames) by warme breath, as by warme clothes. Erga conſumendos, ſuch as are in danger of it, not by fire, but by cold and nakedneſſe. Iam. 2.16.

This, as it is a moſt kindly way to reſemble it: ſo (withall) is it a moſt effectuall meanes to procure the continuance and not fayling of it. Magnes eſt miſericordiæ Dei erga nos, miſericordia noſtra in fratres; of GODS mercie to us, keeping us from conſuming, our mercie toward our poore brethren is the loadſtone, to keepe them from the like. So, under one, ſhall we both let it forth and procure it; procure that, we ſo much ſtand in need of, and ſet forth that vertue, to which we were ſo much this day beholden.

Now to GOD; to Him, and to His mercie; the bowels of His mercie, and the freſh fountaine of them: That ſuffered us not to be conſumed, but delivered us; and that from that fire, and that univerſall, utter, ſudden, unnaturall conſuming by it, the decree whereof was ſo certainly gone forth againſt us, come ſo neere us, and we not aware of it: That ſuffered us not to be conſumed, but gave them to be conſumed in our ſteads; and hath, this day, preſented us all alive to give Him praiſe for it: To Him, for the multitude of His mercies, for the paterna viſcera miſerationum ſuarum, that never faile, nor conſume themſelves, nor ſuffer us to faile, and be conſumed: To Him I ſay, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the V. of November, A. D. MDCXIII.

PROVERB. CHAP. VIII. VER. XV.

Per me REGES regnant.

By mee KINGS reigne:

THeſe words may well ſerve for a Sermon, for they be a peece of a Sermon. For, all the Chapter is a Sermon preached by one ſtanding in the top of the high places, (verſe 2.) The high places, that was (then) their Church; The top of them, that was the Pulpit.

It is the common queſtion, Who Preaches? Ever, wee muſt know that: And though the whole booke be Salomons; and though hee bee a * Preacher upon Record; yet Major Salomone hîc, a greater Preacher than Salomon is here. Hee was but wiſe; it is Wiſdome it ſelfe made this Sermon. And wee may bee bold to preach, what Wiſdome preacheth: A ſermon out of ſuch a Sermon, cannot be amiſſe.

* Eccl. 1. 1. Matth. 12. 42.

Specially, this Wiſdome; the Eſſentiall Wiſdome of GOD: which upon the point, will prove to be none other, but CHRIST: And ſo, our Text fall out to be de verbis bis Domini, that is, de verbis Domini ſecundùm Salomonem; for, ſo there be, no leſſe than ſecundùm Matthæum, or Ioannem.

Which though they were uttered by Him, before He was in the fleſh, what of that? they be no whit the leſſe; but full out as good Goſpell, as if they had beene recorded by any of the foure Evangeliſts: yea, and this we may adde further; even Goſpell, before any Goſpell of them all. Thus much for the Author of the ſpeech.

The Summe. The ſpeech it ſelfe ſeemes, as if ſome queſtion there were, Per quem Reges? Or ſome were about to bring the Writ of Quo Warranto, to know, how they claime to be Kings; how to hold their ſoveraigne Authoritie; by whoſe grant?

And let not this ſeeme ſtrange: It is no new thing, to bring this Writ in like caſes.

Exod. 2. 14. Matth. 21. 23. One was brought againſt Moſes? Who made thee a Ruler? Nay higher; one againſt our Saviour Himſelfe: By what authoritie doeſt thou theſe things, and who gave thee that authoritie? Againſt Moſes, Againſt CHRIST? and why not then againſt Salomon and his fellow King?

Exod. 3. 14. Iohn 10. 36. And this ſame Per Me (here) is an anſwer to all. Who made you (Moſes) a Ruler? He whoſe Name is I am, ſent me. Who gave CHRIST His authoritie? He, that ſanctified Him, and ſent Him to be the Meſsias of the world. And here now; Kings, by whom, Per Me, by Him too. Theſe words of his, Charta Regia; This their Charter Royall: And He that gave it them, will warrant it for good, and beare them out againſt all the Per me's in the world. This for the Nature of the ſpeech.

Bellar. contra Barcl. A point neceſſary, if ever, at this time to be weighed well, and looked into; wherein this queſtion is put up, and ſo vexed, that it cannot reſt: Wherein they have ſet up an Anti-Per and given him this ſentence in his mouth, Ego facio, ut Rex tuus Rex ne ſit, I will make your King no King, this Text Per Me notwithſtanding. One, to ſever Reges and Regnant, that they ſhall reigne no longer, than he ſees cauſe to ſuffer them. And is it not time then, to make good their Tenures?

And that doe this Text, and this Day. The Text, in word; the day, in deed, cum effectu, really.

The Text, the words indeed (as the words of wiſdome) are but few, and the ſentence ſhort; ſcarce any in Scripture ſo ſhort: In our tongue, but foure words, and they but foure ſyllables. But it fareth with ſentences as with Coynes. In Coynes, they that in ſmalleſt compaſſe containe greateſt value are beſt eſteemed: And, in ſentences, thoſe that in feweſt words compriſe moſt matter, are moſt praiſed. And ſuch is this.

Exceeding compendious, that we muſt needs be without all excuſe (it being but foure monoſyllables) if we doe not remember it.

And withall, of rich Contents: for, upon theſe foure ſyllables, depend all Kings and Kingdomes of the Earth: Of ſuch force are they.

Of which foure, the two latter (Reges and Regnant) be two as great matters as any be in the World. One, the Perſons themſelves, as they be Kings. The other, the Act of their reigning, or bearing rule over Nations. Theſe two latter depend on the two former Per, Me: which are but one in effect; but, He a great One. For, it is here poſitively ſet down, aſſerendo, that theſe two latter, are by this former; By and through Him, that ſayes Per Me. By and through Him Kings firſt ſetled in their Reignes. By and through Him ever ſince upholden in their Reignes. By and through Him vouchſafed many miraculous preſervations in their Reignes. Thus farre the Text.

Luke 1. 78. Then, by the tender mercy of our GOD comes the Day from on high, and giveth great light unto the Text: This Day, on which a very memorable memoriall of a famous Per Me. One, in great Capitall letters: Even of Per Me Reges; and not of Per Me Reges alone, but of Per Me Leges, (and that too followes, here in the verſe) and of Per Me Greges too: All had gone up, but for this, Per Me. This Day, this Per Me ſoundeth in your eares, and this day this Per Me was ſealed in your eyes, and this queſtion actually decided.

That cauſe is a Perſon. Verſ. 14.

Againſt thoſe that doe Iovi menſam ponere, aſcribe it to the Poſition of the ſtarres, to this or that Planet in the Aſcendent. No; it is not de luminibus (they; be no Perſons:) but de Patre luminum (He, is.) So a cauſe there is, and no impersonall cauſe, but Per Me a Perſon.

Eſay 65. 11. Iames 1. 17.

What Perſon? Per Me regnant: and that is not Per ſe regnant: ſo, another perſon it is beſides themſelves; one different from them. That they reigne, is not, by or from themſelves, but by or from ſome other beſides. Regnabo (ſaith Adonijah) but he failed; it would not be: To teach him, it is not Per ſe, by their owne bow or ſword, nor Marte nor Arte, they reigne; And ſo to ſacrifice to them. It is not their owne place, they ſit in; nor their owne power, they execute: It is derived from another perſon; Ipſe eſt qui fecit nos, & non ipſi nos (may they alſo ſay) He it is that made us, and not we our ſelves. A Perſon; And another Perſon.

Another perſon beſide themſelves. 1 Reg. 1. 5. Pſal. 44. 6. Abac. 1. 16. Pſal. 100. 3.

And who is that other Perſon? Let me tell you this firſt: It is but one Perſon, not many, Per Me is the ſingular number. It is not Per nos: ſo, it is not a pluralitie; no multitude, they hold by. That claime is gone, by Per Me: one ſingle perſon it is, Per quem. The other, a Philoſophicall conceit it came from, from thoſe that never had heard this Wiſdome preach. In this booke, we finde not any Soveraigne power, ever ſeated in any Body collective, or derived from them. This we finde, that GOD He is King; that the Kingdomes be His, and to whom He will, He giveth them. That ever they came out of GODS hand by any Per Me, any grant into the Peoples hands to beſtow, that we finde not. One Perſon it is.

But one Perſon, not many. Pſal. 93. 97, 99. Dan. 4. 14. Ier. 27. 5.

I aske then, this one Perſon who He is? this I finde (at the XXIV. verſ.) That whoſoever He is, He was, when there were yet no Abyſſi, no depths, nor no mountaines upon the Earth, nor the Earth it ſelfe: He was before all theſe. I finde againe, (at the XXVII. verſ.) When the Heavens were ſpread, a decree given to the Sea, the foundations of the Earth firſt laid, He was there a Worker together with GOD: Was at the making of all, was Himſelfe Maker of all. So, neither Man nor Angell; they were not ſo ancient, they created nothing, they were created themſelves.

That perſon, neither man nor Angell.

Then ſileat omnis caro, let all fleſh keep ſilence, And Omnis Spiritus (too,) in this point of Per Me. Neither the ſpirit that ſaid of the Kingdoms of the Earth, All theſe are mine: Nor he, that though he have hornes like the Lambe, yet ſpeaketh words like the Dragon.

Zech. 2. 13. Matth. 4. 9. Apoc. 13. 11.

Theſe

Theſe foure ſyllables are a ſuperſedeas to all bookes or booke-makers for any mans Per Me, any mans claime. It is no man. And if no man, then no Pope: for he alſo is a Acts 10.26. Heb 5.2. man (as Saint Peter ſaith, he was:) And Circundatus, compaſſed with infirmities, Saint Paul ſaith, hee is: Sure, he made not the Earth; himſelfe is made of earth. The Abyſſus, the deepe was made, yet he aſcended out of it: the ſeven hills, long before he Apoc.13.1. 17.9. ſate on them. He is not this Per Me; they hold not of him: they hold of Per Me, that created heaven and earth.

And this Per Me will beare no Per alium beſides: He that muſt ſay, Per Me Reges, muſt alſo ſay, Per Me Cœlum & Terra. None but He that can ſay the one, can ſay the other. Therefore none with Him in this Per. None to ſtep forth and rejoyne, Etiam per me, and by me too: Vnleſſe he can ſay Etiam per me cœlum & Terra. Per alium then hath no place here.

But, might not the High-Prieſt claime deputation under Per Me? For that, there is a ruled caſe of it here, in him that was the ſetter downe of this (Salomon.) Had the High-Prieſt, had Abiathar ever a per me for him? It is well knowne, his per me went 1 Reg.1.7. with Adonijah, againſt Salomon: His per me, if it could, would have depoſed Salomon. But ſo farre was it from him to ſay per me Salomon, that contrary, Salomon might ſay 1 Reg.2.27. and did, per me Abiathar. Depoſe Salomon he could not; depoſed he was himſelfe. Non Pſal.115.1. nobis Domine, non nobis, would he have ſaid: It was Per Me the wrong way with him.

6 But, GOD. Well then, being neither man nor Angell (ſince they made not the world:) GOD it muſt be of force: There is in the reaſonable nature, no other perſon left, but He: And He it is. He, the partie, that ſpeakes: By Me Kings; I am the Cauſe, that Kings reigne. Then, Reges quod ſunt, per Deum ſunt: Kings, what they are, by In XIII. ad Rom. GOD they are: Πρωτὸν ἀξίωμα (ſaith Chryſoſtome:) and a ſpeciall dignifying of their ſtates it is, ſo they are. It was (we find) wont to be the uſuall ſtyle (yea, even of Popes themſelves) writing to Kings, to wiſh them health in Eo per quem Reges regnant, in Him by whom Kings doe reigne: And that was neither Pope, nor People; But GOD alone, whoſe proper ſtyle that is.

7 GOD, the SONNE. By GOD then: I aske yet further, by what Perſon of the God-Head? ſo farre we have warrant to goe by this Text. It is Wiſdome, whoſe ſpeech all this is: No created wiſdome, but the Wiſdome of GOD created all things, it ſelfe uncreate: that is, the SONNE of GOD. For, whom Salomon here calleth Wiſdome, the ſame (in Chap.30.4. the thirtieth Chapter after) he termeth the SONNE: What is His name (ſpeaking of GOD) or What is His SONNE's name? By Him, by that Perſon doe they reigne: And now at the laſt, are we come to the right Per Me.

1 As the midle cauſe. Per (the prepoſition) would teach us ſo much, if there were nothing elſe. Per, dicit cauſam mediam, it deſigneth a middle cauſe. And Hee is the middle Perſon, of the Rom.13.1. great Cauſe, Cauſa cauſarum, A Deo (ſaith Saint Paul;) Per Me (ſaith Salomon:) from GOD the Father, by GOD the SONNE. We may know it, It is CHRISTS prepoſition, this (ever:) Per CHRISTVM Dominum noſtrum.

2 As man. And by Him, moſt properly: for, in that He was to be man, all the benefits which were to come from GOD, to man, were to come by Him. He, the Per, of all: among which, this one of Regall Regiment is a principall one.

3 As Wiſdom. By Him againe. Becauſe He is Wiſdome (which I reckon worth a note) that the Per of Kingdomes, whereby they conſiſt, is not Power ſo properly (the Attribute of the firſt) as Wiſdome (the Attribute of the ſecond Perſon:) they ſtand rather by Wiſdome than force. Beſides, Sapientis eſt ordinare (ſaith the great Philoſopher) the proper worke of wiſdome, is to order. And what is Anarchie, but a diſordered Chaos of Confuſion? Or what is Rule, but an εὐταξία, a ſetting and holding of all in good order. This being Wiſdomes proper worke, this Per is moſt properly His.

4 As a King. Pſal 2.8. Apoc.19.12. Pſal.47.7. Pſal.145.13. By Him, yet againe, becauſe on Him hath the Father conferred all the kingdomes of the Earth: we reade it Pſal. II. We ſee Him Apoc. XIX. with many crownes on His head. Meet then it was, that the Kings of the ſeverall quarters of the Earth, ſhould be by Him, that is Rex univerſæ terræ. That the Kings of the ſeverall Ages of the world, ſhould be by Him, who is Rex ſæculorum, whoſe Dominion endureth throughout all ages. In a word: Vt utrobique regnetur per Chriſtum: And that all Crownes, both the Crowne of glory in Heaven, and the Crownes of higheſt dignitie here on earth, ſhould be holden of Him, all; as all are. Thus by this time, wee ſee this Per Me, who He is.

Now returne I to Per: There is much in the right taking of this word: What Per is it? There is a Per of permiſſion; as wee ſay in the Latine, Per me licet, You may for all mee; Good leave have you; I hinder you not: Or (as in Engliſh,) By Him, that is, beſides Him, they came, and Hee ſtopped them not. Is this the Per? Indeed ſome ſuch thing is blundered at, as if GOD onely permitted them, And ſcarce that. II. The Manner; Per. 1 Not by Per of permiſſion.

Thus comes one of them forth with the matter, and makes it the very firſt words of his booke. The Prieſt, he is à Solo Deo; but, the King, he is ex importunitate populi: The people importun'd GOD, and He yeelded with much adoe, agrè (His owne word) againſt His Will: And ſo we muſt interpret Per Me, that is, Contra me; By me, that is, all againſt my minde it is, that Kings reigne, but I beare them or beare with them. Vpon the matter, this it is; They would have Kings to be, by Toleration onely; And ſo, by that Per, are all the evils and miſchiefes in the world. And, are not Kings much beholden to theſe men, thinke you?

But, this Per we reject utterly: It cannot be. For, though the Latine Per will beare this ſenſe, the Greeke [διὰ] the Hebrew [בְּ] will by no meanes; the phraſe, the Idiome of the tongue will in no wiſe endure it. Διὰ will admit no permiſſion; nor בְּ, neither. Away then with that.

How take we Per then? What need we ſtand long about it, having another Per, and of the ſame perſon to patterne it by: Omnia per Ipſum facta ſunt (ſaith Saint Iohn. And the ſame ſaith Salomon by and by after, in this Chapter.) Then, as By Him, all things made there: ſo, By Him, Kings reigne here. The World, and the Government of the world, by the ſame Per both; one and the ſame cauſe inſtitutive of both. That was not by bare permiſſion (I truſt:) no more, theſe. 2 But by Commiſſion. Iohn 1 3.

Per Ipſum, they; and if Per Ipſum, per Verbum, quia Ipſe eſt Verbum. For, how were they (the creatures) made? [a] Dixit & facta ſunt: By the Word, by Him. And how theſe (Kings?) By the ſame [b] Ego dixi. Even by the ſame, that Hee Himſelfe [c] Dixit Dominus Domino meo. As He then; they. And ſo doth CHRIST Himſelfe interpret Ego dixi, ὡς ἐς λόγῳ ἐγὼ εἶπα. A Word came to them; And what manner word was it? [e] Saint Paul telleth us, it was διάταγὴ, an ordinance, a word of high authoritie; the Imperiall Decrees have no other name but Διατάγματα. This now then, is more than a Per of permiſſion: A Per of Commiſſion it is; A ſpeciall warrant, an ordinance Imperiall, by which Kings reigne. 3 By the Word. a Pſal. 148.5. b Pſal. 82.6. c Pſal. 110.1. d Iohn 10. 35. e Rom. 13. 2.

By Him, then: By what of Him? by His Will; Hæc eſt voluntas Dei (ſaith [f] Saint Peter;) and tibi in bonum (ſaith [g] Saint Paul,) for thy good. His will then, His good will toward men: Expreſſed by His Word: Word of power, (we have heard;) And word of wiſdome; for Hee is Wiſdome: And word of Love; for, even [h] Because GOD loved Iſrael, did He ſet Salomon King over them. 4 By his Will. f 1 Pet. 2. 15. g Rom. 13. 4. 1. Expreſſed by his Word. h 1 Chron. 5. 8.

Expreſſed by His Word: His word onely? Nay His deed too, His beſt deed, His gift; Dedi vobis Regem: Gift of grace; as, even they acknowledge in their ſtyles, that Gratiâ Dei ſunt quod ſunt. Given by Him, ſent by Him, [i] Placed in their Thrones by Him; [k] Veſted with their robes by Him, [l] Girt with their ſwords by Him, [m] Anointed by Him, Crowned by Him. All theſe By Him's we have, toward the underſtanding of Per Me: ſo By Him, as none are, or can be By Him more. 2. Expreſſed by His word and deed onely? Nay (there is nothing but His Name beſides) by His Name too: ſo by His name, as His very chiefeſt name (CHRIST.) He imparteth to them: And, that is not without myſtery: to ſhew their neere alliance to Him. I have ſaid Ye are Gods: which of the perſons, that are each of them 3. By His Name. Pſal. 82. 6.

God? it followeth, Filii Altissimi, Sons of the most High: Sonne, that is, CHRISTS name: He the Person then, to whom they are beholden: He, by whom, they are. To shew, they are Sonnes, and have their descent properly from Him, [n] Rex Regum is upon his thigh; and Melchisedech His first King, and His Type, is [o] brought in without Father and without Mother, to shew, that Kings are the Generation of GOD.

5 By Him, and In Him.

By Him: Nay, more than By Him (if you looke better upon the word.) There is no By in the Hebrew; and yet the word is בי. But, that (in true and exact propriety tendered) is In Me, not By Me: The meaning is, that they are first in Him, and so come forth from Him.

p Esay 62. 3.
q Chap. 21. 1.

And yet, so from Him, as still they be in Him; both [p] Corona Regis (saith Esay) and [q] Cor Regis (saith Salomon) their Persons and Estates both, in manu Domini.

r Iohn 17. 21.

And in Him, as Hee saith, [r] My Father in Mee, and I in Him; so, they in Him, and Hee in them. For, such is the nature of the Prepositions, the HOLY GHOST hath made choice of, as they may be inverted and verified both wayes. For, as it is true, They reigne in, and by Him: so is it likewise true; He reignes, in and by them. They in GOD, and GOD in them, reciprocè. He, in them, as His Deputies; they, in Him, as their Author and Authorizer. He, by their Persons: They, by His Power. And so having brought them to Him, even into Him, and lodged them in Him, there let us leave them.

III.

The Persons: Reges.

This while we have beene in the two former; 1 Per, 2 Me. Now to the two latter: 3 Per Me, Reges; and 4 Per me, regnant.

1 Reges in propriis terminis. Rom. 13. 1. Psal. 82. 6.

Per me Reges. And first, I am glad we have met with this word Reges, in propriis terminis: when we meet with some other, there is such pinching at them. The Apostle speakes of Higher Powers: ô, it is too generall; it may be Powers Ecclesiastike, as well as Civill: (A meere shift.) The Psalmist saith, Ego dixi Dii; that, is not home neither, there is mention of Iudges in the Psalme, as well as Princes. But, here is a word will hold them; Kings in expresse termes, totidem literis: No evasion here, no shifting it. This is home, (I trust.)

Rom. 11. 36. Iames 1. 17.

Per Me Reges. Why, what great matter is that? Per Illum omnia (saith Saint Paul, Rom. 11.) All things are by Him.

All things; but all good things specially, (saith Saint Iames,) Why, By Him, there can nothing come, but good.

2 Reges specially, above all other creatures.

Thirdly then, speciall good things. By a speciall Per, they. And Kings are such, and for such reckoned up here, in this very Chapter? Even for one of the principallest benefits, vouchsafed mankinde by GOD, this By Me Kings: for, will ye but marke this, they have precedence, are reckoned up here, before the creation it selfe: for, that commeth after, at the XXIV. ver. To shew, it is (as indeed it is) better for us, not to be at all; than, not to be under Rule. Better no Creation, than no Government. GOD is highly to be blessed for this Per me Reges: that He hath given potestatem talem hominibus, Such power unto men.

Matth. 9. 3.

3 Reges, without qualification. 1 Of Religion.

Now, I weigh the word [Reges.] What? any by Him? any in grosse without qualification? what without any regard of Religion at all? Sure, if none but true Professours had beene here meant, It must have beene but Per Me Rex: for, none but one, but this Salomon, was then such, of all the Kings of the Earth. But, in that it is Reges, the HOLY GHOST's meaning is, to take in the rest: Hiram, and Pharaoh, and Hadad; they are in too in this Reges. For, where the Scripture distinguishes not, no more doe we. Be their Religion what it will, By Him they are.

2 Of Tyrannie. Numb. 16. 3. Hosea 13. 11. Hosea 8. 10.

But, what if they take too much upon them (Core's exception?) Then, it is Dedi vobis Regem in irâ (saith GOD by the Prophet:) Angry I was when I gave him, but I gave him though. Per Me iratum, it is: but, Per Me, it is still; Per Me, though with a difference.

4 All By Him, made, and unmade.

But, this Onus Principis (say they in the Prophet) how may we be rid of it? Is there any any other Per me, to goe unto, to deprive or depoſe them? Sure, where the worſt is reckoned that can be of them, Clamabunt ad Dominum is all, I finde. No Per to doe it but He. By Him, and by none but by Him, they be; By Him, and by none but by Him, they ceaſe to be. In Nature, every thing is diſſolved by the ſame meanes, it came together. In Law, Inſtitution and Deſtitution belong both to one. In Divinitie; the Prophet in one and the ſame Verſe, ſaith Dedi vobis Regem (in the fore-part) and with one breath, Abſtuli eum in the latter: So, both pertaine to Him; Dominus dedit, Dominus abſtulit. As for this new Per Me, we argue from the Text: He makes no Kings (we know;) and, as he makes none, ſo he can un-make none. No right, to one Per, more than another. 1 Sam. 8. 18. Hoſea 13. 11.

All be Kings then, by Him: yet, not all alike. GOD forbid, but there ſhould be degrees, Magis and Minùs, one more than another: But we ſhould put a difference, betweene Melchiſedek and Nimrod; betweene Salomon and Saul.

We ſay then, All Kings by Him; but, among all, and above all, ſuch as he that ſet downe this, ſuch as Salomon; for he by the great Capitall Per Me. Per Me iratum, thoſe other; Per Me propitium, He: And that is the Per indeed. Thus much he doth inſinuate, by adding in the latter part of the verſe (which commonly is the Exegeſis of the former) namely, if Iuſta decernunt doe come too. If he be a righteous King, as Melchiſedek, King of righteouſneſſe: If he ſow the fruit of righteouſneſſe in peace, that is, be a peaceable King, as Salomon: If he Rule Per Me (that is) Per Sapientiam, rule wiſely. Thoſe are Per Me propitium; Thoſe are Kings primæ intentionis, Kings of ſpeciall favour. 5 All, but eſpecially good Kings. Heb. 7. 2. Iames 3. 18.

This for the Perſon. Now to the Act: Per Me, Regnant.

IV. The Act: Regnant.

And I make theſe two, two diverſe, becauſe ſome are Reges, Kings, and yet reigne not: (as true Heires defeated.) And ſome reigne, and are no Kings: (as doe all Vſurpers of the throne, per ſas nefaſque.) Alwayes, one thing it is, to be a King; another to reigne. Ioas was the true King, all thoſe ſix yeares hee reigned not; Athalia reigned all thoſe ſix yeares, yet true Queene was ſhee never any. Of ſuch, GOD ſaith, in Hoſea; Regnaverunt, ſed non à Me. Why? for, Per Me Reges regnant, By Me Kings reigne; Kings, of lawfull and true deſcent, they reigne by Me: Theſe were none ſuch. So, they reigned; but, without any Per from Me. But, when theſe meet, and they that be Reges de jure, regnant de facto, then it is as it ſhould be: And Per Me it is, that they ſo meet. Hoſea 8. 4.

This Regnant I conſider, as an Act, three wayes: 1. As it hath a beginning. 2. As it hath continuance. 3. As it hath Rectitude or obliquitie incident to every act. Regnant, that they reigne at all: Regnant diu, that they reigne long: Regnant rectè, that they reigne aright. And every one hath his Per. Per, Ianua, By, the doore; by Him they enter their reigne: Per, lineâ; By, the line, which Hee ſtretcheth out over every Government, longer or ſhorter; by Him they continue their reigne: Per, regulâ; By, the rule; ſo reigne, as they ſwarve not from Him, touch Him ſtill; continue with Him, and He with them, and ſo Hee will make them to continue long.

I am led to this, becauſe you ſhall ſee theſe three duely ſet upon every Kings head, through all the ſtory of the Bible.

1. Such a King, was ſo many yeares old, when he began his reigne: there is his Inchoation, his Regnant, his Doore of Entrance.

2. And then: So many yeares he reigned in Ieruſalem, or Samaria: there is his continuation, his diu regnant, his Per of Line, or continuance.

3. Then ever followes (if you marke it) either, And he did well, and walked in the ſteps of his father David; there is the manner, his benè regnant, his Rule, or Rectitude: Or, and he did evill in the ſight of the LORD, and turned not from the wayes of Ieroboam; there is his obliquitie; out of rule himſelfe, and brought all out of rule with him. This holds in all, and in all will hold, after they be once off of the ſtage.

1 Regnant, Per, januæ: The entrance.

As it is Actus inchoatus : they reigne, that is, they come to the Crowne, they begin their reignes.

It is generally true, that the maine frame of Government, the firſt raiſing of it, could be by none, but this Per Me. But I inſiſt on particulars rather: Wherein, any that ſhall but weigh, what difficulties, what oppoſitions be raiſed, what plots and practices to keepe Reges from regnant, thoſe from it whoſe of right it is, ſhall be forced to confeſſe, that even by Him they have their firſt entrance. Take him that is next hand, Salomon; and he that ſhall marke, Adonijah's plot, drawing the High-Prieſt (Abiathar) and the Generall of the field (Ioab) into a ſtrong faction againſt him; ſhall finde, Salomon was bound to acknowledge, that Per Me he came in. Or if he will not, Adonijah himſelfe will, he was forced to doe it: That the Kingdome was turned from him, and was his brothers, for it came unto him (even Per Me) by the LORD. This confeſſion of his is upon record, 1 King. 2.15. And your Majeſtie was non ignara mali hujus, was not altogether free from theſe: It is Engliſh I ſpeake. Poſſibly, from Ioab you were; but, not from Abiathar; His Bulls, they were abroad: And ſome there were that could not enter by the doore, but were climing up another way. Yet for all theſe, you came to your reigne, and you came by the right Per, by the doore: And, this (I know;) You are one of the number of thoſe Kings that aſcribe their regnant to this Per Me. This, for Actus inchoatus: Now, they are in.

2 Regnant diu, Per, lineæ: Their continuance.

But when they are in, they may out againe ſoone enough; when begunne, end quickly; if Per Me, as He was the Cauſe procreant, ſo He be not alſo the cauſe Conſervant, and make their reigne Actus Continuatus; draw the line out along, keepe and continue them for many yeares in it. Regnant, is true in the firſt inſtant. One reignes; if it be but [a] for a ſevenight, as Zimri reigned no longer: But what is that? Or what is it to reigne a Moneth, as [b] Shallum; or three, as [c] Ioahaz; or ſix, as [d] Zacharias did? Nothing: The continuance, proprie loquendo, that is, the reigne; and Regnant without this Per is as good as nothing. And the Text is for this. The word in Hebrew is not Regnant in the Preſent, doe reigne; but regnabunt in the Future, ſhall reigne, or continue reigning. And ſo is the Prepoſition [Per] for it too. For, Per addit durationem; addes ever a continuance, where it is added; as is evident, by Perſiſt, Permanent, Perdurable, Perſeverance, Perpetuitie.

a 1 Reg.16.15.
b 2 Reg.15.13.
c 2 Reg.23.31.
d 2 Reg.15.8.

And this now, queſtionleſſe depends upon GOD alone; even their quicke cutting off, or their long preſerving in their reignes. He can draw the line longer or ſhorter; draw it out ſtill, or ſnap it off. Hee can take them from their reigne by the [e] hand-writing on the wall, MENE, &c. He can take it from them by [f] Solvit baltheum Regum, taking off their Collar, and [g] caſting their throne downe to the ground. He can call in a forren enemie, ſtirre up a ſeditious ſubject, let looſe the ſea of popularitie in upon them; unlawfully to doe it, but to doe it though. Many ſuch things are with Him.

Now we are at the maine. For, here comes all the danger: there is ſuch heaving and lifting at them after they be in; ſuch thruſting by force, ſuch undermining by fraud: So many Per me's, Per Me Clement, Caſtell, Catesby; and they againe ſo many Per's, Per knives, piſtoll, poyſon, powder, all againſt this Per of continuance; as, be the former how it will, they cannot but confeſſe here, that Per Me it is, that they hold out their Reignes.

And, here fall's in kindly, this dayes deſigne and the viſible Per Me, that happened on it; For, By Him it was, and by His mercy, that King and all were not quite conſumed. That your Reigne, and your life were not determined both together: Not that you went not downe (with David) into the pit; but, that you went not up, up into the ayre in (I know not how many) pieces, and that now, after thus many yeares, it is Regnant with you ſtill: And may it be Per Me regnat (ſo we all pray:) and not Per Me regnat onely, but, Per Me regnabit, many times, many yeares more. I but put put you in minde here of what I told you right now: It is In Me (in Hebrew) not Per Me; In Him, not By Him, though neyer ſo hard by Him (for, that is without Him;) but even In Him, and then they be ſafe.

And in Him You have reigned: for He hath incloſed You (as it were) and compaſſed You on every ſide. As in a fortreſſe, ſtrong hold, or place of defence; ſo have You reigned in Him: That, as David oft calleth GOD, ſo may You; Your Rocke, Your Refuge, Your Sanctuary of ſafe-guard: So that the enemie hath not beene able to doe you violence, nor the ſonne of wickedneſſe had power to hurt You. Pſal.18.2. Pſal.89.22. Iames 4.6.

And yet, there is more in this Regnabunt, greater grace yet. For we may extend it yet further, to a continuance, not in themſelves in their perſons onely; but, in their poſterity too. That, when it ſhall ceaſe with them, and they in their graves, yet it ſhall be Regnabunt ſtill, and they reigne in their race and progenie, when they have done reigning themſelves. This drawes out the Per longer: for, ſo reigne they, many ages; not their owne onely. Kings, in themſelves; Kings, in their ſeed; Reges à ſæculo in ſæculum, from one generation to another. By Saul, and by David, we may plainly ſee; one thing it is, to bring one to be King, as Saul was: another, to eſtabliſh the Kingdome in his line, as with David it was. And it is that, he magnifieth ſo much, 2 *Sam.*7. That GOD had not onely brought him thitherto (to the Crowne) that was but a ſmall thing: but that alſo He had ſpoken of His Servants Houſe, in longinquum, for a long time; for, that is the right Regnabunt. The right Regnabunt is not that (in *Dan.*2.) like an Image, which when it is broken, nothing comes of it: But the right, is that (*Dan.*4.) where it is like a goodly Tree that hath branches come out of the ſtemme, which will prove Siens and be new grafted againe, and ſo ſucceſſively derive it ſelfe downe to many generations. This alſo is, Per Me; and altogether by Him, and in His hand, who can eſtabliſh ſucceſſion, as to David; and who can alſo bid Ieremie, Write this man deſtitute of children, of him there ſhall none come more to ſit upon the Throne of Iſrael. Ierem.22.30.

This for the Continuance, Diu regnant. I will but touch the third: I would not have touched it, but that it is a ſpeciall meanes, for the ſecond, of continuance. To Diu, the way is by rectè; To rule long, the way, to rule right: Nay, it is the way to rule for ever: And, without Rectè, the ſhorter the better; better for them, and better for all parts. 3 Regnant recte, Per, Regulæ. The manner.

Thus doth one Per ſtill lead us to another: for as it is true, Per dicit cauſam ſo is it likewiſe true, Per dicit regulam. By Him, as a cauſe; By Him, as a rule: from which Rule not ſwarving, there is a direct promiſe, *Deut.*17. He ſhall prolong his reigne, and not his alone, but even his childrens too, in the midſt of Iſrael. And, by that Rule, a long line ſhall be drawne, for the drawing out of his reigne many yeares. Deut.17.20.

And, this we need not ſeeke for, any where elſe; it is even in the body of the word. For Rectitudo and Rectus, and Rectè, Subſtantive, Adjective, and Adverbe, all come of Rego: ſo doth Regula too, it ſelfe: That they need be no ſtrangers one to another; There is an alliance, and there ought to be a reciprocall reference, betweene them and Regere, and betweene Regere and them. Erit apud rectiſſimum Rex (ſaith Moſes, *Deut.*33.) He ſhall be, as ſtraight, as neare the Rule, as may be. Deut.33.5.

Now, that Rule is (here) Me; and Me is Wiſdome; and Wiſdome is the Rule which GOD Himſelfe draweth His lines by; And Kings, as in other points, ſo in this, to be as like, and draw as neere GOD as they may.

But then, care would be had, it be that Wiſdome which is Me (indeed.) For, Achitophel's, and Ieroboam's goe for wiſdome, in the world; but (indeed) ſuch wiſdome (as Saint Iames termeth it) is earthly, ſenſuall, and hath ſomewhat of the Devill in it. It is not that worldly wiſdome, they be Kings by; but that which is from above, and that (I told you) is CHRIST. What they are, by Him they are; That they continue, by Him it is: Who is, and will be pro illis qui per Illum; be for them, that be by Him; and will not ſee or ſuffer the overthrow of His owne Ordinance. Iames 3.15.

And, may I not then commend Him (this Per Me) to them? That, ſince they reigne, by that Wiſdome (which is CHRIST) they would reigne by that, and by no other Wiſdome. And that reciprocation (I touched before;) that ſeeing they reigne by Him, He may reigne by them; Regnet, per illos, qui regnant per Illum; ſince they rule by Him, to be ruled by Him: There cannot be a more reaſonable requeſt, than this: Regnet per Reges, per quem regnant Reges.

Specially, ſince this Per of the Rule, will bring them to the Per of Perſiſtence; ſo long as they continue with Him, and He with them, He will continue them and their reignes, and nothing ſhall ſtirre them. But, let goe that, and take them to another Per Me. And I dare not promiſe ought: If any have miſcarried, he hath firſt let his Per goe, and then after was put out of protection: And then, the ſonnes of perdition had power over Him, and his continuance ſoone came to an end.

Take this then, for the fare-well of this point. Sever not Reges from Per Me, and you ſhall never ſever Reges from Regnant: But if they have once loſt their Per Me, marvell not, if they loſe their Regnant not long after.

The Application to the People.

But, this Sermon was made for the people: To them then, I turne. For, as if Princes well weigh this Per Me, they will rule the better: ſo if the people doe the like, they will obey the ſooner. This is ſure: If Per Me Reges regnant, then Per Me populi parent; if from Him the Power of Soveraigntie, by Him alſo the Dutie of Allegiance; which we doe beare them, even for this very Per Me; even therefore becauſe they be of Him. Δι' Αυτῶ (ſaith Salomon, here) Per Ipſum, by Him: Δι' Αυτὸν (ſaith Saint Peter) propter Ipſum, for Him, for His ſake.

1 Pet. 2. 13.

Two points I would commend to you and ſo end: CHRIST it is, that here ſpeaketh: Wiſdome it is, that here ſpeaketh. Since it is CHRIST here ſpeaketh, it is againſt Chriſtian Religion; ſince it is Wiſdome here ſpeaketh, it is folly to hold, to ſay, or to doe the contrary.

For CHRIST: If Per Me Reges be from CHRIST: from whom is the other Per me? Per me rebelles, Per me regicîdæ: from whom they? If By Me Kings reigne, be CHRISTS; By me Kings ſlaine, whoſe Per is that Per? That Per cannot be the Per of any, but of CHRISTS oppoſite: Who is that? Quæ Conventio CHRISTI & Belial? What agreement hath CHRIST and Belial? There he is: You ſee, whoſe brood they be, that goe that way, Even Belial's Brood. He, out of his enmity againſt Per Me, can neither endure Reges nor Regnant; but ſtirres up enemies againſt them both, both Reges and Regnant. Againſt Reges, Regicîdas; to aſſault their perſons: Againſt Regnant, Rebelles; to ſubvert their eſtates.

2 Cor. 6. 15.

John 10. 35.

And, it is He that ſets up this Anti-per, who takes upon him, to looſe this Scripture; to ſever Reges and Regnant: Nay (which is worſe than this) to make Saints and Martyrs of them, Qui vias dant ad delendos Reges, that ſet their wayes to deſtroy Kings, againſt which there is a ſpeciall Caveat in the laſt Chapter of this Booke. But (which is worſt of all: for, though the Rebell be evill, yet the Rebel-maker is farre worſe:) He that raiſeth up this new ſect of Rebel-makers worſe than Rebels themſelves: For, if they be the brood of Belial, Qui vias dant, What ſhall they be, qui vias docent? ſhall not they be Primogeniti Satanæ, Belial's firſt begotten? That ſcore out the way for deſtroying of Kings; tell, by whom, and in what ſort, it is to be proceeded; to make a very method or Agend of it.

Chap. 31. 3.

There is a ſhort reſolution in this Text for all theſe: Seeing it is CHRIST, it muſt be unchriſtian (if not Antichriſtian) to make any ſuch courſe: CHRISTS diſciples they are not; None of His (ſure,) that either put their hand to practiſe it, or their pen, or tongue, to defend it.

And as, if this be CHRIST, it is unchriſtian; ſo, if this be Wiſdome, then is this their courſe, folly; And ſo it is, three wayes.

1. Folly firſt, to ſeeke to ſever Reges and Regnant, from Per Me: it will not be. To thinke, they can ſet themſelves againſt Kings, and yet never have to doe with GOD at all. But, Kings (we ſaid) are in GOD: ſo, they muſt goe through Him, before they can can come at them: they cannot deale with Kings, but they muſt begin with GOD firſt. Gamaliel's poſition is ſound and good: All one to fight with GOD, and that which is of GOD: for, they cannot be ſevered. Acts 5.39.

2. And, if they cannot; to fight againſt GOD, to kicke againſt the pricke, that is folly and madneſſe (I am ſure.) Ye may returne them all for fooles, that goe about it. That thinke with their devices to out-reach Him, whoſe folly is wiſer than their wiſdome. Or by their practices to over-beare Him, whoſe weakneſſe is ſtronger than their ſtrength: He will be too hard for them, doe what they can. Acts 9 5. 1 Cor. 1.25. 1 Cor. 1.25.

3. Specially (which is the third) having had ſo often, ſo certaine experience, that they which have gone about it, ſtill come by the worſe. For, extreme folly muſt it needs be, to begin that, which none that ever yet began, could bring to good end; Which, all that ever yet began, ever came themſelves to an evill end: As, to an evill end have they come, all the packe of them. Theſe foure words have put them all downe.

And (as it falls out) this day, of this folly, wee have Exemplum ſine exemplo: And, in the ſucceſſe thereof, may all the reſt reade their deſtiny. For, by the light of this day, any (that is not blinde) may ſee, that By and through Him, Kings reigne, in that, by and through Him, they, that would have blowen them up, are come to a ſhamefull end. Blow them up, they ſhall not, but blow themſelves downe they ſhall; downe, [a] after Coreh, the ſame way he went: Even to [b] their owne place, with Coreh, and Iudas, to the bottome of hell. That ſo, it may appeare to all the world, ſince this Per Me is Wiſdome, if Wiſdome ſet them up, folly it ſhall be, in them that ſeeke or ſet themſelves to put them downe; to ſubvert, either Reges their perſons, or Regna their States. [a] Num. 16.33. [b] Acts 1.25.

Let Wiſdome then be juſtified of her Children: And ſo many, as love Per Me, love and be friends and take part with both their Perſons, and States. If they be Per Ipſum, By Him, put our Per to His Per, that they may bee, by us, too: We cannot erre (we are ſure) if we keepe the ſame Per, that CHRIST doth. Luke 7.35.

And (to conclude) let this be our laſt dutie: ſince we know Whence they be, we know whither to goe; ſince, By whom they be, to whom to repaire, if we have any buſineſſe concerning them. If we have a good Prince, whom to thanke; if otherwiſe, whom to appeaſe.

But if a good (for to that caſe I returne) never to looke upon Him, but to lift up our eyes withall, to this Per quem. As, to thanke Him, that He hath preſerved him many other times (but ſpecially and above other, this day; him, and his, that is, him and us all:) ſo, duely to pray to Him, that He which reigneth thus by Him (that is, by His appointment) may ſafe, and well, and long reigne by Him (that is, by His protection.) To thanke Him, for Per Me regnat, and to be ſutors to Him, for Per Me regnabit; that He would draw out this Per, and make it a long Per, Per multos annos. That it may ever be (as, in the Text, it is) Regnabit, ſtill; ſtill, in the future, Shall reigne.

Shall reigne out his owne age himſelfe, in perſon (there is one Regnabit.)

Shall reigne in his Iſſue and off-ſpring, and that many ages: (there is another Regnabit.)

Shall reigne, in the life of memory, and a bleſſed remembrance of his time and reigne, and that thorow all ages: (there is a third Regnabit.)

Shall reigne all theſe; And, beyond all theſe, there is another yet, as the laſt, ſo the beſt of all; Shall reigne, all theſe Per Deum, By GOD; and, after all theſe, Shall reigne, Cum Deo, With GOD, in the glory, joy, and bliſſe of His heavenly Kingdome, and that perpetually: which Kingdome ſhall have none end, but be in Sæcula Sæculorum. To which Kingdome I, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the V. of November, A. D. MDCXIIII.

PROVERBS CHAP. XXIV.

Fili mi, &c.

VER. 21. My Sonne, feare thou the LORD, and the KING: and medle not with them that are given to change.

22. For, their destruction ſhall riſe ſuddenly: and who knoweth the destruction of them both?

23. Theſe things alſo belong to the wiſe.

WE begin, this yeare, where we left the laſt. Then By Me Kings reigne: Now, by Me, rerum novarum ſtudioſi, ſeditious perſons, come to ruine and deſtruction. For, that is the ſumme and ſubſtance of this Text. Prov. 8. 15: The Text Anno 1613.

It is a fatherly advice given, by Salomon to his ſonne; Not to medle or make with them that are given to changes. And there was a change; ſuch a change, as never was ſeene, or heard in any age, meant and medled in, this day. So the firſt verſe intereſſed in the Day. The Summe of the Text.

And, this is not a bare advice, and nothing elſe; but, upon a penalty. And that penalty ſet downe, by way of a prophecie. And that prophecie fulfilled, and that penaltie extended; this day, too. So, the ſecond verſe likewiſe. So that, this day, the firſt verſe was juſtified; the wiſdome of the Counſell, that it is wiſe and good: And, this day, the ſecond verſe was verified, the event of the prophecie, that it is certaine and ſure; for deſtruction followed them, that followed not it.

The

The Diviſion. The points in it are, as the verſes are, two: 1 There is an advice, in the former: My Sonne, feare GOD and the King, &c. 2 with a penaltie annexed, in the latter: For, their deſtruction ſhall ariſe ſuddenly, &c.

I. There is in the advice, 1 firſt, a kinde of commending of it. 2 Then, the advice it ſelfe.

1. The commendation ſtands firſt: For, Fili mi, I take to be a commendation. That it is a counſell, a Father would give to his ſonne: And, that is no evill one, we may be ſure. Doe but caſt your eye, over the counſels in this booke, that are given with a Fili mi, you ſhall finde they be de meliore notâ, ſpeciall ones, all very well worth the giving.

2. The advice it ſelfe followes: the maine drift whereof is, A Retentive againſt medling with certaine perſons; perſons, ſuch as this Day brought forth. To feare, and to forbeare. Feare GOD and the King: And Forbeare to have to doe, or deale, with any ſuch. It conſiſts of two counterpoints: a Fac, and a Fuge. Doe this; and eſchew that. The Fac is, Feare GOD, and the King. The Fuge is, Et ne commiſceaveris, Medle not. Follow one, fly the other.

II. Now, it is puniſhment enough for a man, not to follow good counſell, when it is given him: Yet hath GOD ſo ordered, as there goeth (ever) ſome further evill, with the contempt of good counſell. As, with the contempt of this, there goeth a penaltie, no leſſe than deſtruction and ruine: and that, a ſudden deſtruction, and an unknowne ruine. It ſhall ſurprize them on the ſudden: And it ſhall be ſuch withall, as Quis ſcit (ſaith Salomon) Who knowes? (that is) No man knowes, how fearefull. Print well in your minds theſe foure; 1 Deſtruction, 2 ruine, 3 repentè, 4 quis ſcit? They be the quatuor noviſſima of the Text. And, for feare of theſe, feare to medle with theſe ſpirits.

So Salomon ſits here, as a Counſellour; and, as a Iudge. A Counſellour, to adviſe: A Iudge, to pronounce. Heare his counſell, then: If not, heare your ſentence. And chooſe which verſe you will be in. There is no ſcaping them, both. In one of them we muſt be, all. Either in the verſe of counſell: Feare GOD and the King, &c. Or, in the verſe of penultie: For, their deſtruction, &c.

III. The ſhutting up of all, is, Hæc quoque ſapientibus: (So reade it the Seventy, with this verſe;) And ſo, the Fathers all: And not, as now it ſtandeth (with the verſe following.) The meaning is: that, this is no counſell, for fooles: No man ſo wiſe, the wiſeſt man that is, it may well become him to take it. Commonly, they, that medle in theſe matters, want no wit; are wiſe, at leaſt in their owne conceits: therefore (ſay the Seventie) ταῦτα δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν τοῖς σοφοῖς: You, that think you are, and would be taken for wiſe, to you be this ſpoken.

I. The advice. 1 The commendation thereof. From a Father.

I Will ſpeake a few words, of the commendation. Fili mi: It is of a Father, to his Sonne. True and hearty is the counſell of a Father, to his childe.

The very force of naturall affection ſo whetting the wit, as oft, even a ſimple man, will give his childe, no ſimple advice, but found and good. But, if it happen not alwayes to be of the beſt, it is the beſt he had, you may be ſure. There might want braines; the good heart of a Father was not wanting.

And he wiſe. To ſupply that want, I aske ſecondly, who is this Father? I finde, that it is Salomon, that ſpeaketh. One, famous for his wiſdome among the ſonnes of men. One, able to give good counſell, worth the following. And yet (I know not how) they that are are holden for wiſe, other-while give not all the beſt. But it is becauſe they bend not their mindes; and they bend them not, becauſe they reſpect not the parties much, they give it to. But, were it Fili mi, had they to him the heartie true zeale of a Father, it would make them gather their wits together, and helpe it much. That is, if we could get theſe two to meet; the braines of a wiſe-man, and the bowels of a Father: if a Father were Salomon; or if Salomon were a Father: if a father were as wiſe as Salomon, or Salomon could be as kinde as a Father; that, were like to be good counſell indeed. For as a wiſe man, he well could: And, as a Father, he (ſure) would give his beſt. So, none to that. Why, here they be both: This father, is Salomon. The braines of Salomon, and the bowels of a father, both, in it.

What lacke we yet? Somewhat: Wiſe is not all. Wee finde one wiſe, that would not have given this counſell, for he gave it not himſelfe (as might be Achitophel.) None of his wiſdome: away with it: It is devilliſh. No, this is Salomon: not onely wiſe, but godly wiſe, with the wiſdome that is from above: and that is the wiſdome indeed. Godly wiſe. Iames 3.17.

In ſigne it is ſo; ſee, his counſell begins with Feare GOD, the beginning of all true wiſdome, when all is done. And ever the counſell right, that is ſo grounded. If this come to the two former, I ſee not what can be required more. To the commendation of it then, all three meet in it. Here is a 1 Father; the Father is 2 wiſe; wiſe, as 3 Salomon, his wiſdome from the Spirit of GOD. There can be no more. To ſuch a counſell (I truſt) we will give eare. And ſo, I pray you, let us. Prov.1.7.

The Counſell hath in it a 1 Fac, and a 2 Fuge. The Fac, is Feare GOD and the King. There is in it, a ſingle act, and a double object. The ſingle act 1 Feare: The double object 1 GOD, 2 the King. Wee begin with them, as in nature, firſt, Deum & Regem. 2 The Advice it ſelfe. The Fac: 2 Feare GOD and the King.

Where, at the firſt, we ſee (and it is a good ſight to ſee) GOD, and the King, in conjunction. And no marvell, if Rex, quem, and Deus, per quem doe joyne. But joyne they doe, and joyne they may, and yet be in two ſeverall ſentences, or in two ſeverall members of one ſentence. Et would couple them, well enough. Ioyned neerer than ſo, in one and the ſame ſentence: In one, and the ſame member, of one and the ſame ſentence. And in one member they may be too; and yet ſome word betweene them, and not immediatly. Here, ſo immediate, ſo hard one to other, as nothing in the world betweene them, but the Vau, the Et, the very ſoder (as I may ſay) that joynes them thus together. 1 The object, GOD and the King in conjunction. 2 Inter ſe.

All this is but one: but, I obſerve no leſſe than five conjunctions of theſe two great Lights, all within the compaſſe of this Text. 1 Firſt, with one Et. 2 Then in one Time (there is but one Time, betweene them both.) 3 Thirdly, as with one Et: ſo with one Et ne, both; that, is but one, neither. 4 Fourthly, they have but one partie in oppoſition to them both, Shonim. 5 Fifthly, the treſpaſſers againſt them both, שנים have but one end, ruinam utriuſque.

All this, this joyning, thus neere, thus cloſe, immediate thus many wayes; all this is GOD. GOD it is, that thus joyneth Himſelfe, to the King; and the King, to Him. Not onely here, by Salomon, under the Law; but even in the Goſpell alſo, by CHRIST. He joynes Cæſar and GOD too; and (in a manner) as neere; with the ſame Et, and with but one Reddite: and puts them, and their duties, both, in one period. Here, GOD before Cæſar; there, Cæſar before GOD. Matth.22.12.

Now, the nature of thoſe that be joyned by GOD, is ſet downe, by our SAVIOVR, thus. Quod Deus conjunxit: Quod it is; not, quos, or quæ: No more plurall, then: No, but coaleſcunt in unum, they grow together; together into one, one ſingular quod. GODS Conjunction is (ever) of the nature of an Vnion. One Et; One Et ne: One feare betweene them; One oppoſite againſt them. Matth.19.6.

To theſe, thus joyned by GOD, what is our duty? As we find them cloſe joyned to our hands, ſo to keepe them. Firſt, Homo ne ſeparet; not to ſever them at any hand. Nay, Homo ne ſolvat, not to make the knot more ſlacke or looſe. Thinke, it was not for nought; nought, that our SAVIOVR CHRIST ſaid of this Scripture in particular, Non poteſt ſolvi Scriptura. Not, Non diſſolvi: but, non ſolvi. Diſſolvi, the knot looſed quite; but ſolvi, not made more looſe, or ſlacke, than Hee left it. One is oppoſed to the joyning; the other, to the neere joyning of them. Not to doe it, our ſelves: and not to endure them, that are tampering about it. Not the Anabaptiſt, that would put out Et regem, cleane. Not other (little better) that put it out and put it in, at their pleaſure; a King or no King; to be feared, or to feare; faſt or looſe; to joyne, or to ſtand aloofe (as it were in oppoſition, the whole heaven in ſunder:) Timete Reges, the Accuſative; or Timete Reges the Vocative, as falls fitteſt to their turne. Neither to endure them, that would diſſolve it cleane: Nor them, that would faine ſlacken it, to the end, to wring or wedge in a third betweene Deum and Regem. No; let them ſtand; and ſtand, as they be left: unlooſed, unlooſened; Deum & Regem. They that fall to be changers (after) in the Text, begin their change (ever) at this; at tranſpoſing, or interpoſing ſomewhat, betweene Deum & Regem. Therefore, looke to this well. This, for the firſt conjunction inter ſe, betweene themſelves.

John 10.35.

b Their conjunction in Time.

Then are they joyned againe in aliquo tertio, in a third: Time. Why, in Time? Indeed, our SAVIOVR CHRISTS Quæ Cæſaris, is more ample a great deale: many things contained in it, beſides. Of thoſe many, this is but one; but, this is one. And this one (here) is made choyce of, becauſe it falls fitteſt, to the purpoſe in hand.

2. The Act.

The purpoſe is, to reſtraine from medling. Now, feare is more reſtrictive, than honour, or any of the reſt. The Philoſopher calls it φιμὸς φύσεως, the paſſion, that holds (as it were) the reines of our nature, to checke us, and keepe us backe, from that which is hurtfull; to which (otherwhile) we are but too inclinable. As namely, there is a ſpirit in us: And that ſpirit (ſaith Saint Iames) luſts after envie: And envie is, at our Superiours, toward whom (even the ſupremeſt of them) men ſtand not (alwayes) in ſo good termes, as were fit. Nay, ſo farre forget themſelves, ſometimes (witneſſe this Day) as they fall to change; change with a witneſſe, change them into aſhes; put fire to them, and blow up King, and all. Here needs a Retentive: Feare, is fit for that. Therefore it is feare: Feare GOD and the King.

Iames 4.5.

Feare GOD.

Of [feare GOD] we ſhall ſoone agree, that He is to be feared: I would to GOD, we would, with as great accord, agree to doe it, as wee will eaſily agree, it is to be done: that ſo, it might be with us, as with holy Iob it was, Vt timor noſter, ſpes noſtra, from our feare might grow our hope; the true hope, when all is done. Even that, which riſeth from feare, which makes us refraine to doe evill, and ſo breeds in us, the hope of all hopes, the hope of a good conſcience.

Iob 4. 6.

GOD, And the King.

But feare GOD is not all. Et Regem, And the King: him we muſt feare, too. In water and bloud (ſaith Saint Iohn:) not in water onely, but in water and bloud. So here: GOD and the King: not GOD alone; but GOD and the King. Non ſufficit unum; oportet utrumque fieri, in Copulativis.

a Iohn 5. 6.

Hence riſeth the ſecond conjunction. As before of GOD, and the King: ſo here now, of the feare of GOD, and the feare of the King. And even the ſame benigne aſpect that is betweene GOD and the King, the ſame is there betweene the two feares: the very ſame, every way.

They be Cúσαλα, compatible (as we ſay in Schooles:) they will ſtand together, goe together, hold together, well. They hinder not one the other. By the grace of GOD, we may doe both. Both, be regall and religious too. We ſhall not feare the King a whit the leſſe, for fearing GOD: Nor (vice verſâ) GOD the leſſe, for fearing the King.

Not the leſſe? Nay the more. For, they be not onely Cúσαλα, but Cυνίσαλα: not onely, a joynt and mutuall conſiſtence betweene them, but a joynt and mutuall aſſiſtance, either of other. Not onely, not hinder, but further; nor endure, but induce one the other. So that, that which is (here) Et Deum; is (elſe-where) Propter Deum. And not onely with GOD, but for GOD, we feare the King.

1 Pet. 2. 13.

And, though Regem ſtand laſt, be (as we ſay) ultimum in executione, yet is it there

(here, in this place) primum in intentione: The ſequell ſhewes it. For, when he comes to the Et ne (marke it well) the point of oppoſition, He ſaith not, Medle not with irreligious perſons, Atheiſts, ſuch as feare not GOD (ſo he ſhould, if Time Deum had beene principally meant:) No, but Medle not, with the Seditious. Now, they (wee know) are moſt properly oppoſite, to the King. The feare of GOD hath elſe-where his chiefe place, many times and oft. But, here, Time Regem is primæ intentionis, the very marke, all this Text levels at.

Then, why is it not Time Regem and no more adoe, and leave out Time Deum quite; For, what hath GOD to doe here, in matter of this kinde, of Sedition? Not ſo: There is reaſon, Time Deum ſhould be in, and firſt in. In the point of Allegiance, he that will lay his ground ſure, it behoveth him (as Gregory ſpeaketh) arceſſere rivum Fidelitatis, de fonte pietatis, to draw downe the ſtreame of allegiance from the true conduit-head of it, the feare of GOD: If, thence it come not, it is minus habens, not as it ſhould be. For, if it be right, Time Regem is to come, out of Time Deum.

Marke this method well: to have Regall duties rightly ſetled, he goes up as high as GOD; beginnes with Time Deum, the feare of GOD. And, thither we muſt, if we ſhall goe ſoundly to worke. It is not the Common-Law, or any Act of Parliament, that breeds Time Regem, kindly. If our feare to the King, be taught us by the law of man, it is not yet upon his true baſe, his right corner-ſtone. To Divinitie we muſt; to this Booke, the Booke of the feare of GOD; if it be right, ground it there. And, if that might take place, there ſhould need no law elſe, to ſuſtaine or preſerve Kings or States. But. feare GOD firſt.

Set this downe then for a rule: that, there is no Surer friend, no Surer ſtay to Kings, and their rights, than Time Deum (that is) true Religion. And ſet downe this with it: that, it is a ſure ſigne of a good Religion, if it will joyne with Time Regem (the dutie to the Prince) well. For, if it be a true Time Deum, it ſtrengthens Time Regem; it weakens it not.

And on the other; that it is an infallible note of a bad one; if, either it ſhoulder the King from GOD, or ſhrinke up the ſinewes of civill obedience.

But, if it make Time Deum, to blow up Time Regem; make the Catholike faith, to overthrow the Catholike feare of GOD (for, both I truſt, be alike Catholike;) if they perſwade men, that the King, and the whole Parliament muſt up, or the feare of GOD cannot ſtand: they are out of this Text quite: they are cleane beſide Time Deum, as it was in Salomons time: teach a new feare of GOD, falſely ſo called, without this Booke altogether.

But, what is become of Time Regem, with them? Sure, they that feare not, to blow up the King, I will never ſay, they feare the King: they that put men, in their Amphitheatrum Honoris, nay, in their Martyrologie, or Kalendar of Martyrs, for not fearing to attempt it, it is a ſtrange feare, they teach; Indeed, rather Time Rex, than Time Regem.

And, another ſort there is, not come ſo farre; with whom (yet) Time Deum & Regem is not, as it would be: that feare (I know not how) as if the feare of the King did abate ſomewhat, from the feare of GOD; and there were no true feare of GOD, without ſome mixture of contempt of order and government. But, if one can grow ſomewhat bold, ſomewhat too bold with Kings, to teach them their duties; and feare not to ſpeake evill of ſuch as are in authoritie, then (loe) he feares GOD aright. And, Iude 8. none of the Clergie feares GOD, but they that uſe it. Nor none of the Laitie, but ſuch as beare them in it. And theſe two are the onely Feare-GODS, in the Land. Others, that thinke, they may doe both, and would gladly doe both, may not be allowed to feare GOD on the right faſhion; They feare the face of man. And thus, Ier. 1. 8. with their new feare of GOD, they put out of countenance the feare of the King. As if, theſe feares caſt out one another; and one could not be in at the former, but of neceſſitie, he muſt be out at the later. What is this, but to make a disjunctive (at the leaſt) betweene them?

Rom.13.7. But you (beloved) never feare to doe as Saint Paul wils you: Cui timorem, timorem, to give feare, to whom feare belongeth; and, to the King it belongs, as here we see.
Psal.82.6. He that ſaid Ego dixi, Dii eſtis, in ſo ſaying, ſaid, Et ſicut Dii, timendi eſtis. Therefore, Nemo timeat timere Regem, let no man be afraid to feare the King, and yet feare GOD too. You may doe both; you muſt doe both. The Text is ſhort, but full, in this point. For, Time Deum; that is, be a good Chriſtian: and, Time Regem; that is, be a good Subject. And, the better Chriſtian, the better Subject.

But indeed, I have not done well in ſpeaking of them all this while, as of two feares. There is but one Time, in the Text. If you ſtrike it out from Regem, you ſtrike it out from Deum, too. For, there is but one in all, And they conſequently to be feared, not with two, but with one and the ſame feare, both.

This, for the conjunction: which (I wiſh) we may endevour by all meanes to maintaine. For, beſides the offence to GOD and His feare, It is a preparative to the change (which here followeth) to ſever GOD from the King, or the King from the Kingdome; to force them one from the other, that GOD hath ſo ſtraightly united together: hath Himſelfe, and would have us to doe the like. And now, after wee have done with the Fac, and the conjunction, let us come to the Fuge and the oppoſition.

a The Fuge, And medle not, &c. Feare GOD then and the King, wherein? In many other points; but (to hold us to the Text) in this namely, that you medle not with theſe following. And, even by this, yee may take meaſure, whether you feare them or no, by your fearing to joyne with ſuch, as this day brought forth. For, if yee joyne with them, yee oppoſe ſtraight to both thoſe: not to the King alone, but to GOD; to His feare, as well as the Kings. Indeed, to the feare of them both. For, to both, are theſe here ſet in oppoſition. It is not Feare the King (alone) and medle not with them; but, GOD is in too, as well as the King.

Nor, it is not, feare GOD and the King, and then over againe, with two for two; and medle not, either with irreligious, or ſeditious perſons: but, with ſeditious, onely. Sedition is joyntly oppoſed to both; and no leſſe to GOD, than the King. To either, in equall oppoſition.

I note here, no leſſe than foure oppoſitions beſides the Et ne; as before, foure conjunctions beſide the Et. Againſt the King: 2 Againſt GOD: 3 Againſt both: 4 Againſt the feare of both. 1. The King. For, it is (this medling) a treſpaſſe at common Law, againſt him, his crowne, and dignitie. 2. GOD: for it is a ſinne alſo againſt GODS Law, againſt Heaven and Him: Not onely, theſe on Earth, Læſæ Majeſtatis: to GODS Majeſtie no leſſe than the Kings. 3. Both Deum & Regem; For, it is directly againſt both Tables: And againſt the two firſt and great Commandements of both Tables. 4. And, being a ſinne againſt feare, it will pricke faſt toward preſumption; and, that is a high ſinne: If that once get the dominion over any, he ſhall not be innocent from the great Offence. So, againſt the 1 King, 2 GOD, 3 Both, the 4 Feare of both.
Matth.22.38. Pſal.19.13.

But, by this, cleare it is, who ever they be, that medle with theſe, eo ipſo they feare not GOD. Directly: for, if the Commandement be, Feare GOD, and medle not; one cannot doe both; both be a medler, and yet feare GOD, though. He cannot ſay (with the medlers of this day) Yes, yes: medle with the Powder plot, and yet be a good Catholike, and feare GOD well enough for all that. Nay, feare GOD the better; and be the better reputed of, you know where, for this very medling.

But, that in this point we may proceed to purpoſe, we are to ſee firſt, 1 who be theſe Shonim, שנים: 2 And then, what it is to medle with them.

What theſe Changers be The word in the originall, is very pregnant, and plenteous in ſignification; which hath made divers turne it diverſly. The Vulgar turnes it Cum detractoribus, ſuch as detract from Princes: and well. Ours, before, was With the ſeditious: and, it was well ſo. Now, we reade, With them that are given to change: And, that is well too. For, all are in it; and well may ſo be. For, Detractours, Changers, Seditious, all come to one.

Detractours,

Detractors. For they that in the end prove to be ſeditious (marke them well) they be firſt detractors: Or (as the nature of the Hebrew word is) Biters. It is, of Shen, a tooth; they have teeth in their tongues. Ever, the firſt thing that moves to a ſedition, is Shemei's tongue. As at firſt, it did (ſedition;) ſo doth it ſtill, begin in the gainſaying, in the contradiction of Coreh. So began he: This Moſes, and this Aaron, they take too much upon them, doe more than they may by law; they would have ſomewhat taken from them. So Abſalom: Here is no body to doe any juſtice in the Land. So Ieroboam; LORD, what a heavie yoke is this on the Peoples neckes! Meddle not with theſe Detractors. 1. Detractors. 1 Sam. 16. 7. Iude 11. Numb. 16. 3. 2 Sam. 15. 3. 1 Kings 12. 4.

Then ſecondly, when they have made the ſtate preſent naught, no remedie, we muſt have a better for it; and ſo, a change, needs. What change? Why, Religion, or the Church-government, or ſomewhat (they know not well what) ſtands awrie. Yee ſhall change your religion (ſaid they of this Day) and have one for it, wherein for your comfort, you ſhall not underſtand a word (not you of the People) what you either ſing, or pray: and for variety, you ſhall change a whole Communion, for an halfe. Now a bleſſed exchange, were it not? 2. Changers.

What ſay ſome other? You ſhall change for a fine new Church-government: A Presbyterie would doe much better for you, than an Hierarchie: And (perhaps) not long after, a government of States, than a Monarchie. Medle not with theſe Changers.

Now thirdly, whom you finde thus magnifying of changes, and projecting new plots for the People, be ſure, they are in the way to ſedition. For (marke it) they doe ſedire, that is, ſeorſim ire, goe aſide; they have their meetings apart, about their new alteration. Now, of ſedire comes ſedition, ſide-going. For, if that be not looked to in time, the next newes is, the blowing of a trumpet, and Sheba's proclamation, We have no part in David. It begins in Shemei, it ends in Sheba. But ſo, at laſt, all (ye ſee) comes to one: Shonim all. 3. Seditious. 2 Sam. 20. 1.

And now to the Medlers. But firſt will you obſerve, here are two ſorts in the Text, 1 they that medle; and 2 they, with whom they medle. The Seditious (that is) the contriver of the treaſon; and the Medlers (that is) his complices. And that it is not, Be not your ſelfe ſeditious: but, medle not with ſuch as bee. Be not the authour, or ring-leader; but, be no fautour of them, have no part or fellowſhip in the buſineſſe, Ne commiſcearis, be not a mixt traytour: For, mixt and pure, both are naught. What, the Medlers.

As for them, that are in it at the maine (as they ſay) he doth not ſo much as once ſpeake of them: Of them, there is no queſtion. Onely, directs his ſpeech to them, that are brought in on the By. Tells them, in ſo being, they are as deepe in as the others. No acceſſory here: as is the Seditious, ſo is the Medler: Author, and Fautor, all alike. Alike, firſt: For, both without the feare of GOD and all religion, alike. Alike againe: For, lyable to the ſame penaltie after, ruinam utriuſque.

Well now, What is it to medle, this Commiſceri? I would note two things to you out of it: 1 The nature of the word, 2 and the extent.

The nature, I take to be worth a note. Commiſcearis, is a mixture; What manner of mixture is it? Out of the Hebrew word, it properly betokens that mixture or medley, that is, of the light with the darkneſſe after the Sun-ſet, in crepuſculo, in the Owle-light (as we call it. That, is Ereb properly: (Thence commeth the Poets Erebus: ye know, what that is.) Now this, in very deed, is rather a confuſion, than a mixture: and might well have beene turned Ne confundaris, Be not confounded together, they and you; or (as Saint Peter ſpeakes) Runne not together with them to the ſame confuſion. So, a confuſed mixture it is, or a mixture to confuſion. 1 The Nature of Ne commiſcearis. 1 Pet. 4. 4.

You ſhall ſee, it is a word well choſen. Take it of the perſons, and a confuſed mixture it is. For, even the children of light (not alwayes ſo wiſe in their generation) that is, ſome plaine meaning men are ſometimes drawne in too, by ſome illuſion or other, to medle and to joyne with theſe Sonnes of darkneſſe. As, ſome went with Abſalom to the paying of his vow in ſimplicitie, and were in before they were aware. For, being 2 Sam. 15. 11.

there with him, they muſt doe as he did. Iuſt the medley of the Phariſees, and Iohn's Diſciples.

2 Or take it, of the plot it ſelfe. In it alſo, ſuch a mixture there is; for, they want not ſome gliſtering pretences, as it were a falſe light, caſt on the plot. But, goe to the bottome of it, and there it is Caligo tenebrarum, the very dungeon of darkneſſe: and, well, ſo; as being wrought in a darke cellar, under ground, by the ſonnes of Erebus, in the skirts of Erebus it ſelfe.

3 Or, looke to the carriage of it: there, ſhall you plainly diſcover, a very blending of light with darkneſſe, of the oath of GOD, with the worke of the Devill: the Sacrament of godlineſſe, with the myſterie in the Whores forehead, of all abomination; of the looſing from leſſer ſinnes, with the binding to a greater. Maſhing together holy duties, with lewd practices; and not mingling, but confounding oathes, Sacraments, abſolutions, with the workes of Ereb, or Erebus, of the blackneſſe, and of the darkneſſe of Hell it ſelfe.

1 Tim. 3. 16. Apoc. 17. 5.

2. The extent of it. Now, of the Extent: Medle not. How many wayes may one be, or be ſaid to be a medler? That may hee many wayes; as many, as one may be partaker of another mans ſinnes. 1. By being a Champion or leader for them; as Ioab to Adonijah. 2. By being Spokeſman, or Orator for them; as Ieroboam, to his crue. 3. By blowing the trumpet, animating them, ſetting them on; as Sheba to his. 4. By giving them ſhrewd advice, how to manage their matters; as did Achitophel to Abſalom. 5. By ſaying Maſſe, praying for their ſucceſſe: that was all, Abiathar could doe. 6. By bruiting infamous ſpeeches or libels of David: that was all, that Shemei. 7. By harbouring, or receiving them; as the Citie Abel did Sheba, and ſhould have beene ſacked for it. 8. By furniſhing them with money or ſupplyes otherwiſe, (as it might be, contributing to the powder:) as the men of Sichem, to Abimelech. 9. By that, which Salomon calleth hand in hand, that is, digging with the pickaxe, co-operating with them, in the Vault. 10. By being (if not party, yet) privie to it, and not oppoſing; as David had beene to Saul's death, if he had not hindered Abiſhai: Non obſtans. 11. Or, at the leaſt, privie, and not diſcloſing it; which had beene Mardochai's caſe, if he had concealed the Eunuch's treaſon: Non manifeſtans. 12. And laſt, (which I take, to be full out as bad, if not much worſe than any of the reſt) by ſpeaking or writing, in praiſe or defence, either of the deed or the doers; their caſe, Num. 16. 47. calling Coreh, and his company, the people of the LORD: for ſure, if the conſenter be in; the commender much more.

1 King. 1. 7. 1 King. 12. 4. 2 Sam. 20. 1. 2 Sam. 16. 21. 1 King. 1. 7. 2 Sam. 16. 7. 2 Sam. 20. 14. Iudg. 9. 4. Prov. 11. 21. 1 Sam. 26. 9. Eſther 2. 22.

All theſe make up this medley. To theſe, or any of theſe, well may it be ſaid, Ne commiſcearis. Now I know, degrees there be, in mixture; more or leſſe: but, here is no degree. Onely, Ne commiſcearis, ſimply. Not, in no great quantitie: but, not in the leaſt ſcruple, not at all. It is ranke poiſon; the leaſt drop of it is deadly. Never ſo little is too much.

Therefore, abſolutely, Ne commiſcearis; Medle not with them at all: not with abſolving them, not with giving them the oath, not with praying for them; above all, not with offering the unbloudy ſacrifice, for ſo bloudy a treaſon. Iacob's counſell is beſt: In conſilium eorum ne veniat anima tua, not to come once among them. To ſeparate your ſelves from the tents of Coreh, touching whom, you know, what GOD gave in charge, and what Moſes proclaimed, Away from them, come not neere them, touch not any thing that is theirs. It is infected; they have the plague; if you medle with it, it will bring you to deſtruction.

Gen. 49. 6. Num. 16. 26.

II.

The Penaltie. So are we come to the ſecond Verſe, to the penalty. And, it is not more than needs. 1. For ſure, even good counſell enters but ſlowly into us (we are ſo dull,) if it have not an edge given it: be not ſeconded with ſome forcible reaſon, to helpe it forward. 2. Now, no reaſon more forcible, or of better edge to enter us, than that, which is taken from the feare of ſome great miſchiefe or maine inconvenience, which will ſurely take hold of us, if we take not hold of the counſell. 3. And, as none more forcible, ſo ſo none more fit for the preſent counſell: It is, to feare. Now, to induce feare, what way more fit, than to ſet before us, ſome matter of terrour, ſome fearefull object or conſequent, it will bring us to. And what more fearefull, than of all the five fearefull things ſet downe by the Philoſoper, the moſt fearefull (that is) the feare of death? This? Why it workes with beaſts, and even with the dulleſt of them, Balaam's beaſt; ſpurre him, ſtrike him, lay on him with a ſtaffe, ye ſhall never get him to run upon the Angels ſword, upon his owne death; that ſhall ye never. Sure, we are to thinke: His firſt commandement GOD headed with the beſt head, He had; and that was Morte morieris. Hee thought it the ſureſt, and moſt likely to prevaile. And, if any thing hold us, this will. If ye feare neither GOD, nor King; yet feare this. Num. 22. 23.

1. But yet, if we weigh the word [deſtruction] there is more in it, than death. To death we muſt all come; but this, it will bring you to an untimely end. Not fall of your ſelfe; but deſtroyed: even plucked downe, a great while before you would fall. 1 Deſtruction.

2. Nay, nor it is not untimely death, neither: there is more in it than ſo (in deſtruction.) All that die before their time, are not deſtroyed: GOD forbid. No: there goeth ſome evill touch, ſome ſhame, ſome foule uncouth end (ever) with it; that is it, that makes it deſtruction.

3. But what manner deſtruction? Some may be reſtored, and built againe: This is ad ruinam (that, is added in the latter part of the Verſe) to ruine: So that, never built againe; never repaired more: that is, to utter deſtruction. 2 Nay, Ruine.

4. And yet, there is more ſtill. For, theſe two, (1 ruine, and 2 deſtruction) they be not uſed of a perſon, properly: but, as the word gives, of an houſe, or ſtructure. Adde this then, that it will be the ruine and plucking downe, not of your ſelfe alone, but of your houſe too. And (indeed) how many great Houſes have beene ruined by it?

Then, if this will not hold you from medling; that it is a ſinne, a double ſinne, againſt both Tables; that it is a ſinne of preſumption: if this will not; let this, that it is deſtructory, a deſtroying ſinne; one of thoſe ſinnes, that followes them, that meddle with it, hard at the heeles, and never leaves them, till it have brought them to deſtruction and utter ruine: them, and their whole Houſe, it eradicates; it pulls all up by the roots. Sinne it ſelfe is a Nimium: yet, is there a Nimium, in ſinne too. O be not over wicked (ſaith the Preacher) be not too too fooliſh, ſo very wicked, ſo over-fooliſh, as to ſhorten your owne dayes, to make you die tempore non ſuo, before your time come: yea, to be deſtroyed utterly, you, your houſe and all. Sure, if this come of it, he bade you not feare, for nought.

Nay, this is not all; he goes further. Of all Retentives, feare; of all feares, the feare of death; death, and deſtruction. Now, of all deſtructions, this: (for, all deſtructions are not of one ſize neither: ſome more fearefull, than other.) But this, this is no common one: it hath two attendants, to make it more fearefull than the ordinary deſtructions or viſitations of other men. The former two, as it were manacles for the hands; not to have a hand in it: Theſe latter, as fetters to the feet; not to goe about it. But ſtill it runnes upon two; as it were, one for the King, another for GOD, ſtill.

This is the firſt: Their deſtruction, it ſhall riſe ſuddenly. Every word hath his weight (if you marke them.) It ſhall riſe: fitly. For, Sedition, we call it a riſing: one riſing, He puniſheth with another. Riſe, it is; not Surget, but conſurget: as early up, riſe as ſoone, as the Sinne it ſelfe. From the firſt moment of ſinne, their deſtruction: riſes with it, followeth it at the heeles; is ſtill hard behinde it; if they could looke backe, and ſee it, it is not an inch from them. 3 And that, ſuddenly.

2. Riſe, and riſe ſuddenly. Let death come ſuddenly upon them at unawares (it is Davids prayer:) and ſo ſhall it come (it is Salomons prophecie:) come, ab improviſo, breake forth, and ſurprize them in a very ſudden. Fitly, this too: Their meaning was, to have diſpatched all of a ſudden: As ſoone as the paper burne, the powder goe off. Quicke and ſudden ſurprizing therefore, doth beſt befit them: the puniſhment, in every point comes home to the ſinne. Pſal. 55. 15.

3. Sudden things confound, and are therefore the more fearefull. Fit, this againe; theſe would have brought all to confuſion (what a confuſion had there beene this day?) Meet therefore they ſhould be amazed with the ſuddenneſſe of the breaking out; and the confuſion they meant, fall upon their owne ſoules.

4 And eternally Et ruinam eorum quis ſcit.

4. But, what manner of confuſion? The word he uſes in Hebrew, ſheweth that: It is properly, the confuſion they are in, that are in a thicke miſt or fogge; that, after they have beene a while in it, are they know not where; and when they come out of it, finde themſelves where they never meant to have come.

This fits likewiſe: In a miſt they walkt; carried their matters miſtily: and at laſt, loſt themſelves in it: In darkneſſe they delighted (darke vaults, darke cellars) and darkneſſe fell upon them for it. And when they were out of their darke vault, found themſelves in a darke priſon; which they little thought ever to have come in.

It doth very well (this ſuddenneſſe) ſet out to us, the courſe and carriage of this ſinne. It will flatter one, and draw him on, a great while. All things will ſeeme ſo ſubtilly contrived, ſo cunningly carried, ſo ſecretly kept, and ſo long; commonly, till the very time, it ſhould be done in: And then, even on a ſudden, all breakes out; and that, ſtrangely; and all the goodly cobweb, that was ſo many moneths in ſpinning and weaving, comes me a broome, and in a minute ſnaps it downe and deſtroyes it quite: the cobweb, and the ſpider; the plot it ſelfe, and the author and all. To have their treaſon kept in, ſo many proroguings of the Parliament; their cellar, ſo fitly choſen; their powder, ſo ſafely laid in, and ſo well couched; and all in a readineſſe: and then, ἐξάπινης, in a night, ſuddenly to have all come forth, ſo ſtrangely; and all their long conſultations and often deliberations quaſhed all, in a moment! Their deſtruction ſhall riſe ſuddenly, this is the firſt.

But this is nothing to the other, Et ruinam eorum quis ſcit? That, that is the fearefull one, indeed. For, nothing ſo fearefull, as that, a man cannot tell what to make of it. Who knowes their ruine? Who knowes? that is, no man knowes. Good Lord! what might that ruine be, that no man knowes? No man knowes? Why, doe wee not all know, what it is they ſuffer, that come to this deſtruction? they are drawne, hanged, &c. we all know it. It is rather, quis neſcit? than quis ſcit? (this) one would thinke.

No: Quis ſcit? (ſaith Salomon) and he knew well what he ſaid. It is unknowne, their ruine: what then ſhall we make of it? Sure, no deſtruction, here. All here, the worſt is knowne of them. It muſt be ſome otherwhere, in ſome other world, than this. And ſo it is. And that is quis ſcit? indeed: That, no man knowes. For, it is as truly ſaid of the paines of Hell, as of the joyes of Heaven, quis ſcit? Eye hath not ſeene, 1 Cor. 2. 9. nor eare heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man, what, or how great they be: the one, not ſo joyfull, but the other as dreadfull: Vnknowne, both: Quis ſcit? equally true of both. For, Nemo ſcit, niſi qui accepit, Apoc. 2. 17. no man knowes them, but they that be in them.

And it were well, when they medle firſt with it, they would bethinke them of this. If a man might know before-hand, it were this, or it were that, or it were we know what; then it were not ſo fearefull. But quis ſcit? goeth beyond all conceit. But they doe, they know not what: and ſo they ſuffer, they know not what. The meaning is: they periſh here, they periſh everlaſtingly: that this deſtruction is eternall deſtruction, and no other.

And indeed, the latter word ſheweth as much: which is not every ruine, but (properly) the ruine, or fall into a fire: it is taken from לפיד, that is, a burning fire-brand. This alſo is fit: Fire they meant, and they end in fire; even in Hell-fire. For, ſo is the nature of the word; and ſo is the Hebrew proverb upon it, לפיד לא מריום: It is a ruine, from which there is no redemption. It is a fall, or ruine, from whence no riſing. A fall, into the bottomleſſe pit, into the furnace there: if they once come there, they never come thence. So, it comes ſuddenly; but, it lights heavily. They know not, when it comes; but, when it comes, it payes home. When the miſt breakes up, they finde themſelves among the fire-brands there. And if nothing elſe will, let this move them.

And utriuſque we may not leave out. It is added, to make ſure worke. For, if it had had not, it might have beene imagined, that theſe foure noviſſima had beene to come upon them only, that feare not GOD: That there be no miſtaking, in the reference to whom, it is expreſly ſet done, utriuſque Horum; it is, upon both of them; one, as well as the other: as well of thoſe, that fault in their dutie toward the King; as thoſe, that are void of the feare of GOD. And againe, as well thoſe, that medle or make; as thoſe, with whom they medle or make, the plotters themſelves. Both of them, in the ſame condemnation: Both come to the ſame deſtruction. So, as we finde GOD and the King joyned, in one feare, at the firſt; So, here, finde wee againe the treſpaſſers againſt either, wrapped up in one deſtruction, at the laſt. Ruinam one end, utriuſque of them both. And, ſuch end may ever come of ſuch beginnings.

III. The Concluſion. Theſe things belong to the wiſe.

And thus (now) he knits up all, ταῦτα δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν τοῖς σοφοῖς, Be this ſpoken even to you that be wiſe. For, Solomon's owne Sonne (indeed) was no very wiſe man. So, it might ſeeme (perhaps) to be given to him (this counſell) and ſuch as he was, none of the wiſeſt: Fooles may not medle; Wiſe men may. Now (commonly) they be no fooles, want no wit; they thinke, they beare a braine, that medle in theſe matters. Therefore, is this addition; to ſhew, that how wiſe ſoever they take themſelves, or be they never ſo wiſe, it may well become them, to take this advice here. Hæc quoque ſapientibus: it concernes them too.

There was one, as wiſe, as ever they will be, whoſe counſell (in his time) was holden as the Oracle of GOD: Yet, this great wiſe man, for medling in this, contrary to it, proved but a foole, and made up the number of thoſe that came to this untimely, and unknowne ruine and deſtruction. And now, where he is, we know; what he ſuffers, we know not. It was Achitophel, I meane. 2 Sam. 16. 23.

And ſtrange it is, that is obſerved of his name. For, Tophel is a foole: And, Achi is a couſin germane at the leaſt, if it be not neerer. So, as wiſe as he was, his name was ominous, and gave him to be (as he proved) germanus ſtulti; a wiſe man, but, of whom a foole might have claimed kindred: As, of him, he might; and, of all, he may, that medle as he did. This Achitophel, as wiſe as he takes himſelfe, he ſhall be the wiſer if he take this counſell.

The Application to the Day.

We have done with the Text, now: The Day will hold us yet a little. For, the Day ſubſcribes probatum eſt to this Text, and ſets a ſeale to it.

Thus it ſhall be (ſaith Salomon.) But, was it thus? Aske the Day, and it will aske you, was it not thus? was not this Scripture this Day fulfilled, not in our eares, but in our eyes (indeed in both?) Was there not an execution of this ſentence upon it? Did not Salomon ſhew himſelfe to be, not onely a wiſe man, but a Prophet, and that a true one? Luke 4. 21.

This Day was delivered, and brought forth certaine ſonnes: You have heard what the Father hath ſaid to his ſonnes; will ye ſtay a little and heare, what the ſons will ſay to their Father; take his counſell or no. No: theſe ſonnes were wiſer, than their Father; ſaw deeper (as they thought) into the matter, than Salomon; thought not him wiſe enough, to adviſe them. Not him; but got them an heape of new Fathers, that gave them other manner counſell; even to trie a concluſion with Salomon, upon this Text.

Will yee heare ſome new Divinitie, how ſome Fathers here with us counſelled their ghoſtly children: the Fathers of the Societie, their ſonnes of the Societie, the wicked Societie of this day? You ſhall ſee the Text turn'd round about, cleane contrarie.

My Sonnes feare GOD and the Pope (ſo is the new edition:) and as for thoſe that would faine change things here, doe, medle with them, ſay Salomon what he liſt. Ecce major Salomone, Loe a greater than Salomon (you know where.) He (as, yet, it ſtands in the gloſſe to be ſeene) made this booke of Proverbs authenticall, by citing it: and, as he made it, can unmake it againe at his pleaſure. Nothing in it ſhall binde you. Here is the counſell croſſed. Matth. 12. 42.

But then, how ſhall we doe with the latter verſe ? For that, take no thought: where he tels you (this Salomon) of deſtruction, it is nothing ſo : On with your Powder-plot notwithſtanding. You ſhall be ſo farre from this (he tels you) that, if ought come to the plot or you, otherwiſe than we wiſh, it ſhall be no deſtruction : no, but a holy martyrdome, And quis ſcit ? who knowes the bleſſed eſtate you ſhall come to by theſe meanes ? but, Martyrs you ſhall be ſtraight upon it, in print : And who knowes, whether there may not be wrought a ſtraw-miracle, to confirme as much if need be ?

But to put you cleane out of doubt, for your medling : you ſhall have of us the Fathers of the Societie to medle in it, as well as you ; to make up this holy medley with you. To confeſſe you, to abſolve you, to ſweare you, to hounzle you, to ſay Maſſe for you, and to keepe your counſell in all holy equivocation. You ſee, what worke was made ; how the matter was uſed with this Scripture when time was : how the Fathers of the Societie tooke this Father by the beard, and affronted him and his counſell, in every part of it.

What ſhall wee ſay of theſe Sonnes and theſe Fathers ? Sure, their Catholike faith we will not medle with ; but, what Salomon ſaith, we may be bold to ſay, and pronounce, Feare of GOD there was none in them : neither in the father, nor in the ſonne. Neither in them, that gave the counſell ; nor in them, that tooke it. None of them, GODS ſervants : Him, they feared not : None of them, Salomons ſonnes ; him, they heard not.

But, of the twaine, the fathers, that gave the counſell, farre the worſe : who, what Salomon termes deſtruction, that turned they into edification : and, what he ruine, that changed they into exaltation ; & gloriam utriuſque quis ſcit ? A ſtrange change : that, now become glorious, that, before theſe dayes, was ever damned as deteſtable ! Changers right : change States, and change Churches, ſo long, till they change Divinitie and all ; ſet up a new feare of GOD, a fearefull one to Kings and to Kingdomes ; and that had like, this Day, to have coſt many a thouſand mens lives.

And needs there not a retentive, when theſe coine ſuch motives ? when that, which by Father Salomon (here) is ſo ſtraightly forbidden, is juſtified, nay, is ſanctified, and glorified, by theſe Anti-paters, Anti-Salomons, Anti-greater-than-Salomon : they ?

Well, looke to the end. See, what became of this ſanctified Sedition. Sure, here Salomon was in the right : read their deſtiny truely. For, ſurpriſed they were, and blancked all of a ſudden ; and that, ſtrangely ; and carried away ſtraight to their utter ruine : And their ruine who knoweth ? Not their ruine here, or fall from the ladder ; but a greater ruine, and into a deeper place : How low, into what torments, quis ſcit ? (ſaith Salomon) and ſo ſay I. Their end (here) we ſaw : their end, who knowes ? Or, how they hang in hell for it ? And all, for not following this advice.

To draw to an end : their ruine we know not ; that, is quis ſcit ? But, by their ruine, who knowes not ; that is, quis neſcit ? For, all men ſee and know, how highly theſe medlings diſpleaſe GOD, who hath ſo many wayes, ſo ſtrangely, both of old and of late, and ſtill doth teſtifie to the world plainely, His deepe diſlike of them : that a wonder it is, that (ſtill) there are, that dare adventure upon them ; ſave that, GOD, for want of His true feare in their hearts, ſuffers this efficacie of errour, this ſtrange deluſion to beſot them.

But, let them take this from Salomon ; that, toties quoties, ſo oft as they ſeeke to Mica 3.10. build Sion in bloud, ſo oft ſhall their building end in deſtruction : and ſo oft as they riſe to that end, they ſhall riſe to their ruine : fathers, and ſonnes, and ſonnes-ſonnes, to the end of the world.

But, we (Beloved) who have better learned to feare GOD (I truſt) if Salomon ſhall acknowledge us for his ſonnes, or GOD for His ſervants ; if we will be the children of Matth.13.9. Wiſdome, let Wiſdome be juſtified of her children. Let us do Salomon the honour, to think him wiſe enough, to give us counſell. And ſince we ſee, he is proved a Prophet, and not not a word of all this Text is fallen to the ground; that ſtrange examples there have beene of it, and that, many; and this day, one Exemplum ſine exemplo, an Example per ſe, a matchleſſe one, in this kinde: Having theſe before our eyes, and having in remembrance the foure noviſſima in the Text, 1 Deſtruction, 2 ruine, 3 repentè, and 4 quis ſcit. Let us feare thoſe foure; and fearing them, perſiſt as we have done hitherto, in the feare of GOD and the King; and ever feare, to have to doe or to deale with them, that feare neither. So I pray GOD, we may; and that this may be the fruit, even our fruit. And, His bleſſing upon that, hath beene ſpoken, that we may live and die Timentes Deum & Regem, ever pure from this mixture: and ſo GOD make Vs all.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the V. of November, A. D. MDCXV.

PSALME CXLV. VER. IX.

Suavis DOMINVS universis: & Miserationes Ejus super omnia opera Ejus.

The LORD is good to all: and His mercies are over all His workes.

TEN yeares it is now, since our memorable delivery, as upon this day: And we here to celebrate, not the Anniversary onely, but the Decennalia of it. Now, in numbering, it is well knowne, that, at ten, we begin anew at the figure of one; we returne againe (ever) to the first. So doe wee now. For, this was the first, Misericordiæ DOMINI super opera Ejus.

We shall never forget it, so many of us as then heard it, that it was the first, that it was thought (and that, Authore magno) to be the fittest theme of all, wherewith to beginne the first solemne thanksgiving of all, for the great Mercie of GOD, and for the great Worke of that Mercy, this Day, shewed upon us all.

To this then the first (every way, the first) may I crave pardon, to put to my poore cipher, and make it ten, this tenth yeare. So, as it was the first fruits, it may be the tenth. So, they may be, as they should be, Primitiæ & Decimæ de eodem, both out of one and the same.

It

It led us at the very firſt, whither firſt and laſt, we muſt come; to the true Cauſe of that our Delivery: of that, and of all other, we have had, or ever ſhall have, the Super omnia of His Mercies.

That deliverance when it came, it came not temerè, it had a cauſe. That cauſe was GOD, and, in GOD, His Mercie. It was the mercie of GOD, we were not conſumed: ſo ſaid we then (out of Ieremie) at the ſeventh yeare. That mercie of His, that is ſuper omnia: So ſay we now (out of David) at the tenth. For, this is King David; and, that way, not unfit neither: As, written firſt by a King; applyed ſince, by a King; in the caſe of ſaving a King, and a Kingdome: Or rather, one King, but more Kingdomes than one. Lament. 3. 22.

It was then ſpoken, to the praiſe. And it is a praiſe; and it is out of a praiſe. For ſo, is this Pſalme intitled: Davids Praiſe. For howſoever the prayers and the prayſes (all) in this Booke, are (for the moſt part) of Davids penning: yet, two there are, he hath ſingled out from the reſt, and ſet his owne marke on them, as proper to himſelfe. The LXXXVI. Pſalme, his Tephilla; Davids owne Prayer. And this here, his Tehilla, his owne Praiſe or thankſgiving. As if he had made the reſt, for all in common: but reſerved theſe peculiarly for himſelfe.

With Exultabo te DEVS, it begins; He will exalt GOD; Every day, and for ever: ſo he vowes, in the two firſt verſes. For what, will he exalt Him? For many high perfections in Him. For the greatneſſe of His Nature, which is infinite, at the third; For the greatneſſe of His wondrous workes (the fourth:) for His glorious Majeſtie (the fifth:) For His mightie Power (the ſixth:) For His Goodneſſe, ſubdivided into His Iuſtice and Mercy: For His Iuſtice (the ſeventh;) And for His Mercy (the eighth.) And here now, in the ninth, in this verſe, and theſe very words, He ſets the Super omnia, the crowne and garland (as it were) on Mercies head; gives it the Soveraigntie over all. Exaltabo Te; GOD he will exalt: and Exaltabo in Te, in GOD he will exalt His mercie, above all the reſt.

The Summe.

Vpon the matter then; all is (as we ſaid) but a praiſe of Mercie. And a praiſe, not poſitivè (that is not ſo effectually) but, by way of compariſon (held ever the better.)

In a compariſon (ever) three points we looke to: 1. With whom it is made, With the workes of GOD. 2. How large it is laid; Not with ſome one or more, but with them all; all commers (as they ſay.) 3. And, in what? In the point of Super; (in that, there is ſo much adoe about) the point of Supremacie: whether above, whether Superiour to other.

Two things of GOD there are ſet downe: 1 His Mercies, and 2 His Workes; theſe two compared: Compared, in the point of Super, and Mercie found to carry it. Her's the Supremacie. All His Workes, high all, great all, all excellent: But major horum Miſericordia, the higheſt, greateſt, moſt excellent of them all, Mercie; that, the Super omnia of them all. Of theſe then.

The Diviſion.

Firſt of the words as they ſtand in order.

Then, of Mercie's Super, and that three wayes, 1 Super, above; (So, we reade it.) 2 Super, over; (So the LXX. ὑπὲ πάντα.) 3 Super, upon; So we pray, Fiat miſericordia ſuper nos, Let thy mercy be upon us. I.

1. Super, above it may be (as a Spire is) and not reflect downe, and be over. 2. Super, over it may be, and hoover aloft; not deſcend, or come downe upon us. 3. But, Super, upon, is it; when it lights upon us: that is, Fiat miſericordia ſuper nos. II.

And of theſe, 1 as well for Mercie's honour, that is over them, 2 as for the good of the Workes, that are under it.

Then come we to a Super in this Super. Vpon ſome of GODS workes, more than otherſome: And ſo to our ſelves; And ſo to this day. III.

For (ſure) this Scripture, if it be well looked unto, doth competere, agree to no caſe, ſo, as it doth to ours; Nor to ours, as this day. We are His workes once, and

thoſe

thoſe Mercies of His, here ſaid to be over all His workes, have beene over and upon us. Vpon us, in LXXXVIII. and many other times: but, above all other moſt ſenſibly, this day; this day, of all dayes. And that with ſuch a Super, in ſo high a degree, in ſuch, ſo great a Mercy, ſo great a worke of Mercy, as great as ever was any. In Saving ſo great a number, from ſo ſtrange and unheard of a cruelty: by a Mercy, ſuper omnia (I may ſay;) from a crueltie, Super omnia (I am ſure.)

IV. Then laſtly, what we are in Super to GOD, for this Super. Where, 1 of the Super upon the head of all GODS Workes, for theſe His Mercies thus over them. 2 And, of all His Workes, and above them all, of the Super remaining upon our heads, for diverſe beſides, but for this Day and this Worke, Super omnia: Above all the Dayes, we ever ſaw; Above all the workes, He ever wrought for us.

And, it is the tenth yeare, this; And, naturally, Decumana ſunt grandiora. A Pſal.38.4. Fluctus decumanus, a deepe floud it was, had like to have gone over our ſoules: And a Miſericordia decumana, A Mercy of a large ſize it was, that made, it went not then. That we performe then Laudes decumanas, great praiſe and large Thankes, now, this Anno Decimo, ſome way anſwerable to the greatneſſe of our Perill, and to the greatneſſe of the Mercy, that made us ſo well paſſe it. The numbers of ſeven and ten are not without their weight. The Seventh, the Sabbath: The Tenth, GODS part. Both wayes, as the Sabbath day, as the Tenth yeare, ſacred to GOD is this Day, and our dutie upon it.

I. Of the words in order. Miſericordiæ, The Mercies.

MIſericordiæ DOMINI. Miſericordiæ. To looke into the nature of the word Mercy: It is beſt conceived, by the Object, and by the Act. Mercy hath for her Object circa quod, her matter and metall to worke upon, Miſery: the beſt Vertue, the worſt Object of all. It is not ſo plaine (this) in our Engliſh word [Mercy] as in the Latine [Miſericordia] for, there, is miſery full out at the length.

Vpon this Object, the proper Act of Mercy, Miſeratio, as the Fathers reade this Text: Miſericordia is the Habit; Miſeratio, the Act, which is nothing elſe but Miſericordia eliquata, that which runnes from Mercy, at the melting; the Act that releeves us of miſery, and all the degrees that lead to it, neceſſities, impotencies, defects, diſtreſſes, dangers, and whatſoever would make our caſe miſerable, more or leſſe.

To releeve theſe, is the Act: and (this you muſt take with you) without merit to releeve them. The oppoſition, the Church makes, in diverſe her Collects, Non noſtris meritis, ſed Tuâ ſolâ miſericordiâ, with an expreſſe obſtante of all merit. For, the eye of Iuſtice will releeve all them, that deſerve it. Goodneſſe, in merentes, that, is Iuſtice. Goodneſſe, in immerentes, yea, and ſometimes a degree farther, in malè merentes, Pſal.106.44. that is, Mercy properly. Neverthelеſſe (ſaith the CVI. Pſalme) for all they deſerved it (to be miſerable) when He ſaw their miſery (ſaw that, and nothing elſe to move Him) that, moved Him, and He heard their complaint, and gave order for their reliefe. This, is Mercie.

Miſericordiæ Ejus: Mercies in GOD. This Mercy is in GOD; Miſericordiæ Ejus. Indeed ſuch is the immutable conſtancie of the Divine Nature, as we ſhould hardly conceive it to be in this wiſe flexible, but that great care is taken of this point (of no one, ſo great;) that there is Mercie in GOD, there be Miſericordiæ Ejus.

But what Mercy? From the nature and force of the word רחמים, which (I am not now to tell you, I have done it heretofore) is properly the bowels; that is, there are tender mercies in GOD (ſo we turne it, in the Benedictus.) Not, of the ordinary ſort, ſlight, and ſuch as pierce not deepe, come not farre: but, ſuch as come de profundis, from the very bowels themſelves; that affect that part, make the bowels relent.

And

And what bowels? Not the bowels of the common man (for then מעים had been the right word:) but רחמים are the bowells of a parent (so, we said, the word signifies) and this adds much: adds to Mercie חסד, naturall love. To one strong affection, another as strong, or stronger than it.

And what Parent? the more pitifull of the twaine, the Mother. For, רחם (the singular of this word) is Hebrew for the Womb. So as this, to the two former, addeth the Sexe; the Sexe, holden to bee the more passionate, and compassionate of both. 1 Of all mercies, those from the bowels: 2 and of all bowels, the bowels of a parent; 3 and, of the two parents those of the mother, those from the womb: Such pitie, as the mother takes of the child of her wombe; such, as the wombe, of the child that lay in it. Mercies are in GOD; such mercies are in God.

And GOD, willing to set forth unto us the exceeding great tendernesse of His mercie, to have it throughly apprehended by us, Humanum dicit, speakes to us in our owne Puerilis. And, to expresse the efficacie of His action, takes to Him, the affection: and to expresse the affection, takes to Him the part of the bodie, the seat of it, the bowels: and, the bowels of a parent; of that parent, whose bowels, in our nature, are the pitifullest of all, the mother. And (if you will) you may adde this: that one mother hath but one wombe, for all her children; but, Hee speakes (here) of GOD in the plurall; as if Hee had the compassion of more wombs than one, the pitie of many mothers put together.

It is good newes for us, these mercies are in GOD: but, better yet, that they are in Him; with a Super. But, best of all, that that Super, a Super, not Super quædam, but Super omnia. In God, with a Super.

Much is said in few words, to Mercies praise, when this is said, Super omnia. Nihil supra were much, None above it: but Super omnia, It above all; he that saith that, leaves no more to say: there is no higher degree; Super omnia is the Superlative. And that Super, Super omnia.

Super omnia, Above all. For, Opera Ejus, His workes, these two might well be spared. All, are workes: and all are His workes. Super omnia opera Ejus, that is, absolutely Super omnia. For, workes, is no terme diminuent here: All His workes, that is, all, simply. Beside GOD, and His workes, there is in the wide world, nothing at all.

But yet, with His workes, with them it is said; and well: Not, with GODS other Attributes, absolutely; but with them, in the point of workes. His Attributes are all alike; all, as Himselfe is; infinite, all; and one infinite is not more than another. But, take the workes (and Virtus in act. one, we know) lay it there; Compare the workes of any of them, nay, of all of them, with the workes of Mercy, and Mercy carries it cleere. More workes; more, in number; (If they their thousand, Mercy her ten thousand:) 1 Sam. 18. 7. More great, more glorious Workes, of it, than of any of them all; Nay, than of all of them: Super omnia opera, that it is. And now to our Super. And first, Super, above.

II.

Super, above, is said (here) by way of figure. Properly, Super is of height: Height is a dimension, that pertaines to quantitie; and quantitie, to bodies; whereof Mercie is none. The meaning is, it is the chiefest. So, Heaven in the greater World; So, the Head, in the lesse: both of them the highest, both of them the chiefest; chiefest of all, and rule all. As (indeed) of whom is Super said, so rightly, as of the Soveraigne? So doth Mercy: Namely, His Power (which may serve for all) Deus (saith the Church, the ninth Sunday after Trinity) qui Omnipotentiam Tuam parcendo maximè & miserando manifestas; GOD, which shewest thine Almightie Power, most chiefly, in shewing mercy. Of their Superl 1 Super, above.

But to keepe us to the letter. Super, above, is either 1 reall, or 2 locall. 1. Reall, as Saul above the people, higher by the head and shoulders than any of them. 2. Locall, as Zachee; though low in stature; yet above in the top of a Sycamore tree. 1 Sam. 10. 23. Luk. 19. 4.

Mercy is it selfe highest. We will soone end this point, by the heavens, the uppermost of all His workes. His mercy (saith the CVIII. Psalme) is ἐπάνω above; and that, with a μέγα, a great way above the heavens: and, if above them, above all under them. It is it selfe highest. 1 Above really Psal. 108. 4.

2 Above, locally. 1 In place.

And it hath the higheſt place of all, above all, the precedence before all. The higheſt place. The Arke was (on earth) the figure of the ſpirituall heaven: Over it were the Cherubins; Above, upon the top of their wings, was the Mercy-Seate; there, ſits Mercy in the higheſt place of all.

2 In precedence.

As the higheſt place, above all: ſo the precedence, before all. In GODS owne ſtile framed and proclaimed by Himſelfe, Exod. XXXIV. conſiſting of thirteene titles (מדום meaſures or degrees) next after the LORD GOD, the very firſt is this word, here. And take this withall; that, of the thirteene, nine of them belong to Mercy: that proportion it hath, that ſo, it may have the ſuper every way.

Exod. 34. 6.

From this place it hath, over all (and by GODS appointment; it tooke it not, it ſelfe) we gather the place it hath, in GODS eſteeme. That, which one moſt ſets by, he ſets by himſelfe, and next himſelfe: ever, the deereſt, the neereſt ſtill. GOD, by thus ſetting it, next to Him (None betweene GOD and it, in His Style) ſhewes plainly, what vertue it is, He loves above all; and what vertue He commends to us above all: To us all; but ſpecially, to them that are above all: To be ſuper Omnia, in them that be ſuper omnes. As the nobler the Nature, and the neerer to God, the more eaſie (ever) to take the impreſſion of it. To hold you no longer in this firſt. It is one of Gods Titles (Melchiſedek firſt gave to Him) Altiſſimus. As He, Altißimus: ſo Mercie, altißima ever: Altiſſima, in Altiſſimo, the higheſt Vertue in Him that is moſt High, which is God, above all to be bleſſed, and to be bleſſed for this above all. And this, for ſuper, above.

Gen. 14. 19.

Rom. 9. 5.

2 Super, Over.

But, there is more than ſo, in it. Super is over; ἐπὶ πάντα, is over all. All that are above, are not over. It is not above onely, as an Obelisk or Maypole, higher than all about them, but have neither ſhadow nor ſhelter; no good they doe. Mercie hath a broad top, ſpreading it ſelfe over all. It is ſo above all, as it is over them, too. As the vault of this Chappell is over us, and the great vault of the Firmament over that. The ſuper of latitude and expanſion, no leſſe than of altitude and elevation.

And this, to the end that all may retire to it, and take covert: It, over them; and they, under it. Vnder it, under the ſhadow of it, as of Eſays great Rock in the wilderneſſe, from the heat. Vnder it, under the ſhelter of it, as of Daniels great Tree, from the tempeſt.

Eſay 32. 2.

Dan. 4. 12.

Super omnia, Over all.

Over all His works, now. O Lord (ſaith the CIV. Pſalme) how manifold are thy works! We ſhall never get through halfe of them, God knowes; Non eſt pertranſire infinitum. We will contract them, thus: take the two Extremes, ſo ſhall wee take in all betwixt them. Over all, that is, none of them all ſo high, but as high as they be, they need come under it; Nor none of them all ſo meane, but as meane as they bee, they are not left out: one way or other, within it, under it, all. So wee divide His works, into His OPERA, and His opuſcula; and over both it is.

Pſal. 104. 24.

1 All His works, His OPERA.

None ſo high: None on earth, not His Saints (who of all on earth, have the ſuper, are of higheſt perfection) In them He found no ſteadfaſtneſſe (Iob XV.) they be Vaſa miſericordiæ all. If you will take it with Iacobs ſtaffe, he ſaith, minor ſum cunctis, he is under them, under them all.

Iob 15. 15. Rom. 9. 23. Gen. 32. 10.

Not in Earth then: No, nor in heaven. Neither heaven it ſelfe, nor the brighteſt part of heaven, the ſtarres; they are not cleane in His ſight, they alſo need it. Nay, not the Angels, the very brighteſt of them all: In them He found, Pravitatem, σκολιόν τι, ſomewhat amiſſe, even in them. So, over them too; they need it. The very Seraphin have ſomething to cover. As for the Cherubin, they will ſet Mercie a ſeat upon the top of their wings: So glad and faine are they to have it over them. All the tongues of Saints and Angels muſt ſay this Verſe with us, Miſericordiæ Domini ſuper omnia opera Ejus. Both ſay it, for both need it: And if both they, I would faine know, who needs it not.

Iob 15. 15. Iob 4. 18. Eſay 6. 1. Exod. 37. 9.

2 All His Opuſcula.

Now, as none ſo high; None of His Opera, His Folio-Workes: So, none ſo meane, none of His opuſcula, but over them too. As His art no leſſe wonderfull, in making the Ant, than the Elephant: So, His care no leſſe over the one, than over the other.

Naturas

Naturas rerum minimarum non destituit Deus : The very minims of the world, His Mercie leaves them not destitute. Not the wild Asses, without a place to quench ther thirst. Not the young Ravens crying on Him. Not the Sparrow of halfe a farthing, lets not them light on the ground without His providence. Even these, even such His Mercy is over also. It is not Pallium breve; the Mantle is wide enough, it leaves none out. Psalm. 104 11. 147. 9. Matt. 10. 29.

None out? What say you to hell and those there? Not them? Nazianzen (that had the honour to be called the Divine, of his time) thinks it may be maintained, Not them: and so doe the Schoolemen all, inasmuch as even there, Mercy moderates, too. That it is not, with them there, as it might and should be; but tolerabilius, easier, than they do deserve by much. None, no not in that place, though beaten with many stripes; not yet with so many, as the qualitie of his offense, in rigour of Iustice would require. This is sure: Deus præmiat ultrà, punit citrà: God (ever) rewards beyond, but punishes on this side; short still, of that we deserve: that His very punishment is tempered with mercy: that, even in His wrath, He remembreth mercie. Luke 12. 47. Hab. 3. 2.

But we will not stand upon this; we need not, we shall find another Super for these, anon. For many are the Super's of Mercy. Not in any one (possibly;) but in one sense or other, over all. Then (if it goe by quò communius eò melius) None so good, for none so common (I am sure.)

And reason, why Mercy should spread the wing of her mantle thus, over all. All are Opera Ejus. Opera Ejus: Ejus may be referred indifferently: to Mercy, as well as to God. Mercy hath the name from רחם, the womb. For, she was the womb (indeed) in which, all were conceived at first, and shee delivered of them all. Plaine, by the CXXXVI. Psalme; Who by His excellent Wisedome made the heavens, Who layd out the Earth above the waters, Who made great lights, &c. And the cause of every one, at the end of every one, and of twenty more, For, His Mercy endureth for ever. That, set all on work: His Wisedome, to contrive; His power, to execute; appointed all, did all.

The Reason is Ejus, referred to Mercy. Mercy the Maker of them all. Psal. 136 5. 6. 7, &c.

It was Mercy, and nothing but Mercy, set the creation in hand. For, it is well knowne, in non ente, there could be no moving cause at all. Nothing we were; We, and all His works : In nothing, there can bee nothing to induce, why it should bee brought out of the state of being nothing. So that, His Mercy it was, that removed that universall defect, of non entitie at the first.

And having then made them, it is kindly, that Viscera misericordiæ should be over those Opera that came de visceribus; whom it brought from nothing, to be over them and not see them cast away, and brought to nothing againe. The Eagle (saith Moses) the poore Hen (saith our Saviour) will do it for their young ones: stretch their wings over them to preserve them, what they can. Mercy the Preserver of all. Exod. 19. 4. Matt. 23. 37.

So that these very two words [Opera Ejus] containe in them a reason, why Mercie should doe no lesse. A reason? Nay two. 1 One, for that they be Ejus, His. I am thine, ô save me; a good reason: His they be, a part of His possession. That alone, is enough with us, to preserve that is ours; only because it is ours, though we never made it. The reason. 1 In Ejus, his possession. Psal. 119. 94.

2 But besides that they be His, they be His handyworke. Another good inducement, Despise not ô Lord the works of thine owne hands. We see then, why over all; quia Ejus, quia Opera; because His, all; because His works, all. And it is well for us, the reason is layd so large. For, what ever we be or doe, or what ever become of us, His we are, and His works we are still. So, still His mercy is over us, and we under it. 2 In Opera, his handiworke. Psal. 137. 8.

It made me say at first, This Super as it is highly to the praise of Mercy, that it is over His works : So it is every way, as highly to the good of all His works, which are under mercie. The vanitie, Salomon saw (One set over others for their hurt) hath no place, here. That Mercy is over all, is for the generall good of all, and that is ever a blessed Super. We shall not need to feare any heart-burning, any emulation, for this Super: or to aske what the works say to it? they all say, Amen, Halleluja: glad are they, that Mercy is in that place; they would have none other, if they might. It followeth next, Confiteantur tibi Opera, His works are readie all to confesse, to acknowledge this Supremacie without any scruple; to take the Oath to it. Super omnia. 1 For Mercies praise. 2 For the good of His workes. Eccles. 8. 9. Verse 18.

For Super (over) there is no doubt, that it is as the Cherubims wings, ſtretched from one ſide of the Temple to the other; Over all, for all to flie under and finde ſuccour there. Tutiſſimum eſt (ſay they, that can ſay leaſt by it:) when all is done, nothing, whereto we may ſo ſafely commit our ſelves. And, therfore Super omnia, that Super omnia we might truſt in it. But I ſay, that, even Super (above) it is not, as a bare pole upright; there is a brazen Serpent upon the top of it, for us to looke up to and receive comfort by. I will touch two or three: for thus we deduce. Firſt, if it be above all His workes, it followes, then above every one of them. And, One will ſerve the turne. Of all the works of God there is no worke we are afraid of, but one; that is, His judgement, the worke of His Iuſtice. Above that, it is: for, above all it is. And, that is to our comfort greatly. For which (beſides this generall above all, therefore above it) we owe to Saint Iames, that we have it expreſſed in particular, even in termes terminant, Miſericordia Super-exaltat judicium, Mercie is exalted (more than exalted, Super-exalted) above judgement, nominatim. That worke of His, we moſt ſtand in awe of, over that work by name, Mercy triumpheth. And, in the very Decalogue, there may you ſee the Super of a thouſand to foure, in Mercy over juſtice. Even there, even in the rolle of His Iuſtice (the Law;) there, would God have it extant upon record, that Mercy is above it.

Exod.20.6.

And if mercy bee above it, thither (to mercy) we may remove our cauſe, as to the Higher Court. There lieth an Appeale thither, A Solio Iuſtitiæ ad Thronum Gratiæ, from the Bench of Iuſtice, to the Throne of Grace and Mercy. There, we may be relieved. Now, if it be above that Opus, that worke of GODS, for Gods works we ſeek no more.

Heb.4.16.

A ſecond we deduce thus. If it be above all His works, ſhall it not much more be above all ours? What are we to Him; ours to His? No work of ours then, or to be done by us, but the mercie of GOD is above it; no ſinfull worke (I meane;) that we erre not Cains error, His ſinne was above GODS mercy: No; Mercy above it. Grande eſt barathrum peccatorum meorum (it is Chryſoſtome) ſed major eſt Abyſſus miſericordiæ Dei: Great is the whirlepoole of my wicked workes, but greater is the Bethesda, the wide and deepe gulfe of the mercie of GOD that hath no bottome. And indeed, it were not truely ſaid, It is above all His workes, (all His, and much more then, above all ours) if any of all our works were above it; No more then, There is a Lambe, that taketh away the ſins of the world, if there were any ſinne in the world, He takes not away. And this is the Super indeed, that would be looked into by us, by reaſon of another Super, Iniquitates noſtræ ſupergreſſæ ſunt capita noſtra, Our ſins are gone up, over, above our heads; Over head and eares, in ſin. And another Super yet, above them; Even the phials of Gods wrath hanging over our heads; readie to be powred on us and them, were it not, that mercie is above them, and ſtaies them: Were it not that, Over whom miſerie, over them mercie: Elſe were we in danger to be overwhelmed with them every houre. We ſee then, the compariſon was well laid in Super. Our ſinnes, over us; judgements over them; but mercie over all, Super omnia. Alwaies, where there is Super, there is Satis; Satis ſuperque ſhewes, Super is more than Satis. Enough then there is, and to ſpare, for them all.

2 Above all our workes, our ſinfull workes.

Apoc 16.1.

One more: not only above all ours, but if it be above all His works, then is it above all the works of them that be His workes: and ſo (not to hold you) above the Divell and all his workes. For he alſo, is one of them: Of Gods making, as an Angell; of His owne marring, as a devill. Above his works (I ſay) and above the workes, and practices of his limmes, and all they can doe or deviſe againſt them, over whom His mercie is. The Sonne of God (ſaith S. Iohn) in mercie therefore appeared, Vt ſolveret opera Diaboli, that He might looſe, undoe, quite diſſolve the workes of the Divell. No worke ſhall he contrive, never ſo deepe under ground, never ſo neere the borders of his owne region, but GODS mercie will bring it to light; it, and the workers of it. His mercie will have a Super, for their Subter. There ſhall be more in Mercie, to ſave; than in Satan, to deſtroy: More, dicat nunc Iſrael; more, may this Realme now ſay. A notorious Worke of His, as ever any; Nay, Super omnia, as never was any, this day by His mercie brought to light, and diſſolved, quite diſſolved. We heard it not with our eares, our fathers told it us not; our eyes beheld this Super.

3 Above the workes of all His workes.

Pſal.124.1.

Pſal.44.1.

So

So we are come, to our owne caſe, yer we were aware, That is Super, upon. Over all it is; yet, not over all alike: at leaſtwiſe, not upon all alike; upon ſome, more than over other ſome. Æqualiter eſt Illi cura de omnibus, but, not æqualis; Equally, a care of all, but not an equall care, though. No, His mercie over all in generall, is no barre, but upon ſome there may be a ſpeciall Super; and ſo, ſome have a Super in this Super too. 3 Super upon: 1 Vpon ſome, more than others of His workes.

For, if the reaſon, why mercie is over all His workes be, becauſe they be His workes: then, the more they be His workes, the more workemanſhip He beſtowes upon them, the more is His mercie over them. Whereby it falls out, that as there is an unequalitie of His workes, and one worke above another; ſo is there a diverſe graduation of His mercie, and one mercie above another; or rather, one and the ſame mercie, as the ſame Planet in Auge, in the top of His Epicycle, higher than it ſelfe, at other times.

To ſhew this, we divide His works, (as we have warrant) into His works of Fiat (as the reſt of His creatures:) and the Worke of Faciamus, as Man, the maſter-peece of His workes; upon whom He did more coſt, ſhewed more workemanſhip, than on the reſt: the very word [Faciamus] ſets Him above all. 1. GODS βουλὴ: that He did deliberate, enter into conſultation (as it were) about his making, and about none elſe. 2. GODS ἀπεργία: that Himſelfe framed his bodie of the mould, as the potter, the clay. 3. Then, that He breathed into him a two-lived ſoule, which made the Pſalmiſt breake out, Domine quid eſt homo, &c? Lord, what is man, thou ſhouldſt ſo regard him, as to paſſe by the heavens and all the glorious bodies there, and paſſing by them, breathe an immortall ſoule, put thine owne image, upon a peece of clay? 4. But laſt, Gods ſetting him Super omnia opera manuum ſuarum, Over all the workes of His hands. His making him (as I may ſay) Count Palatine of the world; this ſhewes plainely, His ſetting by Man more than all of them. As he then, over them; ſo, GODS mercie over him. Over all His workes; but, of all His workes, over this worke. Over His chiefe worke, chiefly: in a higher degree. And, not without great cauſe. Man is capable of eternall either felicitie or miſerie; ſo are not the reſt: He ſinnes; ſo doe not they. So, his caſe requires a Super in this Super, requires mercy more than all theirs. 2 Vpon Man more than other creatures. Gen.1.26. Gen.2.7. Pſal.8.4. Pſal.8.6.

Vpon men then, chiefly. They, the firſt Super in this Super. But, of men (though it be true in generall, He hath ſhut up all under ſinne, that He might have mercie upon all, yet) even among them a Super too, a ſecond. Another workemanſhip He hath yet; His workemanſhip in CHRIST IESV, the Apoſtle calls it (Epheſ.2.10.) His new creature (Gal.6.15.) which His mercie is more directly upon, than upon the reſt of mankind; Servator omnium hominum, the Saviour of all men (ſaith the Apoſtle;) marrie, Autem, moſt of all, of the faithfull Chriſtian men. Of all men, above all men, upon them: They are His Worke wrought on both ſides; Creation on one ſide, Redemption on the other. For (now) we are at the worke of Redemption. Rom.11.32. 1 Tim.4.10.

And here now is Mercie right, in kind, רחמה רחמי Rahame Rahama, the mercie of the bird of mercie, that is the Pelecans mercie (for, כחמת is the Pelecan, which hath her name of mercie, as the truly mercifull bird.) For, here (now) is not the wombe to hatch them, nor the wings to cloke them, but the Pelecans bill of mercie, ſtriking it ſelfe to the heart, drawing bloud thence, even the very heart-bloud, to revive her young ones, when they were dead in ſinne, and to make them live anew the life of grace. This is Miſericordia ſuper omnes miſericordias. Shall I ſay it? (I may truly:) Mercie, in all elſe, above His workes; but, in this, above Himſelfe. For, when it brought Him downe from Heaven to Earth, to ſuch a birth in the manger, ſuch a life in contradiction of ſinners, ſuch a death on the Croſſe, it might truely be ſaid then, Miſericordia etiam triumphat de Deo. You ſhall marke therefore, at the very next words, when he comes to his thankes, it is Confiteantur Tibi opera Deus, but Sancti tui benedicant Tibi: Thy workes, let them ſay Confiteor; Thy redeemed, Thy Saints, let them ſing Benedictus. Thy workes, let them tell truth and confeſſe; But Thy Saints, let them ſpeake all good and bleſſe Thee; highly bleſſe Thee, for this thy high mercie of all other upon them, as of all other, they have moſt cauſe to doe. Luk.2.12. Heb.12.3. Phil.2.8. Verſe 10.

To elevate it one degree, one Super, more. For (I know ont how, but) you ſhall obſerve, that, even among the faithfull, even among them, GOD ſingles out ſome one People ſtill, from the reſt, that He makes of above the reſt, and vouchſafes His ſpeciall favour upon, more than the reſt, though Chriſten men, as well as they; and no reaſon in the world to be given of it, but the Super of His mercie. It was ever ſo: Some Nation, of whom it might be ſaid, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi, He hath not dealt ſo with every Nation: Nay, Non omni is nulli, He hath not dealt ſo with any Nation. Some, of whom it might be ſaid, Of all the people in the Earth I have choſen you, to come neer reſt you, to vouchſafe you my chiefeſt, my choiceſt mercies, Super omnes. Not in matters onely pertaining to the ſoule, in which all chriſtians are intereſſed alike; but even in the things pertaining to the courſe of this life, ſecular (as we call them) and temporall: In them, too. And, in both, is better than one alone. In ſaving that way with the ſalvation, the King rejoyceth in (21 Pſalme.) ſaving them, from plots and practices, even againſt their worldly proſperity; from Achitophels plots, from Abſaloms Vow, and ſuch like.

Pſal. 147. 20.

III. Our Super in this Super.

And now to our Super. For, may not we (thinke you) reckon our ſelves in all, in this laſt, above all. His works firſt: ſo are all His creatures. His chiefe workemanſhip: ſo are other men. His workemanſhip in CHRIST: ſo are other Chriſtians. But above all, theſe, His non taliter. For, if we be not very dim-ſighted, without any perſpective glaſſe, we may ſee ſuch mercies and favours of His, Super upon our ſelves, as (ſure) the nations round about us have not ſeene: and, I thinke I may ſay, not any nation on the Earth ſeene the like.

Many waies might this be made appeare, and many daies brought to give us light to it: But, let all elſe paſſe in ſilence: this Day, this fifth of November, is inſtar omnium. Nay, is ſuper omnes, before, beyond, above them all: to elevate to us, this point, of the tender mercies of our God, whereby this Day ſprung from on high did viſit us. This Day (I ſay) enough and enough, to bring from all our mouthes, that it brought from His Majeſties, and that with admiration, Miſericordia Dei ſuper omnia opera ejus! And the Confiteantur, and the Benedicant of right belonging to it.

Luk. 1. 78.

1 The Mercie of Ne inducas.

We, right now, divided His workes: we will now divide His Mercies. That do we, according to their Object, which is miſerie: And that is double. 1 For, either it is already upon us, and we in it: 2 Or but over us, yet ſo over us, as we are within the ſhadow of death, at the very pits brinke (as they ſay) and even now ready to be tumbled in. To quit us of theſe two, there is a double mercie (they follow at the 14 ver.) 1 Erigit lapſos, 2 Suſtinet labentes, Lifts up them that be downe, and Staies them that be going downe, There is a Super in theſe too. 1 One of them, the better (which our Pater-noſter will teach us:) Ne inducas firſt, and then Libera. Better, leade us not in, than deliver us out. If we are in, deliver us: but, better never come in at all. Ionas was delivered; So was Ninive: Ninive's was better (they came not in;) than Ionas-his: he was in, but got out. That of Libera, God ſend us too, if ever we ſhall need it: and ſend it all them, that at this preſent, doe. But yet, give me the mercie of Ne inducas, let it not light, let it paſſe over; the Paſſe-over, that, is the memorable Deliverie; that, the high Feaſt.

And, that was the Super, upon us. And it behoved ſo to be. We were not in: It came not to that; thanke Mercie for it. If it had, it had beene paſt with us, paſt Libera: that other mercie could have done us no good. If it had not beene præveniſti, poſtveniſti had come too late. For, if in, never out more. This, our firſt Super.

2 The Mercie of Libera, from a crueltie cloſe to us.

But, being not in, we were as neere it, as neere might be, and ſcape it. Over, it was; nay, it was rather under us, then: but all is one, Super or Subter; either will ſerve, here: that Subter would have ended in a Super, ſent us up higher enough (I wote well:) therefore we will keepe the word of the Text [Super] let it goe.

Firſt, when it was contrived, Over us it was: then, when it was ſet in hand, Over us yet more: but, when it came to parata ſunt omnia, all ready for the match, and the match for it (for, ſo neere it came) then, it was over us (I trow) hard over us: and, then to ſcape it, when it was even in a manner ready to ſeaze on us, that, is another Super: for, then to ſcape it, that, doth us the more good, ever; and that is ever praiſed, for the Superiour deliverance. The ſecond Super.

Specially, if you adde the third: that when it was ſo neere us, and we to it, it was not ſo cloſe by us, as cloſe from us; we knew it not. And none ſo miſerable as t ey that are ſo, and know not they are ſo: Nay, thinke it cleane otherwiſe. The Laodicean miſerie, that (we ſay) is of all other the moſt wofull: Tu dicis quod, Thou ſaiſt, thou art this, and thou art that; ſafe, and ſure, and happie: and behold, thou art none of all theſe; but, even then when thou ſayeſt it, miſerable, and even in the jawes of death. That is the miſerie, that comes as the throwes of a woman in travaile: as the flood, upon the old world; as the fire, upon the five Cities.

3 And cloſe, from us.

Apoc. 3. 17.

Ier. 6. 24.

And that was our caſe right: they, in the daies of Noe; they in the daies of Lot, never reckoned leſſe, of the flood, or the fire, over them; than we, of the powder, under us. And I blame us not: Who would not have thought himſelfe ſafe, in that place; who, that he might not have troden on that threſhold, that floore, without danger? If ſafe at all, if any where, there. It is the Aſylum, the ſureſt place (one would thinke) in all the land. Ἐν ᾧ φρονεῖς μέγιστα, ἀπολεῖ τοῦτο σε: Where our greateſt truſt, there our danger moſt deadly: and that is (ever) the ſuper of all miſeries.

Mat. 24. 37. Luke 17. 26. 28.

Being then ſo over us, or under us; under us, and neere us, neere us and we not aware of it: ſo neere, that they made full account (I ſay not (as the Pſalme) to have ſwallowed us up quicke, but) to have blowne us up quicke, and in a moment ſent us up, ſhivered all to peeces: it was a third, and a principall ſuper (this) more than ordinarie, that made us ſupereſſe, to remaine ſtill alive, after ſo great, ſo preſent, ſo ſecret a danger.

Pſal. 124. 3.

And yet another ſuper more, againſt this laſt; which will ſerve, as blacke worke (I meane, their crueltie) to make this white-worke of Gods mercie ſhew the better to us. It is a Super omnia, too. As our Deliverance, a worke of Mercie ſuper omnia: ſo, our intended Deſtruction, a worke of crueltie ſuper omnia.

4 The ſuper omnia of this crueltie.

Super omnia, above all examples (to beginne with.) For, the like never ſeene, nor heard of. Nay, not to be raked out of any ſtorie, in any age, of any countrie, civill or ſavage, of the like. And Super omnes, over all it would have gone, not ſpared any, no degree, high or low; no eſtate, Nobles or Commons; no calling, ſacred or civill; no ſexe, King or Queene; no age, King, or Prince; no religion, their owne, or others. This is but ſuper omnes: Nay ſuper omnia, it was too. Super, up with lime, and ſtone, and timber, iron, glaſſe and lead: up with floore, windowes and walls, roofe and all. Yet another ſuper omnia: all bands of birth, countrey, allegiance, nature, bloud, humanity, and Chriſtianity; tread upon them, trample upon them all, teare them all in pieces. Never ſuch a ſuper omnia, in all ſenſes. So (indeed) a cruelty for the Divell himſelfe: To make the oppoſition perfect, of GOD'S mercy, and Satans Cruelty. Of whom (to give each their due) it may be ſaid, and no leſſe truely ſaid, Crudelitates ejus ſuper omnia opera ejus, his Cruelties are above all his works; than of GOD, that His Mercies are above all His.

Super omnia opera ejus, it is; and contra omnia opera DEI: Above all his owne, and againſt all GODS works. The enemy of GOD he is, and ſo of all GOD'S works; and of thoſe His works moſt, that GOD moſt ſets by (that is) mankind: And of that part of mankind moſt, GOD hath done moſt for; and ſo may be thought, moſt to favour (that is, Chriſten men:) And then of them, if there be Non taliter in His mercy, a Non taliter too, in his malice, ſtraight. If a ſuper omnes, with GOD; a ſuper omnes with him, in ſenſu contrario.

To any creature (only becauſe it is a creature) is he cruell: he will into the hogſtie, to ſhew it, rather than not to ſhew it at all.

Mat. 8. 13.

But, to man; to one man, rather than to a whole heard of Swine.

And among men, his malice is moſt at Chriſten men: they are neerer, to the kingdome of GOD. To keep them from that, himſelfe hath irrecoverably loſt (that is) heaven; and to plunge them into eternall miſerie, whereinto himſelfe is fallen, without all redemption.

And among Chriſten men, to the beſt ſort; to publike perſons, rather than to private meane men.

But, if he could get a whole Parliament together: A King, his Nobles, his Commons; that is, a King, Kingdome and all; and up with them all at once, all together: there were none to that: that (lo) he would over ſea and land to compaſſe. For, that were indeed, with him, a ſuper omnia: He never had done the like.

Pro. 12.10. Of this their Father, were thoſe ungodly men of this Day. Vngodly (I ſay:) For Salomon ſets us this ſigne, to know ungodly men by; Viſcera impiorum crudelia, if the bowels be cruell, then ungodly, certainly. No pitie, no pietie, with him. And we find, that mercie is a plant of our nature: So incident to the nature of man, as they are holden inhumane, that are without it. No pitie, no humanitie. Why then, Satanitie it muſt be, if God and man diſclaime it: Even of him, cujus crudelitas ſuper omnia opera ejus.

Now GOD cannot abide crueltie at any hand. By what He placeth higheſt, may we know, what He loves beſt (mercie:) and by that, may we know, what He Mat. 18.28. can worſt away with (crueltie.) Nay, if once he take his fellow by the throat, deale cruelly with him: never heare him more. No crueltie can He endure, at all: ſpecially, no ſuch cruell crueltie, as this, that paſſed all.

And in this caſe of ours, I make no doubt, God was moved both waies.

Pſal. 141.7. One way, by Mercie: for us, that our bones might not be ſcattered, in every corner; as when one heweth wood, chips flie about. And againe; for them, we ſhould have Mat. 9.36. left behind, that Videns IESVS turbas, miſertus eſt eis, He looked upon them too, and ſaw, they ſhould have beene ἐσκυλμένοι and ἐρριμμένοι, ſcattered all, and hurried up and downe, like a ſort of poore maſterleſſe ſheepe: His mercie wrought with Him, in both theſe reſpects.

But, on the other ſide, their Crueltie moved Him alſo. And (I am perſwaded) GOD, looking upon thoſe mercileſſe boweld men, when in their hearts they hatched that monſter of crueltie, even at the ſight of that barbarous reſolution (yea more than barbarous) His heart even turned againſt them, His very ſoule abhorred that deviliſh intention of theirs. They had thought to have had the Day; but, to the high praiſe of His mercie; and to the confuſion of Satan and all his crueltie, He gave order, Mercie ſhould have the Day: and ſhe had it, that there might be a mercie, ſuper omnia, above this Crueltie ſuper omnia: as there was. Their counſell brought to light; brought to nought; brought upon their owne heads: and both counſell and counſellers brought to a ſhamefull end.

Nay, would they make mens bowels fly up and downe the ayre? Out with thoſe bowels; what ſhould they doe in, that have not in them that, that bowels ſhould have. Would they do it by fire? Into the fire with their bowels, before their faces. Would they make mens bones flie about like chips? Hew their bones in ſunder. Iuſt is Pſal. 109.17. Davids prayer: Their delight was in crueltie, let it happen to them: They loved not mercie, therefore let it be farre from them.

But, how now? We are gone now from mercie quite. No no: there is mercie e- Pſal. 136.10. ven in this ſeveritie. In the Pſalme of Mercy (the CXXXVI.) Slaying is made a work 15. of mercie, Slew the firſt borne of Ægypt, cruel Pharao, cruel Og, For His mercie endureth for 20. ever: Mercy, in ridding the world of ſuch. For, they are not worthy to be inter opera DEI, among GODS workes, that renounce that vertue, that is, ſuper opera DEI, over all GODS works.

And ſo now ye ſee that Super, I told you, we ſhould come to at laſt; Over hell, and them there. The Super Superantis, the Over of an Overcommer; of Mercy a Conqueror. Above His other works, with the Super of a Soveraigne, to protect them: Vpon Pſalme 91.13. the devill and deviliſh men and their workes, with Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum, to tread Pſalme 110.1. upon them, to make His enemies His footſtoole, and ſo a Super, Over them too.

And

IIII.

And now, we have ſet Mercie in her Chariot of triumph; In which, if ever ſhe ſate, ſhe ſate in the Super omnia of this Day. Let us now come to the laſt Super, the Super of duty remaining upon the head of all Gods works, for His mercie over them all; but, among them all, and above them all, upon our heads (if it were but for the ſoveraigne Mercie of this Day) what we were in Super, to God, for it. The Super of our Duty.

The Super, upon all Gods workes followes, in the words next enſuing, [a] Confiteantur. Are His mercies over all His workes? Why then, [b] O all yee workes of the Lord, all fleſh, [c] every thing that hath breath; but chiefly His chiefe worke, the ſonnes of men, [d] the nations and the kindreds of the earth, come all to confeſſion: all owe this (to confeſſe) at leaſt. Confeſſe? what? Nothing but mercie, and the Super of the Mercie. Nothing, but that it is, as it is: doe but as God doth, exalt it, place it, where He ſets it. Let the deepe ſay, it is over me; and the drie land ſay, it is over me; and ſo of the reſt, every one: ſo many workes, ſo many confeſſions. From his works

[a] Verſe 10.
[b] Verſe 12.
[c] Pſal. 150 6.
[d] Pſal. 117. 1.

There is a further Super, upon His Saints: they, owe more to Him than His ordinarie workes. His workes, but to confeſſe: His Saints, to confeſſe and bleſſe, both. They are double workes, needle-worke on both ſides: more becomes them. Te decet hymnus in Sion: Both, to confeſſe, it is above all; and to bleſſe, and praiſe it, above all. For, if it be above all, it followes, more praiſe is to come to Him, for it, than for all. If Mercie, above all; the praiſe of His mercie, above the praiſes of all. From His Saints. Verſe 10. Pſal. 63. 1.

There is a further Super yet, upon us that have found and felt the Super of it; the Non taliter (ſay I) above workes and Saints both. All are bound: but we that are here ſuper omnes; more than all, we. We that ſhould have beene Martyrs of Satans cruelty, it ſtands us in hand to bee Confeſſors of Gods Mercie, as, to which wee owe even our ſelves; our ſelves, and our ſafetie; ſafetie, of ſoules, and bodies, every one of us. From Vs.

Then, let the King, Queene, and Prince; let all the three Eſtates; let the whole Land delivered by it, from a Chaos of confuſion; let our ſoules, which He hath held in life; let our bodies, which He hath kept together from flying in peeces; let all thinke on it; thinke how to thanke Him for it; ſay, and ſing, and celebrate it above all. We, above all; for it, above all.

For, if ever Mercie were over worke of His; if ever Worke of His, under it directly; it was ſo over us, and we ſo under it, this Day. If ever, of any it might be avowed; or to any, applied: If ever any might rightly and truly, upon good and juſt cauſe, ſay or ſing this verſe; we of this land, may doe both: It will fit our mouthes beſt, beſt become us.

For, ſuch a Worke did He ſhew on us, this Day, as if Mercie have a Super omnia of other, this may claime a Super omnia of it, of Mercie it ſelfe. His mercie is not ſo high above the reſt of His workes, as this Daies Worke, high above the workes of it. That, ſupreme to all: this, ſupreme to it. Mercie, in it, even above it ſelfe.

We then, that have had ſuch a Super in this Super; we, of all others, nay more than all others, to have it yet more ſpecially recommended. A bare confeſſion will not ſerve; but the higheſt confeſſion of all, to take the Oath of the Supremacie of it. We, if ever any, to ſay it, and ſweare it: if it had not beene in ſoveraigne manner over ſome of His workes (that is, our ſelves) we had beene full low yer this, infra infimos, beneath, under all His workes: not (now) above ground, to ſpeake and to heare of this theme.

Let it then claime the ſupremacie in our confiteantur, and in our Benedicant, both; above workes, Saints, and all. And that, not mentally, or verbally alone; in heart ſo to hold, and in tongue ſo to report it: but, which is worth all, really in worke, ſo to expreſſe it. I meane, as our thanks for His mercie above all our thanks; ſo our works of Mercie, above all our works. But, be they ſo? His are ſo: are ours? I would to God, I could ſay they were: but (ſure) they are not. His mercie, above all His workes: With us, in this point, it is cleane contrarie: all our workes, above our mercie. The leaſt, the laſt, laſt, the loweſt part of our workes, are our workes of mercy: the feweſt in number, the pooreſt in value, the ſleighteſt in regard. Indeed, infra omnia, with us, they.

But ſure: GOD, in thus ſetting it above all His workes, ſheweth, He would have it, with us, ſo too. That which is Super omnia Ejus, to be Super omnia noſtra: as above all His, ſo above all ours likewiſe. And CHRIST our SAVIOVR would have it ſo;
Luc 6.36. His Eſtote, is Eſtote miſericordes: and how? not barely, Eſtote; but Eſtote, ſicut Pater veſter cæleſtis; Mercifull, as He. And, how is He? So, as, with Him, it is above all. To imitate Him then in this, let it be higheſt with us; as, was with Him, it is higheſt. Sure, we are not right, till it be with us, ſo too: As in GOD'S, ſo, in ours: above ours; above them all. That ſo, it may have the Supremacie, in Confiteantur, in Benedicant, in praiſe and thankes, in words, and workes, and all.

To ſet off the Super of this day then, and to conclude. If the generalitie of His works confeſſe Him, for theirs; and the ſpecialitie of his Saints bleſſe Him, for theirs; what are we to doe, how to confeſſe, how to bleſſe for the ſingular Mercy of this Day (and let all others goe?) Sure, our mouthes to be filled with praiſe as the Sea, and our Pſal.71.8. voice in ſounding it out, as the noiſe of His waves, and we to cover the heavens with praiſe, as with clouds for it.

But, we are not able to praiſe Thee ô Lord, or to extoll thy Name, for one of a thouſand. Nay, not for one of the many millions, of the great Mercies, which thou haſt ſhewed upon us and upon our children. How often haſt thou rid us from Plague, freed us from Famine, ſaved us from the Sword, from our enemies compaſſing us round, from the Fleet, that came to make us no more a people!

Even, before this Day, wee now hold; before it, and ſince it, have not Thy compaſſions withdrawen themſelves from us. But, this Day, this Day above all daies, have they ſhewed it Super omnia: and, not over, but upon us.

Wherefore, the powers thou haſt diſtributed in our ſoules, the breath of life thou haſt breathed into our noſthrills, the tongues thou haſt put into our mouthes, behold, all theſe ſhall breake forth and confeſſe, and bleſſe, and thanke, and praiſe, and magnifie, and exalt Thee and Thy mercy, for ever. Yea, every mouth ſhall acknowledge Thee, Every tongue bee a trumpet of Thy praiſe; every eye looke up, Every knee bow, Every ſtature ſtoope to Thee, and all hearts ſhall feare Thee. And all that within us. Even our bowels; Thoſe our bowels, that (but for Thee) had flowen, we know not whither: Even our bones; thoſe bones, that (but for it) had been ſhivered bone from bone, one from another, all ſhall ſay, Who is like unto Thee ô Lord in Mercy? Who is like unto Thee, glorious in holineſſe, fearefull in praiſe; doing wonders, wonders of Mercy, as this Day, upon us all, to bee held by us and our poſteritie, in an everlaſting remembrance?

Glorie be to thee ô Lord, glorie be to Thee: Glorie be to Thee, and glory be to Thy Mercie, the Super omnia, the moſt glorious of all thy great and high Perfections. Glorie be to Thee, and glorie be to it: To it, in Thee; and to Thee for it. And that by all thy works, in all places, and at all times. And, of all Thy works, and above them all, by us here; by the hearts and lungs of us all, in this place, this day, for this Day, for the Mercy of this day; for the Mercy of it above all mercies, and for the Worke of this day above all the Pſal.136.1. works of it. And, not this day only, but all the daies of our life; even as long as Thy mercy endureth, and that endureth for ever; for ever, in this world; for ever, in the world to come. Per, through the Ciſterne and Conduit of all Thy mercies, IESVS CHRIST.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL, On the V. of November, ANN. DOM. MDCXVI.

()

PSAL. Chap. XXXVII. Ver. III.

Venerunt filii uſque ad partum, & virtus non eſt pariendi.

The children are come to the birth, and there is not ſtrength to bring forth.

I Have taken this peece, and no more. More I could not (you ſee:) It will not fit our turne, or this day (the fore-end of the verſe:) This is a day of trouble, rebuke, blaſphemie, cannot we ſay. We muſt ſay: This is a day, not of trouble, but of joy; not of rebuke, but of praiſe; not of blaſphemie, but of thankſgiving, with us. And ſo may we ſay too, and yet keepe theſe words for our ground, ſtill. Nothing lets, but that one and the ſame day, may be, both a day of Ioy, and of Sorrow. They that have the day, and they that loſe the day, the day is but one: but, to the winner, a Ioyfull day; to the loſer, not ſo; but, a day of Sorrow, and of blaſphemie, otherwhile. And ſo was this day, a day of Sorrow, to ſome: they might have taken up the whole verſe, as it ſtands: thoſe (I meane) that, do what they can, muſt be faine to father the children, that this day were comming, but came not forth. That they came not forth, the want of ſtrength to be delivered, made it to them a day of Sorrow (ſome ſay, of blaſphemie, too:) Not ſo, to us. To us, a day of praiſe and thankes; that they loſt their ſo looked-for and longed-for children; that they were not borne, who if they had been borne, would have beene the bane of us all. To us then, as this, a day; So this, a verſe of joy.

The

The Summe. The words are (in Hebrew) of the nature of a Proverb; and uſed by them, as a By-word, upon the defeating of any plot. Not, every defeating; but then, when a plot is cunningly contrived, and cloſely followed, and is neere brought to the very point to be done, yet not done though; but defeated, even then: then, take they up this Proverbe and ſay, Venerunt, &c.

And, two waies take they it up, thereafter as the deſigne is. If it be bad, yet well layed, and well ſeconded, and for all that, in the end diſappointed; then utter they it cheerefully, Aha, the children, &c. but as GOD would, &c. by way of gratulation. But, if good, and for a while come fairely forward, but in the end prove to nothing; then take they it up, with a ſigh, Alas, the children, &c.

It cannot be denied, but good King Ezekiah, whoſe the words are, ſpake them here in ſome griefe. Griefe, two waies; For 1 firſt, grieved hee was to heare how Rabſakeh had raged and raved, and ſpewed out moſt horrible blaſphemies. Faine would he, he and his men, rather than their lives, have beene at him for it. They were even great with this (as it were) and the children come to the birth; But their ſtrength ſerved them not, they durſt not give him a word, for feare of a further miſchiefe, if they ſhould provoke him. Now, there is no more hard and grievous caſe in the world, than when a man ſhall be forced to heare blaſpheming, and not bee in caſe to anſwer it home.

2 But, the King of Aſſhur (his Maſter) was not farre off, with his forces; but at the ſiege of Libna (not paſt a dozen mile off;) That Towne, not like to hold out long, and then have at Ieruſalem, and they (GOD wote) but meanely provided to welcome him. But a poore remnant, to ſo huge an hoſt; So huge, as with their very Verſe 25. feet they dried up rivers, as they went. Non erant vires, was their caſe right; and this was here a ſecond griefe.

For the words, though they ſound, as if the Queene or ſome great Ladie, were in child-birth, yet no ſuch matter. All is ſpoken by Allegorie; and no woman, but the State of the Kingdome, here meant.

Eſay 62.4. Ezek.23.36. Hoſe.1.6. Eſay 47.1. Verſe 22. And it is no new thing to ſet forth States by women. The Prophets doe it oft: Eſays Hephſiba; Ezekiels Ahola, and Aholiba; Hoſee's Loruhamah, all ſhew it. Nothing more common with them, than the Daughter of Babel for the State of the Chaldæans; the Daughter of Sion for the State of the Iewes.

Hoſe.4.12. And not to women only, but to women with child; then ſpecially, when there comes any ſhrewd plunges upon an Eſtate. Filia Sion quaſi parturiens (Hoſ. 4. 12.) Sion is ready to crie out, in the Old: And, in the New, the Church (then) hard beſtead, is re-Apoc.12.2. preſented by a Woman ready to fall in labour (Apoc. 12. 2.) And States, when they would be delivered of ought (would, and cannot) as it were the throwes of child-birth ſeeme to be upon them; and this Proverbe, then not unfitly applied to them; Venerunt, &c.

A Woman, her time is come, and ſtrives to bring forth, and cannot, not having Gen.35.16,17. 1 Sam.4.19. ſtrength for it; this (we know) is a caſe of great extremitie: we know it by Rachel (Gen. 35.) by Hophni's wife (1 Sam. 4.) both which were in the caſe here; at the point to be delivered, and wanted ſtrength, and it coſt them both their lives.

Now, as when a woman is ſo, all about her are at their wits end; know not what to doe, or whither to turne themſelves: No more did Ezekias; but even turnes to the Verſe 2. Prophet Eſay: (as, at ſuch times, Prophets ſhall have their turnes; not oft, beſides.) To him they ſend for Leva orationem: Lift up thy prayer; Prayer, now: for, but in prayer, no helpe is left; if that relieve us not, wee are gone. This ſpake then Ezekias in griefe.

It grieves me on a day of joy, to hold you ſo long in a point of ſorrow; but, the turning all into preſent joy will make amends. To that, I come.

This, for the preſent, was their caſe; but this was not their caſe, long. For, within a while after, before the end of the Chapter, the very ſame words, by the very ſame perſons, were (or might have beene) taken up, in a farre other, more joyfull key.

Then,

Then, when the King of Aſſur, he that caſt them into this agonie, as he was upon removing to come towards them (and ſo, the children (as it were) come to the very birth, indeed:) GOD put a ring in his noſe, turned him about home againe, as faſt as ever he could, upon newes of invaſion of his country, by the Æthiopian: When, being ſo neere come to the birth, he came not, had not the power to come on foot toward them; then (I hope) the caſe was altered: then might we have ſaid this Text as an Io pæan, with joy, Venerunt, &c. Verſe 29. Verſe 9.

And this (lo) is our very caſe, this day. For, why are we here met, but that (as the Text is) a birth there ſhould, this day (the fift of November, this very Tueſday) have beene with us? ſhould have beene, but was not: That it was not: This day ſhould have been a Diſmall day; that it was not ſo. A birth was in bearing, and venerunt ad partum (I promiſe you:) that it was not borne, that it was partus non partus, a birthleſſe birth, it is (with us) a day of joy: and as this, a Day; ſo this, a Text of joy: and thankes be to GOD, it is ſo. And we ſay theſe very words of Ezekias, not as (here) he did, but, as after he might have, and as we, this day, may ſpeake them, with a cheerefull accent, Venerunt ad partum, &c.

There be in the Text, two parties, which make us two parts: 1 the Children, and 2 the Mother. The Children, in the very firſt word: The Mother in the laſt: Pariendi it is here; Parienti it is in 2 Reg. 19. If there be no ſtrength pariendi, it is, becauſe there is none parienti. Of theſe two, two things are here ſaid: One affirmed, The other denied. and Diviſino. I. II. 2 King. 19. 3.

Affirmed; the children were readie: Denied; the mother not, non erant. The children not unwilling; for they were come: the mother unable; for, by that time they were come, her ſtrength was gone. The end is left, for us to gather: For, if no ſtrength to beare, no birth there will be; No more there was. And, that there was not, it is holyday with us, to day.

Applying all to our caſe, I am to tell you firſt, 1. Theſe children, who they were: 2. and ſecondly, how neere to the birth they came: 3. thirdly, of the ſtrength to bring them forth, the failing of it, and how it came to faile: Vpon theſe, two queſtions; 1 One, why they were not ſuffered to come forth? 2 Why they were ſuffered to come ſo farre? 4. And laſt of all, of the Tu ergo, or inference upon all this: Which is not that which Ezekiah inferres (the next verſe) Tu ergo leva orationem: But another ergo, as it were a new birth of ours, Tu ergo leva gratiarum actionem. Yes, yes: That, and leva orationem too: And ſo let us lift up our prayer, and for nothing more, than that we may raiſe a good levie of thankes indeed, to ſend up to GOD that there was no ſtrength to bring it forth, when it was ſo neere brought. Verſe 2.

THE Children, are the firſt word, and ſo offer themſelves to be begun with. And with them, we muſt beginne: For, on them all depends, whether the Day ſhall be kept, or the Text uttered, with joy or not. For (indeed) primâ facie, it may ſeeme to be but ſomewhat an unkindly joy, to take pleaſure in the periſhing of children, when they be come to the birth. Yet ſuch may the children be, that are to come, as it makes no matter. Nay, as we well may wiſh, they may; and well rejoyce, if they doe miſcarrie there, and come no further. I. The children. 1 Who they were.

To beginne, from the beginning. There read we of the Seed of the Woman, and the Seed of the Serpent: we are backe at our Text ſtraight. If it be the womans Seed, ſave it alive in any wiſe, let it come, not onely to the birth, but, from the birth, well; and if by any miſchance it doe not, ſay the words of the Text, but ſay them with griefe, Ve- Gen. 3. 15.

nerunt, &c. On the other ſide, if it be the Seed of the Serpent, away with it, let it not come to the birth: if it doe, let it not be borne, ſtifle it in the wombe, and be glad when you have done, and ſay with joy and ſpare not, Venerunt, &c.

And yet I cannot tell neither, whether we make the rule ſo generall, as to ex-
Heb. 11. 23. tend to all the womans Seed. But, if the children be, as of Moſes it is ſaid, Heb. 11. ἀστεῖοι, proper ſweet children: Nay, if they be but according to kinde, regular births, when they be come ſo farre, it is griefe, if they come no further. But, otherwhiles, there fall out theſe ſame παρεκδόσεις φύσεως, Naturæ errores, Miſhapen monſtrous births; And then, in that caſe, and for ſuch, it skills not when they be thither come, if farther they come not. Yea, I dare ſay, it will not diſcontent the unhappie parents that begate and bare them, though this Verſe be verified of them, that when they come to the birth, they might not be borne, but have the wombe for their grave, and no ſtrength to deliver them.

Since then, upon the matter, all is thereafter as the children be, our firſt enquirie is to be, what theſe children were? Where let me tell you this, you ſhall not looke for ſuch children, as women goe with: (the Verſe is proverbially, not verbally to be underſtood:) Not of any womans birth; none there was, at the ſpeaking it. Ezekias meant it of Senacheribs intent, to ſacke Ieruſalem: and we of their attempt or enterpriſe, this day, to have made a maſſacre of us all. Of them, that went big with this monſter.

To begin with the ſoule then, of theſe children. For, there is not onely fructus ventris, there is partus mentis: the mind conceives, as well as the wombe: the word [conceiving] is like proper, to both. Men have their wombe, but it lieth higher, in them; as high as their hearts; and that which is there conceived, and bred, is a birth. So, I
Pſal. 7. 14. find, the Holy Ghoſt in the Pſalme calleth it; Behold, he travaileth with miſchiefe, he hath conceived ſorrow and brought forth ungodlineſſe. And that is, when an evill man, in the evill wombe of his heart, ſhall hatch or conceive ſome deviliſh device, and goe with it as big as any woman goes with her child, and be even in paine, till he have brought it.
Matt. 15. 18, 19. This is the birth here meant: and there, in the heart, is the matrix or conceptorie place, of all miſchiefe. Thence (ſaith our SAVIOVR) de Corde exeunt, From the heart they come all.

Vſually they ſay in Schooles, Conceptus, conceptio; partus, opus: the conceipt is a kind of conception; and the worke, a kind of birth: the imagination of the heart is an embrio, conceived within; the work now brought to paſſe, is a child borne into the world. Nay, they goe further, to more particularities, and cary it along through all the degrees of child-bearing. 1 When a device is intended, then is (ſay they) the child conceived (as it were.) 2 When projected and plotted handſomely; then, the child articulate. 3 When once actuated, and ſet in hand, then is it quick. 4 When ſo farre brought, as all is ready; then, the child is come to the birth. 5 And when, actum eſt, all is done, and diſpatched, the child is borne. 6 But, if it fall out otherwiſe, than was looked for, no ſtrength to bring it forth; then have you a dead-borne child. 7 And looke, with the naturall mother
Iohn 16. 21. what joy there is, when there is a man-child borne into the world; the ſame, for all the world, is there with theſe bad men, when their imaginations proſper. And, what griefe the poore woman hath, at the periſhing of the fruit of her body; the like (in a manner) is there with them, when their powder will take no fire. So have you the ſoule, or ſpirituall part to beginne with.

Will ye ſee the body alſo, in the birth of this day? You may, even ad oculum, have it laid out before you. In imitation of the naturall wombe, wherein we lay, and whence we come all, there is (by analogie) another artificiall, as art doth frame it. Such I meane, as was the Trojan horſe, of which the Poet----Vterumque armato milite complent, the belly or wombe, when it was full of armed men: and ſo many armed men as there were, ſo many children, after a ſort, might be ſaid to be in it. And, if that: may we not affirme as much of the vault, or cellar, with as good reaton? The verſe will hold of it too----Vterumque nitrato pulvere complent. The uterus, or wombe of it, crammed as full with barrels of powder, as was the Trojan horſe, with men of armes. This odds onely. Every one of theſe children, every barrell of powder, as much, nay more force in it to doe miſchiefe, than twentie of thoſe in the Trojan horſes bellie.

The more I thinke of it, the more points of correſpondence do offer themſelves to me, of a birth and comming to a birth, and that in every degree. 1 The veſſels firſt give forth themſelves, as ſo many embrio's: 2 The vault, as the womb, wherein they lay ſo long: 3 They that conceived this device were the mothers, cleare: 4 The fathers, were the fathers (as they delight to be called) though, oft, little more than boyes; but here, right fathers, in that they perſwaded, it might be, why not? might be lawfull; nay, meritorious, then: ſo, it was they, that did animate, gave a ſoule (as it were) to the treaſon. 5 The conception was, when the powder, as the ſeed, was conveighed in: 6 The articulation, the touching of them, in order, juſt as they ſhould ſtand: 7 The covering of them, with wood and faggots, as the drawing a skin, over them: 8 The Venerunt ad partum, when all was now ready, traine and all: 9 The Mid-wife, he that was found, with the match about him, for the purpoſe: 10 And, partus, the birth ſhould have been upon the giving fire. If the fire had come to the powder, the children had come to the birth, incluſivè, had beene borne. But, Non erant vires (which, I turne) there was no fire given: and ſo, partus they wanted, as GOD would.

And, that onely wanted: for, all the reſt held to an haire. Nothing, that could be in a birth, was wanting: all, to be pointed at, from point to point; that, the Text is fitly enough applied to it. By this time, ye ſee the children, both body and ſoule. Now, when lookes the mother; when reckons ſhee, her time will come?

2 How neere the birth.

Will ye now (which is the ſecond point) weigh a little better, what is in theſe three words, venerunt ad partum. 1 Firſt, they were not upon their way, comming; but, venerunt, they were even come. 2 And come; not, verſus, toward; but even, ad, to. 3 Ad, to; not, loca partui vicina, ſome parts neere, or next to it; but, ad partum, to the very birth-place, the neck, or orifice of the matrice. Or, if you will take partum, for the time; not ad tempora partui propinqua, within ſome few daies of their reckoning; but, ad partum, to the very time, the day, and within a very little, to the houre it ſelfe; it miſſed not much: (that is) as neere, as neere might be. If ever there were a venerunt ad partum, and no partus upon it, here it was.

And, if you marvell, it was ad partum, and not ad parturitionem, firſt: Marvell not at that; why, it would have been a very ſhort travell, that. That of the Prophet (in the ſixtie ſixt Chapter) Antequam parturiat, peperit, would have been fulfilled in it; ſhe would have been delivered, before ever ſhe had fallen in labour. To the birth they came, then. And you will remember, how farre they came, how many degrees they paſſed, before they got thither. They came, 1 to generation; they came, 2 to conception; they came, 3 to articulation, 4 to vivification, 5 to full maturitie; and yet, none of all theſe, our venerunt, here. Paſſed all, and every one of theſe, never ſtaid, till they came 6 even ad partum, could come no further, unleſſe they had come forth: which GOD forbid; and ſo He will, you ſhall ſee. For, thus have we done now, with the firſt part (the Children.) Chap. 66. 7.

II. The Mothers.

Now to the Mothers part. The Children came to the birth, and: The right and, the kindly Copulative, were, To the birth they came, and borne they were; In a kind conſequence, who would looke for other? It is here, Venerunt, & non: thither they came, and no farther; there ſtopped. Ad, in [ad partum] is but uſque ad, excluſivè; that is, to it they came; through it, they came not.

And, why came they not? By meanes (as is here ſet downe) of a Non erant. Somwhat there was not, that would have beene; ſomwhat miſſing: a non erant there was, whatſoever it was.

What non erant was that? It was not, Non erat ingenium (I am ſure:) Peſtilent wit they lacked none, as deepe, as dangerous an invention, as ever came into the braine of man. Neither came it thither, or was bred there without the Seed of the Serpent. Nor can it be ſaid, Non erat, that they wanted will; For, ſo maliciouſly were they bent in that wretched will of theirs, as they reſolved to know neither friend nor foe, but up with all together. Nor did they want opportunitie, of a place: Got the vault firſt, and the cellar, after. No, nor meanes: had their iron-tooles; had powder enough, and good ſtowage for it. Theſe they had, all: yet Non erant (ſaith the Text;) what Non erant might that be? Non erant vires, they had no ſtrength.

3 Her want of ſtrength.

To a birth, there goe two things: 1 The children muſt be come thither, to the birth-place. 2 When the children be come thither, there muſt be ſtrength, at leaſt as much to deliver them. Ad partum, opus eſt nixu; ad nixum, opus eſt viribus: To a birth, there goes a kinde of ſtreſſe; to a ſtreſſe, there is required ſome ſtrength. Nixus inanis ſine viribus; and nixu inani nihil paritur: To no purpoſe is the ſtreſſe, if there be no ſtrength, but all in vaine: And, if that be in vaine, there will no birth be (No more there was) but the child periſh; and if the mother ſcape, it is well; but (oft) they goe both. And ſo fell it out here; the children dead-borne, and the Mother died for it too. To ſpeake without allegorie. To the producing of any effect, two things there goe: 1 Counſell, and 2 Strength: not, counſell alone; but, counſell and ſtrength. For as ſtrength without counſell, will produce but a mola: So counſell, without ſtrength, will prove but an aborcement. We ſee daily, many excellent devices come to nought; all, becauſe they be not ſtrongly followed to execution. Strength then, there would be.

And, ſtrength they had not. Not ſtrength? yes (ſure) that had they. To follow them, in the allegorie; the mother was ſtrong, elſe would the children never have come ſo farre, as they did, to be ſo ripe and readie for the deliverie. And, the children were ſtrong children; ſtrong enough, but with one ſmall ſparke, to have ſent us all up aloft, if we had beene twice as many more. To leave the allegorie: Strength they had enough, to handle the pickaxe, to dig deepe into ſtone walls; ſtrength enough, to lay in great barrels, and thoſe all full, and a great many of them. Strength enough, to remove them up and down, as they might ſtand beſt for the purpoſe; and to clap on iron and ſtones, and wood enough, upon them. And, how then was there no ſtrength?

You will eaſily marke, Vires is the plurall number; and ſo, many ſtrengths there be: and, that he ſaith not [Vires] ſimply, any ſtrength at all; but, vires pariendi, ſtrength to bring forth. Vires, is one thing; vires pariendi, another. Vires, they had; vires veniendi, ad partum: Elſe, had they never come ſo far; but, Vires pariendi that, they had not.

For, partus is opus (we ſaid:) and nothing was done. All the while, till they came ad partum, their ſtrength ſerved them well. At the inſtant, they ſhould have beene brought forth, it failed them, Strength there was, to carrie it along, to bring it ſo far: but not pariendi, to bring it to iſſue.

To bring a thing to iſſue, that, paſſes the divels power. He could give them the counſell (as, no doubt, he did: it was too deviliſh, to grow in any mans head.) But, the ſtrength to iſſue, that lieth not, in his hand. Ye may be ſure, if it had, they had had that too. He longed, as much as they, to heare the blow, and ſee the ſight. He, that helped them to lay in the powder, would have helped to have put to the fire, had it beene in his power. But it was more than they could doe: the ſtrength to iſſue is GODS ever, and He tooke it from them.

Pſal. 68. 20. Domini ſunt exitus: The Iſſues of all attempts are in the hands of GOD, them He reſerves to Himſelfe, as His owne peculiar; yea, even of evill attempts. For, howſoever He be not at the beginning of them; at the end, He muſt be, or no end will be: Domini ſunt exitus. The horſe may be prepared to the battell; the lots, caſt in the lap; the cellar made ready for the powder; and the powder, for the cellar: And, when all is done, that the wit or malice of the divell, or man, can doe or deviſe, comes GOD, and daſhes all in a moment. The Counſell of Achitophel; Hamans high favour; the great Fleet at Ezion-geber; Senacherib's huge hoſt: defeats them all. For, counſels may be in the heart of man, and words at his tongues end, and acts at his fingers end; yet nothing ſhall be ſaid or done, unleſſe GOD will ſo have it. He gives or denies ſucceſſe, as Him pleaſes. That when the children are upon the point to be delivered, there ſhall be ſtrength, or no ſtrength to doe it, as pleaſes Him. And heer, it pleaſed Him not: ſo, no birth there was; but quando filii venerunt, vires abierunt, when the children were come, all the ſtrength was gone.

It ſeemes, it was ſomewhat doubted, leſt when it came to the pinch, this ſtrength ſhould faile: therefore was there ſtrength ſought, even the ſtrength of prayers; to leva orationem, they gat them; but, they ſent to the wrong partie: Not to Eſay, but to Balaam, to curſe, where GOD did bleſſe; and to bleſſe that curſed birth of theirs, which His verie ſoule abhorred. So many prayers were ſaid, they might have a good heire. They ſay, there were ſo, for Queene Maries child: But, ſhe had no child to come, theſe had. But, all in vaine: when the time came, for all their Maſſes, and Proceſſions, and Roſaries, and Ieſus's Pſalters, it would not bee. No children came; ſtrength there was not. Num. 23. 8.

And will you know, how it came to faile them, this ſtrength? Ye may, and never goe out of the Text, or the termes of child-bearing. Or ever the birth was fully come, one of the complices fell to be with child; and no remedy, but he muſt needs be delivered before his time; had not the power to keepe his hand from the paper, and ſo diſcloſed it. And, diſcloſe a treaſon, and the neck of it is broken, the ſtrength of it is gone; as Samſon's ſtrength ſoone was, when the Philiſtines knew once, where it lay. And this was the ſtrength, and none but this, that failed them. An eaſie ſtrength (one would thinke) to hold ones tongue, or to hold the fingers ſtill. That, had he not: but for lacke of that, muſt needs be ſcribling; and that marr'd the faſhion of the birth, quite. His not having the ſtrength, not to bring forth his, made, they had not the ſtrength, to bring theirs forth. His putting his hand to the paper, made, there could be no fire put to the powder; made, the mid-wife was intercepted; and ſo, the birth, though neere the delivery, yet never delivered. Iudg. 16. 18.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither: for when this worke of darkeneſſe was brought to light, the light was ſo dimme, and the riddle ſo darke, even then; that, for all that bringing to light, the children were comming forward to the birth, ſtill. Till ſtrength was given to deliver us from this birth, by another travaile. For, a travaile I will call it, the ſtudying, and the bringing forth of the hidden myſterie, of the burning of the paper, the riddling of that riddle. For, ſo came out, who the Children were and of what element they were made, what, and whereabout the womb was, they lay in. So by a birth, and by that birth, wee were delivered, from this. That birth ſmote all dead. For, it was found, even ſo: and then came proſtratio virium indeed. Then, all ſtrength (indeed) was quite and cleane taken from them. That being taken from them, they were not delivered; and by their not being delivered, we were all delivered.

To the joy now. Divide the Text: Venerunt ad partum, is their joy: Non erant vires is ours. That, theirs; for a time: this, ours for ever. To make their griefe the greater, when it came, they were for a while, put in joy. Glad were they (I dare ſay) to ſee it goe current, kept cloſe ſo long. They even itched for joy at it, and fell into a fooliſh paradiſe: provided a Protector and all. Comes me Non ſunt vires, all their joy was at an end, and with that began their Sorrow. We by their griefe, ſhall beſt conceive our owne joy, taking the whole Verſe intirely together. 1 The Ioy of Non erant vires.

A griefe it was, and it went to their hearts, theſe children, that they came not. A double griefe, that when they held well ſo long, and were ſo likely to come, yet they came not; had ſtrength all the while, had it not, then. Venerunt ad partum, & venerunt ad portum are much alike. Any wrack is a griefe; but no griefe to the griefe of that wrack, that is made, even in the very havens mouth. To goe the voyage well, and arrive well, and then, before the very port to ſinke, and be caſt away! To bring the game to the upſhot, and then to loſe it! It trebled their griefe, that ſo many Ladies Pſalters, and Ieſus's Pſalters were ſaid for it; and that neither Ieſus nor our Ladie bleſſed the birth no better. And laſt, that the children periſhed; and periſhed not alone, but the mothers went too, and ſome of the fathers, for companie. It ſhould have beene parientes pepererunt: it was parentes, or parientes (if you will) perierunt.

Now looke, how many waies they were grieved, and ſaid Alas, for venerunt ad partum, tum, Alas for non erant vires; ſo many waies doe we rejoyce, and ſay, It is well, that venerunt ad partum: Thankes be to GOD, that Non erant vires. 1. Firſt, for non erant vires, by it ſelfe: that, defeated it was. 2. Then, for Venerunt ad partum, & non erant vires, together: that it proſpered ſo long, and yet, defeated it was; this was Gaudete with an iterum dico. 3. Then, that without any leva orationem on our parts; without any on ours, and againſt ſo great a levie of theirs, of I know not how many prayers, and proceſsions, and all for the proſperous ſucceſſe of a buſineſſe knowne to none but the Superiors. 4. And, to make it terque quaterque, that we ſaw them come tumbling downe, that made full account to have ſeene us flie up.

That we were delivered from a danger ſo neere; brought to ſo narrow a point; we not praying, nor ſo much as once thinking on the matter, but delivered as it were in a dreame: Our ſelves not onely delivered from, but they that ſo ſought ours, delivered to their owne deſtruction; brought not forth, but were themſelves brought forth to Iudas's end, the end of all traitors: and their children, not brought out, but, as ἐκτρώματα, pulled out of the wombe of the cellar, piece and piece, and never ſaw the Sunne alive, or the Sunne them; pitie it ſhould.

Pſal. 126. 1.

Shall I now tell you a reaſon or two, why, Non erant vires pariendi? 1 one out of pariendi; 2 the other, from Non erant vires.

2 The Reaſons of Non erant vires.

1. This pariendi was indeed pereundi; the bringing forth a quantitie of powder, the periſhing of a whole Parliament. They were not; but, put caſe they had come forth (it is well, we are in caſe, to put this caſe) certainely, they had beene Benoni's, Sons of Sorrow, to this whole land; Icabod's right, Our glorie had beene gone cleane. For, what a face of a Common-wealth had here beene left? Excluſivè they came ad partum: if, incluſivè they had, their incluſivè had beene our excluſivè. We had beene ſhot off, and that out of this life and this world, every one. Venerunt, if they had come ad partum; if they, ad partum, we ad perniciem. Non erant vires: If there had, theſe vires had been virus to us, and their pariendi our pereundi. If thoſe children had not beene loſt, many fathers had beene loſt; many children had loſt their fathers, and many wives their huſbands. There had beene a great birth of Orphanes and Widowes, brought forth at once. What manner of birth ſhould this have beene, firſt in it ſelfe, then to us? In it ſelfe: we ſaid, for Vipers, there ſhould be no ſtrength, to deliver them. Were not theſe Vipers? the wombe, they lay in, muſt have beene rent, for them to come forth: were they not the brood of Vipers? What talke you of a Viper, that ſometime (it may be) ſtings a child to death; or an elder body, if it be not looked to in time? What are Vipers, to them, that at once, would not have ſtung, but have ſent up, and torne in peeces, a King, a Queene, a Prince, and I know not how many of the Nobles, Clergie, Commons; all the Eſtates of a Realme, a whole Countrie, their owne Countrie, all at one blaſt? We ſaid, for Monſters, there ſhould be no ſtrength to deliver them. Theſe were ſuch monſters, as not in Chriſtendome alone, but, even in Afrike (that mother of monſters) the Turkes, and Moores, and all that heard of it, were amazed, that ever the earth ſhould beare ſuch a brood of miſcreants. For, they ſhould not (as children) have cried at their birth, but rored as devils; or, as if all the infernall furies had broke out of hell together. Let this ſerve: it was ſo out of meaſure bad, as it was too bad, ever to be brought. What marvell then, if nature ſhrunke in and would give no ſtrength, for ſuch a birth as that.

1 Why they not ſuffered to come forth. Gen. 35. 18. 1 Sam. 4. 21.

2. Shall I tell you another, why non erant vires? I will: It is ſomwhat a ſtrange one, but it is raiſed out of the words of the Text, and it is a birth borne of late, and chriſtened by the name of a Non erant vires, that you may know, they be a-kin, this and that: And ſo (I hope) it comes not out of ſeaſon, ſince for that childs ſake, this (I hope) fared never a whit the better.

You cannot but remember a clauſe not long ſince printed, and ſo (as it were) a child but lately borne, a Cardinals child it is (I meane the Tenet late taken up at Rome:) That, all is now to goe, all Chriſtianitie to ſtand or fall, by ſunt, or non ſunt vires.

The old Chriſtians never knew of any ſuch birth as this: Id fuit, quia deerant vires, ſaith the Cardinall. As much to ſay as, if they now in theſe dayes, be ſo as they were, carrie carrie themſelves quietly, it is quia non ſunt vires: and to hold no longer, than donec erunt; and then you are like to heare of them, to have them goe againe with ſuch another birth. (You ſhall have them as milde as Gregorie the firſt, when they have no ſtrength; but as fierce as Gregorie the ſeventh, when they have.)

Nay, and they would beare the world in hand, this child may claime kindred of the Fathers: that this was the mind of the Bleſſed Saints, and Martyrs, in the perſecutions of the Primitive Church. That, with them, all went by Si adeſſent vires; and if then they had had ſtrength, never an Emperour ſhould have kept his Crowne upon his head. For, it was neither allegiance, conſcience, Chriſtian duty, nor reſpect, that held them in. Id fuit, quia deerant vires: as (if they had not beene wanting) full well they ſhould have underſtood. That they were gentle and meeke, gramercie non erant vires; that and nothing elſe. O write a booke for Gods ſake, de gloriâ Martyrum (Turonenſis ſo hath) of the glorious Martyrs that ſuffered then; but it was, becauſe they had no ſtrength: elſe, the Emperours ſhould have ſuffered, not they.

But, they mightily wrong the Fathers, to father this opinion on them. Two hundred yeares after CHRIST, in the midſt of the fervour of perſecutions, Tertullian tells us another tale; that they had ſtrength then, more than enough; and ſo, ſuffered then, upon a better quia, than quia non erant vires. Well neere two hundred yeares after that, the Eccleſiaſticall Storie ſheweth, under Iulian the Apoſtata, and under Valens the Arrian, they wanted no ſtrength then: (the greater part of the Apoſtates Armie being Chriſtians; and the chiefe Leaders and braveſt Companies, under the Arrian, being Orthodoxe.) And two hundred yeares yet after that, againſt the Lombards, Gregorie ſaith, there was then ſtrength enough, to have left them neither King nor Duke, if all had gone by vires, then. But, he (good man) might not miſcere ſe, meddle with ought that might be the death, cujuſquam, of any one man. And theſe would have beene the death of I know not how many, but that Non erant vires. No ſuch children then, as thoſe, this Day brought forth. It is not the Divinitie of the old Chriſtians, but of the new Ieſuits, this. They muſt take the child to themſelves: It is no babe of the Fathers, it is a brat of their owne breede; hatched in theſe daies of ours, never heard of before. And ſuch a one it is, as if it be let goe, we ſhall have a generation of monſters come of it ſoone.

He began with vires: Another ſince him ſaith; If yee have not vires, virus will ſerve as well. And ſince that, another; if vires, and virus faile too, go to it with fire-worke: pulvis Serpentis which is worſe than virus Serpentis; Serpentine powder worſe than Serpentine poyſon. Poyſon kills one by one; powder, with one puffe, diſpatcheth all. For poyſon, ye may have a counterpoyſon: No antidote for powder, if it once take fire. Poyſon gives men leave yet, to die with ſome leaſure: Powder, that it doth, it doth at once, in a moment.

To the utter confuſion of this error, that all is to goe by ſunt vires, was it, that non erant vires, this Day. And doe but marke it, that God payes them with their owne money. They put all upon this very point; in this point, GOD this Day foyled them. They goe all, by ſtrength; and that ſtrength, then failed them. All, upon Si eſſent vires: GOD tooke order quòd non eſſent vires. And GOD never let them have ſtrength, that ſo reſolve to put it; that, can they once gather ſtrength, no King, no State ſhall ſtand before them; but blow them up, ſinke them; poyſon them; one way or other, away with them all.

You ſee the reaſon, with GOD: but, ſee you not withall, next under GOD, whereto we are to aſcribe our ſafetie? Even to non erant vires. There is a point hangs by that. For, while that laſts, while ye keepe them there, ye ſhall have the Primitive Church of them; have them lie as quiet, as ſtill, as ever did the barrels in the vault, till vires (like fire) come to them; and then, off goe they: then, nothing but depoſe Kings, diſpoſe of kingdomes, abſoile ſubjects, arme them againſt their Soveraignes: then, doe they care not what. But, if the powder take not fire, then ſhall you ſtraight have bookes tending to mitigation; then, all quiet againe. Certainely, thus ſtanding, it were beſt to hold them in defectu virium, to provide ut ne ſint; to keepe them at non ſunt vires, till time, they be better minded in this point, and we have good aſſurance of it. For, minded as they are, they want no will, no virus: they tell us what the matter is; ſtrength they want, they write it, they print it; and ſi adeſſent vires, they would act it in earneſt.

2 Why they were ſuffered to come ſo far.

But yet, why was it ſuffered to come ſo farre? Why not taken ſooner? Evill (we all know) is beſt nipped in the bud; beſt (ever) deſtroyed in the Spawne. Being then ſo evill, as it was, why was it let goe all the while?

1 Reaſon on Gods part.

I will give you two reaſons: 1 One on Gods part, 2 The other on ours. 1. On Gods part: I know not how, but yee ſhall obſerve, that He loves, that He takes delight thus to doe. It is His play with Leviathan. To ſuffer his whelpes and him to have their courſe for a time, and for a long time; and then ſuddenly give them a twitch, and downe they come. Let them goe even till they come to the birth, and then come in the necke of them with a non ſunt vires, and all is marr'd.

Here in the Text, how many Countries wan Senacherib? How neere was he let come to Ieruſalem, even to Libna, within leſſe than a dozen mile? Newes came ſudden-ly, of the Blackemoores invading his Country, backe he goes, had not the power to ſtir one foot further. How farre was the Invincible Navie ſuffered to come ſailing in LXXXVIII. to caſt anchor even before the Thame's mouth, every houre ready to deliver her children aſhore. In an inſtant, a fatall faintneſſe fell upon them; their ſtrength and courage taken from them; about they turned, like a wheele; fled and had not the power to looke behind them. But, non erant vires pariendi, we all know. God loves thus to doe: and then to doe it, cum venerunt ad partum. His glorie is the greater, He can let it come ſo nigh, and then put it by; let it alone till then, and then doe it.

2 On our parts.

2. There is another on our parts. For, eaſie account, and but eaſie, would have beene made, if they had beene taken at firſt; no greater matter, that. That we might make no eaſie account, we ſcaped not eaſily, but hard and ſcant: ſo, to make our eſcape the ſtranger, and our joy the more, that it went ſo farre, and came ſo neere, and yet miſſed us.

Of it ſelfe, it is beſt, Vt malum ubi primùm contingit, ibi moriatur, Evill be cruſhed at firſt, the Serpents head troden, at his firſt peeping in, or putting it out. But GOD doth not alwaies that, which in it ſelfe, is beſt to doe: but that, which will beſt affect us, and we take in beſt part. And ſo did He this: thereby to beget in us, and bring forth of us, a new birth of praiſe and thanks according.

4 The inference.

For, now we have done with this degenerate birth of theirs, we are to ſtay a little, and ſee, if we can get another, a more kindly birth, come from our ſelves. For, barren we may not be: this deliverie from theirs, is to make us delivered of another; we to bring forth ſomewhat, for their not bringing forth.

What is that? The Text will leade us to it, if we looke but over to the next verſe. For there, when any evill travaile threatens us, we finde by Ezechia, the kindly birth then, on our parts, is Tu ergo leva orationem, a levie of prayers. Now, that being turned away, and turned away in a manner ſo miraculous, the naturall kind iſſue then, is another Tu ergò, Tu ergò leva gratiarum actionem; a new levy of thanks: a new leva, quia levatus, for His eaſing of us, of ſo heavie a chance, like to light ſo heavie on us.

At the preſent (ſure) while it was freſh, we were raviſhed with it; for the time, we ſeemed to be even with child, as if we would bring forth ſomewhat; and ſomewhat we did bring forth, even an Act, that we would from yeare to yeare, as upon this Day, bring forth and be delivered of thankes and praiſe, for this deliverie for ever. And here we are now, to act that, we then enacted: even to travaile with this new birth. God ſend us ſtrength, well to be delivered of it.

For, ſo ſhall we double our joy: 1 One joy, for the turning away of that miſcreant birth of theirs; 2 another, for the welcomming this of our owne.

This birth, we now travaile with, is a good and a bleſſed birth. Bleſſing, and glory, and praiſe, and thankes, are in bonis all; all, good in us (if any thing be good in us;) the the beſt fruits of our nature, when it is at the very beſt. And if they be brought forth, it is as it ſhould be, and as God would have it.

But if (which GOD forbid) they ſhould ei ther not come, or when they be come, our ſtrength faile, and they not brought forth, then are we at an after-deale againe; then would not this day be ſo joyfull for the miſ-going of the other, as ſorrowfull for the abortion of this. Our joy (at leaſt) not ſo entire, but mixt with ſorrow: for, there is ſorrow even to death, if we goe with ſo good a fruit and it come to the birth, and there periſh; if we ſhall but make an Act, and doe no act upon it.

We ſeeme to ſorrow at nothing more, than that many a good purpoſe there is, and many a vow made in time of need, ſickneſſe, or adverſitie (ſo many, as it is by Divines held, There be mo good purpoſes, and that by ods, in hell, than there be in heaven) but, abortive purpoſes, and vowes all. For, ô that we were but the one halfe of that we then promiſe to be, when we want and would have ſomewhat! O then, how thankfull we would be! how never forget! how faſt the children come to the birth, then! And when we have what we would, our vigor quailes preſently, our ſtrength is gone from us; & non ſunt vires pariendi. For, all the world ſeeth, nothing we bring forth. Alas, how many aborcements are there daily of theſe Children! No where may this Verſe be taken up, No where ſo oft, ſo fitly applied, No where ſo uſed upon better cauſe than this, upon the failing of good deſires and intents.

That this we may doe, to take us to leva orationem: let this be our laſt. To lift up our prayer firſt, againſt ſuch unnaturall births as that was, the Prophet Hoſee's prayer, Give them ô Lord, what wilt thou give them? a barren wombe and drie breſts. There was no ſtrength for that birth of theirs: It was well, there was not: Thanks be to God, there was not: Thanks be to GOD, for non erant vires. And, Ne ſint vires (ſay I) Never let there be ſtrength, for any like this birth; Never ſtrength, but weake hands and feeble knees, for any ſuch enterpriſe. Ne vires pariendi: Nay, ne veniant ad partum; not neither, not ſo farre: Nay, ne ad conceptionem; Nay then, ne ad generationem, if it may be. If it may not, but they ſcape thither, to the birth; then, lift up your laſt prayer, and let this be it, and let it come up to heaven, into GODS preſence, and enter in even to His eares, for the equitie of it; in all ſuch deſignes, that pariens may be ſine viribus, and partus, ſine vitâ: the mothers, no ſtrength; and the Children, no life: But child and mother periſh both, as this day, they did. And, better ſo, they periſh, than ſuch a number, than a whole countrie periſh, by their meanes. This, a Ne veniant and a Ne ſint vires, againſt theirs. Hoſee 9.14.

But, for ours, for our praiſe and thanks, Veniant, Let them come; and Sint, ô ſint vires, and let there be ſtrength, when they come; for ſuch, for ſo good a birth. Ever be there ſtrength, to kindneſſe, to thankfulneſſe, to the accompliſhment thereof, whereto we are in dutie ſo deeply bound. Strength (ever) to all honeſt and good reſolutions. Pittie, but they ſhould be ſo; Pittie, there ſhould want ſtrength for them. Well may they be conceived; come well to the birth; when they be come thither, vigor enough, to deliver them; and never, when they be come ſo farre, to miſcarrie.

We may take our light from that. It is venerunt filii: and filii is the plurall number. So, more than one: many there would be. And filii falls well with the word gratiæ, which lacks the ſingular. No ſuch phraſe, as Agere gratiam. A ſingle thanke was never heard of. And both falls well likewiſe, to quit the birth, we were quit of: For, the barrels were many and full, and ſo would our thankes be.

Againe, they would be filii; that is, ſuch as children be; and children be fleſh, bloud and bone; I meane, ſome reall, ſome ſubſtantiall thankes. Not to travaile (as it were) with winde, with a few words onely, which are but aire, and into the aire they vaniſh againe. Partus opus (yee remember) we ſaid before: ſome worke there would be. Actio gratiarum, ſomewhat actually done; leave ſome realitie behind it, as in a child there is.

Thus farre, like: but then, a difference. Come it would, not as did their ad partum excluſivè, thither and no farther; but, incluſivè, to the birth, and fro the birth; have the bleſsing of the wombe and of the breſts; of the wombe, to bring it forth; of the breſts, to bring it up, till it prooved ſomewhat worth the while.

That ſo, we may rejoyce as much in the affirmative of this birth of ours, Venerunt & ſunt vires; as we did in the negative of that of theirs, venerunt & non erant vires. So doing, GOD ſhall againe and againe turne away thoſe births, if any be in breeding; take away all ſtrength from them being bred, as to Day, He did: And give us new occaſions daily to bring Him forth praiſe and thankes, for His daily continued mercies, in delivering our King, our Land, Vs and Ours all.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL, On the V. of November, ANNO DOM. MDCXVII.

LVK. CHAP. I. VER. LXXIV, LXXV.
The VII. and VIII. Verses of Benedictus.

Vt, ſine timore, de manu inimicorum noſtrorum liberati; ſerviamus Illi,
In ſanctitate, & juſtitia coram Ipſo, omnibus diebus noſtris.

That we being delivered, from the hands of our enemies, might ſerve Him, without feare,
In holineſſe, and righteouſneſſe, before Him, all the dayes of our life.

HE children were come to the birth, and there was no ſtrength, to deliver them. (There we left, laſt.) Their not being delivered, was the cauſe, of our being delivered. (And now I goe on.) Eſay 37. 3. The Text the yeere before.

And our being delivered, was to this end, That, wee being delivered, from the hands of our enemies, might ſerve Him, &c. For I demand: Delivered wee were (as this day) why was it? Was it, that wee might ſtand, and cry out of the fouleneſſe of the fact? or ſtand, and inveigh, againſt thoſe monſters that were the Actors in it? Was it, that we might bleſſe our ſelves for ſo faire an eſcape? Or beſtow a peece of an Holy-day on GOD, for it? And all theſe we may doe; And all theſe we have done: and upon good ground, all. Yet, none of theſe the very Vt: nor we The end (or Vt) of this dayes deliverance.

delivered, that we might doe theſe. But when all is ſaid, that can be ſaid, hither we muſt come: to this Vt here, and pitch upon it: for, this is indeed, the Vt finalis; the right, the true, the proper That: That, for our deliverance, we bethinke our ſelves, how to doe Him ſervice.

Take the whole tract along, from the firſt word, Benedictus: There is viſited and redeemed in the firſt verſe: A horne, or a mighty ſalvation, in the next: After, we ſaved from them that did hate us: But you ſhall ſee, that all theſe ſuſpend ſtill, no perfect period, till you come to this. But at this, there is. Viſited, redeemed, ſaved, rightly ſaved; why all? For no other end, but that being ſo viſited, redeemed and ſaved, we might wholy addict, and give over our ſelves, to the Service of Him, who was Author of them all.

Our delivery from the Grand delivery by Chriſt.

I wote well, that principally and properly, the whole ſong referreth to the deliverance of deliverances, our finall deliverance, from our ghoſtly enemies, and from their fire (the fire of hell) by our Bleſſed Saviour; which was ſo great, as it was able to open the mouth, and looſe the tongue of a dumbe man, and make him breake forth into a Benedictus.

But, inaſmuch as in every kind, the chiefe giveth the Rule (or, as we ſay here) the Vt, to all that are from, and under it: And that, ours, and all other deliverances, that have beene, or ſhall be, are from or under that of His: Our enemies, ſet on by thoſe enemies; Ours lighted their match, at their fire (the fire of hell) and ſo doe all others, whatſoever: therefore is it, that this Text aptly may be, and uſually hath beene, ever applied to any deliverance, from any enemies whatſoever: thoſe of LXXXVIII. theſe of this Day: the ſame Vt, in all: as comming, all from the ſame principium à quo: and tending all, to the ſame finis ad quem, that here is ſet downe.

The ſame Vt.

1 The ſame cauſe From whence.

For the principium à quo; we have formerly endevoured, to ſet that ſtreight, from whence our deliverance came: Even from the goodneſſe of GOD; yet not expreſſed under that terme, goodneſſe, but under the terme of mercie, as elſewhere. As here (but a verſe before) To performe the mercie. And a little after, Through the tender mercies of our God.

Verſe 5. Verſe 11.

Mercie.

Which terme is made choice of, for two cauſes: One, it includes miſerie; The other, it excludes merit: and ſo, fitteſt for our turne.

1. Goodneſſe may be performed to one, though in good caſe: Not mercie; but to ſuch onely, as are in miſerie. In miſericordia there is miſeri, ever. And this, to put us in minde of our caſe, the extreme miſerie we had come to, but for His mercifull deliverance.

Lam 3. 22. The Text An. 1612. Pſal. 145. 9. The Text An. 1615.

2. Againe, Goodneſſe may be ſhewed to ſuch as may ſeeme ſome way to deſerve it: So cannot Mercie. For, but where Merit is wanting, Mercie is not pleaded properly. Theſe ſet us right, in the principium à quo, that we aſcribe it not to a wrong cauſe. Out of Ieremie: It was the mercie of the Lord, that we were not conſumed. Out of the Pſalme: That mercie of His, that is over all His workes.

2 The ſame end Wherto.

And now, to the finis ad quem. For, we are as eaſily, and no leſſe dangerouſly miſtaken, in that. By Mercies meanes, without all merit of ours, we were not conſumed, but delivered from ſo great a miſerie, ſo neere us: Why were we ſo? Were we liberati, to become libertines, to ſet us downe, and to eate, and to drinke healths, and riſe up, and ſee a play? was there no Vt in it? Yes: what was that? Vt ſerviamus Illi.

The Summe or Subſtance of the Text.

So, there growes an obligation out of it. For, Vt, is a conditionall, and implies ever a kind of contract, at leaſt, that which is not named, but is much uſed, Do ut des, facio ut facias. So that, the Text is of the nature of a Bond, or Covenant. And I give it not that denomination, of mine owne head: I finde it ſo called, in expreſſe termes, but a Verſe before, To remember His holy Covenant.

Contractus innominatus. Verſe 5.

The Diviſion.

A Covenant then, names it. And a Covenant divides it: For, a Covenant is ever betweene two, the two here, GOD and Vs.

I. The Covenant on GODS part, is at the fourth verſe: That we ſhould be ſaved from our our enemies. Which Covenant is here pleaded, as performed, by Him, under liberati.

The Covenant on our parts, reſts; That, then, we ſhould ſerve Him for it. His part is kept, liberati ſhewes that: Then may wee be put in ſuit, for ours, that is, for ſerviamus. II.

On GODS part, I ſet forth theſe.

1. That we were delivered. 2. That, from our enemies. 3. That, from the hands of our enemies. 4. That, without feare (for ſo it ſtands in the verſe) Vt ſine timore liberati; that, without feare being delivered. So it may be taken; and ſo it is taken, by ſundrie of the Fathers. GODS part, The Covenant.

On ours, I reckon theſe. Our Service: The matter; and the manner of it. The matter wherein: Serve Him in holineſſe, Serve Him in righteouſneſſe: not holineſſe, or righteouſneſſe alone, but to ſerve Him, in both. Our part. The Condition. The Matter.

The manner how (often, no leſſe acceptable than the ſervice it ſelfe.) 1. Vt ſine timore; that our ſervice be freely and chearefully done (now wee are out of feare.) 2. Vt Coram ipſo, That unfainedly, as before Him, not before men (before whom we may and doe often halt.) 3. And for the time of it, Vt omnibus diebus, that we faint not, or give over, but continue in it all our life long. Three qualities of ours, and indeed, of every true and faithfull ſervice. That theſe be done; And that they may be done; And that, that which ſhall be ſpoken may tend to this, that they may be done, &c. The Manner. 1 2 3

I.

VT liberati. That we being delivered. To ſhew the great equitie on GODS part of the Covenant, we ſay firſt: that we were to ſerve Him, though liberati were left out; being, or not being delivered. This to be our firſt point. The Equity of GODS Covenant.

The Noble Armie of Martyrs, it was all their caſe, they ſerved out their ſervice, without any Vt liberati, any bond of temporall deliverance. Farre from any liberati, were they three, that were upon caſting into the fire, and even then ſaid: Our GOD, whom we ſerve, He can deliver us out of thy hands, and from the firy fornace. But, if Hee will not (not deliver us) Be it knowne unto thee, O King, we will not ſerve thy gods, nor worſhip the golden image, which thou haſt ſet up. That is, ſerve Him we will, whether He deliver us or no. Will yee heare an Heroicall ſpirit, indeed? Not, Etſi me non liberârit, Though He ſhould not deliver me: but, Etſi me occîderit, yea, though He ſhould kill me, to die for it, I will doe my dutie, and ſerve Him, though. It is Iob. Theſe ſtood not upon liberati: But, deliverance, no deliverance, come of it what would, they were at a point, would and were reſolved to ſerve Him. And (οὐκ ἐν προφάσει, ad erubeſcentiam noſtram dico, I ſpeake it not to our commendation) if there were in us, any remnant of their generous ſpirit, GOD ſhould not need to come in Indentures with us. It ſavours ſomewhat of a mercenary, that. Serviamus ſhould hold, and let liberati goe, whither it would: And we, live and die, His ſervants, though He had not, or ſhould not deliver us. This is Vt, without liberati. 1 Vt, without liberati. Dan. 3. 17. Verſe 18. Iob 13. 15. 1 Cor. 6. 5.

But then, Vt, with liberati. If GOD take us, as He findes us, and ſay with the Apoſtle; Parco autem vobis, Goe to, I beare with you; and κατὰ συγγνώμην by way of indulgence, condeſcend to condition with us, if He come to Vt liberati; ſhall not that hold us? Our dutie being abſolute, depending upon no Vt, if upon ſpeciall favour, GOD will come in bonds, and let it runne in this tenour, That being delivered wee ſhall ſerve Him; elſe not: ſhall wee not then doe it? This being done, I marvell what wee can alleage, to decline our dutie; unleſſe wee meane, it ſhould be faſt with GOD, and looſe with us; He bound to doe all for us; and we free, to doe nothing for Him. 2 Vt, with liberati. 1 Cor. 7. 28. 6.

And yet a third (to magnifie His mercy, yet more, and to tye us the harder to our Covenant) 3 Vt, with liberati, firſt, before ſerviamus.

Covenant) Vt, is not onely with liberati, but with liberati, first: GOD is bound, and first bound, to doe for us, before we doe ought for Him. It is not, That we ſhould ſerve Him, firſt, and then He deliver us, after: But, that He ſhould firſt deliver us, and after, when we are delivered, then, and not before, we ſhould doe our ſervice. It is not liberandi, ſhall be, or may be, hereafter: it is liberati, are already. So we are afore-hand with Him. He hath done His, before we begin ours. Liberati, you ſee, precedes ſerviamus: liberati, the tenſe paſt; ſerviamus, but the preſent (and I would it were the preſent) I doubt, for a great part it is yet to come.

And the reaſon, why He will have it ſo to precede; is, He would have our ſervice grow out of His favours, our duty, out of His bounty. That is the right, and (indeed) the Evangelicall ſervice. If He have us at the advantage, on the hip (as we ſay) it is no great matter, then, to get ſervice at our hands. None more ſervile than we, then. But that, is the Legall, for feare. And that ſometimes He hath, but likes it not; He would have it, out of love, out of the ſenſe of His goodneſſe, have our hearts broken, with that. That, is the onely acceptable ſervice to Him, that growes out of that root. The ſerviamus that growes out of liberati; delivered and ſerve: firſt delivered, and then ſerve. This for the equity of the Covenant on GODS part.

B. The Performance of GODS Covenant.

Now come I to plead, that on GODS part this Covenant was performed, that liberati we were. Heaven and earth would riſe againſt us, and condemne us, if wee ſhould not confeſſe liberati, this day. Heaven ſaw it, and was aſtoniſhed: And it is gone over all the Earth, the fame of it. But that, we doe. The keeping of this Day, the meeting of this Aſſembly, are both to acknowledge and profeſſe, that a liberati there hath beene.

a 1 That delivered.

b Twice delivered. Pſal.71.20.

Nay, not one alone: Two there have beene: and two ſuch, as our eyes have ſeene, but our eares have not heard, neither could our Fathers tell us, of the like. Two ſuch, as no Age ever ſaw, nor can be found in any Story: That of LXXXVIII, This of DCV. (both within the compaſſe of ſeventeene yeares.) One by ſtrand, the other by land (as they ſay.) From a Fleet by Sea, from a Vault by land, de abyſſis terræ (as ſaith the Pſalme) as well, as de abyſſis maris: a Summer, and a Winter deliverance: either of them, like this of Zacharie's, able to bring Benedictus from a dumbe man. Pſal.71.28.

2 a From our enemies,

So, delivered we were. But, a delivery is a thing at large: though it be, but from a miſchance, from ſome heavie accident, it is a delivery. But, if it be from our enemies, it is ſo much the more: As, in that, there is nothing but caſualtie: in theſe, there is rancour and malice, they hate us: So this the greater danger by farre.

b Mortall enemies.

And there is much in the enemies: Of them, ſome reach but at our ſtates, lands or livelihoods: Otherſome, nothing will ſatisfie, but our lives. Every enemie is not mortall, where he is, the danger is deadly. Ours were ſuch, ſought to bring utter deſtruction on us: and not on us alone, but on ours: nor on us and ours onely, but on the whole land in generall.

c Secret enemies. Pſal.74.4.

Againe, of ſuch as be deadly, ſome are roaring enemies (the Pſalme ſo cals them) ſuch as threaten and proclaime their enmitie, like thoſe in LXXXVIII. Others lurke, like vipers, that ſting to death, without any hiſſing at all; as were ours (this day) which are the more dangerous a great deale.

More than liberati (which is) ſet free.

This made it (indeed) to be more than liberati (ours.) Liberati, is properly ſet free, and freeing is but from Servitude. This was more. Our death was ſought, and we delivered from death, and that a fearefull death, unprepared, ſuddenly, in a moment, to be ſhattered to peeces. And yet it was liberati too, in the proper ſenſe: for upon the matter, it was from both. The Prophets diviſion would have taken place in it; Qui ad mortem, ad mortem; qui ad ſervitutem, ad ſervitutem. They, that had beene blowen up, to death; they, that had beene left, to Servitude (to a State more miſerable, than death it ſelfe.) So, in one liberati, we had two. Both from that of Haman's lots, which were, to death (one that was פּוּר in Hebrew, this was πῦρ in Greeke:) And from that of Babylon, beſides, which was thraldome and confuſion. Thus were we delivered from our enemies.

Yet liberati too. Ier.43.11.

Eſther 3.7.

But

But from the hands of our enemies, is more, than from our enemies. For let the malice of an enemie be what it will, if his hands be weake, or ſhort, or we farre enough from them: the matter is ſo much the leſſe. But if we come within his reach, if he get us within his hands, then GOD have mercie on us. 3 The hands of our enemies, not our enemies.

Specially, if there be in his hands, a knife thus engraven, To cut the throats of the Engliſh herctikes, as in LXXXVIII. divers ſo engraven in Spaniſh, were brought from the Fleet, and ſhewed. Or if there be in his hands, a match, readie to give fire, to XXX. barrels of powder (not ſo few.) If the hands be ſuch: that is then a delivery, not from our enemies only, but from their hands, or (as we ſay) from their very clutches. Ye will marke, that thorow all the Pſalmes, ever the part is ſtill enforced: Not from the Lions, but from the Lions pawes: from the hornes of the Vnicornes, from the teeth of the Dogge: So here, from the hands, from the bloudy hands of our enemies. Pſal.22.14. 12. 124.6.

Further I ſay, it is more, to be delivered from their hands, than out of them. For, if (out) then (in) firſt. They muſt firſt be, in the hands, that are delivered out of them. But from them, that may be from comming in them at all. The better deliverance of the twaine. And that was ours: And that was CHRISTS: He is ſaid, to have looſed the ſorrowes of hell, Non quibus nexus eſt, ſed ne necteretur, ſaith Auguſtine. Not, wherewith He was bound; but that He might not be at all bound with them. So we, not by taking us out, but keeping us from, from their hands, from the hands of our enemies. 4 From their hands, not out of them. In Act.2.24.

Let me yet ſtay a little. For (me thinkes) we may finde in this word, not onely our deliverance, but even the very manner, and the meanes of it. Not in liberati, the Latine: but, in Saint Lukes owne words; ῥυσθέντες, that will come home to both. Delivered, the Manner of it, Eruti.

ῥυσθέντες, that is, properly, eruti. Eruti, that fits us, for the manner, two wayes.

Eruere, is de tenebris in lucem educere. Out of ſome darke deepe hole (as it might be the cellar) to bring forth ſomething to light (as it might be thoſe ſame vaſa mortis, veſſels there couched, and deſtined to the blowing us all up.) It muſt be ſome darke vault or pit, Vnde, from whence: well therefore ſaid of us eruti, that were delivered from a pit-danger, a danger under ground, in abyſſis terræ, in the deepe of the earth. From a darke hole. Pſal.7.13.

Secondly, eruere, the compound is, from ruere (the ſimple) that is, from a ruine. Not as if we ſhould have fallen into the pit, but that, there was there beſtowed within it, that which would have ſent us up, that downe we ſhould have come, have fallen downe, all to peeces. Ruina it would have beene, and therefore eruti, right. And they talke of helping incendium ruinâ: Here, there had beene incendium and ruina both, and neither helped other, but both beene paſt all helpe. From a ruine or fall.

Delivered from a ruine; But eruere is then in kinde, when we are ſo delivered from a ruine, as with their ruine, that ſought ours. So it was, we parted not of even hands, we from them, and they from us, neither of both, a fall. No: we fell not (no fall with us:) they fell, and had a foule fall. We were ſo delivered from their hands, as they delivered into ours. We eruti: they ruti and cæſi both, fell and were ſlaine. The pit they digged, they fell into themſelves: In the ſnare they laid, was their owne foot taken. The higheſt deliverance of all (ſo much made of in the Pſalmes.) With the ruine of our enemies. Pſal.20.8. Pſal.9.15.

And thus much was before implied, when it was called Cornu ſalutis, a Horne of ſalvation. The ſalvation that ſo comes, comes ever with the perdition of the adverſe partie. So is the Horne expounded in Deut. XXXIII. With theſe ſhalt thou ſtrike thine enemies, and puſh them, as any wilde beaſt. Ventilare is the word, Toſſe them up, into the wind, upon the top of their hornes, till they have gored them, and brought them to their end. Such was our Horne of ſalvation, or (as we turne it) a mightie ſalvation. GOD ſhewing His might no leſſe againſt them, than for us: viſited and redeemed us mightily, in His mercy; viſited and ruined them as mightily, in His wrath. Implied in cornu ſalutis. Verſe 2. Deut.33.17.

And againe, in this, not only the manner, how, but the meanes whereby. For, He hath raiſed up a horne of ſalvation. Now to raiſe up, muſt needs be interpreted of a perſon, the meanes of the delivery. Who was that? In Daniel, and the Revelation, I finde it totidem verbis, Decem Cornua; decem Reges ſunt: Alluding therein, as to their Delivered. The meanes of it. By a King. Dan.7.24. Rev.17.12.

great power, ſo ſomewhat to the anointing thence powred on their heads: that it ſhould be ſalus Regia, and per Regem. A delivery wrought by a King: the King of heaven to worke it, mediante Rege terreno. In cujus labiis divinatio, if ever it were in any's, who did thereby eruere that, out of the darke phraſe, by which we all were eruti. And ſo, not the manner alone, but the meanes in it, too, that we were eruendo, eruti.

Eruendo. By picking out. Prov. 16.10.

And laſt, that all this was ſine timore. For in the Verſe ſo it ſtands, firſt, ut ſine timore liberati. And ſtands ſo firſt, that we might take ſpeciall notice, and note of it. And though divers Writers draw (ſine timore) to ſerviamus, as if there were an hyperbaton, to ſerve Him without feare: Yet what ſhould let us, ſo to take it, as it ſtands? Specially ſince divers of the Ancients take it ſo: (I name Origen, Titus Boſtrenſis, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, and Theophylact.) But we may well reconcile them both, if we ſay (which truly we may ſay) That, without feare we were delivered, to ſerve Him in a ſtate without (or void of) feare.

5 a That delivered without feare.

It is a great favour, when we are delivered; to be delivered, abſque hoc, that we be at all put in any feare. Some, are ſometimes ſaved from their enemies, but it is, with ſome fright firſt. It was the Iewes caſe, when from Haman: It was ours, in Anno LXXXVIII. Esther 4 3.

They that are ſo, it cannot be denied, but delivered they are, but not ſine timore liberati, not delivered without feare. This was without feare. Our caſe, juſt. Wee had no ſenſe, and ſo, no feare at all, of the danger, till it was paſt. I cannot better expreſſe it, than in Theodorets owne words: Sed ſi ſic dicendum eſt (ſaith he) veluti non ſentientes ita, nos de periculo tranſtulit in ſecuritatem. If it may ſo be ſaid, without any ſenſe or feeling at all, did he tranſlate us, from the depth of danger, into the ſtate of ſecuritie. In which point, ours did come neere to the great delivery of the world, by CHRIST, what time the world little thought, either of their owne perill, or of His paines and paſſion, that delivered it. Yet, in this, ours had more than was in CHRISTS owne delivery. That there, though it were without feare, yet not without ſomewhat as evill, as feare. For, CHRISTS was wrought by His innocent death (a matter of ſorrow, and griefe.) But in ours there was none, neither feare nor griefe, nor any other unpleaſant paſſion. No innocent ſuffered here; none but they, that had their heads in the contriving, or their hands in the digging about it. Without feare it was, without any thing elſe, that might taint our delivery, with the leaſt matter of grievance.

b Without feare, or any other paſſion.

The recapitulation of all the former.

So then, [1] delivered we were. [2] And not from the caſualtie of any miſchance, but from the malice of enemies: Enemies, and thoſe [3] capitali; And thoſe [4] cloſe hidden enemies: From them; yea, [5] from their very hands: And [6] From their hands, not out of them. And our delivery was eruti, [7] from ſomething in abyſſis terræ; And [8] from a ruine too: [9] And that, with their ruine, that ſought ours. [10] Our ſalvation, Cornu ſalutis, a Royall deliverance: [11] And yet eruendo it was. [12] And all abſque timore, [13] Or abſque any thing elſe, that might blemiſh our joy with matter of ſorrow in the leaſt degree.

And this for GODS part, who hath remembred His holy Covenant (I truſt) and performed it in every clauſe; nay, in every word, to us, to the uttermoſt.

II. Our Covenant, or Condition.

Now, to our part (which we may be put in ſuit for.) Liberati then, is cleare. But how? abſolutely? at large? abſque aliquo inde? No condition annexed? No Vt? Yes: take the Vt with you. Liberati, Vt. Delivered, that we ſhould: Should doe ſomewhat: for, naturaliter obligamur ad dantem. This Vt is naturall: there groweth a naturall obligation betweene him that doth, and them that receive a good turne: (And a deliverance, ſpecially ſuch an one is a good turne.) The fields we til, the trees we plant, ſhew it. They returne their fruit to them, that beſtow labour, or coſt upon them. That (I know not how) but ſo it falls out, in matter of benefits, we be not ſo ſoone looſed, but we be tied againe: Nor eaſed, but loaden afreſh: nor freed, but bound anew. It is the Law, the bond of nature, this, Liberati Vt.

Delivered, That we ſhould.

And

And that Vt, is Vt ſerviamus. And this particular, Vt, groweth out of the Law of Nations. There the Law is, ut victus ſit in poteſtate victoris, the conquered, ever, in the power of the Conquerour, to take his life, or to ſave it, at his pleaſure. But, if he will ſave it, then comes the voluntary Vt, or Covenant. Hee that hath his life ſaved, to vow to beſtow it, in his ſervice, that did ſave it. Servi (the very name) came of ſervati. They that ſhould have died, and were ſaved, did willingly covenant, ſerva & ſerviam, to ſerve him, by whom their lives were preſerved. This being the Law of Nature, and Nations, why ſhould not the GOD of Nature, the King of Nations, be allowed it? that if our lives have beene by Him ſaved; we ſhould, from thenceforth, come to this Vt, ut ſerviamus Illi. Should ſerve Him.

Well, well, it is paſt now; if it were to come: It is, that we being delivered; if it were, that we being to be delivered, we would tell another tale then: we would be glad and faine ſo to covenant, O deliver us (then) but for this once, and wee would ſerve Him (that we would) and be holy and righteous, and what He would beſides. Put any Vt, to liberati, then. We would then ſeeke it of Him, that now is offered by Him, to be delivered, if being ſo delivered, we will covenant, but to doe that, which we were bound to doe, delivered, or no. c Wee would have covenanted to ſerve Him.

And, why ſhould we think much of this ſerviamus? All the world knowes, if the plot had gone on, and the powder gone off, the whole land ſhould not have ſcaped ut ſerviamus: But ſhould have ſerved duram ſervitutem, beene not in ſervice, but in ſervitude. Their ſervitude, is changed into this ſervice. A bleſſed exchange for us. Great oddes betweene thoſe two: Nay, no compariſon at all, betweene GODS ſervice, and their ſervitude; their bondage, thraldome, ſlavery, tyranny, I cannot heape too many names. GODS ſervice is freedome in reſpect of that: Nay, without any reſpect at all, His ſervice is perfect freedome, we ſay it, we pray it, every day. Wee ſhould have ſerved, If not delivered. And ſerved a worſe. For the ſervice, ſerviamus.

And if no compariſon, in Serviamus; None, in Illi (I am ſure.) Nay, if there were any thing to miſlike in ſerviamus, amends is made for it, in Illi. For, the ſervice is much thereafter, as the Illi, the party is, whom we ſerve. Dignitate Domini honorata ſit conditio ſervi. He may be ſo great a State (we ſerve) as, it is an honour to ſerve Him. Now, how great a LORD, the LORD of Lords is, what ſhall I need tell you? There is no end of His greatneſſe. How great, and how good withall, res ipſa loquitur: that appeares, by our delivery, in part: and more ſhall, by His eternall reward laid up, for them that ſerve Him. There is, in all the world, no more honourable, nor beneficiall Service, than, this ſerviamus Illi. For the parties, Illi. For His Greatneſſe. Pſal. 145.3. For His Goodneſſe.

But ſay, we have no minde to ſerve Him; if we ſerve not Him, yet ſerve we muſt, and ſerve we will, if not Him, ſome other. It is the condition of our life, one or other ſerve we doe. We muſt hold of ſome Lord: if free from one, another we ſerve: And who is that other? when we are free from GOD, from righteouſneſſe, we ſerve ſinne and Satan (a worſe ſervice, I dare ſay:) better then, be free from them, and ſerve GOD in righteouſneſſe. If we ſerve not Him, ſome other we muſt, and worſe. Rom. 6. 18, 20.

But, if we will not ſerve Him; I aske, what will we doe then? will we ſerve His enemies? for ſo are theſe. We were not delivered from our enemies, to ſerve His enemies (I am ſure.) That were a foule ſhame for us: that were againſt all reaſon. But, if we ſerve not Him, we ſerve them. Reſolve then to ſerve Him, that hath ſaved us: Not, His enemies, in a prophane and unrighteous: but Him, in an holy and righteous courſe of life. And ſo, am I now come to that, wherein our ſervice lieth. Thoſe worſe be His enemies.

In holineſſe and righteouſneſſe. In which two, in a ſort, are recapitulate the two Tables of the Law: Holy to GOD, Righteous to men. Quòd quis reverenter ſe habeat ad divina: Quòd quis laudabiliter cum hominibus converſetur (ſaith Chryſoſtome) Reverently to performe holy duties: Laudably to have our converſation among men. The Matter of our ſervice, Wherein.

Both theſe (firſt:) not either of them. To ſpend our ſervice but in one, is but to ſerve Him by halfes: in both, then, to ſerve Him. Neither in an unrighteous holineſſe; nor, in an holy kinde of unrighteouſneſſe. Neither with the Phariſee, to have all our holineſſe in our Phylacteries and fringes, and frequenting the Lectures of the Law Holineſſe and Righteouſneſſe, Both. Matth. 23. 5.

Act.23.8. Act.26.18. (no matter how we live:) Nor with the Saducee, live indifferent honeſtly, but neither beleeve ſpirit, nor looke for reſurrection: be Chriſtians, like Agrippa, in modico, a little Religion, upon a knives point, will ſerve us. Neither in holineſſe then onely, nor in righteouſneſſe onely, but in both.

Holineſſe firſt. In both, but in their order though, as they ſtand; And holineſſe ſtands firſt. So, to reckon of that as our prime ſervice. For, if there had not beene ſome meaning in it, it is ſure, righteouſneſſe might have ſerved for both: Religion, holineſſe, all vertues Matth.22.21. are ἐναλλάξ, in it. Suum cuique (ſaith righteouſneſſe) and in that, is quæ Dei, Deo. Every one, his due; And ſo GOD His.

Yet are they ever thus parted, here, and elſe-where: Partly, to ſet out GODS Eccluſ. 47.2. part by it ſelfe (as the fat from the ſacrifice) for the dignitie of His perſon: Partly, to keepe up the diſtinction, which ever hath, and ever muſt be maintained, of ſevering things ſacred from common; and holy, from humane duties. And partly alſo, to checke the conceit that runnes in the world abroad, O, he is a good man, lives quietly with his neighbours, payes every man his due: Every man his due? and how then? ſhall GOD lacke His due? I trow not, but have His too, and His firſt. Reaſon is, He be firſt ſerved.

And holineſſe is His due: you may reade it, in the plate of gold, in the High-Exod.28.36. Prieſts fore-head, Holineſſe to the LORD: You may heare it, from the mouth of the Eſay 6.3. Seraphim, they mention none of all His Attributes, but that: That they doe, and doe it, thrice over. Pointing us thereby, what is chiefe in Him, and ſhould be chiefe with us, and whereto we ſhould chiefly direct our ſervice. Holineſſe, is His due: and (heare Heb.12.14. you) ſo His due, as the Apoſtle is direct, totidem verbis, without this due payed, without holineſſe, ſhall no man ever ſee GOD.

To ſerve Him in holineſſe. But then, you will marke, it is to ſerve Him, in Holineſſe. Holineſſe is one thing: To ſerve GOD in Holineſſe, is another: Holineſſe we may have (at leaſt, thinke our ſelves to have) but, a ſtately, ſurly kinde of holineſſe it is, ſo as in our holineſſe, we ſerve Him not. But it is not enough to be holy: a ſervice in holineſſe is required at our hands: that we acknowledge a ſervice in holineſſe, and as ſervants, carry our ſelves, and ſerve Him, in it.

Our ſervice in holineſſe in the Congregation. Pſal.111.1. Our ſervice in holineſſe I divide, as the Pſalme doth: Either in ſecreto Sanctorum, when we are alone by our ſelves (as, there, in ſecret, good folkes faile not, to ſerve Him.) Or, in Synagogâ, in the open Aſſembly, with the Congregation.

Deut.29.29. Deut.29.39. Our ſecret holineſſe I meddle not with. Abſcondita Deo noſtro, I leave it to GOD. I hope, it is better, and more ſervice-like, than our outward is. As abſcondita Deo, ſo revelata nobis. Our Church-Service, our Service in Synagogâ, the outſide of it (ſo) that is no ſecret; all men ſee what it is, that full homely it is, nay, full rude it is (and lightly the meaner the perſons, the more faultie in it.) Our holineſſe is growen too familiar, and fellow-like; Our carriage there, can hardly be termed ſervice, there is ſo very little of a ſervant in it.

Pſal.97.5. When we doe not only ſerve Him, but doe our ſervice before Him (both, are in the Text, Illi, and coram Illo) as, that we doe when we come hither, it is to profeſſe our ſervice, that we come. When we come, before the preſence of the LORD, the preſence of the LORD of the whole earth (ſo the Pſalme doubles it, to make us thinke on it the Pſal.96.9. better) then, ſaith he, worſhip Him in decore Sancto, in a holy kinde of decencie, or (as 1 Theſſ.4.4 we reade it) in the beauty of holineſſe. Our holineſſe ſhould have a kinde of beautie with 1 Tim.2.2. it. Holineſſe and honour, the Apoſtle joyneth them together; Godlineſſe and gravitie, εὐσεβείᾳ καὶ σεμνότητι, and them too. Now this is that, the world complaines of; there is not that decor, that beautie: not that honour, not that σεμνότης, that venerable grave behaviour, in our holineſſe, we carry not our ſelves in His holy Sanctuary, where our holineſſe ſhould be at the holieſt, nor at His ſervice there, as ſervants ſhould, and uſe to do.

Our ſervice in adoration or worſhip of Himſelfe. Exod.20.5. Pſal.95.6. We ſtumble at the very threſhold. Our very firſt ſervice (or rather, the introduction to our ſervice) in the firſt Table (the Table of holineſſe) is there ſet downe to be, adorabis. We turne it, ſhalt worſhip. How that is, we are told every day in the Pſalme, Let us worſhip, and fall downe, and kneele before the LORD our Maker. It was ever in the Primitive Primitive Church, the firſt voice was heard, the firſt thing they did, ante omnia adoremus Dominum, qui fecit nos, Before we doe any thing, let us fall downe and worſhip the LORD that made us. And it ſhall never be found, that they came in without it. But this ſhall, that men came to the Temple, purpoſely to adore, and that, that they did, though their time or occaſions would ſuffer them to doe nothing elſe. That, they held a ſervice, of it ſelfe. Now, adoration is laid aſide, and with the moſt, neglected quite. Moſt come and goe without it; Nay, they ſcarce know, what it is. And, with how little reverence, how evill beſeeming us, we uſe our ſelves in the Church, comming in thither, ſtaying there, departing thence, let the world judge.

The worſhip of the Saints in heaven. Rev. 4. 10.

Why? What are we to the glorious Saints in heaven? Doe not they worſhip thus? Off goe their crownes, downe before the Throne they caſt them, and fall downe themſelves after, when they worſhip. Are we better than they? Nay, are we better than His Saints on earth, that have ever ſeemed to goe too farre, rather than to come too ſhort, in this point? There was one of them, and he was a King (no leſſe perſon) when it was thought, he had done too much. What? uncovered? yea, uncovered (ſaith he) and if that be too vile, vilior adhuc fiam pluſquam, I will be yet more vile; Why, it is before the LORD, before whom we cannot be too low. To humble our ſelves before Him, it is our honour, in all eyes, ſave ſuch as Michal. And I reade of none, but of Rabſakeh, that upbraided King Ezekias, for ſaying to his people, You ſhall worſhip before this Altar. No more then, is ſought from us, than Kings on earth, than crowned Saints in heaven, in their holy ſervice, doe before Him.

Of the Saints in earth. 2 Sam. 6. 22.

Eſay 36. 7.

GODS diſdaine of our worſhip.

In Malachi's time, things were growen much to this paſſe, that now they are, to this want of regard: to thinke any ſervice (though never ſo ſlight) would ſerve GOD well enough. When they were come to this, GOD is faine to take ſtate upon Him, and to tell them plainely, He would have them know, He is a King, and a Great King. 1 Great: for He is King of the whole earth; Others, but of ſome part of it. 2 Great: for He is King for ever and ever; Others, but for a terme of yeares. 3 Great: for He is King of Kings, and they His lieges too, whoſe lieges we all are. And ſo falls to termes with them, that He held ſcorne to be ſo ſlighted over, even to theſe very words, Shall I take it at your hands? And then, bids them goe, and doe but offer ſuch ſervice as this, to their Prince, doe but come before him on that faſhion: See, if he will be content with it, or accept his perſon (that is) give him a good looke, if any ſhould ſo appeare in his preſence. No more will GOD: He knoweth no reaſon, why any King or creature on earth, ſhould be uſed with more reſpect, or ſerved with more reverence, than He.

Our ſervice in His holy things.

In the Sacrament. Malach. 1. 7.

Thus ſerve we Him, in His holy worſhip: how ſerve we Him, in His holy things? how ſerve we Him, in our holineſſe there? I will begin, and take up the ſame complaint that the Prophet Malachi doth. Firſt, Menſa Domini deſpecta eſt: The Table of the LORD is not regarded. That Sacrament, that ever hath beene counted, of all Holies the moſt holy, the higheſt and moſt ſolemne ſervice of GOD; (where are delivered to us, the holy Symboles, the pretious memorials of our greateſt Delivery of all;) why, of all others they ſpeed worſt. How are they in many places, denied any reverence at all, even that which prayer, which other parts have? No ſervice then: No ſervants there: but bidden gueſts, haile-fellowes, homely and familiar, as one neighbour with another. And not onely, de facto none they have: but de jure, it is holden, none they ought to have. And that, ſo holden, as rather than they ſhall have any, ſome will ſuffer for it, or rather for their owne proud folly, in refuſing it. What time they take the cup of ſalvation, they will not invocate, at leaſt not be in ſpecie invocantis: as the King the Prophet would. What time they receive the cup of bleſſing, they will not receive it as a bleſſing, as children receive it from their parents, and their children from them. Both which, invocation and receiving a bleſſing, were never done, but de geniculis. What ſhall the reſt looke for, if thus we ſerve Him, when we are at the holieſt?

Pſal. 116. 13. 1 Cor. 10. 16.

Our ſervice of GOD in the ſervice, that is, in prayer.

Shall we now come to the ſervice indeed? λατρεῦσαι the word here in my Text. It is no new thing, for one ſpecies to carry away the name of the genus from the reſt, as in in this: For, though there be other parts of GODS service: yet Prayer hath borne away the name of service, from them all. עבודה the Hebrewes call their Common-Prayer, and that is, service. And the Greekes, theirs, Λειτυργίαν, and that is so, too. And we, when we say, At Service-time, and the Service-Booke, and refuse to be present at Divine Service, meane so likewise. And, GOD Himselfe seemes to goe before us, and direct us so to doe. For, His house, He hath named the House of Prayer. (Observing the Rule, to give it the denomination, from that which is the chiefest service in it.) As indeed, when all is done, devotion is the proper, and most kindly work of holinesse: and, in that serve we GOD, if ever we serve Him. Now, in what honour, this part of holinesse is; what account we make of this service, doe but tell the number of them that be here at it, and ye shall need no other certificate; that in His service we serve Him but slenderly.

Esay 56.7.

Psal. 138.2.

Thou hast magnified thy Name, and thy Word above all things; saith the Psalme. After invocation then of His Name, let us see how we serve His Word; that part of His service, which in this Age (I might say, in the errour of this Age) carries away all. For, what is it to serve GOD in holinesse? why, to goe to a Sermon: All our holiday holinesse, yea, and our working-day too, both are come to this, to heare (nay, I dare not say that, I cannot prove it) but, to be at a Sermon.

Our service of GOD in the Word.

The Word is holy (I know) and I wish it all the honour that may be: but, GOD forbid, we should thinke, that in hoc uno sunt omnia. All our holinesse is in hearing: All our Service, eare-service: that were in effect, as much as to say, all the body were an eare.

1 Cor. 12. 17.

An errour it is, to shut up His service into any one part, which is diffused through all. Another, so to doe, into this one. It is well knowne, that, all the time of the Primitive Church, the Sermon was ever done, before the Service begun. And that, to the Sermon, Heathen men, Infidels, and Iewes, Heretikes, Schismatikes, Energumeni, Catechumeni, Pœnitentes, Competentes, Audientes, all these, all sorts of people were admitted: But, when they went to service, when the Liturgie began, all these were voided; not one of them suffered to stay. It were strange, that, that should be the only, or the chiefe Service of GOD, whereat, they which were held no servants of GOD, no part of the Church, might and did remaine no lesse freely, than they that were.

But even, this holy Word (wherein all our holinesse is) how serve we Him, in it? Nay, we serve Him not, we take the greatest libertie there, of all other. We come to it, if we will: we goe our wayes, when we will: stay no longer, than we will: and listen to it, while we will: and sleepe out, or turne us and talke out, or sit still, and let our mindes rove (the rest) whither they will: take stitch at a phrase, or word, and censure it, how wee will. So, the Word serves us to make us sport: we serve not it. At this part of our service in holinesse, we demeane our selves with such libertie (nay licentiousnesse rather) that holy it may be, but sure service it is not, nothing like. And truely, it is a notable Stratagem of Satan, to shrinke up all our holinesse, into one part: and into that one, where wee may be, or not be: Being, heare or not heare: Hearing, minde, or not minde: Minding, either remember or forget: Give no account to any, what we doe or not doe: Onely, stay out the houre (if that) and then goe our way; many of us, as wise as wee came: But all (in a manner) hearing (as Ezekiel complaineth) a Sermon preached, no otherwise than we doe a Ballad sung: and doe even no more of the one, than we doe of the other. Eye-service GOD likes not (I am sure) no more (should I thinke) doth He eare-service. Speake on LORD, for thy servant heareth (and well if that, but scarce that, otherwhile:) but, speake on LORD, whether thy servant heare or no: would any of us be content with such service? Yet this is all: to this, it is come. Thus wee serve Him in holinesse: This service must serve Him (as the world goes;) for, if this way we serve Him not, we serve Him not at all.

Ezek. 33. 32.

1 Sam 3. 9.

Our service in holinesse out of the Congregation.

But all GODS service in holinesse, is not in the Church. Some is abroad. And, when we are forth of the Church, neither Word, nor Sacraments, nor Common-Prayer, there: Onely there, we serve Him in His Name.

And

And, Holy and reverend is His Name (ſaith one Pſalme,) And, Great and fearefull is His Name (ſaith another.) Now, how unholily, this holy; how unreverently, this reverend Name is uſed; upon how ſmall cauſe, this great; how without all feare, this fearefull Name is taken up in our mouths, I muſt ſay it againe and againe (which Saint Auguſtine ſaith) Aures omnium pulſo, conſcientias ſingulorum convenio: I ſpeake to the eares of all in generall; I convent the conſcience of every one in particular, that heareth it. That, which by Him is magnified above all things, is by us vilified beneath all things. We pray for it firſt; we regard it laſt, certainly. For if it be indeed holy, let no man count it common. If not count it ſo, not uſe it ſo: for, what we uſe as common, eo ipſo, we make it unholy (quantum in nobis eſt;) for, common and holy are contradividentia.

To His Name. Pſal. 111. 9. Pſal. 99. 3.

Pſal. 138. 2. Matth. 6. 9. Act. 10. 15.

1 And to make it ſo common, that is, to prophane it: Evill enough that. 2 But in the eagerneſſe of our ſpirits, to uſe it to grievous execrations, that is more, even to pollute it: A worſe matter farre. 3 But beyond both theſe, to let it come to this, that we grow unſenſible of both, and both paſſe from us, and we have no feeling of either, this is worſt of all. Call we this to ſerve Him in holineſſe, for this dayes delivery, when we ſo ſerve His Name?

Ezek. 39. 7.

But neither is all GODS Service in holineſſe alone: Some is in honeſt dealing with men, in righteouſneſſe: GOD is ſerved in that too. He that hath done a peece of good juſtice, downward: that hath done his duty to his Superiour upward: that hath dealt equally with his even Chriſten: in ſo doing, hath not onely dealt well with men, but done GOD good ſervice alſo. That a man may goe from Church, and yet ſay truly, he goes to ſerve GOD, if he goe about theſe.

Our ſervice to GOD in righteouſneſſe.

Well, how goes our righteouſneſſe? how ſerve we GOD there? Divers errours are committed in that, too.

One is of them, that thinke holineſſe a diſcharge from righteouſneſſe quite. So they ſerve GOD, and heare Lectures (as the terme is) they take themſelves libertie to pay no debts, to put their money out to uſury, to grinde their tenants; yea, and ſo they miſſe not ſuch a Lecture, in ſuch a place, they may doe any thing then. Nay, GOD is ſerved in righteous doing, as well, nay, better, than in holy hearing.

Holineſſe held a diſcharge, from righteouſneſſe.

A ſecond kinde (which I like not neither) that when men deale honeſtly, keepe touch, pay their debts; they are ſo brave, ſo imperious upon it, ſo like great Lords, as if righteouſneſſe were no ſervice, all were meere liberalitie they did, men were bound to them for doing it, they were not bound to doe it: Nay, we ſerve in righteouſneſſe, too, That alſo is a ſervice (ſure.)

Righteouſneſſe held no ſervice.

A third, and that very common, of them that make the law of man, a ſcantling of their righteouſneſſe: and further than that will compell them, they will not goe, not an inch; nor ſo farre neither, ſine timore, but for feare. Yea, not onely our righteouſneſſe to men: but even our feare to GOD, is taught us by man's precepts: and in both, ſo the Statutes of Omri be obſerved, all is well. But, whatſoever a man elſe may make ſure, hee cannot make ſure his ſoule, by the Law of the Land. This righteouſneſſe here, goes up to GOD and His Law: and pierces deeper beyond the outward act, even to the inward man: whence, if ours come not, or whither, if it reach not; Man we may (perhaps) but GOD, in righteouſneſſe, ſerve we not.

Righteouſneſſe meaſured by the Common Law. Eſay 29. 13. Mica 6. 16.

But even according to mans Law, our righteouſneſſe goes not well ſo, neither. The Philoſopher gives a rule, when a people is juſt or righteous, according to mans law? (GOD's he knew not) and that is, when juſtice wants worke, hath little to doe. By which rule, ours is in no very good caſe: Men are ſo full of ſuits, ſo many cauſes depending before every ſeat of Iuſtice, ſo much to doe: and all, to repaire the wrongs of our unrighteous courſes, while each one ſeekes rather, to over-rule men by wrong, than to ſerve GOD by right.

Our righteouſneſſe too much worke.

And, this were not ſo evill, if all the injuſtice were below: if the Seats which are ſet to doe juſtice and righteouſneſſe, were themſelves right. For, fares it not even with them, as the Prophet Hoſee ſaith, The Princes of Iſrael are as they that remove the land-marke? Each Seat ſeeking to enlarge their owne border, and to ſet their meer-ſtones within the others ground? A full unnaturall thing in a body, that one arme ſhould never thinke it ſelfe ſtrong enough, untill it had cleane ſhrunke up the ſinewes of the other;

The Seats of righteouſneſſe faulrie. Hoſ. 5. 10.

other. But I ſtay. Theſe things, being amended, we ſhall be ſo much the more in a forwardneſſe, to ſerve GOD, both in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe: And ſo, for the matter of our ſervice, keepe our Covenant.

II. The Manner of our ſervice, How.

For the manner, now. To ſerve Him, [1] ſine timore, without feare: [2] coram ipſo, before Him: [3] Omnibus diebus noſtris, all the dayes of our life.

That, without feare.

1. Sine timore, without feare. And ſo, in a ſenſe we doe. So without feare at all, as if men were afraid, to ſeeme to feare GOD. But this is no part of His meaning. Without feare (here) is not without feare of Him (of GOD) but, that being now without feare of our enemies, we ſhould doe it, the rather. For, who being in a bodily feare; who having Pharaoh and his hoſt hard at their backes, could quietly thinke of ſerving GOD? That, even GOD Himſelfe, did rid His people of that feare, before ever He gave them His Law, to ſerve Him by. But when mens mindes are quiet from the agonie and terrour of it, when they are ſetled in tranquillo: they ſhould in all reaſon then, better intend His ſervice.

Exod.14.
Exod.20.

And, will we (thinke you) if we be ſo out of feare, intend it the better? without doubt, in experience, we finde it contrary. For, except we be held in feare, we ſcarce ſerve Him at all: how ſoone we are out of feare, we forget our ſelves, and our ſervice, yea, GOD, and all. True: yet for all that, the ſervice ſo done in feare, is but a dull heavie ſervice. It likes Him not. GOD loves lætus lubens, when being at libertie, with a liberall minde we doe what we doe. Læti ſerviemus Regi (ſay they in Geneſis) and it pleaſed the King: And it pleaſeth GOD as well, if the ſervice we doe, we doe it cheerefully, without mixture of feare, or any ſervile affection.

Gen.47.25.

Without This feare to ſerve Him, but not without His feare. Nam, ſi Dominus, If He be a LORD (as if we be His ſervants, a LORD He is) ubi timor? where is My feare, ſaith He in Malachi? As love, to a father: ſo feare, to a Lord, doth belong moſt properly. And, this is not Old Teſtament only: the Apoſtle is as direct, in the New; if we will ſerve Him to pleaſe Him (and as good not ſerve, as ſerving not pleaſe) if we will ſo ſerve Him, we muſt doe it, with reverence and feare: λατρεύωμεν εὐαρέστως μετ' αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας. Neither rudely then, without feare; nor baſely, with feare: But reverently, with feare; and cheerefully without feare: (that is the meaning.)

Malac.1.6.
Heb.12.28.

That, before Him.

2. To ſerve Him, Coram Ipſo, before Him. Coram Ipſo: for, coram me, is the terme of the Law. As if He were preſent, and looked on. And it helpes much to our ſervice, ſo to doe it. Helpes our reverence, not to doe it rudely: (we doe it before Him.) Helpes our ſincereneſſe, without hypocriſie, to doe it, as before Him: For, theſe two words, coram Ipſo, are the bane of hypocriſie.

Exod.20.3.

All things are before Him: In nothing can we get behinde Him, or where He cannot ſee us. But, ſome things are before Him and men, both: Thoſe, we call not, before Him, properly. Properly, that is, before Him, that is, before none but Him. That is, the heart. Coram homine, the ſervice of the eye: Coram Ipſo, the ſervice of the heart. Men love no eye-ſervice neither, if they could diſcover it, but they are faine to take it; the heart is not coram ipſis; Coram ipſo it is. Vpon that, is His eye: and nothing pleaſes Him, if the heart be away: for that, of all other, is His peculiar Coram Ipſo.

It is a broken ſervice, if any part; chiefly, if the chiefe part (the heart) be away. It would be entire, and with all parts, ſince all are before Him.

It is a mock-ſervice, as if what ſerves man, would ſerve Him: as if wee could complement it with GOD, with faces and phraſes, as with men we doe.

That, all the dayes of our life.

3. The laſt, is omnibus diebus noſtris. As ſincere, without faining: So, conſtant without fainting. Coram me, excludes the Phariſaicall ſervice of the out-ſide of the platter: Omnibus diebus, the Bethulian ſervice, for certaine dayes, and no longer.

Matth.23.25.
Iudg.7.30.

You ſhall have few, but will ſerve GOD at a brunt: have certaine pangs of godlineſſe come upon them at times: be affected for the preſent, with a delivery, grow a little holy upon it. That little, is little worth. GOD complaines in Malachi, That in their holineſſe they puffed, and blew, as men ſhort winded, quickly weary of it, and ſoone out of breath. And in Hoſee, that their righteouſneſſe was as the morning-cloud, ſcattered, and gone, before the Sunne was an houre high.

Malac.1.13.
Hoſ.6.4.

To

To ſerve Him then, not with uſura exigui temporis, ſome ſmall time: primis die-bus, two or three dayes at the firſt, and then, defuncti, we have quit our ſelves well: but from day to day, as long as there is a day left to ſerve Him in; So long to ſerve Him. To ſerve Him to the very laſt.

The mercifull and gracious LORD hath ſo done His marvellous acts, that they ought to be had in everlaſting remembrance; all of them. But ſome more eſpecially: for ſome are more than marvellous: As was this of ours. That if quibuſdam diebus, would ſerve for them: Omnibus diebus, is little enough for this: So more than gracious, ſo more than marvellous, ſo more than both, in this: as the memory of it, never to die, never to decay, but our dayes and it, to determine together.

Some dayes more than ſome other, though. Pſal. 111.4.

And for all that, though omnibus diebus, all our dayes, and in them all: yet, not in them all alike. So in all, as in ſome, more than otherſome, Suſcipiunt magis & minùs. So then to ſerve: as in our dayes after the delivery, we doe it, more, and better, than before: And upon the day it ſelfe (that is, as this day) we doe it, moſt of all.

More. The dayes ſince. And this day, moſt.

Thus, we have laid forth our Covenant, both for Matter and Manner. Wherein, if we will deale as juſt men, we muſt keep it: and if deale as wiſe men, we will keep it. For, who knowes, but we may (perhaps) ſtand in need of a delivery againe? If we behave our ſelves frowardly in His Covenant, what ſhall become of us then? How ſhall we hope for ſuch another at His hands? And if He doe not, who can deliver us from ſuch another?

It will be wiſely done to keepe our Covenant.

But, ſuch another (we hope) ſhall never come: And I wiſh, and hope ſo, too. But ſhould hope ſo the rather, if I could ſee, we did but ſet our ſelves to ſerve Him, as hath beene ſaid. Otherwiſe, the Devill, he is our enemie; (that is once.) And if we had no other, he is enough: An unquiet ſpirit he is; I truſt him not, though ever ſince, he ſleeps the Foxes ſleepe. For the breach of our covenant, if he be let looſe, he is able to doe miſchiefe enough. And we have the amends in our hands. Liberati we had, Serviamus we returned not. Returne it then, and then we ſhall be without feare of any more.

We ſhall be without feare of ſuch another.

And not onely without feare: but we ſhall be in hope alſo; and that, not of a new deliverance onely (if need be) but, of a further matter. For though our ſervice be due, without any: but much more due, upon a delivery, ſpecially ſuch as ours this day was, though no more ever ſhould be done for us: yet that we may know, we ſerve a Lord of great bountie, this ſhall not be all: over and above our aſſurance to be delivered, toties quoties; we ſhall not be unconſidered for our ſervice, beſides. Let our delivery goe, tranſeat: He deſires no ſervice, but for a reward.

We ſhall be in hope of a reward.

And ſo I returne now to the word of our ſervice, the word of our Text, λατρεῦσαι. In λατρεῦσαι, there is λύτρον: And λύτρον, is a recompence or reward. GODS ſervice is λατρεία. Delivered we were, by Covenant: Of His great bountie, Rewarded we ſhall be beſide. It is in the very body of the word (this.)

Reward is in the body of the word λατρεύειν (to ſerve.)

So here is λῦσαν and λύτρον: λῦσαν in our delivery, and λύτρον in our recompence. Let one of them, λύτρον or λάτρον: or, if not one of them, both of them prevaile with us, to ſee Him ſerved.

And what ſhall the reward be? I will tell you that, and ſo end. It ſhall be the Grand deliverance in the Benedictus, here. And ours of the day was a riddance of us, from our bodily enemies, for the time; and we ſet in a ſtate of temporall peace, which we have enjoyed ever ſince: So, the finall reward of our ſervice ſhall be a riddance from our ghoſtly enemies, for ever, that come not with a puffe or blaſt of Powder, but with a lake of fire and brimſtone, the ſmoke whereof ſhall aſcend for evermore. To be rid of them, and ſo being rid, to enjoy a State, of perfect, of eternall peace and ſecuritie, without ever fearing more, ſine timore, indeed.

The reward of our ſervice. Without feare. Rev. 14.11.

And to make it every way correſpondent: for coram ipſo, here; it ſhall be, coram ipſo, there. Even in His preſence, in whoſe preſence is the fulneſſe of joy.

Before Him. Pſal. 16.12.

And for omnibus diebus, here: all the dayes of this tranſitory, ſhort life, we ſhall enjoy it all the dayes of heaven. Omnibus diebus? nay omnibus ſeculis, all the Ages of eternity. And ſo, for that, which in Law is held but as a leaſe of ſeven yeares, have an everlaſting free-hold, in His heavenly Kingdome, there to reape the reward of our Service, world without end.

All the dayes of our life.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT VVHITEHALL, on the V. of November, A. D. MDCXVIII.

ESTHER CHAP. IX. VER. XXXI.

Obſervantes dies Sortium & ſuo tempore cum gaudio celebrarent : ſicut conſtituerant Mardochæus & Eſther, & illi obſervanda ſuſceperunt à ſe, & ſemine ſuo, jejunia & clamores & Sortium dies.

To confirme theſe dayes of Purim, according to their ſeaſons : as Mardochai the Jew, and Eſther the Queene had appointed them, and as they had promiſed for themſelves, and for their Seed, with faſting and prayer.

HERE have we the making of a new Holy-day (over and above thoſe of GODS in the Law.) And the making it, by Royall authoritie, and the peoples aſſent ; and ſo, of the nature of an Act or Statute : a good preſident for us, that have made the like. Here is a joynt concurrence, of Mardochæus adviſing, Queene Eſther authorizing, they (that is, the people) undertaking for them and their Seed, to confirme, what ? Purim ; there is the day : when ? at the appointed times, that makes it a ſet day : how ? with faſting and crying (that is, prayer) that makes it an Holy-day. Vpon what ground all this ? That, is in the word Purim, the name of the day. It is called Purim : Purim (that is) lots, as much to ſay as, the Lot-holy-day.

This name it came to have, for that there was a diſmall day comming toward them, by meanes of a lot caſt; which (yet) it was their lot to eſcape. In the remembrance of which eſcape, this day was thus ordained: and the like may ſo be upon like occaſion.

The Summe. Thus it was. Haman, one in higheſt favour with King Aſſuerus, had taken a diſpleaſure at Mardochæus: and, a feud it was, the ſtrangeſt feud that hath beene heard of: not with all of his kinne, or all of the name; but, with all of the nation, all the Iewes, becauſe Mardochai (forſooth) was a Iew.

His quarrell was at Mardochai alone; none had offended him, but he; yet ſuch was his pride, or malice, or both, as I know not how many thouſands, men, women, and children, muſt die all, for no other cauſe, but that it hapned, Mardochai to be their Countryman. For, other treſpaſſe had they made him none.

Well, in the height of his favour with the King, and by a wrong ſuggeſtion, hee obtained the lives and goods of all the Iewes in the Land. And, when hee had them now in his hand, and might have diſpatched them out of hand; that, he would not; (ſee how men ſhall be tranſported and forget themſelves!) in a ſtrange kinde of inſolencie (they call it braverie) fell to make a lottery of their lives. And Pur, the lot, was caſt; what moneth firſt; then, what day of the moneth, they ſhould have all their throats cut. It fell to be the XIIII. of Adar (that is) February: and then, hee got a Proclamation, that upon that day all the Iewes ſhould bee put to the ſword.

But, before that day came, by the goodneſſe of GOD, it was the poore Iewes Chap.7.10. lot, to eſcape for all that: And in the meane time, the lot turned upon the lot-caſter: and he that intended this great Maſſacre, it fell to his lot, to be hanged himſelfe. And, this was the ground of their holy-day. That, in remembrance of this lottery-day, that ſhould have beene, the XIIII. of Adar, as the Eve or Vigil, and the XV. as the Feaſt or holy-day it ſelfe, ſhould religiouſly bee kept for ever; as, to this day, it is.

This comes ſomewhat to our caſe. For, as they were in danger then, by a lot; So were wee, this day, by a plot, in as great danger as they, and as ſtrangely delivered; Wee, from our plot, as they, from their lot; and ſo, as deepely bound, and by this Text, as perfectly enabled, to make a day of Purim, as ever were they.

A plot, and a lot, though they ſound alike, yet (with us) they differ much. A lot ſeemes meerely caſuall; a plot is laid with great circumſpection: but, with GOD, they are in effect all one. The beſt laid plots, with Him, prove no better but even as uncertaine lots, but even hap-hazard, if He liſt to diſ-appoint them. So as upon the matter, quoad Deum, lot or plot, no great oddes; both come to one. Seeing then, there is no more oddes, and that there is in every Text, a predominant word, and, in this Text, the word Purim is it, we will inſiſt upon that word, and account them lots both; ours, as well as theirs.

The Diviſion. To make a like day, with a like obſervation, there are required, 1 a like ground, 2 and like authoritie.

To ſhew the ground like, wee are to ſhew the lots to bee like; theirs, and ours. Like, 1 in the caſting in, the intent or danger: 2 like in the drawing out, the event or eſcape.

I. In the caſting the lots, or intent, theſe foure: 1. The lots that were caſt; their perill, and ours. 2. The parties, on whom they were caſt: the Iewes, and our ſelves. 3. The parties, by whom they were caſt: their Haman, and ours. 4. And the cauſe or colour, for which they were caſt.

In the drawing or event, foure more: 1 The meanes of their and our eſcape, 2 the manner, 3 the time, and 4 the iſſue.

In all theſe, to match theirs and ours. And, in all theſe, I make no doubt, this of ours ours will more than match that of theirs: the lot of our danger more fearefull, the lot of our deliverance more wonderfull.

And if ſo, then have we as good ground, as they; nay better, than they any.

This for the ground. But, that alone is not enough: yet lacke we authority. Here it is: the Queene, by advice, injoyning it; The people ſubmitting to obſerve the day, at the appointed time. II.

We conclude then: the ground being all one, on which (a famous deliverance:) the authoritie the ſame, by which (the Queene there, the King here, injoyning it:) theſe being alike, a like bond to us, ſuper animas noſtras, for a like day of ours, even the day on which it was our lot to eſcape; at a like time, that is, once a yeare; and in like manner, to be holden, as theirs, with prayer, and crying, though of another nature.

And this Record (here) in the Roll of Eſther, ſhall be our warrant for ſo doing againſt all oppoſers.

THe lot is caſt in the lap, but GOD giveth the hap: It is Salomon, in Proverb. Chap. 16. verſ. 33. We begin with the lot in the lap, Hamans lap, the danger: And come after, to the hap GOD gave, the happie deliverance. The danger. 1 They and we had but one lot both: to be deſtroyed quite, utterly. And we agree in two more: 2 to be deſtroyed all; 3 to be deſtroyed at a ſet day: theſe three. I. The Ground. 1 The Danger.

But in all three, our lot the worſe, every way. And the worſe it is in the lap (the lot) the better it is in the hap, if we ſcape it.

Vtter deſtruction to both. But their lot was a ſword, to be ſlaine: Our Pur was πῦρ πυρὸς, Our lot, fire and powder, to be blowen up. Of the twaine, this the worſe. Vtter deſtruction.

The ſword is in a hand, and that hand is guided by the heart, and that heart may relent at the ſight of a ſilly innocent babe, a poore old man, a woman great with childe; ſo, ſome hope, for ſome to ſcape there. But, fire, no hope for any: Fire cannot relent, that ſpares none.

Yet Saint Iude ſpeakes of ſaving ſome by plucking them out of the fire: But, not this fire; no plucking out here, no ſcaping for any; all diſpatched in a moment, paſt ſaving all. Facti eſſemus ſicut Sodomæ: nay worſe. That, came from heaven; this, from hell: from hell-ward, at leaſt. There, three: here, not one ſhould have eſcaped. Lots caſe, his lot will end this; his lot, to all intents, better, when he ſcaped the fire of Sodome, than when the ſword of the foure Kings in battell. This, the moſt deſtructive deſtruction of all: if any more than other, this is it. Might we draw lots for our death, we would never draw this. And this was our lot. Iude 23. Rom. 9. 29. Gen. 19. 22. Gen. 14. 12.

A generall Lottery was intended in both. Truly might His Majeſtie have ſaid, as ever did Queene Eſther (Chap. 7. verſe 4.) Traditi ſumus ego & populus meus, Betrayed we are I and my people. 2 Generall deſtruction.

And will ye marke, how like of Haman it is ſaid, Pro nihilo duxit in unum Mardochæum manus mittere, He thought it nothing to lay hands on Mardochei alone, magiſque voluit omnem Nationem perdere, No leſſe would ſerve him, but the havocke of the whole Nation: Chap. 3. verſe 6. Said not our Haman the ſame? What, lay hands on the King? (as one of them offered) Tuſh, that is not worth the while, magiſque voluit omnem Nationem, Nay, if we ſhall doe it indeed, be right Hamans, up with King, and Parliament and all; make a generall lottery of it in any wiſe. Haman right (this) in his owne termes. Chap. 3. 6.

But, though in this, they ſeeme to be even (both our lots:) yet draw them, ours is the longer, ſenſibly. For, though Haman preſumed very neere, when hee came to the Kings ſide, touched the Queenes life; Yet wel-fare Haman (ſay I) in this, the King he touched not; No harme to Him; the King was out of Haman's lotterie. Here, the King was in, too; Ours went to Queene, and Prince, Peeres, and Prelates, and Commons, yea, King and all. Omnem Nationem, but not Regem, there. Omnem Nationem, & Regem, here. This was univerſall indeed: And we, in this, beyond them.

3 On a ſet day. Chap. 3. 7. Theirs was in diem, againſt a day. Ours was ſo, too. So, the lots even.

With Haman, Miſſa eſt ſors in urnam, quo die deberent gens interfici; exiit Adar. Die they muſt, that was reſolved; That was not enough. (See whither pride will carry men!) Hee would caſt the dice (as it were) draw cuts, make a lotterie, of no leſſe matter than mens lives. And that, not of a dozen or a skore, but of a whole Nation, which day and which moneth, they ſhould die all. And, in this caſting, they went from moneth to moneth, and from day to day, till, at laſt, there (with Haman) the lot fell on the fourteenth of Adar: and with ours, on the fifth of November.

And, take this with you too: Haman's lottery was in Niſan (that is, March) the firſt moneth, but it fell not till Adar (that is, February) the laſt moneth: ſo, a twelve-moneth betweene. And, was it not ſo with us? A yeare before, nay more than a yeare, was our day ſet. And firſt, it was in the moneth Adar, in February (as theirs was, juſt;) but, by proroguing the Parliament, we ſcaped, and were reprieved once and againe. But, to it againe they went, and ſo at laſt the lot fell on this very day, to be the day of our Purim. Thus farre the lots Even.

1 But their day Knowne, Ours not.

But then here againe there fell oddes on our parts, two wayes: 1. One, the Iewes had notice of their day; It was proclaimed: ſo, they that could, might have ſlipped away ſecretly, and ſo ſcaped. And they that were watched, that they could not, well; yet, they might make their ſoules ready, and die prepared. And even that, when there is no remedy but die we muſt, it is good not to be ſurprized on the ſudden, but to have ſome warning, that ſo we may make us readie for GOD. But ſee our caſe now: We know not of our day, we. The day was kept as cloſe, as the powder: We had gone off ſuddenly, to the great hazard (as it may be feared) of many a ſoule, that for default of this, had periſhed (indeed:) periſhed here, and periſhed eternally. Againſt a lingring death we pray not; ab improviſa morte, we doe: And mors improviſa had beene our lot then. Here is then the firſt oddes. Both were in diem; but, theirs in diem certum, certainly knowne to them all. Ours (as I may ſay) in diem certum, and yet incertum: Certaine, to Haman, to them; they knew it perfectly: Vncertaine, to us; We knew not whether any ſuch day or no: We had gone to it, We had drawne our lot blind-fold. So, ours worſe than theirs.

2 Theirs, an ordinary, Ours, a parliament-day. 1 Theſſ. 5. 3.

Another oddes there is (worſe yet than this) in the dayes. For, what was the fourteenth of Adar, but an ordinary common day? But, the fifth of November (as it fell out) was the firſt day of a Parliament; a famous day, as comes in many yeares. That, not onely when wee ſhould have ſaid Pax & ſecuritas; but when wee ſhould have beene in all our glory, then even at the time, Repentinus veniet ſuper eos interitus, the moſt unſeaſonable time of all had beene our lot; a heavie lot if it had light.

When men goe to their death, they would goe mourning, all in blacke, as the manner is: But, when they are going in all pompe and magnificence, then to be ſhot off, and ſlie all in peeces! no man would draw that lot if he could ſcape it. Yet, that was our lot, and at that very time.

For a King to be made away, is a thing not unheard of: but, in this manner, a King to be made away, in his robes royall, the imperiall crowne on his head, the Scepter in his hand, ſitting on the throne of his Kingdom, in the midſt of all his States, then, and there, and in that manner; that paſſes all: that, the lot, that never yet hath beene heard of. And, let it never be heard of; Let never King have the lot ſo to periſh: Pitie any ever ſhould. Yet this was Yours (Sir) like to have beene. Too much oddes this. And this for the lot, that was caſt.

Now for the Parties, on whom this lot caſt. There, ſure I am, we have the vantage. The Parties, in the Text, who were they, but a ſort of poore ſcattered Iewes of the captivitie, in a ſtrange countrey farre from their owne, and in their enemies hands. Farre otherwiſe was it with us, here. No captives we, but a flouriſhing Kingdome, as any under heaven. Not in any forren part, ours; but, at home in our owne native ſoile. 2. The Parties, On whom.

It had beene ſomewhat, for Aſſuerus, to take away ſo many lives at once; but, his captives they were, he might doe with them, what he would, in rigour of Law: ſo, their end had beene by lawfull authoritie. But, in ours, no colour, no ſhadow of any law; but, a moſt barbarous trechery againſt all law, both of GOD and man. Alas, the Iewes they had neither Prince nor Peeres, they were no State. What talke I of them? I ſhould wrong our ſelves much, to ſtand on this any longer.

This for upon whom. Now, by whom, the lots were caſt. For, it was our lot to have our Haman, too. The Lot-maſter, and the Plot-maſter, I hold them Hamans, both. But firſt, where they had but one, we had many. And then, theirs nothing to ours. Haman was, to the Iewes, a ſtranger in Nation, for he was an Agagite: A ſtranger in Religion, for he was an Heathen man. Ours were no ſtrangers in Nation; the ſame Nation, that we. No Turkes, or Infidels, but profeſſing the ſame CHRIST, that we; and better than we (they ſay:) for, right Catholikes, they; and not Chriſtians, but (which is more than Chriſtians) Ieſuites, ſome of them. Better, for an Iſraelite, to ſuffer at the hands of an Ægyptian, than of an Iſraelite his brother, as Moſes told them. Better, at the hands of the uncircumciſed, than of the people of GOD. The Iewes, they had periſhed, by the hand of an Alien, and a Pagan; If our lot had beene ſo, it had beene the leſſe unhappie. But, our lot it was, to be ſhot thorow with our owne ordnance: IESVS to have blowen up CHRIST; and one Chriſtian man to have committed ſuch a butcherly barbarous act, upon another (nay, many others) ſuch an act, as never was heard of among the Heathen, to the eternall ſtaine of all that profeſſe CHRIST. 3. The Parties, By whom. Chap. 3. 1. Exod. 2. 13.

Wicked Haman is his Epithete: Too good for thoſe, that, not onely as a broad of Vipers, ſought to gnaw out the bowels of their owne damme (which Haman never did;) but, in ſuch ſort did it, as all the malice of man, calling to it the malice of the Devill, could never invent the like. But, a degenerate Chriſtian is the worſt man; and the worſt man is the worſt creature, of all others. Chap. 7. 6.

And what might be the cauſe of all this? It ſeemes, the ſame in both. Hamans was, becauſe that he was not worſhipped by Mardochei. And, in ours too, If we aske —quo numine læſo, Quidve dolens, we ſhall finde, it was much to that, Even the not worſhipping of one no whit leſſe proud, than Haman. And here, they will fall ſhort too. For, in our, Mardochei muſt fall downe, and kiſſe his feet; which, Haman in all his pride never required. 4. The Cauſe, or colour. Chap. 2. 5.

But, it were hard to deſtroy an whole Nation, for no other cauſe, but that one man of them would not make him a legge. We muſt have ſome other than this, ſome better pretence muſt be had, ſure. So have all evill things, one thing for the cauſe, another for the colour. In good, one ſerves for both. Sure, in effect, the ſame was that of ours, that here was ſuggeſted by Haman. Theſe ſame Iewes (ſaith he) they are a people with a Religion by themſelves: As much to ſay (with us) as, A ſort of Heretikes they be, the world were well rid of them; it makes no matter, up with them all. Chap. 2. 8.

But then, here comes a difference againe, to make ours the worſe. Haman made it but a matter of policie, It is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them. Ours made it no leſſe than a matter of Religion. Religion was at the ſtake. A caſe of meere conſcience: not to doe any thing, but the Oracle conſulted firſt, the Father Provinciall, who ex tripode reſolved it for ſuch. And, as if he had had all our lives in his hand, anſwered in no other ſtyle, than did Aſſuerus, Chap. III. Ver. XI. De populo fac quod libet, As for Ibidem.

this people, doe with them what ye liſt: with them, and with the King too (which was more than here did Haman) blow them up and ſpare not. And though there be of our owne Catholikes among them, no force: blow them up, for all that: It is for Religion, this.

I conclude all, with the very ſight, if this lot of theirs had fallen to our lot.

It had beene an heavie ſight (as in the maſſacre of Paris) to have ſeene men tumbling in their owne bloud here and there in the ſtreets: Nothing to this, to ſee men torne in ſunder, heads from ſhoulders, armes from legges, both from the body; quarters and halfe quarters flying about: the braines fly one way, the bowels another; bloud ſpilt, like water in the river, in the fields, in every corner of the ſtreets, never the like ſight, and ſo never the like lot to this.

Now then: ſince, in our lot, 1 the deſtruction more deſtructive (for by powder) 2 more generall (for King and all with us:) 3 upon a leſſe certaine and upon a more famous Day: Our Nation more noble; Our Haman more wicked; Their cauſe and colour more to be abhorred: I conclude, our lot was the worſe, and the worſe the lot, the better the eſcape: the better it, and the better deſerving a Holy-day for it. And this for the lot in the lap.

2 Now to GOD that giveth the hap.

The Event. Where, firſt I note, that the word Pur it is no Hebrew, but a Perſian word; yet it was thought meet to retaine it. They give this reaſon, for that, the ſame word Pur (in Hebrew) ſignifieth to diſappoint: ſhewing plainly, that the Hebrewes GOD ſhould give an Hebrew Pur to the Perſian Pur, diſappoint the Perſian lot: and though it were caſt, yet not ſuffer it to light, though.

We finde at the XXIV. Verſe, Haman did caſt but Pur in the ſingular, but one ſingle lot (He needed caſt but one, ſince all were to goe one way, none to eſcape;) yet the Day is called Purim, that is the plurall, as if there were more than one, ſome other, beſide that of Haman's. And ſo it was fit there ſhould, that there might be as well a good lot as an evill. The troth is, there can be no lottery of one; there behove to be two at leaſt: two diverſe. The law is ſo. The firſt lots, we reade of, that ever were caſt, were betweene the two Goats, Levit. 16. Whoſe lot it ſhould be to die, and whoſe to ſcape, to be the Scape-goat. Here was never a ſcape-goat in Haman's; ſlaine-goats, all: ſo, beſide the Law quite. GOD tooke Haman caſting lots beſide the Law, and He tooke the matter into His owne hand; and he did it regularly, made two lots, to two ends, and for two parties. One for Mardochei and the Iewes, them one; for Haman another: GOD put in one, for him too, by his leave. Mardochei ſaith it plainly in the Greeke Supplement c. I. v. X. that GOD made two lots and gave them forth, One for His owne People, and one for the wicked (meaning wicked Haman.) So have ye Haman's Pur (he caſt but one, which was diſappointed and never drawne:) And GODS Purim (two of His putting in, and both drawne.) And it is well we have removed it out of Haman's, into a better hand, that we may ſay, In manibus tuis ſortes meæ (as ſaith the Pſalme) Not in Haman's hands are our lots, but in thine.

Levit. 16. 8.

Pſal. 31. 15.

Two good hopes we have thereby. 1. One that though it was nothing with Haman, to lay hands on Mardochei, nor with ours, on the King; yet with GOD it will be ſomewhat, nay much: That GOD will be otherwiſe minded, than Haman or they. Not magiſque voluit omnem Nationem perdere, but magiſque voluit omnem Nationem ſervare; rather ſee Haman hanged, and a dozen ſuch as he, than that a whole Nation ſhould periſh in this manner.

2. And then ſecondly, ſeeing they be now in GODS hands, be the lot what it will or in what lap it will; in Haman's owne lap (to be ſure) yet when it comes to the drawing, GOD will give it forth, which way, and with what ſucceſſe He pleaſeth. And when all is done, what Haman, nay, what Aſſuerus himſelfe doth purpoſe, GOD will diſpoſe, and there ſhall be neither lot, nor plot, againſt the LORD. And ſo wee come to GOD's Purim, to His lottery.

I The Meanes. Wherein we are againe before them as many wayes, in the 1 meanes, the 2 manner, ner, the 3 time, and the 4 iſſue, all foure. 1. The fewer meanes, the more like a lot: and we had no meanes. They had, and uſed meanes, both to GOD and man. To GOD by faſting and fervent prayer, which prevailes with Him much. To man, to King Aſſuerus; they had the Queenes mediation, which prevailed with him too. We uſed none, either to GOD or man; faſted not, prayed not, ſuſpected no evill to be toward, and ſo uſed neither. There is no cauſe, no meanes in a lot, It is Saint Auguſtines note, that it is therefore termed the Lot of the righteous (in the Pſalme) and in the Apoſtle, Sors ſanctorum, for that, merit or meanes there is none at all; GOD onely allots it to us. And ſuch was ours; not by meanes, as they; but, delivered (as I may ſay) from a lot, by a lot, a meere lot. So, our Purim (we may ſay) was more pure than theirs. Pſal.125.3. Coloſſ.1.12.

But though no meanes we had to GOD, yet a meanes from GOD we had; they and we both. For, from a King, it came, in both. But, farre otherwiſe, in the manner, with us, than with them, two wayes. 1. Firſt, with them, the delivery came from the King, and well might: For, from him came their danger, from his proclamation under his hand and ſeale; without which, Haman could have made no lottery of himſelfe. With us, in a better manner; and ſo, our lot better. For, from the King came our eſcape; but no danger from him. He, as deepe in the danger, as we. Nothing that was evill, nothing that pertained to any perill, from Him: but, our ſafety ſolely and wholly from Him, next to GOD. 2 The Manner.

Another yet. For in theirs, the King that had been miſ-informed by Haman, was ſet right by the Queenes more true information: and this, is a regular common way. But ours, by no information of Eſther or of any: onely, by meere inſpiration, immediatly from GOD by making that come into the Kings head which neither did, nor would have come into any mans head elſe: the more ſure, that it came from GOD, ſince ſo great a ſalvation was wrought by it. For, the burning of the paper, if he had taken it in the ſenſe that others did, or any would have done, we had all beene burnt indeed, as ſoone as the paper. But, GOD drew from him, a ſenſe beſide all ſenſe, even as it were by a lot, ſince (to all mens ſeeing) it was rather a caſuall, than a rationall interpretation. The drawing of that ſenſe, was even like the drawing of a lot: ſo that, ſorte merâ ſervati ſumus; and never any more true Purim, than this of ours. And though men, when they eſcape, ſtand not much on the meanes or the manner (it is well, they are well:) Yet, it cannot chooſe but doe us much good, to ſee our ſelves ſaved, by ſo Royall a meanes, and in ſo miraculous a manner. It is a ſigne quòd reſpicit nos Deus, GOD reſpects us, in the manner of whoſe ſaving, He would ſhew ſo divine a miracle.

But beſide the meanes, and the manner, thirdly the circumſtance of time is worth the conſidering: For in both, all came about in a night. Haman had made all ſure: ſo ſure, as he had ſet up the gallowes and all, and meant to move the King, and made no doubt but to have Mardochei hanged, the next morning. This was over-night. And, that very night, did GOD take order, the King could not ſleepe. And by that meanes, was Mardochei's good ſervice read to him. Sure, for Saving the Kings life, he deſerved not to loſe his owne. Now, it comes to the drawing. A good lot, a prize: Honour for Mardochei. And this good lot, for Mardochei's honour, GOD drew even out of Haman's owne mouth; he, was by the King, made to be the proclaimer of it. 3 The Time. Chap.5.14. Chap.6.1.

It ſtaid not there. But, the day following, the King being rightly enformed by the Queene, Her people were no ſuch people, as Haman made them; one of them had ſaved the Kings life; with this, forth came there a good lot, for the Iewes: the former proclamation called in, the Poſts ſent with all ſpeed to publiſh another for their deliverance. Chap.8.9. 16.

Now comes Haman's lot. GOD tooke him caſting lots upon His people, and He caſt one upon him too. For, when the Queene fell on her knees, and begged her owne life of the King; he was juſtly diſpleaſed with Haman's preſumption, that durſt come ſo neere him, as touch her life; and ſtraight allotted him the ſame death, he had hight Mardochei. And, the ſame day in the ſame place, and even upon the very ſame gallowes, he had purpoſely ſet up for him, the night before, it came to his lot, to be fairely hanged himſelfe. Chap.7.9. 10.

ſelfe. This, is GOD able to doe: to make Haman, in the lot he caſt for the Iewes, unwittingly to draw his owne deſtiny; and make the day, by him ſet for them, the fatall day of his owne deſtruction. To doe this, and upon ſo ſhort warning, to doe it: for, all this was done, in the ſpace of foure and twenty houres. Wherein, we ſee it verified, Prov.21.1. that Salomon ſaith: That the Kings heart is in GODS hand, and He turnes it as a water-courſe, to runne which way He will have it; and other-while makes a damme in it, and diverts the current a quite contrary way, cleane backe upon Haman, to overflow him, and to drowne him. Thus did He with them.

And ſo did He with us, and more alſo: and that, in leſſe time. For, ours was neerer than ſo; and, the neerer it came, the fairer our lot, to eſcape it.

For, with them, the fourteenth of Adar was not yet come; the Poſts, had time to goe and come, before it: but with us, it ſtayed till the very day it ſelfe was come. In a night, both: but ours, the night, the next night before; ſo was not theirs. Ever, the Matth.24.38. Luke 17.29. Scripture doth preſſe this point: Not till the day, Noë entred into the Arke: Not till that morning, that Lot went out of Sodome. So ours, not till the very night immediately preceding the diſmall day it ſelfe. And then, when powder, and traine, and match and Luke 12.20. all were in a readineſſe, then comes me GOD with His Stulte hâc nocte, and daſhes all. They were delivered, before the day came: The day it ſelfe came, before we were delivered; It was hâc nocte (indeed) literally. So, we ſcaped more narrowly; our lot more neere the drawing. So, ours was potior tempore.

4 The iſſue. Pſal.124.7. And potior jure too. For, though the ſame iſſue, to both; yet in that alſo, have we the better. A delivery there is mentioned (124. Pſalme) Our ſoule is ſcaped even as the bird, out of the ſnare of the fowler; the ſnare is broke, and we are delivered. And, this is worth the drawing. But, this is but Pur, a ſingle lot: For, if that be all, the bird is eſcaped, and that is well for the bird: but, the fowler (ſave that he is a little deluded) he is not hurt; and ſo, he can ſoone ſet another ſnare againe. This, is but Pur.

But, Purim, is better; when the fowle ſcapes, and the fowler ſcapes not, but comes himſelfe to a foule end. The ſnare is broken: No, the ſnare is whole, and they taken in the ſnare. It ſprung onely, and away went the fowle; but with the ſpring, the knot was knit anew, and Haman and his fellow-fowlers caught, and ſtrangled in it.

And this (loe) is Purim: Purim, after the Hebrew idiom, is the great lot. To ſcape a ſnare; and in the ſame ſnare, to have (not their foot, but) their necke taken, that ſet it: There is no greater. The Paſſeover is no greater: There, they ſcaped, and Pharaoh drowned: here, they ſcaped, and Haman hanged.

Will yee looke backe to the Kings ſentence at the five and twentieth verſe? This Chap.7.3. it is: Malum, quod cogitavit contra vos, avertatur in caput ipſius. Not, Avertatur à capitibus veſtris; (Eſthers firſt petition was no more, let my life be given me; Turne away my deſtruction: That, it is too:) but, that is not it. This is it: Convertatur in caput ipſius, The evill, he deviſed, be it turned away from your heads (that is well;) not a haire fall from any of our heads; But the ſame evill, they deviſed, be it turned upon their owne heads, that were the deviſers. This, is it: and this is as much, as the King could grant, or the Queene could deſire.

Pſal 21.11. And this ſame is the lot of this day. They imagined ſuch a device, as they were neere the performing, yet were not able to performe. The non-performance was well, the ſcattering of their imaginations; we ſcaped by the meanes. But further, they were taken in their owne turne, and the evill they deviſed againſt us, returned upon their owne heads; their heads, and quarters both. To Haman's end they came: Nay, to a worſe than Haman's, and juſtly; for, their device, worſe than his. The place, they meant to have done execution upon us in, under the ſame place, they themſelves executed. Before their eyes, on whom their cruell bowels had no compaſſion, were their cruell bowels burnt. The heads, from which it came, to have blowen up the Houſe; the houſe hath blowen up their heads, and ſo they be Agagites right. Their bodies plucked in peeces, their quarters rent in ſunder, ſo their meaning was to have dealt with ours, Iob 20.29. This is the lot of the ungodly from the LORD. Their evill lot, and (under one) the ſame, the happie lot of our deliverance.

And

And ſo we have done with Purim now. For, by this it is plaine, 1 Ours was altogether without meanes, and ſo more lot-like : 2 Ours was more miraculous in the manner, and (for all the world) like a lot : 3 Ours was more neere brought in time; and (like a lot) drawen at the inſtant : 4 Ours was beyond theirs, in the avertatur; For, ours without ſack-cloth or aſhes, faſting or crying, at all : And, in the convertatur; for, our fowlers came to a fouler end than theirs; and what would we more? Never might David more truly ſay, than we, The lot is fallen to us in a faire ground, The LORD hath maintained our lot. Pſal. 16. 6.

This, GOD hath drawen for us : Shall we now draw for Him againe; and for this ſo faire a lot, allot Him ſomewhat of our part? Memento is ſet before the great, and ſo before all holy-dayes. All, Hee would draw from us is, but that the lot of this day, or the day of this lot may never be forgotten. A benefit would not be forgotten; Not mans : GODS much leſſe. Such a benefit eſpecially. For, even in GODS, there is a difference : GOD hath His daily benefits, and thoſe to be remembred of courſe. But, ſome other He hath ſo rare, as the like never ſeene : Thoſe would have a more than ordinary regard. For, where GOD is Extraordinary, we to be ſo too. If He make it a memorable day, by ſome ſtrange delivery, we to make it memorable, by ſome rare acknowledgement. They ſeeme willing ſo to doe, here. Illi ſunt dies, quos (ſay they;) Ille eſt dies quem (may we ſay) nulla unquam delebit oblivio : and ſo let us ſay : and ſo ſaid, and ſo done, is as much as GOD requireth. But our thankfulneſſe is not to flie away, like a flaſh of powder. To fix it then, fiat volatile fixum; that would be done. And, fix it, in any thing elſe but time, time will eat it out. Beſt then, fix it in time it ſelfe : and, that hath beene ever thought a wiſe way; ſo ſhall it roll about with the time, and renew as it doth. And ſo, time, which defaceth all things and bringeth them to forgetfulneſſe, ſhall be made to preſerve the memory of it, whether it will or no. Fix it in time; what part of time? A day; Memento diem, ſaith GOD in His Law, and ſo points us to the proportion of it. Set ſome day; and let there, then on that day, be ſome ſpeciall commemoration of it.

II. This lot to have a time of remembrance. Exod. 20. 8.

But, that day, or time, is to be a ſet day. Fix it in time; but, fix the time too. The word of the Text [זמן] is an appointed day, that comes once a yeare; as Solenne is quod ſolum in anno. Now this, ſome will not heare of : No ſet dayes, no appointed times (they) but keepe them in memory, all the yeare long. I like not that. For, ſo, when time was, it was ſaid by ſome, they would not have this day nor that day, to faſt on, but keepe a continuall faſt (they:) and it ſeemed a pretty ſpeculation at firſt, but proved nothing but a ſpeculation : what their faſt is come to, by this time we ſee. It is to be doubted, if other ſet times were likewiſe taken away; their continuall feaſt would prove to no better paſſe, than their faſt is: Better be as it is, and we doe, as GOD and good people have done before us.

2 A ſet time, or day.

Provided that it ſhall be lawfull for them to keepe the memory of this day, every day, if they be ſo diſpoſed. So yet, as they be content to allow ſome ſuch Day, as this, for them, that are not of ſo happie memories; for feare, leſt it be left at large to every mans daily devotion, it may fall to be forgotten; and where it now hath one day, then to have none at all.

And if a ſet time, what day can we ſet ſo fit, as the day it ſelfe it fell on? With them, the fourteenth of Adar : with us, the fifth of November. It cannot but be the beſt way (this) that GOD tooke Himſelfe: and GOD tooke this. The ſame dayes, He did His noble acts upon, thoſe very dayes, did He order once a yeare ſolemnly to be kept. The fourteenth of Niſan, did the Deſtroyer paſſe over them; that day, from yeare to yeare did He ordaine the Paſſeover to be holden. Fiftie dayes after, He granted them His Law : in memory of this gift, they to keepe yearely the day of Pentecoſt. Can we goe by a better example than this of GODS owne?

3 The day it fell on. Levit. 23. 5. Levit. 23. 16.

Theſe two were not all; but GOD did as great acts after, as theſe were, for the ſame people. They then, ſetting before them this way skored them out by GOD (for every famous famous benefit, a ſolemne day :) for thoſe other benefits after vouchſafed them, they did appoint like ſolemne dayes, of themſelves.

We inſtance in this of Purim, which Moſes and the Prophets never knew. We inſtance in another after this, which Eſther or Mardochei never knew, the Encænid, or Feaſt of new dedicating the Temple, after it had beene polluted by Antiochus, recorded in the X. of the V. of Iohn. And I would faine know, why it ſhould not be like acceptable to GOD, to keep the fourteenth of the laſt moneth Adar, for their deliverance from Haman, by Eſther in Perſia; as it was, to keepe the fourteenth of the firſt moneth Niſan, for their deliverance from Pharaoh, by Moſes in Ægypt: Quid intereſt?

The ground being morall, or rather naturall, as reducible to thankfulneſſe, which is a vertue of the Law of Nature: the prime example being GODS owne: By warrant of it, the former Church having inſtitute others, the Chriſtian Church knew nothing to barre it from doing the like: ſo, Holy-dayes ſhee appointed too. It is Saint Auguſtine (de Civitate X. 4.) Memoriam beneficiorum Dei, &c. The memorie of GOD'S benefits we Chriſtians keepe ſacred and holy, by holding ſolemne Feaſts for them, leſt elſe, by revolution of time, forgetfulneſſe might creepe upon us, and we prove unthankfull. And doe we any other thing in appointing this day, than all theſe did? I conclude, with the ſtyle of the Councels: Sequentes igitur & nos per omnia Sanctorum Patrum veſtigia, We, herein, doe but tread in the ſteps of our holy Fathers, and follow them were followers therein of GOD Himſelfe.

If it be ſaid, all this while we heare no precept alleaged, we have nothing but example: No more had Eſther, here; precept had ſhe none. Only GODS example ſhe had; Picked the fourteenth of Adar, out of the fourteenth of Niſan: from Pharaoh, that, from Haman, this. It is true, Dirigimur præceptis; By precepts we take our direction: But it is no leſſe true, Inſtruimur exemplis; We receive inſtruction (in a great part) from examples alſo. One ſerves for our rule, the other for our patterne; and we, as to obey the one, ſo to imitate the other: For, Perfectio inferiorum, aſſimilatio ſuperiorum: The inferiour hath no greater perfection, than to become like to them that are his Superiours. Superiours (I ſay) and that, in time, no leſſe than in place; that is, ſuch as have in former times, laudably gone before us. The Bible ſheweth this plaine; there, beſide the Bookes of the Law, that ſerve for Precepts to direction, GOD hath cauſed to be written the Story of the Bible, to yeeld us examples, for imitation. And thoſe Bookes of Story are in Hebrew, called the former Prophets; to ſhew, before there came any predictions into the world, there was a Prophetical force in them, to guide GODS people by. To the Law, and to the Teſtimony: For, the practice of the Saints runneth along with the Law, under the name of Teſtimony; their lives having ever borne teſtimony to GOD, and his truth. And as the Hebrewes ſay, a barren Divine ſhall he be, qui neſcit facere legem de Prophetis, that out of the Saints practice, cannot frame a Law.

The ground then being laid: If this be agreed of, that a day, that a ſet day, and that this very day may be appointed: We have two points more, to touch, 1 the authority, by which it is to be injoyned; and the 2 manner, according to which it is to be obſerved.

1 The Authority by which it was injoyned.

1. The authority firſt. For, be the ground never ſo good, yet are not we to take up dayes, of our owne heads, but by order of authority: they are to be injoyned us. Whoſe authority here? There be in a Law, but three things, 1 advice, 2 authority, 3 and ſubmiſſion, they be all here. It ſhould ſeeme, at the firſt, Mardochei did onely by a letter, adviſe them, Vt ſuſciperent & revertente ſemper anno celebrarent honore (Verſe 20.) before; and this, before he was in place. That letter of his, either not taking place, or not place enough; and they being either laid downe, or ſo like to be, here commeth now שויק a ſecond, to confirme that (as the word is) and this, no advice now, but בכל תוקפ, with all authoritie; of the nature of a Law, to eſtabliſh them for ever.

Now, this could not Mardochei, nor Eſther, nay nor both of them do, of themſelves, in Perſia; not, without the regall authoritie there, or without commiſſion from it. Not ſend over the hundred twenty ſeven Provinces; nay, not over any one Province of them, but by vigor of Aſſuerus's warrant. His warrant they had, at the XXV. Ver. and by it proceeded proceeded they, to doe all this. What Esther did, shee did in the power of Assuerus.

Now Assuerus (it is well knowne) was a Heathen King; yet have we here a Feast establiſhed by his authoritie. So was the King of Ninive, a Heathen too; yet have we a Fast injoyned by his. So was the King of Babel, a Heathen King; yet a Law by him made, upon paine of death not to blaſpheme the true GOD. So were Cyrus, and Darius; yet the Temple built by their authority. Things pertaining to Religion, all. So that there is, in the Regall power, of all, yea, even of Heathen Princes, to confirme and to injoyne what may tend to the worſhip and ſervice of GOD. Ionas 3.7. Dan.3 29. Ezra 5.13. 6.12.

Power againſt the truth, or for falſhood, I know none: no Power to deſtruction, to edification, all. And, prayer is to be made without ceaſing, for Kings, that they may apply their power to theſe, to edifie in the Truth. So they will, if Mardochai may be in place to adviſe them, not Haman. But if they miſ-apply it, and not to the end, GOD gave it them; (for He that gave it them, is to take account of them for it, and He will require it at their hands;) to Him they be reſpondent. 2 Cor.13.10. 1 Tim.2.2.

But, be this, here and ever remembred, if by a Heathen Princes power this was done, ſhall it be denied to a Chriſtian Prince, to one in whom Aſſuerus's power, and Eſther's Religion (both) meet, to take order for dayes, or rather rites of that nature? Well then, having both our ground, and our authoritie לקים (which word is, three ſeverall times repeated in this one verſe, 1 Once for Mardochai, that adviſed; 2 Once, for Eſther, that injoyned; and 3 Once for the people that undertooke to obſerve it: It is the Iewes operative word whereby they enact all their ſtatutes:) Be it then enacted, what? Vt nulli liceat dies hos abſque ſolennitate tranſigere, Verſe 23. That it be lawfull for no man, to paſſe theſe dayes, without ſolemnizing.

To a Law there goe two כאשר, two Caaſhers, two accordings. Both twaine are here. 1 According as Eſther, with Mardochai's advice, injoyned it: 2 And, according as they (that is, the people) tooke upon them, decreed to obſerve it.

Which obſerving is the life of every Law: even the publike approbation, or giving allowance of it, by the conſtant keeping it. The ſecond according is added for the peoples commendation: that what was prudently adviſed, and lawfully injoyned, was by them as dutifully obſerved.

And this they not onely did, but bound themſelves moreover, and their ſeed, ſo to continue. Themſelves, and that with the higheſt bond, ſuper animas ſuas (which is more than upon themſelves, and would not have beene put in the margent, but ſtood in the Text) upon theirs, and upon their ſeeds, never to let them fall. The word is קבל at the 27. Verſe: that is, to make a Kabala, or tradition of it. And that is the true tradition indeed: when a thing orderly taken up (there, is קים) is carefully, and out of conſcience kept up (there, is קבל) and delivered over from the Father to the Sonne, and from the Sonne to the Nephew, to all ſucceeding Ages; none daring to tranſgreſſe it, on the charge of their ſoules. This Kabala made it a perfect Law.

Now, a word of the manner of the keeping them, and ſo an end. They enacted, to keepe the Purim-dayes: How to keepe them? It will lead us (this) to the nature of them, whether as holy-dayes or no. For, at this, there be that ſticke too. A feria they will allow them, a play-day, or ceaſing from worke; or a feſtus dies, if you will, a day of feaſting, or encreaſe of fare; but, not dies ſanctus, no holy-day, no, at any hand: For, then may Eſther make holy-dayes (they ſee) it followes. What ſhould one ſay to ſuch men as theſe? 1 2 The Manner of keeping it. 2

For 1 firſt, it is plaine by this verſe, they tooke it in animas, upon their ſoules; a ſoule-matter they made of it. There needs no ſoule for feria or feſtum, play or feaſting. 2 Secondly, the bond of it reacheth to all, that Religioni eorum voluerunt copulari (Verſe 27.) to all, that ſhould joyne themſelves to their religion: Then, a matter of Religion it was, had reference to that; what need any joyning in religion, for a matter of good-fellowſhip? 3 Thirdly, it is expreſly termed a rite, and a ceremonie (at the 23. and 28. Verſes) as the Fathers reade them: Rites I truſt, and ceremonies (as holy-dayes are no more) pertaine to the Church, and to the Service of GOD; not, to merry meetings; that, is not their place. 4 Fourthly, they faſt and pray here, in this Verſe; faſt the

Eve,

Eve, the fourteenth, and ſo then, the day following to be holy-day, of courſe. 5 Fifthly, with faſting and prayer (here) almes alſo is injoyned (at the 22. Verſe.) Theſe three will make it paſt a day of revell or mirth. 6 Laſtly, as a holy-day, the Iewes ever kept it, have a peculiar ſet Service for it, in their Seders; ſet Pſalmes to ſing, ſet Leſſons to reade, ſet Prayers to ſay (and that at foure ſeverall times as (out of Nehem. 9. v. 3.) their manner is, on holy-dayes) good and godly, all. None, but as they have uſed, from all antiquitie. 1 Being then taken on their ſoules: 2 reſtrained to the ſame Religion: 3 directly termed a ceremonie: 4 being to be held with faſting, prayers, and 5 almes, workes of pietie all: 6 the practice of the Church concurring: theirs was a holy-day cleere, and ſo ought ours to be. Thus have we a preſident, upon record, to draw up ours by: the Superiours, to injoyne ſuch a day; the Inferiours, to obſerve it.

And, as a warrant to doe it; ſo, a rule how to doe it; with faſting and with crying (that is) prayer, earneſt prayer (the laſt word.) What, and muſt we faſt then? That were no good lot in the end of a Text. No: if we will pray, well: I dare take upon me, to excuſe us from faſting. Their faſting was, to put them in minde of the faſt, their Fathers uſed (Chap. 4. 3.) by meanes whereof they turned GOD, and GOD turned the Kings heart, and ſo all turned to their good. But, for us, we have no ſuch meanes to remember in ours: we uſed not any, and ſo hold ours without any. They had two dayes; their holy-day had a faſting day. Our lot is to have but one; and that, no faſting day; an immunitie from that. So much the better is our lot: A feaſt, without any faſt, at all.

But though without faſting, not without earneſt prayer (meant here, by crying:) nor, without earneſt thankes and praiſe, neither. For, joy alſo hath her cry, as well as affliction: The voice of joy and health is in the dwellings of the righteous. But, prayer (ſure) will doe well at all hands, that a worſe thing happen not to us. But, prayer is but one wing: with almes it will doe better, make a paire of wings; which is before preſcribed, at the two and twentieth Verſe. So to eat the fat and drinke the ſweet our ſelves, as we ſend a part, to them for whom nothing is provided. Dies enim Sanctus eſt, ſaith Nehemias; for (by his rule) that, makes it a right holy-day.

Nehem. 8. 10.

But, prayer is the laſt word here; ends the Verſe: and with that, let us end. Even, that all, that ſhall ever attempt the like, let Haman's lot be their lot, and let never any other light on them, but ſors funiculus. Let Queene Eſther's prayer, and King Aſſuerus's ſentence ever take place, Malum quod cogitavit, convertatur in caput ipſius; Ipſius, or ipſorum, one, or many: Let not the rod of the ungodly light on the lot of the righteous. Let GOD in whoſe hand our lots are, ever maintaine this dayes lot to us; never give forth other, but as in this Text, and as on this day, on the fourteenth of Adar, and on the fifth of November. And praiſed be GOD, this day, and all our dayes, that this day ſhewed, that He taketh pleaſure in the proſperity of His Servants, and from all lots and plots, doth ever deliver them.

A SERMON PREACHED AT St. MARIES HOSPITAL, ON the Tenth of April, being Wedneſday in Eaſter-weeke, AN. DOM. MDLXXXVIII.

I TIM. CHAP. VI. VER. XVII, XVIII, XIX.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, that they truſt not in the uncertainty of riches, but in the living GOD, which giveth us all things to enjoy, plenteouſly;

That they doe good, be rich in good workes, ready to deſtribute and to communicate:

Laying up in ſtore, for themſelves, a good foundation, againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold of Eternall life.

HE commendation of the Word of GOD is, that Every Scripture is profitable for our inſtruction. Every Scripture is profitable: yet, not every Scripture, in every place alike. For, the Place and Auditorie have great intereſt in ſome Scripture; and a fit Scripture hath a greater and fuller force, in his owne Auditorie. And GOD, in ſo excellent a manner hath ſorted His Scriptures, as there lye diſperſed in them, ſeverall Texts, ſeaſonable for each time, and pertinent to each place and degree; for Prince, for people; for rich, for poore; for each, his peculiar Scripture, in due time and place, to be reached them. 2 Tim. 3. 16.

This Scripture which I have read, whoſe it is, and to whom it ſpeaketh, is at the very reading ſtraight way evident: as one ſaith of the XLI. Pſalme (Bleſſed is he that judgeth rightly of the poore) that it is Scriptura Pauperum, the Poore mans Scripture; So, of this, it may be rightly ſaid, that it is Scriptura Divitum, The Rich mans Scripture. And, if this be the Scripture for rich men; this place, is the place of rich men: and therefore, if this Scripture have his place, no where ſo fit as in this place. For, no where is there ſuch ſtore of riches, by the [a] Harveſt of the water, which far ſurpaſſeth the harveſt of the ground: No where are the like [b] Summes ſealed; No where doe they [c] ſucke the abundance of the Sea and the treaſures hid in the ſand, in like meaſure: No where are the [d] Merchants Noblemens fellowes and able to lend the Princes of the earth, ſo much, as here. Therefore when as I gave all diligence to ſpeake, not onely true things, but alſo ſeaſonable, both for this time and this place, I was directed to this Scripture. I need not to ſay much in this point; to ſhew, it concerneth this Audience. I will ſay, as the Fathers ſay, upon the like occaſion; Faxit Deus tam commoda, quàm eſt accommoda; I pray GOD make it as profitable, as it is pertinent; as fruitfull to you, as it is fit for you.

The Diviſion

I. 1. This whole Scripture hath his name given it even in the firſt word: Charge (ſaith he) the rich, &c. It is a Charge.

II. 2. It is directed to certaine men; namely, to the rich of this world.

III. 3. It conſiſteth of foure branches: Whereof two are negative, for the removing of two abuſes.

1. The firſt, Charge them, that they be not high minded.

2. The ſecond, Charge them, that they truſt not in their riches.

The reaſon is added (which is a Maxime and a Ground in the Law of Nature, that wee muſt truſt to no uncertaine thing:) Truſt not, in the uncertainety of riches.

The other two are affirmative, concerning the true uſe of riches.

1. The firſt: Charge them that they truſt in GOD. The reaſon: Becauſe, He giveth them all things to enjoy plenteouſly.

2. The ſecond: Charge them that they doe good; that, is the ſubſtance: The quantitie, that they be rich in good workes: the qualitie, that they be ready to part with (and a ſpeciall kind of doing good) to communicate, to benefit the publike.

And all theſe are one Charge. The reaſon of them all doth follow: Becauſe by this meanes they ſhall lay up in ſtore, and that for themſelves, a good foundation, againſt the time to come. The end: that they may obtaine eternall life.

I. A Charge.

PRæcipe divitibus: Charge the rich of this world, &c. Beloved, here is a Charge, a Præcipe, a Precept, or a Writ, directed unto Timothie, and to thoſe of his Commiſſion to the worlds end, to convent and call before him; He, the rich men of Epheſus; and we, the rich men of this Citie, and others of other places of the earth, and to give them a charge.

Charges (as you know) uſe to be given at Aſſiſes in Courts from the Bench. From thence is taken this judiciall terme παράγγελλε, as it appeareth, Acts 5. 28. Did not we charge you ſtraightly? ſaith the Bench in the Conſiſtorie judicially aſſembled. Whereby, we are given to underſtand, that in ſuch aſſemblies as this is, the Lord of Heaven doth hold His Court, whereunto all men, and (they that of all men ſeeme leaſt) the rich and mighty of the world owe both ſuit and ſervice. For, as earthly Princes have their Lawes, their Commiſſions, their Miniſters of the Law, their Courts, and Court-daies, for the maintenance of their peace: So hath the King of Kings His Lawes and Statutes, His Precepts and Commiſſions by authority delegate, Ite prædicate, Go preach the Goſpel; His Counſellers at law, whom Auguſtine calleth Divini Iuris Conſultos; His Courts

In occulto conſcientiæ, in the hid and ſecret part of the heart and conſcience, for the preſervation of His peace, which the world can neither give nor take away; to the end, that none may offend or be offended at it. Pſal.7.8. Pſal.119 165.

This we learne. And with this we learne, all of us, ſo to conceive of, and to diſpoſe our ſelves to ſuch Meetings as this, as men that are to appeare in Court, before the Lord, there to receive a Charge, which when the Court is broken up, we muſt thinke of how to diſcharge.

In which point, great is the occaſion of complaint, which we might take up. For, who is there, that with that awe and reverence ſtandeth before the Lord, at His charge-giving, that he receiveth a charge with, at an earthly Barre? Or with that care remembreth the Lord and His charge, wherewith he continually thinketh upon the Iudge and his charge? Truly, the Lords commiſſion is worthy to have as great reverence and regard attending on it, as the charge of any Prince; truly, it is. Weigh with your ſelfe; is not GOD'S charge with as much heed and reverence to be received, as an earthly Iudges? Abſit ut ſic (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) ſed utinam vel ſic: GOD forbid, but with more heed and reverence; well, I would it had ſo much, in the meane time: And (which to our ſhame we muſt ſpeake) I would we could doe as much for the Bible as for the Statute-Bookes; for heaven as for the earth; for the Immortall GOD, as for a mortall man. But whether we doe or no, yet as our SAVIOVR CHRIST ſaid of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, If yee will receive, this is that Eliah which was to come; ſo ſay I of this Precept, If yee will receive it, this is the Charge the Lord hath laid on you. And this let me tell you farther; that it is ſuch a Charge, as it concerneth your peace, the plentifull uſe of all your wealth and riches (in the ſecond Verſe of my Text, Which giveth us all things to enjoy plenteouſly, &c.) Which may move you. Or, if that will not, let me adde this farther; It is ſuch a Charge, as toucheth your eſtate in everlaſting life, the very laſt words of my Text. That is, the well or evill hearing of this Charge, is as much worth as your eternall life is worth. And therefore, He that hath eares to heare, let him heare. Mat.11.14. Mat.11.5.

It is a Charge then, and conſequently to be diſcharged. To be diſcharged? where? Charge (ſaith he) the rich. He ſpeaketh to the Rich: you know your owne names; you know beſt, what thoſe rich men are. Shall I tell you? You are the rich; he ſpeaketh unto you. It is the faſhion and the fault of this world, to exerciſe their authority on them moſt, that need it leaſt: For, rich men, to feaſt them that leaſt need it; for mighty men, to preferre them that leaſt deſerve it. It is an old Simile, we have oft heard it; that The Lawes are like Cobwebs: that they hold faſt the ſilly flies, but the great Hornets breake through them, as oft as they liſt. And as there are cobweb-Lawes, which exempt mighty men; So, the ſame Corruption, that was the cauſe thereof, would alſo make Cobweb-Divinitie. For, notwithſtanding the Commiſſion runneth expreſly to the Rich, Charge, &c. notwithſtanding they be in great danger, and that of many ſnares (as the Apoſtle ſaith in this Chapter) and therefore need it greatly: Yet (I know not how) it comes to paſſe, whether, becauſe they thinke themſelves too wiſe to receive a charge, any charge at all; or becauſe they thinke themſelves too good to receive it, at the hands of ſuch meane men, as we be (and, if they muſt needs be charged, they would be charged from the Councell, from men more Noble and Honorable than themſelves) they would not gladly heare it, ſurely they would not; and becauſe they would not gladly heare it, we are not haſty they ſhould heare it. And great reaſon, why (as we thinke:) for, as it is true which is in the *Pſal.*45.18. So long as they doe good to themſelves, men will ſpeake good of them: So, it is true backeward too; So long as we ſpeake well of them, ſpare them, call not on them, they will doe good to us. And otherwiſe, if we ſpare them not, but proſecute our charge, then commeth Odi Michæam filium Iimlæ, I hate Michea the Sonne of Iimlah. And who would willingly live in diſgrace, and ſuſtaine, I ſay not the fierce wrath, but the heavie look of a man in authoritie? That, makes this Office of giving a charge, a cold Office, and therefore to decay, and be ſhunned of all hands: that, makes us, if we cannot of the Eunuch

In a word: this maketh, that Ionah was never more unwilling to deliver his meſſage at Ninive, than is Timothee, to give his Charge at Epheſus.

The Apoſtle ſaw this, and what it would come to; and that you may ſee, that he ſaw it, you ſhall underſtand, he hath beſides this of yours, directed another Writ to us, Verſe 13. I charge thee, &c. running in very rigorous and peremptorie termes, able to make any that ſhall conſider them aright, to tremble. Ibidem. Knowing, that we feare honour and power, though it laſt but for a ſmall time, He feareth us with one, whoſe honour and power laſteth for ever.

Beloved in the Lord, I beſeech you weigh but the place; weigh it, and have pitie on us. For, Nunquid nos recipimus, nunquid nos delere poſſumus? Si delemus, timemus deleri (ſaith Saint Auguſtine.) We writ not this charge, our pens dealt not in it; it was not we that writ it, and it is not we that can blot it out, unleſſe we our ſelves will be blotted out of the booke of life.

Such is our charge as you ſee, to charge you: and, but for this charge, but that we are commanded, but that we are threatned, and that in ſo fearefull manner threatned, we ſhould never doe it; of all men, we ſhould never deale with the Rich. For, who would not chooſe to hold his peace and to ſeeke his owne eaſe from this charge, many times chargeable, ſometimes dangerous, evermore unſavory, but for this Proceſſe that is out againſt us? For my ſelfe, I profeſſe, that in the ſame words that S. Auguſtine did ſometime: Ad iſtam otioſiſſimam ſecuritatem nemo me vinceret: In this diſcreet kind of idleneſſe, no man ſhould goe beyond me, if S. Paul would be content; if order might be taken, to have theſe Verſes cancelled; if we could deliver (I ſay not yours, but) our owne ſoules with ſilence. But, this ſtanding in force, Cogit nos Paulus iſte, we are enforced by this Paul; His Præcipio tibi, I charge you, drives us to our Præcipe illis, to charge them: We charge not you, but when we are charged our ſelves: we terrifie not you, but when we are firſt terrified our ſelves. And I would to God we knowing this terror might both feare together this day, at the charge-giving, that ſo we might both rejoyce together in the great Day, at the charge-anſwering. This may ſerve; and I beſeech you, let it ſerve to ſtand betweene us and your diſpleaſure in this behalfe: and ſeeing the Commiſſion is penned to our hand, and that Rich men are in it nominatim (except the levin of affection ſhew it ſelfe too evidently in us) to thinke, we cannot otherwiſe doe; and that therefore it is, becauſe the commandement of our GOD is upon us, is heavie upon us. The Charge it ſelfe followeth.

II. Charge the Rich, &c. This is the firſt point of the charge, that they be not high minded. 1. Firſt, againſt that, which if it come with all the riches, yea all the ver-
1 tues in the world, it ſpoileth them all; that is, againſt Pride. 2. Secondly, againſt
The firſt point of the Charge: Not to be High-minded. that which is the root of this bitter branch, and the prop and ſtay of a high raiſed minde, namely, a vaine truſt in our riches. Both theſe forbidden, by meanes of their uncertainety, ἀδηλότης: ſuch, as a man cannot tell where to have them, therefore not to be boaſted of, therefore not to be truſted in.

Ever

Ever ſince our firſt Fathers, by infection tooke this morbum Sathanicum, this Diveliſh diſeaſe (Pride) of the Devill; ſuch tinder is in our nature, that every little ſparke ſets us on fire: our nature hath growen ſo light, that every little thing puffeth us up, and ſets us aloft in our altitudes preſently. Yea indeed, ſo light we are, that many times, when the gifts are low, yet for all that, the mind is as high, as the bramble: low in qualities (GOD knoweth) yet had his mind higher than the higheſt Cedar in Lebanon. But if we be but of meane ſtature once, but a thought higher than others our fellowes, if never ſo little more in us, than is in our neighbours, preſently we fall into Simons caſe, we ſeeme to our ſelves as he did, to be τὶς μέγας, no doubt ſome goodly great thing. But if we come once to any growth indeed, then preſently our caſe is Hamans caſe: Who but he? Who was he, that the King would honour more than him? Nay, who was there, that the King could honour, but he? He, and none but he. Through this aptneſſe in us that we have to learne the Devils leſſon, the Devils Diſcite à me, for I am proud; (for ſo it is, by oppoſition of CHRISTS leſſons, which is Diſcite à me, quia mitis ſum, becauſe I am meeke and gentle;) we are ready to corrupt our ſelves in every good gift of GOD; in Wiſedome, in Manhood, in Law, in Divinitie, in Learning or Eloquence, every and each of theſe ſerveth for a ſtirrup to mount us aloft in our own conceipts. For, where each of the former hath (as it were) his owne circuite (as Wiſdome ruleth in Counſell; Manhood in the Field; Law in the Iudgement-ſeat; Divinitie in the Pulpit; Learning in the Schooles; and Eloquence in Perſwaſion:) onely Riches ruleth without limitation: Riches ruleth with them all, ruleth them all, and overruleth them all: his Circuit is the whole world. For which cauſe, ſome thinke, when he ſaith Charge, the rich, he preſently addeth, of this world, becauſe this world ſtandeth altogether at the devotion of Riches; and he may doe what he will in this world, that is rich in this world. So ſaid the Wiſeman long agoe, Pecuniæ obediunt omnia: all things anſwer Money; Money maſtereth all things; they all anſwer at his call, and they all obey at his commandement. Let us goe lightly over them all; you ſhall ſee, that they all elſe have their ſeverall predicaments to bound them, and that Riches is only the tranſcendent of this world.

Acts 8. 9.

Eſter 6. 6.

Mat. 11. 29.

Eccles. 10. 19.

Wiſedome ruleth in Counſell; ſo doe Riches: for we ſee, in the Court of the great King Artaxerxes, there were Counſellors, whoſe wiſdome was to be commanded by riches, even to hinder a publike benefit, the building of the Temple. Manhood ruleth in the warre; ſo doe riches: Experience teacheth us, it is ſo: It is ſaid, it was they, that wan Deventer; and that it was they, and none but they, that drave the Switzers out of France, and that without ſtroke ſtrooken. Law governeth in the Seat of Iuſtice; ſo doe Riches: and oftentimes they turne juſtice it ſelfe into wormewood, by a corrupt Sentence; but more often doth it turne Iuſtice into vineger, by long ſtanding, and infinite delaies, yer Sentence will come forth. Divinitie ruleth in the Church and Pulpit; ſo doe Riches: For, with a ſet of ſilver-peeces (ſaith Auguſtine) they brought Concionatorem mundi, the Preacher of the world IESVS CHRIST to the Barre, and the Diſciple is not above his Maſter. Learning ruleth in the Schooles; ſo doe Riches: And indeed, there, Money ſetteth us all to ſchoole. For (to ſay the truth) Riches have ſo ordered the matter there, as Learning is now but the Vſher; Money he is the Maſter: the Chaire it ſelfe and the diſpoſing of the Chaire, is his too. Eloquence ruleth in perſwaſion; and ſo doe Riches: when Tertullus had laboured a goodly flowing oration againſt Paul, Felix looked, that another, a greater Orator ſhould have ſpoken for him, namely, that Something ſhould have beene given him: and if that Orator had ſpoken his ſhort pithy ſentence, Tantum dabo, Tertullus-his oration had beene cleane daſht. Tantum dabo is a ſtrange peece of Rhetorike: Deviſe as cunningly, pen as curiouſly as you can, it overthrowes all. Tantùm valent quatuor ſyllabæ, ſuch force is there in foure ſyllables. Though indeed, ſome think (it being ſo unreaſonable ſhort as it is, but two words) that it cannot be the Rhetorike of it, that worketh theſe ſtrange effects, but that there is ſome ſorcerie or witchcraft in them, in Tantum dabo. And ſurely a great Sorcerer (Simon Magus) uſed them to Peter: and it may well be ſo, for all eſtates are ſhrewdly bewitched by them. I muſt end: for it is a world to thinke and tell, what the Rich of the world, may doe in the world.

So then, Riches seeing they may doe so much, it is no marvell though they be much set by. Et divites cum habeant quæ magni fiunt ab omnibus, quid mirum, si ab omnibus ipsi magni fiant; & cum magni fiant ab omnibus, quid mirum si & à se? Rich men having that which is much set by, no marvell though of all men they be much set by; and if all other men set much by them, no marvell, if they set much by themselves; and to set much by a mans selfe, that is to be high-minded. It is our owne Proverbe in our owne tongue: As riseth our good, so riseth our bloud. And Saint Augustine saith, that Each fruit, by kind, hath his worme breeding in it: as the Peare, his; the Nut, his; and the Beane, his: So, Riches have their worme, Et vermis divitiarum, Superbia; and the worme of riches, is Pride. Whereof we see a plaine proofe in Saul: Who, while he was in a poore estate, that his boy and he could not make five pence betweene them, was 1 Sam 9.21. as the Scripture saith, low in his owne eyes: after, when the wealth and pleasant things of Israel were his, he grew so sterne, as he forgate himselfe, his friends, and GOD too: and at every word that liketh him not, was ready to runne David, Ionathan, and every one through with his javeline. It is very certaine; where riches are, there is great danger of pride. I desire you to thinke, there is so, and not to put me to justifie GODS wisedome herein, in perswading and proving, that this charge is need-
Psal.62.10. full for you that be rich; that it was needfull for the Prophet, to preach under the Law, If riches encrease, set not your heart on the top of them, Let not that rise as they rise: Nor Pro.30.9. for the other Prophet, Give me not riches, lest I wax proud: Nor for the Apostle Paul under the Gospell, to say: Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high minded. I beseech you, Honour GOD, and ease me so much as to thinke, there was high cause, it should be in charge; and that, if a more principall sinne had been reigning in the rich, this sinne should not have had the principall place, as it hath.

How then? what, are you able to charge any here? will some say: It is not the manner of our Court, nor of any Court, that I know. To us it belongeth, onely to deliver the Charge, and to exhort, that if none be proud, none would be; and if any be, they would be lesse: and, if any be not humble, they would be; and if any be humble, they would be more. You that are the Court, your part is to enquire, and to present, and to endite; and that, every one in his owne conscience, as in the presence of GOD, unto Him to approve your innocencie, or of Him to sue for your pardon. You find none (you will say:) I would to GOD you might not.

When a Iudge at an Assise, giveth his charge concerning treason and such like offences, I dare say, he would with all his heart, that his charge might be in vaine, rather than any Traitor or Offendor should be found. A Physitian, when he hath tempered and prepared his potion, if there be in him the heart of a true Physitian, desireth (I know) that the potion might be cast downe the kennell, so that the patient might recover without it: So, truly, it is the desire of my heart (CHRIST He knoweth) that this charge may not find one man guilty amongst all these hearers; amongst so many men, not one high-minded man. I wish, it might be in vaine. The best Sessions, and Potions, and Sermons are those, which are in vaine: I say not, in vaine, if there be cause of reproofe and no amends. But, if there be no cause, and so it be in vaine, I joy therein and will joy. But, if it be farre unlikely, amongst so great riches as is here, to finde no pride at all; very unlikely: then, heare the charge and present your selves and finde your selves guilty here in our Office, this day, while you may find grace, lest you be tried and found so, in that day, when there shall be no hope of grace, but onely a feare-full expectation of judgement.

Which that you may doe the better, so many as God shall make willing (as, some (I hope) He doth) I will informe you, how to trie your selves; referring you, to the severall branches, in our Statutes, in the High Court of Parliament in Heaven: laying them out unto you, as I find them in the Records of the Holy Ghost.

The

The points are three in number. First, if the minde of any man be ſo exalted, that he looketh downe on his brethren, as if he ſtood on the top of a Leades, and not on the ſame ground they doe, that man is high-minded. Saint Auguſtine ſaith well: Excipe pompatica hæc & volatica, they are the ſame that you are. They have not veſtem communem, the ſame coat; but they have cutem communem, the ſame skinne: and within a few yeares, when you die, if a man come with a Ioyner and meaſure all that you carrie with you, they ſhall carry away with them as much: and within a few yeares after, a man ſhall not be able to diſcerne, betweene the ſholder-blade of one of them and one of you. Therefore, no cauſe, why you ſhould incedere inflati, inſericati, and from a high mind, bewraying it ſelfe by a high looke, contemne them, as many of you doe. I ſay then, if any of you be a child of Anak, and looke downe ſo upon another, as in his ſight his brethren ſeeme as graſhoppers; 1 Whether it appeare in the countenance, in drawing up his eye-browes, in a diſdaineſull and ſcorneſull eye; ſuch an one as David (though he found no penall ſtatute to puniſh it) could never abide (and David was a man after GODS owne heart, and therefore neither can God abide it:) 2 Or whether it appeare, in a proud kinde of Dialect of ſpeech, as was that of Sauls; Vbi nunc eſt iſte filius Iſhai? Where is this Sonne of Iſhai? that he come to the Phariſees Non ſum ſicut: 3 Or whether it be in the courſe of their life, that they be like to the great fiſhes (to Pikes) that thinke, all the little fiſhes in the ſtreame were made for them to feed on. So that, it appeareth, they care not, what miſerie, what beggerie, what ſlaverie they bring all men to, ſo they may ſoke in the broth of the cauldron, and welter in their wealth and pleaſure: who are in their ſtreets and pariſhes as Lyons, a great deale more feared than beloved; as implacable as Lamech to beare any injurie, and will have for one drop of bloud, no leſſe than a mans life: what ſpeake I of bearing injurie? which will doe injurie, and that for no other reaſon but this, thus it muſt be, for Hophni will have it not thus but thus; and except they may doe thus (what they will, to whom they wil, when and how they wil) forſooth they do not governe, their authority is nothing: in this ſort, overbearing all things with their countenance and wealth, and whoſoever ſtandeth but up, drawing him before the Iudgement-ſeats, and wearying him out with Law. Theſe men who doe thus, from a high in-bearing of the head, in phraſe of ſpeech, and in the order, or rather diſorder of their dealing: over-looke, over-crow, and over-beare their brethren of meane eſtate, it is certaine, they be high minded: Enquire and looke, whether any be ſo. 1

Num.33.34. Pro.30.13. Pſal.101.5. 1 Sam.20.27. Hab.2.14. Ezek.11.3. Zeph.3.3. 1 Reg.21.7. Iac.2.6.

Secondly, if any minde clime ſo high, that the boughes will beare him no longer, by exalting himſelfe above either his abilitie, condition or calling (a fault, which hath like to coſt our times deare;) that mans footing will faile him, he will downe; he and his mind are too high a great deale. The late treaſons and conſpiracies came from ſuch kind of minds. For, when the minds of men will over-reach their abilities, what muſt be the end, but (as we have ſeene of late) to prove Traitors? Why? becauſe they have ſwolne themſelves out of their skinne. Why ſo? becauſe they had laſhed on more on their pleaſure than they had. For, ſo doing, when they had over-reached themſelves, they became περιττοὶ, they muſt take ſome heady enterpriſe in hand. What is that? to become νεόδμητοι; that, ſeeing their credit is decayed in this State, they may ſet up a new; and that is by over-turning the old. 2

2 Tim.3.4.

And not only this paſſing the ability is dangerous to the over-turning of a Common-wealth; but the paſſing of a mans condition too: and tendeth to the impoveriſhing, and at laſt to the overthrow of the Eſtate alſo. 1 Whether it be exceſſe of diet: as when being no Magiſtrate, but plaine Maſter Nabal, his diner muſt be like to the feaſt of a King. 2 Or whether it be in exceſſe of apparrell, wherein the pride of England now, as the pride of Ephraim in times paſt, [a] teſtifieth againſt her to her face. 3 Or whether it be in [b] lifting up the gate too high, that is, in exceſſe of building. 4 Or whether it be in keeping too great a traine (Eſaus caſe) that he go with [c] foure hundred men at his taile, wheras the fourth part of the fourth part would have ſerved his father well enough. 5 Or whether it be in perking too high in their alliance, the Brambles ſoone in Lebanon, muſt match

O beloved, you that be in wealth and authoritie, love and reverence the word of GOD. It is the root that doth beare you; It is the Majeſtie thereof that keepeth you in your thrones, and maketh you be, that you are: But for Ego dixi Dii eſtis (a parcell-commiſſion out of this commiſſion of ours) the madneſſe of the people would beare no governement, but run headlong, and overthrow all chaires of eſtate, and breake in peeces all the ſwords and ſcepters in the world; which you of this Citie had a ſtrange experience of in Iack Straw and his meiny, and keepe a memoriall of it in your Citie Scutcheon, how all had gone downe if this Word had not held all up. And therefore, honour it I beſeech you; I ſay, honour it. For, when the higheſt of you your ſelves, which are but graſſe, and your Lordſhips glory and Worſhip, which is the flower of this graſſe, ſhall periſh and paſſe away, this Word ſhall continue for ever. And if you receive it now, with due regard and reverence, it will make you alſo to continue for ever. Pſal 82.7. Eſay 40.8.

This is your Charge, touching the firſt branch. I beſeech you, enquire of it, whether there be any guilty in theſe points: And if there be, ſuffer us to doe our Office, that is, to humble you, or elſe ſure the Lord will doe His, that is pull downe riches and mind and man and all, Patimini falcem occantem, ne patiamini ſecurim extirpantem. God will not ſuffer it certainly: He would not ſuffer it in a [q] King; He would not ſuffer it in an [r] Angell; He cannot beare it, to riſe, in an [ſ] Apoſtle, for the greatneſſe of revelations; therefore, He will not beare it in any man for any cauſe whatſoever. Let this be the concluſion of this point. q Deut. 17.20. r Iude 6. ſ 2 Cor. 12.7.

2 The ſecond Point: Not to truſt in uncertaine riches.

We ſhall never have pride well pluckt up, ſo long as the root of it ſticks ſtill; that is, a Vaine confidence in riches. For if we doubted them, we would not truſt in them, we would not boaſt of them. But, we truſt in them, and that inordinately, as countermeanes againſt God: not ſubordinately, as under-meanes unto God: and in ſo doing, we tranſlate GODS Office unto us, and our homage unto Him, to a plate of ſilver or a wedge of Gold. And that is (Saint Paul ſaith) the worldly mans idolatrie. And indeed there is little difference: It is but turning the ſentence of the Prophet David, of Idolaters, to ſay thus, Their Idols are ſilver and gold; and of the Worldly men, thus, Silver and gold are their Idols. Col. 3.5. Pſal. 135.15.

We may examine our ſelves, in this point of the charge; namely, whether our truſt be in our riches, by two waies: For it being a received ground, that our ſtrength is our confidence; where we take our chiefe Strength to lie, that is it certainely, which wee truſt to. Now, what that is, wee ſhall ſoone finde. 1 If wee can certifie our ſelves, in our need, among all meanes, what doth firſt offer it ſelfe in our intention; 2 And againe, when all our meanes forſake us and faile us, what is our laſt ſuccour in execution. Pro. 24.22.

By courſe of nature, every thing, when it is aſſaulted, ever rowzeth that part firſt, wherein his principall ſtrength lieth: if it be in his tuskes, them; or in his hornes, or whatſoever it is, that. To a poore man (if he have a cauſe in hand) there is nothing commeth to mind but God and innocencie, and the goodneſſe of his cauſe: there is his ſtrength, and that is the Horne of his ſalvation. But, the rich (ſaith Amos) hath gotten him Hornes in his owne ſtrength; and not iron-hornes, as were Zidkiah's, but golden-hornes with which he is able to puſh any cauſe, till he have conſumed it. For indeed, if he be to undertake ought, the firſt thing that commeth to his head is, Thus much will diſpatch it: Such a gift will aſſure ſuch a man, and ſuch a gift will ſtop ſuch a mans mouth, and ſo it is done: Neither is God in all his thoughts. Amos 6.13.

Tell me then, in your affaires, what commeth firſt to mind? nay, tell your ſelves what it is. Aures omnium pulſo (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) conſcientias ſingulorum convenio: Tell your ſelves, what it is, and by this, trie and know, wherein your truſt is; whether this charge meet with you or no, whether your riches be the ſtrength of your confidence.

Now lightly, what we firſt thinke of, that we laſt flie to. It is ſo. Salomon ſaw it in his time and ſaid, The rich mans wealth is his caſtle: that even as men, when they are foiled in the field, and beaten from the Citie-walls, flie laſt of all into the Caſtle, and there thinke themſelves ſafe, as in their place of chiefe ſtrength; So, it falleth out with the Pro. 18.11.

the rich of this world, in many of their cauſes, when juſtice, and equitie, and truth, and right, and GOD, and good men, and a good conſcience and all forſake them (and yet yield they will not, in the pride of a high minde) they know, when all other have forſaken them, their purſe will ſtand to them: and thither, as to their ſtrongeſt ſalvation they flie, when nothing elſe comforts them. So that, when they cannot in heart, ſay to GOD, Thou art my hope, their matter is ſo bad; they doe ſay ('tis he, in Iob) to their Wedge of gold, Well yet, thou art my confidence. And ſurely, he that deviſeth or purſueth an unrighteous cauſe, becauſe his hand hath ſtrength, that man may be arraigned of the point. As againe if any ſay, and ſay within truly (dic, dic, ſed intus dic, ſaith Auguſtine) with all my riches, with all my friends and all the meanes I can make, I can doe nothing againſt the truth: when a man is ſo rich that he is poore to doe evill; ſo wiſe, that he is a foole to doe evill; ſo truſteth in his riches, that he dare not take an evill cauſe in hand, no more than the pooreſt commoner in the citie; I dare diſcharge that man the Court for this point. Oh beloved, thinke of theſe things; and ſecretly betwixt GOD and you, uſe your ſelves to this examination: Sure if God be God, and if there be any truth in Him, you ſhall find great peace and comfort in it at the laſt.

Iob.31.24. Mic.2,1.

The Reaſon, The Vncertaintie of Riches.

Charge the rich, that they be not high minded, nor truſt, &c. And, why not high minded? and why not truſt? Incluſively the reaſon is added in theſe words, becauſe of the uncertainty of riches. It is Pauls reaſon; and it is Salomons too, who knew better what belonged to riches, than Paul or any other. Travaile not too greedily for them, beſtow not all thy wiſedome upon them (ſaith he:) for they have the wings of an eagle, and will take their flight of a ſudden. Such is Saint Pauls word here, the very ſame. We behold them, we hold them, they are here with us; let us but turne our ſelves aſide a little, and looke for them, and they are gone. It is, as if he ſhould ſay; Indeed if we could pinion the wings of our riches, if we could naile them downe faſt to us, then were there ſome ſhew or ſhadow, why we ſhould repoſe truſt in them: But it is otherwiſe; they are exceeding uncertaine; even the harveſt of the water much above all trades. Yea, I take it, the Merchants confeſſe ſo much, before they be aware: For, by this, he claimeth to be allowed an extraordinarie gaine, becauſe he ventureth his trafficke as uncertaine, and that he is driven to hazard and put in a venture his goods continually, and many times his perſon, and (to make him a right venturer) many times his ſoule too. And, if they be not uncertaine, how commeth it then to paſſe, that rich men themſelves are ſo uncertaine? that is, that they that were but the other day even a little before, of principall credit, within a while after, and a very ſhort while after, their bils will not be taken? And if riches be not uncertaine, what need they upon a night of foule weather, any Aſſurances upon the Exchange? What need the Merchants have ſecuritie one of another? What need they, to have their eſtates ſure, and ſo good? ſuch aſſurances and conveyances, ſo ſtrong, yea more ſtrong than the wit of man can deviſe, if both riches and men be not uncertaine? I know, they pretend the mans mortalitie: but, they know, they meane many times, the mortalitie of his riches rather than himſelfe; or at the leaſt, of the one as of the other. I will be judged by themſelves.

I would have you marke Saint Pauls manner of ſpeech. Before, he called them, not rich, barely; but, with an addition, the rich of this world. Sure, it is thought of divers of the beſt Writers both old and new (I name, of the new, Maſter Calvin; and of the old, Saint Auguſtine) that this addition is a diminution; and that it is (as it were) a barre, in the armes of all rich men; and that, even by that word, he meanes to enthwite them, and (as I may ſay) to crie them down; ſo, to make an entrance to his charge that men ſhould not be too proud of them. For, being of this world, they muſt needs ſavour of the ſoile, be as this world is (that is) tranſitorie, fickle and deceitfull. And now, he comes in with riches againe; and will not put it alone, but calleth it the uncertainty of riches. And I ſee, it is the Holy Ghoſt's faſhion, not in this place onely, but all along the Scriptures, to ſpeake nothing magnifically of them, as the manner of the world world is to doe. Saint Paul calleth them not rich, but the rich of this world: Saint Iohn likewiſe calleth them not goods ſimply, but this worlds goods. Saint Paul calleth them not riches, but the uncertainty of riches: Our SAVIOVR CHRIST calleth them not riches, but the deceitfulneſſe of riches. So David: the plate and arras and rich furniture of a wealthy man, calleth it of purpoſe, the glorie of a mans houſe; not his glory, but the glorie of his houſe; (that is Saint Chryſoſtomes note.) And Salomon calleth them (as they be indeed) GODS bleſſings of His left hand. For, immortalitie, eternall life, that onely is the bleſſing of His right hand. All, to learne us, not to boaſt our ſelves, or ſtay our ſelves, or (as CHRIST calleth it) to rejoyce (I ſay not, as He to His Diſciples, that a few devils, but) that a few mineralls be ſubject unto us; but that, by our humbleneſſe of minde, truſt in GOD, dealing truly with all, and mercifully with our poore brethren, we are aſſured, that our names are written in the booke of life. This then is the uncertainty of our riches; becauſe, they are the riches of this world (the world, and they, are all within the compaſſe of our Text) that is, you muſt leave them to the world, they are none of yours. Denique ſi veſtra ſint (ſaith Gregorie) tollite ea vobiſcum, If they be yours, why doe you not take them with you, when you goe? By leaving them behind you to the world, you confeſſe, they are not yours, but the worlds. But, indeed, they are the riches of this world; Hic enim acquiruntur, hic vel amittuntur, vel dimittuntur: here you get them, and here you may loſe them; here you get them, and here you muſt leave them. And in this disjunctive, you have the certainty of riches: the very certainty is loſing or leaving, that is, forgoing; ſo, the very certainty is an uncertainty. Leave them, or loſe them we muſt: leave them when we die, or loſe them while we live. One end they muſt have, finem tuum, or finem ſuum; thy end, or their owne end. You muſt either leave them when you die, or they will leave you while you live, this is certaine: but, whether you, them; or, they you; this is uncertaine. Iob tarried himſelfe, his riches went: The Rich mans riches tarried, but he himſelfe went. One of theſe ſhall be, we know; but which of them ſhall be, or when, or how, or how ſoone it ſhall be, that we know not. 1. Iohn 3.17. Matt. 13.22. Pſal. 49.16. Luke 12.

Let us briefly conſider this double uncertaintie:

1. Of our riches ſtaying with us firſt.
2. And then, of our ſtaying with them.

1. In 2 Cor. 11.26. when as he would glorie, he ſaith, He will glorie in his infirmitie: which when he would recount, as a principall part of it, he reckoneth, that he had beene in perills of waters, in perills of robbers, of his owne nation, among the Gentiles, in the citie, in the wilderneſſe, in the ſea, and amongſt falſe brethren. If this were frailtie, then (ſure) fraile and weake are riches. And ſure, if the rich will glorie, they muſt glorie with Saint Paul: for, they are in all, and in more and greater than the Apoſtle ever was. He was in perills of water; they in perill both of water and fire: He was in perill of robbers, they in perill of Rovers by Sea, and Robbers by land: He in perill of his owne nation; they are in perill of our owne nation, and of other nations: both removed as the Moore and Spaniard, and neere home, as the Dunkirker: He in perill of ſtrangers; they, not of ſtrangers onely, but of their owne houſhold, their ſervants and factours: He in perill of the Sea; they, both of the tempeſt at the Sea, and the Publican on land: He in perill of the wilderneſſe, that is, of wild beaſts; they, not onely of the wild beaſt called the Sycophant, but of the tame beaſt too, called the flatterer: He in danger of falſe brethren; and ſo are they in perill of certaine falſe brethren called wilfull Bankrupts, and of certaine other called deceitfull Lawyers; for the one, their debts; for the other, their eſtates and deeds can have no certainty.

Muſculus on that place (where CHRIST willeth Our treaſure to be laid, where no mothes come) ſaith, his Auditors did laugh in conceipt, at CHRIST, that frayed them with moths, their maids ſhould deale with the moths well enough: (Saith he) you think, he meant the ſilly poore flies: Tuſh you are deceived, what ſay you to Tineæ urbanæ, evill Creditors? You muſt needs credit, you can have no vent for your merchandize: and what ſay you to a ſecond kind of mothes, called Tineæ forenſes, Weſtminſter-Hall-mothes? (for I truſt, I may ſpeake of the corrupt Lawyer, with the favour Matt. 6.

of the better ſort) you muſt needs credit them with your evidences and eſtates; it is not certaine what wealth theſe two moths doe waſte, and in what uncertainty mens riches are, by their meanes.

Theſe are out of Saint Pauls perils; he was free from theſe mothes. But many rich men might be brought forth in a faire day and ſhewed, whoſe ſubſtance hath by theſe mothes beene fretted to peeces. Thus little certainty have we, of their ſtaying with us.

2. But grant, Let it be that they were certaine: yet, except we our ſelves were ſure to ſtay with them alſo, it is as good as nothing. That there may be a certaintie betweene two things (as a man, and his wealth) to continue together, they muſt either of them be ſure: elſe, if the one faile, where is the others aſſurance? Grant then, we were certaine of them, we are not certaine of our ſelves; and in very deed, we are no more certaine of them, than they of us. Leaſes of them we have for ſixtie yeares; but they have no leaſes of us for three houres: If they might take leaſes of us too, it were ſomewhat. Now, when the Leaſe is taken, nay when the Fee ſimple is bought, and the houſe, and the ware-houſe filled, and the purſe too, if GOD ſay but Hâc nocte, it daſhes all. For which cauſe, I thinke, Saint Iames (ſpeaking in two ſeverall places of our life and our riches;) our riches he compareth to the graſſe, of no certaintie; it will either wither or be pluckt up ſhortly: but this is a great certaintie in reſpect of that of our life, which he reſembleth to a vapour, which we ſee now, and by and by we turne us to looke for it, and it is vaniſhed away. To us then that are uncertaine of our ſelves, they cannot be but riches of uncertaintie.

Luke 12. Iames 1. 11.

But, let us admit, we were ſure of both theſe, what is it to have riches and not to enjoy them? And the enjoying of riches dependeth upon two uncertainties more.

1. Firſt, a mans uncertaintie, which hangeth upon the favour of a Prince; which is many times wavering and uncertaine. I know not, whether I ſhall make you underſtand it, becauſe of the want of examples in our time, by meanes of the milde and bleſſed governement that we live in. For, a practice it hath beene, and many Records doe our Chronicles affoord, in the daies of ſome Princes of this Realme, when a man was growen to wealth, to picke holes and make quarrels againſt him, and ſo ſeaze his goods into the Princes hand: to uſe wealthy Citizens as ſpunges, to roule them up and downe in moiſture till they be full, and then to wring all out of them againe. GOD wot, an eaſie matter it is, if a Prince ſtand ſo minded, to find matter of diſgrace againſt a ſubject of ſome wealth; and then he might fare never a whit the better for his wealth for fine and forfeiture whereof, rather than any fault elſe, the buſineſſe it ſelfe was made againſt him. We cannot tell, what this meaneth; we may thanke the gracious governement, we live under; ſo that, I thinke, I doe ſcarce ſpeake ſo that I am underſtood. But, ſuch a thing there is, ſuch an uncertaintie belonging to riches, whether we conceive it or no.

2. Againe, if the times which we live in, happen to prove unquiet and troubleſome, then againe comes another uncertaintie. For, the daies being evill and dangerous, a man can have joy, and indeed no certaintie neither of riches. For, if there fall an invaſion, or garboile into the State by forren or Civill warre, then (if ever) is Iobs ſimile verified, that Riches are like a cobweb; that which a man ſhall be weaving all his life long, with great adoe and much travell, there comes me a ſouldier, a barbarous ſouldier, with his broome, and in the turning of a hand ſweeps it cleane away. How many in our neighbour countries, during their miſerie have taſted this uncertaintie? How many have gone to bed rich, and riſen poore men in the morning? Great troubles are looked for, and great troubles there muſt be and will be, doubtleſſe. The world now knoweth his Maſters will and doth it not, it muſt therefore certainely be beaten with many ſtripes, with many more than the ignorant world was. And therefore this word [of this world] in this Text, wee may with an Emphaſis pronounce and ſay, Charge them that are rich in this world, that they truſt not in the uncertaintie of riches.

Iob 8. 14.

There

There are but three things in riches: 1 The poſſeſſing, 2 the enjoying 3 and laſt the conveighing of them. Little aſſurance is there in the two former, and what ſhall we ſay of the conveighance? If our pompe cannot deſcend with us; well yet, if wee were certaine to whom we ſhould leave them, ſomewhat it were for the certainty of them. Theſe conſiderations oft had in mind would looſen both our aſſurance in, and our liking of them.

What for the conveighance? doe we not ſee daily that men make heritages, but God makes heires; that many ſonnes roſt not that, their fathers got in hunting? that they that have beene in chiefe account for their wealth, their ſonnes ſhould be driven even to flatter the poore, and have nothing in their hands, no not bread? that, never ſnow in the Sunne melted faſter, than doe ſome mens riches as ſoone as they be gone? Iob 20.10.

Theſe things are in the eyes of the whole world. O beloved, theſe are the judgements of GOD. Deceive not your ſelves with vaine words: ſay not in your hearts, this is the way of the world, ſome muſt get and ſome muſt loſe. No, no: it is not the way of the world, it is the way of GODS judgement. For, to the reaſon of man nothing can be alledged, but that conſidering the infinite number of infinite rich men in this place, the poſteritie of them theſe many yeares ſhould by this time have filled the whole land, were it much bigger than it is, with their progenie, even with divers both Worſhipfull and Honourable Families from them deſcended: and it is well knowen, it is otherwiſe that there is ſcarce a handfull in compariſon. This is not the way of the world; for we ſee divers Houſes of diverſe lines remain to this day in continuance of the ſame wealth and worſhip which they had five hundred yeares ſince. It is not therefore the way of the world; ſay not it is ſo; but it is a heavy judgement from the Lord. And theſe uncertainties, namely this laſt, came upon ſome of them for their wicked and deceitfull getting of them: upon ſome of them, for their proud and riotous abuſing them: upon ſome of them, for their wretched and covetous retaining them. And, except ye now heare this the Lords Charge, looke unto it, howſoever you wraſtle out with the uncertainties your ſelves; aſſuredly this laſt uncertaintie remaineth for your children. The Lords hand is not ſhortened. I ſhall never get out of this point, if I breake not from it. Eſay 59.1.

Theſe are but three fruits of all your getting 1 the tenure: 2 the fruition: 3 the parting with. See, whether the Lord hath not laid one uncertaintie on them all. 1 Vncertaintie, in their tarrying with us; and uncertaintie, in our tarying with them. 2 Vncertaintie of enjoying, by reaſon of the danger of the time; 3 Vncertaintie of our leaving them, by reaſon of the danger of our childrens ſcattering. The eſtate in them, the enjoying of them, the departing with them, all being uncertaine, ſo many uncertainties, might not Saint Paul truly ſay, the uncertaintie of riches?

There is yet one behind, worſe than them all. I will adde no more but that: and that is, that our riches and our worſhip they ſhall leave us, becauſe they be uncertaine; but the pride of our minds, and the vaine truſt in them, them we ſhall be certaine of, they ſhall not leave us. And this is grave jugum, a heavie miſerie upon mankind: The Goods, the Lordſhips, the Offices that they got, them they ſhall leave here: the ſinne, that they commit in getting and enjoying them, they ſhall not leave behind them for their hearts, but that ſhall cleave faſt unto them. This is a certaintie you will ſay: it is indeed a certaintie of ſinne, but therefore an uncertaintie of the ſoule: ſo doth Iob reckon it amongſt the uncertainties of riches. For, what hope hath the hypocrite when he hath heaped up riches, if God take away his ſoule? where is his hope or his truſt then? Never wil they ſhew themſelves in their owne kind, to be a ſtaffe of reed, as then: both deceiving them whichleane on them, and beſides going into their ſouls and piercing them. For, very ſure it is, many of that calling die in great uncertaintie this way; wiſhing, they had never ſeene that wealth which they have ſeene, that ſo they might not ſee that ſinne which they then ſee. Yea ſome of them (I ſpeake it of mine owne knowledge abroad) wiſh, they had never come further than the ſhovell and the Spade: crying out at the houre of death, both of the uncertainty of their riches, and of the uncertainty of the eſtate of their ſoules too. Iob 27.8. Eſay 36.6.

This point, this, is a point of ſpeciall importance, to be ſpoken of by me, and to be thought of by you. I would God, you would take it many times (when GOD ſhall move you) into ſad conſideration. With a great affection, and no leſſe great truth (ſaid Chryſoſtome) that heaven and earth, and all the creatures in them, if they had teares, they would ſhed them in great abundance, to ſee a great many of us, ſo careleſſe in this point as we be. It is the hand of the LORD, and it is His gracious hand, (if we could ſee it) that He in this manner, maketh the world to totter and reele under us, that we might not ſtay and reſt upon it, where certainty and ſtedfaſtneſſe we ſhall never find; but in Him above, where onely they are to be found. For, if riches, being ſo brittle and unſteady as they be, men are ſo mad upon them; if GOD had ſettled them in any certainty, what would they have done? What poore mans right, what widowes copie, or what Orphanes legacie ſhould have beene free from us?

The III. Point, Truſt in God.

Well then: if riches be uncertaine, whereto ſhall we truſt? If not in them, where then? It is the third point: Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, neither truſt in the uncertainty of riches: but that they truſt in GOD. It is the third point of the Charge, in generall; and the firſt of the affirmative part: and containeth, Partly a Homage to be done for our riches, to GOD, and that is, truſt in Him: And partly a rent-charge layd upon our riches, which is doing good. And indeed, no other than David had ſaid before, Truſt in the Lord and be doing good.

Pſal. 37. 5.

Saint Paul will batter downe, and lay flat our Caſtle, but he will erect us another, wherein we may truſt. Yea indeed, ſo as Salomon did before, ſetteth up a tower againſt the tower; the Tower of the righteous, which is the Name of the LORD, againſt the Rich mans tower, which is as you have heard before, his riches. Inſtead of the Worldlings faith, which is to make money an article of his faith; teacheth us the faith of a Chriſtian, which is, to vouchſafe none but GOD that honour. Even ſo doth the Apoſtle here; and that, for great reaſon: Nam qui vult ſecurus ſperare, ſperet in Eo, qui non poteſt perire, He that will truſt, and be ſecure in His truſt, let him truſt in Him, who Himſelfe never failed, and never failed thoſe, that put their truſt in Him: in whom is no uncertainty, no not ſo much as any ſhadow of uncertainty.

Pro. 18. 10.

Jam. 1. 17.

Truſt in Him, by looking to Him firſt, yer we admit any elſe into our conceipt: and by looking to Him laſt, and not looking beyond Him to any, as if we had a ſafer or truſtier than He.

And that, becauſe He is the living GOD: as if He ſhould ſay, That you phanſie to your ſelves, to truſt in, is a dead idoll, and not a living GOD; and if ever you come to any dangerous diſeaſe, you ſhall find, it is an idoll, dead in it ſelfe, not able to give it ſelfe life; much leſſe to another: not able to ranſome the bodie from the death, much leſſe the ſoule from hers; not able to recover life when it is gone, nay not able to preſerve life when it is preſent; not to remove death, nay not to remove ſickneſſe, not any ſickneſſe, not the gout from your feet, not the palſie from your hands, nay not ſo much as the ache from your teeth: not able to adde one haire to your head, nor one haires bredth to your ſtature, nor one houre to your daies, nor one minute to the houres of your life. This moth-eaten God, as our SAVIOVR CHRIST calleth it, this canker-eaten God, this God, that muſt be kept under locke and key from a thiefe, truſt not in it for ſhame. O let it be never ſaid, the living truſt in the dead. Truſt in the living GOD, that liveth Himſelfe, nay that is life Himſelfe; in His Sonne, that was able to quicken Himſelfe, and is able to quicken you; of whoſe gift and inſpiration you have already this life; by whoſe daily ſpirit and viſitation your ſoule is preſerved in this life, in this mortall and corruptible life; and of whoſe grace and mercie we looke for our other immortall and eternall life.

Who not onely liveth, but alſo giveth you, &c.] A living and a giving God: that is, that liveth, and that giveth: of whoſe gift you have not onely your life and terme of yeares, but even alſo your riches themſelves; the very hornes that you lift ſo high, and wherewith unnaturally many times you puſh againſt Him that gave them. He giveth; for for the earth was the Lords, and all that therein is; till the earth He gave unto the children of men: And silver and gold were the Lords, till, not by a casuall scattering, but by His appointed giving; not by chance, but by gift, He made them thine. He gave them: thou broughtest none of them with thee into the world, thou camest naked. He gave them; and when He gave them, He might have given them to thy brother of low estate, and made thee stand and ask at his doore, as He hath made him now stand and ask at thine. He giveth you riches; you get them not; it is not your owne wisedome or travaile that getteth them, but His grace and goodnesse that giveth them. For, you see many men of as great understanding and foresight as your selves, want not only riches, but even bread. It is not your travell; except the Lord hath given them, all the early up rising, and late downe-lying had beene in vaine. It is GOD that giveth: make your recognisance it is so, for feare lest if you denie Dominus dedit, you come to affirme Dominus abstulit. GOD teacheth, it was He that gave them, by taking them away.

Psal. 24 1. 115. 16. Agge 2. 9. Eccle 9. 11. Iob 1. 21.

This is Saint Pauls reason: let us see how it serves his conclusion to the overthrow of our vaine pride and foolish trust in them. If it be gift, Si accepisti quid gloriaris? be not proud of it: And if it be gift, He that sent it, can call for it againe; trust not in it.

1 Cor 4. 7.

Who giveth us all things, &c.] All things, spirituall or corporall, temporall or eternall, little or great, from the least and so upward; from the greatest and so downeward: from panem quotidianum, a morsell of bread, to Regnum cælorum, the Kingdome of heaven. He giveth us all even unto Himselfe: yea He giveth us Himselfe and all, and more we cannot desire.

Why then, if He give all, all are Donatives; all that we hold, we hold in franck almoigne; and no other tenure is there, at Gods hands, or in our Law. For, quid habes quod non accepisti? What is there? that is to say, name one thing, thou hast, that thou hast not received; and if there be any one thing, boast of that and spare not. But if that be nothing, then let Cyprians sentence take place (so much commended and so often cited by Saint Augustine) De nullo gloriandum est, quia nullum est nostrum: and adde unto it, De nullo fidendum est, quia nullum est nostrum: we must glorie of nothing, for that we have nothing of our owne; neither must we trust any thing, for that we have nothing of our owne.

1 Cor. 4 7.

That giveth us all things to enjoy:] Not only to have, but to enjoy. For, so to have them, that we have no joy of them; so to get all things, that we can take no part of them, when we have gotten them; so to possesse the labours of our hands, that we cannot eat the labours of our hands, as good be without them: This is a great vanitie and vexation; and indeed (as Salomon saith) an untimely birth were better, than so to be. But blessed be God, that besides these blessings to be enjoyed, giveth us healthfull bodies to enjoy them with, the favour of our Prince to enjoy them under, the daies of peace to enjoy them in; whereby our soules may be satisfied with good things, and every one may eat his portion with joy of heart.

Eccles. 6. 1, 3.

That giveth all things to enjoy:] that is, dealeth not with you as He hath dealt with the poore; hath given you things not onely of use and necessitie, but things also of fruition and pleasure: hath given you not onely Manna for your need, but also Quailes for your lust: Hath given you out of Ophir not onely linnen cloth and Horses for service, but also, Apes, Ivorie, and Peacocks, for your delight. Vnto them He giveth indumenta, covering for their nakednesse; but unto you ornamenta, clothing for your comelinesse. Vnto them He giveth alimenta, nourishment for their emptinesse; unto you delectamenta, delicious fare for daintinesse. Therefore you above all men, are to rejoyce in Him, there is great cause: that He may rejoyce over you, unto whom He hath given so many waies, so great cause of rejoycing.

Psal. 78. 29.

That giveth us all things to enjoy plenteously:] Plenteously, indeed, may Israel now say; (said the Prophet;) may England now say (say I) and I am sure upon as great cause. He hath not dealt so with every Nation; nay He hath not dealt so with any nation. And plenteously may England now say; for it could not alwaies: Nay it could not ever have said the like. Plenteously indeed, for He hath not ſprinkled, but powred His benefits upon us. Not onely Bleſſed be the People whoſe God is the Lord (that bleſſing which is highly to be eſteemed, if wee had none beſides it,) but Bleſſed be the People that are in ſuch a caſe. That bleſſing He hath given us, all things to enjoy plenteouſly; wee cannot, nay our enemies cannot but confeſſe it. O that our thankefulneſſe to Him, and our bounty to His, might be as plenteous, as His gifts and goodneſſe have beene plenteous to us!

Psal. 147. 20.

Pſal.144.15. Ibid.

To move us from the two evills before, the Apoſtle uſed their uncertaintie, which is a reaſon from Law and the courſe thereof. So he might now have told us, if we truſted not in God, we ſhould have the table turned, and His giving changed to taking away; our all things, into want of many things, and having nothing neere all; our plenty into penurie; and our enjoying more than we need, into no more than needs, nor ſo much neither. Thus He might have dealt: but He is now in a point of Goſpell, and therefore taketh his perſwaſion from thence. For, this indeed, is the Evangelicall argument of Gods goodneſſe; and there is no goodneſſe to that, which the conſideration of Gods goodneſſe worketh in us.

The argument is forcible; and ſo forcible, as that chooſe whether this will move us or no: Sure, if this will not prevaile with us, we ſhall not need Moſes nor Chriſt, to ſit and give ſentence upon us; the Devill himſelfe will doe it. For, as wicked as he is, and as wretched a ſpirit, yet thus he reaſoneth upon Iob: Doth Iob feare Thee for nought? As if he ſhould ſay: ſeeing thou haſt dealt ſo plenteouſly, yea ſo bounteouſly with him, if he ſhould not ſerve thee, if he ſhould ſo far forget himſelfe, it were a fault paſt all excuſe, a fault well worthy to be condemned. A bad fault it muſt be, that the Devill doth abhorre: yet ſo bad a fault it is (you ſee) that the Devill doth abhorre it. When men receive bleſſings plenteouſly from God, and returne not their homage backe againe, unthankfull rich men ſhall need no other Iudge but the Devill, and then, as you ſee, they are ſure to be condemned. For, if God will not doe it, the Devill will.

Iob 1.9.

Let me then recommend this third part of the Charge to your carefull remembrance and regard. It concerneth your homage, which is your truſt in Him, that you truſt in Him with your ſervice of body and ſoule, who hath truſted you with His plenty and ſtore, and hath made you in that eſtate, that you are truſted with matters of high importance both at home and abroad. For, it is the argument of all arguments to the true Chriſtian, becauſe GOD hath given him (ſaith S. Iames) without exprobration; and given all things, without exception of any; and that to enjoy which is more than competencie; and that plenteouſly, which is more than ſufficiencie; therefore, even therefore, to truſt in Him only. If there be in us the hearts of true Chriſtians, this will ſhew it; for it will move us: and ſo let it I beſeech you. Let us not, as men under the Law, be tired with the uncertainty of the creatures; but as men under grace, have our hearts broken with the goodneſſe of our God. In that God to place our truſt, who beyond all our deſerts giveth: if we reſpect the quantitie, all things; if the manner, very plenteouſly; if the end, to joy in them; yet ſo, that our joy and repoſe end in Him: a very bleſſed and heavenly condition.

Iames 1.5.

The IIII. Part. That they doe good.

Truſt in the Lord and be doing good, ſaid David: S. Paul ſaith the ſame, Charge the rich of this world, that they doe good. The laſt was a very plauſible point, which we have dwelt in with great delight. What? the plentie of all things; that we enjoy, and long may enjoy, I beſeech God: who is not moved with joy to heare it reported?

Pſal.37.3.

But little know they, what a conſequent S. Paul will inferre upon this antecedent. For, thus doth Paul argue. GOD hath done good to you by giving you; you alſo are bound to doe good to others, by giving them. If he hath given you all things, you ought to part with ſomething: (and the more you part with, the liker yee become to Him, that giveth all things.) If He have given you to enjoy, you ought to receive others into the fellowſhip of the ſame joy: and not to thinke, that to doe others good, is to doe your ſelves hurt. If plenteouſly He have given you, you out to be plenteous in giving; giving; and, not when the LORD hath His Epha great, wherein He hath mete to you, to make your Hin ſmall, whereby you meaſure to the poore; turning the plentie of heaven into the ſcarcitie of earth.

Thus doth the Apoſtle fetch the matter about, and thus doth he inferre your doing good to theſe little lambes and ſuch like, out of GODS doing good unto you.

And that which he inferreth, he doth exceeding fitly and ſheweth great art and learning in it. For, ſpeaking of enjoying (his very laſt word) he is carried in a very good zeale and affection to the rich of this world, to deſire of GOD, and to entreat of them that they may not have onely προσκαιρον ἀπόλαυσιν of them (that is) enjoy them for a ſeaſon, but that they may enjoy them for ever; not onely, for a few yeares, or weekes, or daies (we cannot tell well which) but from everlaſting to everlaſting: And that is, by doing-good. So enjoy that we may doe good too. Heb.11.25.

To ſay truth: Saint Paul could not better deviſe, than here to place it. For, our too much enjoying eateth up our well-doing, cleane. Our too much laſhing on in doing our ſelves good, maketh that we can doe good to none but our ſelves. Our preſent enjoying deſtroyeth our well-doing utterly, and conſequently the eternall enjoying we ſhould have of our riches. As Pharao's leane kine devoured the fat, and it was not ſeene on them, ſo doth (ſaith Baſil) our ἐφ' ἃ μὴ δεῖ, our riotous miſpending (where we ſhould not) eat up our ἐφ' ἃ δεῖ, our Chriſtian beſtowing where we ſhould: and a man cannot tell, what is become of it. Very well and wiſely ſaid that Father, Ἀκόνη γὰρ τῆς ἀσωτίας ἡ φιλοτιμία, Pride is prodigalities whetſtone, and it ſets ſuch an edge upon it, in our enjoying, that it curs ſo deepe into our wealth; and ſhares ſo much for our vaine and riotous enjoying, that it leaves but little for our well-doing. Gen.41.4.

Looke how the truſt in GOD and the truſt in riches are ſet one againſt another, here by the Apoſtle; ſo are our high minds, and our doing good. One would not thinke it at the firſt, but (ſure) ſo it is; we muſt have lower minds and leſſe pride, if we will have more good workes and greater plenty of well-doing. You may therefore enjoy your wealth, that is true: but you muſt alſo take this with you, you muſt doe good with it, and learne of the Apoſtle, there be two uſes of your riches, and that therefore GOD hath given them, 1 To enjoy, 2 To doe good: not, to enjoy onely; but, to enjoy and to doe good.

Enjoying, is doing good: But, not to our ſelves onely; but, by doing good, here, Saint Paul meaneth to doe it to others, that they may be the better for us. The very ſame two doth Salomon in very fit termes ſet downe: that Water is given into our ciſterne, 1 that we may drinke of it our ſelves; 2 that our fountaines may flow out, and they that dwell about us fare the better for them. The very ſame two doth a greater than Salomon, our SAVIOVR Himſelfe count of too: for, of His purſe, we read He had theſe two uſes, to buy that He had need of Himſelfe, and to give ſomething to the poore. It is good reaſon, that man conſiſting of two parts, the ſoule and body, the body onely ſhould not take up all; but, the ſoule ſhould be remembred too. Enjoying is the bodies part; and well-doing is the ſoules: your ſoules are ſuiters to you to remember them, that is, to remember well-doing, which is the ſoules portion. Pro.5.15. Matt.12.42. Ioh.13.29.

Remember this ſecond: the other (I doubt not) but you will remember faſt enough. This was the uſe of our SAVIOVR CHRISTS purſe, and if yours be like His, this muſt be the uſe of yours alſo. For ſurely, it is greatly to be feared, that many rich at this day, know not both theſe: indeed know no other uſe of their wealth than an Oxe or an Aſſe, or other bruite beaſts would know; to have their crib well ſerved, ſweet and cleane provender of the beſt in the manger, and their furniture and trappings fit and of the fineſt faſhion: No other, than the Glutton did, to goe in ſoft linnen and rich ſilke, and to fare deliciouſly every day. Or than the other, his pew-fellow, that profeſſed, it was all the uſe he counted of; and therefore we ſee he ſaith to his ſoule, Eate thy fill (ſoule) and drinke thy fill; fill and fat thy ſelfe, and enjoy this life; never looke to enjoy any other. Luke 16.19. Luke 12.19.

We muſt learne one uſe more, one more out of our charge, and conſequently

When we looke upon our ſealed ſummes, our heapes of treaſure, and continuall comings in, thus to thinke with our ſelves: This that I ſee here, hath GOD given me to enjoy, but not onely for that, but, to doe good with, alſo. The former uſe of my riches I have had long and daily ſtill have, but what have I done in the other? The rich men in the Goſpell, they had the ſame; they did enjoy theirs; but now (it is ſure) little joy they have of them: why? for want of this other. Abraham he did both; he enjoyed his riches here, and now another, an eternall joy of them. Yea, he received Lazarus into his boſome. Why? he received him into his boſome, and cheriſhed him, and did good here on earth. And ſo did Iob, and ſo did Zacheus. Now good LORD, ſo give me grace, ſo to enjoy here, that I loſe not my endleſſe joy in thy heavenly kingdome. Let me follow their ſteps in my life, with whom I wiſh my ſoule after death. Theſe things are good and profitable for the rich, oft to thinke on.

Well then, if to doe good be a part of the Charge, what is it to doe good? It is a poſitive thing (good;) not a privative, to doe no harme. Yet, as the world goeth now, we are faine ſo to commend men; He is an honeſt man, he doth no hurt: of which praiſe any wicked man, that keepes himſelfe to himſelfe, may be partaker. But, it is to doe ſome good thing: what good thing? I will not anſwer, as in the Schooles; I feare, I ſhould not bee underſtood; I will goe groſſely to worke. Theſe that you ſee here before your eyes, to doe them good, to part with that, that may doe them good; uſe the goods that you have, to doe but that, which ſundry that they have heretofore occupied thoſe roomes where you now ſit (whoſe remembrance is therefore in bleſſing upon earth, and whoſe names are in the booke of life in heaven) have done before you in diverſe workes of charitie, to the maintenance of the Church, the benefit of Learning, and the relieſe of the Poore of the land. This is to doe good. This, I truſt, you underſtand.

This know; that God hath not given ſight to the eye, to enjoy, but to lighten the members; nor wiſedome to the honourable man, but for us men of ſimple ſhallow forecaſt; nor learning to the divine, but for the ignorant: ſo, neither riches to the wealthy, but for thoſe that want reliefe. Thinke you Timothee hath his depoſitum, and we ours, and you have none? it is ſure, you have. We, ours, in inward graces and treaſures of knowledge: You yours, in outward bleſſings and treaſures of wealth. But, both are depoſita, and we both are feoffees of truſt. I ſee, there is a ſtrange hatred, and a bitter gain-ſaying every where ſtirred up againſt unpreaching Prelates (as you terme them) and Paſtors that feed themſelves onely; and they are well worthy: If I might ſee the ſame hatred begun among your ſelves, I would thinke it ſincere. But that, I cannot ſee. For, that which a ſlothfull Divine is, in things ſpirituall; that is, a Rich man for himſelfe and no bodie elſe, in things carnall, and they are not pointed at. But ſure, you have your harveſt as well, as we ours; and that a great harveſt. Lift up your eyes and ſee the ſtreets round about you, the harveſt is verily great and the Labourers few: Let us pray (both) that the Lord would thruſt out Labourers into both theſe harveſts, that the treaſures of knowledge being opened, they may have the bread of eternall life: and the treaſures of well-doing being opened, they may have the bread of this life, and ſo they may want neither.

Matt. 9. 37.

I will tell you it, another as eaſie a way: Saint Auguſtine making it plaine to his auditorie (ſomewhat backeward as it ſhould ſeeme) was faine to tell them thus, thus to define doing good: Quod non vultis facere, hoc bonum eſt (ſaid he:) that that you will not doe, that that I cannot get you to doe, that is to doe good. Shall I ſay ſo to you? No indeed, I will not; I hope better things, and partly I know them. But, this I will ſay: that which the Papiſts with open mouth, in all their bookes, to the ſlander of the Goſpell; that which they ſay, you doe not; nay, you will not doe; that is, to doe good.

One of them ſaith, that our Religion hath comforted your force attractive ſo much, and made it ſo ſtrong, that nothing can be wrung from you. Another, he ſaith, that our Religion hath brought an hardneſſe into the bowells of our Profeſſors, that they they pittie little, and the cramp or chiragra into their hands, that they give leſſe. Another, that our preaching hath bred you minds full of Salomons horſleches, that cry bring in, bring in, and nothing elſe. All of them ſay, that your good workes come ſo from you, as if indeed your religion were, to be ſaved by faith onely. Thus through you, and through want of your doing good, the Goſpell of CHRIST is evill ſpoken of among them that are without. They ſay, we call not to you for them: that we preach not this point, that we leave them out of our Charges. Libero animam meam, I deliver here mine owne ſoule: I doe now call for them; I have done it elſewhere yer now. Here, I call for them now, I take witneſſe, I call you to record, I call heaven to record, Domine ſcis quia dixi, ſcis quia locutus ſum, ſcis quia clamavi: Lord, thou knoweſt, I have ſpoken for them, I have called for them, I have cried for them, I have made them a part of my charge, and the moſt earneſt and vehement part of my charge, even the charge of doing good.

Vnto you therefore that be rich be it ſpoken; heare your charge I pray you. There is no avoiding, you muſt needs ſeale this fruit of well-doing, you muſt needs do it. For, 1 having wealth and wherewithall to doe good, if you doe it not; Inprimis, talke not of faith, for you have no faith in you; if you have wherewith to ſhew it, and ſhew it not, Saint Iames ſaith, you have none to ſhew. Nor, tell me not of your religion, there is no religion in you: Pure religion is this (as to very good puupoſe was ſhewed yeſter- Iam 1.27.
day) To viſite the fatherleſſe and widowes: and you never learned other religion of us.

Secondly, if you doe it not, I warne you of it, now; you ſhall then find it, when 2 you ſhall never be able to anſwer the exacting of this charge, in the great Day: where, the queſtion ſhall not be of the highneſſe or lowneſſe of your mindes, not of your truſt and confidence, or any other vertues, though they be excellent, but of your feeding, clothing, viſiting, harbouring, ſuccouring, and in a word, of your well-doing, onely. This I ſay to you; beare witneſſe I ſay it.

Now to them, in your juſt defence I ſay: (for, GOD forbid, but while I live, I ſhould alway defend this Honourable Citie in all truth:) to them whom the miſt of envie hath ſo blinded, that they can ſee no good at all done, but by themſelves, I forbid them, the beſt of them, to ſhew me in Rhemes or in Rome or any popiſh Citie Chriſten, ſuch a ſhew, as we have ſeene here theſe two daies. To day, but a handfull of the heape, but Yeſterday and on Munday, the whole heape; even a mightie armie of ſo many good workes as there were relieved Orphanes, the Chariots of this Cittie, I 2 Kings 2. 12.
doubt not, and the horſemen thereof.

They will ſay, it is but one; ſo they ſay: Be it ſo, yet it is a matchleſſe one. I will goe further with them; Spoken be it to GODS glorie, Non nobis Domine, non nobis, ſed Pſal. 115. 1.
Nomini Tuo da gloriam. Not unto us, not unto us O Lord, but unto Thy Name give the praiſe, for thy loving mercie and for thy truthes ſake which we profeſſe. I will be able to prove, that Learning, in the foundation of Schooles and encreaſe of revenues within Colledges; and the Poore, in foundation of Almes-houſes, and encreaſe of perpetuities to them, have received greater helpe in this Realme within theſe forty yeares laſt paſt, ſince (not, the ſtarting up of our Church, as they fondly uſe to ſpeake, but ſince) the reforming ours from the errour of theirs, than it hath, I ſay, in any Realme Chriſten, not only within the ſelfe ſame forty yeares (which were enough to ſtop their mouthes) but alſo than it hath in any fortie yeares upward, during all the time of Poperie: which I ſpeake, partly of mine owne knowledge, and partly by ſufficient grave information to this behalfe. This may be ſaid and ſaid truly.

And when we have ſaid this, what great thing have we ſaid? that, time for time, ſo many yeares for ſo many; thirtie yeares of light have made compariſon with thirty yeares of trouble. But, this is not as we would have it: We would have it out of all compariſon. This, that hath beene ſaid, is ſtrange to them (I know) and more, than they reckoned of. But I would have you in theſe times of peace and truth, ſo farre beyond them, as that you might φιμοῦν, ſnaffle them in this. So, that they durſt not 1 Pet. 2. 15.
once offer to enter into this theame with us, or once to mention it more. So it ſhould be, I am ſure; ſo the Goſpell deſerves to have it.

You

a The Quantitie: Be rich in good workes.

You have the ſubſtance of that you muſt doe, to doe good. Now here is the quantitie: Be rich in good workes: that ſeeing you are rich indeed, you would not be poore men but rich in good workes.

Good works (Saint Paul ſaith) not good words. Good, with the goodneſſe of the hand, not with the goodneſſe of the tongue, and tongue onely; as many now are, (well therefore reſembled to the tree that Plinie ſpeaketh of, the leaves of it as broad as any target, but the fruit is no bigger than a beane:) to talke targets, and to doe beanes. It
2 Tim. 3. 16. were better reverſed, if we were (as S. Paul ſaith) perfect in all good workes, than perfect in certaine curious and queint termes, and ſet phraſes, wherein a great part of many mens religions doe now adaies conſiſt: plaine ſpeech and ſound dealing; plaine ſpeech and good workes, beſt.

And rich in them. The Rich man in the Goſpell, would (as he ſaid) build his barnes bigger to put in them πάντα ἀγαθὰ, all his goods he had: no good out of his barne. Yes, yes, ſome in good workes too. Saint Paul hath here within the compaſſe of this Text two Rich men; his deſire is, they may both meet together in every rich man. Rich, ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, in the world that now is; ſo, ye are: Rich, in the world that ſhall be after this; be that too. Rich in cofer; ſo ye are: Rich in conſcience; be ſo too. Your conſciences you ſhall cary with you: your cofers you ſhall not. Thus you are valued in the Queenes bookes: what are you in GODS bookes? So much worth in this land of the dying: how much worth in the land of the living? Sain Pauls advice is, that you ſtrive for both: which you ſhall be, if ye be rich in good workes. The true riches are Epheſ. 1. 18. the riches of His glorious inheritance. They be the true riches, which except a man can aſſure himſelfe of, after the leaſe of his life is our, he ſhall be in a marvellous poore
Luke 16. 24. caſe, as was the Rich man; and begge of Lazarus there, that begged of him here. Thoſe riches muſt be thought of, marry then you muſt be rich in good works. Not to give ſomething, to ſomebody, at ſome time: Why? Who doth not ſo? That is not to be rich. To give φειδομένως, ſparingly, a peece of bread, or a draught of drinke, and that only; that belongeth to him whom GOD hath ſparingly bleſſed, to the brother of low eſtate: it is not your worke.

Exod. 35. In the Law, to the building of the Tabernacle, the poore gave Goates haire, and Badgers skinns; that was for them, and that was accepted: the rich they gave purple, gold and Iewels to the Tabernacle; they were rich in good workes. And in the Goſpell, to Luke 12. 48. whom much is given, of him proportionally much ſhall be required: That is, in a word, as you are ſeſſed in the Queenes bookes, ſo are you in Gods bookes, each one according to his abilitie. And God will looke, that according to that ſeſſement they ſhould be
Col. 1. 10. done: that you ſhould περισσεύσαι, abound in good workes, as you doe in wealth, that you
2 Cor. 9. 8. ſhould πρωτεύειν, Goe before and ſit higheſt, and have a precedence in works, as you have in your places. And in a word, that you ſhould be Lords, Knights, Aldermen, Maſters, Wardens, and of the Livery in good works, as you be in your ſeverall Wards and Companies. And indeed to ſay the truth, to commit ſo many ſinnes, as no Auditor can number them, and to affoord ſo few good workes, as a child may tell them: to receive ſuch profits, as great count-bookes will not hold them; and to yeeld ſo ſmall ſtore of good workes, as a little paper not ſo broad as my hand may containe them: To laſh out at a banquet, you know what; and to caſt to a Captives redemption all the world knowes what: To caſt your pride with pounds, and your good workes with pence, what coherence is there in theſe? This is not to be rich: But that, is a part of the charge too. I pray you remember it; Remember to be rich: not onely to doe good, but to be rich in doing good. That, will make you in caſe well to die, as now (God be thanked) you are well to live.

3 The Quality: Ready to diſtribute.

And with the quantitie, take the qualitie too, I pray you: for the quantitie, richly; for the qualitie, readily. Ἐξ ἀναγκῆς, with compulſion, not willingly; and ἐκ λύπης, with grudging, not cheerefully, theſe are the faults contrary to this vertue. God muſt have it done with a facilitie, with a readineſſe eaſily. And good reaſon, eaſily; for eaſily you you may. We that want, cannot without difficultie; we would and we cannot: we have a heart without a hand: though we be willing, nothing is done; why? we are not able. You are well able (GOD be thanked) if you be well willing, there is no more to doe; it is done. This readineſſe is a neceſſary vertue in our dayes: where, yer a benefit come (nay many times, yer a debt) ſo much ingenuitie is ſpent, ſo many Rogo's, ſuch a Vade & redi, goe and come ſuch a time; ſuch a dauncing on the threſhold, Prou. 8. 34. ſuch a failing of the eyes, yer it can be ſeene; ſuch a cleaving to the fingers, yer it will come off, ſuch inſtillation by now a drop and then a drop: as to a liberall nature, when it commeth, it is like to bread full of gravell; for hunger a man muſt needs have it, and but for needs muſt, a man, had as leefe be without it. O beloved, mar not all you doe before God and man for want of this one thing. You love a faire ſeed-time, all of you: Hilaris datio, ſerena ſatio; cheerefull giving is like a faire ſeed-time. As you, for your ſeed, to burie it, wiſh a ſeaſonable time; ſo and no leſſe GOD deſireth for His that His ſeed may not be ſowen with an overcaſt minde, but with the gladneſſe of heart and cheereſulneſſe of countenance. Even as He doth Himſelfe; who what He beſtoweth, beſtoweth ſo, as He taketh as much, yea more delight in giving, than we in receiving. So doe, and then this Charge is at an end: Be ready to communicate.

There is of this word, ſome difference among Writers; but ſuch as you may eaſily reconcile. Some thinke, the Apoſtle would have rich men to be εὐμετάδοτοι, eaſie to be ſpoken with, and to be ſpoken to. Some, that He would not onely have them give readily, but lend freely, and not practiſe the Devils Alchymiſtrie (as they doe) by multiplication in lending. Some, that they ſhould not thinke their beneficence to be a taking from them without receiving backe, inaſmuch as there is an entercourſe of the givers grace, and the receivers prayer. Some, that His mind is, that they ſhould not doe good to ſome few, but even to a multitude. All are good and godly, and agreeable to the analogie of faith: and you by doing all, may verifie and agree all, and make of a diſcord in opinions, an harmonie in practice. Saint Hierome (me thinketh) ſaith beſt, that Communicare eſt communitati dare, aut ad aliquid commune, to be beneficiall to a Societie, or to beſtow to ſome common uſe.

This is the perfection or pitch of well doing, that moſt plenteous grace by the thankſgiving of many, may redound to the glorie of God. The Apoſtle therefore is a further ſuitor to you that be rich, and will not end his Charge, till he hath layed this on you too, to doe good to Societies and Foundations, either neceſſarie to be erected, or more than neceſſarie to be maintained, leſt through our evill-doing, our fathers well-doing periſh. It is not for every man to reach unto them; there is no hope to have them upholden but by you: that you would therefore have them in remembrance, and to thinke upon them to doe them good. 2 Cor. 4. 15.

But alas, what hope is there to heare, that good will be this way done, ſince it is thought, that many may be indicted for ſeeking to eate up Companies, and to convert that which was the good and making of many, into their owne ſingulare commodo, by out-buying and out-bidding all beſides themſelves, that they alone may appropriate civil livings, turne common into private, the whole bodies nouriſhment into one forgrowen member, and in the end dwell alone upon the earth. Ier. 49. 31.

That the world is toward an end, other men may be perſwaded by other reaſons; none more effectuall to perſwade me, than this one, that every man doth what in him lieth to diſcommon communities, and to bring all to the firſt privation. For the world being it ſelfe a maine Societie; theſe men, by diſmembring under-ſocieties, ſeeke and doe what they can to diſſolve the whole. So that, GOD muſt needs come to make an end of the world, or elſe, if this hold on, we ſhould ſhortly make an end of it our ſelves.

It is further complained, that whereas there hath been and is given charitable to the poore and their maintenance, that the poore themſelves want, and they that have the receiving of the profits doe yet encreaſe mightily. Had not theſe things need to be put in the Charge? Are they not in the eares of the Lord? Is it not a ſinne crying to heaven?

heaven? Shall He not visit for these things? for this discredit of His Gospell, for this unexcusable, unfaithfull dealing, in the eares of Iew and Gentile, of Turke and Christian, of GOD and man? I beseech you still, suffer the words of exhortation: it is good for you to know, what things are said abroad. For my part, in GODS presence I protest, I know none; and if there be none, present none. It is that I desire; the charge is now given, may be given in vaine.

1 To the Church.

Now, if you enquire, to whom your doing good should stretch it selfe? Saint Paul himselfe will tell you. To them that instruct you, they are to [a] communicate with you in all your goods, that is, the Church: and to the necessitie of the Saints, or to the [b] Saints that be in necessitie, that is, to the Poore.

[a] Gal. 6. 6.
[b] Rom. 12. 13.

The Church first: [c] For this end, came Ester to the Kingdome, and [d] Nehemiah to his great favour with the Prince, even to doe good to the Church: And for this end hath [e] Tyrus that rich Citie, that abundance bestowed on her, even to be a covering Cherub to the Church of GOD, and to stretch her wings over it. The Prophets meaning was, that rich men must be a shadow of maintenance and defence to the Arke, to Divinitie, their riches must serve them as wings to that end; they must be covering Cherubs on earth to the Church militant, if ever they will be singing Cherubs in heaven with the Church triumphant.

[c] Ester 4. 14.
[d] Neh. 1. 11.
[e] Ezek. 28. 14.

And much good might be done, and is not, in this behalfe: and that many waies. I will name but one, that is, that with their wings stretched out, they would keepe the filth and pollution of the sinne of sinnes (whereof you heard so bitter complaint both these daies) of Simonie and Sacriledge, from falling on the Arke, and corrupting and putrifying it, which it hath almost already done. That seeing the Pope doe that he doth (howsoever some have alledged the Papists great detestation of this sinne, and of us for this sinne, for a motive; it is all but dissembling, their hand is as deepe in this sin as any mans:) I say, seeing the Pope doth as he doth, that is, as he hath dispensed with the oath and duty of Subjects to their Prince, against the fift Commandement: with the murder, both violent with daggs, and secret with poyson of the Sacred Persons of Princes, against the sixth: with the uncleanenesse of the stewes, and with incestuous marriages, against the seventh: So, now of late, with the abomination of Simonie, against the eighth; having lately (as it is knowne by the voluntarie confession of their owne Priests) by speciall and expresse warrant of the See Apostolike sent hither into this Land his Licence dispensative to all Patrons of his marke to set up Simonie, and to mart and make sale of all Spirituall livings which they have or can get, to the uttermost penny, even (if it were possible) by the sound of the drumme; and that with a very cleare conscience (so that some portion thereof be sent over to the releefe of his Seminaries, which by such honest meanes as this, come to be now mainetained.) Seeing thus doe the Papists, and we (loth to be behind them in this gaine of bloud) make such merchandise with this sinne, of the poore Church and her patrimonie, as all the world crieth shame of it: To redeeme the orderly disposing them to the Churches good, were a speciall way for you rich men to doe good in these daies. Neither as these times are, doe I know a better service, nor which (I am perswaded) will please GOD better, than this, or be better accepted at His hands.

2 To the Poore.

This for the Church: you must have a wing stretched abroad to cover it. And for the poore, you must have a bosome wide open to receive them. Lazarus in a rich mans bosome, is a goodly sight in heaven; and no lesse goodly in earth. And there shall be never a rich man with Lazarus in his bosome, in heaven, unlesse he have had a Lazarus in his bosome here on earth.

Ioh. 12. 8.

The poore are of two sorts: Such as shall be with us alwaies (as CHRIST saith) to whom we must doe good by releeving them: such is the comfortlesse estate of poore Captives; the succourlesse estate of poore Orphanes; the desolate estate of the poore Widowes; the distressed estate of poore Strangers; the discontented estate of poore Scholars: all which must be suffered and succoured too.

There are others, such as should not be suffered to be in Israel, whereof Israel is full:

I

I meane, beggers, and vagabonds, able to worke: to whom good must be done, by not suffering them to be as they are, but to imploy them in such sort, as they may doe good. This is a good deed no doubt; and there being, as I heare, an honourable good purpose in hand for the redresse of it, GOD send it good successe. I am as one, in part of my charge, to exhort you by all good meanes to helpe and further it.

Me thinketh it is strange, that the exiled Churches of Strangers which are harboured here with us, should be able in this kinde to doe such good, as not one of their poore is seene to aske about the streets; and this Citie, the harbourer and mainrainer of them, should not be able to doe the same good. Able it is no doubt, but men would have doing good too good cheape. I know, the charges will be great: but, it will quit the charges, the good done will be so great. Great good to their bodies, in redeeming them from diverse corrupt and noysome diseases, and this Citie from danger of infection. Great good to their soules, in redeeming them from idlenesse, and the fruit of idlenesse, which is all naughtinesse, no where so rife as among them; and this Citie from much pilfering, and losse that way. Great good to the Common-wealth, in redeeming unto it many rotten members, and making them men of service, which may hereafter doe good in it, to the publike benefit, and redeeme this Citie from the bloud of many soules which perish in it for want of good order. Last of all, great good to the whole Estate, in bringing the blessing of GOD upon it; even that blessing, that there shall not be a begger in all Israel. So much for doing good. Deut. 15. 4.

Laying up in store, &c.] That is, your worke shall not be in vaine in the end, but receive a recompence of reward: which is a prerogative, the which GODS Charges have above all other. In mans, there is death to the Offender; but if any have kept his charge, he may claime nothing but that, he hath. Onely the LORDS Charges are rewarded. The last point: The Reason.

So that, besides the two reasons which may be drawne out of the former, 1 one of the uncertaintie, 2 the other of GODS bounty. 1. Of the Vncertainty, Da quod non potes retinere: That we would part with that, that we cannot keepe long; that we must part with yet long, whether we will or no: 2. Of the Bounty of GOD, De meo peto, dicit CHRISTVS; That GOD which gave, asketh but His owne; but of that, He gave us, a part to be given Him, and we (if there be in us, the heart of David) will say, quod de manu tuâ accepimus. 3. Besides these, a third; Though GOD might justly challenge a free gift without any hope of receiving againe, He will not; but tell us, His meaning is, not to impoverish or undoe us, but to receive these, which He gave us, and came from Him every one, and those that within awhile forgoe we must, to give us that, we shall never forgoe. That is that, He teacheth us: commandeth not our losse, but commendeth to us a way to lay up for our selves; if we could see it; not, to leese and leave all, we know not to whom. 1 Chro. 29. 48.

Well said Augustine, preaching on these very words: At the very hearing these words [Part with and distribute] the covetous man shrinkes in himselfe; at the very sound of parting with; as if one should powre a bason of cold water upon him, so doth he chill and draw himselfe together, and say Non perdo: he saith not, I will not part with, but, I will not lose; for he counteth all parting with to be losing. And will ye not lose, saith Saint Augustine? yet, use the matter how you can, lose you shall: for, when you can carry nothing away of all you have, doe you not lose it? But, goe to (saith he) be not troubled, heare what followes, shut not thy heart against it.

Laying up for your selves.] I know, Iudas was of the minde, that all that went besides the bagge, was Vtquid perditio? and so be all they that be of his spirit. But, Saint Paul is of that minde, that ἀγαθοεργεῖν, to lay out to good uses, is to lay up to our owne uses: that, in parting thus with it, we doe not dimittere but præmittere; not lose it, by leaving it here from whence we are going, but store it up, by sending it thither before, whither we are going. And indeed, one of the two, we must needs, either leave it behinde and lose it for ever; or send it before, and have it our owne for ever. Now choose whether you will hold of Iudas's, or Paul's. Laying up for your selves.

For indeed, it is not laying up, Saint Paul findeth fault with; but the place, where: not building, or obtaining, or purchasing; all which three are ſpecified, and the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in your owne termes, and the things you chiefly delight in: but, the laying up in the fleſh, which will rot, and with it whatſoever is laid up with it; or in the world, which is ſo variable now, and will be conſumed all to nought, and with it, whatſoever is laid up in it. But, he would have us to lay it up in heaven; which (beſides that it is our owne countrey, and this but a ſtrange land) is the place, whither we paſſe leaving this place behinde; and from whence we muſt never paſſe, but ſtay here, and either for ever want, or have uſe for ever of that, we part with here. And to ſay truth, Vt quid reſpicimus? With what face can we looke up and looke upon heaven, where we have laid up nothing? or what entertainment can we hope for there, whither we have ſent no part of our proviſion; but for ought of our ſending, the place is cleane empty?

You will ſay; how can one reach heaven to lay any thing there? I will aske you alſo another queſtion: How can a man being in France, reach into England to lay any thing there? By exchange. And did you never heare of our exchange, Cambium cœleſte? You know, that to avoid the danger of Pirates, and the inconvenience of forren Coine, not currant at home, it is the uſe of Merchants to pay it there, to receive it here. Such a thing is there in this laying up. We are here as ſtrangers: the place where we wiſh our ſelves, is our Countrey, even Paradiſe (if ſo be, we ſend our carriage thither before; if not, I feare, wee intend ſome other place: it is not our countrey.) When we ſhall take our way thither, thorow the way of all fleſh, through death, certainely we loſe all; he ſtrips every one, he layes hold of: and put caſe, wee could get thorow with all our bagges; here it is currant (for it is the coine of the world;) but, there it is baſe, and goeth for nought; what ſhall we then doe? Quare non facis? Why deale you not with exchange, paying here ſo much, to have ſo much repaid you there. Adires trapezitas, you ſhould goe to the Bankers: who be thoſe? Cum quæſieris, when you have ſought all, Pauperes ſunt campſores, they be the poore: Da pauperibus & accipies theſaurum. Where is our bill? Quod, vel quantum uni. Who will repay it? Ego reſolvam: Nec repetit mercedem ſed dat mercedem. What? refuſe you to take CHRIST'S bill? if you dare truſt your ſervants without feare of loſing; if you truſt your LORD, feare you to loſe? If them, of whom you receive nothing, but, they of you; what, not Him of whom earſt you profeſſed to receive all things? If CHRIST be of credit, and heaven be not Vtopia; if we thinke there is ſuch a life after this, we ſhall ever have to doe there, Lay up here. Thinke, it is a laying up. upon the beleeving of this one word, the weight of doing and not doing, all the Text lyeth.

When we recount our good deeds, we commonly ſay, For him, and for him, we have done this and that; It is true, ſaith Saint Paul. That good you doe, you doe for them, and for your ſelves too: but more, for your ſelves than for them. To lay up, and to doe good; yea, to others; Nay, to doe your ſelves good, to lay up for your ſelves. Before, you thought it ſcattering, it was indeed laying up: Now, you thinke, it is for them; it is, for you, and your ſakes, GOD commandeth it.

GOD hath no need of you to feed the poore; No need of the Widow to feed Elias, He could ſtill have fed him by Ravens: and as He fed Elias by one; ſo could He them, by others, or other meanes, and never ſend them to Sarepta among you. He could have created ſufficient for all men; or ſo few men, as all ſhould have beene Deut. 15. 11. ſufficient for them. Hee would not: Hee ordered, there ſhould ever be poore in the Land: Why? To prove them; and to prove you by them: that, Hee which feedeth you, might feed them by you; that your ſuperfluities might be their neceſſaries: that they of their patience, in wanting; and you, of your liberalitie in ſupporting, might both together, of Him that made you both, receive reward. They with you, in your boſomes there, as here: a good ſight in heaven, and a good ſight in earth. For ſure, there ſhall never be a rich man in heaven, without a Lazarus in his boſome. Therefore, we have need of them, as they have need of us; yet, that, we make theirs, remaineth ours ſtill.

It

It liketh the HOLY GHOST, as to terme our preaching our ſeed, ſo to terme your wealth, your ſeed. The ſeed, the husbandman caſts it, the ground receives it: Whoſe is it? the ground's? No, the husbandmans. And, though it bee caſt out of his hands, and rot in the bowels of the earth, and come to nothing, and there becomes of it, no man can tell what, yet, this count he maketh, it is his ſtill; and that every graine will bring him an eare, at time of the yeare; and ſo, that he hath, in caſting it from him, ſtored it up for himſelfe. Whereas, in fooliſhly loving it (as many doe their wealth) he might have ſtored it up for wormes and muſtineſſe, and by that meanes indeed have loſt it for altogether. The ſeed is your almes: The ground is the poore: You are the Sowers. When it is therefore ſowen among them, how it is ſpent, or what becomes of it, you know not: yet, this you know, and may reckon; that at the fulneſſe of time, at the harveſt of the end of the world, for every graine of temporall contribution, you ſhall receive an eare of eternall retribution. Whereas, ſtoring it up here, it may after your deceaſe be ſtored for harlots, and gameſters, and rioters, in whoſe hands it ſhal corrupt and putrifie, and your ſelves loſe the fruit thereof for ever. By this compariſon you may know, that when you are dealing for the poore, it is your owne buſineſſe, you intend: that, not forgetting them, you remember your ſelves; pitying them, you have pitie on your owne ſoules, and that your labour ſhall not be in vaine in the LORD. 2 Cor. 9. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 58.

Men uſe to reaſon with themſelves; it will not alwayes be health, let us lay up for ſickneſſe; it will not alway be youth, for age: and why not (ſaith Saint Paul) it will not alway be this life, not alway preſent life, lay up for your ſelves againſt the life to come. In this place, here, we ſhall not be alwayes, but in another of our eternall abode. This time, that is, will not be alwayes; but ſuch a time will come, as in which, that we call a thouſand yeares, ſhall be no more than a day, now. That place and that time would be thought of: and good wiſdome it will be, for a man to forget what hee is, and to weigh what he ſhall be. Surely, for any preſent matter GOD did not make us; Sed ad neſcio quid aliud, to ſome further matter yet to come. Not yet preſent: as yet, in promiſe, not yet in performance; as yet in hope, not in poſſeſſion. I know, that even in this place the LORD doth reward, and ſheweth us plainly, that Date and Dabitur are two twins: We our ſelves have by good triall found it true; when our carefull Date and proviſion for the poore laſt yeare ſave one, was requited in preſenti with a great Dabitur of the laſt yeares encreaſe. But this is but an &c. making nothing to the maine promiſe which is to come, which our SAVIOVR would never have out of our eye; Habetis hîc, here you have your comfort, Habete illic have it there too, for here you cannot ever have it. For the preſent time, you have officers and ſervants to wait on you; in the time to come, none will accompany you, all will leave you, when to the grave they have brought you, ſave mercy onely; none will wait or make roome, but opera eorum, your workes which you have here laid up for the time to come. Pſal. 90. 4. Luke 6. 24.

The Scripture ſpeaketh of this life, and all the felicitie therein, as of a tent or booth, ſpread for a day, and taken downe at night. Even like Ionas's gourd for all the world; freſh in the morning, and ſtarke withered yer evening. But, of the life to come, as of a ground-worke, never to remove it ſelfe, or we from it; but to abide therein, ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ or ἐν τῇ βασιλικῇ in the priſon, or the palace for evermore. We ſhall not therefore loſe, but lay up in ſtore: not for others, but for our ſelves: Not, for a few dayes now, but for hereafter: Not a tent to be taken downe, but a foundation never to be removed. Heb. 11. 9. 2 Cor. 5. 1.

Of all the words in the Text, not one was meet for the teeth of the Rhemiſts, ſave this onely: here you have a petillous note cloſe in the margent: Good works are a foundation. A foundation, very true: who denies it? but whether a foundation in our graces, as CHRIST is without us, that is the point. The ground whereon every building is raiſed, is termed fundamentum. The loweſt part of the building immediately lying on it, is ſo termed too. In the firſt ſenſe, CHRIST is ſaid to be the onely

1 Cor.3.11. Ephes.2.10. Col.1.23. Ephes.3.18. foundation: Yet the Apoſtles, becauſe they are the loweſt row of ſtones, are ſaid to be foundations, in the ſecond. So, among the graces within us, faith is properly in the firſt ſenſe, ſaid to be the foundation: yet, in the ſecond, doe we not deny, but as the Apoſtle calleth them, as the loweſt row, next to Faith, Charitie, and the workes of charitie may be called foundations too. Albeit the margent might well have beene ſpared at this place: for, the note is here, all out of place. For, being ſo great Schoolemen as they would ſeeme, they muſt needs know, It is not the drift of the Apoſtle here, in calling them a foundation, to carry our conſiderations into the matter of juſtifying, but onely to preſſe his former reaſon of uncertaintie there, by a contrary weight of certaine ſtabilitie here; and ſo, their note comes in like Magnificat at Mattins.

Thus reaſoneth Saint Paul: This world is uncertaine, of a ſandie nature; you may reare upon it, but it is ſo bad a ſoile, as whatſoever you raiſe, will never be well ſetled, and therefore ever tottering; and when the raine, and the wind, and the waves Matth.7.26. beat againſt it, it commeth downe on your heads. Therefore to make choice of a faſter ſoile, build upon GODS ground, not upon the worlds ground: for, Chryſoſt. in locum, Hom.18. πάντα ἐκεῖνα σέσαλα, μεσαζολὴ ἀδρμία (ſaith Chryſoſtome;) there all is firme, there you may build and be ſure, fall the raine upon the top of it, blow the wind againſt the ſide of it, riſe the waves againſt the foot of it, it ſtands irremovable. Wherein the Apoſtle (ſaith Chryſoſtome) doth teach a very goodly and excellent art, how to make of our fugitive riches a truſty and faſt friend; how to make Gold of our Quickſilver, and of the uncertaintie of riches, a ſure and certaine ground-worke.

Aſſurance and ſecuritie are two things (wee know) that rich men many times buy deare: here they may be had; not for thus much, or thus long, but for as much as you liſt, and as long as eternitie is long, that never ſhall have end. The meaning is; that if you lay out, or lay on that you have, on theſe earthly things (the plot, which the world would faine commend unto you) with this life, or at the furtheſt, with this world they ſhall be ſhaken in peeces and come to nought; and you poſſibly in the houre of death, but moſt certainely in the day of judgement, ſhall ſhake, when the world your ground-worke ſhakes, and be in trembling feare and perplexed agonie touching the eſtate of your ſoule: knowing, there is nothing comming to you but the fruit of this world, which is ruine; or the fruit of the fleſh, which is corruption. But, if you ſhall have grace to make choice of GODS plot, which He hath here levelled for you to raiſe upon, O quanto dignum pretio! that will be worth all the world in that day: the perfect certaintie, ſound knowledge, and pretious aſſurance, you ſhall then have, whereby you ſhall be aſſured to be received, becauſe you are ſure you are CHRISTS, becauſe you are ſure you have true faith, becauſe you are ſure you have framed it up into good works. And ſo ſhall they be a foundation to you-ward, by making evident the aſſurance of ſalvation: not, naturâ, to GOD-ward, in bringing forth the eſſence of your ſalvation.

Looke you, how excellent a ground-worke here is! (not for a cottage;) whereon you may raiſe your frame to ſo notable a height, as ſtanding on it, you may lay hand on, and lay hold of eternall life. O that you would minde once theſe high things, that you would be in this ſenſe high-minded! Saint Pauls meaning is to take nothing from you, but give you a better to requite it by farre. He would have you part, with part of your wealth to doe good; he will lay you up for it, treaſure in heaven for your owne uſe. Hee would have you forſake the worlds ſand and uncertaintie, wherein you cannot truſt; but therefore, he markes you out a plot out of the rocke whereto you may truſt. He would not have you high-minded in conſideration or compariſon of ought on this earth; but he would have your mindes truely exalted to reach up to heavenly things higher than the earth. And laſt, in ſtead of this world, the luſts and riches thereof, to match that, if you will lay hold of it, he holdeth out eternall life and the glory thereof.

To take a ſhort proſpect into eternall life. Life it ſelfe firſt (you know) is ſuch a thing, as were it to be ſold, would be ſtaple ware; if it ſtood where hold might be laid laid on it, ſome would thruſt their ſhoulders out of joynt, but they would reach it. It was a great truth out of a great lyer's mouth, Skinne and all. And I meane not eternall, but this life; and therefore ſome readings have, to lay hold of true life; as if, in this, were little truth. Indeed Saint Auguſtine ſaith, it is nothing but a diſeaſe: We ſay of dangerous ſickneſſes, he hath the plague, he is in a conſumption, ſure he will die; and yet it failes; divers die not: whereas, (ſaith he) of life it ſelfe, it may be ſaid, and never failes: He lives, therefore he will certainly die. Iob 2. 4.

Well yet, this life, ſuch as it is, yet we love it, and loth we are to end it: and, if it be in hazard by the Law, what running, riding, poſting, ſuing, bribing, and if all will not ſerve, breaking priſon is there for it! Or, if it be in danger of diſeaſe, what adoe is there kept, what ill-ſavoured drugges taken! what ſcarifying, cutting, ſearing! and when all comes to all, it is but a few yeares more added; and when they are done, we are where we ſhould have beene before; and then, that which is now life ſhall be then no life. And then, what is it the neerer? What if Adam had lived till this morning, what were he now the neerer? Yet, for all that, as ſhort and fraile as it is, wee doe, what poſſibly man can doe, to eeke it ſtill; and thinke our ſelves jolly wiſe men when we have done, though we die next yeare after for all that. If then with ſo great labour, diligence, earneſtneſſe, endevour, care and coſt, we buſie our ſelves ſometimes to live for a while, how ought we to deſire to live for ever? if for a time to put death away, how to take death away cleane? You deſire life I am ſure, and long life; and therefore a long life, becauſe it is long, that is, commeth ſomewhat neerer in ſome degree to eternall life: If you deſire a long laſting life, why doe you not deſire an everlaſting life? If a life of many yeares, which yet in the end ſhall faile; why not that life, whoſe yeares ſhall never faile? If wee ſay, it is lacke of wit or grace when any man runnes in danger of the law of man, whereby haply he abridges himſelfe of halfe a dozen yeares of his life; what wit or grace is there, wilfully to incurre the loſſe of eternall life? For indeed, as in the beginning we ſet downe, it is a matter touching the loſſe of eternall life, we have in hand; and withall touching the paine of eternall death. It is not a loſſe onely, for we cannot loſe life, and become as a ſtone, free from either: if we leeſe our hold of this life, eternall death taketh hold upon us: If we heape not up the treaſure of immortalitie, we heape up the treaſure of wrath againſt the day of wrath. If your wealth be not with us to life, pecunia veſtra vobiſcum eſt in perditionem. We have not farre to ſeeke for this. For, if now we turne our deafe eare to this Charge, you ſhall fall into temptations: feare yee not that? Into many fooliſh and noyſome luſts; nor feare yee that neither? yet feare whither theſe lead; which drowne men in perdition and deſtruction of body and ſoule. Feare yee not theſe? doth the LORD thunder thus, and are ye not moved? Quibus verbis te curabo? I know not how to doe you good. But, let eternall life prevaile. Sure, if life come not, death comes. There is as much ſaid, now (not as I have to ſay, but) as the time would ſuffer: Onely let me in a few words deliver the charge concerning this, and ſo I will breake up the Court for this time. Pſal. 101. 28. Rom 2. 5. Act. 8. 20. Verſe 9.

And now (Right Honourable, beloved, &c.) albeit that according to the power that the LORD hath given us, I might teſtifie and charge you in the preſence of GOD the FATHER, who quickeneth all things; and of the LORD IESVS, who ſhall ſhew Himſelfe from Heaven with His mightie Angels in flaming fire, rendering vengeance to them, not onely that know not GOD, but to them alſo that obey not the Goſpell of our LORD IESVS CHRIST, that yee thinke upon theſe things which you have heard to doe them: yet humanum dico, for your infirmitie, I will ſpeake after the manner of men, the nature of a man beſt loveth to be dealt withall, and even beſeech you by the mercies of GOD, even of GOD the FATHER, who hath loved you, and given you an everlaſting conſolation, and a good hope through grace, and by the comming of our LORD IESVS CHRIST and our aſſembly unto Him;

Him, that you receive not this Charge in vaine; that ye account it His charge, and not mine; received of Him, to deliver to you. Looke not to me I beseech you: in whom, whatsoever you regard (countenance or learning, yeares or authoritie) I doe most willingly acknowledge my selfe farre unmeet to deliver any; more meet a great deale, to receive one my selfe, save that I have obtained fellowship in this businesse, in dispensing the Mysteries, and delivering the Charges of the LORD. Looke not on me, looke on your owne soules, and have pitie on them: Looke upon Heaven, and the LORD of Heaven and earth, from whom it commeth, and of whom it will be one day called for againe. Surely there is a Heaven; Surely there is a Hell: Surely there will be a day, when enquiry shall be made, how wee have discharged that wee have received of the LORD; and how you have discharged that, you have received of us in the LORDS Name. Against which day, your consciences stand charged with many things, at many times heard. O seeke not death in the errour of your life, deceive not your selves; thinke not, that when my words shall be at an end, both they shall vanish in the aire, and you never heare of them againe. Surely you shall; the day is comming, when it shall be required againe at your hands. A fearefull day for all those, that for a little riches, thinke basely of others; upon all those that repose in these vaine riches (as they shall see then) a vaine confidence; upon all those, that enjoy onely with the belly and the backe, and doe either no good, or miserable sparing good with their riches: whose riches shall be with them to their destruction. Beloved, when your life shall have an end (as an end it shall have) when the terrour of death shall be upon you; when your soule shall be cited to appeare before GOD, in novissimo; I know and am perfectly assured, all these things will come to minde againe, you will perceive and feele that, which possibly now you doe not. The Devils charge commeth then, who will presse these points in another manner, than we can: then it will be too late. Prevent his charge, I beseech you, by regarding and remembring this, now. Now is the time, while you may and have time wherein, and abilitie wherewith; thinke upon it, and provide for eternall life: you shall never in your life stand in so great need of your riches, as in that day; provide for that day; and provide for eternall life. It will not come yet, it is true; it will be long in comming: but when it comes, it will never have an end.

Wisd. 1. 12.

This end is so good, that I will end with eternall life, which (you see) is Saint Pauls end. It is his, and the same shall be my end, and I beseech GOD, it may be all our ends. To GOD immortall, invisible, and onely wise; GOD, who hath prepared this eternall life for us; who hath taught us this day, how to come unto it; whose grace be ever with us, and leave us not, till it have thereto brought us; the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost, be all glory, power, praise, and thanksgiving, now and for ever,

AMEN.

A SER-

One of the SERMONS upon the II. COMMANDEMENT

PREACHED IN THE PARISH Church of S^t GILES Cripplegate, Ian. IX. AN. DOM. MDXCII.

[]

ACTS CHAP. II. VER. XLII.

And they continued in the APOSTLES Doctrine, and Fellowſhip, and Breaking of Bread and Prayers.

THere had been two ſundrie daies before, Sermons concerning the poſitive outward worſhip of GOD, out of this Text, conſiſting of theſe foure parts:

1. The Apoſtles Doctrine. 2. Their Societie or fellowſhip. 3. Breaking of Bread. 4. Prayers.

The effect of this laſt, was to acquaint the Auditorie with ſundrie Imaginations by divers erected, which many unſtable perſons doe runne after and worſhip inſtead of thoſe foure, the Apoſtles Doctrine, &c. The order was to begin with the doctrine firſt, and ſo after, through the reſt, as they ſtand.

THat ſuch imaginations there are, Salomon complaineth of Ratiocinia plurima, whereby men were with-drawen from the ſimplicitie of their creation. And under the Goſpell, S. Paul likewiſe of Venti doctrinarum, whereby Chriſtian people began to be blowen and caried about from the ſtedfaſtneſſe of the truth. I. Ecc. 7. ult. Eph. 4. 14.

But eſpecially under the Goſpell. For that, as S. Auguſtin ſaith (De Civit. 18.) Videns Diabolus templa Dæmonum deſeri, & in nomen CHRISTI currere genus humanum; humanum, &c. Seeing idolatrous images would downe, be bent his whole devite, in place of them to erect and ſet up divers imaginations, that the people, inſtead of the former, might bowe downe to theſe and worſhip them. Since which it hath been and is his daily practice, either to broach, Doctrinas novas & peregrinas, new imaginations never heard of before: Or to revive the old, and new dreſſe them. And theſe (for that by themſelves they will not utter) to mingle & to card with the Apoſtles doctrine, &c. that at the leaſt yet, he may ſo vent them.

Heb.13.9. Apoc.2.14. 2 Cor.2.10.

And this indeed is the diſeaſe of our age, and the juſt complaint wee make of it. That there hath beene good riddance made of images: but, for imaginations, they, be daily ſtamped in great number, and inſtead of the old Images, ſet up, deified, and worſhipped, carrying the names and credit of the Apoſtle's Doctrine, government, &c.

Touching theſe imaginations then, to find ſome heads of them: They be, in reſpect of the Devill, who inſpireth them, called Doctrinæ dæmoniorum. In reſpect of the inſtruments, by whom he breathes them out, Doctrinæ hominum: As the doctrine of the Phariſees, The doctrine of the Nicolaitans.

1 Tim.4.1. Matt.16.9. 12. Apoc.2.13. Act.20.29.

Theſe men were of two ſorts, as S. Paul ſorteth them, [1] Wolves which from without entered into the Church: [2] Men ariſing from among themſelves, teaching perverſe things.

1 Imaginations from without the Church.

1 Thoſe which from without entered, were Philoſophers from the Gentiles: Phariſees from the Iewes. Both which bred many imaginations in Chriſtian Religion.

Againſt them both, S. Paul giveth a double caveat. Not to bee ſeduced by Philoſophy (meaning as he ſheweth, the vaine deceit of that profeſsion:) that is the former. [2] Nor with the human traditions and rudiments of the Phariſees: that, is the latter. To avoid oppoſitions of ſcience falſly ſo called: there is the firſt. To avoid Iewiſh fables and traditions: there is the ſecond. For, from theſe two forges, came a great part of the imaginations which enſued. Each of theſe Sects, eſteeming his old wine good; and conſequently brewing it with the new wine of the GOSPEL.

Col.2.8- 1 Tim.6.20. Tit.1.14. Luc.5. ult.

1 By Philoſophie.

Imaginations by Philoſophie. Firſt, by the courſe of the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtorie it appeareth, that Simon Magus (who of a heathen Philoſopher became a Chriſtian, and was baptized) after, through the gall of bitterneſſe wherein he was, fell away againe and proved the firſt of all heretikes. Hee, firſt: and after, Valentine; and then, Baſilides deviſed many ſtrange ſpeculative phanſies. And indeed, whoſoever they bee, that dote about unprofitable curious ſpeculations, from this kind they ſprung firſt.

Act.8.23.

After theſe, thoſe two maine hereſies, that ſo mightily troubled the Church: Firſt, that of the Manichee, who brought a neceſsitie upon all things by meanes of his duo principia: making men ſecure how they lived,

ved, becauſe it was ordained what ſhould become of them. Secondly, the other of the Pelagian, who aſcribed to mans free-will, and abilitie to keepe GOD'S Law; and thereby made void the grace of CHRIST. Both theſe were but two baſtard ſlips of corrupt Philoſophie: The former, an imagination iſſuing from the Sect of the Stoikes and their fatall deſtinie: The latter, from the Sect of the Peripatetikes, and t heir pure naturalls.

Imaginations by Iudaiſme. As the curious ſpeculations came from the Philoſophers of the Gentiles; So whatſoever ſuperſtitious obſervations were imagined, came from the Phar ſees and ſects of the Iewes. As Simon Magus is reckoned, the firſt heretikie: So Ebion the Iew, is the ſecond. And from him ſprang the opinion of the neceſsitie of Iewiſh obſervances; which was the occaſion of the Councell in Acts 15 and the opinion of worſhipping Angels as Mediators, as Theodoret teſtifieth upon *Col.*2.18. And for thoſe Ceremonies, as at the firſt they deſired to retaine thoſe very ſame that were Iudaicall. So (when it was withſtood by the Apoſtles) they did after but turne them, and new varniſh them over into others like, and with them ſo c'ogged the Church, as the Iews eſtate was much more tolerable than the Chriſtian's, S. Auguſtin's complaint, Ep. 119. 2 By Iudaiſme.

Now from theſe two ſorts of perſons proceeded thoſe two ſeverall meanes, whereby (as it were in two moulds) all imaginations have been caſt, and the truth of GOD's word ever perverted. 1. From the Phariſee, That peecing out the new garment with old raggs of traditions, that is, adding to and eeking out GOD's truth, with mens phanſies; with the Phylacteries and fringes of the Phariſees, who tooke upon them to obſerve many things beſide it. 2. From the Philoſopher, that wreſting and tentering of the Scriptures (which S. Peter complaineth of) with expoſitions and gloſſes newly coined, to make them ſpeake that, they never meant. Giving ſuch new and ſtrange ſenſes to places of Scripture, as the Church of CHRIST never heard of. And what words are there or can there be, that (being helped out with the Phariſee's addition of a truth unwritten, or tuned with the Philoſopher's wreſt of a deviſed ſenſe) may not be made to give colour to a new imagination? Therefore, the ancient Fathers thought it meet, that they that would take upon them to interprete the Apoſtle's Doctrine, ſhould put in ſureties, that their ſenſes they gave, were no other than the Church in former time hath acknowledged. It is true, the Apoſtles indeed ſpake from the Spirit, and every affection of theirs was an oracle; but, that (I take it) was their peculiar priviledge But, all that are after them, ſpeake not by revelation, but by labouring in the word and learning: are not to utter their owne phanſies, and to deſire to be beleeved upon their bare word: (if this be not dominari fidei, to be Lords of their Auditor's faith, I know not what it is:) but onely on condition, that the ſenſe, they now give, be not a feined Mat.9.17. Mar.7.4. 2 Pet.3.16.

ſenſe (as S. Peter termeth it) but ſuch a one, as hath been before given by our fathers and fore-runners in the Chriſtian faith. Say I this of my ſelfe (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſaith not the Law ſo too? Give I this ſenſe of mine owne head, hath not CHRIST's Church heretofore given the like? Which one courſe if it were ſtraightly holden, would rid our Church of many fond imaginations which now are ſtamped daily, becauſe every man upon his owne ſingle bond, is truſted to deliver the meaning of any Scripture, which is many times nought elſe, but his owne imagination. This is the diſeaſe of our Age. Not the Phariſee's addition (which is well left;) but (as bad as it) the Philoſopher's gloſſe, which too much aboundeth. And I ſee no way but this, to helpe it.

2 From within by Chriſtians. Gal. 2. 4.

Imaginations from the Chriſtians. Secondly, from among the Chriſtians themſelves aroſe men ſpeaking perverſe things, whom S. Paul well calleth fratres ſubintroductos. Who alſo by their imaginations, mainly corrupted the Apoſtle's Doctrine, which we heretofore divided into the { 1 Matter, in which { 1 The Subſtance, and there in { 1 the foundation. 2 the Building upon it. / 2 The Ceremonie. } } 2 Manner }

Concerning all which, imaginations have riſen.

1 In the matter and ſubſtance.
a Touching the foundation. Heb. 6. 2. Mar. 1. 15. Act. 20. 20. 1 Repentance. Acts 6. *Apoc. 2. 15.

Imaginations touching the foundations. Which are two (ſo called by the name of foundations, firſt laid by our SAVIOVR CHRIST, and after kept by the Apoſtles) Even a Repentance, and b Faith.

Imaginations touching Repentance. Nicolas one of the ſeven, (as Euſebius teſtifieth) became a man of Imaginations, and began the ſect of the Nicolaitans * whom GOD hateth. After whom aroſe Carpocrates in the ſame, of whom came the ſect of the Gnoſtikes. A Sect that blew up that part of the foundation, which is called Repentance from dead works. For (as Epiphanius teſtifieth,) they held; that all other things beſides faith, were indifferent, Repentance and all. And that, ſo a man knew and imbraced certaine dictates and poſitions, they would deliver him; live how he liſt, he could not chooſe but be ſaved. And of theſe high points of knowledge they entituled themſelves Gnoſtikes, that is, men of knowledge. And all other Chriſtians that could not talke like them, Simplices, good ſimple ſoules. Such is the imagination in our daies, of carnall Goſpellers; That, ſo he forget not his Creed, he cannot miſcarrie. Theſe be the Gnoſtikes of our age.

Imaginations touching faith. On the other ſide, againſt the other part of the foundation (faith;) Latianus a Chriſtian and a great learned man caſt his Myne, of whom was the ſect of the Encratites: who offended at the licentious lives of the Gnoſtikes, fell into the other extreme, that Non eſt curandum quid quiſq; credat; id tantùm curandum eſt, quid quiſq; faciat: that the Creed might be cancelled well enough; for, an upright and ſtraight courſe of life, GOD onely regarded: And in every Sect, a man might be ſaved, that lived well. Theſe, for their ſober and temperate kind of life, termed themſelves Encratites, that is, ſtrict livers; and all other Chriſtians that lived not in like auſterity, Pſychicos (that is) carnall men. Such is in our daies the imagination of the Civill Chriſtain; who, ſo his converſation be blameleſſe and honeſt, careth not for Religion and Faith at all, but for the moſt part lives and dies in brutiſh ignorance. We may call theſe the Encratites of our Age.

b Touching the Building.

Imaginations touching the Building. A ſecondary part of the Apoſtles Doctrine, and not of like neceſsity with the former. Epiphanius writeth (Hereſi 61.) There were a ſect, a branch of the old Cathari or Puritanes (as he ſaith) which calleth themſelves Apoſtolici, propter exactum diſciplinæ ſtudium, &c. For an extraordinarie deſire they had above other men to have diſcipline and all things, to the exact paterne of the Apoſtles daies; which is it ſelfe an imagination.

1

For, it were cacozelia an apiſh imitation, to retaine all in uſe then; ſeeing diverſe things, even then, were but temporaria. For beſide their Canon, in matters of knowledge, they had their dogmata or decreta, not of equall importance; as was that of eating things ſtrangled, and bloud; which no man now thinketh himſelfe bound to abſtaine from. And, beſides their Epitaxes, commandements in matter of practice, they had their Diataxes, Injunctions, not of equall regard with the former. Such were their Agapæ, love-feaſts after the Sacrament: and their celebrating the Sacrament after Supper; which no Church at this day doth imitate. Therfore, to preſſe all that was in that time is an imagination.

2

And, as to preſſe all; ſo, of theſe things that remaine, to preſſe all alike, or thinke an equall neceſsity of them, which was a parcell of the imagination of the Donatiſts. For, ſome things the Apoſtles peremptorily commanded: Some things they had no commandement for, but onely gave counſell: Some things they commanded and taught: ſome things, they taught and exhorted: whereof each was to be eſteemed in his owne value and worthineſſe: Neither to diſpenſe with the commandement; nor to make a matter of neceſſity of the Counſell. Both which have not a little harmed the Church.

1 Cor. 7. 10.

1 Cor. 7. 25.

1 Tim. 4. 11. 6. 2.

Laſtly, for theſe matters of Counſell, which for the moſt part are things indifferent, they alſo fall upon two imaginations: 1. Some ſay:

1 Cor. 10. 23. Omnia mihi licent: and, ſo it be not condemned as unlawfull, make no
Col. 4. 21. bones of it: which tendeth to all prophaneneſſe. Others ſay, Touch not, Taſte not, Handle not; which ſpeak of things indifferent, as meerely un-
2 Cor. 7. 35. lawfull: which imagination ends in ſuperſtition. A meane way would be holden betweene them both, that neither a ſnare be caſt on mens con-
Gal. 5. 13. ſciences, by turning Non expedit into Non licet: nor our libertie in Chriſt be made an occaſion to the fleſh, by caſting Non expedit out of doores. For the Spirit of CHRIST is the ſpirit of ingenuitie, which will freely ſubmit it ſelfe to that which is expedient, even in things of their owne nature lawfull. The not obſerving whereof with good heed and diſcretion, hath in old time filled the world with many a Superſtitious imagination, and in our daies hath healed the imagination and ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, with another of riot and licentious libertie, as bad as the former, yea a great deale worſe.

2 Imaginati- in the ceremoni-. Imaginations touching the ceremonie. Firſt, I take it to be a phancie, to imagine, there needs none: for, without them, neither comelineſſe,
1 Cor. 11. 13 nor orderly uniformity, will be in the Church. Women will pray uncovered (an uncomely ſight) unleſſe the Apoſtle enjoyne the contrary:
1 Cor. 14. ult. therefore, Let every thing be done decently and in order. Now, to adviſe what is comely and orderly in each Age and Place, is left in the power and diſcretion of the Governours of each Church, Viſum eſt Spiritui Sancto & nobis. And the cuſtome of each Church is peaceably to be obſerved by the members of it. In a matter ceremoniall, touching the veiling of women (after ſome reaſons alleadged, which yet a troubleſome body might quarrell with) thus doth S. Paul determine the mat-
1 Cor. 11. 16 ter definitively: If any liſt to be contentious, Nos non habemus talem conſuetudinem, nec Eccleſiæ Dei. As if he ſhould ſay: In matters of that quality, each Churches cuſtome is to over-rule, as from that place S. Hierome (Ep. 28.) and S. Auguſtine (Ep. 86. & 118.) doe both reſolve.

It hath beene ever thought meet (ſaith S. Gregorie) that there ſhould be In unitate fidei conſuetudo diverſa; that is, the diverſitie of cuſtomes, ſhould be in diverſe Churches, all in the unitie of one faith, to ſhew the Churches libertie in thoſe matters. And therefore, the eating of things offered to Idols, wholly reſtrained the Churches of Syria and Cilicia, ſeemeth in 1 Cor. 10. 17 ſome ſort permitted the Church of Corinth, in caſe no man did challege it.

And as for diverſe Churches, this hath been judged requiſite; ſo hath it likewiſe been deemed no leſſe requiſite, that every perſon ſhould inviolably obſerve the rites, and cuſtomes of his owne Church. Therefore, thoſe former ordinances, which were not urged upon the Corinthians; upō the Galathians, within the compaſſe of the Regions where they took place, (as we ſee) they were urged (as the Fathers interpret thoſe pla-Gal. 1. 9. ces) under the paine of Anathema, which cenſure is due to all thoſe that Gal. 5. 12. trouble the Church: as thoſe doe, who for ſetting light by the cuſtomes

and orders of the Church, are by S. Paul concluded within the number of persons contentious and troublesome. 1 Cor.11.16

Imaginations touching the manner of deliverie. For, even in it also, for failing, men must imagine some thing, that, when they can take no exception to the matter, yet they may itch after a new manner, and heare it, after such and such a sort delivered, or they will not heare at all, and therefore after their owne liking get them an heape of Teachers. 1. They must heare no Latine, nor Greeke; no, though it be interpreted. A meere imagination. For, the Apostle writing to the Corinthians, which were Grecians, hath not feared to use termes as strange to them, as Latine or Greeke is to us (Maranatha, Belial, Abba.) All which he might easily enough have expressed in their vulgar, but that it liked him to retaine his liberty in this point. 2 Tim.4.3. 1 Cor.16.22 2 Cor.6.15. Rom.8.15. In the manner of delivery.

2. Nor none of the Apocrypha cited. Another imagination: For, S. Iude in his Epistle, hath not feared to alleage, out of the booke of Enoch (Iude 14.) which booke hath ever beene reckoned Apocrypha. And, by his example all the ancient Writers are full of allegations from them: ever, to these Writings yeelding the next place after the Canon of the Scriptures; and preferring them before all forreine Writers whatsoever.

3. Nor any thing alledged out of the Iewes Thalmud; a third Imagination. For, from their Records, S. Paul is judged to have set downe the names of the Sorcerers that withstood MOSES, to be Iannes and Iambres; which in Exodus, or the whole Canon of Scriptures are not named. As many other things in the new Testament, from them receive great light. And the Iewes themselves are therein cleerely confuted. 2 Tim.3.8.

4. But, especially no heathen example or authority (for, with allegation of the ancient Fathers I have often dealt) a matter which the Primitive Church never imagined unlawfull. For, Clemens Alexandrinus (in Strom.7.) by allusion to Sara and Agar, teacheth the contrary. So doth Basil, in a set Treatise de legendis Ethnicorum scriptis; and Gregory Nyssen de vitâ MOSIS, out of the XXI. of Deut. by the rites touching the marrying of heathen women taken captive: and last of all S. Augustine most plainly, De Doctrinâ Christianâ, 2.40. And these all reckoned of the contrary, as a very imagination. Which they did the rather, for that, besides divers other places, not so apparant, they find S. Paul, in matter of doctrine, alleaging Aratus a heathen Writer, in his Sermon at Athens. Acts 17. 28. And againe, in matter of life, alleadging Menander, a Writer of Comedies, in his Epistle: And thirdly, in matter of report onely without any urgent necessity, alleaging Epimenides, or as some thinke Callimachus. 1 Cor.15.33

And surely, if it be lawfull to reason from that which Nature teacheth, as S. Paul doth against mens wearing long haire, it is not unlawfull neither, to reason from the wisest and most pithy sayings of naturall 1 Cor.11.14.

men. Eſpecially, with the Apoſtle, uſing them (as in a manner they only are uſed) thereby to provoke Chriſtian men to emulation, by ſhewing them their own blindneſſe in matter of knowledge, that ſee not ſo much as the heathen did by the light of Nature: or their ſlackneſſe, in matter of converſation; that cannot be got ſo farre forward by GODS Law, as the poore Pagan can by his Philoſophie. That if Grace will not move, ſhame may.

II. Touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip.

Imaginations touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip. For, this doctrine received, doth incorporate the receivers of it into a fellowſhip or Society, which is called the fellowſhip, or corporation of the Goſpell: and they, that bring not this doctrine, are no waies to be received thereto. Which fellowſhip is not to be forſaken, as the manner of ſome is (men of imaginations) in our daies, either becauſe there be hereſies, for oportet eſſe: Or, for that many at communions, come togither, not for the better, but for the worſe, for ſo did they in Corinth: Or laſtly, for that many and many Chriſtians walke (which S. Paul wrot with teares) as enemies to the Croſſe of CHRIST; for ſo it was in the Church of Philippi.

Ioh.2.10. Heb.10.25. 1 Cor.11.19. 1 Cor.11.17. Phil.3.18.

Now it is plaine, there can no Societie endure without government. And therefore GOD hath appointed in it Governours and Aſſiſtants: which ſeeing they have power from GOD, to reject or receive accuſations, and to judge thoſe that are within and of the fellowſhip; it is an idle imagination that ſome have imagined, to hold, the Church hath not her Iudgement-ſeat, and power to cenſure her diſobedient children. It hath ever beene holden good Divinitie, that the Church from CHRIST received power to cenſure and ſeparate wilfull Offendors. Both, with the Heathenman's ſeparation, who might not ſo much as enter into the Church-door (which is the greater cenſure:) and with the Publicans ſeparation (which is the leſſe) who might enter and pray in the Temple, but was avoided in common converſation, and in the fellowſhip of the private table, and therefore much more of the Altar. Of which twaine, the former, the Apoſtle calleth cutting off, Gal.5.12. the latter abſtaining from 2 Theſ.3.6. The Primitive Church calleth the former excommunicatos, the latter abſtentos. So that, to phanſie no government, is an imagination. A Government there is.

1 Cor.12.8. 1 Tim.5.19. 1 Cor.8.12. Mat.18.17. Acts 21.28. Luc.18.10.

Touching the forme of which Government, many imaginations have lately beene bred; in theſe our daies ſpecially. At the writing of this Verſe, it is certaine, that the Government of Chriſtian people conſiſted in two degrees onely. (Of both which our SAVIOVR CHRIST Himſelfe was the Author.) 1 Of the twelve, 2 Of the ſeventy: both which were over the People in things pertaining to GOD.

Acts 2.42. Luc.9.1. 10.1.

Theſe two, were one ſuperiour to another and not equall. And, that the Apoſtles eſtabliſhed an equality in the Clergy, is (I take it) an imagination. No man could periſh in the gain-ſaying of Core'h, under the Goſpell (which §. Iude ſaith, they may) if there were not a ſuperioritie in the Clergie: For, Core's munitie was, becauſe he might not be equall to Aaron, appointed his ſuperior by GOD; Num. 16. 10. Which very humor (obſerve it who will) hath brought forth moſt part of the hereſies, ſince the time of the Goſpell: that Coreh might not be Aarons equall. Now, of theſe two orders, the Apoſtles have ever beene reckoned the ſuperior to the other, till our times; as having even under our SAVIOVR CHRIST, a power to forbid others, *Luc.*9.49. And after, exerciſing the ſame power; Silas (one of the Seventy) receiving a commandement (ἐντολὴν from S. Paul an Apoſtle to come unto him. As the Auditorie had their roome by themſelves, So among the perſons Eccleſiaſticall, the Apoſtles had a higher ſeat, as may be gathered; and in the very place it ſelfe, were diſtinguiſhed. Now in the place of the Twelve, ſucceeded Biſhops; and in the place of the Seventy, Presbyteri, Prieſts or Miniſters, and that by the judgement of Irenæus (l. 3. c. 3) who lived immediatly upon the Apoſtles Age: Of Tertullian (de præſcript.) Of S. Auguſtine (in Pſal. 44.) And this, till of late, was thought the forme of that fellowſhip, and never other imagined.

S. Iude

Acts 15. 32. 17. 15. 1 Cor. 14 16 Acts 4. 19.

But, not long ſince, ſome have phanſied another, that ſhould conſiſt of Lay-elders, Paſtors and Doctors, and whither of Deacons too, is not fully agreed yet. Which device is preſſed now upon our Church: not, as a forme of more conveniencie than that, it hath; but, as one abſolutely neceſſary, and of our SAVIOVR CHRISTS owne only inſtitution, which maketh it the leſſe ſufferable. I know that by vertue of Saint Peters wrinch before mentioned, ſome places may be brought, which may ſeeme to give it colour: but, that is, if we allow thoſe new gloſſed ſenſes. But, if we ſeeke what ſenſes, the Primitive Church gave of them, not one of them, but will ſuffer it to fall to the ground. And, finding it a ſtranger to them, I know not how to terme it, but an imagination. To touch it briefly in a word.

If we aske Scripture for it, and where we may finde it, they paſſe by the two moſt evident places in appearance; 1 Cor. 12.28. Becauſe, there are no Paſtors; and *Eph.*4.11. Becauſe, there are no Lay-elders; and lay it upon, Rom. 12.6,7,8. And there, by a ſtrange and vn-heard of Expoſition, they will find them all foure. But not, except that Expoſition be allowed them: Nor, if the ancient Writers may be heard, what the true ſenſe of it is. There is no Epiſtle on which ſo many of them have written: Sixe only I will name: Origen, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Ambroſe, Hierome, Oecumenius; All which, have entreated of it. Let their Commentaries be looked on upon that place. Not one of them applieth it to the Church-government (which by any likely hood cannot be imagined, but they would, if it were the maine place for it,) or findeth thoſe offices in thoſe words, which they in good earneſt tell us of, as that διάκονον (in the ſeventh verſe) is not the Deacon: but, the Diſtributer (in the eighth verſe) is he: or that qui miſeretur, is latine for a Widow, or ſuch like.

But, if jointly they find them not; let us ſee how ſeverally they warrant their Offices. 1 Of Elders, ſome both preach and governe: ſome governe onely: and there they imagine they have found their Lay-elder 1 Tim. 5. 17. by implication, that there are Presbyteri, that labour not in preaching. Heare S. Chryſoſtome on 1 Cor. 1 17. Your ſhall find a farre other ſenſe: Evangelizare (ſaith he) perpaucorum eſt; baptizare autem cujuſlibet, modò fungatur Sacerdotio. And a little after Siquidem Presbyteris quidem, qui ſimpliciores ſunt, hoc munus tradimus, ut baptizent; verbum autem ut doceant, non niſi Sapientioribus: hîc ſapientia eſt & labor. Quamobrem & alibi inquit: Qui bene præſunt Presbyteri, duplici honore digni ſunt, maximè qui laborant in verbo. Whereby it is plaine, that in S. Chryſoſtome's time, it was not reckoned meete, that every one that miniſtred the Sacraments, ſhould alſo preach. That the meaner ſort dealt with the Baptizing, and they only that were of the more wiſe ſort, with the Word. And to prove, it ſhould thus be, he citeth this their Scripture, as if in the Apoſtle's daies, the like had been thought wiſdome. But as for lay-elders, He nor any that writeth on it, can finde in this verſe; nor any ſuch in all antiquitie ever underſtood by the name of Presbyter.

The Elders Preachers, they divide into Paſtors and Doctors: and theſe they ſever in function; limiting the one to his exhortation onely, the other to point of doctrine onely. An imagination, which none of the Fathers would ever acknowledge, ſearch their writings. S. Chryſoſtome upon this Verſe, Eph. 4. 11. taketh them both for one and maketh no difference. So S. Hierome, in both his Commentaries upon that Epiſtle: Omnis enim Paſtor Doctor eſt. But, S. Auguſtine may ſerve for all, to ſhew, how unknowne this deviſe was then. Who being purpoſely written to, by Paulinus, to aſsigne a difference betweene them, thus anſwereth: PASTORES autem & DOCTORES, quos maxime ut diſcerneremus voluiſti, eoſdem puto eſſe, ſicut & tibi viſum eſt, ut non alios PASTORES, alios DOCTORES intelligeremus, &c. Hos enim ſicut unum aliquod duobus nominibus complexus eſt, Aug. Ep 59. ad Paulinum.

Laſtly, for their Deaeons too: that they ſhould be men of occupation and trade, to deale with the Church ſtocke and care of the poore onely, is alſo (I doubt not) an imagination: ſeeing all Antiquity hath ever reckoned of that Calling, as of a ſtep or degree to the Miniſtery out of 1 Tim. 3. 13. And, that the Churches practiſe hath beene alwaies to employ them in other parts and functions beſides that, is plaine by Iuſtine Martyr (who lived in the Apoſtles daies) Apol. 2. ad Antonium, namely, to diſtribute the Communion: by Tertullian (de Bap.) to baptize: by Cyprian (Ser. 6. de lapſis) and divers others. So that, to conclude, theſe are imaginations touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip, howſoever, a great number of deceived people bow downe to them and worſhip them.

Imaginations

III. Imaginations touching the breaking of bread.

Imaginations touching the breaking of bread: which is joyned to that fellowſhip, as the chiefeſt badge of that fellowſhip. For, by it is gathered the communion; as may be gathered by conference with Acts 20. 7. and as the Syrian Text tranſlateth it. For that, as by the other Sacrament in the Verſe immediately going before, they are receiv'd into the body of the Church; ſo, by this, they are made to drinke of the ſpirit (1 *Cor.*12. 13.) and ſo, perfected in the higheſt Myſterie of this Societie.

Concerning which, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations: Firſt, in that ſhe many times celebrateth this myſterie ſine fractione, without any breaking at all. Whereas (as heretofore hath beene ſhewed out of 1 Cor. 10. 18.) it is of the nature of an Euchariſt or Peace-offering: which was never offered but it was eaten, that both there might be a repreſentation of the memorie of that ſacrifice, and together an application to each perſon by partaking it. And ſecondly, in that ſhe hath indeed no breaking of bread at all. For, it being broken (ever) after it is conſecrated, there is (with them) no bread remaining to breake: and the bodie of CHRIST is now impaſsible, and cannot be broken; ſo that they are faine to ſay they breake Accidents, and indeed they well know not what. Contrarie to Saint Luke here, who calleth it fractionem panis; and to S. Paul (1 Cor. 10. 16.) who ſaith Panis quem frangimus. As theſe are their imaginations: ſo wee want not ours. For, many among us, phanſie only a Sacrament in this action, and looke ſtrange at the mention of a Sacrifice: whereas, we not onely uſe it, as a nouriſhment ſpirituall (as, that, it is too) but as a meane alſo, to renew a covenant with GOD, by vertue of that Sacrifice, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, *Pſal.*50.5. So our SAVIOVR CHRIST in the inſtitution, telleth us, Luc. 22. 10. and the Apoſtle, *Heb.*13. 10. And the old writers uſe no leſſe, the word Sacrifice, than Sacrament; Altar, than Table; offer, than eate; but both indifferently, to ſhew there is both.

And againe too, that to a many with us, it is indeed ſo fractio panis, as it is that onely and nothing beſide: Whereas, the bread, which we breake is the partaking of CHRISTS true bodie (and not, of a Signe, figure or remembrance of it.) 1 Cor. 10.16. For the Church hath ever beleeved a true fruition of the true body of CHRIST, in that Sacrament.

Further (as heretofore hath beene made plaine) it is an imagination, to think, that this breaking of bread can be ſevered from the other, *ver.*46. which is ESAIAS breaking of bread to the needie. Whereby, as in the former, CHRIST communicateth Himſelfe with us; ſo we in this latter, communicate our ſelves with our poore brethren, that ſo, there may be a perfect communion. For both in the Sacrifice, which was the figure of it, it was a matter of Commandement, Deut. 16. 10. inſomuch, as the pooreſt were not exempt from GOD's offerings: And our SAVIOVR CHRISTS practice was, at this feaſt, to command ſomewhat to be given to Eſa. 58.7. Luc. 21.4.

*to the poore, Ioh.*13.29. And laſt of all, the Agapæ or love-feaſts of the Chriſtians for releefe of the poore, doe moſt plainly expreſſe that, I meane. In place of which (when they after proved inconvenient) ſucceeded the Chriſtian Offertorie.

And laſtly, whereas we continue in the Doctrine and Prayers of the Church, we do many times diſcontinue this action a whole yeare together. Theſe long intermiſsions (ſo that, if it be panis annuus, once a yeere received, we thinke our dutie diſcharged) are alſo (no doubt) a ſecond imagination in our common practice. For ſure, we ſhould continue alſo in this part, and the frequenting of it, if not ſo often as the Primitive Church did (which, either thrice in the weeke, or at the furtheſt once, did communicate) yet, as often as the Church doth celebrate; which (I thinke) ſhould do better to celebrate more often. And thoſe exceptions which commonly we alleage to diſturbe our ſelves for that action, make us no leſſe meet for prayers than for it. For except a man abandon the purpoſe of ſinne, Pſal. 66.18. and except he be in Charitie, Matt. 6.14. he is no more fit to pray than to communicate; and therefore ſhould abſtaine from the one as well as from the other: Or, to ſay the truth, ſhould by renewing himſelfe in both theſe points, make himſelfe meet for both, continuing no leſſe in the breaking of bread, than in prayers and doctrine.

IIII. Imaginations touching Prayers.

Imaginations touching prayers. As the former was the moſt ſpeciall exerciſe of a Chriſtian, and chiefeſt in dignitie; So, this is the moſt generall and chiefeſt in uſe. Therefore he puts it in the plurall number: as if, both in preaching, cenſuring, and communicating, it had his uſe; as indeed it hath. Before all things (1 *Tim.*2.1.) In all things (1 Theſ. 5.17.) After all things (*Eph.*6.18. Num. 6. ver. ult.) And in this alſo we want not phanſies: In this age eſpecially, wherein, an idle conceit is taken up, that never came into the heads of any of the old heretikes, though never ſo brain-ſicke once to imagine: Our SAVIOVR CHRIST thus willeth us, When ye pray, ſay, Our FATHER, &c. A moſt fond imagination is ſtart up in our times, never once dreamed of before, that telleth us; in no caſe we muſt ſay, Our FATHER, &c. with which form (if Saint Auguſtine be to be beleeved as a witneſſe of antiquitie) the univerſall Church of CHRIST, hath ever uſed to begin and end all her prayers, Ep. 59. as ſtriving indeed by divers other formes more largely to expreſſe the ſenſe of that prayer, but not being able to come neere the high art, and moſt excellent ſpirit of perfection in that pattern, they alwaies conclude with it; as being ſure, howſoever they may for divers defects not attaine to the depth of it; and by it, they ſhall be ſure to begge all things neceſſarie at GOD's hands. This, I named firſt, becauſe it is appropriate to our times.

Luc. 11. 12.

Beſides, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations touching Prayers:

Prayers: firſt, againſt S. Pauls Orabo & mente, in ſetting the people to pray they wote not what; and ſo making their underſtanding unfruitfull, 1 *Cor.*14.14. And againe, againſt our Saviour Chriſt's Caveat (Mat. 6.7.) in ſetting them to goe over whole Roſaries and Pſalters, as if much babling after the heathen manner, were acceptable to GOD. So likewiſe, doe others alſo among us, erre in their imaginations, no leſſe, and that even againſt the ſame places. Firſt, againſt Orabo ſpiritu (1 Cor. 14.15.) in the ſame verſe, by finding fault with a ſet Liturgie (which they call ſtinted prayers) and giving themſelves to imagine prayers at the ſame inſtant: whereby it is plaine, they ſo occupie their minds, with deviſing ſtill what to ſay next, their ſpirit is unfruitfull, no leſſe than the others underſtanding: And both theſe, [1] the underſtanding of the minde, [2] and the affection of the ſpirit are there neceſſarily required. And againe, that in ſtead of Roſaries and a number of prayers, they bring in the Phariſe's imagination of long prayers (that is) a prayer as long as a whole Roſarie. And this they take to be a great part of holineſſe; but indeed it is nothing but the former ſuperſtition drawn in backward. In which, who ſo markes them, ſhall find, they commit both faults; that of the Phariſee, in tedious length procuring many times nauſeam ſpiritus, a dangerous paſſion: and the other of the Heathen, in fond repetitions, tautologies, inconſequences, and all the abſurditiẹs that may fall into ſuch manner of ſpeech. Saint Cyprian ſaith, It was ever in Chriſt's Church counted an abſurd thing (which ſome count their glory) ventilari preces inconditis vocibus. The abſurditie whereof would better appeare, if (ſeeing under prayers here, Pſalmes, and ſpirituall ſongs are contained, both being parts of invocation) they would have no ſtinted Pſalmes, but conceive their ſongs too, upon the preſent out of the ſpirit, and ſo ſing them. For to ſay truth, there is no more reaſon for the one, than for the other. But GODS Church hath ever had, as a forme of doctrine, both of faith in the Creed; and of life, in the Decalogue; ſo of prayer too. Which, from Acts 13.2. the Fathers in all ages have called a Liturgie, or ſervice of GOD.

Mat. 23. 14.

Theſe are, of many imaginations, ſome ſet up and magnified by ſome, and by others adored and worſhipped, under the names of the [1] Apoſtle's Doctrine, [2] Government, [3] Sacraments, and [4] Prayers.

Saint Stephen telleth us (out of the fift of Amos) that if we doe thus make to our ſelves, Tabernacles and figures to worſhip them, our puniſhment ſhall be to be carryed away beyond Babylon (Acts 7. 43.) And good reaſon, for theſe idle phanſies, are not from Chriſt's Church, from Sion; but from Babylon they came, and if we delight in them, thither ſhall we be carryed.

And ſure, we are in a good way thitherward: for of Babel, Saint Auguſtine ſaith; Civitas illa confuſionis indifferenter habuit Philoſophos inter ſe diverſa & adverſa ſentientes. In GOD's citie, it was never ſo; there was ever correction for Coyners: but, in Babel (the Citie of confuſion) every Philoſopher might ſet up, as now, every Sect-maſter may broach any imagination that taketh him in the head, without puniſhment. For, in Babel, it is reckoned but an indifferent matter. Sure the Prophets tell us, that if Babylon's confuſion goe thus before, the captivitie of Babylon is not farre behinde. From which, Almightie GOD deliver us, and make us carefull, as to continue the Apoſtle's doctrine &c. So neither to engrave, nor to bow downe and worſhip any of theſe imaginations. Amen.

IEREM. CHAP. IV. VER. II.

Et jurabis, vivit DOMINVS, in veritate, & in judicio, & in juſtitia.

And thou ſhalt ſweare, the LORD liveth, in truth, in judgement, and in righteouſneſſe:

OF this Commandement, there are two maine Propoſitions: 1. Thou ſhalt take the Name of GOD: Elſe, it ſhould have been, thou ſhalt not take it at all. 2. Thou ſhalt take it orderly, and not in vaine. Of the firſt: thou ſhalt take it to thoſe ends and uſes, to which GOD lendeth it. Of which one is, Thou ſhalt ſweare by it: which is limited by two waies.

Firſt, by what: The Lord liveth.

Secondly, how: In truth, judgement, juſtice. As in the former Commandements, ſo in this, there be two Extremes. 1. The one, of the Anabaptiſts, which hold all ſwearing unlawfull, contrarie to the firſt, Thou ſhalt ſweare. 2. The other of the licentious Chriſtian, which holds (at leaſt in practice) A man may ſweare how, and in what ſort he liſt: By Creatures, &c. Contrarie to The Lord liveth, &c. Falſly, raſhly, lewdly; Contrarie to In truth, judgement, juſtice.

I. Thou ſhalt ſweare.

That it is lawfull to ſweare, it appeareth by the Law, *Deut.*6. 13. By the Prophets: Ieremie heere. Eſai, (*Chap.*45.Ver. 23.) more earneſtly: I have ſworne by My Selfe, the word is gone out of My mouth and ſhall not returne, That every knee ſhall bow to Me, & every tongue ſhall ſweare by Me. David, Pſal. 63. ult. Laudabuntur omnes, qui jurant per Eum. By the practice of the Saints, not only under Moſes; but, under the Law of Nature. Abraham ſweareth, Gen. 21.24. Iſaac ſweareth, Gen. 26. 31. *Iacob ſweareth, Gen.*31.33. Now, our Saviour Chriſt came not to deſtroy the Law and the Prophets, in thoſe things wherin they agree with the Law of Nature: Therefore, not to take away an oath.

Whereas, they object firſt: That it ſtandeth not with Chriſtian profeſſion, but was tolerated, as an unperfect thing, under the Law.

We anſwere: It cannot be reckoned an Imperfection, to ſweare. For that, not onely Abraham, the patterne of humane perfection, both ſware himſelfe, *Gen.*21. 24. and put his ſervant to an oath, *Gen.*24.3. But, even the Angels, neerer than we to perfection, ſware both under the Law (Dan. 12. 7.) and under the Goſpell (Apoc. 10.6.) And, not onely they, but even God Himſelfe (in whom are all perfections) *Gen.*22.16. and Pſal. 110. 4. So that, it cannot be imagined an imperfection.

Beſides, the holy Apoſtles, the moſt perfect Chriſtians, have in urgent cauſes done the like 2 Corinth. 1. 23. I call God for a record againſt mine owne ſoule, and 1 Cor. 15. 31. By our rejoicing which I have in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord: which place cannot be avoided, having in the Greeke, the word (Nai) never uſed, but in an oath onely.

Whereas ſecondly, they object our Saviour's ſaying, I ſay unto you ſweare not at all: The Ancient Writers anſwere, that our Saviour Chriſt in the very ſame place, not reproving the other part, Reddes autem Domino. juramenta tua, meant not to take all oathes away: But muſt be underſtood according to the Phariſees erroneous gloſſe of this Commandement, which He entendeth to overthrow, by oppoſing to dictum eſt antiquis, Ego autem dico: Which was of two ſorts: 1. For firſt, it ſeemeth, they underſtood it of perjurie alone: So that, if a man forſware not himſelfe, he might ſweare any oath. And ſo Chriſt reproveth not onely falſe, but all raſh and unadviſed ſwearing.

2. Secondly, it ſeemeth, they had this conceipt: So a man ſware not by the great Name of God, all was well; He might ſweare by any creature at his pleaſure: and ſo Chriſt willeth, not to ſweare at all, by any creature.

Though indeed, we hold in Divinitie, that Iurare, of and by it ſelfe conſidered, is an act forbidden, no leſſe than Occîdere. And that, as it is an abſolute countermand, Non occîdes, and yet the Magiſtrate, by due courſe of Iuſtice, executing a malefactor is commended: So is it likewiſe wiſe Non jurabis; and yet being (as we terme it) veſtitum debitis circumſtantiis, Laudabuntur omnes qui jurant per Eum, as King David ſaith, Pſal.63.ult.

Laſtly, there is alſo a barre in the word Iurare. For, God in His Law, ever putting it paſsively (that is) rather, thou ſhalt be ſworne, or called to an oath, than, thou ſhalt ſweare, actively: our Saviour Chriſt heere utterly condemneth the active, voluntarie ſwearing of men, of their own heads: which was in deed never permitted: howſoever the Phariſees gloſſed the matter; If the matter were true, and ſo it were by Iehova.

So that, an oath is lawfull: but with this condition limited; that the Partie doe therein habere ſe paſsivè, come to it not of his owne accord, but preſſed (as Saint Auguſtine well ſaith) vel autoritate deferentis, vel duritie non credentis, as to the lifting of a burden, as to the entring of a bond. Num.30.3.

Thou ſhalt ſweare, The Lord liveth; or (as Moſes ſaith Deut.6.13.) by God's Name. Which clauſe firſt doth limit, by what we are to ſweare: and doth exclude [1] Swearing by thoſe which are no gods, Ier.5.7. Either Idolls, forbidden in the Law, Exod.23.13. Ioſ.23.7. Either to ſweare by them alone, Amos 8. ult. Or to joine God and them together, Zeph. 1.5. [2] Or creatures, which our Saviour Chriſt forbiddeth, Mat.5.34. [1. Limitation. The Lord liveth.]

And ſure, as to ſweare by them is derogatorie to our ſelves, ſeeing thereby we make them our betters; for that every one that ſweareth, ſweareth by a greater than himſelfe, Heb.6.16. So it is highly injurious to the Majeſtie of God; ſeeing to ſweare by a creature, is to aſcribe unto it power, to ſee and know all things, and to doe vengeance on perjurie: Which in Divinitie, to thinke or ſay, is manifeſt blaſphemie.

Howbeit yet, the Fathers (well weighing that ſpeech of Saint Paul, 1 *Corinth.*15.31. where he ſpeaketh on this wiſe, By our rejoicing which we have in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord, &c. wherin his oath, is not immediatly by the Name of God, but by a ſecondarie thing, iſſuing from it:) have thought it not abſolutely neceſſarie, that in every oath, the Name of God ſhould be expreſly mentioned; but ſufficient, if reductivè. It is ruled in Divinitie, that ſuch things as preſently are reduced to God, will beare an oath. In which reſpect, to ſweare by the Holy Goſpell (conſidering our rejoicing will beare an oath; and that, in the Goſpell, our matter of rejoicing is principally contained) hath in the Primitive Church been holden lawfull. As in the Councell of Conſtantinople 6. Act. 13. Eſpecially, ſeeing there is no direct conteſtation uſed, but rather by way of oppignoration, Engaging unto God our Salvation, Faith, Rejoicing, part in His Goſpell and promiſes, the Contents, &c. if we utter an untruth.

II. The manner, or ſecond limitation.

Secondly, the forme and manner of ſwearing. Which is of three ſorts: 1. Either by conteſtation as here, *The Lord liveth. Before God, Gal.*1.2 Or *God knoweth it is ſo,*2 Cor. 11.11. God is my witneſſe, 1 *Theſ.*2.5. 2. Or by a more earneſt aſſeveration: *As ſure as God liveth, Iud.*8.19. 3. Or by deteſtation and execration, as in other places: and that againe is of two ſorts: 1. By imprecation of evill: *God be my Iudge, Gen.*31.53. God behold it and rebuke it, 1 Chro. 12.17. God doe ſo, and ſo unto me, 1 Sam. 14.44. I call God a record againſt my ſoule, 2 *Cor.*4.23. 2. Or by oppignoration or engaging of ſome good which we would not loſe: as Our rejoicing in Chriſt, 1 *Cor.*15.3. Our Salvation, God's helpe, &c.

Both are oft, and may be joined together, if it be thought meete. God is my witneſſe, that thus it is, and GOD be my Iudge, if thus it be not. Wherein, as in prayer; when all meanes faile, we acknowledge, that GOD can help, as well without, as with ſecond cauſes: So we confeſſe, that He can diſcover our truth and falſhood, and can puniſh the ſame by waies and meanes to Him knowen, though no creature in the world beſide, know the thing or can take hold of us.

Thou ſhalt ſweare: In Truth, Iudgement, Iuſtice. The three Encloſures and companions of a Chriſtian oath, are

In	Truth	againſt	Falſhood	the matter.
	Iudgement		Lightneſſe	matter and manner both.
	Iuſtice		Vnlawfulneſſe	end.

1 In truth.

*In truth: Ye ſhall not ſweare by my name falſly, Levit.*19.12. Which vice forbidden we call perjurie. Each action, we ſay, is too light ſuper debitam materiam. The due and owne matter of ſwearing, is a Truth. If it fall or light ſuper indebitam materiam (as, falſhood) it proveth a ſinne.

At all times are we bound to ſpeake truth to our neighbour, *Eph.*4.5. But, becauſe men are naturally given to have their *mouth fraught with vanitie, Pſal.*144.8. in ſolemne matters, to be ſure, to bring the truth from us, GOD is ſet before us. If then, when we confeſſe the truth, we give glorie to GOD, *Ioſ.*7.21. So if, when GOD being ſet before us, we teſtifie an untruth, it is exceeding contumelious to Him: it is to make Him one, that knoweth not all things; or that can be deceived; or that, if He know, cannot doe any harme; or (which is worſt) which will willingly be uſed to boulſter out our lyes. Pejerare, eſt dicere Deo, Deſcende de Cœlo, & aſſere mecum mendacium hoc.

1 Of Promiſe.

In an oath of Promiſe, we are to ſweare *in Truth. He that ſweareth an oath, and by it bindeth his ſoule with a bond, ſhall not violate his word, but doe according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth, Num.*30.3. Reddes autem Domino Iuramenta, Matt. 5.33. Yea, by the very light of nature Pharao willeth Ioſeph, Goe and bury thy Father, ſeeing he made thee ſweare to doe doe ſo. Againſt which oath, men are two waies faulty. 1. If at the ſwearing, they purpoſe not (as David ſaith, *Pſ.*119.106. I have ſworne and am utterly purpoſed:) Such is the nature of an oath. 2. If they then purpoſe, but after, a dammage being likely to enſue, they diſappoint their former oath, Pſa. 15.15. Touching which, we ſee, that when Ioſua and the Iſraelites had ſworne to the men of Gibeon, though that oath coſt them foure great and faire Cities, which ſhould otherwiſe have come to their poſſeſsion; they would not breake though. As contrariewiſe, Zedekias having given his oath of Allegiance to the King of Babylon (2 Chro. 36. 9.) when he regarded it not, but roſe againſt him notwithſtanding, GOD ſendeth him word, *he ſhall never proſper for ſo doing, Ezek.*17.12. And to ſay truth, there is nothing more forcible to move us herein, than to conſider GOD's owne practice: Who having ſworne for our benefit, Pſal. 110.4. though by many our unkindneſſes and hard uſages provoked, yet (as Himſelfe ſaith) will not breake His Covenant, nor alter the thing that is gone out of His lipps, Pſal. 89. 35. Which is it, that keepeth us all from periſhing; even the immutable truth of GOD's Oath, that we the rather may take it to imitation.

In an oath of Proofe: the charge ought to be, that we ſpeake nothing but that which is true in the Name of the Lord, 1 Reg. 22. 16. That we ſay the truth and lye not, our conſciences bearing us witneſſe in the Holy Ghoſt: which if we doe not, being charged by a Iudge, we beare our own iniquitie, Leviticus 5.1. 1 Of Proofe, Rom.9.1.

Againſt which oath, men are two waies faulty: [1] If either they ſwear to that, which they know to be falſe; as if a man finde, and denie it, ſwearing falſly, Levit. 6. 3. [2] Or, if they preſume to ſweare directly, in a matter, wherein themſelves are doubtfull, or have no ſure ground of. As if a man ſweare, and the thing be hid from him, Leviticus 5.4.

The breach of theſe two ſorts of oathes, in regard of the truth, is called perjurie; and both in old time and now, we greatly complaine of it in two places: 1. The one, they call Iuramenta Officinarum: When men in their ſhopps, ſo they may utter to their gaine, care not how untruly they abuſe the Name of GOD. Men, which (as the Wiſe man ſaith) reckon our life as a market, wherein they muſt be getting on every ſide, though it be by evill meanes, Sap. 15.12. Or, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 *Tim.*6. 15. That doe in practice ſeeme to hold, that gaine is godlineſſe; for all the world, as the prophane man in the Comedie, Iuramentum, rei ſervandæ non perdendæ conditum; that Oathes were made to thrive by. Full little knew thoſe men, that whatſoever is gotten by falſe ſwearing, muſt by GOD's Law, both be reſtored in the whole Summe, and adde an overplus beſide: Elſe no atonement can be made for them, Leviticus 6.5. And if that atonement be not made, that GOD by His Prophet hath denounced, that their gaine ſhall not proſper. For He will ſend the flying booke into their houſe, a Curſe appropriate to thoſe that both ſweare and ſteale,

(that is, ſteale by ſwearing) which ſhall conſume both the goods, and the very ſtone, timber and all, of the houſe it ſelfe, *Zac.*5.4.

2. The other they call Iuramenta Tribunalium, much more fearefull and heynous than the former: when a man (or rather as Saint Auguſtine calleth him, deteſtanda bellua, no man, but a deteſtable beaſt) ſhall ſo farre preſume, as in the Iudgement it ſelfe, which is GOD's (2 Chro. 19 8.) before the Magiſtrates, which are GODS (Pſal. 82. 6.) to prophane the oath of GOD, Eccleſ. 8. 2. Even, as it were, to come into GOD's owne place, and there to offer Him villanie to His face. A crime ſo grievous, as no Nation, were it never ſo barbarous, but have thought it ſeverely to be puniſhed: Some with loſſe of tongue; Some, of fingers; Some, of eares; and ſome, of life it ſelfe. And howſoever they eſcape man, the Prophet ſaith, the very Booke of the Law, which they have touched in teſtifying an untruth, ſhall have wings given it, and ſhall purſue them, and cut them off on this ſide, and on that ſide, till they and their name be rotted from the earth. It is a fearefull thing to fall into GOD's hands on this wiſe: and of no one ſinne, more dreadfull examples. For it is indeed, facere Deum mendacii conſortem. We hold it worſe in Divinitie, to lay upon GOD, that evill which we call malum culpæ, than the other which we terme malum pœnæ, which hath beene inflicted on many an innocent good man. Conſequently, a leſſe evill, to crucifie Chriſt by any bodily paine, than to draw Him into the ſocietie of Sinne, which every perjured perſon doth, as much as in him lieth. Yea, we ſay that the Name of GOD being fearefull to the devills themſelves, and bringing them to tremble, that that Partie that treadeth that moſt glorious and fearefull Name, under his feet, is in worſe eſtate, not onely than the wickedeſt of all men, the Murderers of Chriſt, but even than the devill himſelfe. And all this, that we conceive aright of In veritate.

2 In Iudgement

In Iudicio. For, thus far the Phariſees themſelves come; to thinke perjurie condemned. But, our righteouſneſſe is to exceed theirs, *Mat.*5.20. and therefore we muſt ſeeke yet farther.

This Clauſe (we ſay) ſtandeth againſt a double vanitie, [1] as well in matter, if for a vaine, light, trifling matter we ſweare; [2] as in manner alſo, if with a vaine, light, unadviſed mind or affection. For, both the matter is to be weightie, grave, and judiciall; and we are with due advice and judgement to come to the action.

Againſt which Iudiciall ſwearing, we complaine of two evill kinds: 1. The one Iuramenta Platearum, ſuch as going through the ſtreets, a man ſhall every day heare (yea, even out of the mouthes of children;) light, undiſcreet, frivolous oathes. 2. The other Iuramenta Popinarum, much worſe yet than they. When men in Tabling-houſes, at their game blaſpheme the Name of GOD moſt grievouſly. Not content to ſweare by by Him whole, diſmember Him and pluck Him in peeces, that they may have oaths enough. And that perſon of the Holy Trinitie, to whom and to His name, for taking our fleſh upon Him, and performing our redemption, even by GOD's owne charge, a ſpeciall regard is due: and that action of His, which among the reſt is moſt venerable of all others, which is His Death, Paſſion, and ſhedding His Blood.

For the Matter: The very words of the Commandement teach us, it is to be weightie; which ſpeake of GOD's Name, as a thing, to be lifted up with ſtrength, as if it were heavy: and we uſe not to remove things heavy but upon good occaſion. 1 For the Matter.

The nature of an Oath, is as of a bond; which none that is wiſe will eaſily enter: it is to be drawen from, or preſſed out of a man upon neceſſarie cauſe. Yea, it is no further good, than it is neceſſarie. For ſo is our rule, Neceſſarium, extra terminos neceſſitatis, non eſt bonum: As, purging, blood-letting; which are no longer good than needfull. The Name of GOD is as a ſtrong Caſtle, which men flye not to, but when they have need. Theſe ſhew, that for every frivolous matter, and of no importance, we are not vainly to take up GOD's Name. GOD's Name is ſaid to be holy, *Pſal.*111. 9. and holy things may not be put to common and vulgar uſes, Numbers 18. ult. And in plaine words, Leviticus 22. 32. Ye ſhall not pollute my Name. Polluting, by GOD's owne word, being nothing elſe, but to make common, Acts 10. 15. Therefore they, to be condemned, that no man urging them, upon no ſufficient ground, make it common.

For the Manner, with great regard, *Eccle.*8.1. We muſt ſweare to the LORD, with all our heart. They are highly praiſed that did ſo, 1 *Chro.*15.15. that is, When they are to take an Oath, they are to call together the powers of their ſoule, and with ſad and ſerious deliberation to undertake it; that is, to doe it in Iudicio. Therefore in the Law, GOD maketh it the entrie, Thou ſhalt feare the Lord thy GOD, and ſhalt ſweare by His Name: that is, with due feare and reverence thou ſhalt ſweare. For, as GOD's Name is holy; not for every common matter: ſo is it alſo reverend; not with an unregarding affection to be taken in our mouthes. 2 For the Manner.

To this end is it, that the Church of GOD excludeth ſuch perſons from oaths, as are preſumed, that in Iudgement they cannot, or will take them: as perſons already convict of perjurie, that they will not: Thoſe that are under yeares, that they can not. To this end alſo, there have ever been uſed Ceremonies, that by that meanes, there might be a reverend regard ſtricken into the minde of the ſwearer. Therefore the very Angels, when they ſweare, doe it not without ceremonie, but with lifting up their hands to heaven, *Dan.*12.7. *Apoc.*10.5. The Patriarchs, under the Law of Nature, not without ceremonie, but laying their hand on the thigh, therein have reference to the incarnation of the Bleſſed Seed, Gen. 24.3. and 47. 29. The People of GOD under the Law, came into the the Temple, and before the Altar (1 Reg. 8. 31.) and in the preſence of the Prieſt (Deut. 12. 8.) uncovered (Numbers 5. 18.) ſo tooke their Oath: all theſe ſerving to ſtir up their reverence, that what they did, they might doe in judgement.

Therefore, they are to be condemned, that paſſionately ſweare, Eccl. 5. 1. (which Paſsion alwaies bereaveth men, of judgement:) either in anger, as David, which he repented of, 1 Samuel 25. 33. Or in deſire, as Saul, which proved prejudiciall to him and his people, 1 Samuel 14. 28. And they, that as not of any paſsion, ſo without all manner of reſpect, to avow any idle, fond phanſie of their owne, even as it were water, powre out the Name of GOD.

And they yet more, that not onely unadviſedly ſometimes, but continually (as it were by a cuſtome) make it an Interjection of filling, for all their ſpeeches, and cannot utter one ſentence without it: yea, which therby come to a diabetica paſsio of ſwearing, that Oathes runne from them, and they feele them not.

But, above all, they that are come to that pitch, that even in contempt they ſwear, and will ſwear, and the rather becauſe they be told of it. Theſe perſons the Church of GOD hath ſo deteſted, that they are excommunicate without ſentence of any Iudge or Canon, and Chriſtian people forbidden to have any fellowſhip with them.

1. In Iuſtice.

In Iuſtitiâ. As the Matter of the Oath is to be true and weighty; and the Manner, with due advice and judgement: ſo is it to be taken alſo, to a good and juſt end. And of this there is to be had chiefe regard, for that divers times, both falſe and raſh Oathes are not hurtfull ſave to the ſwearer only. But theſe tend alway to ſome miſchiefe, beſide the ſinne of the ſwearing.

An Oath is of the nature of a Bond, & bindeth a man to do that, he ſweareth: Now, it is ſinne enough, to doe evill of it ſelfe; but to bind himſelfe to doe evill, and to make the Name of GOD the Bond, that is ſinne out of meaſure ſinfull. GOD hath ordained, that onely for truth and right, His Name ſhould be uſed: to abuſe it, to uphold falſhood, and to enforce men to evill dealing, is to change a Sanctuarie, and make it a brothel-houſe. Theſe we call Latronum Iuramenta; ſuch Oathes, as theeves and ſuch kinde of perſons take one of another: For, they doe not only joyne hand in hand (as Salomon telleth us, Proverbs 26. 5.) but doe even alſo by oath bind themſelves to doe miſchiefe. Nehemiah 6. 28. Tobiah the ſpeciall hinderer of the Temple, had many in Iuda his ſwornemen.

1 Not of things impoſsible.

That an Oath may be in juſtice, It is required that it be of a thing poſsible. No man ever required an Oath, to an Impoſsibilitie apparent: So Abraham's ſervant ſaith, Geneſis 24. What if I cannot poſsibly get any maiden to come with me? Abraham's anſwer is then he ſhall be free from the oath:

So

So that, if at the preſent it ſeeme poſsible (otherwiſe not to be ſworne to) and after, there doe emergere impoſſibile, the partie is innocent. The ſame is obſerved, touching our knowledge: for, ſo the Law ſaith, A man ſhall teſtifie that onely, which he hath ſeene, heard or knowne, and more ſhall not be required of him. So, the law of Nature, onely de quibus ſciam poteroque. Levit. 5. 1.

Now becauſe (as Ioſeph well telleth us, Geneſis 39.9.) that we only can doe that, which lawfully we can, and Chriſtian poſſibilitie implieth lawfulneſſe; that is the ſecond point of Injuſtitia, and the ſecond Caveat, Ne illicitum. Which is either primâ facie, as Saul's oath, 1. Samuel 28.10. and Acts 23 14. Or it is likewiſe emergens, as in Herod's oath, at the firſt no harm being underſtood; but after the demaund made, it was ſinne to keepe it. So ſaith Ezra in the Law, Secundùm Legem fiat, Ezra 10. 5. And Saint Paul in the Goſpell, Acts 23.3. They ſit to judge ſecundùm id quod in Lege eſt. Nor unlawfulneſſe.

Put theſe together that we be required to ſweare nothing but the truth, In veritate: that we doe it upon due advice and conſideration, In judicio: that we doe it but of thoſe things we know & can tel, and of thoſe wherto Law bindeth us: There is no more required in a Chriſtian oath. This to be remembred, becauſe diverſe which will be accounted Chriſtians, refuſe in our daies, the Oath which hath all her attendents. If the Magiſtrate, either Civill (Exodus 22. 8. Nehemia 5. 12.) or Eccleſiaſticall (Numbers 5.19.)[1] Either by a curſe, where the partie is not knowne, as Proverbs 29.24. Iudges 17.2. Leviticus 5.1. [2] Or by tendering an oath; and that againe double: [1] Either by way of adjuration, I Sam. 3. 27. I Reg. 22. 16. [2] Or by way of ſwearing them, as Exodus 22. 11. Numbers 5. 13. I Reg. 8. 31. I. Reg. 18.10. Where the party is accuſed by complaint, detection (Geneſis 3.) preſumption (Geneſis 4.) common fame (1. Corinthians 5.4.) He is bound to purge himſelfe, and ſatisfie the people, in Adulterie, Theft, or any crime. Mat 26. 63.

But what if it tend to his dammage, or to the prejudice of his liberty? Our rule is; Qui poteſt ad pœnam, poteſt ad quæ pœna conſequitur. Therefore in a matter of life or limme, we admit not the Oath: becauſe, no man can lawfully ſweare, to caſt away or maime himſelfe. But a man may directly ſweare to his loſſe, in his goods, as Geneſis 25.33. and to become a priſoner, as (1. Reg. 1.43.) Shemei did. Therfore, ſweare, and be ſworn in thoſe cauſes and queſtions, whereto Law doth bind to give anſwere, though Fine and Commitment doe enſue upon them.

This queſtion remaineth, If a man have ſworne without thoſe, what he is to doe? when an oath binds, when it doth not?

We

We hold: No man is ſo ſtarightened between two ſinnes, but without committing a third, he may get forth. Herod thought he could not; and therfore, being in a ſtraight, betwixt murder and perjurie, thought he could have no iſſue, but by putting Saint Iohn Baptiſt to death. It was not ſo: for, having ſworne, and his oath proving unlawfull, if he had repented him of his unadviſedneſſe in ſwearing, and gone no further, he had had his iſſue, without any new offence.

1. If then We have ſworne to be ſimply evill, the rule is, Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, vinculum iniquitatis.
2. If it binder a greater or higher good, the rule is; Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, impedimentum pietatis.
3. If it be in things indifferent, as we terme them, abſque grano ſalis; it is a raſh oath; to be repented, not to be executed.
4. If the oath be ſimply made; yet (as we ſay) it doth ſubjacere Civili intellectui: ſo as GOD's oath doth, Ieremia 18.8. and therefore thoſe conditions may exclude the event, and the Oath remaine good.
5. If in regard of the Manner, it be extorted from us, the rule is, Injuſta vincula rumpit Iuſtitia.
6. If raſhly, Penitenda promiſſio, non perficienda præſumptio.
7. If to any man, for his benefit, or for favour to him, if that partie releaſe it, it bindeth not.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED AT WHITEHALL,

upon the Sunday after EASTER, being March XXX. An. Dom. MDC.

IOHN CHAP. XX. VER. XXIII.

Quorum remiseritis peccata, remittuntur eis: Et quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt.

VVhose-soever sinnes yee remit, they are remitted unto them: and vvhose-soever yee retaine, they are retained.

The Conclusion of the Gospell for the Sunday.

THEY be the words of our SAVIOVR CHRIST to His Apostles. A part of the first words, which He spake to them at His Epiphanie, or first apparition after He arose from the dead. And they containe a Commission by Him granted to the Apostles, which is the summe or contents of this Verse.

Which Commission, is His first largesse after His rising againe. For, at His first appearing to them, it pleased Him not to come empty, but with a blessing, and to bestow on them, and on the world by them, as the first fruits of His resurrection, this Commission; a part of that Commission, which the sinfull world most of all stood in need of for remission of sinnes.

The Summarie proceeding in it.

To the granting whereof, He proceedeth not without ſome ſolemnitie or circumſtance, well worthy to be remembred.

For firſt, Verſe 21. He ſaith, As my father ſent me, ſo ſend I you: which is their authorizing, or giving them their Credence.

Secondly, Verſe 22. He doth breathe upon them, and withall inſpireth them with the Holy Ghoſt: which is their enabling or furniſhing thereto.

And having ſo authorized and enabled them, now in this Verſe here, He giveth them their Commiſſion, and thereby doth perfectly inaugurate them, into this part of their Office.

A Commiſſion is nothing elſe, but the imparting of a power which before they had not. Firſt therfore, He imparteth to them a power, a power over ſinnes; over ſinnes, either for the remitting, or the retaining of them, as the perſons ſhall be qualified.

And after, to this power He addeth a promiſe (as the Lawyers terme it) of Ratihabition, that He will ratifie and make it good, that His power ſhall accompanie this power, and the lawfull uſe of it in His Church for ever.

The dependance in reſpect of the time, Why not before.

And very agreeably is this power now beſtowed by Him upon His reſurrection. Not ſo conveniently before His death; becauſe till then, He had not made His ſoule an offering for ſinne, nor till then, He had not ſhed His bloud, without which there is no remiſsion of ſinnes. Therefore it was promiſed before, but not given till now; becauſe it was convenient, there ſhould be ſolutio, before there were abſolutio. Not before He was riſen, then.

Eſay 53. 10. Heb. 9. 22. Matt. 16. 19. 18, 18.

Why now.

And againe, no longer than till He was riſen, not till He was aſcended. Firſt, to ſhew that the remiſsion of ſinnes is the undivided and immediate effect of His death. Secondly, to ſhew how much the world needed it, for which cauſe He would not with-hold it, no not ſo much as one day (for, this was done in the very day of His reſurrection.) Thirdly, but eſpecially, to ſet forth His great love and tender care over us, in this, that as ſoone as He had accompliſhed His owne reſurrection, even preſently upon it, He ſets in hand with ours, and beginneth the firſt part of it, the very firſt day of His riſing.

The Scripture maketh mention of a firſt and ſecond death, and from them two, of a firſt and ſecond reſurrection. Both, expreſly ſet downe in one verſe; Happie is he that hath his part in the firſt reſurrection; for over ſuch the Second death hath no power. Vnderſtanding by the firſt, the death of the ſoule by ſinne, and the riſing thence to the life of grace: by the ſecond, the death of the body by corruption, and the riſing thence to the life of glorie.

Apoc. 20. 6.

CHRIST truly is the Saviour of the whole man, both ſoule and body, from the firſt and ſecond death.

But beginneth firſt with the firſt, that is, with ſinne, the death of the ſoule and the riſing from it. So is the method of Divinitie preſcribed by Himſelfe. Firſt, to cleanſe that which is within (the ſoule) then, that which is without without (the body.) And ſo is the methode of Phyſicke, firſt to cure the cauſe, and then the diſeaſe. Now the cauſe (or as the Apoſtle calleth it) the ſting of death is ſinne. Therefore firſt to remove ſinne, and then death afterwards. For, the cure of ſinne being performed, the other will follow of his owne accord. As Saint Iohn telleth us, He that hath his part in the firſt reſurrection, ſhall not faile of it in the ſecond. The firſt reſurrection then from ſinne, is it which our Saviour Chriſt here goeth about, whereto there is no leſſe power required than a divine power. For looke what power is neceſſarie to raiſe the dead bodie out of the duſt; the very ſame every way, is requiſite to raiſe the dead ſoule out of ſinne. For which cauſe, the Remiſſion of ſinnes is an Article of faith, no leſſe than the Reſurrection of the body. For, in very deed, a reſurrection it is, and ſo it is termed, no leſſe than that. 1 Cor 15.56.

Mat. 23. 16.

To the ſervice and miniſterie of which divine worke, a Commiſſion is here granted to the Apoſtles. And firſt, they have here their ſending from GOD the Father; their inſpiring from GOD the Holy Ghoſt; their commiſſion from GOD the Sonne: that being thus ſent from the Father, by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, in the perſon of Chriſt, they may performe the Office, or (as the Apoſtle calleth it) the Embaſſage of reconciling ſinners unto GOD, to which they are appointed. And ſo much for the Summe and dependence of this Scripture. 2 Cor. 5. 19.

The points of ſpeciall obſervation are three: 1. Firſt, the Power that is granted. 2. The Matter or Subject, whereon the power is to be exerciſed. 3. The Promiſe of ratifying the exerciſe of that power. The Diviſion.

The Power it ſelfe: in which commeth firſt to be entreated, 1. What is meant by remitting and retaining. 2. After in generall, that there is a power to remit and retaine: but firſt to remit, and after to retaine. 3. Then in particular, of that power as it is ſet downe in both words, Remiſeritis and Remittuntur. I.

The Matter or ſubject: which is alſo two waies to be conſidered, either as it is ſinne in it ſelfe, which is the matter at large; or as it is the ſin of ſome perſons (for it is not Quæ peccata, but Quorum) which is the immediate or proper matter of this power. II.

The Ratifying or promiſe of concurrence, to aſſure the conſcience of the ſinner of the certainety and efficacie of the Churches act, that what the Apoſtles doe in the perſon of Chriſt, by the inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt, He that ſent them, will certainely make good and effectuall from heaven. And of theſe three in order. III.

I. The termes how to be underſtood.

THe termes of remitting and retaining may be taken many waies. To the end then, that we may the more cleerely conceive that which ſhall be ſaid, it will be expedient, that firſt of all we underſtand, in what ſenſe eſpecially, and according to what reſemblance, thoſe termes are to be taken.

The originall from CHRISTS Commiſſion.

This may we beſt doe out of our Saviour Chriſts owne Commiſſion. For, this of the Apoſtles is nothing elſe but a branch out of His, which He Himſelfe (as man) had here upon earth. For as man; He Himſelfe was ſent, and was anointed with the Spirit, and proceeded by Commiſſion.

Luc.4.18. Eſay 61.1.

His Commiſſion we finde Luk. 4. which He Himſelfe read in the Synagogue at Nazareth at His firſt entering on it: Which is originally recorded Eſay 61. Wherein, among others, this power is one: to preach ἄφεσιν (that is) Remiſſion, as it is turned here; or deliverance, as it is turned there: but the word is one in both places; and that reſpectively to captives: and (as it followeth in that place of Eſay) to them that are bound, the opening of the priſon.

Sinne, an impriſonment

Which very terme (of Captives or ſuch as are in priſon) doth open unto us, with what reference or reſpect, this terme of remitting, or letting goe, is to be conceived. And as it was in His, ſo muſt it be underſtood here in this, ſince this is but derived from that of CHRISTS.

The minde of the Holy Ghoſt then, as in other places by diverſe other reſemblances, ſo in this here, is to compare the ſinners caſe to the eſtate of a perſon impriſoned. And indeed, who ſo well weigheth the place, it cannot well be taken otherwiſe. For, not onely here, but elſewhere (where this Power is expreſſed) it ſeemeth ever, to be with refe-

Mat.16.19. rence (as it were) to parties committed. The very terme of the Keyes (wherein it was promiſed, and wherein it is moſt uſually delivered;) the termes of opening and ſhutting, ſeeme to have relation (as it were) to

Mat.18.18. the priſon-gate. The termes of binding and looſing, (as it were) to the fetters or bands. And theſe here of letting forth, or ſtill detaining (all and every of them) ſeeme to have an evident relation, to a priſoners eſtate; as if ſinne were a priſon, and the caſe of ſinners, like theirs that are ſhut up.

Verily, as ſinne at the firſt in committing, ſeemeth ſweete; that men

Iob 20.12. cannot bee got to ſpit it out (ſaith Iob) but hold it cloſe under their tongues, till they have ſwallowed it downe; but after it is committed,

Iet.2.19. the ſinner findeth then, that it is Malum & amarum dereliquiſſe Dominum (ſaith the Prophet;) that it turneth to a bitter and cholerike matter, of which which there breedeth a worme which never leaveth gnawing: Even ſo doth ſinne at the firſt alſo ſeeme a matter of libertie. For, a libertie it is, not to bee reſtrained; not to be (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) committed to Moſes, to be kept and ſhut up under the Law; Not to be forbidden any fruit (under which very terme, the ſerpent did perſwade it:) But when it was done and paſt, then ſhall a man feele a pinching or ſtreightneſſe in his ſoule, termed by the Apoſtle στενοχωρία, which properly ſignifieth the paine which they ſuffer, that are ſhut up in a narrow roome or ſome place of little eaſe. Eſay 66. ult. Gal. 3. 23. Gen. 3. 2. Rom. 2. 9.

So ſpeaketh Salomon of ſinne. His owne wickedneſſe ſhall attach the ſinner, and he ſhall be holden, or pinioned, with the cords of his own ſin. So S. Peter, to Simon Magus: I perceive, thou art (to expreſſe the former reſemblance) in the gall of bitterneſſe (and to expreſſe the latter) in the bond of iniquitie. And S. Paul: that ſinners, in ſtead of having Moſes to their keeper, become the Devils captives, and are of him holden and taken at his will and pleaſure. Pro. 5. 22. Act. 8. 13. 2 Tim. 2. ult.

Truly ſome have felt as much as I ſpake of, and have in pregnant termes complained of it. I am ſo faſt in priſon (ſaith David) that I cannot get out. And, bring my ſoule out of priſon and I will praiſe thee. And I will runne the way of thy commandements, when thou ſhalt ſet my heart at libertie. Pſalm. 88. 8. 142. ult. 119. 32.

Peradventure all feele not this preſently as ſoone as they have ſinned; nor (it may be) a good while after. So GOD told Cain at the beginning: his ſinne ſhould lye at the doore; that is, while he kept within, he ſhould not be troubled with it perhaps; but at his comming forth, it ſhould certainly attach him. But ſaith Moſes, let every one that ſinneth be ſure, that his ſin at laſt will find him out: For he ſhall no ſooner be under arreſt of any trouble, ſickneſſe, croſſe, or calamitie, but he ſhall be ſhut into his στενοχωρία, and feele it preſently. As the brethren of Ioſeph, for very many yeares, after they had of envie and without all pitie ſold him to bee a bondſervant, ſeemed at libertie: No ſooner fell they into danger and diſpleaſure, in a ſtrange country, but it came to mind and they were ſerved with it ſtraight way. Even as in Iob, it is ſayd: The ſinnes of our youth ſhall let us goe up and downe quietly all our youth time, but when we come to years we ſhall feele them pinch us in our very bones. Gen. 4. 7. Num. 32. 23. Gen. 42. 21. Iob 20. 11.

Yea though many, even then when they feele this ſtreightneſſe in their ſoule, make meanes to put it away for the time, and ſeeme merry and light enough (as many times, priſoners be in the goale, till the very day of the Aſsizes come:) yet when it is come to that, that Iudex eſt prę foribus, when the terror of death commeth, and with it a fearefull expectation of judgement, then certainely, then without all doubt, the anguiſh S. Paul ſpeaketh of, ſhall be upon every ſoule of every one that doth evill. Then, there is no man never ſo wicked, that with his good will would die in his ſins, but would have them releaſed while he is yet in viâ, yet in the way. Then we ſeek help at ſuch ſcriptures as this, & call for the perſons to whom this Commiſſion belongeth. And thoſe, whom wee have gone by ſeven yeares together, and never ſaid word to about it, then wee are content to ſpeak Iames 5. 9. Heb. 10. 27. Ioh. 8. 27. Matt. 5. 25.

with, when the counſell and direction they give, we are ſcarce able to receive, and much leſſe to put in practice. As if, all our life time we beleeved the permiſsion of ſinnes; as if that were the article of our faith all our life long, and the article of Remiſsion of ſinnes, never till the point of death.

And this may ſerve, ſhortly to ſet forth unto us this priſon of the ſoule: which if any conceive not, by that which hath been ſayd, I muſt ſay with the Prophet to them; that ſure, there is ſnch a thing and that In noviſsimo intelliget is hæc planè, at their latter end (I wiſh, before; but ſure then) they ſhall very plainely underſtand, that ſuch a thing there is.

Ier. 30. ult.

But now, they that have either felt or beleeve, that ſuch an impriſonment there is, will be glad to heare, that there is a Power, whereby they may be enlarged: And this very tidings in generall, that there is a Remittuntur, that men may have deliverance from theſe fetters, this priſon, this ſtreightneſſe or anguiſh of the ſoule, muſt needs bee very acceptable and welcome tidings to them. For which very point (even that there is a Remittuntur) what thanks are wee eternally bound to render unto GOD? For I tell you, Nuſquam Angelos apprehendit, the Angels never found the like. For, the Angels, which kept not their firſt eſtate, hath Hee reſerved in everlaſting chaines of darkeneſſe, to the judgement of the great Day. Their chaines, everlaſting; their impriſonment, perpetuall: No Commiſsion to be ſued for them: No Remittuntur eis. But with man it is not ſo. To him, deliverance; to him, looſing of the chaines; to him, opening of the priſon is promiſed. For his ſinnes, a Commiſsion is granted out, his ſinnes have a Remittuntur. This, is a high and ſpeciall priviledge of our nature, to be had by us in an everlaſting thankfull remembrance. So that no man needeth now, abruptly to ſay with thoſe in Ieremie, Deſperavimus, wee are deſperate, now, wee never ſhall bee forgiven, let us now doe what we liſt. No: but (as it is ſaid in Ezra) Though wee have grievouſly ſinned, yet there is hope for all that: and (as in Ezekiel) that we may ſo uſe the matter, that Peccata noſtra non erunt nobis in ſcandalum, Our ſinnes ſhall not be our deſtruction. Which very point is both an eſpeciall ſtay of our hope, and a principall meanes of manifeſting unto us the great goodneſſe of GOD.

Good tidings that there is Remiſsion.

Heb. 2. 16.

Iude 6.

Ier. 18. 12.

Ezra 10. 2.

Ezek. 18. 30.

Which goodneſſe of GOD as it doth ſhew forth it ſelfe in this firſt (that, ſuch a power there is:) ſo doth it ſecondly and no leſſe, in the order that (where both acts are mentioned, as well retaining, as remitting) He placeth the power of remitting firſt. Which very ſorting of them in that order, doth plainely ſhew unto us, whereunto GOD of His goodneſſe is moſt inclinable; and which of them it is, that is the principall in His intent. That to remit, is more proper to Him, and that He is more ready to it, and that it is firſt, firſt in His purpoſe, firſt in His grant: and that to the other Hee commeth but ſecundarily, but by occaſion, when the former cannot take place. For, of remitting ſinne, He taketh the ground from Himſelfe, and not from any other; and therefore, fore, that more naturally: but of retaining it, the cauſe is miniſtred from us, even from our hardneſſe, and heart that cannot repent. And as Himſelfe doth uſe this power, ſo giveth He it to them, to edification and not to deſtruction. I ſay, not firſt or principally to deſtruction; nor of any, ſave onely of the wilfull impenitent ſinner. Thus much of the remitting and retaining in generall, and of their place and order. Now of the Power it ſelfe in particular. 2 Cor. 10. 8.

Remiſsion firſt, before Retention.

Of this Power there is here in my Text twice mention; 1 One in Remiſeritis, and 2 againe in Remittuntur. Which two words doe plainely lead us to two Acts; of which two acts, by good conſequence are inferred two Powers. Which two Powers, though they be concurrent to one end, yet are they diſtinct in themſelves. Diſtinct, in perſon; for, Remiſeritis is the ſecond perſon, and meant of the Apoſtles; and Remittuntur is the third perſon, and meant of GOD Himſelfe. And as diſtinct in perſon, ſo diſtinct in place: for, the one is exerciſed in earth, which is the Apoſtles; the other in heaven, which is GODS. Quicquid ſolveritis in terrâ, ſolutum erit in Cælo.

Of Remiſſion in particular The Power of it two-fold.

1 Remiſeritis. 2 Remittuntur. Mat. 16. 19.

Now where two powers are, and one of them in GOD, the other, muſt needs be ſubordinate and derived from it. For, Duo principia, two beginnings there are not. Therfore none other from whence it can proceed, but from GOD and from the power in Him alone.

Of theſe two then. Remittuntur, though latter in place, yet indeed is by nature and order firſt, and from it doth proceed the other of Remiſeritis; Which howſoever in the ſentence it ſtand before it, yet without all queſtion it is derived from it, and after it. So that, thus the caſe ſtands betweene them: Remittuntur, which is GODS power, is the primitive or originall; Remiſeritis, which is the Apoſtles power, is meerely derived. That in GOD, Soveraigne: This in the Apoſtles, Dependent. In Him onely Abſolute: in them, Delegate. In Him Imperiall; In them, Miniſteriall.

1 Remittuntur (Gods power) firſt in order.

Eſay 43. 25.

The Power of remitting ſinne is originally in GOD, and in GOD alone. And in CHRIST our SAVIOVR, by meanes of the union of the God-head and Manhood into one perſon: By vertue whereof, the Sonne of Man hath power to forgive ſinnes upon earth. Mar. 2. 10.

This power being thus ſolely inveſted in GOD, He might without wrong to any, have retained and kept to Himſelfe, and without meanes of Word or Sacrament, and without Miniſters, eyther Apoſtles or others, have exerciſed immediately by Himſelfe from heaven.

But wee ſhould then have ſaid of the remiſsion of ſinnes (ſaith Saint Paul) Who ſhall goe up to heaven for it, and fetch it thence? For which cauſe (ſaith he) the righteouſneſſe of faith ſpeaketh thus, ſay not ſo in thy heart. The word ſhall bee neere thee in thy mouth, and in thy heart, and this is the word of faith which we preach. Rom. 10. 6.

Partly this, that there ſhould be no ſuch difficulty to ſhake our faith, as once to imagine to fetch CHRIST from Heaven for the remiſsion of our ſinnes.

Partly alſo, becauſe CHRIST (to whom alone this Commiſsion was originally granted) having ordained Himſelfe a body, would worke by bodily things, and having taken the nature of man upon Him, would honour the nature He had ſo taken. For theſe cauſes that which was His, and His alone, He vouchſafed to impart; and out of His commiſsion, to grant a Commiſsion, and thereby to aſſociate them to Himſelfe (it is His owne word by the Prophet) and to make them συνέργους, that is, Co-operatores, workers together with Him (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) to the work of ſalvation, both of themſelves and of others.

2 Remiſeritis. Gods power derived to men, and not to Angels.

From GOD, then it is derived: From GOD and to men.

To men, and not to Angels. And this I take to bee a ſecond prerogative of our nature. That an Angell muſt give order to Cornelius, to ſend to Ioppe for one Simeon, to ſpeake words to him, by which he and his houſhold ſhould bee ſaved; but the Angell muſt not be the doer of it. That not to Angels, but to men, is committed this Office or Embaſſage of reconciliation. And that which is yet more, To ſinfull men, for ſo is the truth, and ſo themſelves confeſſe it. S. Peter: Goe, from me LORD, for I am a ſinfull man. S. Iames: In many things wee offend all (putting himſelfe in the number:) And (leſt wee ſhould thinke it to bee but their modeſty) Saint Iohn ſpeaketh plainly: If we ſay we have no ſin (what then? not, we are proud, and there is no humilitie in us, but) we are lyers and there is no truth in us. And this is that, which is wonderfull in this point, that S. Paul, who confeſſeth himſelfe a ſinner and a chiefe ſinner, Quorum primus ego; The ſame concerning another ſinner (the inceſtuous Corinthian) I forgive it him (ſaith he) ἐν προσώπῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, in the perſon of CHRIST.

To ſinfull men.

1 Tim. 1. 15.

2 Cor. 2. 10.

To the Apoſtles.

Now if we aske, to what men? the Text is plaine. They to whom CHRIST ſaid this Remiſeritis, were the Apoſtles.

In the Apoſtles (that we may come nearer yet) we find three capacities as we may terme them: 1. As Chriſtians in generall. 2. As Preachers, Prieſts, or Miniſters, more ſpeciall. 3. As thoſe Twelve perſons, whom in ſtrict proprietie of ſpeech we terme the Apoſtles.

Some things, that CHRIST ſpake to them, He ſpake to them as repreſenting the whole Company of CHRISTIANS: as His vigilate.

Mar. 13. ult.

Some things, to them, not as Chriſtians, but as Preachers or Prieſts: as His Ite prædicate Evangelium, and His Hoc facite; which no man thinketh, all Chriſtians may doe.

Matt. 28. 18. Luc. 22. 19.

And ſome things, to themſelves perſonally: as that He had appointed them Witneſſes of His miracles and Reſurrection, which cannot be applied but to them, and them in perſon. It remaineth, we enquire, in which of theſe three Capacities, CHRIST imparteth to them this Commiſſion.

Act. 1. 8.

Not

Not as to Apoſtles properly. That is, this was no perſonall priviledge to be in them, and to die with them, that they ſhould onely execute it for a time, and none ever after them. GOD forbid, we ſhould ſo thinke it. For, this power being more than needfull for the world (as in the beginning it was ſaid) it was not to be either perſonall, or for a time. Then thoſe perſons dying, and thoſe times determining, they in the ages following (as we now in this) that ſhould light into this priſon or captivity of ſinne, how could they or we receive any benefit by it? Of Nature, it is ſaid by the heathen Philoſopher, that it doth neither Abundare in ſuperfluis, nor deficere in neceſſariis. GOD forbid, but we ſhould aſcribe as much to GOD at the leaſt; that neither He would ordaine a power ſuperfluous or more than needed, or elſe, it being needfull, would appropriate it unto one age, and leave all other deſtitute of it; and not rather as all Writers both new and old take it, continue it ſucceſsively to the worlds end.

And as not proper to the Apoſtles perſons, ſo neither common to all Chriſtians in generall, nor in the perſons of all Chriſtians conveighed to them. Which thing, the very circumſtances of the Text doe evict. For He ſent them firſt, and after inſpired them; and after both theſe, gave them this commiſsion. Now all Chriſtians are not ſo ſent, nor are all Chriſtians inſpired with the grace or gift of the Spirit, that they were here. Conſequently, it was not intended to the whole ſocietie of Chriſtians. Yea I adde, that foraſmuch as theſe two, both theſe two, muſt goe before it; 1 Miſsio, and 2 Inſpiratio: that though GOD inſpire ſome Laymen, if I may have leave ſo to terme them, with very ſpeciall graces of knowledge to this end; yet inaſmuch as they have not the former of ſending, it agreeth not to them, neither may they exerciſe it, untill they be ſent, that is, untill they have their calling thereunto. Ver. 21. Ver. 22.

It being then neither perſonall nor peculiar to them as Apoſtles, nor againe common to all as Chriſtians, it muſt needs be committed to them as Miniſters, Prieſts or Preachers; and conſequently to thoſe, that in that Office and function doe ſucceed them, to whom, and by whom, this Commiſsion is ſtill continued. Neither are they, that are ordained or inſtituted to that calling, ordained or inſtituted by any other words or verſe, than this. Yet not ſo, that abſolutely without them, GOD cannot beſtow it, on whom or when Him pleaſeth; or that He is bound to this meanes onely, and cannot worke without it. For, Gratia Dei non alligatur mediis, The grace of GOD is not bound but free, and can worke without meanes either of Word or Sacrament; and as without meanes, ſo without Miniſters, how and when to Him ſeemeth good. But ſpeaking of that which is proper and ordinarie, in the courſe by Him eſtabliſhed, this is an eccleſiaſticall Act, committed, as the reſidue of the miniſterie of reconciliation, to eccleſiaſticall perſons. And if at any time He vouchſafe To them, as Miniſters.

vouchſafe it by others that are not ſuch, they be in that caſe, Miniſtri neceſsitatis, non Officii: in caſe of neceſsitie, Miniſters; but by Office, not ſo.

Of Gods ſoveragine power ſtill.

Now, as by committing this power, GOD doth not deprive or bereave Himſelfe of it: For there is a Remittuntur ſtill, and that chiefe, ſoveraigne, and abſolute: ſo on the other ſide, where GOD proceedeth by the Churches act, as ordinarily He doth, it being His owne ordinance; there, whoſoever will be partaker of the Churches act, muſt be partaker of it by the Apoſtles meanes; there, doth Remiſerîtis concurre in his order and place, and there runneth ſtill a correſpondence betweene both.

Zech.13.7. 1 Cor.3.7.

There, doth GOD aſſociate His Miniſters, and maketh them Workers together with Him. There, have they their parts in this worke, and cannot be excluded: no more in this, than in the other acts and parts of their function. And to exclude them, is (after a ſort) to wring the keyes out of their hands, to whom CHRIST hath given them; is, to cancell and make voyd this clauſe of Remiſerîtis, as if it were no part of the ſentence; To account of all this ſolemne ſending, and inſpiring, as if it were an idle and fruitleſſe ceremonie: which if it may not be admitted, then ſure it is, they have their part and concurrence in this worke, as in the reſt of the miniſterie of reconciliation.

The act of the Church ordinarie.

Neither is this a new or ſtrange thing; from the beginning, it was ſo. Vnder the law of Nature (ſaith Elihu in Iob, ſpeaking of one for his ſinnes in GODS priſon,) If there be with him an Embaſſador, Commiſsioner, or Interpreter (not any whoſoever, but) one among a thouſand, to ſhew unto Him his righteouſneſſe, Then ſhall GOD have mercie upon him and ſay, Let him goe, for I have received a propitiation.

Iob 33.25.

Mal.2.5. Levit.4.5,6.

Vnder Moſes, it is certaine, the Covenant of life and peace was made with Levi, and at the ſacrifices for ſinne, he was ever a partie.

Vnder the Prophets. It pleaſed GOD to uſe this concurrence towards David himſelfe: Nathan the Prophet ſaying unto him, Tranſtulit Dominus peccatum tuum.

The neceſſity of the Prieſt therein.

Which courſe ſo eſtabliſhed by GOD, till CHRIST ſhould come; (for neither covenant nor Prieſt-hood was to endure any longer;) was by CHRIST re-eſtabliſhed anew in the Church, in that calling, to whom He hath committed the Word of reconciliation. Neither are wee (the ordinance of GOD thus ſtanding) to rend off one part of the ſentence. There are here expreſſed three perſons: 1 The perſon of the ſinner, in Quorum; 2 of GOD, in Remittuntur; 3 of the Prieſt in Remiſerîtis. Three are expreſſed; and where three are expreſſed, three are required; and where three are required, two are not enough Homil 49. de 50.

It is Saint Auguſtine that thus ſpeaketh of this Eccleſiaſticall act in his time: Nemo ſibi dicat, occultè ago pœnitentiam, apud Deum ago. Novit Deus qui mihi ignoſcit, quia in corde ago. Ergo ſine cauſâ dictum eſt, Quæ ſolveritis in terrâ, ſoluta erunt in Cœlo, Ergo ſine cauſâ, Claves datæ ſunt Eccleſiæ ſtæ Dei, Fruſtramus Evangelium Dei: Fruſtramus verba Chriſti.

Which may ſuffice for the diſtinguiſhing of theſe two Powers, the deriving of the one from whom, and to whom, the continuance and concurrence of them.

Wherein this power conſiſts.

The Remiſſion of ſinnes, as it is from GOD onely, ſo is it by the death and bloud-ſhedding of CHRIST alone: but, for the applying of this unto us, there are diverſe meanes eſtabliſhed. There is Multiformis gratia (ſaith Saint Peter) varietie of graces, whereof we are made the diſpoſers. Now, all and every of theſe meanes working to the remiſſion of ſinnes (which is the firſt and greateſt benefit, our SAVIOVR CHRIST hath obtained for us,) it reſteth that we further enquire, what that meanes is in particular, which is here imparted.

1 Pet. 4.10.

Sins remitted.

For ſure it is, that beſides this, there are diverſe acts inſtituted by God, and executed by us, which all tend to the remiſſion of ſinnes.

1 By Baptiſme.

1. In the inſtitution of Baptiſme, there is a power to that end. Be baptized every one of you for the remiſſion of ſinnes (ſaith Saint Peter to three thouſand at once.) Ariſe and bee baptized (ſaith Ananias to Paul) and waſh away thy ſinnes. And to be ſhort: I beleeve one baptiſme for the remiſſion of ſinnes (ſaith the Nicene Creed.)

Act. 2. 38.

Act. 22. 26.

2 By the Euchariſt.

2. Againe there is alſo another power for the Remiſſion of ſinnes, in the inſtitution of the holy Euchariſt. The words are exceeding plaine: This is my bloud of the new Teſtament, for the Remiſſion of ſinnes.

Matt. 26. 28.

3 By Preaching.

3. Beſides, in the word it ſelfe, there is a like power ordained. Now are you cleane, ſaith CHRIST (no doubt from their ſinnes) propter Sermonem hunc. And the very Name giveth as much, that it is entitled, The word of reconciliation.

Ioh. 15. 3.
2 Cor. 5. 19.

4 By Prayer.

4. Further, there is to the ſame effect, a power in Prayer, and that in the Prieſts prayer. Call for the Prieſts (ſaith the Apoſtle) and let them pray for the ſicke perſon, and if he have committed ſinne, it ſhall be forgiven him.

Iames 5. 14.

All and every of theſe, are acts for the remiſſion of ſinnes; and in all and every of theſe, is the perſon of the Miniſter required, and they cannot be diſpatched without him.

None of theſe meant here.

But the ceremonies and circumſtances that here I finde uſed, prevaile with me to thinke, that there is ſomewhat here imparted to them, that was not before. For, it carrieth no likelyhood, that our SAVIOVR beſtowing on them nothing here, but that which before He had, would uſe ſo much ſolemnitie, ſo diverſe and new circumſtances, no new or diverſe grace being here communicated.

Ioh. 4. 1.

1. Now, for Baptiſme, it appeareth plainly; that the Apoſtles baptized in a manner from the beginning; which I make no queſtion, they did not without a Commiſſion.

Luc. 22. 19.

2. And for the power of adminiſtring the holy Sacrament, it was granted expreſly to them by Hoc facite, before His paſsion.

3 The

3. The like may wee ſay of the power of Preaching, which was given them long before; even when He ſent them, and commanded them to preach the kingdome of GOD, which was done, before this power was promiſed, whichhere is beſtowed; as will evidently appeare, the one being given, Matt. 10. the other after promiſed, Matt. 16.

Mat.10.7. Luk.9.2.

4. Neithet can it be meant of prayer. There is no partition in prayer. Prayers and ſupplications are to be made for all men. But here is a plaine partition. There is a Quorum whoſe ſinnes are remitted, and another Quorum whoſe ſinnes are retained.

1 Tim.2.2.

But the power of Abſolution.

Seeing then, this new ceremonie and ſolemne manner of proceeding in this, are able to perſwade any, it was ſome new power that here was conferred, and not thoſe which before had beene (though there be, that apply this, others to ſome one, and others to all of them:) I take it to be a power diſtinct from the former, and (not to hold you long) to be the accompliſhment of the promiſe made, Matt. 16. 19. of the power of the Keyes, which here in this place and in theſe words is fulfilled; and have therein for me the joynt conſent of the Fathers. Which being a different power in it ſelfe, is that, which we call the Act or Benefit of Abſolution; in which (as in the reſt) there is in the due time and place of it, an uſe for the remiſſion of ſinnes. Whereunto our SAVIOVR CHRIST, by His ſending them, doth inſtitute them, and give them the key of authoritie: And by breathing on them and inſpiring them, doth enable them, and give them the key of knowledge, to doe it well, and having beſtowed both theſe upon them as the Stewards of His houſe, doth laſt of all deliver them their Commiſſion to doe it, having ſo enabled them and authorized them as before. So much for the power.

Verſe 21. Ver.22.

II. Quorum peccata.

Every power is not every where to be exerciſed, nor upon every matter; but each power hath his proper ſubject.

The ſubject of this Power.

The matter or ſubject, whereon this power is to be exerciſed, is ſinne. To be conſidered firſt in it ſelfe, as the matter at large. And then, as qualified with the perſon: (for it is quorum, and not quæ peccata;) As the neerer and more proper ſubject.

Peccata, at large.

Firſt then, the ſubject are ſinnes. Sinnes in themſelves, no waies reſtrained or limited. No ſinnes at all, either for number or greatneſſe being excepted.

Without exception of number. Mat.18.22.

Not for number. For Chriſt teaching us, That we our ſelves ſhould forgive untill ſeventy times ſeven times, doth thereby after a ſort give us to underſtand, that He will not ſticke with us for the like number in ours. For GOD forbid, we ſhould imagine, He taught us to be more mercifull or of greater perfection than He will be Himſelfe. That number amounteth to ten Iubilees of pardon: For ſo many ſinnes, may we then hope hope for pardon at His hands. If thoſe be not enough, wee have example of one, whoſe ſinnes were more in number than the haires of his head; and of another, whoſe were more than the ſands of the Sea: both which give us hope; for they both obtained pardon. Pſal. 40. 12. Orat. Manaſ.

But that which followeth in the place of Matthew, maketh both parts plaine. For there, a debt is remitted, not onely of five hundred (as Luc. 7.) but of ten thouſand, and thoſe (not as in Luke, pence, but) talents: A great and huge ſumme, yet for that hath He remiſsion in ſtore. So that, no man ſhall need to ſay, his ſinne is greater than can be remitted, as Cain did, ſince that aſſertion is convinced to be erroneous: For, his ſinne may be forgiven, that ſlew Abel, though his brother, ſeing S. Peter ſaith, that theirs was not greater than might be forgiven, that ſlew the Sonne of God. For no man but will conceive, that the betraying and murdering IESVS CHRIST, was farre a more heynous offence than that of Abels killing: But, that might (ſaith Saint Peter;) therefore, this much more may be forgiven. And to end this point, whereas it is affirmed, and that moſt truly, by the Apoſtle, that the Weakeneſſe of GOD is ſtronger than men, if there were any ſinne greater than could be remitted, the Weakeneſſe of man (for of that, commeth ſin) ſhould be ſtronger than GOD; which neither Religion nor reaſon will admit. In reſpect of the ſinne it ſelfe, therefore there is no exception.

Or greatneſs. Mat. 18. 24.

Gen. 4. 13.
Act. 31. 15. 19.
1 Cor. 1. 25.

But becauſe it is not quæ peccata but quorum, it ſheweth, that in the act of remiſsion, we are to reſpect, not the ſinne ſo much as the perſon. So that, though all ſinnes may be remitted, yet not to all perſons, but to a quorum, as we ſee. For, there is another quorum, whoſe ſinnes are retained: ſo that, this limiteth the former, and ſheweth indeed, what is the Materia propinqua, or immediate ſubject of this power committed.

Quorũ, The proper immediat Subject.

Our Saviour Chriſt Himſelfe, at the reading of His Commiſsion (whereof this is a branch) in effect expreſſeth as much. For He telleth them, There were many lepers in the daies of Eliſha, and many Widowes in the daies of Elias; yet none cleanſed but Naaman, nor to none was Elias ſent, but to the Widow of Sarephtha. And ſo the caſe ſtandeth heere. Many ſinners there be, and many ſins may be remitted, but not to any, except they be of this Quorum. In which point ther is a ſpecial uſe of the key of knowledge, to direct to whom, and to whom not; ſince it is not, but with advice, to be applied, nor hands haſtily to be layd on any man (as the Apoſtle teſtifieth:) which place is referred by the ancient Writers, to the Act of Abſolution, and the circumſtance of the place giveth no leſſe. But diſcretion is to be uſed in applying of comfort, counſaile, and the benefit of Abſolution. Whereby it falleth out ſometimes, that the very ſame ſinnes to ſome may be remitted, being of the Quorum, that to ſome others may not, that are out of it.

The Qualification of the Perſons.

who be of either Quorum. The conditions to be required, to be of Quorum remittuntur, are two:

That, in the Church.

First, that the partie be within the houſe and familie, whereto thoſe keyes belong (that is) be a member of the Church, be a faithfull beleeving Chriſtian.

Exod.26.34. In the Law, the Propitiatorie was annexed to the Arke and could not be ſevered from it: to ſhew, that they muſt hold of the Arke (that is) be of the number of the people of GOD, or elſe could they not be partakers of the pſal. 87. ult. Propitiation for their ſinnes. So ſaith the Pſalmiſt, in the Pſalme of the Pſal.85.1. Church, Omnes canales mei erant in te. All the conduit-pipes of all my ſpirituall graces are conveighed into thee, and are no where elſe to be had. And namely, of this benefit of remiſsion of ſinnes: Thou haſt (ſaith he) ô Lord beene gratious unto Thy land, &c. Thou haſt forgiven all their iniquitie and

Eſa.33.ult, covered all their ſinne. But the Prophet Eſai, moſt plainly: The people which dwelleth in her (that is, the Church) They ſhall have their iniquitie forgiven. And to end this point, the Angel when he interpreteth the name

Mat.1.21. of IESVS, extendeth it no further than thus, that He ſhall ſave His people from their ſinnes. To them then is the benefit of remiſsion of ſinnes entailed and limited; it is ſors Sanctorum, and dos Eccleſiæ. And they that are of this Quorum, have their certaine hope thereof. They that are out of it, pertaine to the ſecond ſort, of them that have their ſinnes

1.Cor.5.21. retained. The power of the keyes reacheth not to them: What have I to do with them that are without (ſaith the Apoſtle?) Them that are without, GOD ſhall judge. Therefore, all Pagans, Infidels, Iewes, and Turkes are without Iohn 6.24. the compaſſe of this Quorum. For whoſo beleeveth not in Chriſt, whoſo is not a faithfull Chriſtian, ſhall die in his ſinnes.

That, Repentant.

But are all that are within this houſe, therby partakers of this remiſſion? is there nothing elſe required? Yes indeed, there is yet another condition requiſite, whereby many are cut off, that are within the Quorum of the Church. And that is (as our Saviour Chriſt Himſelfe ſetteth Luk.24.47. it down) Repentance. For, He willeth Repentance and Remiſsion of ſinnes to be preached in His name: both theſe; but Repentance firſt, and then Remiſsion of ſinnes to follow after. So that, the ſinner, that is a member of the Church, if he want this, is not of the former, but of the latter Quorum.

1 That is, Feele the want of Remiſſion, & deſire it.

To Repentance there goe two things (as heretofore hath beene entreated more at large.) To inſiſt upon the reſemblance heere made. First, that he feele his chaines and impriſonment, and be grieved with them, and therefore would gladly be let looſe, and diſcharged from them. And

Mat.11.28. no otherwiſe doth our Saviour Chriſt proclaime it; That none ſhould come to Him, but ſuch as are weary and heavy laden. For, ſentiat onus qui vult levari, & ſentiat vincula qui vult ſolvi. And no reaſon there is, meanes ſhould be made for his enlargement, that is wel enough already, and had rather be where He is, than at libertie abroad.

Out of which groweth this diviſion of ſinners, which make this double

Quorum

Quorum, For, there are ſinners, that are weary of their commitment, and would gladly be enlarged. Such as he was: O bring my ſoule out of priſon, that I may praiſe thee. And as he: Wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me? And to theſe belongeth the firſt clauſe of Remiſsion, even pœnitentibus & petentibus, to them that are weary of their durance, and that deſire and ſue for deliverance.

Pſal.142.ult. Rom.7.24.

Againe there are ſinners, which care not greatly for their preſent eſtate, but are as it were without ſenſe of their miſerie. The priſon grieveth them not; being in it, they reckon themſelves well enough, either becauſe they have drunken of the ſlumbering cup, which is the very dreggs of GOD's wrath, having their hearts as brawne, and their conſciences ſearcd with a hot iron, that is (as the Apoſtle doth interpret it) being paſt all feeling or remorſe of ſinne: Or elſe a worſe ſort of people, that not onely have no ſenſe of their preſent wretched caſe, but doe even take delight and pleaſure in the place, and (to chooſe) will not be out of it. Qui lætantur cum malum fecerint, & exultant in rebus peſſimis, that ſcorne the denouncing of GOD's judgements, and when they heare the words of this curſe, abſolve themſelves and ſay, I ſhall have peace and doe full well for all that. Of ſuch, Dominus ne ignoſcat illis (ſaith Moſes) let not GOD be mercifull unto them. Pitie it is, they ſhould be let goe, or the key once turned to let them out. Senſe and ſorrow is required of their reſtraint, and an earneſt deſire of enlargement, elſe they pertaine not to the firſt, but to the latter Quorum.

Eſa.51.22. Pſal.119 70. 1 Tim.4.2. Pro.2.14. Deut.29.19.

In which very point (of ſorrow for ſinne) there is an eſpeciall good uſe of the key of knowledge, for counſaile and direction. 1. For, inaſmuch as Repentance it ſelfe is an act of corrective Iuſtice, and to repent is to doe judgement (as the Prophet;) and to judge our ſelves, as the Apoſtle calleth it. 2. To which there belongeth not onely a ſentence, but alſo ἐκδίκησις, a revenge, or puniſhment. And becauſe it is not a fruitleſſe repentance which muſt ſerve the turne: but it muſt have fruits (ſaith Saint Iohn Baptiſt) and fruits worthy of repentance: that is, more plainely (as Saint Paul ſaith, he was charged to preach even from heaven) That men muſt not onely repent and turne to GOD, but alſo doe workes worthy of Repentance. 3. And for that the works of Repentance, all of them, are not meet and ſuitable to every ſinne, but as the ſinnes are diverſe, ſo are the workes to be alſo. 5. For that alſo, as a man may goe too farre in them (as appeareth in the caſe of the Corinthian;) ſo may one fall too ſhort, as appeareth in the caſe of Miriam: and a proportion or Analogie is to be kept, according as the caſe of the ſinne requireth. In both theſe to adviſe, both what workes are meete, and alſo what meaſure is to be kept, the Key of knowledge will help to direct, and we may have uſe of it, if we meane to uſe it to that end.

Ezc.33.14. 1 Cor.11.3. Eze.36.31. 2 Cor.7.11. Luc.3.8. Act.26.20. Dan.4.24. Ion.3.8. Act.8.22. 2 Cor.2.7. Num.12.14. Apoc.3.2.

The other condition which muſt be joyned to the former, is an unfeined purpoſe and endeavour, our ſelves to remit or let goe thoſe ſinnes, which we would have by GOD remitted. For, it is not enough to be ſorrie for ſinne paſt, or to ſeeke repentance, no though it be with teares: this will not make us of the firſt Quorum, if there be nothing but this; if there be in our hearts a purpoſe, our ſelves to retaine and hold faſt our old ſinne ſtill. Eſau lift up his voice with a great cry and bitter out of meaſure, and wept: Yet even at the ſame time, vowed in his heart, ſo ſoone as his Father was dead, to make away his brother. And this purpoſe of minde, for all his bitter crying and teares, caſt him into the latter Quorum, and made his ſinnes to be retained ſtill. And ſuch is the caſe of them, that would be let goe out of priſon; but would have libertie to goe in and out ſtill to viſit the companie there, when and as often as them liſt. So doe not the Saints that be of the firſt Quorum, to whom GOD, as He ſpeaketh peace, ſo He ſpeaketh this too, that they turne not thither againe, that they fall not againe to their former folly.

Heb.12.17. Gen.27.38. 14. Pſal.85.8.

But theſe later would have their ſinnes let go by GOD, but themſelves would not let them go, but keep faſt their end ſtill. They would quoad reatum, heare that ſaying from CHRIST's mouth, Thy ſinnes are forgiven thee: but quoad actum, would not willingly heare that other, Goe and ſinne no more. But we muſt be willing to heare them both: willing to have our ſinnes remitted by GOD, and willing too (our ſelves) to remit our ſinning, or from thenceforth remiſsius peccare, to ſinne more remiſsely, and nothing ſo licentiouſly as before. To the former ſorrow, ſentence, and revenge, we muſt (ſaith Saint Paul) joyne a deſire, ἐπιποθησιν; and to that deſire an endevour, σπουδην; and that, ſuch an endeavour, as may be able to alleage for it ſelfe ἀπολογιαν, an honeſt defence, that we have uſed all good meanes to do that, which on our part is to be performed, that we may be of the firſt Quorum.

Luc.7.48. Ioh.8.11. 1.Cor.7.11.

In which point no leſſe than the former, there may be uſe of the Key of knowledge, to adviſe and direct our ſelves, no leſſe in the cure of ſinne, than in the ſorrow for it. They in the ſecond of the Acts, which were pricked in their hearts, knew of themſelves that ſomewhat they ſhould do (as by their queſtion appeareth:) but what it was they ſhould doe, they knew not. Sometimes men have good minds; but know not which way to turne them or ſet themſelves about it. Sometimes they are ſcrupulous and doubtfull, whether they do as they ſhould, becauſe one may Propitius eſſe ſibi, favour himſelfe too much, and be over-partiall in his owne caſe, neither ſo carefull to uſe the meanes to good, nor to avoyde the occaſions of evill, as he ought. Wherein, it were good for men to make ſure worke, and to be fully reſolved. For, moſt uſuall it is for men, at their ends to doubt, not of the power of remitting of ſinnes, but of their owne diſpoſition to receive it; and whether they have ordered the matter ſo, that they be within the compaſſe of GOD's effectuall calling, or as the text is, of the Quorum, to whom it belongeth. So much for the matter, or ſubject, whereto this power is to be applied.

Act.2.37.

And

And heere I ſhould now ſpeake ſome what of the applying or uſe of it: but the time hath over-taken me and will not permit it. Now onely a word of the third part, of the Efficacie, or (as the Lawyers terme it) of GOD's Ratihabition, and ſo an end.

III. Of the Ratihabition.

Wherin GOD willing more abundantly, to ſhew to them that ſhould be partakers of it, the ſtableneſſe of His counſaile, He hath penned it exceeding effectually, and indeed ſtrangely to them that deeply conſider of it: which He hath ſo done, to the end, that thereby ſuch poore ſinners as ſhall be partakers of it, might have ſtrong conſolation and perfect aſſurance, not to waver in the hope which is ſet before them.

And to that end, even for comfort, I will onely point at foure things in the enditing of it; all expreſsing the efficacie of it, in more than common manner.

1. The order, in this; that Remiſerîtis ſtandeth firſt, and Remittuntur ſecond. It is Saint Chryſoſtome's note, that it beginneth in earth, and that heaven followeth after. So that, whereas in prayer and in other parts of religion it is, Sicut in Cœlo, ſic in terrâ; heere it is, Sicut in terrâ, ſic in Cœlo. A terrâ judicandi principalem authoritatem ſumit Cœlum. Nam Iudex ſedet in terrâ: Dominus ſequitur ſervum, & quicquid hic in inferioribus judicârit, hoc ille in ſupernis comprobat, ſaith he. Super verbis Eſaiæ Vidi Dominum. Homil. 5.

2. The Time: in this, that it is Remittuntur in the preſent tenſe; there is no delay betweene, no deferring, or holding in ſuſpence, but the Abſolution pronounced upon earth, Remittuntur, preſently they are remitted; that He ſaith not, hereafter they ſhalbe, but they are already remitted.

3. The Manner: in ſetting downe of the two words. For, it is ſo delivered by CHRIST, as if He were content, it ſhould be accounted their act, and that the Apoſtles were the agents in it, and Himſelfe but the patient, and ſuffered it to be done. For, the Apoſtle's part is delivered in the Active (Remiſerîtis;) and His owne in the Paſsive (Remittuntur.)

4. The Certainty: which in the Identitie of the word, in not changing the word, but keeping the ſelfe ſame in both parts. For, Chriſt hath not thus endited it, Whoſe ſinnes ye wiſh or ye pray for, or whoſe ſinnes yee declare to be remitted; but whoſe ſinnes ye remit: uſing no other word, in the Apoſtle's, than he uſeth in his owne. And to all theſe, in Saint Matthew He addeth His ſolemne proteſtation of Verily, Verily, or Amen, Amen, that ſo it is, and ſhalbe. And all to certifie us, that He fully meaneth, with effect to ratifie in heaven, that is done in earth; to the ſure and ſtedfaſt comfort of them, that ſhall partake it. Mat. 18. 18.

A SERMON PREACHED AT WHITE-HALL,

Vpon the XXIII. of NOVEMBER,

AN. DOM. MDC.

IERE. CHAP. XXIII. VER. VI.

Hoc eſt Nomen quo vocabunt Eum, IEHOVA Iuſtitia noſtra.

This is the Name whereby they ſhall call Him, The LORD our Righteouſneſſe.

THE former points, which the Prophet pointeth us to with his Ecce, and willed us to behold, we then were ſo long in beholding, that we had no time, to take a view of this laſt: which I take to bee the chiefeſt part of his Ecce, and the point of all points moſt worthy our beholding. Hoc eſt Nomen, &c.

1. The chiefe, becauſe His Name is given Him from this and not from any of the reſt. For (commonly) from his chiefeſt title doth every man take his denomination. In the verſe next following, GOD ſaith; He will no more be called, Their Deliverer from Egypt, becauſe Hee will vouchſafe them a greater deliverance from Babylon: And ſo Verſe 7.

from thence, as from the greater, have His name given. And as GOD, ſo men. What title of honour is higheſt in their ſtyle, that of all other, doth each perſon delight, to be termed by.

Now thoſe (in the former part of this verſe) of Salvation, and Peace which He will procure them) be great and excellent Titles; and they be no leſſe verified of Him, than this of Righteouſneſſe: (The Lord is my light and my Salvation, by the Prophet: and, He is our Peace, by the Apoſtle:) Yet, of neither of theſe doth He take His Name. But, from this of Righteouſneſſe, He doth. And that, both His former Name, in metaphore and figure, The Branch of Righteouſneſſe: and this His latter, in proprietie and truth, His Royall Name, Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra. This, therefore is Chiefe in His accompt.

Pſalm. 27.1. Epheſ.2.14.

Verſe 5.

2. Againe, the Chiefe: becauſe it is His peculiar. And, every man reckoneth of that, as his chiefeſt title, that is not common to him with others, but proper to him alone; (as wherin he hath a prerogative above all. He, and none but He.

Now thoſe in the former verſe (of executing judgement and juſtice) are ſuch, as are alſo given to other Kings. King David is ſaid to have executed judgement and juſtice to all his people: So is King Salomon likewiſe; the Queene of Sheba giveth him that title. To doe juſtice, is the title alſo of others (and not many neither, but yet of ſome others) But to be juſtice, to be righteouſneſſe; that is the name of none, but CHRIST onely. His, and His onely, is that title. Therefore, as well in this regard, as in the former, this is the very chiefe part in the Ecce, The Name of Iehova our Righteouſneſſe.

2 Sam 8.15. 1 Reg 10.9.

Which, becauſe it is nothing but a name, may ſeeme to ſome, a matter of no great importance. The Deputie of Achaia (Gallio) in the Acts, ſeemeth of that minde: If it were ſome weighty matter, I would ſit the hearing (ſaith he:) But if it be a matter of Names, I take it not worth the while: Heare it who will, for I will not. And to ſay the truth, if it weare a name of mens giving, he ſaid not much amiſſe. Their names are not greatly to be looked after. The argument taken from them, the Heathen Philoſopher confeſſeth, is πίστις ἀγαζων; an argument, that ſetteth a good face upon it, but no great ſubſtance in it. The reaſon whereof is, Becauſe with men, there be Nominals, and there be Reals: Names and things, are many times two. There is quædam dicuntur de, & non inſunt. There is learning (ſaith the Apoſtle) ψευδώνυμος, falſly ſo called. And as learning; ſo, many things beſide. The Churle is named liberall, and they worſhipfull, that have nothing worthy worſhip in them. Yea, it falleth out, that ſome have a name, that they live, and yet are dead: and many things beſides, quæ dicuntur de, & non inſunt in. Whereof, we need not ſeeke farre: we have an example heere in the Prophet, of King Zedekia, that reigned at the time of this prophecie; one that had neither truth nor righteouſneſſe in him, a breaker of his league and Covenant, a falſifier of his oath; and yet, his name is Zedekia, GODS righteous one, or the righteousnesse of GOD. Mens names for the most part are false.

2. And when they be true, emptie, and no great weight in them. For, what are mens titles, but mens breath; but a blast of ayre, but winde. If they be popular titles, the wind of a common paire of bellowes: If of those of the better sort (as the heathen man well said ἐπιχρύσε φυσητῆρ, the wind of a gilt or wrought paire of bellowes; but both of them, winde.

But, the names of GODS imposition, are not so. They ever carrie truth in them. For seeing GOD cannot away with those that are title-givers (as saith Elihu) He will give none Himselfe. With Him, is not the division, that is with us, of Nominals and Reals; of quædam dicuntur de, quædam insunt in. If we be named the Sonnes of GOD, we are so (saith Saint Iohn:) and therefore, from His Name, a sound and substantiall argument may be drawen, as (we see) the Apostle doth: proving the excellencie of Christ's Nature, above the Angels, from the excellencie of His Name above theirs.

Iob.32.2. 1 Ioh.3.1. Heb.11.1.

And, as they are free from falshood; so are they not empty sounds, but have ever some vertue in them. The Name of GOD (saith Salomon) is a strong Tower. So that, when some trust in Chariots and Horses; and other some, in the Name of GOD; they that trust in Chariots and horses, they go down; they that in that Name, stand upright. And this, not onely in the dangers of this life; but, there is also, in the Name of GOD, a saving power for the life to come. A power, to justifie: Yee are justified in the Name of CHRIST (saith Saint Paul.) A power for remission of sinnes: Your sinnes are forgiven you, for His Name's sake (saith S. Iohn.) A power to save: In this Name, you have Salvation (saith Saint Peter.)

Prover.18.10. Psal.20.8. 1.Cor.6.11. 1 Ioh. 2.12. Act.4.12.

And, such is the Name heere named; Iehova, our righteousnesse. Our righteousnesse, to justifie, to forgive us our sinnes, to give us salvation. Such, is this Name: and there is not under heaven, any Name given to men, wherein they may be saved, beside it.

Act.4.11.

In the Ecce, or beholding whereof, two things present themselves to our view: 1. The Name it selfe. 2. The Calling Him by it. The Name in these words; Hoc est Nomen. The calling in these; Quo vocabunt Eum.

The Division

In either of which, two others. In the Name, these two; 1 The parts of it; and the reason of them. 2 The sense of it. I.

In the calling Him by it, likewise two. 1 As it is our duty, so to call Him. 2. As we have an use or benefit by so calling Him. The duty, and the use. II.

To

I

The NAME, Pſal. 16.2.

TO GOD Himſelfe (as the Pſalmiſt telleth us) all the ſervice, we can performe, reacheth not. The perfection of His Nature is ſuch, as it can from us receive nothing. But, two things of His there are, which He hath left, to expreſſe that duty, which we owe and beare to Himſelfe. Which two are in one verſe ſet downe, by the Pſal. 138.2. Prophet David: Thou haſt magnified, 1 Thy Name, and 2 Thy Word above all things, 1 His Name, and 2 His Word. His Name, for our invocation; His Word, for our inſtruction. And theſe two, as they are the higheſt things, in GOD's accompt; ſo are they to be in ours. Not the Word onely (which carrieth all away in a manner, in theſe daies;) But, His Name alſo, no leſſe. For, in the ſetting them downe, the HOLY GHOST giveth the firſt place to the Name. Our very aſſembling, and comming together, is in this Name. And then, before all things, ſupplications are to be made in this Name. And the very hearing of the Word it ſelfe is, that we may call upon His Name: How ſhall they call upon His Name whom they Rom. 10.14. have not heard? How ſhall they heare without a Preacher? So that, preaching, and hearing of the word, are both ordained for the calling on of this Name. Mat. 18.20. 1 Tim. 2.1.

Which being ſo high in GOD's accompt, of very civilitie, if there were nothing elſe, wee are not to bee ignorant, what His Name is, that He is to be called by. No man, that maketh any (yea, but common) accompt of a partie, but he will learne by what name to Pro. 30.2. call him. And ſo requiſite doth Salomon hold this, as he affirmeth, There is little more in that man than in a beaſt; yea, there is not the underſtanding of a Man in him; of GOD (of Him that ſtretcheth out the heavens, and gathereth the winds in his fiſt, bindeth the waters in a garment, eſtabliſheth all the ends of the earth) not to know what is His Name, or what is His Sonne's Name. That His Name, is Iehova: And His Sonne's Name, Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra.

This, were we bound to get notice of, if it were but civilitie; or (as Salomon reckoneth it) even humanitie. But that is not all. For ſeeing (as the heathen man confeſſeth) ——Παντῶν δ' Διὸς ἀρχόμεθα πάντες, we all either have, or may have need of GOD, in our neceſsities of this life, but ſpecially in our laſt need; of very neceſsitie it will ſtand us in hand, to know how to call unto Him. There is no Client, but wil be ſure to learne his Advocate's name; nor no patient but will tell his Phyſitian's. Nor (in a word) any of them, of whom we are to have any ſpeciall uſe, but we will be carefull as to learne his true name, that we miſſe not in it; ſo, ſo, if he have diverſe names, and love to be called by any one rather than other, to be ſure to be perfect in it, and ready to ſalute him by it. And ſuch is this Name heere; and wee therefore not to bee to ſeeke in it; ſeeing not onely Courteſie, but very neceſsitie commendeth it to us.

Which Name (as you ſee) is compounded of three words, 1 Iehova, 2 Iuſtitia, 3 Noſtra: all of them neceſſarie, all of them eſſentiall. And they all three concurring, as it were three twiſts, they make a threefold cord (like that which the Preacher mentioneth) that cannot be broken. But except it be entire, and have all three, it loſeth the vertue; it worketh nothing. For ſever any one of them from the reſt, and the other are not of moment. A ſound, but not a name; or a name, but not Hoc Nomen this Name; a Name qualified to ſave them that call on it. Take Iehova from Iuſtitia noſtra, and Iuſtitia noſtra is nothing worth: And, take Iuſtitia from Iehova, and though there be worth in Iehova, yet there is not that which we ſeeke for. Yea, take noſtra from the other two, and how excellent ſoever they be, they concerne us not, but are againſt us, rather than for us. So that, together we muſt take them, or the Name is loſt. Eccle. 4. 12.

To ſee this the better, it will not be amiſſe to take it in ſunder, and to ſee the ground of every part in order. Why, 1 Iehova, 2 Why Iuſtitia, 3 Why Iehova Iuſtitia, 4 Why Iuſtitia noſtra, 5 Both noſtra, and Iuſtitia.

The Parts of the Name

1 Iehova.

Pſal. 71. 16.

1 Iehova. Touching which word, and the ground why it muſt be a part of this Name, the Prophet David reſolveth us: Memorabor (ſaith he) Iuſtitiæ Tuæ ſolius. Becauſe His righteouſneſſe, and onely His righteouſneſſe, is worth the remembring; & any others, beſide His, is not meet to be mentioned. For, as for our owne righteouſneſſe which we have without Him, Eſay telleth us, it is but a defiled cloth; and Saint Paul, that it is but dung. Two very homely compariſons; but they be the Holy Ghoſt's owne: yet nothing ſo homely as in the originall: where they be ſo odious, as what manner of defiled cloth, or what kinde of dung, we have not dared to tranſlate.

Our owne then being no better, we are driven to ſeeke for it elſewhere. He ſhall receive His righteouſneſſe (ſaith the Prophet:) and the gift of righteouſneſſe (ſaith the Apoſtle.) It is then another, to be given us, and to be received by us, which we muſt ſeeke for. And whither ſhall we goe for it? Iob alone diſpatcheth this point. Not to the heavens or ſtarres: For, they are uncleane in His ſight. Not to the Saints: For in them He found folly. Nor to the Angels: For neither in them found He any ſtedfaſtneſſe. Now, if none of theſe will ſerve, we ſee a neceſſarie reaſon, why Iehova muſt be a part of this Name. And this is the reaſon, why Ieremie heere expreſsing more fully the Name given Him before, fore in Eſay (Immanuel, GOD with us) inſtead of the name of GOD, in that Name (which is El) ſetteth downe by way of explanation, this Name heere of Iehova. Becauſe, that (El) and the other Names of GOD are communicated to Creatures. As the Name of El, to Angels, for their Names end in it; Michael, Gabriel, &c. And, the Name of Iah to Saints, and their names end in it; Eſaiah, Ieremiah, Zachariah. To certifie us therefore, that it is neither the righteouſneſſe of Saints nor Angels, that will ſerve the turne, but the righteouſneſſe of GOD and very GOD, He uſeth that Name which is proper to GOD alone; ever reſerved to Him onely, and never imparted by any occaſion to Angel or Saint, or any creature in heaven or earth.

2 Iuſtitia. Iuſtitia: Righteouſneſſe. Why that? If we aske, in regard of the other benefits which are before remembred (Salvation and Peace) Why Righteouſneſſe and not Salvation nor Peace? it is evident. Becauſe (as in the verſe next before, the Prophet termeth it) Righteouſneſſe is the Branch; and theſe two, Salvation and Peace are the fruits growing on

Pſal. 60.11. righteouſneſſe. Now, becauſe there is vana ſalus, a vaine ſalvation
Ierem. 6.14. (as ſaith David;) and a peace falſly ſo called a Peace which is no peace (as ſaith Ieremie;) To the end therefore, that our ſalvation might be ſubſtantiall, and our peace uncounterfeit, it behooveth us to lay a ſure ground-worke of them both; and to ſet a true roote of this branch, which is the Name Iehova. For, ſuch as the roote of this branch is, ſuch will Salvation and Peace, the fruits thereof be. If it be man's righteouſneſſe which is vaine, it will be alſo vana ſalus hominis, vaine and ſoone at an end; and the peace, like the worlds peace, vaine and of no certaintie. But if Iehova be our righteouſneſſe, looke how He is, ſo will they bee, everlaſting ſalvation, a peace which paſſeth all underſtanding.

3 Iehova Iuſtitia. Iehova Iuſtitia. We are now to ſeeke the reaſon, why Iehova is in this Name per modum Iuſtitiæ, by the way or under the terme of Righteouſneſſe, rather than of ſome other Attribute, as of Power or Mercie; that it is not Iehova Miſericordia, or Iehova Potentia, but Iehova Iuſtitia. GOD with us (ſaith Eſay:) With us (ſaith Ieremie) of all His properties, by that of Righteouſneſſe, chiefely and above other.

Not of Power (as in Eſay) by His Name El: which is His Name of power. For, in power there is no true comfort, without juſtice bee joyned to it. For, what is Power, except Righteouſneſſe goe before? Wee ſee, it is a thing very agreeable to our nature, to have that wee ſhall have, by juſtice (to chooſe:) and that way doe even the mightieſt firſt ſeeke it; and when that way it will not come, they overbeare it with power.

Nor of Mercie; not Iehova Miſericordia, by which Name David cal- Pſal. 59. vlt.
leth Him. For though it be a Name of ſpeciall comfort, and Saint Auguſtine ſaith of it: O Nomen ſub quo nemini deſperandum! yet if we weigh it well of it ſelfe alone, wee ſhall finde, there is no full or perfect comfort in it, except this alſo bee added; For that, we have in us two reſpects: 1 One, as perſons in miſerie; 2 the other, as perſons convict of ſinne. And though Mercie bee willing to relieve us, in the one; for her delight is to helpe thoſe in miſery: Yet what ſhall become of the other, how ſhall that be anſwered? We have in the Verſe before, mention of a King ready to execute judgement and juſtice. Now, juſtice is profeſſed enemie to all ſinne; and juſtice in her proceeding, may not admit of any reſpect, either of the might or of the miſerie of any, to lead her from giving ſentence according to law.

True it is, Mercie is ours, ours wholly, there is no doubt; but juſtice is againſt us, and except juſtice may be made ours too, all is not as it ſhould be. But if juſtice, if that in GOD, which onely is againſt, might be made for us, then were we ſafe. Therefore, all our thought is to be, either how we may get Mercie to triumph over juſtice with the Apoſtle; or, how Iam. 2. 13.
(at the leaſt) we may get them to meet together, and be friends in this worke. Pſal. 85. 10.
For, except juſtice be ſatisfied, and doe joyne in it alſo; in vaine wee promiſe our ſelves, that Mercie, of it ſelfe, ſhall worke our ſalvation. Which may ſerve for the reaſon, why neither Iehova Potentia, or Iehova Miſericordia, are enough; but, it muſt bee Iehova Iuſtitia; and Iuſtitia a part of the Name.

Noſtra: And, neither may this be left out. For without this, Iehova alone 4 Noſtra.
doth not concerne us; and Iehova Iuſtitia is altogether againſt us. But if He be Righteouſneſſe, and not only Righteouſneſſe, but ours too; all is at an end, wee have our deſires: Verily this laſt, this poſſeſsive, this word of application is all in all. By it, we have intereſt in both the former; and without it, our caſe is as theirs, Quid nobis & tibi, What have we to doe with Matt. 8. 29.
thee, Iehova Iuſtitia? which is moſt fearefull, and nothing but terror and torment in the conſideration of it. Therefore we muſt make much of this For, if once He bee Nobiſcum with us, and not againſt us; and not onely Nobiſcum with us, but Noſter our owne; all is ſafe. Otherwiſe it falleth out oft, there bee many Nobiſcum, that bee not noſtri: with us talke with us, eat with us, ſit with us, which yet are not ours for all that. And in this point alſo, doth this Name of Ieremie more fully expreſſe the Name of Eſai's Immanuel, no leſſe than in the two former, firſt of IEHOVA, which is more than El : and then of Iuſtitia, which is more agreeable than that of Potentia : And now in this heere, 1 Cor. 1.30. that there it is Nobiſcum (which is well;) and heere it is Noſter, which is better, and more ſurer by a great deale. For, if Hee bee (as the Apoſtle ſaith) Factus nobis, Made unto us Righteouſneſſe, and that ſo, as He becommeth Ours, what can wee have more? What can hinder us (ſaith Saint Bernard) but that wee ſhould uti noſtro in utilitatem noſtram, & de Servatore ſalutem operari : uſe Him, and His righteouſneſſe; uſe that which is ours to our beſt behoofe, and worke our Salvation out of this our Saviour. So that, Noſtra may not bee ſpared, no more than the other part of the Name. For all is in ſuſpence, and there is no compleat comfort without it. Serm. 3. in Miſſus eſt, &c.

5 Iuſtitia noſtra. To which comfort, this may bee added for a concluſion of this part, no leſſe effectuall than any of the former. That it is Iuſtitia noſtra in the Abſtract; and not in the Concrete, Iuſtificans, or Iuſtificator noſter, our Iuſtice or Righteouſneſſe it ſelfe; not our Iuſtifier or Maker of us Righteous. For thus delivered, I make no doubt, it hath much more efficacie in it; and more ſignificant it is by farre, to ſay Iehova our Iuſtice, than Rom. 3. 26. Iehova our Iuſtifier. I know, Saint Paul ſaith much : That our Saviour CHRIST ſhed His bloud, to ſhew His righteouſneſſe, that He might not onely be juſt, but a Iuſtifier of thoſe which are of His faith. And much more againe, in that, when Hee ſhould have ſo ſayd, To him that beleeveth in Rom. 4.5. GOD, He chooſeth thus to ſet it downe, To him that beleeveth in Him, that juſtifieth the ungodly : making theſe two to bee all one; GOD, and the Iuſtifier of ſinners. Though this be very much, yet certainely this is moſt 1 Cor. 1.30. forcible, that He is made unto us by GOD, very Righteouſneſſe it ſelfe. And 2 Cor. 5. ult. that yet more, That He is made Righteouſneſſe to us, that we be made the righteouſneſſe of GOD in Him. Which place Saint Chryſoſtome well weighing, this very word δικαιοσύνη (ſaith hee) the Apoſtle uſeth, δεικνὺς τὸ ἀφατον τῆς Gal. 3.13. δωρεᾶς, to expreſſe the unſpeakeable bounty of that gift, that He hath not given us the operation or effect of His Righteouſneſſe, but His very Righteouſneſſe, yea His very ſelfe unto us; Marke (ſaith he) how every thing is lively, and as full as can be imagined. CHRIST, one, not only that had done no ſin, but that had not ſo much as known any ſinne, hath GOD made (not a ſinner, but) Sinne it ſelfe; as in another place (not accurſed, but) a Curſe it ſelfe : ſinne, in reſpect of the guilt; a Curſe, in reſpect of the puniſhment. And why this? To the end, that we might be made (not righteous perſons; that was not full enough, but) Righteouſneſſe it ſelfe, and there hee ſtayes not yet, and not every righteouſneſſe, but the very Righteouſneſſe of GOD Himſelfe. What can be further ſayd, what can bee conceived more comfortable? To have Him ours, not to make us righteous but to make us righteouſneſſe, and that not any other but the Righteouſneſſe of GOD: the wit of man can deviſe no more. And all to this end: That we might ſee, there belongeth a ſpeciall Ecce to this Name; that there is more than ordinarie comfort in it; that therefore wee ſhould bee carefull to honour Him with it, and ſo call Him by it; IEHOVA our Righteouſneſſe.

2 The Senſe of this Name.

There is no Chriſtian man that will denie this Name, but will call CHRIST by it, and ſay of Him, that He is Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra, without taking a ſyllable or letter from it. But, it is not the ſyllables, but the ſenſe that maketh the Name. And the ſenſe is it, we are to looke unto; that we keepe it entire in ſenſe, as well as in ſound, if we meane to preſerve this Name of Iuſtitia noſtra full and whole unto Him. And as this is true; ſo is it true likewiſe, that even among Chriſtians, all take it not in one ſenſe: but ſome, of a greater latitude than other. There are that take it in that ſenſe which the Prophet Eſay hath ſet downe: in IEHOVA juſtitia mea, that all our righteouſneſſe is in Him; and wee to be found in Him, not having our owne righteouſneſſe, but being made the righteouſneſſe of GOD in Him. There are ſome other, that though in one part of our righteouſneſſe they take it in that ſenſe; yet in another part, they ſhrinke it up, and in that, make it but a propoſition cauſall, and the interpretation thereof to be, A IEHOVA Iuſtitia mea. Which is true too, 1 whether we reſpect Him, as the Cauſe exemplarie, or patterne: (For we are to be made conformable to the Image of CHRIST.) 2 Or whether we reſpect Him, as the Cauſe efficient: For, of all His righteous workes, the Prophet truely proteſteth, Domine, univerſa opera noſtra Tu operatus es in nobis: and the Apoſtle when he had ſaid Ego, correcteth himſelfe preſently, and ſaith, Non ego ſed gratia Dei mecum: Not I, but the grace of GOD. This meaning then, is true and good: but not full enough. For, either it taketh the Name in ſunder, and giveth Him not all, but a part of it againe: or elſe, it maketh two ſenſes, which may not be allowed in one Name.

1 Righteouſneſſe accounted.

2 Righteouſneſſe done.

For the more plaine conceiving of which point, we are to be put in minde, That the true righteouſneſſe (as ſaith Saint Paul) is not of man's device, but hath His witneſſe from the Law and Prophets; which he there proceedeth to ſhew, out of the example, firſt of Abraham, and after of David. In the Scripture then, there is a double righteouſneſſe ſet downe, both in the old and in the new Teſtament.

Gen. 15. 6.

In the Old, and in the very firſt place, that righteouſneſſe is named in the Bible: Abraham beleeved and it was accounted unto him for righteouſneſſe. A righteouſneſſe accounted. And againe (in the very next line) it is mentioned, Abraham will teach his houſe to doe righteouſneſſe. A righteouſneſſe done. In the New likewiſe. The former, in one Chapter (even the fourth to the Romans) no fewer than eleven times, Reputatum eſt illi adjuſtitiam. A reputed righteouſneſſe. The latter, in Saint Iohn. My beloved, let no man deceiye you, he that doth righteouſneſſe is righteous. A righteouſneſſe done. Which is nothing elſe but our juſt dealing, upright cariage, honeſt converſation.

Gen. 18. 19.

Iohn 3.7.

Of theſe, the latter, the Philoſophers themſelves conceived and acknowledged; the other, is proper to CHRISTIANS onely, and altogether unknowne in Philoſophie. The one is a qualitie of the partie. The other, an act of the Iudge, declaring or pronouncing righteous. The one, ours by influence or infuſion: The other, by accompt or imputation.

That both theſe there are, there is no queſtion. The queſtion is, whether of theſe the Prophet here principally meaneth, in this Name?

This ſhall we beſt informe our ſelves of, by looking backe to the Verſe before: and without ſo looking backe, we ſhall never doe it to purpoſe.

There, the Prophet ſetteth one before us, in his royall judiciall power, in the perſon of a King, and of a King ſet downe to execute judgement; and this he telleth us, before he thinke meet to tell us his Name. Before this King, thus ſet downe in his throne, there to doe judgement, the righteouſneſſe that will ſtand againſt the Law, our conſcience, Satan, ſin, the gates of hell and the power of darkeneſſe; and ſo ſtand that we may be delivered by it, from death, deſpaire and damnation; and entitled by it to life, ſalvation and happineſſe eternall; that, is righteouſneſſe indeed: that is it, we ſeeke for, if we may finde it. And that is not this latter, but the former onely; and therefore that is the true interpretation of IEHOVA juſtitia noſtra. Looke but how Saint Auguſtine and the reſt of the Fathers, when they have occaſion to mention that place, in the Proverbs (Cum Rex juſtus ſederit in ſolio, quis poteſt dicere, Mundum eſt cor meum?) Looke how they interpret it then, and it will give us light to underſtand this Name; and we ſhall ſee, that no Name will ſerve then, but this Name. Nor this Name neither, but with this interpretation of it.

Prov. 20. 8.

And that the HOLY GHOST would have it ever thus underſtood, and us ever to repreſent before our eyes, this King thus ſitting in His judgement-ſeate, when wee ſpeake of this righteouſneſſe, it is plaine, two waies. 1. By way of poſition. For the tenor of the Scripture touching our juſtification, all along runneth in judiciall termes, to admoniſh us ſtill what to ſet before us. The uſuall joyning of juſtice and Iudgement continually all along the Scriptures, ſhew, it is a judiciall juſtice wee are to ſet before us. Yea, the very delivering of our ſinnes, under the name of debts; of the Law, under the name of a k Hand-writing; the very termes of an l Advocate; of a Suretie made under the Law: of a pardon, or m being juſtified from thoſe things which by the Law wee could not: All theſe, wherein for the moſt part this is ſtill expreſſed, What ſpeake they, but that the ſenſe of this Name cannot bee rightly underſtood, nor what manner of righteouſneſſe is in queſtion, except wee ſtill have before our eyes, This ſame Coram Rege juſto judicium faciente.

2 And againe by way of oppoſition. For uſually, where juſtifying is named, there condemning (which is a terme meerely judiciall) is ſet againſt it. In the Law, n When there ſhalbe ſtrife, and the matter ſhall come before thee, and ſentence to be given, ſee the righteous be juſtified and the ſinner condemned. o To juſtifie the wicked and condemne the innocent, both are alike abhominable before GOD. p If man cannot judge, heare thou from heaven, condemne the wicked and juſtifie the righteous.

ſ Rom. 5. 16.

For it is not in queſtion, whether wee have an inherent righteouſneſſe or no: Or whether GOD will accept it, or reward it: but whether that muſt bee our righteouſneſſe, Coram Rege juſto judicium faciente.

Which is a point very materiall, and in no wiſe to bee forgotten. For, without this, if we compare our ſelves with our ſelves, what heretofore wee have beene; or if we compare our ſelves with others, as did the Phariſee; wee may take a phanſie perhaps, and have ſome good conceipt of our inherent righteouſneſſe. Yea, if we be to deale in Schooles by argument or diſputation, we may peradventure argue for it, and make ſome ſhew in the matter. But let us once be brought and arraigned, Coram Rege juſto ſedente in Solio, let us ſet our ſelves there, wee ſhall then ſee, that all our former conceipt will vaniſh ſtraight, and Righteouſneſſe (in that ſenſe) will not abide the triall.

Bring them hither then, and aske them heere of this Name, and never a Saint, nor Father, no, nor the Schoolemen themſelves, none of them but will ſhew you how to underſtand it aright. In their Commentaries, it may bee, in their queſtions and debates they will hold hard for the other. But remove it hither, they forſake it preſently sently, and take the Name in the right ſenſe. [t] Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant IOB (ſaith GOD to Satan) how juſt and perfect hee is. This juſt and perfect IOB, ſtanding here, [u] Though I be juſt (ſaith he) I will not hold up my head (or as they ſay, Stare rectus in Curiâ) will never plead it, or ſtand upon it, but put up a Supplication to be releeved by IEHOVAH juſtitia noſtra.

David hath the witneſſe to have beene ✱ a man according to GODS owne heart. For all that, he dareth not ſtand here: But deſireth, GOD would not enter into judgement with him; For that, [x] In conſpectu tuo, in His ſight, not he, nor any other living (which Saint Bernard extendeth to the Angels) ſhall be juſtified. But if he muſt come (as thither we muſt come all) then [y] Memorabor juſtitiæ tuæ ſolius, he will never chaunt his owne righteouſneſſe, but make mention only of this Name, IEHOVAH juſtitia noſtra.

DANIEL, [z] Ver deſideriorum (as the Angell termed him) even he, that man ſo greatly beloved, after he ſaw the [a] Ancient of daies ſet downe in His Throne, and the bookes open before Him, then [b] Tibi Domine juſtitia, nobis autem confuſio faciei. [c] Non in juſtificationibus noſtris, Not in our righteouſneſſe; yet was that righteouſneſſe à Iehovâ, but (here) it would not ſerve; he muſt waite for the MESSIAS, and the [d] everlaſting righteouſneſſe, which He bringeth with Him.

And [e] Eſay likewiſe, at the viſion of the LORD ſedentis ſuper thronum, and the Angels covering their faces, before Him, crieth out; [f] Væ mihi: Woe is me, I am a man of polluted lippes: Woe is me, for I have held my peace: and (there) he ſeeth, the very ſinnes of his lippes, and the very ſinnes of omiſſion will be enough to condemne him, though he had never in act, committed any.

To end this point: Saint Paul, a Veſſell of Election (So [g] GOD Himſelfe doth name him) ſaith plainly, if it were before the Corinthians; or any Aſſize of man, he would ſtand upon his righteouſneſſe: But ſeeing, [h] Qui me judicat eſt Dominus, he will give it over and confeſſe, that though Nihil mihi conſcius ſum (and ſo had juſtitia à Domino;) yet for all that, in hoc non ſum juſtificatus: it is another righteouſneſſe, and not that, muſt acquite him.

Thus doe the Saints, both of the Old, and of the New Teſtament take this Name. And doe not the Fathers the like? Saint Auguſtines report it is, of S. Ambroſe, that being now at the point of death, he alledged, that the Cauſe why he feared not death, was, Quia bonum habemus Dominum; and doth he not give this note upon it, that he did not preſume De ſuis purgatiſſimis moribus, of his converſation, though moſt holy and cleane, but only ſtood on the goodneſſe of the LORD, the LORD our Righteouſneſſe?

And doth he not, in his owne caſe, flye to the ſame, againſt Creſconius the Donatiſt. The he ſhunned not, to have his life ſifted to the uttermoſt moſt by any Donatiſt of them all. Yet in the eyes of GOD, Cum Rex juſtus ſederit in Solio (theſe very words he alledgeth) he ſaith plainely, he dare not juſtifie himſelfe; but rather waited for the overflowing bounty of His grace, than would abide the ſevere examination of His judgement. And Bernard (in his CCCX. Epiſtle, the very laſt he wrote a little before his death, to the Abbot of Chartres) concludeth he not, Calcaneum vacuum meritis curate munire precibus? Abandoneth he not then, his juſtitia à Domino, and confeſſeth, his heele (meaning the end of his life) is bare of all merits, and deſireth to have it, by praiers commended to Iehovah juſtitia noſtra. Thus doe the Fathers conceive of it.

Yea the very Schoolemen themſelves, take them from their Queſtions, Quodlibets and Comments on the Sentences, let them be in their ſoliloquies, meditations, or devotions, and ſpecially in directing how to deale with men in their laſt agony, quando Iudex præ foribus eſt; then take Anſelme, take Bonaventure, take Gerſon, you would not wiſh to finde Iehovah juſtitia noſtra better or more pregnantly acknowledged, than in them you ſhall finde it. But this is by vertue of this Ecce Rex facietjudicium; out of whoſe ſight when we be, we may fall into a phanſie, or (as the Prophet ſaith) wee may have a dreame of Iuſtitia noſtra a IEHOVAH.

Anſelem. interrogat. Bonaventura in Breviloquio. Gerſ. in Agone.

But, framing our ſelves as before Him, we ſhall ſee, it is not that righteouſneſſe, will conſiſt there: but we muſt come to Iuſtitia noſtra in Iehovah. It is the only way, how to ſettle the ſtate of this controverſie aright: and without this, we may well miſſe of the interpretation of this Name. And this, they that doe not, or will not (now) conceive, the Prophet telleth them after, at the XX. Verſe, quòd in noviſſimo intelligitis planè, at the end they ſhall underſtand, whether they will or no. Ver. 17.

And indeed, to doe them no wrong, it is true, that at this Iudgement-ſeate, ſo farre as it concerneth the ſatisfaction for ſinne, and our eſcaping from eternall death, the Church of Rome taketh this Name aright; and that terme, which a great while ſeemed harſh unto them, now they finde no ſuch abſurditie in it. That Chriſts righteouſneſſe and merits are imputed to us. So ſaith Bellarmine: Et hoc modo non eſſet abſurdum, ſi quis diceret, nobis imputari Chriſti juſtitiam & merita, eum nobis donentur & applicentur, ac ſi nos ipſi Deo ſatisfeciſſemus. And againe, Solus CHRISTVS pro ſalute noſtrâ ſatisfacere potuit, & re ipſâ ex juſtitiâ ſatisfecit, & illa ſatisfactio nobis donatur, & applicatur, & noſtra reputatur, cum Deo reconciliamur & juſtificamur. So ſaith Stapleton, Ille ſanè juſtitiâ, quâ ſatisfecit pro nobis, per communicationem ſic noſtra eſt, ut perinde nobis imputetur, ac ſi nos ipſi ſufficientèr ſatisfecimus: in as full termes, as one would wiſh. So that, this point is meetly well cleered now. Thus they underſtand this Name in that part of righteouſneſſe, which is ſatisfactorie for puniſhment; and there they ſay with us (as we, with Eſay) in Iehovah Iuſtitia noſtra.

De Iuſtifi. 2. 20. 2. 11.

De Iuſtifi. 7. 9.

But in the poſitive Iuſtice, or that part thereof, which is meritorious for reward;

ward; there fall they into a phanſie, they may give it over: and ſuppoſe, that Iuſtitia à Domino, a righteouſneſſe (from GOD, they grant, yet) inherent in themſelves, without the righteouſneſſe that is in Chriſt, will ſerve them; whereof they have a good conceipt, that it will endure GODS juſtice, and ſtandeth not by acceptation. So, by this meanes, ſhrinke they up their Name; and though they leave the full ſound, yet take they halfe the ſenſe from it.

Now as for us, in this point of Righteouſneſſe, if we both goe no further, than the former, of taking away ſinne, then as much as wee ſtrive for, they doe yeeld us. And therein (we thinke) we have cauſe to blame them juſtly, for not contenting themſelves with that which contented the Prophet: [a] Hic eſt omnis fructus (marke that omnis) ut auferatur peccatum. Which contented Saint Iohn Baptiſt: [b] Ecce Agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi. Which contented the Angell: [c] Hic ſervabit populum ſuum à peccatis eorum. Which contented the Fathers, Saint Auguſtine, [d] Puto hoc eſſe juſtus ſum, quod peccator non ſum. Saint Bernard, [e] Factus eſt nobis juſtitia, ſapientia, &c. Sapientia in predicatione, juſtitia in peccatorum abſolutione. So that, to be abſolved from ſinne with him, is our righteouſneſſe. And yet more plainely, in his CXC. Epiſtle to Innocentius the Pope himſelfe, Vbi reconciliatio, ibi remiſſio peccatorum, Et quid ipſa niſi juſtificatio? Which the very name and nature of a judgement-ſeat doth give, which proceedeth onely in matters penall.

And as we blame them for that; ſo likewiſe for this, no leſſe, that (if they will needs have it a part of juſtice) they allow not CHRISTS Name as full in this part as in the former. For there they allow imputation, but here they doe not.

For I aske, what is the reaſon why in the other part (of ſatisfaction for ſinne) we need CHRISTS Righteouſneſſe to be accompted ours? The reaſon is (ſaith Bellarmine) Non acceptat Deus in veram ſatisfactionem pro peccato, niſi juſtitiam infinitam, quoniam peccatum offenſa eſt infinita. If that be the reaſon, that it muſt have an infinite ſatisfaction, becauſe the offence is infinite; we reaſon à pari, there muſt alſo bee an infinite merit, becauſe the Reward is no leſſe infinite. Elſe, by what proportion doe they proceed, or at what beame doe they weigh theſe twaine, that cannot counterpoize an infinite ſinne, but with an infinite ſatisfaction; and thinke they can weigh downe a reward every way as infinite, with a merit (to ſay the leaſt) ſurely not infinite? Why ſhould there bee a neceſſarie uſe of the ſacrifice of CHRISTS death for the one, and not an uſe full as neceſſarie of the oblation of His life for the other? Or how commeth it to paſſe, that no leſſe than the one will ſerve to free us from eternall death, and a great deale leſſe will ſerve to entitle us to eternall life? Is there not as much requiſite to purchaſe for us the crowne of glorie, as there is to redeeme us from the torments of hell? What difference is there, are they not both equall, both alike infinite? Why is His death allowed ſolely ſufficient to put away ſinne, and why is not His life to bee allowed like ſolely ſufficient to bring us to life? If in that, the bleſſed Saints themſelves (were there ſufferings never ſo great, yea, though they endured never ſo cruell martyrdome) if all thoſe could not ſerve to ſatisfie GODS juſtice for their ſinnes, but it is the death of CHRIST muſt deliver them; is it not the very ſame reaſon, that were their merits never ſo many, and their life never ſo holy, yet that by them, they could not, nor we cannot challenge the reward; but it is the life and obedience of Chriſt that de juſtitia muſt procure it, for us all? For ſure it is, that Finiti ad infinitum nulla eſt proportio. Eſpecially, if we adde hereunto that as it cannot be denied but to be finite, ſo withall, that the Auncient Fathers ſeeme further to bee but meanely conceipted of it; reckoning it not to be full, but defective; not pure, but defiled; and if it be judged by the juſt Iudge, Districtè or cum districtione examinis (they be Saint Gregories and Saint Bernards words) indeed, no righteouſneſſe at all.

Not full, but defective. So ſaith Saint Auguſtine: Neque totam, neque plenam, in hac vitâ, juſtitiam nos habere, confitendum nobis eſt. If neither whole, but a part; nor full, but wanting; then unperfect and defective. Now, which muſt be weighed in GODS ballance, muſt not be found minus habens; and this is minus habens, Saith Saint Bernard in expreſſe termes.

Not pure, but defiled. Noſtra recta forſan, ſed non pura juſtitia (ſaith Bernard) niſi forte meliores ſumus quàm patres noſtri, quorum illa vox, Omnes juſtitiæ noſtræ ſicut pannus menſtruatæ: Mala noſtra, pura mala; Bona noſtra pura nequaquam, (ſaith Gregory.) Now κηλίδα ἀναγκὴ τινὰ μὴ ἐυρεθῆναι (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome:) Neceſſarie it is, that the righteouſneſſe, that ſhall preſent it ſelfe there, have not a ſpot in it. As for ours (as Pope Adrian the ſixth ſaid) the caſe ſtandeth thus, that Stillamus quotidiè ſuper telam juſtitiæ noſtræ, ſaniem concupiſcentiæ noſtræ, and ſo it is defiled.

And laſt of all, if it be ſtraightly examined indeed no righteouſneſſe. Sancti viri omne meritum vitium eſt, ſi ab Æterno Arbitro districtè judicetur. Mor. 9. 11.
And againe: Quouſque pœnâ corruptionis aſtringimur, veram munditiam nequaquam apprehendimus. And, Omnis humana juſtitia injuſtitia eſſe invenietur, ſi districtè judicetur injuſta invenietur omnis juſticia noſtra. And thus we ſee, the conceipt, theſe Fathers have, of our righteouſneſſe inhærent: That if it be deale with according to righteouſneſſe, in illo examine Mor. 9. 11.
etiam Iuſtorum vita ſuccumbet, in that examination it will ſinke and cannot ſtand before it. Yea, they themſelves, of the Church of Rome alſo, upon better examination, have begunne to crie it downe: and I doubt not, but the longer and further they looke into it, the eaſier accompt they will make of it.

Gregorie de Valentia, after long debating the matter, thus reſolveth: Diſp. 8. Queſt. 6. P. 4.
that

that, Secluſâ promiſſione divinâ, non ſuppetit aliquis ſufficiens titulus, cur opera noſtra debent compenſari. And thus he expreſſeth his meaning, touching their value: That they be like to baſe mony (as Princes have ſometime made leather mony currant) wherewith, plate is bought or other Wares farre exceeding the coyne in value, which is no way in reſpect of it ſelfe, but becauſe it pleaſed the Prince ſo to allow of it. And what is this but a proclaiming our righteouſneſſe baſe, or as I ſaid before, a crying it downe.

De Iuſt.6.8. Stapleton, in his ſeventh propoſition, how the matter ſtandeth in our juſtification, at length is faine to reſolve thus: Facitque indulgendo, ut perinde ſimus coram Deo juſti acſi univerſa, ad amuſſim omnia mandata eademq; perfectiſſimè feciſſemus. Now, indulgence (we know) belongeth unto ſin, and righteouſneſſe, if it be true, needeth none. Therefore he telleth us it is Perinde acſi juſti; it is not juſti, as they defend it. So that, he confeſſeth, their righteouſneſſe needeth an indulgence: and it is but Perinde acſi; and not that neither in juſtice, but acceptation, which is meere matter of favour, and not of judiciall proceeding.

De Iuſt.5.7. And to conclude, Bellarmine after his long diſputation, in the end taking upon him to anſwer a caſe of conſcience, Whether a man may repoſe any truſt in that he had ſo long argued for, and how farre; compriſeth the matter in three propoſitions well worth the noting. 1 For, firſt, very ſtoutly he ſetteth downe: Fiducia non ex fide ſolâ naſcitur, ſed ex bonis meritis. 2 Then in the ſecond, he falleth ſomewhat: In meritis (quæ verè talia compertum eſt) fiducia aliqua collocari poteſt. Not, unleſſe it be compertum, they be talia (a caſe with them, impoſsible:) and not in them neither, but onely aliqua fiducia.

3 And yet, there is ſome: But after, better bethinking himſelfe (it may be, of the Iudge ſitting in His throne) he ſpoileth all in the third, which is, that Propter incertitudinem propriæ juſtitiæ (againſt his compertum eſt) & periculum inanis gloriæ, tutiſſimum eſt, fiduciam totam in ſolâ Dei miſericordiâ reponere: Marke that ſame totam in ſolâ; which is cleane contrary to his aliqua a little before. Marke his miſericordia: and that he declineth the judiciall proceeding. And marke his reaſon; becauſe His righteouſneſſe is ſuch, as he is not ſure of it, nor dare not put any truſt in it, nor plead it coram Rege juſto judicium faciente. Which is enough (I thinke) to ſhew, when they have forgot themſelves a little out of the fervor of their oppoſitions, how light and ſmall account they make of it themſelves, for which they ſpoyle CHRIST of one halfe of His Name.

This is then the interpretation or meaning of this Name, that as well in the one ſenſe, as the other, CHRIST is our righteouſneſſe; and as the Prophet ESAY putteth it downe, in the plurall number, in Domino Iuſtitiæ noſtræ, as it were propheſying of theſe men: All our righteouſneſſe; righteouſneſſe; this, is that; that one as well as the other, are in the Lord. No abatement is to bee deviſed, the Name is not to bee mangled or divided, but entirely belongeth to CHRIST, full and whole, and we to call Him by it, IEHOVA IVSTITIA NOSTRA.

II.

The Calling Chriſt by this Name.

1 Our duty.

Wee to call Him by it; this is our duty firſt: and that ſo to call Him by it, as by His name. And a name is a note of diſtinction, and wee therefore ſo to uſe it: To apply it to Him, and to none other whatſoever, as the nature of a Name is. The nature of all names: but chiefly of thoſe, which bee titles of honour. For, howſoever we diſpence with others, thoſe we will not in any wiſe divide with any: Gloriam meam alteri non dabo (ſaith GOD by the Prophet; which maketh the Prophet to proteſt, he will not meddle with it.) Non nobis Domine, and againe more vehemently, Non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo da gloriam. And ſuch is this Name. For, that very place in the New Teſtament, where it is ſayd, that GOD hath given Him a Name; which is above all Names, that in His Name all knees ſhould bow, and all tongues confeſſe; that place is taken out of the Prophet Eſay, where the very ſame is ſayd, that all knees ſhall bow, and all tongues ſhall acknowledge this Name; and that thus, by ſaying, In Iehova Iuſtitiæ meæ; and ſo acknowledging concludeth, that all the whole ſeed of Iſrael, as they ſhalbe juſtified, ſo ſhall they glorie in the Lord. It is the very queſtion which the Apoſtle of purpoſe doth propound, Vbi ergo eſt gloriatio tua? as if hee ſhould admoniſh us, that this Name is given with expreſſe intent, to exclude it from us, and us from it. And therefore, in that very place where hee ſaith, hee is made unto us from GOD, righteouſneſſe: To this end (ſaith hee) hee is ſo made, Vt qui gloriatur, in Domino glorietur. All which I put you in minde of, to this end, that you may marke, that this nipping at this Name of CHRIST, is for no other reaſon, but that wee may have ſome honour our ſelves, out of our righteouſneſſe.

Bellarmine doth diſcloſe as much, and doth not ſtick in plain termes to avow it. For, in anſwer to that argument, which is alleaged by us, that after wee are acquit of our ſinnes at this barre, and that onely for Chriſt our onely righteouſneſſe; wee are received into GODS favour, and made his Children by adoption, and then have heaven by way of inheritance: He anſwereth directly, Their meaning is, not to content themſelves with that ſingle title of inheritance; but they meane to lay claime to it, duplici jure. That is, not onely titulo hæreditatis, but jure mercedis too. And thereof he giveth this reaſon, Quoniam magis honorificum eſt, habere aliquid ex merito: For, that it is more for their honour, to have it by merit. For, ſo (ſaith hee) CHRIST had it, and they muſt not be behind Him, but goe even as farre as He did. So that, it ſeemeth hee is reſolved, but rather than they will loſe their honour, CHRIST muſt part with a peece of His Name, and bee named Iuſtitia noſtra, onely in the latter ſenſe. Which is yet, the Prophet after (in the twenty ſeventh Verſe of this Chapter) ſetteth downe as a marke of falſe Prophets; that by having a pleaſant dreame of their owne righteouſneſſe, they make GODS people to forget His Name. As indeed, by this meanes, this part of CHRISTS Name hath beene forgotten. And ſo much doth Pighius confeſſe, Diſſimulare non poſſumus, hanc vel primam doctrinæ Chriſtianæ partem obſcuratam quàm illuſtratam magis à ſcholaſticis ſpinoſis pleriſque queſtionibus, that this, being the very chiefe part of a Chriſtian doctrine, hath rather beene obſcured, than received any light, by the Schoolemens queſtions and handling of it. As much to ſay as, they had made the people in a manner to forget this Name.

2 Our benefit. Now as to call Him by this Name is a Dutie; ſo to call Him by it, is an Vſe likewiſe, and a Benefit there is which we receive by it. For calling Him by that Name, which GOD hath preſcribed, and which therefore is to Him moſt acceptable, we ſhall not doe it for nought, for Hee will anſwere us; anſwere us, and anſwere for us; for us, as an Advocate in our Cauſe. So calleth Ezekias to Him: Domine vim patior, reſponde pro me. So King David repoſeth himſelfe: Thou ſhalt anſwere for mee, O Lord my God. And this ſhall Hee, in all things wherein we ſhall need Him: but above all, in that which concerneth His name in particular, to bee our righteouſneſſe againſt ſinne, and that before the righteous Iudge. And even ſo doth Ieremie teach us to pray unto Him: O Lord our miſdeeds teſtifie againſt us, yet deale thou with us according to thy Name; Which is Iehova iuſtitia noſtra. In Thy Name wee are juſtified: deale Thou with us according to Thy Name and juſtifie us. Our ſinnes are forgiven for thy Names ſake: Deale Thou with us according to thy Name and forgive us our ſinnes. Et noli ita reminiſci peccatum noſtrum, ut velis propterea obliviſci Nomen tuum: Let not the remembrance of our ſins make thee forget thine owne Name. And this if wee doe, thus if wee call on Him, Fidelis & juſtus eſt, Hee is faithfull (ſaith Saint Iohn) and juſt to forgive us our ſinnes, to juſtifie us and to be our righteouſneſſe For ſo is His Name, and He beareth not His Name for nought.

Eſay 38.14. Pſal. 38.15. Chap. 14.9. 1 Cor. 6.11. 1 Ioh. 1.9.

And, this if we doe, and if He be our Righteouſneſſe, as we may ſay in reſpect of His other Name with the Prophet, Looke Thou upon us and bee mercifull unto us, as thou uſeſt to doe unto thoſe that love Thy Name; ſo may we in reſpect of this, goe further and ſafely ſay, Eſto Iuſtitia, & fac juſtitiam; eſto juſtitia, & intra in judicium cum Servo tuo. For with this Advocate, with this Righteouſneſſe, with this Name, we may without feare, appeare before the King executing judgement and juſtice.

Pſal. 119. 132.

So, for that dutie which wee are bound to acknowledge, wee have this this benefit which wee ſhall bee ſure to receive; the greateſt benefit that can bee received for importance in it ſelfe; and the greateſt in reſpect of the moſt dreadfull place and time, wherein we ſhall need to receive it; wherein heaven and earth and all in them ſhall not be able to ſtand us in ſtead, but IEHOVA our Righteouſneſſe onely. And this is the view of His Name, wherby we are called to him, as well for our dutie to it, as for our benefit by it, which is that, the Prophet by his Ecce willeth us to behold, and the ſumme of this Scripture.

A SERMON PREACHED AT WHITEHALL, VPON THE XV. OF November, Anno Domini, MDCI.

MAT. Chap. XXIIb. Ver. XXI.

Reddite ergo quæ ſunt Cæſaris Cæſari; & quæ ſunt DEI DEO.

Give therefore to Cæſar, the things which are Cæſars: and to GOD, thoſe things which are GODS.

WHich XXII. of Matthew in effect, is nothing elſe but a Chapter of Controverſies: with the Saducee, Ver. 23. with the Phariſee, Verſe 22: with the Scribe, Ver. 34. and (here) with the Herodian. With the Saducees, of the Reſurrection: With the Phariſees, of the great Commandement: With the Scribes, of the Meſsias. All worthy to bee weighed; and all at other times commended by the Church, to our conſideration. This here in this.

The Herodian was a Politique; and his queſtion according, about a ſecular point; Licetne ſolvere? The caſe ſtandeth not in this, as it did in the other. The Phariſees and Saducees had no further end, but to ſet Him on ground, and ſo, to expoſe Him to the contempt of the people. The Herodians had laid a more dangerous plot: they came with this mind

Luc. 20. 20. ſaith Saint Luke, Vt caperent Eum, &c. to catch Him; by catching ſomewhat from Him, whereby they might lay Him faſt, and draw Him within danger of the ſtate. It ſtood our Saviour upon, to be well adviſed, to eſcape this ſnare thus layd for Him, which accordingly He doth: leaving them in a muſe, and withall under one, leaving us a patterne; that He is no enemie, but a friend to Cæſar, and a friend, in this ſpeciall point, of his receipt. That there is no duty, no not in this kind, but Chriſt ſaith of it, Reddite; willeth and commandeth it, to be Rendred. That ſo, knowing what CHRIST held, we may make it our Tenet; and both hold it in opinion, and hold us to it in practice for ever.

At or about the birth of CHRIST, this came to be firſt a queſtion:
Luc. 2. 1. and ſo from thence, ſtill remained. So that, it was very meete, Chriſt ſhould reſolve it. At His birth, was the great Taxe of the world under Auguſtus: which being a new impoſition, and never heard of before, fell
Act. 5. 36. out to breed much matter of queſtion: Two ſorts of men taking two ſe-
37. verall parts about it. There is in Act. 5. mention of Iudas of Galilee, that roſe in the daies of tribute. He it was, that held touching the Taxe, Quod non. The people of God, Abrahams ſeede, free borne, they to bee charged with taxes, by a ſtranger, a heathen, an idolater? No, rather riſe and take armes, as Ieroboam did. The Peoples eares itched after this doctrine. The beſt religion for the Purſe, is the beſt for them; and they, ready to hold with Ieroboam, or Iudas, or any that will abrogate payments. And now, though Iudas was taken, and had as he deſerved; and after his execution, pay it they did, though with an ill will; yet the ſcruple of this queſtion remained in mens minds ſtill; they continued irreſolute, touching the right of it. As indeed, in no one thing, men are ever ſo long in reſolving. Still there were, that muttered in corners, Iudas was right: Tribute was but a meere exaction. Men indeed of tumultuous Spirits; but in ſhew zealous preſervers of the Peoples liberties, whom they called Gaulonites.

On the other ſide, Herod and they that were toward him, being all that they were by Cæſar; to make the tribute ſure worke, they held, that not onely Tribute, but whatſoever elſe was Cæſars. His quæ was quæcunque: He could not have enough; not till he had quæ Dei too. The Roman Monarchie pricked faſt toward this point: Diviſum imperium cum Iove, was received at this time with great applauſe. Cæſar and Iupiter at halves; halfe GOD. Not long after, full out a God; Edictum Domini, &c. the edict of our Lord God Domitian. And this was not a peece of Poetry: but we finde in the Iewiſh ſtorie, Petronius in good earneſt, ſought to bring in Caligula's image, into the Temple of God; and called for, not onely Tribute, but ſacrifice for Cæſar. Now them, that thus in derogation of the Peoples libertie, held this part, they termed Herodians; As it were men for Herods turne. And thus held this Queſtion: Thus have wee both ſides; and both their abettours. Of which the People inclined to the Gaulonite, and liked them better: the Stateſmen and Officers tooke part with the Herodian.

People

Now come they to CHRIST, to receive His reſolution, which part He will take to. It is, for them, a very Quodlibet. If, to retaine the peoples favour, to avoid their out-cry, he ſpeak but doubtfully of Cæſars tribute, habetur propoſitum, they have what they would: It is that, they came for; to bring him in diſgrace with the State, and in danger of his life. Thus, would they fain have had it; and therefore, when truly they could not (as, by this anſwer, it is too plaine) untruly, they ſuggeſted, We found this man denying to pay tribute unto Cæſar. But, if this hit not, if He be for the tribute; yet will it not be from the purpoſe: they ſhall ſet the people (as good as a waſps neſt) upon Him; they ſhall ſubject him to their clamour and obloquie. He that muſt be their MESSIAS, muſt proclaime a Iubile; muſt cry, No tribute, Otherwiſe, he is not for them; if he betray them to the ſervitude of Tolls and Taxes, away with him; Not Him, but Iudas of Galilee. So have they him, at a dangerous Dilemma: Imagining, hee muſt needes take one part. But that was their error. For CHRIST tooke a way between both. For, as neither part is (ſimply) true: ſo is their ſome truth, in both. Therefore, He anſwers not abſolutely (as they fondly conceived, he needs muſt) but with a double Quæ, as (indeed) he ſhould; which, was not the anſwere, they looked for. But it was ſuch, as they miſſed their purpoſe, and knew not how to reprove it. Luc. 23. 1.

The ſumme whereof is: that, CHRIST is neither Gaulonite nor Herodian: Nor no more are Chriſtians, Gaulonites to deny Cæſar his Quæ; nor Herodians, to grant him GODS, and leave GOD none at all. But ready to acknowledge what due is; to either; both, of Faith to GOD, and Allegeance to Cæſar; and that in every point, and even in this here, of Licetne ſolvere?

The ſubſtance of which anſwer, is the maine ground of all Iuſtice; Suum cuique, Let everie one render to each, that which is his. And, if to every one; then to theſe two great ones, Cæſar, and GOD. To Cæſar, Cæſars Due; to GOD, GODS. Vpon which two Dueties, by vertue of this Text, there goeth forth two degrees, for all the world to be taxed. The firſt taxing, to be for Cæſar, and his affaires. 2. The like taxe to be levied for GOD and for His. For, though many other duties be due to both, and to be rendered to them both; yet the matter of principall entendment in this place, is Oſtende mihi numiſma, matter of payment.

The Diviſion

Theſe be the two Capitall points. Wherein, 1. of the joynt and mutuall conſiſtence, of Cæſar and of GOD. I.

2. That there are, among the things we have, certaine of them, things of Cæſars. Certaine others, things of GODS. II.

3. That theſe things are to be rendred and given. III.

4. What theſe things are that are Cæſars in this kinde: and what thoſe, that are GODS, that we may pay each his owne. IV.

I. Cæſar and God joyntly.

FRom this happy conjunction of theſe two great Lights (Cæſar and GOD) heere met together, linked with this Copulative, Cæſari and DEO; and both in compaſſe of one Period; againſt the Gaulonite of our Age, the Anabaptiſt (who thinketh, they are in oppoſition, the whole heaven in ſunder; and that GOD hath not His due, unleſſe Cæſar lay downe His Scepter.) That Cæſar and GOD, CHRIST and a Chriſtian Magiſtrate, are ἀσύζυγα, incompatible; that they ſtand aloofe, and will not one come neere another; Heere is a Syſtaſie, a Conſiſtence: they will ſtand together well (both they and their duties:) as cloſe as one Verſe, one breath, one period can joine them.

To ſee then this paire thus neere, thus coupled, thus (as it were) arme in arme together, is a bleſſed ſight. Not heere onely to be ſeene; but all the Scriptures through, with like aſpect. Heere in one Goſpell, Cæſar and GOD. Before in one Law, GOD providing as for His owne worſhip, ſo for their honour that are ſet over us. In one Verſe the Prophet joineth them (Pro. 24. 21.) My Sonne, feare GOD and the King: And in one Verſe the Apoſtle ſorteth them (1 Pet. 2.17.) Feare GOD, honour the King. So, GOD and CHRIST, the Law and Goſpell, the Prophets and Apoſtles, fetcht not their breath, come not to a full point, till they have taken in both. Sure it is, CHRIST and Belial agree not (2 Cor. 6. 11.) and as ſure, that they are the children of Belial; that have no part in David (that is, the lawfull Magiſtrate) by Sheba's caſe, 2 Samuel 20. 1.

Exod. 20.

This is enough to ſhew; GOD impeacheth not Cæſar; nor GOD's due, Cæſar's right. Either permitteth others intereſt; and both of them may jointly be performed. That as GOD's Law ſupporteth the Law of Nations; So doth CHRIST plead for Cæſar: His Religion, for Cæſars Allegeance; His Goſpell, for Cæſars dutie, even to a penny. It was but a penny was ſhewed: Not ſo much as a penny of Cæſars, but CHRIST will ſpeake, he may have it. This againſt the Gaulonite, that ſteppes over Quæ Cæſaris, the firſt part, and is all for Quæ Dei, the latter. And againſt the Herodian too; by whom Quæ Cæſaris is ſtood on alone, and Quæ Dei ſlipped over. Two duties are ſet forth; there is a like regard to be had of both, that wee make not CHRISTS anſwere ſerve for either alone. I know not how, an evill uſe hath poſſeſſed the World: Commonly, one duty is ſingled out and much made of, without heed had had of the other. Quæ Cæsaris, audibly and with full voice; Quæ Dei drowned and scarce heard. And it is not in this alone, but in many others: We cannot raise the price of one vertue, but we must crie downe all the rest. Not canonize Preaching, but Prayer must grow out of request. Not possible; to bring up Almes and workes of Mercie, but Offerings and workes of Devotion must bee laid downe. But by sale of CHRIST's ointment, no way to provide for the poore. Sensible in others, and this too dull.

GOD is not entire (thinks the Gaulonite) unlesse Cæsars image and superscription be blotted out. Cæsar hath not enough, till GOD have nothing left, thinkes the Herodian.

CHRIST's course is the best; to hold the meane betweene both: Either to be preserved in his right. Not to looke so much on one, as we lose sight of the other. Not to give so good an eare to one, as wee care not though the other be never spoken of. GOD hath coupled them here: and since GOD hath coupled them, let not man sever them. To Cæsar, and to GOD: Not to Cæsar only, but to Cæsar and GOD. And againe, not to GOD onely; but to GOD and Cæsar.

Cæsar and GOD then, will stand together: Descend yet one degree further, wee may put the Case harder yet. For, I demand, What Cæsar was this, for whose interest CHRIST here pleadeth? To quicken this point somewhat more: It is certaine, it was Tiberius, even hee under whom our SAVIOVR was (and knew He was to be) put to death: A stranger from Israel: A Heathen man, uncircumcised, an idolater, and enemy to the Truth. So were Augustus and the rest, you will say: But even in morall goodnesse, he nothing so good as they. The Roman stories are in every mans hand: Men know, he was far from a good Prince, or good man either, as good went even among the Heathen. Yet even this Cæsar, and such as he; any Cæsar will stand with GOD, and GOD with them, for all that.

Not only, to Cæsar, but to this, and such as this, Reddite (saith CHRIST) Solvite (saith Paul) Subjecti estote (saith Peter) for all that: So was the old Divinitie. Though an evill spirit sent from GOD vexe Saul, yet (saith David) destroy not, it is his word; Nay, Touch not the Lords Anointed. Though Nebuchadnezzar set up a great Idoll in the field Dura; and Balthazar his sonne rather worse, than his father; yet, Pray for Nebuchadnezzar saith Ieremie; and for Balthazar his sonne, and for the peace even of that State. From these examples, might Iudas of Galile have taken his directions. CHRIST did; and His Apostles after Him, willed duties to be paid and obedience to be yeelded, and yeelded it themselves, to such Cæsars as Claudius, Caligula and Nero, Dyscolis Dominis (as S Peters terme is) if ever there were any. Which sheweth, they were all of minde, that Cæsar (though no better than these) and GOD will stand together well enough. Yea, that though Cæsar gave not GOD His due, as theſe did not certainely; yet, are wee to give Cæſar, that his is notwithſtanding.

Rom. 13. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 13. 1 Sam. 26. 9. 1 Chr. 16. 22. Dan. 3. 1. Dan. 5. Baruc. 1. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 18.

I know, we all know; if this Cæſar be Conſtantine, or Theodoſius, the caſe is much the ſtronger, and the duty toucheth us neerer. But whether he be or no, the Powers that are, are ordained of GOD, though Tiberius or Nero have the Powers. It is not the man, it is the ordinance of GOD, we owe and performe our ſubjection to. We yeeld it not to Tiberius, but to Cæſar; and Cæſar is Gods ordinance, be Tiberius what he will. This, for the conſorting of GOD and Cæſar, and even, of this Cæſar.

Rom. 13. 1.
Rom. 13. 2.

II. Certaine things Cæſars. Certaine things Gods.

That point eſtabliſhed, we come to the ſecond, out of theſe words quæ Cæſaris & quæ Dei, This may we inferre: That among the things we have, we all and every of us, have certaine things of Cæſars, and certain other things of Gods. That all the things we have, are not our own; inaſmuch as out of them, there belong ſome things, to either of theſe. It is, as if CHRIST would make, all we have not to be fully and wholy ours; but three perſons to be intereſſed in them: Cæſar to have a right to ſome; GOD to other ſome; and the remainder onely, cleerly to be ours. (Weigh the words Quæ Dei.) So that, His meaning is every man ſhould thus make accompt with himſelfe, of that he hath, that there is in his hands ſomewhat that pertaineth to either of theſe two. That there is in our ſubſtance, a portion whereto they have as good right and title, as we to the reſt. That what we have is ours, GODS part and Cæſars part firſt deducted, Quæ Dei & Quæ Cæſaris (it is the caſe poſſeſsive) doe carry thus much. Therefore ſaith the true Iſraelite, when he tendereth his offering to GOD, Suſtuli quod Sanctum eſt è domo meâ: I had a holy portion due to GOD amongſt my goods, I have ſevered it from the reſt, I have brought it and layd it upon the Altar. So, they in 1 Sam. 10. to Saul their lawfull Magiſtrate, preſented that was his. They that did ſo, Tetigit Deus cor eorum, GOD had touched their hearts. Conſequently, in their hearts that did it not, there was the Print of the Devils clawes, not the touch of the finger of GOD. This may ſerve for the ſecond of the duty; for wee ſhall ſtrike the ſame naile home, in the third of Reddite.

Deut. 26. 13.
1 Sam. 10. 26, 27.

III. Theſe to be rendred.

For, from this right thus imported in the words (Quæ Cæſaris quæ Dei) without any ſtreining, naturally doth follow the Reddite.

That theirs it is, and ſo being theirs, to be payd them. Not of courteſie, but of duty, Not, as a free largeſſe, but as a due debt. Not Date, but Reddite, ἀπόδοτε. As if our Saviour ſhould ſay, you aske me whether it be lawfull to pay, I tell you, it is as lawfull to pay it, as it is unlawfull to to with-hold it: you would know whether you may; I ſay unto you, you not only may, but muſt anſwer it. Nor dare, as a matter of gift, but reddere, as a matter of repayment or reſtitution. Saint Paul maketh this point yet more plaine: indeed paſt all controverſie, where he addeth to ἀπόδοτε the other ὀφειλὰς, to the word of rendring, the plaine terme of debts: Expreſly calling them debts, both Tribute and Cuſtome.

Then what is payd to the Prince, or to GOD, is not to be termed a donative, gratuitie, or benevolence, but of the nature of things reſtored, which though they bee in our keeping, are in very deed other mens. And they that reckon of them as matters meerely voluntarie, muſt alter CHRIST'S Reddite needs; and teach Him ſome other terme. But they that will learne of Him, muſt thinke and call them debts; muſt accompt themſelves debters; and that God and Cæſar are as two creditors, and they indebted to them both; and thereby as truely bound to diſcharge themſelves of theſe, as of any debt, or bond they owe. That, if they render not theſe duties, they detaine that which is none of theirs: and ſo doing, are not onely hard and illiberall, but unrighteous and unjuſt men. Rom. 13. 7.

This from Reddite, but this is not all. There is yet a further matter in it, which giveth a great grace to this rendring.

For in that Hee willeth them, ἀπόδοτε. His meaning is withall it ſhould not be ἀπότισις a forced yeelding, but ἀπόδοσις a Rendering, and that willingly; for ſo the nature of the word doth import, and ſo the Grecians diſtinguiſh ἀποτίσαι, and ἀποδοῦναι. Our tranſlation readeth Give to Cæſar; no doubt, with reference to this; that it ſhould (though duely) yet ſo willingly be payd, as it were even a franke gift. In our ſpeech we ſay, What is more due than debt? And againe, What is more free than gift? Yet both theſe may meete, as in another caſe, the Apoſtle coupleth them ὀφειλομένην εὐνοίαν; Duety, yet Benevolent; Benevolence and yet due; the one reſpecting the nature, the other the minde: So, both tranſlations not amiſſe, both readings reconciled.

That is not therefore to pay them, becauſe it will no better be. Cæſar hath vim coactivam. Hophni hath a fleſh-hooke, and can ſay, date vel auferetur à vobis: and therefore to part with it, as one delivereth a purſe, or to beare it as a Porter doth his load, groning under it: that is not the manner of Rendering it, that is here required. But we muſt offer it as it were a Gift, voluntarily, willingly, cheerefully, ἐκ χαρᾶς, ἐκ ψυχῆς: Not, ἐξ ἀνάγκης, ἐκ λύπης. Διὰ τὸν κύριον (ſaith Saint Peter) διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν (ſaith Saint Paul:) Even for the LORD, even for conſcience ſake; though Hophni had no fleſh-hooke, though Cæſar had no Publican to take a ſtreſſe. 1 Sam. 2. 13. Col. 3. 23. 2 Cor. 9. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 13. Rom. 13. 5.

To pay it with grudging and an evill eye, to ſay Vade & redi cras, to put off, to pay it after often comming and ſending; this is not ἀπόδοσις, theſe the heathen man termeth viſcata beneficia, when they hang to the fingers like bird-lime, and will not come away. Pro. 3. 28.

Nay

Pſal.39.8. Nay, Ecce venio (ſaith CHRIST;) So to pay it, even with Love
2 Cor.9.5. and goodwill: An offering of a free heart (as the Prophet;) a bleſſing and a grace (as the Apoſtle termeth it.) The manner is much, and much to bee regarded. The willingneſſe of the minde, is ever the fat of the ſacrifice, and without it, all is leane and drie. It holdeth here, which the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor.9. If I preach (ſaith he; if we pay, ſay we) we
1 Cor.9.26. have no great cauſe to rejoyce: Neceſsitie lieth on us ſo to doe. But if we doe it with a goodwill, there is then a reward. A reward at His hands,
2 Cor.9.7. who as His Apoſtle telleth us, Hilarem datorem diligit. Not datorem, any that giveth; but hilarem, him that giveth it cheerefully. That gift beſt
1 Chro 9.5. pleaſeth GOD; and that ſervice, Læti ſerviamus Regi, is ever beſt pleaſing and moſt acceptable.

IV.

What are Cæſars, what Gods.

Render then, and give, Quæ Cæſaris Cæſari (that is) the right duty to the right owner: As, dutifully and willingly, ſo to doe it wiſely. In Suum cuique, there is no onely juſtice, but wiſedome, to know and to preſerve to every one that is his owne; the right quæ, to him that of right it belongeth to.

1 Cor.14. 33. Not to ſhuffle them together; Cæſar's to GOD, GOD's to Ceſar; it skills not which to which. GOD is not the Author of confuſion: but, to know and diſcerne, what to each, pertaineth; and what pertaineth, that Mat.19.6. to be anſwered. As before we pleaded, What GOD hath joyned, man ſhould not ſever; ſo now we pleade again, What GOD hath ſevered, man ſhould Deut.19.14. not confound: The Prophet calleth it removing the Land-marke, which GOD hath ſet to diſtinguiſh the duties, that neither invade the others right, but keepe the partition which He hath ſet up. Not to ſtand (as heere they doe,) ſtreining at a pennie, which was Cæſars without queſtion; and doe (as after they did) receive the Romane Eagle into their Temple, which was GODS right, and but ſlightly of them looked to. Ægerrimè pendere tributum, promptiſſimè ſuſcipere Religionem: with much adoe to pay any tribute at all, with little adoe to receive one religion after another. GOD forbid, Cæſar ſhould ſo readily receive GODS duties at their hands, as He might eaſily have them if He would.

To the end then, we may know, which to render to which, it remaineth we inquire what is eithers due, that we may tender it accordingly. And firſt, what is Cæſars.

If we aske then, what is Ceſars? Our anſwer muſt bee; what GOD hath ſet over to him. For, though Quæ Dei ſtand laſt in place; yet ſure it is, the former Quæ commeth out of the latter, and Quæ Cæſaris, is derived out of Quæ Dei.

1 Chro. 29. 19. Originally, in the perſon of all Kings, doth King David acknowledge; that, All things are of Him, and all things are His. But the ſovereigne bounty of GOD was ſuch, as Hee would not keepe all, in His owne owne hands; but as He hath vouchſafed to take unto Himſelfe a ſecondary meanes in the government of mankind; ſo hath He ſet over unto them a part of His owne dutie, that ſo one man might be one anothers debtor, and (after a ſort) Homo Homini Deus. To the conveiance then, of diverſe benefits, He hath called to Himſelfe diverſe perſons, and joined them with Himſelfe: As our Parents, to the worke of our bringing forth; our Teachers, in the worke of our training up; and many other, in their kinds, with Him, and under Him, His meanes and Miniſters, all for our good. Rom. 13.4.

And in the high and heavenly worke of the preſervation of all our lives, perſons, eſtates, and goods, in ſafety, peace and quietneſſe, in this His ſo great and divine benefit, He hath aſſociated Cæſar to Himſelfe: and in regard of His care and travell therein, hath entitled him to part of His owne right; hath made over this Quæ, and made it due to Cæſar, and ſo commeth he to claime it.

In which point we learne, if we pay tribute, what we have for it back in exchange: if wee give, what Cæſar giveth us for it againe; our penny and our penny-worthes: Even this, Vt ſit pax & veritas in diebus noſtris. Eſay 39.8. This is it, to which we doe debitum reddere, as he calleth it (Rom. 13.) Rom. 13.7. This, to which we doe mutuam vicem rependere, as he ſpeaketh, 1 Tim. 5.4. 1 Tim.5.4. διὰ τοῦτο, and even for this cauſe pay we Tribute. For this, that while we Rom. 13.6. intend our private pleaſures and profits in particular, we have them that ſtudy how we may ſafely and quietly doe it; that counſell and contrive our peace, while we intend every man his owne affaires: that wake while we ſleep ſecurely, and carke and care, while we are merry and never thinke of it. Perſons, by whoſe providence, an happy Peace we long have enjoyed, and many good bleſsings are come to our Nation. In which reſpect, wee owe them a large Quæ; larger than I (now) can ſtand to recount.

1 We owe them honour inward, by a reverent conceipt. 2. And outward, by an honourable teſtimony of the vertues in them and the good wee receive by them. And ſure I am, this wee owe, Not to ſpeake evill of them that are in authoritie: and if there were ſome infirmity, not to blaze, but to conceale and cover it; for that the Apoſtle maketh a part of honour, 1 Cor. 12. 23. 3. Wee owe them our Prayers, and dayly devout remembrances; For all (ſaith Saint Paul) but by ſpeciall prerogative for Princes. 4. We owe them the ſervice of our bodies, which if wee refuſe to come in perſon to doe, the Angell of the Lord will curſe us, as he did Meroz, Iud. 5. 24. And in a word to ſay with the Apoſtle, Non recuſo mori. 1 Pet. 2. 10. Iude 8. 1 Tim.2.2. Act. 25. 11.

All theſe wee owe, and all theſe are parts of quæ Cæſaris, but theſe are without the compaſſe of this quæ here. Theſe bee not the things here queſtioned. It is the coine with Cæſars ſtampe, it is a matter of payment. Let us hold us to that.

I ſay

I ſay then, that to be ſafe from the forrein enemie, from the wolfe abroad, is a very great benefit. The ſword holdeth him out; propter hoc we owe to the ſword. To bee quiet from the inward violent injurious oppreſſors, the fat and foregrowne rammes within our owne fold, is a ſpeciall bleſsing: The Scepter holds them in; Propter hoc we owe to the Scepter. That by meanes of Cæſars Sword, wee have a free Sea, and ſafe port and harbour; Propter hoc wee owe to Cæſar our cuſtome. That by meanes of his Sword, we have our ſeed-time to eare the ground, our harveſt, to inne the crop quiet and ſafe; Propter hoc we owe to Cæſar our Tribute or taxe. That by meanes of his Scepter, we have right in all wrongs, and are not overborne in our innocencie, by ſuch as never ceaſe to trouble ſuch as are quiet in the land: Propter hoc we owe to Cæſar, the fees due to His Courts of Iuſtice.

Theſe are Quæ Cæſaris; and not one of theſe but hath his ground in the Word of God. The Cuſtome, Luc. 3. 13. The Taxe, 1 Sam. 17. 25. The Fines, Ezra 7. 26. The Confiſcation, Ezra 10. 8.

Theſe then are Quæ Cæſaris. But theſe are current and ordinarie: But extraordinary occaſions cannot be anſwered with ordinary charges. Though, in peace, the ſet maintenance of Garriſons which is certaine, (the ordinance of Ioſaphat) is enough, 2 Chro. 17. 3. yet when warre commeth, πολεμὸς ὁ τεταγμένα ζητεῖ, Warre admitts no ſtint, but as occaſions call for it, ſupply muſt be ready.

There is no ſafety or aſſurance of quietneſſe, except the Enemie feare. There is no feare without power, except we bee able to hold our owne, maugre the malice and force of the enemies. There is no power, but by preparation of Souldiers and furniture for warre. Nor that, without Pay (the Sinnewes of all affaires:) Nor Pay, without Contribution. And Propter hoc, διὰ τοῦτο, beſides thoſe other ordinary, the indictions for warre (which we call ſubſidies) are part of Quæ Cæſaris too. And warranted by the Scripture: Amaziah, levying a hundred Talents at one time againſt Edom: Menahem levying a thouſand Talents, at another, againſt Aſſur (a great contribution of fifty ſicles a man.) Indeed ſo it was, but ſuch were the occaſions: and the occaſions being ſuch, done; and done lawfully.

2 Chr. 25. 6. 2 King. 15. 19. 20.

Then, as generally we are bound to render all Quæ Cæſaris: So, in particular, by this Text, and at this inſtant, this Quæ; when the times make it requiſite, and it is orderly required.

Christ, that willeth us to render it, rendred it Himſelfe: and very timely He did it. For, He went to be taxed, being yet in His mothers wombe (as Levi is ſaid to pay tithe in His Fathers loynes.) And He was borne under the obedience of paying this duty. This may haply bee ſayd not to bee His owne act: Therefore after at full yeares, then alſo, though Hee might have pleaded exemption (as Hee telleth Peter) yet payed He His Stater; though not due, yet to avoid the offence of refuſing

Luc. 2. 5. Heb. 7. 9, 10.

Mat. 17. 27.

to

to pay to Cæſar, Conditor Cæſaris cenſum ſolvit Cæſar. Seeing then, Cæſar's Creator payd Cæſar his due, will any denie to doe it? Eſpecially ſeeing He payd Cæſar his due, yea even then, when Cæſar did not render to GOD His due, but to Idolls; and what colour then, can any have to deny it?

So have we His Example, whereof we have here his Precept: doing that before us, which He willeth us to doe after Him, and calling to us for no more, than He did Himſelfe. And enſuing His ſteps, His Apoſtle preſſeth the ſame point; telling us, Cuſtome and Tribute are ὀφειλαὶ, debts; Rom.13.7. ſhewing us, why they be debts, διὰ τοῦτο, for the good we receive; and willing us therefore to depart with them, even propter conſcientiam, for very conſcience ſake.

Let me adde but this one. The fore-fathers of theſe here that move this doubt, they forſooke Davids Houſe, only becauſe they thought much of paying the taxe which Salomon had ſet, and they revolted to Ieroboam: what got they by it? By denying Quæ Cæſaris, they loſt Quæ Dei, the true Religion; and beſides enthralled themſelves to far greater exactions, which the erecting of a new Eſtate muſt needs require. Even theſe, not obeying this advice, this Reddite of our Saviours, but mutining for the Roman tribute after, under Florus and Albinus Deputies for Cæſar; beſides that they loſt their Temple, Sacrifice, and Service, their Quæ Dei; upon this very point, overthrew their eſtate cleane, which to this day they never recovered. Therefore Reddite Quæ Cæſaris, is good counſell, leſt Quæ Dei and all goe after it.

To conclude then, 1 Cæſar and GOD will ſtand together; yea Tiberius Cæſar and GOD. 2 To theſe, ſo ſtanding, there are certaine things due, of duety belonging. 3 Theſe things ſo due are to be rendred: Not, given as Gratuities, but rendred as Debts: And againe, with good will to be rendred, not delivered by force: And as willingly, ſo wiſely; Cæſar to have his, GOD His; in diſtinction, not confuſion, but each his owne. 4 Cæſar, ſuch duties; all ſuch duties as pertaine to him at large; but as this text occaſioneth, the duty of Tribute and ſubſidie. This is the Summe.

And if Tiberius Cæſar, much more that Prince, that every way Chriſt Himſelfe would commend before Tiberius; whom it were an injurie, once to compare with Tiberius: Above any Cæſar of them all: who hath exalted Him whom Tiberius crucified; and profeſſed Him, with hazard of her eſtate and life, whom they perſecuted in all bloudy manner.

Who hath preſerved us, in the profeſsion of His holy Name and truth many yeares, quietly without feare, and peaceably without interruption; and, ſo may ſtill, many and many times many yeares more. To this, to ſuch a one, by ſpeciall due, Reddite more; and more willingly, and more bounteouſly, than to them. The concluſion is good, the Conſequent much more forcible. This, for Quæ Cæſaris now. For Quæ Dei, at ſome other time, when like Text ſhall offer like occaſion.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT HAMPTON COVRT, on SVNDAY the XXVIII of SEPTEMBER, Anno Dom. MDCVI.

NVMB. Chap. X. Ver. I, II.

Then GOD ſpake to Moſes, ſaying,

Make thee two Trumpets of ſilver, of one whole peece ſhalt thou make them. And thou ſhalt have them (or they ſhall be for thee to aſſemble (or call together) the Congregation, and to remove the Campe.

וְיִהְיוּ לְךָ לִמְקְרָא חֲעֵדָה

AMong divers and ſundry Commiſſions grant edin the Law, for the benefit and better order of GODS people; this (which I have read) is one. Given (as we ſee) per Ipſum DEVM, by GOD Himſelfe: and that vivæ vocis Oraculo, by expreſſe warrant from His owne mouth; Then GOD ſpake to Moſes, ſaying.

A Grant.

From God.

And it is a grant of the Right and Power of the trumpets, and with them, of aſſembling the people of GOD. A Right and Power not to be lightly accounted of, or to be heard of with ſleight attention: It is a matter of great weight and conſequence, The calling of Aſſemblies. There is yeerely a ſolemne feaſt holden in memorie of it, and that by GODS owne appointment, no leſſe than of the Paſſeover, or of the Law it ſelfe, Even the Feaſt of the trumpets, much about this time of the yeare, the latter Æquinoctiall. And GOD appointeth no Feaſt, but in remembrance of ſome ſpeciall benefit. It is therfore one of

Of the power of calling Aſſemblies. The Grant of this Power, a matter of importance. Cap. 29. 1.

His ſpeciall benefits, and high favours vouchſafed them, and to be regarded accordingly.

In whoſe hands this Power was before.

This power hitherto, ever ſince they came out of Ægypt, and that GOD adopted them for His people, unto this very day and place had GOD kept in His owne hands, as to Him alone (of right) properly belonging. For unto this very day and place the people of GOD, as they had aſſembled many times and oft; ſo it was ever (they be the very laſt words of the laſt Chapter, which ſerve for an introduction to theſe of ours) ever, all their meetings and remoovings were, by immediate warrant from GOD himſelfe. But here now, GOD no longer intending, thus to warne them ſtill by ſpeciall direction from His owne ſelfe, but to ſet over this power, once for all: Here He doth it. This is the primary paſſing it from GOD, and deriving it to Moſes, who was the firſt that ever held it by force of the Law written. For, to this place they came by the ſound of GODS; and from this place they diſlodged, by the ſound of Moſes's Trumpet.

Chap. 9. V. 18, 20, 23.

Exod. 19. 13.

The time and place of the Granting.

And it is a point very conſiderable, what day and place this was: for it appeareth, they were yet at Sinai, by the 12. verſe: yet, at the very Mount of GOD, by the 33. of this Chapter, even then, when this Commiſſion came forth: So that this power is as ancient as the Law. At no other place, nor no other time delivered, then even the Law it ſelfe: when the two Tables were given, the two Trumpets were given: and Moſes that was made keeper of both the Tables, made likewiſe keeper of both the Trumpets; Both at Sinai; both at one time: As if there were ſome neere alliance betweene the Law and Aſſemblies. And ſo there is: Aſſemblies being ever a ſpeciall meanes to revive the Law (as occaſions ſerve) and to keep it in life. As if the Law it ſelfe therefore lacked yet ſomething, and were not perfect and full without them: So, till this Grant was paſſed, they ſtayed ſtill at Sinai, and ſo ſoone as ever this was paſſed they preſently removed.

Mat. 19. 4.

This the originall Grant of it

To entreat then of this power. The ſtory of the Bible would ſerve our turne to ſhew us, who have had the exerciſe of it in their hands, from time to time, if that were enough. But that is not enough. For, the errors firſt and laſt about this point, from hence they ſeeme to grow, that men look not backe enough; have not an eye to this, how it was in the beginning, by the very Law of GOD. Being therefore to ſearch for the Originall warrant, by which the Aſſemblies of GODS people are called, and kept: this place of Numbers is generally agreed to be it: That here, it is firſt found, and here it is firſt founded; even in the Law, the beſt ground for a Power that may bee.

Luke 10. 26.

In Lege quid ſcriptum eſt? quomodo legis? (ſaith our SAVIOVR) What is written in the Law? how reade you there? as if He ſhould ſay: If it be to be read there, it is well: then muſt it needs be yeelded to: there is no excepting to it then, unleſſe you will except to Law, and Law-giver, to GOD and all. Let us then come to this Commiſſion.

The Parts of the Grant.

The points of it be three: Firſt, two trumpets of ſilver, to be made out of one whole peece, both. Secondly, with theſe trumpets, the Congregation to be called, and the Camp removed. Thirdly, Moſes to make theſe Trumpets, and being made, to uſe them to theſe ends. Theſe three: 1 The Inſtrument: 2 The End, for which: 3 The Party, to whom.

Now (to marſhall theſe in their right order,) 1. The end is to be firſt: Sapiens ſemper incipit à fine (ſaith the Philoſopher.) A wiſe man beginns ever at the end: for that (indeed) is Cauſa cauſarum (as Logick teacheth us) the cauſe of all the cauſes; the cauſe that ſets them all on working. 2. Then next, the Inſtrument, which applieth this power to this end. 3. And ſo laſt, the Agent, who is to guide the Inſtrument, and to whom both Inſtrument and Power is committed.

1 The End, for which this Power is conveyed, is double; as the ſubject is double, whereon it hath his operation, 1 The Camp, and the 2 Congregation. On either of theſe, a ſpeciall act exerciſed: to remove the Campe: To call together the Congregation: One for Warre, the other for Peace.

That

That of the Campe, hath no longer uſe, than while it is warre. GOD forbid, that ſhould be long: nay, GOD forbid, it ſhould be at all. The beſt removing of the Camp, is the removing of it quite and cleane away. But if it be not poſſible, if it lie not in us, to have peace with all men, if warre muſt be, here is order for it. But, the calling of the Congregation, that is it: that is to continue, and therefore, that, which we to deale with. Rom.12.18.

The calling of the Congregation (as in the two next verſes) either in whole, or in part; either of all the Tribes, or but of the chiefe and principall men in them. A power for both theſe. And (in a word) a power generall, for calling Aſſemblies: Aſſemblies in warre: Aſſemblies in peace: Aſſemblies, of the whole: Aſſemblies of each, or any part.

2 This Power, to be executed by Inſtruments; the Inſtruments to be trumpets: two in number: thoſe to be of ſilver, and both of one entire peece of ſilver.

3 This power, and the executing of it by theſe Inſtruments, committed to Moſes. Firſt, he to have the making of theſe trumpets: Fac tibi: then, he to have the right to them being made: Et erunt tibi: then, he to uſe them to call the Congregation, and if need be, to remove the Camp. None to make any trumpet but he. None to have any trumpet but he. None to meddle with the calling of the Congregation, or removing the Camp with them but he, or by his leave and appointment.

Wherein as we find the Grant full; ſo are we further to ſearch and ſee, whether this Grant tooke place or no? Whether as theſe trumpets were made and given to call the Congregation, ſo the Congregation from time to time, have beene called by theſe trumpets. And ſo firſt of the granting this Power to be executed, and then of the executing this Power ſo granted.

So have we two Subjects: the Camp, and the Congregation. Two Acts: to Aſſemble, and to Remove. Two Inſtruments: the two ſilver Trumpets. Two Powers: to make them; to owe them being made, for the two acts or ends before ſpecified: Firſt for calling the Aſſembly, and then for diſlodging the Camp. And all theſe committed to Moſes. The ſumme of all is: the eſtabliſhing in Moſes, the Prerogative and Power, of calling and diſſolving Aſſemblies about publike affaires.

Then GOD ſpake to Moſes, &c.

IF wee begin with the End: the End is Aſſembling. Aſſembling, is reduced to Motion. Not to every motion: but to the very chiefeſt of all; as that which draweth together all; and ſo at once moveth all. For as in the Soule, when the mind ſummoneth all the powers and faculties together: Or in the body, when all the ſinewes joyne their forces together, it is ultimum potentiæ: So in the body politicke, when all the Eſtates are drawen together into one, it is nixus rather than motus, a maine ſway, rather than a motion: Or, if a motion, it is Motus magnus, no common and ordinary, but an extraordinary great Motion. Such a motion is Aſſembling, and ſuch is the nature of it. Aſſembling, a motion extraordinary.

Yet, even this (great and extraordinary as it is) ſuch and ſo urgent occaſions may, and do dayly ariſe, as very requiſite it is, ſuch Meetings there ſhould be: very requiſite (I ſay) both in Warre and in Peace, both for the Campe and for the Congregation. The ground wherof ſeemeth to be; that, power diſperſed may do many things: but to do ſome, it muſt be united. Vnited in conſultation: For, that which one eye cannot diſcerne, many may. Vnited in action: For, many hands may diſcharge that by parts, which in whole, were too troubleſome for any. But, Action is more proper to War; that is the Aſſembly of Fortitude: And Conſultation rather for Peace; that is the Aſſembly of Prudence. And in Peace, chiefely, for making of Lawes: For that, every Yet neceſſary. For the Camp. For the Congregation.

man is more willing to ſubmit himſelfe to that, whereof all to doe agree. The whole Camp, then, when it is aſſembled, will be the more ſurely fortified: And, the whole Congregation, when it is aſſembled, will be the more ſoundly adviſed. And, hereby it commeth to paſſe, that there ever hath, and ever will be, great uſe of calling Aſſemblies.

Let me adde yet one thing further, to bring it home to our ſelves. There is no people under heaven, may better ſpeake for the uſe of Aſſemblies, than we: There was nothing that did our Anceſtours the Britaines more hurt (ſaith Tacitus [a] of them) nothing that turned them to greater prejudice, than this one, That they met not, they conſulted not in common: but every man ran a courſe by himſelfe of his owne head: And, this was the greateſt advantage the Roman had of them; they were not ſo wiſe, as to know, what good there was in publike conventions. Therefore, great uſe of Aſſemblies; may we ſay of all others.

Now if they be needfull for the Camp, and for the Congregation, as it is a Civill body; I doubt not, but I may adde, alſo, every way as needfull for the Congregation properly ſo called (that is) the Church [b]. The Church hath her Warres to fight: The Church hath her Lawes to make.

Warres, with hereſies: wherein experience teacheth us, it is matter of leſſe difficultie to raze a good Fort, than to caſt down a ſtrong imagination; and more eaſie to drive out of the field a good army of men, than to chaſe out of mens minds a heape of fond opinions, having once taken head. Now, hereſies have ever been beſt put to flight by the Churches Aſſemblies (that is) Councels, as it were by the Armies of GODS Angels (as Euſebius calleth them:) yea it is well knowen, ſome hereſies could never bee throughly maſtered or conquered, but ſo.

Then for the Churches Lawes (which we call Canons and Rules) made to reſtraine or redreſſe abuſes, they have alwaies likewiſe beene made at her Aſſemblies in Councels, and not elſe-where. So that, as requiſite are Aſſemblies for the Congregation, in this ſenſe, as in any other. By this then that hath been ſaid, it appeareth, that GODS Fac tibi here is no more than needs; but that meet it is, the Trumpets bee put to making. And ſo I paſſe over to the Inſtruments, which is the ſecond part.

2 Inſtruments.

Aſſembling (we ſaid) is reduced to motion. Motion is a worke of power. Power is executed Organicè (that is) by Inſtrument: So, an Inſtrument we muſt have, wherewithall to ſtirre up, or to beginne this Motion.

Trumpets.

1 That Inſtrument to be the Trumpet. It is the ſound that GOD Himſelfe made choice of, to uſe at the publiſhing or proclaiming His Law. And the ſame ſound He will have continued, and uſed ſtill, for Aſſemblies, which are (as hath been ſaid) ſpeciall ſupporters of His Law. And the very ſame He will uſe too, at the laſt, when He will take accompt of the keeping or breaking of it; which ſhall be done, In tubâ noviſſimâ, by the ſound of the laſt Trumpe. And He holden on, or continueth one and the ſame Inſtrument, to ſhew, it is one and the ſame Power, that continueth ſtill: That, whether an Angell blow it, as at Sinai; or whether Moſes, as ever after; it is one ſound, even GODS ſound, GODS voice, we heare in both.

1 Cor. 15. 52.

Two.

2 They are to bee twaine, for the two Aſſemblies, that follow in the next Verſes: Either, of the whole tribes Coagmentativè: or of the chiefe and choice perſons of them onely, Repræſentativè. And for the two Tables, alſo. For, even this very moneth, the firſt day, they are uſed to a Civill end: the tenth day to a Holy, for the day of Expiation: Of which this latter belongeth to the firſt; that former, to the ſecond Table.

3 Of ſilver.

3 They are to be of ſilver: (not to ſeeke after ſpeculations) only, for the Metals ſake, which hath the ſhrilleſt and cleereſt ſound of all others.

4 Of one entire peece.

4 They are to be of one whole peece both of them, not of two diverſe: and that muſt needs have a meaning: it cannot be for nothing. For, unleſſe it were for ſome meaning, what skilled it elſe, though they had been made of two ſeverall plates? but only to ſhew, that both Aſſemblies are juris, both of one and the ſame right: as the Trumpets are wrought, and beaten out, both of one entire peece of Bullion.

3 But it will be to ſmall purpoſe, to ſtand much upon the Inſtrument: I make way therefore to the third point: how they ſhall be beſtowed, who ſhall have the dealing with a Eſpecially for this land of Britaine. Nec aliud adverſus validiſſimas gentes, pro nobis utilius, quàm quòd in commune non conſulunt. Rarus ad propulſandum commune periculum Conventus. Ita dum ſinguli pugnant, univerſi vincuntur. In vita Agric.

with them: For on them depends, and with them goeth the Power of calling Assemblies.

First, to whom these Trumpets, to whom this Power was granted, to call the Congregation: And then, whether the Congregation were ever after so called, by this Power, and these trumpets. To whom committed.

1 Where first, it will be soone agreed (I trust) that every body must not be allowed to be a maker of trumpets: nor when they be made, that they hang, where who that list may blow them: (that is) that every man, hand over head is not to be in case, to draw multitudes together: There will be (saith Saint Luke) Turbatio non minima, no small adoe, if that may be suffered. If Demetrius getting togither his fellow crafts-men, they may of their owne heads, rush into the common Hall, and there keepe a shouting and crying two houres together; not knowing most of them, why they came thither, and yet thither they came. There is not so much good, in publike meetings, but there is thrice as much hurt, in such as this: No Common-wealth, no not Popular Estates could ever endure them. Nay, πάντα χὴ τάξιν (say both Scripture and Nature) Let all be done in order: let us have ἔννομον ἐκκλησίαν, Lawfull orderly Assemblies, or els none at all. Away then with this confusion (to begin with:) away with Demetrius Assemblies. Nor, to all. Acts 19. 23. Acts 19. 36.

To avoid then this confusion, some must have this Power, for, and in the name of the rest. Shall it be one, or more? (for that is next.) Nay, but one (saith God) in saying, Tibi. Where I wish you marke this: That as at the first He tooke this Power into His owne hands, and called them still together Himselfe: So here, He deriveth this Power immediately from Himselfe, unto one: without first settling it, in any body collective at all. But some. Some, not many, but one.

It is from our purpose to enter the question, Whether the Power were in the whole body originally? seeing though it were, it is now by the positive ordinance of God otherwise disposed. The reason may seeme to be; Partly necessitie of expedition: The trumpets may need to be blowen sometimes, suddenly, sooner, than diverse can well meet, and agree upon it too. Partly, avoiding of distraction: The two Trumpets may be blowen, two diverse waies, if they be in two hands; and so shall the Trumpet give an uncertaine sound (1 Cor. 14. 8.) and how shall the Congregation know, whither to assemble? Nay (a worse matter yet than all that) so may we have Assembly against Assembly: and rather than so, better no Assembly at all.

Therefore, as God would have them, both made of one peece: so will He have them both made over to one Person; for, Tibi implieth one. Who is that one? It is to Moses God speaketh, to him is this Tibi directed: Him doth God nominate, and of his Person make choice, first, to make these trumpets. No man to make, no man to have the hammering of any trumpet, but he. 1 That one, Moses. Moses to be maker of them.

And there is no question, but for Aaron, and his sonnes the Priests: they are to call the Levites, to call the people together to their Assemblies; How shall they warne them together, unlesse they may make a trumpet too? But if there be any question about this, God's proceeding here, will put all out of question. For, to whom giveth He this charge? Not to Aaron, is this spoken; but to Moses: Aaron receiveth no charge to make any trumpet: Never a fac tibi, to him; neither in this, nor in any other place. To Moses is this charge given. And to Moses: Not, Make thee one (one for secular affaires; that, they would allow him) but Fac tibi duas: Make thee two, Make both. וְאַתָּה לוֹ And owner of them.

2 Well, the making is not it. One may make, and another may have: Sic vos non vobis: You know the old Verse. When they be made and done, then who shall owe them? It is expressed that, too; Et erunt Tibi: They shall be for thee. They shall be, not one for thee, and another for Aaron: but Erunt Tibi, They shall be both for thee: They shall be both thine. A third if they can finde, they may lay claime to that; But both these are for Moses.

We have then the delivery of them to Moses, to make, which is a kind of seizin, or a Ceremony investing him with the right of them. We have beside, plaine words, to lead their possession; and those words operative, Erunt Tibi: That as none to make them; them; ſo none to owne them being made, but Moſes. And what would wee have more to ſhew us, Cujus ſunt Tubæ, whoſe the Trumpets be; or whoſe is the right of calling Aſſemblies? It is Moſes's certainly, and he by vertue of theſe, ſtands ſeized of it.

That power to continue after Moſes.

To goe yet further: But was not all this to Moſes, for his time onely; and as it begun in him, ſo to take end with him? Was it not one of theſe ſame Privilegia Perſonalia, quæ non trahuntur in exemplum; A priviledge peculiar to him, and ſo no preſident to be made of it? No: for if you looke but a little forward (to the VIII. Verſe following) there you ſhall ſee, that this Power which GOD here conveyeth; this Law of the ſilver trumpets, is a Law to laſt for ever; even throughout all their generations, not that generation onely. And there is great reaſon it ſhould be ſo, that ſeeing the Vſe ſhould never ceaſe, the Power likewiſe ſhould never determine.

Moſes received it as chiefe Magiſtrate.

Being then not to determine, but to continue, it muſt deſcend to thoſe that hold Moſes's place. I demand then, what place did Moſes hold? Sure it is, that Aaron was now the High Prieſt, annointed and fully inveſted in all the rights of it, ever ſince the eighth Chapter of the laſt Booke. Moſes had in him now, no other Right, but that of the Chiefe Magiſtrate. Therefore, as in that Right (and no other) he received and held them: So, he was made Cuſtos utriuſq; Tabulæ: So, he is made Cuſtos utriuſq; Tubæ. But who can tell us better than he himſelfe, in what right he held them? He doth it in the third Verſe of Deut. XXXIII. (reade it which way you will:) Erat in Iiſhrune Rex, or, in rectiſſimo Rex, or, in Rectitudine Rex, or, in recto Regis, dum congregaret Principes populi, & Tribus Iſrael: All come to this; that, though in ſtrict proprietie of ſpeech, Moſes were no King, yet in this, he was in rectitudine Rex, or in recto Regis, (that is) in this, had (as we ſay) Ius Regale, that he might and did aſſemble the Tribes and chiefe men of the Tribes, at his pleaſure. Herein he was, Rex in rectitudine. For this was rectitudo Regis, A power Regall. And ſo it was holden in Ægypt before Moſes, even in the law of Nature: that without Pharao, no man might lift up hand or foot in all the land of Ægypt (ſuppoſe, to no publike or principall motion:) And ſo hath it been holden in all Nations, as a ſpeciall Power belonging to Dominion. Which maketh it ſeeme ſtrange, that thoſe men, which in no cauſe are ſo fervent as when they plead, that Church-men ſhould not κρατεῖν, that is, have Dominion; do yet hold this Power, which hath ever bin reputed moſt proper to Dominion, ſhould belong to none, but to them only. Our Saviour CHRIST's Vos autem non ſic, may (I am ſure) be ſayd to them here in a truer ſenſe, than as they commonly uſe to apply it.

Gen. 41. 44.

Mat. 20. 26.

The chiefe Magiſtrate to ſucceed in it.

To conclude then this point, If Moſes as in the right of Chiefe Magiſtrate held this power, it was from him to deſcend to the chiefe Magiſtrates after him over the people of GOD, and they to ſucceed him, as in his place, ſo in this right, it being by GOD Himſelfe ſetled in Moſes and annexed to his place, lege perpetuâ, by an eſtate indefeizible, by a perpetuall Law, throughout all their generations. Therefore ever after by God's expreſſe order, from yeare to yeare, every yeare on the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth, were they blowen by Moſes firſt, and after by them that held his place, and the Feaſt of the Trumpets ſolemnly holden; and to put them in mind of the benefit therby comming to them, ſo withall to keep alive and freſh ſtill in the knowledge of all, that this power belonged to their place, that ſo none might ever be ignorant, to whom it did of right appertaine, to call Aſſemblies.

Aarons Aſſemblies, how called.

And how then ſhall Aaron's Aſſemblies be called? with what Trumpet, they? GOD Himſelf hath provided for that in the X Ver. following, that with no other than theſe. (There is in all the Law, no order for calling an Aſſembly, to what end, or for what cauſe ſoever, but this, and onely this: No order for making any third trumpet: Vnder theſe two therfore all are comprized.) This order there God taketh, that Moſes ſhall permit Aaron's ſonnes to have the uſe of theſe trumpets. But the uſe, not the property. They muſt take them from Moſes, as (in the XXXI. Chapter of this book) Phinees doth: But Erunt tibi (God's owne words, Erunt tibi) muſt ſtill be remembred: His theybe, for all that: Moſes the owner ſtill, the right remaines in him: their ſounding

Verſe 10.

ſounding of them deprives not him of his intereſt, alters not the propertie: Erunt tibi, muſt ſtill be true; that right muſt ſtill be preſerved. It may be, if we communicate with fleſh and bloud, wee may thinke it more convenient (as ſome doe) that GOD had delivered Moſes and Aaron either of them one. But when wee ſee GODS will by GODS Word what it is, that Moſes is to have them both; we will let that paſſe as a Revelation of fleſh and bloud, and thinke that, which GOD thinketh, to be moſt convenient.

Now then, if the Trumpets belong to Moſes; and that to this end, that with them he may call the Congregation, theſe two things doe follow: Firſt, that if he call, the Congregation muſt not refuſe to come: Secondly, that unleſſe hee call, they muſt not aſſemble of their owne heads, but keepe their places. Briefly thus: the Congregation muſt come when it is called: and it muſt be called yer it come. Theſe are the two duties we owe to the two Trumpets, and both theſe have GODS people ever duly performed. לקמרא תשרח The two duties.

And yet not ſo, but that this Right had beene called in queſtion, yea, even, in Moſes's owne time, (that we marvell not, if it be ſo, now;) and both theſe duties denied him, even by thoſe who were alive and preſent then, when GOD gave him the Trumpets. But marke by whom, and what became of them.

The firſt dutie is, to come when they be called: and this was denied (in the XVI. Chap. following, Ver. 12.) by Core, Dathan, and their crew: Moſes ſounded his Trumpet, ſent to call them: they anſwer flatly (and that not once, but once and againe,) Non veniemus, they would not come, not once ſtirre for him or his Trumpet, they. A plaine contradiction indeed: neither is there in all that Chapter any contradiction veri nominis, true and properly ſo to be called, but onely that. You know what became of them; they went quicke to hell for it: and woe be to them, even under the Goſpell (ſaith Saint Iude) that periſh in the ſame contradiction, the contradiction of Core. 1 To come when they be called. Iude 11.

The ſecond dutie is, To be called yer they come: this likewiſe denied, even Moſes himſelfe, (that they in his place may not thinke ſtrange of it) in the XX. Chapter of this very Booke. Water waxing ſcant, a company of them grew mutinous, and in tumultuous manner, without any ſound of the Trumpet, aſſembled of themſelves. But theſe are branded too: the water they got, is called the water of Meriba: and what followed you know; None of them that drunke of it, came into the Land of Promiſe. GOD ſwore, they ſhould not enter into His reſt. 2 To be called yer they come. Chap. 20. 13.

Now, as both theſe are bad: ſo of the twaine, this latter is the worſe. The former (that came not, being called) doe but ſit ſtill, as if they were ſomewhat thicke of hearing: But theſe latter that come, being not called; either, they make themſelves a trumpet, without ever a Fac tibi: Or elſe they offer to wring Moſes's Trumpet out of his hands, and take it into their owne. Take heed of this latter: it is ſaid there, to be adverſus Moſen, even againſt Moſes himſelfe. It is the very next fore-runner to it: it prickes faſt upon it. For they that meet, againſt Moſes's will, when they have once throughly learned that leſſon, will quickly perhaps grow capable of another; even to meet againſt Moſes himſelfe, as theſe did. Periclitamur argui ſeditionis (ſaith the Towne-Clarke) We have done more than we can well anſwer: We may be indicted of treaſon, for this dayes worke, for comming together without a trumpet: and yet it was for Diana, that is, for a matter of Religion. Called, and came not. Came uncalled. Act. 19. 40.

You ſee then whoſe the Right is, and what the duties be to it, and in whoſe ſteps they tread, that deny them. Sure, they have beene baptized, or made to drinke of the ſame water (the water of Meriba,) that ever ſhall offer to doe the like, to draw together without Moſes's Call.

And now to our SAVIOVR CHRISTS queſtion: In the Law how is it written? How reade you? Our anſwer is: There it is thus written, and thus we reade: That Moſes hath the Right of the Trumpets: that they to go ever with him and his ſucceſſours: and that to them belongeth the power of calling the publike Aſſemblies.

Agreeable to the Law of Nature.

This is the Law of GOD; and that no judiciall Law, peculiar to that people alone, but agreeable to the Law of Nature and Nations; (two Lawes of force thorow the whole world.) For even in the little Empire of the body naturall, Principium motus, the beginning of all motion, is in, and from the head. There, all the knots, or (as they call them) all the conjugations of sinewes have their head, by which all the body is moved. And as the Law of Nature, by secret instinct by the light of the Creation annexeth the organ to the chiefest part: even so doth the Law of Nations, by the light of Reason, to the chiefest Person: And both fall just with the Law here written; where (by Erunt Tibi) the same organ and power is committed to Moses, the principall Person, in that Common-wealth. The Law of Nations in this point (both before the Law written, and since, where the Law written was not knowne) might easily appeare, if time would suffer, both in their generall order for conventions so to be called; and in their generall opposing to all conventicles called otherwise.

To the Law of Nations.

Verily, the Heathen lawes made all such Assemblies unlawfull, which the highest authority did not cause to meet, yea, though they were ἱερῶν Ὀργίων ἕνεκα, say Solons Lawes: yea, though sub prætextu Religionis, say the Romane Lawes. Neither did the Christian Emperours thinke good, to abate any thing of that Right. Nay, they tooke more streight order: For, besides the exiling of the person, which was the law before, they proscribed the place, where, under pretence of Religion, any such meetings should be. But I let them passe, and stand onely on the written Law, the Law of GOD.

We have Law then for us, That Moses is ever to call the Congregation. But though we have Law, Mos vincit Legem; Custome over-ruleth Law. And the Custome or practice may goe another way; and it is practice that ever best bewrayeth a Power. How then hath the practice gone? It is a necessary question this, and pertinent to the Text it selfe. For, there is a Power granted: and in vaine is that Power that never commeth into act. Came then this Power into act? It is a Power to call the Congregation together; Were the Congregations called together by it? A grant there is, That Erunt Tibi; So it should be: Did it take place? was it so; Erantne illi? Had he it? Did he enjoy it? Let us looke into that another while, what became of this Grant; what place it took. And we shall not offend Moses in so doing. It is his advice, and desire both; that we should enquire into the dayes past, that were before us, and aske, even from one end of heaven to the other; to see how matters have beene carried. So that, as our SAVIOVR CHRIST sendeth us to the Law, by His In Lege quid scriptum est? so doth Moses direct us to the use and practice, by his Interroga de diebus antiquis. I doe aske then, These Trumpets here given, this power to call together the Congregation, how hath it beene used? Hath the Congregation beene called accordingly, in this, and no other manner? by this, and no other Power? It hath (as shall appeare:) and I will deale with no Assemblies, but onely for matters of Religion.

The practice or use of this Power, among the Iewes. Deut. 4.32.

By Moses.

Of Moses, first there is no question: it is yeelded that he called them, and dismissed them. And even so did Iosua after him, no lesse than he; and they obeyed him in that Power, no lesse than Moses. And as for that which is objected concerning Moses, that he for a time dealt in matters of the Priests Office, it hath no colour in Iosua, and those that succeeded him.

Iosua. Ios. 1.17.

The Covenant, and the renewing of the Covenant, are matters meerely spirituall: yet, in that case did Iosua (Iosua, not Eleazar) assemble all the Tribes, Levi and all, to Sichem (Ios. XXIIII.) called the Assembly at the first verse: dissolved it at the XXVIII. For, if Iosua may call, he may dissolve, too: Law, Reason, Sense, teach, That Cujus est nolle, ejus est & velle. That calling, and discharging, belong both to one power. Nay, Demetrius's assembly, though they had come together disorderly, yet when the Towne-Clarke (that should have called them together) did discharge them; they added not one fault to another, but went their wayes, every man quietly, Demetrius, himselfe and all: that, they are worse than Demetrius; that deny this.

Ios. 24.18.

David. 1 Chron. 15.

But, I passe to the Kings (that Estate fitteth us better.) There, doth David call together the Priests and other persons Ecclesiastical, and that, even with these Trumpets. And for what matters? Secular? Nay: but first, when the Arke was to be removed:

And

And againe, when the Offices of the Temple were to be ſet in order: things meerely pertaining to Religion? And as he calleth them, 1 *Chron.*15.4. ſo he diſmiſſeth them, 1 *Chron.*16.43. 1 Chron. 23. 2,3,6.

The like did Salomon, when the Temple was to be dedicated; Called the Aſſembly, 2 *Chron.*5.2. diſſolved the Aſſembly in the X. verſe of the VII. Chapter following. Salomon. 2 Chro.15.14.

The like did Aſa: When Religion was to be reſtored, and a ſolemne oath of Aſſociation to be taken for the maintaining of it; with the ſound of theſe Trumpets did he it. Aſa.

Iehoſaphat uſed them, [a] when a publike Faſt to be proclaimed. Iehu uſed them, [b] when a ſolemne Sacrifice to be performed. Ioas, [c] in a caſe of Dilapidations of the Temple, a matter meerely Eccleſiaſticall. Ioſias, [d] when the Temple to be purified, and a maſſe of ſuperſtitions to be removed. Iehoſhaphat. a 2 Chro.20.3. Iehu. b Reg.10.20. Ioas. c 2 Chro.24.5 Ioſias. d 2 Chron.34. 29,30. Ezekias. 2 Chron.29.15.

In all theſe caſes, did all theſe Kings call all theſe Conventions, of Prieſts and Levites, for matters of Religion. I inſiſt onely on the fact of Ezekias. He was a King; he gave forth his precept for the Prieſts and all their brethren to aſſemble: Wherefore? Ad res Iehovæ, for the affaires of the ſervice of GOD, yea, GOD Himſelfe. There are fourteene chiefe men of the Prieſts ſet downe there, by name, that by vertue of that precept of the King, came together themſelves, they and their brethren, all, ex præcepto Regis, ad res Iehovæ, by the Kings authoritie, for matters meerely of the Church. I know not what can be more plaine: the Matters, ſpirituall: the Perſons aſſembled, ſpirituall: and yet called by the Kings Trumpet.

Thus, till the Captivitie, In the Captivitie, there have we Mardochei (when he came in place of authoritie) appointing the dayes of Purim, and calling all the Iewes in the Province together, to the celebrating of them. Mardochæus. Heſt.9.17.

After the Captivitie, Nehemias kept the Trumpet ſtill: and by it, firſt called the Prieſts, to ſhew their right to their places, by their genealogies, and after reduced them alſo to their places againe, when they were all ſhrunke away in time of his abſence. Nehimias. Nehem.7.14. Nehem.13.11.

Theſe lead the practice till you come to the Macchabees: and there it is but too evident: they profeſſe there expreſly to Simeon, made them their ruler, That it ſhould not be lawfull for any ἐπαυτρέπαι συνεφλὼ τινὰ, to call any aſſembly in the Land, ἀνεὺ αὐτῦ without him. A plaine evidence, that ſo had ever gone the courſe of their government: Elſe, how ſhould it come to paſſe, that the altering of Religion, is ſtill termed the deed of the King? that his diſpoſition, godly, or otherwiſe, did alwayes accordingly change the publike face of Religion? which thing the Prieſts by themſelves never did, neither could at any time hinder from being done. Had the Prieſts without him, beene poſſeſſed of this power of Aſſembling, how had any Act concerning Religion paſſed without them? In them it had beene to ſtop it at any time, if they had (of themſelves) had this power of Aſſembling themſelves, to ſet order in matters of Religion. The Maccabes. 1 Mac.14.44.

Thus, from Moſes to the Macchabees, we ſee in whoſe hands this power was. And what ſhould I ſay more? There was in all GODS people no one religious King, but this Power he practiſed: And there was of all GODS Prophets no one, that ever interpoſed any prohibition againſt it.

Would Eſay (ſhall we once imagine) have endured Ezekias, him to call, or the Prieſts to come together, onely by his precept, ad res Iehovæ; and not lift up his voice like a trumpet againſt it, if it had not beene (in his knowledge) the Kings right, to command, and their dutie to obey? Never, certainly. Eſay 38.1.

What ſhall we ſay then? were all theſe wrong? ſhall we condemne them all? Take heed. In all that government, GOD hath no other children, but theſe: if we condemne theſe, we condemne the whole generation of His children. Yet, to this we are come now: that either we muſt condemne them all, one after another; the Kings, as uſurpers, for taking on them, to uſe more Power, than ever orderly they received; and the Prophets, for ſoothers of them, in that their unjuſt claime: Or elſe confeſſe, they did no more, than they might; and exceeded not therein, the bounds of their calling. And indeed, that we muſt confeſſe; for that is the truth. Pſal.73.15.

This then may ſerve, for the cuſtome of GODS owne elect people. But they were Iewes, and we would be loth, to Iudaize: and it may be, this was one of the clauſes of the Law of Commandements, conſiſting of Ordinances which CHRIST came to abrogate. Epheſ. 2. 15.

The practice or uſe of this Power among Chriſtians.

I demand therefore, when CHRIST came, how was it then? will the like appeare in the aſſemblies ſince CHRIST? The very like, every way, as conſonant to that of the Old Teſtament, as may be. For CHRIST (Matth. XVIII.) giveth a promiſe of His aſſiſtance to ſuch meetings: but ſets no new order for calling of them, other than had beene taken in the Old. Therefore the ſame order to be kept ſtill.

A time there was (you know) after CHRIST, when they were Infidels; Kings and Kingdomes both. A time there followed, when Kings received Religion: and no ſooner received they it, but they received this Power of the Trumpets with it. This, to be made manifeſt. 1. By Generall Councels. 2. By Nationall and Provinciall Councels; that have beene aſſembled, 3. under Emperours, 4. and under Kings, by the ſpace of many hundred yeares.

In Generall Councels.

1. And for Generall Councels, this firſt (to begin with:) that if thoſe Aſſemblies be not rightly called, that by this Power are called; we have loſt all our Generall Councels at one blow. The Church of CHRIST hath to this day, never a Generall Councell: Vnâ liturâ, with one wipe, we daſh them out all: we leave never a one, no not one. For, all that ever have beene, have beene thus called and kept. Yea, thoſe foure firſt, which all Chriſtians have ever had in ſo great reverence, and high eſtimation; not one of them a lawfull Councell, if this new aſſertion take place. This is a perillous inconvenience: yet this we muſt yeeld to, and more than this; if we ſeeke to diſable Aſſemblies, ſo holden. For ſure it is, all the Generall Councels were thus aſſembled, all; all ſeven (for more are not to be reckoned: the eighth was onely for a private buſineſſe.) The reſt were onely of the Weſt Church alone, and ſo not Generall: The Eaſt and Weſt together, make a Generall: The Eaſt and Weſt together never met, but in one of thoſe ſeven, for publike affaires: unleſſe it were once after, in that of Ferrara.

And it is well knowne, that was in hope of helpe, on the Eaſt Churches part, which they never had; and ſo the Councell never kept, but broken, even as ſoone as it was broken up.

Briefly then to ſurvey thoſe ſeven. And I will not therein alleage the reports of Stories (they write things they ſaw not, many times, and ſo frame matters to their owne conceits; and many times are tainted with a partiall humour:) but only, out of authenticall Records in them, and out of the very acts of the Councels themſelves, beſt able to teſtifie and tell, by whoſe authoritie they came together. And it is happy for the Church of CHRIST, there are ſo many of them extant as there are, to guide us to the truth in this point, that ſo the right may appeare.

Συνεχροτήθη τῷ θεοφιλεστάτῳ Βασιλέως Κωνσταντίνου συναγαγόντος ἡμᾶς ἐκ διαφόρων πολέων τὲ καὶ ἐπαρχιῶν.

Firſt then, for the great Nicene Councell, the firſt Generall Congregation of all that were called in the Chriſtian world: The whole Councell in their Synodicall Epiſtle written to the Church of Alexandria, witneſſe, they were aſſembled (the holy Emperour Conſtantine gathering them together out of divers Cities and Provinces.) The whole letter is extant upon record in Socrates, 1. 9. and Theodoret, 1. 9. Give mee leave to make here a little ſtand: For here, at this Councell, was the pale firſt broken, and the right (if any ſuch were) here, it went firſt away. At Nice there were then together, three hundred and eighteene Biſhops, totius orbis Lumina (as Victorinus well termeth them) the Lights of the whole world; the chiefeſt and choiceſt men for holineſſe, learning, vertue and valour, that the Chriſtian Religion ever had before or ſince: Men that had laid downe their lives for the teſtimony of the truth: Did any of them refuſe to come, being called by him, as not called aright? Or, comming, was there any one of them that did proteſt againſt it? or pleaded the Churches intereſt, to meet of themſelves? Not one.

What was it then? want of skill, in ſo many famous men, that knew not their owne rights? Or want of valour, that knowing it for ſuch, would not ſo much as ſpeake a word for it, but ſit ſtill, and ſay nothing all the while? There were then and there preſent, Spyridion, Paphnutius, Potamon, and divers beſides, (but theſe I name) that had not long before, for their conſtancie, had their right eyes bored out, their right ham-ſtrings, and the ſtrings of their right arme-pits cut in ſunder. Did theſe want courage, thinke we? Were they become ſo faint-hearted, that they durſt not open their mouth, for their owne due?

Verily, that Councell of Nice, (which is, and ever hath beene ſo much admired by all Chriſtians,) cannot be excuſed before GOD or men; if they thus conſpired (all) to betray the Churches right, and ſuffered it, contrary to all equity, to be carried away; leaving a dangerous preſident therein, for all Councels ever after, to the worlds end. But, no ſuch right there was: If there had beene, they neither wanted wit to diſcerne it, nor courage to claime it. But, they knew whoſe the Trumpets were: to whom (Erunt tibi) was ſpoken: And therefore never offred to lay hold on either of them, and ſay, this is ours.

And yet (to ſay the truth,) there is no man of reaſon, but will think it reaſonable, if this were the Churches owne peculiar, if appropriate unto it (and ſo knowne to them to be) there ought to have beene plaine dealing, now at the very firſt Councell of all; that if Conſtantine would embrace Religion, he muſt needs reſigne up one of his Trumpets, and forbeare from thence to meddle with their Aſſemblies. Was there ſo? No ſuch thing. Why was there not? Belike, becauſe none were there, that had ever beene preſent at any Aſſembly, holden under perſecution, to know the Churches order and manner of meeting then. Yes, there was Hoſius Biſhop of Cordova, who had held the Councell of Elvira in Spaine, even in the time of perſecution. Hoſius for the Weſt. And for the Eaſt, there was Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch, had held the like at Ancyra then too: (both the Councels yet extant to be ſeene) and theſe two, Preſidents of them. Yet were theſe twaine, two that came firſt, and ſate formoſt at the Councell of Nice; and neither of them pleaded or knew of any ſuch right; but that their Power then ceaſed: and that Conſtantines Trumpet now tooke place. Sure, if but this firſt Councell be well conſidered, it is able to move much. And the example of this firſt, was of great conſequence; for all the reſt followed it; and as this went, ſo went they. And this for the firſt.

And it is well knowne, it was firſt called at Nice; and then recalled from thence, and removed to Chalcedon, all wholly by the diſpoſing of the Emperour.

2. But it may be, Generall Councels have a faſhion by themſelves: Thoſe Congregations may be called, thus: But Nationall, or Provinciall (ſuch as ours) how? Even ſo too, and no otherwiſe. Conſtantine began with them firſt, before he proceeded to the Generall at Nice. His Tractoria, or Writ, is extant to be ſeene, in Euſebius. Whereby he called the firſt Provinciall Councell in France. For ſure, by no Canon could the Biſhop of Syracuſe in Sicily, or Reſtitutus Biſhop of London in Britaine, be lawfully ſummoned, to a Synode in France (which they were) but (as it was indeed) by the Emperours Writ onely. But this hee did at the beginning of his reigne; perhaps, while he was yet an unperfect Chriſtian. Nay, even firſt and laſt, he did the ſame: as at the beginning he called this; ſo, in the end of his Reigne, the thirtieth yeare, the yeare before his death, called he the Councell at Tyre, and from thence, removed it to Ieruſalem, and from thence called them to appeare before himſelfe in Conſtantinople. The letters are to be ſeene, by which they were called, Socr. 1.34. It is too tedious to goe thorow them all: Onely for that of Aquileia, thus much. Saint Ambroſe, a man of as much ſpirit, and as high a courage, as ever the Church had, and one that ſtood as much as ever did any, for the Churches right; he was there preſent, and Preſident both. Thus writeth he from the Councell to the Emperour in his owne name, and in the name of all the reſt: Iuxta Manſuetudinis Veſtræ ſtatuta convenimus: Hither we are aſſembled, by the appointment of Your Clemencie: And there is no one Councell more plaine, than that of Saint Ambroſe for this purpoſe. Yea, I adde this (which is a point to be conſidered) that even then, when the Emperours were profeſſed Arrians; even then did the Biſhops acknowledge their Power, to call Councels: came to them being called: ſued to them, that they might be called. Came to them, as Hoſius, to that of [l] Arimine; Liberius, to that of [m] Sirmium, and that of Seleucia. Sued for them, as [n] Liberius to Conſtantius: as [o] Leo to Theodoſius, for the ſecond Epheſine Councell; Innocentius to Arcadius. and and [z] Rhemes? And what ſaith he in them? Rhemes I named laſt, take that: In conventu more priſcorum Imperatorum congregato à piiſſimo Domino noſtro Carolo. That he called that Convention by no other right, than as the manner of the ancient Emperours had beene to doe. Expreſſing under one, both what his was: and what the uſage had ever beene before him. [z] Tom. 3. 700.

The like after him did Ludovicus Pius, Lotharius, Ludovicus Balbus, Carolus Calvus, Carolus Craſſus, and Arnulphus, at the ſeverall Councels holden at Aken, [b] Mentz, [c] Melden, [d] Wormes, [e] Colein, and [f] Tribur; and ſo held it till nine hundred yeares: For about that yeare (a yeare or two under or over) was holden the Councell at Tribur in Germanie, Cum Concilium ſacrum continuari decreviſſet: and [g] Præſidente pio Principe Arnulpho, By the Emperour Arnulphus's Decree, himſelfe then Preſident of it. And if it be excepted; there are of the Councels which carry in their acts no mention how they were called: For them, we are to underſtand, that after the decrees of the firſt Nicene Councell were by Conſtantines Edict confirmed, wherein (as likewiſe in the Councell of Chalcedon) it was ordered, each Province ſhould yearely hold their Synods twice: but ſpecially, after Iuſtinian had made the decrees of the foure firſt Generall Councels to have the nature and force of Imperiall Lawes: (a Law being thus paſſed from them,) we are to conceive, the Emperours authoritie was in all afterward, habitually at leaſt: that is, if not (as in the other) by expreſſe and formall conſent: yet by way of implied allowance, as paſſed by a former Grant. Nicen. Can. 5. Chalced. Can. 18. Authent. 131.

Well, thus farre the Trumpet giveth a certaine ſound. Now after this, there is a great ſilence in the Volumes of the Councels, in a manner for the ſpace of two hundred yeares, untill the yeare MCLXXX. or thereabout, when the Councell of Lateran was: and then (indeed) the caſe was altered. By that time had the Biſhop of Rome by his skill and practice, got one of the Trumpets away, and carried it with him to Rome: ſo leaving Princes but one: But, ſo long they held it. Tom. 4. 101. One of the Trumpets gotten away.

Truely, three times ſo much time as wee are allowed, would not ſerve for this one point of the Councels; but even barely to recite them, and to cite them, they are ſo many. You remember how Abraham dealt with GOD for the ſaving of the five Cities, how he went downe from fiftie to ten: I might well take a courſe the other way, and riſe from ten to fiftie, nay, ſixtie, nay, ſeventie, nay, eightie, not ſo few, of Councels Generall, Nationall, Provinciall, called by Emperours, by Kings: Emperours of the Eaſt, of the Weſt: Kings of Italy, France, Spaine, Germany, (as before, from Moſes to the Maccabees: So here, from Conſtantine to Arnulphus). for ſo many hundred yeares together, extant all, to be ſhewed and ſeene, all cleere and evident, all full and forcible for this Power: as indeed it is a cauſe that laboureth rather of plentie, than penury of proofe. And this was the courſe that of old was well thought of in the Chriſtian world. Thus was the Congregation ſo long called; neither is there yet brought any thing to force us to ſwarve from the way, wherein ſo many and ſo holy ages have gone before us.

Yes, ſomething: For what ſay you to the three hundred yeares before Conſtantine? How went Aſſemblies then? who called them, all that while? For diverſe were holden that while: In Paleſtine, about Eaſter. At Carthage, about Heretikes Baptiſme; at Rome, about Novatus; at Antioch, about Paulus Samoſatenus. How aſſembled theſe? How in the time of perſecution for 300. yeares before Conſtantine.

Truely, even as theſe people here, of the Iewes, did before in Ægypt, under the tyrannie of Pharaoh: they were then a Church under perſecution, untill Moſes was raiſed up by GOD, a lawfull Magiſtrate over them. The caſes are like for all the world. No Magiſtrate did aſſemble them in Ægypt. And good reaſon: they had then none to doe it. Pharaoh (we may be ſure) would not offer to doe it: not for any conſcience (I truſt) or feare, to encroch upon the Churches right; but becauſe he hated both Aſſembly, and Congregation, and ſought by all meanes to extinguiſh both. But this was no barre; but that when Moſes aroſe, authorized by GOD, and had the Trumpets here, by GOD delivered him; hee might take them, keepe them, and uſe them, to that end, for which GOD gave them; to call the Congregation. I As, in Ægypt.

tion. And none then but he, could doe it, becauſe to none, but him then, was this Power conveighed. They could not ſay to him now, as before one of them did in Exod. 2. 14. Ægypt, Who made you a Commander over us, to call us together: nor plead in barre of the Trumpets, and ſay: Nay, but we will meet ſtill of our ſelves, even as we did before in Ægypt; we will ſtill keepe our old manner of conventions. No: for God had now taken another order: God (I ſay) had now done it: And God ſhall (I truſt) be allowed, to tranſlate this Power to the principall member of the body, and to diſpoſe of it, as it beſt pleaſeth Him.

2 As, under the Captivitie. The very ſame caſe fell out againe after, in the captivitie of Babylon; and againe after that, in the perſecution under Antiochus: And theſe three, are all the patternes we have in the Old Teſtament. As before in Ægypt; ſo, then, they had meetings: but they were all by ſtealth: yet meetings, then they had. For Moſes ceaſing, and his right with him, the Power devolved to the bodie, to gather it ſelfe (as is uſuall in ſuch caſes.) But then, when Nehemias after the Captivitie, and Simeon Maccha- 3 As, under Antiochus. beus after the furie of Antiochus, were raiſed them by God; when God had ſet them in Moſes's place, they might lawfully doe, as Moſes before had done; and take the ſilver Trumpets into their hands againe. So ſoone as they had a lawfull Governour, the right returned to him ſtraight: And the Congregation, none of them might then plead: Nay, but as we did in Babylon, or as we did under Antiochus; So, 1 Mac. 14. 44. and no otherwiſe, will we aſſemble ſtill. No, wee ſee the contrary rather: Even of themſelves, they profeſſe to Simeon plainly: now, they have a lawfull Governour, no meeting ſhould be from thenceforth in the land, without him, his privitie and permiſſion.

4 So before Conſtantine. And even as theſe two Nehemias and Simeon: even by the ſame right Conſtantine: by Moſes right, all, all by the Commiſſion here penned. By it, did Conſtantine reſume the Trumpet, and enjoy and exerciſe the Power of calling the Congregation: (For even Moſes's patterne and practice five ſundrie times at leaſt doth Euſebius alledge, in the life of Conſtantine to juſtifie his proceedings ſtill by Moſes's example.) True it is therefore, that before Conſtantines time, they met together as they durſt, and tooke ſuch order as they could. They muſt venture then: there was no Moſes: they had no Trumpet: and if they had, they durſt not have blowen it. But when Conſtantine came in place, in Moſes's place, it was lawfull for him to doe as Moſes did: And ſo he did; and they never ſaid to him, Nay, ſpare your Trumpet: looke how we have done hitherto, we will doe ſo even ſtill: meet no otherwiſe now, than in former times we have; by our owne agreement. As before it was ſaid, this had beene plaine dealing: Thus (if rightly they might) they ſhould have done: Did they ſo? No: but to him they went, as to Moſes, for their meetings; at his hands they ſought them; without his leave or liking they would not attempt them: Yea (I dare ſay) they bleſſed God from their hearts, that they had lived to ſee the day, they might now aſſemble by the ſound of the Trumpet.

To conclude this point then. Theſe two times or eſtates of the Church are not to be confounded: There is a plaine difference betweene them, and a diverſe reſpect to be had of each. If the ſucceſſion of Magiſtrates be interrupted, in ſuch caſe of neceſſity, the Church of her ſelfe maketh ſupply, becauſe then, Gods Order ceaſeth. But, God granting a Conſtantine to them againe, Gods former poſitive order returneth, and the courſe is to proceed and goe on, as before. When the Magiſtrate and his authoritie was at any time wanting to the Church, forced ſhee was to deale with her owne affaires, within her ſelfe: for then was the Church wholly divided from Princes and they from it. But, when this wall of partition is pulled downe, ſhall Moſes have no more to doe than Pharaoh, or Conſtantine than Nero? Congregations were ſo called under them: muſt they be ſo ſtill under theſe too? No: no more than their manner of meeting in Ægypt (for all the world like this of the Primitive Church perſecuted) was to be a rule, and to over-rule theſe Trumpets here (in the Text) either God forgiving them, or Moſes for taking them at His hands. This rather: If ever the Church fall into ſuch bloudy times, they muſt meet as they may, and come together together as they can: They have no Moſes, no trumpet to call them. The times of Pharaoh and Nero are then their patterne. But, if it be ſo happy as to find the dayes of peace, Moſes and Conſtantine are patternes for the dayes of peace: they have a Moſes then: from that time forward they muſt give eare to the Trumpet. In a word, none can ſeeke to have the Congregation ſo called (as before Conſtantine) but they muſt ſecretly, and by implication confeſſe, they are a perſecuted Church, as that then was, without a Moſes, without a Conſtantine.

The times then before Conſtantine, are no bar, no kind of impeachment to Conſtantines, no more than the times in Ægypt were to Moſes's Right. And indeed no more they were: for, Conſtantine and his Succeſſors had them, and held them till a thouſand yeares after Christ, and then one of them (by what meanes we all know) was let goe by them, or gotten away from them: It was then gotten away and carried to Rome. But that getting hath hitherto beene holden a plaine uſurping; and an uſurping (not upon the Congregation, but) upon Princes and their Right; and that they in their owne wrong, ſuffered it to be wrung from them. And why? Becauſe not to Aaron, but to Moſes it was ſaid, Et erunt tibi.

1. To draw to an end, it was then gotten away; and with ſome adoe it was recovered not long ſince: and what? ſhall we now let it goe, and deſtroy ſo ſoone that which ſo lately we built againe? You may pleaſe to remember, there was not long ſince a Clergy in place, that was wholly ad oppoſitum, and would never have yeelded to reforme ought: Nothing they would doe, and (in eye of law) without them, nothing could then be done; they had encroached the power of Aſſembling into their owne hands. How then? how ſhall we do for an Aſſembly? Then Erunt tibi, was a good Text: it muſt needs be meant of the Prince: He had this Power, and to him of right it belonged. This was then good Divinity (and what Writer is there extant of thoſe times, but it may be turned to, in him?) And was it good Divinity then, and is it now no longer ſo? Was the King but licenſed for a while, to hold this power, till another Clergy were in; and muſt he then be deprived of it againe? Was it then uſurped from Princes; and are now Princes uſurpers of it themſelves? And is this all the difference in the matter of Aſſemblies, and calling of them: that there muſt be only a change; and that in ſtead of a forraine, they ſhall have a domeſticall, and in ſtead of one, many: and no remedy now, but one of theſe two they muſt needs admit of? Is this now become good Divinity? Nay (I truſt) if Erunt tibi were once true, it is ſo ſtill: and if (Tibi) were then Moſes, it is ſo ſtill. That we will be better adviſed, and not thus goe againſt our ſelves, and let truth be no longer truth, than it will ſerve our turnes.

The recovery of the Trumpets.

Now ſought to be gotten away.

1 By the Preſbyterie.

2. And this calleth to my mind the like dealing of a ſort of men, not long ſince here among us. A while they plied Prince and Parliament, with Admonitions, Supplications, Motions, and Petitions. And in them, it was: their duty, their right, to frame all things to their new invented plot: And this, ſo long as any hope blew out of that coaſt. But when, that way (they ſaw) it would not be, then tooke they up a new Tenet, ſtraight: They needed neither Magiſtrate, nor Trumpet, they: The godly among the people might doe it of themſelves. For confuſion to the wiſe and mighty; the poore and ſimple muſt take this worke in hand, and ſo by this meanes the Trumpet proove their right in the end: and ſo come by devolution to Demetrius and the Craftſ-men. Now, if not for love of the truth, yet for very ſhame of theſe ſhifting abſurdities, let theſe phantaſies be abandoned: and (that which God's owne mouth hath here ſpoken) let it be for once, and for evet true: That which once we truly held and maintained for truth, let us do ſo ſtill: that we be not like evill ſervants, judged (ex ore proprio) out of their owne mouthes.

The Concluſion.

Congregation ſo by them called. It remaineth, that as GOD by His Law, hath taken this order, and His people in former ages have kept this order; that we doe ſo too: that we ſay as GOD ſaith, „ Erunt tibi, this Power pertaineth to Moſes. And that neither with Core we ſay Non veniemus : Nor with Demetrius run together of our ſelves, and thinke to carry it away with crying, Great is DIANA. But as we ſee, the Power is of GOD; ſo truly to acknowledge it, and dutifully to yeeld it: that ſo they, whoſe it is, may quietly hold it, and laudably uſe it, to His glory that gave it, and their good for whom it was given: Which GOD Almightie grant, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITEHALL, on the XXIV. of March, An. Dom. MDCVI.

IVDGES Chap. XVII. Ver. VI.

In diebus illis non erat Rex in Iſrael; ſed unusquiſque, * quod ſibi rectum videbatur, hoc faciebat.

* Vel, Quod rectum videbatur in oculis ſuis.

In thoſe dayes, there was no King in Iſrael: But every man did that, which was good in his owne eyes.

His Chapter (the XVII. of Iudges) is the Chapter, which by the courſe of the Kalendar, is proper to this very day. Not as now it is: For now, by reaſon this day, God ſent us a King in Iſraël, it hath a ſelect Service, both of Pſalmes and of Chapters. But by order of the Church-ſervice, this Chapter is for this day: and ſo it was this time foure yeares (I am ſure;) we all that then heard it, have good cauſe to remember it. And though we have got us a new, it will not be amiſſe, to call our ſelves back to our old Chapter; being this day come hither, to render our thanks even for this very thing, that In theſe dayes, it is not with us, as In thoſe daies, it was with them; but that, to the joy and comfort of us all there is a King in Iſraël.

This, how great a benefit it is, it is not (it may be) the beſt way ſimply to informe our ſelves, by Non erat Rex. Not ſimply; but ſure to us as our nature is, to us I ſay, there is no way better. It is an old obſervation (but experience daily reneweth it) that of Carendo magis quàm fruendo: What it is to have, no better way, to make us truly to value, than by feeling a while, how great a plague it is to be without. Our nature ſurely is more ſenſible that way, and never taketh perfect impreſsion of that we enjoy, but by the privation or want? nor underſtandeth throughly (in hiis diebus eſt) now there is one, but by thoſe (in illis non erat.) And that is our Verſe.

Of which, this is the occaſion. The Booke of the Iudges, and the eſtate of the Iudges now growing to an end, the Holy Ghoſt here beginneth to make a paſſage, to the eſtate and Bookes of the Kings. To which ſtate, this Chapter (and ſo, to the end of the Booke) is a preparative, or introduction: to ſhew, that now the time was at hand.

[a] Gen. 17. 6. [b] Gen. 49. 10. [c] Deut. 17.

There ſhould be Kings of his race, GOD firſt told [a] Abraham, by way of promiſe. That thoſe Kings ſhould come of Iuda, and the [b] Scepter be his, Iacob foretold, by way of prophecie. The dutie of thoſe Kings, againſt the time came, was ſet downe by [c] Moſes, by way of previſion long before. This ſhewed, Kings there ſhould be.

[d] Eccle. 3. 1. [e] Gal. 4. 4. [f] Iudg. 8. 22. [g] 9. 2.

But all things have a time, ſaith [d] Salomon: and time hath a fulneſſe, ſaith [e] Saint Paul. And till that time, it is not onely a folly, but a fault, to preſſe things out of ſeaſon. We ſee, offer was twice made to [f] Gedeon, to take it: by [g] Abimelech, to get it: both came to nothing; the time was not yet come. But ſtill, as the time drew neere, every thing did co-operate, every thing made way, and gave occaſion, to the purpoſe of GOD.

The Summe.

And now here, in this Chapter, is ſet downe the very firſt occaſion, on which GOD firſt miſſeth Kings: that, for all the Iudges, one Micah,

Verſe 2.

a private man of Mount Ephraim, he and his old mother, it tooke them in the heads, they would have a new Religion by themſelves; and that was

Verſe 5.

plaine Idolatrie: and up with an Idoll they went. And becauſe they lacked a Prieſt, it came into Micah's head, to give Orders; and ſo hee did. Why, could he be ſuffered? It was, and then commeth in this Verſe, This was all for want of a King. And when hee had done with this, he goeth to another; and when with that, to a third, diſorder upon diſorder. And ſtill at the end of every one this commeth in, All theſe, becauſe there was no King. Which all is nothing elſe, but a Preparative againſt the time came, that GOD ſhould give Kings; that they might with joy receive that His gift, and with thankes celebrate it, from yeare to yeare: do, as we do now. And this is the Summe.

Chap. 18. 1. 21. 25. 1. 19.

Three

Three points there are in it. Two are ad oculum apparent, the third by neceſſarie inference. 1. The want of a King. 2. For want of a King what miſchiefe enſued; Every man did what he thought good: this in generall. 3. And thirdly, Every man, but namely Micah; he went up with Idols. For, Micahs fact it was, begat this Verſe, and ſo of neceſsitie falleth into it. Thoſe two both generall and particular diſorder, are linked to the firſt, as to the efficient cauſe, or rather deficient. For, evill it is; & Malum non habet efficientem, ſed deficientem cauſam; Evill hath a deficient, but no efficient cauſe. For the want of ſome notable good (as heere, a King) is the cauſe of ſome notorious evill; as greater evill cannot poſſibly come to a people, than to bee in this caſe, every one to doe what hee liſts. The Diviſion.

For the handling of theſe, though in nature the cauſe be firſt (and ſo ſtandeth it ever) to us, the effect firſt offereth it ſelfe; and through it (as through the veile) we enter into the cauſe; and ſo, erunt noviſſimi primi, the laſt ſhall be firſt. 1. Firſt then, of Fecit quiſque. 2. And then, of Non erat Rex.

In the former of theſe wee have two parts: 1 The Eye, Rectum in oculis, 2 The Hand, Fecit quiſque: 3 And then together, that what ſeemed to the eye, the hand did; and that was miſchiefe enough. I.

In the latter likewiſe three. 1 There was no King (in oppoſition to other eſtates; they had Iudges and Prieſts, but there was no King.) 2 No King in Iſraël, with reference to other Nations. Not in Canaan, nor in Edom; but not in Iſraël: Even there, it is a want, to want a King. 3 And then out of theſe, quid faciat nobis Rex, what a King hath to performe. To repreſſe all inſolencies, not onely in generall; but particularly this of Micah. Where will fall in, that the good or evill eſtate of Religion doth much depend, on the having, or Not having a King. For it is as if he ſhould ſay; Had there beene a King, this of Micah had never beene endured. Now becauſe there was not; Religion firſt; and after it, all went to wrack. II.

And laſt, wee ſhall ſee, how farre all this doth touch us, in matter of our bounden duty of thankes to GOD, for this day. III.

I.
Of the effect: fecit quisque, &c.

IN Those daies, when, &c. What dayes were those? were they good or evill dayes? And this whole Verse, is set downe by way of liking, or complaint? At the first, one would thinke, that it were a merry world, if every man might doe what he listed: that there were no harme in the world: they be faire words all. Right, and doing right, and the Eye, the faireſt member, not an evill word amongſt them.

But yet ſure, thoſe dayes were evill. This a complaint. Quaſi ingemiſcit ſuper hæc Scriptura, the Scripture doth (as it were) fetch a deepe ſigh, ſo oft as it repeateth this verſe, and ſaith thus in effect: Tanta mala conciliat non habere Regem, ſo much miſchiefe commeth there in Iſraël, or any where, where there is no King (ſaith Theodoret.)

1 Quod rectum in oculis: The eye.

To let you ſee then, what a monſter lurketh under theſe ſmooth terms, doing that which is right in our eyes. Two parts there be, 1 the Eye, 2 and the Hand. To beginne with the eye, and that which is right in the eye. There beganne all evill, in the firſt tentation: even from this perſwaſion, they ſhould need no direction from GOD, or from any; their owne eye ſhould be their director to what was right, they ſhould doe but what was right in their owne eyes.

Three evils in it.
1 Quod in oculis.

Three evils are in it. It is not ſafe, to commit the judgement of what is right, to the eye: and yet (I know) it is our ſureſt ſenſe, as that which apprehendeth greateſt varietie of differences. But I know withall, the Optikes (the Maſters of that faculty) reckon up twentie ſeverall waies, all which it may be, and is deceived. The Object full of deceipt: things are not as they ſeeme. The Medium is not evenly diſpoſed. The Organ it ſelfe hath his ſuffuſions. Take but one: that of the Oare in the water. Though the Oare be ſtraight, yet if the Eye be judge, it ſeemeth bowed. And, if that which is right, may ſeeme crooked; that which is crooked, may ſeeme right: So, the eye, no competent judge. The Rule is the judge of right: If it touch the Rule, and runne even with it, it is right, if it varie from the Rule, let it ſeeme to the eye as it will, it is awry. GOD ſaw, this was not good: an expreſſe countermand we have from Him in Deuteronomie; You ſhall not doe every man, that which is right in his eyes: that is, you ſhall have a ſurer Rule of right, than your eyes.

Deut. 12.18.

2 Quod quiſque.

But admit, wee will make the eye judge, yet (I hope) not Quiſque, not Everie mans eye, that were too much. Many weake and dimme eyes there be; many goggle, and miſ-ſet, many little better than blinde: ſhall all, and everie of theſe be allowed, to define what is right? Some, it may may bee (perhaps, the Eagles:) but ſhall the Owle and all? I trow not. Many miſhapen kinds of right ſhall we have, if that may be ſuffered: yea, otherwhile, diverſe of them contrarie one to the other.

To goe yet further. Say we would allow every eye his priviledge; (it were great folly to doe it, but ſay we ſhould) if we would allow it every one, yet not every one In ſuis. Not his owne eye, to direct his owne doings, or (as we ſay) to ſit judge in his owne right. No not the Eagle, not the beſt eye to bee allowed to right it ſelfe. The Iudge himſelfe commeth downe from the Bench, when his owne Right is in hearing. Wee all know, Selfe-love, what a thing it is, how it dazeleth the ſight; how every thing appeareth right and good, that appeareth thorow thoſe Spectacles. Therefore, 1 Not right, by the eye. 2 At leaſt, not every mans eye. 3 Nay, not any mans right, by his owne eye. 3 Quod in ſuis.

We ſhall never ſee this ſo well in the generall, as if we looke in ſome few examples upon it, In individuo. And that can we no where better, than in this Chapter, and thoſe that follow it to the end of the Booke. They be nothing elſe, but a Commentarie at large upon theſe words, Right in every mans eyes, &c.

1 What ſay you to making and worſhipping a graven image? Lay it to the Rule: the Rule is, Non facies, non adorabis: then it is crooked and nought. Yet, to Micha's eyes, and his mother, a goodly graven image ſheweth faire and well. Exod. 20. 4, 5.

2 Goe to the next Chapter. What ſay you to Burghlarie, robbing, and rifling of houſes; yea whole Cities, of harmeleſſe poore people, and cutting all their throates? Fie upon it, it is crooked. Put it to the men of Dan, they ſaw nothing but it was right enough.

3 Goe to the next to that. How thinke you by raviſhing of women, and that to death? How? away with that: Let it not be once named. No man will thinke that right. Yes, they of Gibeah (in the XIX. Chapter) did, and ſtood to it to maintaine it. You ſee a good Gloſſe of this Text. Vpon the matter, there are no worſe things in the world than theſe were; If theſe ſeemed ſtraight, there is nothing but wil ſeemed ſo to the eye. There is no truſting In oculis.

But this is not all. I now paſſe to the next point; Here is a hand too; Fecit quiſque. Fecit is but one word; but there is more in this one, than in all the former. For, here at this, breaketh in the whole Sea of confuſion, when the hand followeth the eye, and men proceed to doe as lewdly, as they ſee perverſly. And ſure, the hand will follow the eye, and men doe as it ſeemeth right, to them, be it never ſo abſurd that ſo ſeemeth. To dye for it; Eve, if her eye like it, her hand will have it: and Eves children, that have no other guide but their eye, if their eye rove at it, their hand will reach at it: there is no parting them. Therefore, if a bad eye light upon an hand that hath ſtrength, and there bee not Rex, or the 2 Fecit quiſque: The hand.

ſtronger barre, it will be done. You may ſee it in all the former: 1. Micah liked an idoll well; Micah had a good purſe; he told out two hundred ſicles, and ſo up went the idoll. 2. The men of Dan liked well of ſpoyling: they were well appointed, their ſwords were ſharp; Fecerunt, they did it. 3. They of Gibea: to their luſt, Rape ſeemed a ſmall matter: they were a multitude, no reſiſting them; and ſo they committed that abhominable villanie.

By this time wee ſee, what a maſſe of miſchiefe there is in theſe few words. For ſure, if theſe all ſeemed right; and ſo ſeeming were done, Then are we come to Quidlibet à quolibet, any man doe any thing; which is the next doore to confuſion, nay confuſion it ſelfe. For ſo, no mans ſoule ſhall bee ſafe, if idolatrie goe up. Alas, what talke wee of the ſoule! they have leaſt ſenſe of it, talke to them of that they have feeling. No mans goods, or wife, or life in ſafety, if this may goe on thus. If robberie, rape and murther be right, what is wrong?

See then now, what a woefull face of a Common-wealth is here? Idols and murther ſeen and allowed for good; done and practiſed for good. Againe, Micah a private man; Gibeah, a Citie; Dan, a whole Tribe: Tribes, Cities, Families all out of courſe. Out of courſe, in Religion; and not in religion alone, but in morall matters: And ſo, that the like never heard of, no not among the heathen.

Laſt, this was now not in a corner, but all over the land. Micah was at Mount Ephraim, in the midſt; Gibeah, was at one end, and Dan at the other. So in the midſt and both ends, all were wrapped in the ſame confuſion.

But what, ſhall this be ſuffered and no remedy ſought? GOD forbid.

Firſt the Eye, error in the eye, is harme enough; and order muſt be taken even for that. For, men doe not erre in judgement but with hazard of their ſoules; very requiſite therefore, that men be travailed with, that they may ſee their owne blindneſſe. Then, that the counſell be followed (Apoc. 3.) that eye-ſalve bee bought of him and applied to the eyes, that that may ſeeme to them right, that is ſo indeed. This, if it may be, is beſt.

Revel. 3.18.

But, if they be ſtrongly conceited of their owne ſight, and marvell at CHRIST (as they, Iohn 9.40. What, are we blind trow?) and will not endure any to come neere their eyes: if we cannot cure their eyes, what ſhall wee not hold their hands neither? Yes, in any wiſe. So long, as they but ſee, though they ſee amiſſe, they hurt none but themſelves; it is but ſuo damno, to their owne hurt, (and that is enough, nay too much; it may bee as much as their ſoules bee worth.) But that is all, if it ſtay there, and goe no further than the eye. But, when they ſee amiſſe and that groſſely; What, ſhall their hand be ſuffered to follow their eye? their hand to be as deſperate, in miſ-doing, as their eye darke, in miſtaking, to the detriment of others, and the ſcandall of all? That may not be:

we

We cannot pull mens eyes out of their heads, nor their opinions neither; but ſhall wee not pinion their hands, or binde them to the peace? Yes, whatſoever become of rectum in oculis, order muſt be taken with fecit, or elſe farewell all. Foule rule we are like to have, even (for all the world) ſuch as was heere in Iſraël.

II. The cauſe: 1 Non erat Rex.

Wee ſee then the maladie; more than time wee ſought out a remedie for it. That ſhall we beſt doe, if we know the cauſe. The cauſe is here ſet downe; and this is it, Non erat Rex. Is this the cauſe? Wee would (perhaps) imagine many cauſes beſides, but GOD paſſeth by them all, and layeth it upon none but this, Non erat Rex. And ſeeing He hath aſsigned that onely for the cauſe, we will not be wiſer than He, but reſt our ſelves in it. The rather, for that, Ex ore inimici we have as much. For theſe miſcreants, whom He ſets on worke, to bring Realmes to confuſion, and to root out Religion, that every one may doe that, is good in their owne eyes: to this point they all drive, Vt ne ſit REX. Away with the King, that is their only way. Heaven and hell both are agreed, that is the cauſe.

To make ſhort worke then: If the cauſe bee [There is no King]; Let there be one, that is the remedie: A good King will helpe all. If it be of abſolute neceſsity, that neither Micah, for all his wealth; nor Dan, for all their forces; nor Gibeah, for all their multitude, doe what they liſt: And if the miſſe of the Kings were the cauſe, that all this were amiſſe; no better way to ceaſe it, no better way to keepe Religion from Idolatrie, mens lives and goods in ſafety, their veſſels in honour, than by Kings. No more effectuall barre to fecit quiſque quod rectum in oculis, than Rex in Iſraël.

This will better appeare, if wee take it in ſunder: There was no King. He doth not charge them with a flat Anarchie; that there was no Eſtates, no kinde of government among them: but this onely, there was no King. What then? there were Prieſts: would not they ſerve? It ſeemed, they would not. Phinees was to looke to their eyes: But, ſomewhere there be ſome ſuch, as Hoſee ſpeakes of, Populus hic quaſi qui contradicit Sacerdoti, This people will look to Phinees eyes: Set their Prieſts and Preachers to Schoole, and not learne of them, but learne them Divinitie. The Iudges are to looke to their Hands: But, there are too ſomewhere ſuch, as he ſpeaketh of (Chap. VII. Ver. VII.) Devorabunt Iudices; ſuch, as (if it take them in the head) will not ſticke to ſuppe up, and ſwallow downe their Iudges, ſpecially, inter arma. How then, ſhall wee have Militarie Government? Nay, that is too violent: and if it lye long, the remedy proves as ill, as the diſeaſe. To mee, a plaine evidence; that, though all theſe were, all theſe were not perfect. There was one yet miſsing, that was to doe this to better purpoſe, than yet it had beene done: and till he were had, they were not, where they ſhould be.

Oſe. 4. 4.

Oſe. 7. 7.

This

This is then GODS meanes. We cannot ſay, His onely meanes; in that (we ſee) there are States that ſubſiſt without them. But this we may ſay, His beſt meanes. The beſt (ſaith the Philoſopher) for Order, Peace, Strength, Steadineſſe, and proves them all, one by one. But, beſt (ſay the Fathers) for that had beene a better than this, GOD would not laſt have reſolved on this. This is the moſt perfect, Hee laſt brought them to, Hither till they came, Hee changed their governement: From Ioſua a Captaine, to the Iudges; From the Iudges, to Eli and Samuel, Prieſts: But here when He had ſettled them, Hee changed no more. And this act of GOD in this change, is enough to ſhew, where it is not, there is a defect certainely, and ſuch a State we may repute defective.

Beſides, you ſhall obſerve: Of thoſe three eſtates, which ſwayeth moſt, that in a manner doth over-toppe the reſt, and like a foregrowen member depriveth the other of their proportion of growth. The world hath ſeene it in two already, and ſhall dayly more and more ſee it in the third. Requiſite therefore, there be One over all, that is none of all, but a common Father to all, that may poize and keepe them all in æquilibrio; that ſo all the Eſtates may be evenly ballanced.

This Act then of GOD in this change, is enough to teach, that this Non erat Rex is a defect certainely: and where there is not one, we may report the eſtate for deficient. At leaſt, thus farre, that GOD yet may change it into a more perfect, as He did His owne. And againe this: that it is not conformed to the governement, ſimply the moſt perfect of all, the governement of the whole: when, as the inferior bodies are ruled by the Superiour, ſo a multitude, by unitie; that is, all by one. Thus farre on theſe words, There was no King, howſoever other States there were.

2 Non Rex in Iſrael.

The next point is: No King in Iſraël. That this is not noted as a defect in groſſe, or at large; but even in Iſrael, GODS owne choſen people. It is a want (not ni Edom, or Canaan, but) even in Iſrael too, the want of a King. Truely Iſrael, being GODS owne peculiar, might ſeeme to claime a Prerogative above other Nations, in this, that they had the knowledge of His Lawes, whereby their eyes were lightened, and their hands taught; and ſo the moſt likely to ſpare one: Others had not like light: yet this, non obſtante their light and their law, and that they were GODS owne people, is no ſuper-ſedeas for having a King. Of which there needeth no reaſon but this; that a King is a good meanes to keepe them GODS Iſraël. Here, for want of a King, Iſraël began and was faire onward, to be no longer Iſraël, but even Babel. When Micah (and by good reaſon any other as well as he) might ſet up Religions, and give Orders themſelves; as it were in open contempt of GOD and His Law. So that, the people of GOD can plead no exemption from this; Since it is His owne Ordinance, to make them and keepe them the people of GOD.

Was

Was it thus heere, in the Old Teſtament, and is it not ſo likewiſe in the New? Yea, even in the New too. For there, Saint Peter willeth them, that they bee ſubject to the King, as to the Soveraigne, or Moſt excellent. 1 Pet.2.13. And Saint Paul goeth further, and expreſſeth it more ſtrongly, in the ſtyle of Parliament, and (like a Law-giver) ſaith, ὑποτασσέσθω: Bee it enacted, that they ſubmit themſelves. And when Saint Paul there, had in his Act ſaid, Rom. 13.1. Omnis anima; that this Act reacheth to every ſoule, which was enough: yet becauſe that they ſeemed too generall, Saint Peter came after, and goeth to the very point, and faith, Gens ſancta muſt doe thus too: that 1 Pet.1.9. is, there muſt be a King even in GODS Iſraël. And what would we more?

I come to the third part. And to what end a King? Quid faciat nobis? What will a king doe unto us? It hath beene ſaid already: He will looke, that every one doe not that which is good in his owne, and evill in GODS eyes. He will in his generall care looke to both parts, the Eye, and the Hand. The Eye, that men ſinne not blindly, for want of direction. The Hand, that men ſinne not with an high hand (that is wilfully) for want of correction. Hee will, there bee good Ophthalmiſts, with right Eye-ſalve, that the ſight may be cured, and things ſeeme as they be, and not be as they ſeeme. At the hardeſt, Si noluerunt intelligere, but the eye will rove and runne aſtray, that the hand be bound to the good abearing. That they doe it not: or if they doe it (as doe it they will, yea, though there bee a King) yet that they may not doe it impunè; doe it and nothing done to them for it, and ſcape the puniſhment due unto it. For, that is the caſe, when there is no King in Iſraël. And if, when there is one, that bee the caſe too, where have we beene all this while? For if ſo, Etiam non eſt Rex, cum eſt Rex: Then, when there is a King, there is no King; or one in name, but none in deed. Which as it is not good for the ſtate, ſo neither is it ſafe for themſelves. To this ſpeciall regard will bee had. Non enim fruſtra (ſaith S. Paul) for they beare not the ſword in vaine. Rom. 13.4.

Quid faciat nobis Rex.

2 That every one doe not thus. Every one, namely (but which is the occaſion of this Text) that not Micah. For, Micah's fact brought forth this firſt ſight: that they were now come to this paſſe, that he or any ſuch as hee was, might ſet up in his houſe any Religion he would, & no man controll him for it. To looke to every one therefore, but ſpecially to Micah: and to care for all, but above all, the matter of Religion. Ne quiſque videat quod rectum eſt, there; that every one be not allowed to ſee viſions there: At leaſt, Ne quiſque faciat, that ſee what they liſt, they bee not ſuffered to ſet them up: but if the eye will not be rectified, the hand be reſtrained.

And ſure, no where doth the eye more miſſe, nor the hand ſwerve, than in this: and therefore no where more cauſe to call for a King, than for this. One would think, this were impertinent, and we were free enough from Micah. We are not. Even to this day, do men ſtill caſt images or imaginations (all is one) in the mould of their conceipts, and up they ſet them; them; at leaſt for their owne houſhold to adore. And then, if they can get ſuch a fellow as is hereafter deſcribed, a Levite, for ten ſicles and a ſuite; (or becauſe now the world is harder, ten pound,) they are ſafe: and there they have and hold a Religion by themſelves.

3 For, evident it is by this Text: ſetting up of falſe worſhip, is the cauſe why kings were miſſed; and the redreſſe of it, the cauſe, why they were placed. The cauſe I ſay, and the firſt cauſe of their placing: and therefore this a part, and a principall part of their charge. I will touch them ſeverally. 1. A part, to looke to Micah, and his falſe worſhip. Why, this is matter Eccleſiaſticall? It is ſo, and thereby it appeareth (I thinke) that kings have, and are to have a hand in matters of that nature. If Religion were at a fault, becauſe there was no king; and that one there muſt be, to ſet it right againe. For, is it once to be imagined, that the cauſe of corrupt Religion is layd on the want of a king; and yet when there is one, he ſhould not medle with it? Rather the conſequence is ſtrong on the other ſide. Micah thus did, becauſe there was then no king: therefore when there is one, he will looke better to it, that never a Micah of them all ſhall doe the like. Thus it went, when there was no king: after, when there was one, I finde againe, the not taking away the High places (which were places meerly religious, where the people did ſacrifice) imputed ſtill to the king, as his fault; And yet ſhall he have nothing to doe with high places, or ſacrificing, either there or any where elſe?

Very ſtrange it were, that they who are by GOD Himſelfe, by an expreſſe Ego dixi, termed Gods, ſhould yet have nothing to doe with GODS affaires! And no leſſe, that being termed by Eſay, Nutritii, Foſter-fathers; to whoſe care the Church is committed, to cheriſh and bring up, ſhould yet be forbidden to intermedle with the Church, in that which is of all foſtering the principall part! Verily, when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſervice that Kings doe unto GOD, he doth not onely uſe the terme of λειτουργὸς (that is) Publike Officer, but διάκονος too (as it were GODS Deacon, or Servitor) by a name peculiar to the Church Offices: and this hee uſeth twice, for one other. It can therefore neither be denied, nor doubted of, in that Idolatrie came up by defect of kings, but that kings were placed, to pull downe Idolatrie, and to plant and preſerve the true Service of GOD. In a word: There is a King in Iſraël, that there may not bee a Micah in Iſraël.

Eſay 49. 23.
Rom. 13. 6. 4

But this is not all; the Text carrieth us yet further: That it is not onely the charge of the King; but the very firſt and chiefe article in his charge. For, this marke I pray you: that this is the firſt place in all the Scripture, where; and the firſt cauſe, why Kings were miſſed; this the very firſt occaſion, that drew this complaint from GOD. Being to ſet downe the diſorders, th at then multiplied; other there were, beſides this; yet, this He beginneth with (not with the outrage of Gibea, or the riot of Dan, but) with Micah's idolatry: as that, which He chiefly miſ-liked, and therefore would have first and chiefest care to see it reformed. This with GOD is first; and GOD was not well pleased, it was not so with them. It is that wherewith GOD upbraideth them (Hosee X.) with their hot taking the matter of Gibea. Why, were they to blame for it, being so villanous an act? No indeed, it was so good a peece of Iustice. This only it is, GOD findeth fault with, that they could be so forward and fervent, in the case of wrong offered to a woman; and so cold and careless, when His worship received so great a wound, so sensible of their owne wrong, so past all feeling in His. For when injurie was offered one of their concubines, they crie; The like was never seene in Israël. They were all up in armes, and upon the point to roote out the whole tribe of Benjamin. But when Idolatrie was set up, first heere in an house, after in a whole Tribe, even as it were in open defiance of GOD and His Law, no man drew a sword: Nay, no man so much as spake a word in reproofe of it; not crie then, the like was never seene in Israël. Their Fathers were more tender in this point. They, upon the erecting of a thing but like an Altar (but no Altar indeed) were all ready to have bidden battaile, till they were sufficiently satisfied, that no such thing was meant. Here there is not a shew of an Altar, but (past a shew) very Idolls, an whole house full of them, and no man saith to Micah so much as, what doest thou? This is that, He blameth them for, there. This, it, which He taketh in evill part; and saith, He will trust them no longer with His worship: He will have one who shall looke better to His worship, than they had done.

and

Hose. 10. 8. 9.

Iud. 19. 30.

Ioſu. 22. 11.

One, that seeing, that was the first Cause, that made GOD thinke of setting up Kings, will therefore thinke it his first duty, primùm & ante omnia to have regard of that point.

To conclude, if the want of Kings, Kings in Israël, be evill (as evill it is, being the cause of so much evill) it is GODS will, there should be a remedie for it: That remedie is a King; It is GODS will therefore, there be Kings. Saint Peter speaketh it totidem verbis: This is the will of GOD that yee be subject to your Kings.

1 Pet. 2. 15.

Then secondly, being evill, it is GODS will, that Israël bee not onely kept from it at sometime, but at all. Evill is not to bee allowed any though never so short a time; but it agreeth well with His pleasure, that once and ever, it bee kept from Israël. Consequently, that there never be a time wherein it may be sayd, Non erat Rex. That there be not onely Kings, but a Succession of Kings: Not onely Rex, but sanguis, semen, stirps Regis; they be all in Scripture. [a] The Bloud, 1 King. 11. 14. [b] The Seed, Ieremie 41. 1. [c] The Race, 2 Chro. 22. 10. It is among other, one of the differences of the State of Kings, and Iudges; and a maine inconvenience of the state of Iudges (and so is it of all Elective Kingdomes) the Inter-regna, as wee terme them; times betweene the old Iudges death and the raising up of a new: in which times, all ranne to riot, and much disorder got head. To the end then, there be no such inconvenience, no

Interregna at all, not ſo much as a minute of time, wherein it may be ſaid Non eſt Rex in Iſraël, it agreeth with His will, there be not onely Kings, but a Race of Kings; that ſo ſoone as the breath is gone from one, inſtantly it may be reſted in another; that ſo, the good may ever be, and the evill never found in Iſraël.

III. Our duty. Thus have we gone through the matter of inſtruction; and now come to the matter of our owne Thankſgiving riſing out of it.

As there cannot be a greater Plague to a Land, than to be in that caſe, ſo is there not a higher benefit, that GOD beſtoweth on any people, to be faire ly bleſſed from in it, than for the removing from us ſo many miſchiefs and for the preſerving to us the oppoſite bleſſings. For freeing us from that miſerie, and not onely conveighing, but intailing to us and ours, this happineſſe. For this, are we all now met here, in His preſence every man to put in his thankes, into one common ſtocke, and ſo all joyntly to offer it up unto GOD, that (as this day) ſent us a King in Iſraël.

We come not for this alone to thanke Him; (yet well might we come for this, if there were none but this:) But there is more beſides: And even ſeven times are we bound, this day to praiſe GOD, for ſo many benefits, and yet goe not out of the Text.

1 Our firſt thankes then ſhall be for this firſt, the ground of all the reſt: For a King. This very thing, that there is one: and that this defect Non erat Rex hath not taken hold on us. The ſhout of a King is a joyfull ſhout, Num.23.21. was a true ſaying out of the mouth of a falſe Prophet (Balaam) but forced thereto by GOD. That a joyfull ſhout; and this a woefull crie, *Hoſ.*10.3. Hoſe.10.3. Nonne ideo nobis nullus Rex, quia non timemus Dominum? Are wee not therfore without any King at all, becauſe we feared not God? And, our feare to God, was not ſuch, but He might juſtly have brought us to that miſerable plight. The more cauſe have we to thanke Him, that we have one. And when I ſay one; I meane firſt, have any one. For, be hee Nabuchodonozer, Ier. 29. 7. yet muſt we pray for him: Or be it Ieroboam, him though God gave Oſe.13.11. in His wrath, yet Hee tooke away in His furie, the worſe wrath of the twaine. Or, be he who he will, to have one, though but ſuch an one, is a matter of thanksgiving. For, better any, than an Anarchie: Better, any one a King, than every one a king: and every one is more than a King, if hee doe what he liſts. It calleth to minde the crye of the Beaſts in the fable when they were in conſultation, to ſubmit themſelves to the Lion, as to their King. For when it was alleaged; it was like enough hee would doe they knew not well what, what he liſted which they had cauſe to feare: they all cried Præſtat unum timere quàm multos; Better one Lion doe ſo, than all the Beares and Wolfes and wilde beaſts of the forreſt, as before they did. Firſt then, for this; that there is a King.

Secondly, For this: that, a King, not many. For, to have many, is a plague plague for the peoples ſinnes.) Not many; Nay, not two, as of late: But now, Rex indeed, one King over all Iſrael. We know, when there were two Kings, one in Iuda, and the other in the Ten Tribes; two in one territorie; it was a maime and a blemiſh, both: That there was not Rex, one entire King, but two diverſe Kings (as it were) over two halves of a Country. The like imperfection was it, even the dividing of this one Iſland, under two Soveraignes. The reducing of both thoſe under one, was promiſed Iſraël, as an high favour. The ſame, to us performed, can be no leſſe: even, that (now) there is a King indeed. REX, one KING: One (and no more) abſolute, entire King over all the Tribes, over all Iſraël. Let this be the Second. Ezek. 37. 22.

And this our third. That not onely over Iſraël: but (as the words are) In Iſraël. Theſe are two different things. To ſpeake (as the Prophet doth) that, this King is not Aſſur. For this cauſe Aſſur ſhall be your King, is a fearefull threat, GOD uſeth to His people, for their unkindneſſe. To have a meere Alien, one from beyond the water, as Nebuchodonozor was; out of a people, whoſe ſpeech they did not underſtand. One, not in, but extra Iſraëlem; that is, over Iſraël, but neither in it, nor of it. That this is not our caſe, as (it is well knowen) ſome would have had it. Therein then, muſt we alſo acknowledge, GOD hath dealt gratiouſly with us, ſending us ſuch an one, as, by more than one or two, before this very laſt of all, is come of the Race Royall, and is by due and undoubted right a King, not only over, but in, and of Iſraël. Is not this a third? Hoſ. 11. 5.

And ſure, this fourth. That, as He ſent us not Aſſur a ſtranger: ſo, neither ſent He a Ieroboam. No ſtranger, in birth, he; but one addicted to a ſtrange worſhip: a ſtranger in Religion. (And, it was even Micahs religion juſt: As, Micahs Countriman he was; for, both, were of Ephraim.) Who did that which was evill in GODS eyes, by doing that, which was good in in his owne, and ſo, made Iſraël to ſinne. Such an one He hath not ſent us; but one that knoweth GOD: doth neither favour Micah, nor Micahs worſhip; ſince, that was a principall cauſe, why there is a King in Iſraël, that Micahs Idolls might not be ſet up. 1 King. 12. 26.

And then fifthly. As not a Ieroboam favouring Micah, not a Rehoboam neither; who was (indeed) well for his Religion, but otherwiſe not able to adviſe himſelfe, and ſo ready to be adviſed to the worſe. One, that was full of great words, but ſo faint-hearted, as not able to reſiſt ought: that under him, every one did what he would, for all the King. It was (as in another caſe the Prophet ſpeaketh) Rex, Rex, & non eſt Rex. It is otherwiſe, where Princes are intelligent, learned, and (as David was) both religious and wiſe; wiſe as an Angell of God, to diſcerne good and evill. Such a King as David, a ſpeciall bleſsing: not omnibus data, not given to every people; Nay, meny times, not to Iſraël it ſelfe. May we not report this for a fifth? 2 Chro. 10. 14. 2 Chro. 13. 17. 1 Sam. 19. 27.

And for a ſixth, this. That not as David neither, though he were both gentle and wiſe, which Rehoboam was not. For, though hee were both, yet was he ſo intangled with warres all his time, and forced ſtill by continuall effuſion of bloud, firſt to recover, and then to maintaine his right, as that he was rather Dux, than Rex in Iſraël, a Generall of an armie, rather than a King. No, but (that which addeth ſtill to the heap of our bleſſings) like Salomon, more happy than his father; as one that procured to his people peace with all the Nations round about. Of him, of ſuch an one as he, ſaith the Queene of Saba, Becauſe the Lord thy GOD loved Iſraël, to eſtabliſh it for ever, therefore hath He ſet thee King over them, to bring them to, and to preſerve them in the happy dayes of peace. That is indeed the right King, to be as Melchiſedech King of Salem, that is, King of peace. To be, as the great King of Iſraël, whoſe Style is Princeps pacis.

Eſay 9. 6.

And laſt of all, which is the complete perfection of all; that in and by Him GOD hath not only ſent us a King, but a Race and Succeſſion of Kings. A bleſsing yet further, a greater hope, by bleſsing him, and in him us all, with an iſſue of ſuch hope, and with hope ſtill of more. Who ſhall (wee truſt; and pray, they may) ſtretch their line to the worlds end; and ever keep this Land, from this plague here mentioned; from dayes, whereof it may be ſaid, Non erat Rex in Iſraël. Even ſo Lord Ieſus, ſo be it.

And thus ſeven times this day, praiſe we GOD, for this His ſevenfold goodneſſe. 1 For a King, 2 an abſolute entire King, 3 a King both in, and of Iſraël, 4 a King neither favouring, nor favoured by Micah, 5 a King too wiſe to endure Fecit quiſque quod rectum, 6 a King of peace, 7 a King, who hath already by himſelfe, and ſhall for ever by his ſeed, preſerve this Land from the evill daies, wherein Iſraël was, without a King. There is not any one of theſe Seven, but we owe our ſpeciall thankes for it: But for them all, all that ever we have or can make.

And theſe now we offer and preſent, to the Divine Majeſty, all: and together with our thankes, a commixtion of prayers, that this bleſſing of a king in Iſraël, and of this King in Iſraël, may to us, and our poſteritie, long and many yeers, yea many times many be continued, and we or they often ſee the renewing of this bleſſed day. Which Almightie GOD grant, &c.

SERMON

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT GREENVVICH, An. Dom. MDCVII

IAMES. Chap. I. Ver. XXII.

Eſtote autem factores Verbi, & non auditores tantum, fallentes voſmetipſos.

And be yee doers of the Word, and not hearers onely, deceiving your owne ſelves.

N advice or Caution of S. Iames, to thoſe that receive the word ingrafted And that ſo neceſſary an advice, as without which, all our receiving the word, or hearing Sermons, is nothing elſe (ſaith he) but a very cooſening or deceiving our ſelves.

Which I therefore thought very meet to attend upon the former verſe, ſo lately handled. That, being a commandement, to doe it: This, a caution to doe it well.

There is not any time, but this caution of Saint Iames is needfull: But, the ſpeciall time for it is when hearing of the word is growen into ſuch requeſt, as it hath got the ſtart of all the reſt of the parts of GODS ſervice. So as, but that ſure we are, the world will not like any one thing long, it might juſtly be feared, leſt this part eating out the reſt ſhould grow indeed the ſole and onely worſhip of GOD: which Saint Iames by no meanes would have it.

Now, if this be a proper Text for ſuch times, our times, are ſuch: This way our Age is affected; now, is the world of Sermons. For proofe whereof (as if all godlineſſe were in hearing of Sermons) take this very place, the Houſe of GOD, which now you ſee meetly well repleniſhed: Come at any other parts of the Service of GOD (parts, I ſay, of the Service of GOD no leſſe than this) you ſhall find it in a manner) deſolate. And, not here onely; but, goe any whither elſe, ye ſhall finde even the like.

Eccl. 5. 12. And this (to ſpeake with Salomon) is an evill diſeaſe under the Sunne, which hath poſſeſſed the world; or (with S. Iames) a ſtrong illuſion of our ghoſtly enemy. Who when he cannot draw us wholly from the Service of GOD, maketh us ſingle out ſome one part of it from all the reſt, and to be ſuperſtitiouſly conceited of that part; to make much of it, and to magnifie it highly, nay onely; with neglect, and (even as it were) with ſome diſgrace to all beſides it.

Of which I may well ſay with S. Iames (the III. Chap. following at the X. Verſe) My Beloved, theſe things ought not ſo to be: nor they cannot ſo be, without manifeſt impeachment of the wiſedome of GOD, who hath appointed all the reſt, as well as his; and would have us make a conſcience of all the reſt, no leſſe tha. h: And, we cannot ſo ſever out one (as we doe) but this will follow; that, GOD did well and wiſely in appointing that one, but not ſo in the reſt. For, as for them, they might well have been ſpared; we can ſerve GOD without them, well enough.

Truely, though we cannot turne the ſtreame or Torrent of ths Time
Ioh. 3. 32. (for that men will not heare of ought againſt hearing;) yet, ſure it is, this is utterly a fault: Hearing is not the onely thing: And, ſo much wee muſt,
1 Cor. 6. 7. and doe teſtifie unto you, though our Witneſſe be not received.

But, this is not properly Saint Iames his onely: This rather; That, in hearing when we have made it the onely thing, we ſo cary our ſelves, as, when we have heard, and heard only, though we do nothing elſe, but heare and onely heare, we thinke we have done enough; we ſtand diſcharged before GOD; no further thing can be required at our hands. This (ſaith S. Iames) is (certainly) an illuſion, or deceiving our ſelves. For, if all other parts be neglected for this; and then, in this, ſo great an error be committed; if all we doe, be hearing, and even in that, we be deceived too, what ſhall become of us?

The Summe. For remedy (then) of this, doth S. Iames give us this Item: See that ye Ver. 19. 21. be, &c. In effect, as if he ſhould ſay: You are ſwift to heare, you receive the Word with all gladneſſe; you will not miſſe a Sermon: all this I allow of, and like well. But then, See, (that is) do it not blindly: To heare the word, is not a blind-man's worke: He had need, not onely have his eares, but his his eyes too, that ſhall doe it to purpoſe: Yea both his eyes; for there is worke for both: Videte, quid audiatis, to ſee, what he heares: videte quomodo audiatis, to ſee how he heares, In any wiſe, to ſee, he be not a hearer onely, and nothing but a hearer, and when he hath done that, thinke hee hath nothing elſe to doe. Mat. 4.24. Luke 8. 18.

Yet ſuch there were in Ezechiels time, (which place in the Old Teſtament, matcheth this in the New) that called one to another, Come, let us goe to the Sermon: Et audiunt (ſaith he) ſed nihil faciunt, and heard, but did nothing. Eze. 33. 31.

Such in Saint Iames's time elſe was his Caution without cauſe. And ſuch, in our time: not, In dogmate, for they maintaine it not; but their practiſe plainly diſcovers as much; that, ſo they heare, they care, neither what, nor how: Ipſum audire, very hearing ſerves their turne.

Well whoſoever ſo doth, how ſure ſo ever he makes himſelfe, how well and wiſely ſo ever he thinks he carries the matter, it is ſure (ſaith S. Iames) if he ſee not to it, he is fallen into deceptio viſus. And if he heare no otherwiſe, into deceptio auditus. His receiving of the Word, is nothing but a deceiving himſelfe.

So have we two principall Parts of this Text. 1. Firſt his adviſe, or caution: See that ye be doers of the Word, and not hearers onely. 2. And ſecondly, that which giveth an edge to this adviſe, which is a maine inconvenience, wee fall into, if we follow it not: Leſt wee deceive our ſelves. The Diviſion

The former of the adviſe, thus we put in order: Be not hearers onely of the Word, but doers; So is the true placing of the words, though it ſtands otherwiſe in the Text. Now, he that ſaith, Be not hearers onely, ſaith two things: 1. Be ye hearers: 2. But, not hearers only. So that the points grow to be three: 1. An allowing us, to be hearers (firſt.) 2. But not hearers onely, but ſomewhat elſe (the ſecond.) 3. Thirdly, what that is: Namely, to be doers of the Word: which is nothing elſe, but the fruit of that graft, which ſo lately ye heard of. And this is the Caution. I. Verſe 21.

Then ſecondly, he giveth it an edge, by ſaying, If we follow not his Caution, we fall into a flat Paralogiſme, we make a falſe concluſion, or fallacie. Yea, a double edge: 1 Firſt, that we are deceived: 2 The ſecond that we deceive our ſelves. II.

I. The Advice. 1 Be hearers.

WE beginne with this, that Saint Iames, in ſaying, Be not hearers onely, this he ſaith: Be hearers, but not onely hearers; be ye doers too: but, be hearers ſtill.

For, in dealing with Scriptures that conſiſt of Negatives by compariſon (not hearers, but doers; and ſuch like) we had need walke warily: and (as the Schoolemen ſay) reſolve them cum grano ſalis, leſt wee caſt out one Devill with another, as the manner of ſome is: the devill of hearing only, with the devill of not hearing at all: And ſo, the laſt error prove worſe than the firſt. We muſt take heed we preſerve both, both hearing and doing; each, in their ſeverall right: and ſo doe the former, that the latter wee leave not undone.

Mat. 12. 24. Mat. 27. 64. Mat. 23. 23.

For, Saint Iames, by opening our hands to doe, hath no meaning to ſhut our eares, to heare: by wiſhing us to fall to doing, he willeth us not to give over hearing: by bringing in the latter, taketh not away the former. But (as I ſayd) to hold on our hearing ſtill onely with this caution, that we reckon not that for all, or to be the thing ſolly or wholly to be intended by us. This being ſeene unto, to heare on, as we did.

Verſe 19. 21.

For, he that had (two Verſes before) willed us to be ſwift to heare; he that (the very next Verſe before) meekely to receive the Word: he could not poſsibly ſo ſoone forget himſelfe, as to have any ſuch meaning. No certainely, he had given it the honour of the firſt place, and his purpoſe is not to take it away againe.

GOD from heaven ſo beganne His Law with hearing: Heare Iſraël. GOD from heaven too, ſo beganne, His Goſpell; This is My beloved Sonne, Heare him. So GOD beganne, and ſo muſt we beginne, or elſe we begin wrong.

Deut. 4. 1. Mar. 17. 5.

And, not beginne onely, but continue ſtill hearing: For ſo doth the Apoſtle comment on the place of the Pſalme (To day if you will heare His voyce) that, by to day, is meant Donec cognominatur hodie, while it is called to day. And to morrow, and every day (when it comes) is called to day: ſo that, to day is all the daies of our life.

Pſal. 95. 7. Heb. 13. 3.

The reaſon of which our continuall being hearers, is the continuall neceſsitie of hearing of the Word of GOD. Which neceſsitie our Saviour CHRIST Himſelfe ſetteth downe, in expreſſe termes, ſpeaking of Maries choiſe, to ſit and heare His words, Vnum eſt neceſſarium; One of the neceſſarie things it is, and for ſuch we may boldly affirme it.

Luc. 10. 34.

What that neceſsitie is He tells us, when He calls it the key of knowledge. That there is a doore ſhut; this is the key: no opening, no entrance without it; none at all. For Quomodo poſſunt (ſaith Saint Paul)

Luc. 11. 52. Rom. 10. 14.

How

How can they poſsibly be ſaved, except they call upon God; or call upon Him except they heare? It ſeemes, he knew not how: and if not he, not any man elſe. For, if we muſt be doers of the Word (as, by and by he tells us we muſt) we muſt needs heare firſt, what to doe, before we can doe it. Act. 9. 6.

At the firſt, we are in his caſe, that ſayd, Domine quid me vis facere? we know not what to doe: then it is neceſſarie to teach us. Ioh. 14. 6.

After we know, we forget againe. Then, it is neceſſarie to call us to remembrance.

When we remember, we grow dull in our duty: Then, it is neceſſarie to ſtir up and quicken us. So, every way it is neceſſarie; and we cannot be quit of it donec cognominatur hodiè, while it is called to day. 2 Pet. 3. 1.

As the Philoſopher ſayd, of the Celeſtiall bodies and lights, that they were dignum & idoneum ſpectaculum, ſi tantùm præterirent (it is Seneca;) if they onely paſſed by over our heads: and we received not the benefit of their motion and influence (which we doe;) yet were they a ſpectacle worth the beholding. So may we juſtly ſay of the Word: though it only diſcloſed the high and admirable treaſure of Wiſedome and knowledge (it doth;) yet were it worth the while to heare it. For the Queene of the South, came a great long journey, onely to be partaker of Salomons Wiſedome, and for nothing elſe: & Ecce major Salomone hîc, and He that was the Author of this Word, is greater than Salomon. Mat. 12. 42.

How much more then, when beſides this excellencie, we have further ſo neceſſarie uſe of it? It ſerves us firſt, as a Key, or ſpeciall meanes, whereby we may eſcape the place of torments. So ſaith Abraham to him that was in them: if your five brethren would not come where you are, they have Moſes and the Prophets, Audiant ipſos, Let them heare them: that ſhall quit them, for ever comming there. Luc. 16. 29.

And it ſerves us, not only as a Key to looke that place, but to open us another, even the Kingdome of heaven. For, not ſo few as twenty times in the Goſpell, is the Preaching of the Word, called the kingdome of Heaven, as a ſpeciall meanes to bring us thither. It is that, which Saint Iames, in the Verſe before ſaith: It is able to ſave our ſoules. The very words which the Angell uſed to Cornelius, that when Saint Peter came, hee ſhould ſpeake words, by which he and his houſhold ſhould be ſaved. Such and ſo neceſſarie is the uſe of hearing the Word both waies. Luke 11. 52. Verſe 21. Acts 11. 14.

I conclude then with Saint Peter; Cui bene facitis attendentes, that ye doe well in giving heed to it; as Saint Iames here ſaith, not as ἀκροαταὶ, bare hearers; but, as ἐπήκοοι, attentive hearers: that in ſo doing, you doe well. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

But Saint Paul is ſo far carried, with this deſire to have us heare, that he ſaith: Let the Word be preached, and let it be heard, be it ſincerely, or be it pretenſedly, ſo it be done, it is to him, and ſhould be to us, matter (not onely of contentment, but alſo) of rejoyeing. As much to ſay, as let them come and be hearers, though it be but to mock: let them come and be hearers, Philip. 1. 18.

though it bee but to carpe, ſo they come and bee hearers. And it is not Acts 2.6. amiſſe. They, that came to mocke the Apoſtles, as men gone with drinke, were caught by their hearing. They that came to take our SAVIOVR
Iohn 7.32. CHRIST, were taken themſelves, by their hearing. Therefore, Quocunque modo (ſaith S. Paul, and though it be more than S. Iames ſeemes to warrant, ſay we) howſoever, and with what condition ſoever it be, Be ye Hearers of the word, ſtill.

Hearers: but, of the word. Hearers: but hearers of the Word. For, it ſhould be the Word, we heare. Words we heare every foot: but I dare not ſay, the Word, alwaies. Much chaffe is ſowen, in ſtead of right graine: Many a dry ſticke ingrafted, in ſtead of a Siene with life and ſappe in it. That was it, our SAVIOVR CHRIST
Marke 4.24. Luke 8.18. willed us to looke to; Quid, what we heard, as well as Quomodo, how. And indeed, for all our hearing, few have exerciſed ſenſes, to diſcerne this point. Whatſoever it be, that we heare out of the Pulpit, it ſerves our turne, it is all one: There is much deceit in this point. But, a point it is, that would not bee ſaluted afarre off, or touched lightly, but the very core of it ſearched, if it were dealt with, as it ſhould. But indeed, it is not ſo pertinent to S. Iames-his purpoſe in this place; therefore, I will not enter into it, but goe on to the ſecond.

2 Not hearers onely. Hearers of the word: But not hearers only, For all the matter is in the word [Onely.] The more hearers, the better: the more hearers onely, the worſe. We cannot ſay ſo much good of hearing, as we muſt ſpeake evill of ſuch as content themſelves with hearing only.

And, why not onely? Becauſe, to heare, is ſomewhat; but it is not all. A part it is; but, in no wiſe the whole. It is one thing; but, not the onely one thing. And therefore wee muſt not ſtay in it; there is a plus ultra: when we have done hearing, ſomewhat elſe it to be done.

This appeareth plainly, from our SAVIOVR CHRISTS owne mouth, even in that very place, where He ſo much commendeth hearing, and ſo ſetteth out the neceſsitie of it. He commendeth it, by ſaying, Mary
Luke 10.42. hath choſen the better part: The better part is but a part, yet: therefore, not the whole then. He ſetteth out the neceſsitie of it by ſaying; Vnum eſt neceſſarium: Vnum, He ſaith, not unicum: That, one thing it is; but not the onely one thing, that is neceſſarie, nor ſo to be reputed.

But of all other, S. Paul doth beſt ſhew the abſurdity of them, that ſo
1 Cor. 12.17. eſteeme it. What (ſaith he) is all the Body an Eare? Is all hearing? As if he ſhould ſay: That is too groſſe. Yet thither they muſt come, even to make all the ſenſes hearing, and all the Body an Eare, that place all religion in Lectures and Sermons.

This then being put apart only, being but one thing, wee muſt not ſtay heere: We muſt not ſtay; for, the Scripture it ſelfe (marke it where you will) never maketh a ſtay at this of hearing. Ever, the ſentence is ſuſpended; ever, there followeth a Copulative, an [And] in the necke of it. It never commeth to a pawſe, or full point, till ſomewhat elſe be ſupplied.

This people hath well ſayd (ſaith GOD in Deuteronomie:) What was that, that we may ſay ſo too? This it was, they ſaid to Moſes: Bring thou GODS word to us, and wee will heare it, and doe it. Not heare it onely (for then it ſhould not have beene commended) but heare it, and doe it. And ſo, it is well ſaid; and not otherwiſe. I will tell you (ſaith our Saviour CHRIST) who is a wiſe builder: He that heareth my words (and no period there, but) and doth them. And, to the woman, that heard His words with a great paſsion; Bleſſed are they that heare the word of GOD, and keepe it. And not to trouble you with many allegations, ſo concludeth He in the Revelation: Bleſſed is hee that readeth, and they that heare the words of this prophecie, and keepe the things written therein. Marke it well: Never a pawſe, a breath, a full point, or ſtay at hearing; but ſtill an And: and doe, and keepe, and fulfill; and ſomewhat elſe. To ſhew, it is neither the ſole, nor the whole thing: There remaineth ſtill for us ſome further duty behinde. Deut.5.28; Mat.7.24; Luc.11.28; Revel.1.3;

In as much then, as it is never put alone, but ſtill coupled with ſome other: And, it is a Rule (not onely for marriage, but for all things elſe) What GOD hath coupled, let no man put aſunder: Let us ſee, what that other thing is, which GOD hath coupled, and Saint Iames ſupplieth to bee joyned with it. Mat.19.6;

3 But doers of the Word.

What is that? Is it to be moved a little with that we heare? Vpon our hearing, to ſay with [a] Agrippa, ἐν ὀλίγῳ. ſomewhat I was; I was a little moved with it? No: this is to ſuffer, not to doe. Saint Iames ſpeaketh of doing. [a] Act.26.28;

What is it then? Is it to crye, [b] Magiſter benè dixiſti, Sir you well ſaid; you have made us a good Sermon? Nay then, what ſay you to [c] Nunquam quiſquam, wee never heard a better: Is not that it? No: for, this is to ſay, and not to doe. Saint Iames ſpeaketh of doing. [b] Luc.20.29; [c] Ioh.7.46;

What ſay you to conferring of it, by the walls of our houſe, and making that we have heard matter of diſcourſe or queſtion? I can tell what I would ſay, if our queſtions and diſcourſes tended to that of Saint Iames (heere) to doing: that then, wee were in a good way. But, ye ſhall obſerve, for the moſt part, they be about ſome pretty ſpeculative point, ſome ſubtill objection; Somewhat (ever) tending to curioſitie of knowledge, rather than conſcience of practice. But if we did ſo, yet it were but to talke of doing, not to doe. Still wee are ſhort of Saint Iames: who, whatſoever we doe, to ſatisfie him beſides, will not leave us, till we be doers of it. And (ſure) any that obſerveth it, ſhall find, that thoſe I have named ([1] To heare, [2] to be moved with it a little, [3] to commend it, [4] to ſpend a little talke about it) this is all. And that all theſe be but by-waies, which the enemie of our ſoules ſeeketh to lead us into, ſo to divert us from the true ende, that wee may reſt in theſe, as in our finall concluſion, and never come to this of Saint Iames (which is the point indeed) to bee doers.

We ſee then, what the other part is: to heare, that we may doe; to receive, that we may bring forth, to be grafted, that we may fructifie.

And, that our care of it may be according, I adde; that this is not onely a part, but farre the better part of the twaine. For, though Maries part, was better than Martha's (: Maries, in hearing; than Martha's in entertaining:) yet, Maries part in doing (that is) in annointing CHRIST, was better, than her part in hearing CHRIST, and hath a greater praiſe and promiſe from CHRISTS owne mouth: This that ſhe hath done ſhall be ſpoken of through the world. It is our Rule; Vnumquodque propter quid, & illud magis: In that doing is the Propter quid, the End of hearing; and wee therefore heare, what to doe, that we may doe, what we heare: In that (as the Schoolemen ſay) Scire eſt propter ire; We know the way, to goe the way: Doing muſt needs be the worthier of the twaine: Worthier in it ſelfe; and conſequently worthier our care and intendment.

Luke 10. ult.

Mat. 26. 13.

To make it plaine, doe but take them in ſunder, and ſever them: Saint Paul ſaith plainly, Then, Non auditores, Hearing is nothing; ſed factores; but doing is all. And, when they be joined, ſtill there is a marke ſet upon this part, to ſhew it for the chiefe. As here (at the XXV. Verſe following) he ſaith plainely, Beatus erit in opere ſuo; he that ſhall be bleſſed, ſhall be bleſſed in his worke; not in any thing elſe. Our Saviour Himſelfe ſaith the ſame in expreſſe termes: If ye know theſe things: how then? bleſſed ſhall ye be if ye doe them: Marke: Bleſſed, if ye doe them. Otherwiſe, if ye know them never ſo much, never the more bleſſed. Never the more bleſſed? Nay ſcienti & non facienti (ſaith S. Iames) Knowing and not doing is an encreaſe of our ſinne, and conſequently a greater heape of our condemnation. This therefore is the principall part, to be doers.

Rom. 2. 13.

Ioh. 13. 17.

Iam. 4. ult.

If then we would faine bee doers, and aske what that is? It is a materiall point to know. There are two kinds of doers: 1 ποιηταὶ and 2 πρακτικοὶ; Which the Latine likewiſe expreſſeth, in 1 Agere, and 2 Facere. Agere, as in Muſike; where, when we have done ſinging or playing, nothing remaineth: Facere, as in building; where, after we have done, there is a thing permanent. And ποιηταὶ, Factores, they are Saint Iames-his doers. But we have both the words, in the Engliſh tongue: Actors, as in a Play: Factors, as in Merchandiſe. When the Play is done, all the Actors doe, vaniſheth: But of the Factor's doing, there is a gaine, a reall thing remaining.

To be a doer of the Word, is (as Saint Gregorie ſaith well) Convertere Scripturas in operas, To change the Word which is audible, into a Worke which is viſible: the Word which is tranſient, into a Worke which is permanent.

Or

Or rather, not to change it, but (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith) Accedat ad verbum, unto the word, that we heare, let there be joyned the Element of the Worke (that is) ſome reall elementall deed, Et ſic fit magnum Sacramentum Pietatis, and ſo ſhall you have the great Myſterie or Sacrament of Godlineſſe. For indeed, Godlineſſe is as a Sacrament: hath not onely the myſterie, to be knowen, but the exerciſe to be done; not the Word to be heard; but the worke alſo to be performed: Or elſe, if it be not a Sacrament, it is not true godlineſſe. 1 Tim. 3. 16. 1 Tim. 4. 7.

Which very Sacrament of Godlineſſe is there ſaid to be the manifeſting of the word in the fleſh: which it ſelfe is lively expreſſed by us, when we are doers of the word; as it is well gathered out of our Saviour CHRISTS ſpeech, to them which interrupted Him in His Sermon, and told him, his mother was without: Who is my mother (ſaith He?) Theſe heere, that heare and doe my words, are my mother: They travell of me till I am faſhioned in them. Hearing, they receive the immortall ſeed of the word; by a firme purpoſe of doing, they conceive, by a longing deſire, they quicken; by an earneſt endeavour, they travell with it; and when the Worke is wrought, Verbum caro factum eſt, they have incarnate the word. Therefore to the womans acclamation, Bleſſed be the wombe that bare thee; true (ſaith CHRIST) but that bleſsing can extend but onely to one, and no more; I will tell you, how you may be bleſſed too; Bleſſed are they, that ſo incarnate the written word by doing it, as the Bleſſed Virgin gave fleſh, to the eternall word, by bearing it. Matt. Gal. 4. 1 Pet. 1. Ioh. 1. 14. Luc. 11. 27.

It is that which Saint Iames meaneth in the next Chapter, where hee ſaith, Oſtende mihi fidem: Faith commeth by hearing; ſhew me thy faith, and thy hearing (ſaith he, in the perſon of an heathen man.) The Chriſtian faith is, Quando creditur quod dicitur: the heathen faith, Quando fit quod dicitur (for, ſo they define it in their Bookes of Offices.) Ye ſhall never ſhew them your faith, cum creditur quod dicitur; but by that they underſtand (that is) their owne faith, cum fit quod dicitur, by doing the word. Enough to ſhew, what is meant, by doers of the word. Cha. 2. Ver. 18. Rom. 10. 17.

And leaſt we excuſe our ſelves by this, that all Sermons are not de Theologiâ practicâ, entreat not of matters of action, and ſo not to be done. By this that hath beene ſaid of the Sacrament of godlineſſe, wee may eaſily underſtand, that there is no Article of Faith, or Myſterie of Religion at all, but is as a key to open, and as a hand to lead us to ſome operative vertue. Even thoſe myſticall points, being by the Holy Ghoſts wiſedome, ſo tempered, that they miniſter every one of them, ſomewhat to bee doing with ſomewhat pertaining to the exerciſe of Godlineſſe, no leſſe than the morall points themſelves. So that, if we would diſpoſe our ſelves, to keepe Saint Iames-his Caution, I make no queſtion, we might well doe it through all. At leaſt, when the points are plainely practike, meere Agends, then to make a conſcience of doing them, and to call our ſelves to accompt of what wee have heard, what we have done, till as Saint 1 Tim. 4. 7.

Iames-his terme is, wee finde our ſelves to bee doers of the word: till as Saint Iames-his terme was, the verbum inſitum, the ingrafted word have his fruit in a worke ſuitable to the ſeed or ſien, it came of. And this is the Summe of his Caution.

II. The edge of the caution, or the Inconvenience. 1 Deceiving.

What if we doe thus, what then? So doing, ſaith Saint Iames, we ſhall doe wiſely, and make ſure worke; in ſaying that, Not doing ſo, we ſhall but beguile our ſelves. For indeed, thoſe are the onely hearers, that are doers too: The other, that are hearers onely, as good not heare; for when all is done, doing muſt doe it. That is plaineſt, that Scripture telleth us, how it ſhall goe at laſt: They that have done good, ſhall goe into life everla-
Ioh.8.29. ſting; and they that have done evill, goe (I need not tell you) you know whither well enough.

This very thing had David ſayd long before of the word; A good
Pſal.111.10. underſtanding have all they that doe thereafter. And ſo had our Saviour CHRIST, who ſaith of him that heareth and doeth, that he approveth
Matt.7.24. himſelfe for a wiſe builder. Which is that and nothing elſe, which Saint Iames heere implieth, that they make a ſound concluſion, or true Syllogiſme.

Matt.7.26. As, on the other ſide, ſuppoſing they doe it not, they bee fooliſh build-
Matt.25.23. ders, fooliſh virgins (ſaith CHRIST:) ſaith Saint Iames, they fall into a flat fallacie, or Paralogiſme: are deceived by a peece of the Devils ſophiſtrie.

And the Apoſtle could not poſsibly deviſe to ſpeake more fitly, or to give his caution a better edge. For, theſe great hearers, nothing ſo much nettles them, as to be compted men deceived, unwiſe or overſeene. Men are deceived for want of knowledge: They reckon themſelves the onely people, as if knowledge ſhould die with them. And, being men of knowledge, conſequently freeſt from error, of any men alive. They pitie much the blindneſſe of the former times: but as for them, they ſee light cleerely, and are not deceived you may be ſure. Therfore this ſeemeth very ſtrange to them, and in evill part they muſt needs take it, to bee holden for men deceived. The more it moveth them, the liker it is to worke with them; and therefore Saint Iames the rather chooſeth it.

It is the courſe, the Holy Ghoſt ſtill keepes with them. For ſuch were, in our Savior's time, the Phariſes. None, ſuch men of knowledge, as they: They were knowledge all over: in their for-head, at their wriſts, down to the very fringe and skirts of their garment. Notwithſtanding, upon this very point of Non faciunt, our Saviour Chriſt lets not to call them fooles and blind, though they took themſelves to be the only Eagles of the world. Even ſo were thoſe in the Pſalme, when they had heard the Law, Sabboth after Sabboth, fourty yeares together, yet (ſaith he) It is a people that doth erre in their hearts, for all that: and though they have heard ſo long, yet they know not my waies. And even ſo Saint Paul, with ſome in his time, whom though though he termes alwaies learning, continually hearing, ſtill at Sermons; yet for all that he ſaith, they never came to the knowledge of the truth : Not the true knowledge, which conſiſteth in the practice; but a kinde of jangling knowledge, and holding of oppoſition, which hee calleth knowledge falſly ſo called. Therefore, for all their Sermons, and all their Lectures, a deceipt there is certainly. 2 Tim.3.7. 1 Tim.6.20.

For, let us examine it. If that which is heard, be therefore heard that it may bee done, and it be not done, a deceipt there is: ſomebody there is deceived, light where it will. Now, there be but three in all, that bee parties to it: 1 GOD, 2 the Preacher, 3 and the Hearer. One of theſe it muſt be.

Be not deceived (ſaith the Apoſtle) GOD is not mocked : No deceiving of Him. It is not He, ſure. Gal.6.8.

Then it is we: So one would thinke; ſo thought Eſay : Alas (ſaith he) I have laboured in vaine, I have ſpent my ſtrength in vaine, I finde I am deceived. But he receives anſwere of GOD, it was not ſo. That neither hee had preached the word, nor the word he had preached, had beene, or ſhould be in vaine. For himſelfe; that his reward was with GOD, whether the hearer profited or no. For the word; that, as the raine or ſnow, going forth, it ſhould not returne empty without his effects. Eſay 49.4. Verſe 5. Eſay 55.11.

Which anſwere to Eſay, was it which put comfort in Saint Paul: that were his preaching the ſavour of life, or of death; both waies, it was in him a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, accepted of GOD. And if neither GOD, nor the Preacher, then muſt the deceipt fall on the Hearer : and he it is that is deceived. 2 Cor.2.15.

Deceived? Wherein, or how? many waies. And firſt, in groſly miſtaking the very nature of Sermons. Vpon Audiunt & non faciunt, Ezechiel ſaith plainly of thoſe in his daies, they ſeemed to reckon of Sermons, no otherwiſe than of Songs : to give them the hearing, to commend the aire of them, and ſo let them goe. The Muſike of a ſong, and the Rhetorique of a ſermon, all is one. A foule error, even in the very nature of the word: for, that is a Law, a Teſtament, and neither ſong nor ſonnet. A Law, enacted to be done. For, it ſhall not ſerve the three children, to ſay of Nabuchadnezars Law, They had heard it proclaimed from point to point: but doe it they muſt, or into the furnace; for ſuch is the nature of a Law. A Teſtament: which, though it bee but a mans (as Saint Paul ſaith) muſt be executed; and we are compellable to the execution of it: and to GODS much more. Dan.3.8. Gal.3.15.

To ſpeake but according to the Metaphore in the Verſe before : It is a plaine miſtaking of the word (which is, as Seed in a ſoile, or as a Sien in a ſtocke) to take it for a ſtake in a hedge, there to ſticke and ſtand ſtill, and bring forth nothing. Or, according to the Metaphore in the Verſe next after; where it is termed a Glaſſe, which wee ſhould looke in, to doe ſomewhat by; to take away ſome ſpot, to mend ſomewhat amiſſe, Verſe 21. Verſe 23.

to ſet ſomewhat right: And it is plainly to miſtake it, to looke in it, and look off it, and forget our chiefe errand to it.

As this is a manifeſt miſtaking in the Nature; So is there a like in the End. For whereas they heare, to doe; and to doe, is the End, why they heare; theſe Auditores tantum doe (even as Saint Paul ſaith) requieſcunt in lege, make the Law their Pillow, lay them downe upon it, and there take their reſt: Never ſeeke farther, and ſo miſſe their marke quite.

Rom. 2. 19.

But a worſe error yet than this is, that they which when they have heard, have done, ſeeme to thinke that hearing and doing is all one: inaſ-much as all they doe, is onely that they heare: and ſo, groſly confound the two parts, that are plainly diſtinguiſhed. For, hearing is a ſenſe, and ſenſe is in ſuffering: but, the hearing of the Word is ſo eaſie a ſuffering, as if we looke not to our ſelves, we often fall aſleepe at it. Now, ſuffering and doing are plainly diſtinguiſhed: and not onely plainly diſtinguiſhed, but (as wee ſee) flatly oppoſed (by Saint Iames in the Text) either to other.

Not to hold you over-long: ſeeing the Apoſtle borrowed his terme of Paralogiſme from the Schooles, to ſpeake in ſchoole-termes. In hearing only, and not doing, there is (firſt) the Elench, A ſenſu compoſito ad diviſum: which they fall into, that where two things are required, reſt in one. And again, Elench, A dicto ſecundum quid, ad dictum ſimpliciter: wherwith they are deceived, that having a part, think that part ſhall ſerve them, in ſtead of the whole. Which two, are a peece of the Devils ſophiſtry; and ſo you ſee, both [1] that they are deceived; [2] and how they are deceived that reſt upon hearing onely.

Deceiving your ſelves.

But to be deceived ſimply, is no ſo great matter; wiſe men (many of them) are ſo, and any of them may be. This is that which edgeth it yet more, which giveth it a double edge: that they deceive themſelves.

1 In which point, firſt certaine it is, there is no man, that willingly would be deceived, can endure to be deceived himſelfe. Saith the firſt and greteſt Deceiver, to Eve, even then, when he came purpoſely to deceive her, אַף־כִּי, Is it for a troth, that God hath forbidden you to eate of all the trees? As if he ſhould ſay: I would not have you deceive me, tell me true, whether it be ſo or no. Lo, he would not be deceived himſelfe, though he came meerly about deceipt.

Gen. 3. 1.

2 But then ſecondly: If deceived we muſt be, of all men we would not be deceived of ſuch, as we truſt: that grieves us exceedingly. Saith David, He hath beguiled me whom I truſted; my Guide, my Counſellor, my familiar friend. He can never ſay enough of it, for it is a griefe above all griefes to be ſo deceived.

Pſal. 55. 14.

3 Thirdly then, if not by one wee truſt, leaſt of all, by that party, whom moſt of all we truſt (that is) by our ſelves; for, we truſt none none better, I ſuppoſe. If we muſt be deceived; of another, of any other, rather than of our ſelves. For, he that deceiveth himſelfe, is both the deceived and the deceiver too. The deceived may be pitied: the deceiver is ever to be blamed: Therefore, he is utterly without excuſe, that is the author of his owne deceiving. And there is no man pitieth him, but every one mocketh him, and takes up Proverbes over him, of ſelfe doe ſelfe have, and I wot not what. So that, this of all other, is the worſt. 1 To be deceived: 2 To be deceivers: 3 To be their owne deceivers.

Will ye ſee an example of this, that they doe but deceive themſelves, that build upon Auditores tantùm? You may, Luc. 13. where you ſhall ſee ſome, that upon their bare hearing, bare themſelves very confidently, as if they could by no meanes be deceived in it, and yet they were. Chriſt ſaith to them, Neſcio Vos. They thinke very ſtrange of that ſpeech, and reply, Lord, why haſt not thou preached in our ſtreets, and have not we heard thee duly, and never miſſed? Well for all that, for all their hearing, He telleth them againe, Neſcio vos. Though He had ſeen them at never ſo many Sermons, He taketh no notice of them, by their being, or hearing there; but by their doing afterward. By which it appeareth, that upon this very point, they promiſed themſelves very much; but found at laſt, they had but deceived themſelves. Luc. 13. 26.

And (which is worſt of all) found it then, when it was too late; when no Writ of error could be brought; when it was paſt time, and they no way to be releeved.

And yet to goe further. If this deceipt of themſelves were in ſome light matter, of no great importance, it were ſo much the more tolerable; but ſo it is not, here. The laſt words of the laſt Verſe, are (as you remember) ſalvare animas veſtras: ſo that, it is a matter of ſaving our ſoules; a matter as much as our ſoules or ſalvation are worth. Life, or Death; Heaven, or Hell; no leſſe matters depend upon our being deceived here. Things, which moſt of all, it concerneth us, not to be deceived in.

One point more, and ſo an end. They will be hearers of the word, and not doe it: what ſay you to this, that when they have been hearers only all their life long, they ſhall in the end, be forced to be doers; and doers of that word, which leaſt of all others they would doe: Is not this evidently to deceive themſelves? In the Prophet Ieremie, they ſay, They will give GOD the hearing, but not do any of His words: But, they ſhall not go away with it ſo. For, when they have done what they can, they ſhall find themſelves deceived in that too. A word there is, they ſhall not heare only, but heare and doe, whether they will or no. And, what is that word? Even Diſcedite maledicti in ignem æternum. For, they that will doe none elſe; that they ſhall doe: and fulfill that commandement that breake all the reſt. And, who is able to fulfill, nay, to abide that word? Who can endure to goe whither that will ſend him? Of all words, that is durus ſermo, nay duriſſimus, the hardeſt to doe of all: better doe any, yea better doe all, than doe that. Ier. 18. 18. Matt. 25. 41. Ioh. 6. 60.

You ſee then, what an edge the Apoſtle hath ſet upon his advice: how great an inconvenience they runne themſelves into, that be hearers only. Which if it be intolerable (as ſure, it is) it will import us, to take heed to the Caution, that ſo we may avoid this double edge.

Firſt then, that we doe as we doe, heare ſtill. For, Bene-facitis Attendentes.

Yet, not to bee carried away with the common error, that Sermon-hearing is the Conſummatum eſt of all Chriſtianitie; and, ſo we heare our Sermons duly, all is ſafe, more needs not. But, to reſolve with our ſelves, that onely will not doe it: Somewhat there muſt be beſides. And when all is done, it muſt be Factores verbi.

Laſtly, that we may (if we pleaſe) entertaine other opinions touching this point; but they will deceive us, and we in holding them, be deceived. And that, in a matter of great weight and conſequence: which then we ſhall find and feele, when it will be too late to helpe it.

Then, that hearing, and not doing, we ſhall in the end be forced both to heare and to doe a word, the heavieſt to be heard, and the worſt to be done, of all others. Therfore, that we ſee to it in time, and keep the Caution, that wee may avoyd the penaltie.

Which Almightie GOD open our eyes, that wee may ſee, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED AT THE OPENING OF THE PARLIAMENT, An. Dom. MDCXXI.

PSAL. LXXXII. Ver. I.

DEVS ſtat in Synagoga Deorum : In medio Deos judicavit.

The Greeke, word for word, the ſame.

[a]GOD ſtandeth in the Congregation of PRINCES.

[b] or, in the Aſſembly of the Gods,

[c] or, of the Mightie.

In the midſt will He judge the Gods.

[a] The Pſalter
[b] The Geneva.
[c] The New Tranſlation.

Which was the Pſalme for the day, viz. the XVI. day of the month, on which day the Parliament was firſt begun.

GOD ſtandeth in the congregation of Princes, &c. Of a Congregation of Princes is this Pſalme (as you have heard.) And behold, here, ſuch a Congregation (And GOD, I truſt, ſtanding in it.) And who then can doubt but this Pſalme is for this day?

The words (ſure) ſeeme to favour it: The uſe much more, which hath ever gone with it.

For, ſtanding the Policie of the Common-wealth of Iſrael (their Writers tell us,) when ought was to be done, for chooſing their Rulers, for placing them and giving them their charge: but ſpecially, when there was any meeting of them, in their Synagogâ magnâ, their great Congregation, this was ever the Pſalme before they ſate downe. Purpoſely ſet (as it ſeemeth) for the Aſſembly, to ſet them in tune. For that end ſet: and to that end ever uſed.

It was Moſes the man of GOD, that by ſpeciall direction from GOD Himſelfe, Deut. 19. beganne and brought up this order firſt, of making mens duty into muſike; putting it into their mouthes, that ſo, with the ſweetneſſe of melodie it might be conveyed into their minds. And David ſince continued it, and brought it to perfection, as having a ſpeciall grace and felicitie; He for a ſong, and his Sonne Salomon for a Proverbe: By which two (the unhappy Adage, and a wanton ſong) Satan hath ever breathed moſt of his infection and poiſon, into the minde of man.

Now in this holy and heavenly uſe of his harp, He doth by his tunes (as it were) teach all ſorts of men, how to tune themſelves. And there is no eſtate whatſoever, but in this Booke he ſweetly ſingeth their duty into them. Into his Court, Pſal. 101. and ſo ſeverally, into the reſt. And here now, in this Pſalme, how to preſerve harmonie in a Congregation.

The Diviſion Of which Pſalme this is the firſt verſe, the key, and the Compendium of the whole. And thus we divide it. 1. Into two Parties, firſt. 2. Into two Acts, ſecond. Two Parties, 1 the firſt word of it is GOD, GOD in the ſingular: 2 the laſt is Gods, Gods in the plurall: theſe two Parties are diſtinct, 1 one from another, 2 one above another.

1 GOD that ſtandeth, from the Congregation He ſtandeth in. 2. GOD that judgeth, from and above the Gods whom He will judge.

The Gods wee conſider two wayes, as the word is twice repeated; 1 Deorum and 2 Deos. 1 In Synagogâ Deorum, and 2 In medio Deos. 1 Deorum, in the Congregation; 2 Deos out of it. If you will, thus: Into the 1 Gods of the Congregation, and the 2 Congregation of the Gods.

Now of the firſt GOD in and upon the laſt Gods, and in and upon the Congregation of them, two acts there are ſet downe, 1 His ſtanding, 2 His Iudgement.

1 In the Congregation, He ſtands: Stat in Synagogâ Deorum.

2 Out of it, the Gods He will judge: Deos judicabit (that is) call them to accompt (every God of them:) and even upon this very point, how they carried themſelves before Him ſtanding in the Congregation. 1 This He will doe: and doe it in medio, not in a corner, but bring them forth into the midſt, and doe it in the view of all. In medio Deos judicabit.

The Order lieth plaine. 1 Of the Gods, firſt. 2 Then, of the Congregation of them. After, of GOD; 1 His ſtanding, and 2 His judging. Standing, now; Deus ſtat: Iudging, hereafter; Deus judicabit. Iudging, 1 even the Gods themſelves. And that 2 in medio, that all the world may ſee it.

1. In the whole courſe of our lives, we may have good uſe of theſe two.

But the Pſalmiſt ſeemeth to thinke, Not at any time ſo good, as at this.

Therefore what ever elſe ſlip you, my deſire is, theſe two may ſticke with you, and be ever in your minds all the Seſsion long. Two they be; and ſhort ones, and plaine ones they be (but two words a-peece) [1] Deus ſtat, [2] Deus judicabit: [1] GOD doth ſtand, and [2] GOD will judge. [1] Doth ſtand for the preſent. [2] And will judge, will take a time to call each party to a reckoning, for every thing ſhall here paſſe.

[1] The taking to heart; a true impreſsion there of theſe two, cannot but doe much good, keepe all in true meaſure, time, and tune. [2] The ignorantibus or non recordantibus of it (as it is at the fourth Verſe) like enough to put all out of courſe: while men run on and carry things away before them, as if there were no judicare in the Creed, as if they ſhould never come to accompt againe.

It hath beene thought, there needeth no more to make a good Parliament, but the due recording of this Verſe. It will ſerve as a wreſt to tune, and to ſet all right. To ſet GOD, [1] Firſt ſtanding, and then [2] judging, before our eyes.

But ſpecially ſtanding: For, if we ſhall regard Him well, when He ſtands, we ſhall never need to feare Him, when Hee judges; and then I ſhall never need to trouble you, with that part. The regard then of GODS ſtanding, to bee our onely care for the preſent, and wee to commend it to your care, and ſo to conclude.

The two parties. The Gods of the Congregation.

OF the Gods firſt. And firſt on our parts that be men: After, on theirs that be the Gods.

On our parts: When we read, and weigh well with our ſelves, this high terme and title of Gods, given to them that are in authoritie; wee learne, To hold them for Gods, to owe and to beare all reverend regard to their Places and Perſons. And above all, highly to magnifie ſuch Aſſemblies as this. So taught by the Prophet heere; Who once and twice, over and over againe, ſo ſtileth them, their perſons themſelves, Deos; their Aſſembly, Synagogam Deorum. In the Congregation they are ſo: Out of it, they are ſo. Adde to theſe two a third yet, more authenticall (and it is in this Pſalme, too:) The Prophet ſpeaketh here; GOD Himſelfe, there, Ego dixi Dii eſtis, This ſaith our SAVIOVR (*Io.*10.35.) is ſermo Dei. The other two may ſeeme to drop out of the Prophets penne, but this came from GODS owne mouth: the more (ſay I) to be regarded. And this is not Old teſtament (as ſay our Anabaptiſts.) Our bleſſed Saviour, in the New, comments upon theſe words (the beſt Commenter, that ever was) and a The duty of inferiors to the Gods.

things he tells us. 1 One, we thought it to be but a Pſalme, He tells us it is a 1 Pet. 2. 18. Theſe then, Dii, Deorum, and Deos are not S. Peters ὑπερογκὰ ματαιότητος, ſwelling words of vanitie. This is not to give titles, but of GODS owne giving: Nor to ſay one ſyllable more than GOD hath ſayd before us. Said it muſt be, that GOD hath ſaid, who never gives titulum ſine Re. So they are by Him intituled: and ſo they are.

Yet not to hold all the Gods equall. But I take it my duty not to keepe from you, that all that are compriſed here under Dii, Deorum, and Deos, are not all Gods alike. No: in this God-head, Some are before or after other, Some are greater and leſſer than another. There are ſome higher than other (ſaith Salomon, *Eccleſ.*5.12.) And there Rom.13.2. are others yet higher than they. For the Powers that are, are by GOD, both or-

Many Superiors, but one Soveraigne.

Ego dixi, was ſaid to all; but not to all at once. To ſome one, before the reſt: even to David, to whom before the writing of this Pſalme. 1 Sam. 23. 3. GOD (ſaith he) even the ſtrength of Iſrael ſpake to me and ſaid, Thou ſhalt beare rule over men. Nor did all the ſonnes of the moſt High (as they are after called at the ſixt Verſe) come into the world, at one time. There was Primogenitus inter fratres: Of whoſe Primogeniture or birthright, this was a part, Gen. 27. 29. Be Thou Lord over thy brethren, and let thy mothers ſonnes bow unto thee. And take even the word Synagoga: Never was there Synagogue heard of, but there was an Archiſynagogus, a Ruler of it.

Nazianzen ſpeaking of Magiſtrates as of the images of GOD, and ſorting them; compareth the higheſt to a picture drawen cleane through downe to the feete; The middle ſort, to halfe pictures drawen but to the girdle; The loweſt, to thoſe ſame Idyllia, no further but to the neck and ſhoulders. But all in ſome degree, carry the image of GOD, as all have the honour to be called by His Name. This for our parts. Now for theirs, the Gods.

a The duety of the Gods: To be as they bee called, Gods, indeed. What inferre we of this? Nothing, but that, what they are, they would be: having obtained ſo excellent a Name, they would bee even what their name bodeth. ſomewhat more than men they would be; as like, come as neere rem nominis, the truth of that they are named, as humane frailty will permit.

But have they beene ever ſo? I cannot ſay it. Aſſemblies there have beene, [a] Abimelech had one; and [b] Roboam his; and Ieroboam his. But Abimelech, with his needy indigent Sichemites: Roboam, with his youth, that never ſtood before Salomon: [c] Ieroboam, with his crue of malcontents, Sonnes of Belial, ſhall I call any of theſe Synagoga Deorum? I cannot, I ſee no lineaments, no reſemblance at all, nothing, for which this name ſhould once be vouchafed them (of Gods.) Nay, nor ſcarce of Synagoga neither; as deſerving, not only to be left out of the liſt of Gods, but even to be put extrà Synagogam. Scarce a Synagogue, much leſſe of Gods.

Yet have they not alwaies beene ſuch.

a Iud. 9. 4.
b 1 Reg. 12. 8.
c 2 Chro. 13. 7.

After, in this Pſalme, at the V. Verſe, they are told as much, when by their ignorantibus, or non intelligentibus, things were growen out of courſe. And told it by GOD Himſelfe, and that with a kinde of indignation, that He had ſaid they were Gods, and they carried themſelves ſcarce like men: gone from their names quite.

But I leave them, and come to this of ours. There is not in the world a more reaſonable requeſt than this, What you would bee, that to bee: What you would bee in name, that to be in deed; to make good your name. Every one to be Homo homini Deus, by doing good: Specially, that good which is the good of all, that is, the good of this Aſſembly. This the time and place for it. And, ſo my wiſh is, you may, and my truſt is you will. And ſo I leave Deorum, the Gods of the Congregation: and come to Synagoga, the Congregation it ſelfe.

But ours we wiſh to be ſuch.

II.

The Congregation of the Gods. Eze. 1. 20.

For when we conſider theſe Gods each apart, they are as in Ezechiel, Every ſpirit on his wheele, and every wheele in his owne courſe, when they are at home in their ſeverall countries. But when as in a Congregation, then are they to come and to be together.

God alloweth ſuch Congregatiõs, when there is cauſe.

d Num. 10. 34.

And this (if cauſe be) GOD alloweth well of. 1. For he hath to that end left with His Lieutenant, a power [d] to blow the trumpets, one or both, to call together a part, or the whole Congregation. By the Trumpets, while they were all within the Trumpets ſound: But after, when they were ſettled all Canaan over, to call them by the penne of the writer (that is, by Writ:) Of which we have a faire example, Iudg. 5. 14. 2. For ſecondly, He hath willed the Angels of His Church, by the Angels example (Iudg. 5. 23.) to lay Meroz's curſe to them that come not to it. 3. For thirdly, Hee heere calleth their meeting by the name of Synagogue, which is a Holy place, a Sanctuarie, a High place, or Court of refuge, (עדה ſignifies all theſe.) 4. For fourthly, He hath to that end ſpared them a peece of His owne Temple, to have their meetings in, [e] On the ſouth ſide of it, called twice by the name of Aſuppim (which was to them, as the Parliament-houſe is to us) that ſo, their feete might ſtand on holy ground. And they knew themſelves e 1 Chro. 26. 15.

ſelves to be, no קהל common or prophane, but עדה a ſacred Aſſembly to Him. 5. For fifthly, He hath ſet them here a Monitorie Pſalme of this, to put them in minde, how to beare themſelves in it, like Gods (that is) Divinely. 6. For laſt when they are together, He comes Himſelfe in perſon and ſtands among them. All which ſhew, He favours and likes well ſuch Aſſemblies as this.

The cauſe of the meeting of ſuch Congregations.

But then, there muſt be a Cauſe: And indeed, elſe it is Concurſus atomorum, rather than Congregatio deorum. Thus many, ſo goodly a Company to meete to no end, GOD forbid. If the Apoſtle had not, Nature doth teach us, [f] When we come together, to come together for the better not for the worſe. And nothing is worſe, than to come together for nothing. Better (as Debora ſaith well) [g] ſtay at home, and heare the bleating of their flocks. This be farre from any Aſſembly; ſpecially the Aſſembly of the Gods, who are herein to imitate GOD, who doth nothing in vaine, or without a cauſe.

[f] 1 Cor. 11. 17.

[g] Iudg. 5. 16.

This cauſe double.
1 One from Synagoga.
2 The other from Deorum.

If you aske me the cauſe, the two words themſelves, Synagoga and Deorum, containe either of them a cauſe of it. As a Congregation, for the good of the Congregation: As Gods, Cœtus Deorum Cœtus Dei (ſaith Saint Hieron.) the Congregation of Gods is GODS Congregation: As His, for Him, for his honour, who gave them their's; to the high pleaſure of that GOD, whoſe Ego dixi Goded them all. And ſo (as I remember) it is written In capite libri, the firſt page, or front of your acts, To the high pleaſure of Almighty GOD (there, lo, is GOD) and for the weale publike (there is the Congregation.) Not this onely here, the Congregation of Gods, but the Congregation of men (I know not how many) all the Land over, even the great Congregation.

1 From Synagoga when it is in danger.

Learne a parable of the Naturall Body. If there be no other cauſe, each Member is left to looke to it ſelfe; but if there be any danger toward the whole body, preſently all the parts are ſummoned (as it were) to come together, and every Veine ſends his bloud, and every ſinew his ſtrength, and every arterie his ſpirits, and all draw together about the heart for a while, till the ſafety of the whole be provided for; and then returne backe, every one to his place againe. So is it with the Body Civill, in caſe of danger; and never but in it.

The danger of two ſorts.
1 Ordinarie.
2 Or upon ſpeciall occaſion.
1 Ordinary, By Synagoga vitiorum.
2 Ex malis moribus.

But is there any danger then towards? There is, and that to both. To the Synagogue firſt, and that from a twofold Synagogue, and of two ſorts: 1 One continuall or ordinarie: 2 The other not ſo, but ſpeciall and upon occaſion. The danger, this Pſalme expreſſeth thus (Ver. V.) That things are brought out of courſe, yea foundations and all. Thus: there be (I may call them a ſynagogue, for they be many) of theſe ſame mali mores, that like tubera terræ, ſhoot out dayly, no man knowes whence, or how; never heard of before: Theſe, if they be ſuffered to grow, will bring all out of courſe. And grow they doe; for even of them, ſome that have penalties already ſet (I know not how) ſuch a head they get, as they outgrow their punishments : that if this Congregation grinde not on a new and a sharper edge, they will bring things yet further out of Course.

pnniſhments

Besides, those that should keep all in course, the Lawes themselves are in danger too. There be a sort of men (I may well say of the Synagogue of Satan) that give their waies, and bend their wits to nothing, but even to devise, how to fret through the Lawes, as soone as they be made; as it were in scorne of this Congregation, and of all the Gods in it. These go to the foundations (for so, are the Lawes;) undermine them and in a sort, though after another manner, seeke to blow up all. Great pitie, but this Congregation here should look well to the foundations of all. Great pitie, that it should be overcome of their evill, but that their evill should be overcome of our good, and this of yours goe beyond them. b Ex legibus depravatis. Rom. 12. 21.

It is not to goe through all. Generally, Quid populo, quòd flet? what the congregations of men have just cause to complaine of, the Congregation of Gods sit to redresse. Whatsoever Synagoga Satanæ per malos mores, doth put out; Synagoga Deorum, per bonas Leges, is to set in joint againe. And that is the proper worke of this Assembly, to make Lawes. And that is properly the worke of God: His worke, at Sinai, and at Sion both. And in truth, That there is but one Lawgiver, and that is God (saith S. Iames, Chap. 4. Ver. 12.) As, till Ego dixi, till then, there was but one God: but together with His Name, He imparted also His power; and made you a Congregation of Lawgivers, and of Gods, both at once. A high Power; the highest in earth, save one: Next to the Scepter in Iuda's hand, is the Lawgiver betweene his feete, even with Iacob. And so with Salomon: After Per me Reges regnant, presently followes Et Legum conditores justa decernunt. To this so high a worke, a whole Synagogue of wisedome is little enough; to bring into course that is out, to set the foundations fast, against this Synagogue of Satan. And this lo, is the ordinarie and continuall danger, I spake of. 1 Sam. 11. 15. These to be helped with good lawes. Gen. 49. 10. Pro. 8. 15.

But for all this danger, we might well enough stay a longer time and not come together; there is no such present haste to meet with that. There is another (I take it) more pressing, as I said before, upon a more speciall and present occasion. Will you but looke over into the next Psalme following, into the beginning of it? there, you shall find another Congregation, a second, casting their heads, and confederate together, able to put foundations and all out of course. And then he reckons up a rabble of them. Edomites: the Edomites first, and you know what they cried, Exinanite usque ad fundamenta, Vp withall, foundations and all: the Edomites, and Ismaelites, and Moabites, and Agarenes, Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek. And at last, Assur also was joyned with them: (Assur, that even then, purposed, and after did eat them all up one after another; yet he was then joyned with them.) Such a Congregation (it is said) there is now abroad, and what will they doe? No harme; bring nothing out of course (they say.) But it will be the wisedome of this Congregation, to be provided for them if 2 Vpon speciall occasion. By Synagoga inimicorum. Psal. 83. 3. Verse 6. Psal. 137. 7.

if they ſhould not doe as they ſay: This Pſalme ſtands before that, that this Congregation may be before-hand, with that.

Peace and perfect amitie to be wiſhed before all: (no man doubts of that:) If it be poſſible as much as in us lieth, peace with all men. But, Peace will be had, with never the leſſe aſſurance, and with never the worſe conditions, if the Congregation be well appointed, that ſeeke it.

Rom. 12.18.

And this is the ſecond worke of this Congregation (if not the firſt.) Therefore (it may bee thought) at this time called together, that there may be Multitudo Conſilii, ſoundly to adviſe of it; and Multitudo Auxilii, roundly to goe through with it. The Text intends this of helpe ſpecially; for, in ſome tranſlations, it is the Congregation of the Mightie; but howſoever, the very name is taken from אל, that Name of GOD, that is given Him for His ſtrength and Power. Of thoſe that are Mighty and ſo can ſhew themſelves, of thoſe is this Congregation. Ever remembring this, that they who aſſemble for an End, aſſemble alſo to deviſe how to furniſh meanes to compaſſe that End: (and indeed, of the End, properly, we conſult not, but of the meanes rather.) Our SAVIOVR CHRIST, ſpake with His owne mouth, Who will ever reſolve upon Warre, but they will ſit downe firſt, and ſet downe what forces will be needfull? and how much they will ſtand in? and how that is to be had or levied, that (as the wiſeman ſaith) Reſpondit omnibus; Anſwers, takes order for all.

Luc. 14.13.

Thus for the Synagogue: What for GOD? There is no doubt (bleſſed be GOD for it) but what Moſes ſaid of Iuda [His owne hands ſhall bee ſufficient for Him, if thou LORD helpe him againſt his enemies] may be ſaid of this our Land: If GOD helpe us, ſufficient enough. And He will helpe Vs, if we helpe Him. Helpe GOD? what a word is that? Even the very word, the Angell uſed, when he had laid a curſe upon Meroz, for not comming to helpe the LORD: againe, leſt wee might thinke it ſcaped him, upon deliberation hee ſaith, to helpe the LORD againſt the mighty, that is Siſera and Iabins mighty preparations. Ever, where the right is, there GOD is; when that in Danger, GOD in danger: they that helpe that, helpe Him; and Hee will helpe them. If the Congregation, GOD; GOD, the congregation. They will fight from heaven (then) the ſtars in heaven will fight in their courſes for us, And then it will be an Auxiliarie Warre right. And in ſigne, that He will ſo, when they are met together about theſe matters, GOD comes Himſelfe here in perſon, and ſtands among them. GOD, in the Congregation of Gods, what more proper and kindly? And ſo much for the Gods, and for their Congregation.

III.

The two acts.

Now for the two acts of GOD: in and upon this Congregation: 1 His Standing, and 2 Iudging: Firſt, jointly; After, apart: 1. Iointly: They are thought to be ſet firſt (theſe two) as two Correctors of the two former, Deorum and Deos, leſt the Gods of the Congregation ſhould bee exalted

1 Iointly.
1 To correct the word (Gods.)

above

above measure with this deifying revelation. Secondly, as two Markes of difference betweene the first GOD, and the last Gods; so to let them see what manner of Gods they be indeed, how differing from Him.

2 To put a difference between them and God.

GOD stands: This may well referre to that in the sixth Verse: But you shall fall. A standing GOD; He who onely stands, and will stand, when they all shall fall, and fall even to dust, every God of them. And this could not bee told us in a fitter place: the place where we stand, is compassed about with a Congregation of these fallen Gods, these same Dii caduci; with Monuments of the mortalitie of many a great Elohim in their times. And let me tell you this, that in the Hebrew tongue the Grave is called a Synagogue as well as the Church. All shall be gathered, even the Gods, even the whole Synagogue of them, into this Synagogue at last. So this first shewes them, Their Godships give them no immortalitie. Gods: but mortall, temporall Gods they be.

God stands: they fall.

The other is of judging. That as they have no exemption from the first statute, * Statutum est omnibus semel mori: So neither from the second, Et post mortem judicium. They be Dii sub Iudice: They be not Gods, absque aliquo computo reddendo. When they have done judging others, they shall come to be judged themselves. Dii caduci, Dii judicandi: Gods that shall fall, Gods that must come to judgement. From neither of these shall their Godhead excuse them.

God judges: they are called to accompt.
* Heb. 9. 27.

These two then, sever them from the first GOD; the Æternall GOD; and the Soveraigne Iudge of all. And shew (the one, their judging) that their Glory is not equall; (the other, their falling) that their Majesty is not co-eternall, that so they may understand themselves aright.

1 Severally. The first Act. The Metaphor of standing.

And now to standing and judging, either of them a part by it selfe. Standing, first. The members of man, the eye, hand, and foot; and the acts of them, seeing, doing, standing, are not in GOD (to speake properly:) only by them, is noted in GOD, the efficacie of those acts and members. By the eye, His knowledge: by the hand, His Power: by the foot, His Presence. The meaning then is first, that GOD is present. It is not enough for Him to looke downe from heaven, and behold us afarre off, but hee comes and stands heere. And not (as in the Canticles) Behind the wall, and lookes in by the grates: but it is even in the Assembly it selfe, even in the place where the Gods are.

1 Gods presence.

Cant. 2. 9.

Present? Why what great matter is that? Where is He not present? a Heaven and earth He fils, the earth is His footstoole, where then stands He not? Indeed GOD is present in all places; yet not in all alike. In some by a more speciall presence, than in othersome: And among all, and above all, there where the Gods are together.

Not as every where.
a Ierem. 23. 24.
b Esay 63. 1.

For though GOD be both in heaven and earth, yet we say [which art in heaven:] intending that there He is with a far more high and glorious presence. And so, here is He in a more eminent sort. For no where on earth doth

But in a more speciall manner.

His glory ſhine, and ſhew forth it ſelfe, as in a well ordered Aſſembly.

Mat. 18. 20. And, if where Two or three common Chriſtians be together in His name, there is He in the midſt of them; when three or foure hundred, and thoſe no common ordinary perſons, but of His owne name [Gods] even a whole Congregation of them; (Of His Name, and in His Name too;) are together, in moſt ſolemne manner aſſembled; and to doe His Worke: ſhall He not much more be there, and in a much more excellent manner of preſence to aſsiſt them? Yes ſure: it toucheth His providence in the higheſt degree.

Preſent then: And ſecondly, the manner of His preſence: ſtanding.

2 Gods Attention. And that is a word of Site. Standing is a ſite, and it is ſite of Attention. When we ſit and heare ought, that we would liſten better to, up we ſtand and leave ſitting: So doe we (without the occaſion) uſually; Even to ſtirre up our ſelves: For, ſitting we may fall on ſleepe. This, to ſhew we ſhall not neede to ſay to Him here, as in another Pſalme, they doe, Vp Lord why ſleepeſt thou? For He ſtands, and they never ſleepe. The truth is: to be preſent, as good be abſent, if we doe not intend. This then ſheweth GOD is ſo preſent, as He is alſo attentive: nothing paſſes but Deo aſtante & atteſtante; but He is an eare, nay an eye-witneſſe, nay more than that, a heart-witneſſe of all.

Pſal. 44. 23.

Stands then: and thirdly, the manner of His ſtanding. Which is (as is obſerved) נצב; and that is not the ordinary word for ſtanding, when one flitts; ſo ſtands, as he will remove: no, but as one fixed, not to ſtart. It is Statio militaris this, that pitch about their ſtandard, not to remove thence; but ſtill to maintaine and keep their ſtanding. So He, where you leave Him, you ſhall be ſure to find Him. He make it His reſt, meanes to ſtand it out to the very laſt.

3 Gods perſeverance.

Theſe three, 1 Preſence, 2 Attendance, 3 Perſeverance, be in this ſtanding of His. Preſent, for He ſtands; and ſtanding marks: marks, and will marke from the beginning to the end. So we, not to conceive of Him, 1 as if He were away, 2 or here ſtood and noted not, 3 or did for a time, but would leave off and give over, and not ſtand it out. This, for ſtanding.

IV. And, ſo long as it is but Standing and no more, it is no great matter; So he ſuffer them to go on quietly and trouble them not. And indeed ſo long as GOD doth no more, He may be ſaid to ſtand, and but even to ſtand. But (ſaith the Text) when He hath done ſtanding, He hath not done. Stay a while, you ſhall ſee, He ſo ſtands as He will judge alſo before He have done.

a The latter Act. Gods judging.

He not only ſtands.

The Act. But will judge alſo.

The Congregation will not alwaies ſit; nor GOD alwaies ſtand. When that is over and paſt, the Prophet here begins to ſet Him up a State, to erect Him a Throne to ſit down and judge in. And then (lo) the courſes will change. We ſit now, and He ſtands: He will ſit then, and we all ſhall ſtand. All; Omnes ſtabimus ante Tribunal, Before His Iudgement ſeat. His firſt act (ſtanding) then to take an end; and his latter act (judicabit) to have his turne too.

2 Cor. 5. 10.

But

But by this we ſee (as before I told you) while He ſtood, He ſtood attentive: He ſtood not like an idol: was all the while no idle ſtander by, or looker on, but as the Writing was on the wall, Mene, Mene, He told and numbred; and Tekel, Stetit cum ſtaterâ, Hee weighed and pondered well, every Motion that was made, every Bill that was read, every Conſent or otherwiſe paſſed upon it. And weighed withall, whence every of them proceeded, whether from a dutifull regard of him and his Preſence; or otherwiſe, for ſome by-reſpect of our owne. Stetit ut teſtis; as a Witneſſe, He ſtood: Sedet ut Iudex; Now ſits as a Iudge, and will give His doome accordingly. And upon whom will He give it? Not upon the meaner ſort, upon inferior perſons, but even upon the greateſt: Vpon Deos, the Gods themſelves. For even to them, doth this His judgement extend. They that ſit and judge others, ſhall then ſtand and be judged themſelves. They be Gods; but He is Deus Deorum, Pſal. 50. 1. They are Iudges; but He Iudex Iudicum: Iudex judicum and judiciorum, both; Iudge of judges and of Courts; and even of this High Court and all. Men may not; GOD may and will convent even the Conventions themſelves, if they forget themſelves. Yea even the rather, for that they are Gods, ſhall He judge them. And namely, how they uſed themſelves in their Deitie, when they ſate in His place, and went under His Name.

So while he ſtood he ſtood attentive Dan. 5.

The Perſons. He will judge the Gods, Deos.

And not for any fault they ever have made, as for thoſe they have made here, in Synagogâ. Above all, for them: for not regarding His Preſence and ſtanding here.

And becauſe there is heere a double mention of Deorum, and Deos; Deorum in Synagogâ, and Deos in judicio: It will not be amiſſe to ſet them before us both at once. Now when they ſit in Synagogâ, how glorious! But when in judicio, they ſhall ſtand to be judged, how poore then! When GOD but ſtands and lookes on, how ſecure! when He ſhall ſit downe to His Sentence, how full of feare then! Specially, when He ſhall take, and they ſhall give accompt of a buſing His Preſence here. For a ſpeciall judicabit belongs to that, and remaines for them that ſo doe. They that deſpiſe GODS long ſuffering, when He ſtands here, ſhall find and ſuffer His ſeverity, and ſuffer it long, when He ſits to judge there.

The difference of the Perſons; Deorum in Synagogâ, and Deos judicabit.

But I cannot ſay, this will be preſently, or out of hand. It may be, it will be deferred yet, for a while: it is not Iudicat in the preſent; but judicabit in the Future, He will judge; Cum accepero tempus (as he ſaith Pſal. 75. 3.) He will take a time for it.

The time. This judgement will not be preſent. It is judicabit the future.

But take a time He will, and judge He will. Even the heathen, that have written de ſerâ Numinis vindictâ, are cleere for this point; That you may well accompt of it, He that ſtands, will ſit, and ſitting, judge: Iudge, and never a God of them all ſhall eſcape Him.

The place. He will judge in medio. 1 Of themſelves.

And in medio He will doe it; in the midſt, it ſhall bee. The midſt, either Inwardly of the Gods owne ſelves, even of their owne hearts (בקרב will beare it, and ſo it is taken, Ierem. 31. 33.) There in the midſt, in their their heart: their conſcience accuſing them, and a worme there gnawing, when they ſhall ſee the evill, that doth follow of their carrying matters unduely; ſee any foundation ſhaken by it.

2 Of the world.

Or, in the midſt (that is) openly: as, openly He hath ever made it appeare, that evill counſell, firſt or laſt, ſhall prove worſt for them that gave it.

3 Of them that regard, and them that regard not.

Or, in medio, referring it to the Parties: that is, in the midſt between them both. Thoſe that regard: and thoſe other, that never looked after, nor cared for Him nor His ſtanding.

The future judicabit, and in medio, are two favours to us.

And it is well for us, it is Iudicabit: for ſo wee have a time to bethinke us of it, and to prevent it. And againe it is well for us, that it is In medio: For ſo, we may yet chooſe our ſide, which ſide we will fall on: for indeed, Iudicare is Actus in medio; it may be for, and it may be againſt. It is not neceſſarie it ſhould be againſt: GOD forbid: we may not prejudice it then.

All is, as wee carry our ſelves heere. For, as wee heere, ſo Hee there. They that ſaw Him ſtanding and demeaned themſelves accordingly, a judicabit for them. Thoſe other, that ranne on their owne courſes (His ſtanding there, notwithſtanding) a hard judgement will they have, they that be loth to endure it. And this for GOD, His ſtanding, and His judging.

V. Our owne duty to the Text.

And now to our ſelves, and to our duty to GOD, thus ſtanding and judging.

To regard Gods ſtanding.

To avoid GODS judgement (the Apoſtle tells us) there is but one way: To judge our ſelves.* And heere now in this, not upon many, but upon this one Point only of GODS ſtanding (for, I will bee bold to cut off the other, His judging:) Regard His ſtanding, and you ſhall never need to feare His judging.

* 1 Cor. 11. 31.

Foure things to be done.

To regard that, doe but theſe foure: 1 Set downe this and beleeve it, that Hee is preſent. 2 So behave your ſelves, as if you did ſo beleeve: 3 To doe that, ſhew your ſelves well affected to His ſtanding. 4 To ſhew that, Procure but thoſe meanes, that He may take pleaſure in His ſtanding. Theſe foure.

1 To beleeve God is preſent

Iob 9. 11.

Ioh. 1. 26.

Heb. 11. 26.

Firſt, never imagine this, that GOD is farre enough off, or hath otherwiſe to buſy Himſelfe, than to have a hand or foot in theſe aſſemblies: But (with Iob) beleeve, He is hard by us, though wee perceive Him not: Or (as the Baptiſt ſaid of CHRIST) Medius veſtrûm ſtetit, quem vos neſcitis; He ſtandeth in the midſt of us, though we know not ſo much. To ſee Him ſo ſtanding, with the eyes of faith, with which (the Apoſtle ſaith) Moſes ſaw Him that was inviſible.

2 To behave our ſelves as if preſent.

Then will it follow of it ſelfe, To doe all we doe, Tanquam DEO ſtante & inſpectante, As if GOD ſtood and beheld us. This we behove to think: When He comes thus to ſtand among us, He will ſay as much for Himſelfe, as

as he did for his Sonne in the Goſpell, Certè reverebuntur Me, Surely they will yet reverence Me; my ſtanding, my being there, will make them the more carefull: If I come and ſtand among them, all will goe the better, if it be but becauſe I am there. Not any thing at all ſhall (I truſt;) but if ought ſhould be moved againſt His good liking, ſhall not our owne hearts ſmite us, and tell us ſtraight, What? GOD ſtanding, and looking on, ſhall we offer this? What give Him an affront in His owne preſence, to His owne face? Nonne judicabit ſuper hoc? what, will He never judge for this geare? And when He doth, ſhall it goe for nought? Thus, to behave our ſelves as in His preſence. Matt. 21. 37.

But yet (I know not how) this is not it; To doe it for feare of Him, or of His judicabit: but to doe it willingly, that is it. For, as if ſome were not willing to allow Him a place, not ſo much as to ſtand in, with a kind of Ironie (ſome thinke) he ſaith: Well yet howſoever, GOD ſtands in the Congregation, though againſt ſomebodies will, that would be content (if they durſt) to ſay with them in Eſay 30. 11. Cauſe the HOLY-ONE of Iſrael to ceaſe from us, Get Him away; Or with them in the Goſpell (the Gergeſites) not onely give CHRIST good leave, but even to pray Him faire to be gone, and take His eaſe ſomewhere elſe, their matters would ſpeed better, if He were out of the way. Matt. 8. 34.

5 To ſtand well affected to Gods ſtanding.

Never ſpeake of that: there He ſtands, and there He will ſtand; He ought not, will not, cannot be excluded. To endure Him, that is not it: The point is, how we ſtand affected to His ſtanding: Whether we be willing with it: whether it be the deſire of our hearts, that He ſhould, and the joy, that He doth ſtand, and will ſtand there.

Put caſe He ſtood not: would we earneſtly intreat Him to vouchſafe us His preſence, to take up His ſtanding among us? If He made as if Hee would be gone (as Luc. 24. 29.) would we be inſtant with Mane nobiſcum Domine, Stay with us ſtill good Lord? MOSES ſaid, If Thou goe not with us, carry us not hence; would we ſay, If thou Lord ſtay not with us, what doe we here? If GOD bee gone, migremus hinc, let us be gone too; And never hope for good of that Aſſembly where He is not. Exo. 33. 15.

4 To procure the means that God may bee willing to ſtand.

Now fourthly, if we be willing and glad, if we take comfort in His ſtanding, hereby ſhall wee be tried; if we uſe all meanes, as will procure Him to ſtay in our Aſſembly the more willingly; as will make His ſtanding pleaſant and not grow tedious to Him. And ſuch things there are: And theſe they are.

Thoſe be foure.

One ſpeciall thing that gives Him content, is a Place where there is Concord and Vnitie. [a] At Salem (that is) where peace is, In pace factus eſt locus Ejus (So read the Fathers) there is His Tabernacle: And that Tabernacle is the Tabernacle of the Congregation: His feet, and our feet, and both ſtand willingly in the gates there. (The reaſon?) [b] For, it is at unitie within it ſelfe. There loves He to ſtand: and there, His Spirit, where [c] they were all, with one accord, in one place. [d] Qui facit unanimes habitare in domo, if He

The Con is gone: a diſgregation rather. Enough to make Him to be gone (that.) For, if there Pſal. 15. 1. by cunning, they ſhall never ſtand in Gods Tabernacle. Neither they in His, nor He in theirs.

To looke to Idipſum. One more. There is a word, and it is a great word in this Booke כמ"ו ד"ו ו"ו, In idipſum; that is, to looke to the thing it ſelfe, the very point, the principall matter of all; to have our eye on that, and not of it, upon alia

Neither to by matters. Nor to perſonall reſpects. omnia, any thing but it. So ſay I (againe) upon the thing it ſelfe, not upon ſome perſons or perſonall reſpects: God accepts no perſon nor loves them that doe. The very firſt thing, that in the very next Verſe, He finds fault with, and charges them with, is this: when men are for, or againſt a thing (be it what it will be) and neither, for it ſelfe; but onely, becauſe it proceeds from ſuch or ſuch perſons: Neither of theſe is in medio. Idipſum, that is the center, that the middle: That place is GODS place. To goe to the point, drive all to that; as alſo to goe to the matter reall, without declining from it, this way or that, to the right hand or to the left for any perſonall regard.

To doe that we do, cheerfully. And laſt of all, that which pleaſeth Him beſt of all: And that is, where He finds a readie well-willing mind, His heart is upon ſuch. And where his heart is, ever His feet ſtand at eaſe: Calcat roſas, He treads upon roſes there. In the Song of Debora it is thought, there is ſet downe a patterne of the Vertues or Faults of an Aſſembly. In that Song, there are two Halleluja's, two Benedicite's for it. Firſt, at the very beginning, Halleluja, Praiſe the

Then have you againe after thoſe, two verſes together: in the one, Meroz curſed for their backwardneſſe; And Iael, for her forwardneſſe, bleſſed and bleſſed againe. For, this indeed is the marrow of the Sacrifice, the fat of the offering: and without this, all is poore and leane. Iudg. 5. 23. 24.

This is ſure: GOD, loves not to dwell in Meſech: that is interpreted, prolongatus eſt. And His Sonne calling on, Serve nequam & piger, ſhewes, He loves piger as evill, as He does nequam. And His Spirit cannot skill of theſe ſame tarda molimina. In a word; none of them to be wearied, with ſtanding I know not how long. b And redily * Pſal. 120. 5 Mat. 25. 21.

And ſee the very next word of all, the next that followes theſe immediatly, is How long! So He beginns His complaint, the firſt word of the next Verſe: which ſhewes, He loves it not.

Not, that he can be weary. It is an infirmitie (that) and ſo is griefe, and ſo is repentance; and they cannot fall into GOD: They are attributed to Him though. And GOD is ſayd as to [a] repent, and [b] to be grieved, ſo to be ſtarck [c] wearie. In no other ſenſe, but this: That if He be not weary, no thankes to us: For, if it were poſsible, if the divine Nature were or could be ſubject to it, if GOD could be weary, if His feet were not of braſſe (Apoc. 1.5.) we would put Him to it: we do even what in us lieth to tire Him outright, to make Him crie uſquequo, How long! a Gen. 6. 6. b Eph. 4. 30. c Ier. 6. 11.

But, [1] where there is accord without Reubens diviſions; [2] where plaine meaning, and dealing, without (as Eſay calls them) theſe ſame deepe digged devices; [3] where the eye is upon idipſum, and no ipſum elſe; [4] where GOD is not conſtrained to dwell in Meſech, but the People and their Governours offer willingly; there ſtands GOD, and there will He ever ſtand. Of that place He ſaith, Hæc eſt requies mea, This is my reſt, here will I ſtay, for I have a delight therein. Eſay 29. 15. Pſal. 132. 14.

Thus doing then, thus procuring, our Aſſembly thus qualified, we performe our duty to GOD, and to His ſtanding. And this done, we ſhall never need to feare judicabit, come when it will.

And now to conclude. Mine unfained hearty prayer to GOD is, and dayly ſhall be, that if ever in any, He would ſtand in this Congregation: And if ever any uſed the meanes ſo to procure Him, we may uſe them. The rather, that Eccleſia malignantium, the malignant Synagogue may not aske with deriſion, Where was then their GOD? Where ſtood He? Behind the wall (ſure) not in the Aſſembly: Such proceedings, and His ſtanding will never ſtand together. To have regard what will be ſaid abroad. Pſal. 26. 5.

But rather, that all may ſay, Verily GOD was among them, Of a truth GOD ſtood in that Congregation; where, with ſo good accord, ſo good things, ſo readily were paſſed. CHRIST was in the midſt of them, His holy Spirit reſted on them. 1 Cor. 2. 14.

Yet I know, what men ſay off or on, is not it; what GOD ſaith, that is all in all. To men we doe not; To GOD, we ſtand or fall, whoſe judicabit we cannot ſcape, either the one way or the other: but have a judica-

bit

Mat. 25. 23. bit for us, that we may, if we yeeld his ſtanding all due reſpect, Even Euge ſerve bone, intra in gaudium Domini, which in the end will be worth all.

But if any ſhall ſay, O the time is long to that (peradventure not ſo long though, as we reckon:) well yet in the meane time, now for the preſent, it ſtands us in hand to uſe him well, and our ſelves well to him. For if hee ſtand not to us, we ſhall not ſubſiſt, we ſhall not ſtand, but fall before our enemies. This time is now, this danger is at hand.

To have regard of our preſent uſe of Him againſt our enemies.

Vſe him well then: Stand before Him thus ſtanding, with all due reverence and regard: that as by His preſence, he doth ſtand among us; ſo hee may not onely doe that, but by His Mercie alſo ſtand by us, and by His Power ſtand for us. So ſhall we ſtand and with-ſtand all the adverſe forces: and at laſt (for thither at laſt we muſt all come) ſtand in His judgement, Stand there upright: To our comfort (for the preſent) of His ſtanding by us; And to our endleſſe comfort (for the time to come) of His judging for us.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED AT CHESWICK IN THE time of Peſtilence, AVGVST XXI. An. Dom. MDCIII.

PSAL. CVI. Ver. XXIX, XXX.

Thus they provoked Him to anger with their owne inventions, and the Plague was great (or brake in) among them.
Then ſtood up Phinees, and prayed (or, executed judgement) and ſo the Plague was ceaſed (or, ſtayed.)

HERE is mention of a Plague : of a great Plague; For, there died of it foure and twenty thouſand. And we complaine of a Plague at this time. The ſame axe is layd to the root of our trees. Or rather, becauſe an axe is long in cutting downe of one tree, the Raſor is hired for us, that ſweeps away a great number of haires at once (as Eſay calleth it) or a Scithe that mowes downe graſſe, a great deale at once. Num. 35. 9. Eſay 7. 20.

But here is not onely mention of the Breaking in of the Plague, in the XXIX. Verſe; but of the ſtaying or ceaſing of the Plague, in the XXX.

Now, whatſoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; and ſo was this Text. Vnder one, to teach us how the Plague comes, and how it may be ſtayed. Rom. 5. 4.

The

The Division The Plague is a diſeaſe. In every diſeaſe, we conſider the Cauſe, and the Cure. Both which are here ſet forth unto us in theſe two Verſes. In the former, the Cauſe how it comes. In the latter, the Cure how it may be ſtaid. To know the Cauſe is expedient; for if we know it not, our Cure will be but palliative, as not going to the right. And if knowing the Cauſe, wee adde not the Cure, when we are taught it, who will pity us? For, none is then to blame, but our ſelves.

I. — Of the Cauſe firſt: and then of the Cure. The cauſe is ſet downe to be twofold: 1 GODS anger, and 2 their inventions.

GODS anger, by the which: and their inventions, for the which, the Plague brake in among them.

II. The Cure is likewiſe ſet downe: and it is twofold, out of two ſignifications of one word, the word (Palal) in the Verſe. Phinees prayed (ſome read it:) Phinees executed judgement (ſome other;) and the word beares both. Two then, 1 Phinees Prayer, one: 2 Phinees executing judgement, the other; by both which the Plague ceaſed. His prayer referring to GODS anger: His executing judgement, to their inventions. GODS wrath was appeaſed by his prayer: Prayer referres to that. Their inventions were removed by his executing of judgement: The execution of judgment referres to that. If his anger provoked doe ſend the Plague; His anger appeaſed will ſtay it. If our inventions provoke his anger, the puniſhing of our inventions will appeaſe it. The one worketh upon GOD, pacifieth Him: The other worketh upon our ſoule, and cures it. For there is a cure of the ſoule, no leſſe than of the body, as appeareth by the Pſalme, Heale my ſoule, for I have ſinned againſt thee.

Pſal.99.8.

Pſal.41.4.

We are to beginne with the Cauſe of the plague, in the firſt Verſe: And ſo, to come to the Cure in the ſecond.

I. Of the Cauſe

OF the Cauſe. 1 Firſt, that there is a Cauſe. 2 And ſecondly, What that Cauſe may be.

A Cauſe there is.

1 That there is a cauſe (that is) that the plague is a thing cauſall, not caſuall; comes not meerly by chance, but hath ſomewhat, ſome cauſe that procureth it.

Mat.10.29. Sure, if a Sparrow fall not to the ground without the providence of GOD, of which two are ſold for a farthing; much leſſe doth any man, or woman, which are more worth than many Sparrowes.

Exod.21.13 And if any one man comes not to his End (as we call it) by caſualtie, but it is GOD, that delivers him ſo to die: How much more then, when not not one, but many thouſands are ſwept away at once? The Philiſtins, in their plague, put the matter upon triall of both theſe waies: 1 Whether it were GODS hand, 2 Or whether it were but a chance. And the event ſhewed, it was no caſualtie, but the very handy-worke of GOD upon them.

And indeed, the very name of the Plague doth tell us as much. For Deber in hebrew ſheweth, there is a reaſon, there is a cauſe, why it commeth. And the engliſh word Plague, comming from the Latine word Plaga, which is properly a ſtroke, neceſſarily inferreth a Cauſe. For where there is a ſtroke, there muſt be One that ſtriketh. And in that both it, and other evill things (that come upon us) are uſually in Scripture called Gods judgements; If they be judgements, it followeth, there is a Iudge they come from. They come not by adventure; by chance they come not. Chance and Iudgement are utterly oppoſite. Not Caſually then, but Iudicially. Iudged we are; For when we are chaſtened, we are judged of the Lord. 1 Sam. 6. 9. 1 Cor. 11. 32.

There is a Cauſe: Now, what that Cauſe is. Concerning which, if you aske the Phyſician, he will ſay, the cauſe is in the aire. The Aire is infected; the Humors corrupted: the Contagion of the ſicke, comming to and converſing with the ſound. And they be all true cauſes. 1 That Cauſe is. 1 Naturall.

The Aire. For ſo we ſee, by caſting aſhes* of the furnace towards heaven in the aire, the aire became infected, and the plague of botches, and blaines, was ſo brougt forth in Egypt. 1 The aire infected. * Exod. 9. 8.

The Humors. For to that doth King David aſcribe the Cauſe of his diſeaſe: (that is) that his moiſture in him was corrupt, dried up, turned into the drought of Summer. 2 The Humors corrupted.

Contagion. Which is cleare by the Law: where, the leprous perſon for feare of contagion from him, was ordered to crie, that no body ſhould come neere him: To dwell apart from other men: The clothing he had worne to be waſhed, and in ſome caſe to be burnt: The houſe-walls he had dwelt in, to be ſcraped; and in ſome caſe, the houſe it ſelfe to be pulled downe. Pſal. 32. 4. 3 Contagion. Levi. 13. 45, 46, 52.

In all which three reſpects, Salomon ſaith, A wiſe man feareth the Plague and departeth from it, and fooles runne on and be careleſſe. A wiſe man doth it, and a good man too. For King David himſelfe durſt not goe to the Altar of GOD at Gibeon, to enquire of GOD there, becauſe the Angell that ſmote the people with the plague, ſtood betweene him and it: (that is) becauſe he was to paſſe through infected places thither. Pro. 14. 16. 1 Chro. 21. 30.

But as we acknowledge theſe to be true, that in all diſeaſes, and even in this alſo, there is a Naturall cauſe: ſo we ſay, there is ſomewhat more, ſomething Divine, and above nature. As ſomewhat, which the Phyſitian is to looke unto, in the plague: ſo likewiſe ſomething for Phinees to doe, and Phinees was a Prieſt. And ſo ſome worke for the Prieſt, as well as for the Phyſitian, and more, then (it may be) 2 Supernaturall. By which GOD.

It was King Aſa's fault. He in his ſickneſſe, looked all to Phyſitians, and looked not after GOD at all. That, is noted as his fault. It ſeemes his fault. It ſeemes, his conceit was, there was nothing in a diſeaſe, but naturall, nothing but bodily: which is not ſo. For, infirmitie, is not onely a thing bodily; there is a Spirit of infirmitie, wee finde, Luc. 13. 11. And ſomething ſpirituall there is, in all infirmities; ſomething in the ſoule to bee healed. In all, but ſpecially in this: Wherein that wee might know it to bee ſpirituall, we finde it oft times to be executed by ſpirits.

Exo. 12. 13. We ſee an Angell, a deſtroying Angell, in the Plague of Egypt: another in the Eſay 37. 36. Plague in Senacherib's Campe: a third in the Plague at Ieruſalem under Da-

1 Chro. 21. 16. vid: a fourth, pouring his phiall upon earth, and there fell a noyſome plague

Revel. 16. 2. upon man and beaſt. So that no man looketh deeply enough into the Cauſe of this ſickneſſe, unleſſe he acknowledge the Finger of God in it, over and above any cauſes naturall.

GOD then hath his part. G[illegible]; But how affected? GOD provoked to anger: ſo it is in the Text: His anger, His wrath it is, that bringeth the plague among us. The Verſe is plaine; They provoked Him to anger, and the plague brake in among them.

God provoked to anger.

Generally, there is no evill (ſaith Iob) but it is a ſparke of GODS wrath.

Iob 5. 6. And of all evills, the Plague by Name. There is wrath gone out from the 1 Chro. 21. 7. LORD, and the plague is begunne (ſaith Moſes, Numbers 16. 46.) So it is ſaid GOD was diſpleaſed with David, and he ſmote Iſraël with the plague. So that if there be a plague, GOD is angry: and if there be a great plague, GOD is very angry. Thus much for By what; for the anger of GOD, by which the plague is ſent. Now for what.

For Which. Sin in generall.

There is a cauſe in GOD, that he is angry. And there is a Cauſe, for which he is angry. For he is not angry without a Cauſe. And what is that cauſe? For what is GOD angry? What, is GOD angry with the waters when He ſends a tempeſt? (it is Habacuk's queſtion.) Or is GOD angry with the earth, when He ſends barrenneſſe? Or with the aire, when he makes it contagious? No indeed, His anger is not againſt the Elements,

Hab. 3. 8.

Eph. 5. 6. they provoke him not. Againſt them it is, that provoke Him to anger? Againſt men it is, and againſt their ſinnes, and for them commeth the wrath of GOD upon the children of diſobedience.

And this is the very Cauſe indeed. As there is Putredo humorum; ſo there is alſo putredo morum. And putredo morum, is more a Cauſe, than putredo humorum. The Corruption of the ſoule, the [a] corruption of our waies, more than the [b] corrupting of the aire. The [c] Plague of the Heart, more than the ſore, that is ſeene in the body. [d] The cauſe of Death (that is) ſinne, the ſame is the cauſe, of this [e] kinde of death, of the Plague of mortalitie. And as the [f] Balme of Gilead, and the [g] Phyſitian there, may yeeld us helpe, when GODS wrath is removed: ſo, if it be not, no balme, no medicine will ſerve. Let us with the Woman in the Goſpell, [h] ſpend all upon Phyſitians, we ſhall be never the better, till we come to CHRIST, and he cure us of our ſins, who is the onely Phyſitian of the diſeaſes of the ſoule.

[h] Mar. 5. 26.

Mar. 9. 2. And with CHRIST, the cure beginns ever within. Firſt, Sonne thy ſinnes bee forgiven thee; and then after, take up thy bed and walke. His ſinnes

be

firſt, and his limbes after. As likewiſe when we are once well, CHRISTS counſell is, ſinne no more, leſt a worſe thing come unto thee. As if ſinne would certainly bring a relapſe into a ſickneſſe.

But ſhall we ſay, the wrath of GOD for ſinnes indefinitely? That were ſomewhat too generall: May we not ſpecifie them, or ſet them downe in particular? Yes, I will point you at three or foure. Particular ſinne.

Firſt, this Plague here, as appeareth by the XXVIII. Verſe, the Verſe next before, came for the ſinne of Peor (that is) for fornication (as you may read.) And not every Fornication, but fornication paſt ſhame; as was that Zamri there, with a daughter of Moab. And indeed if we marke it well, it fits well. For, that kinde of ſinne (fornication) doth end in Vlcers and ſores; and thoſe as infectious, as the Plague it ſelfe: A proper puniſhment; ſuch ſore for ſuch evill. 1 Fornication. Num. 25. 1.

Secondly, Davids plague of ſeventy thouſand (which wee mention in our Prayer) that, came for Pride, plainly: His heart was lifted up to number the People. And that ſeemes ſomewhat kindly too, and to agree with this diſeaſe. That pride, which ſwels it ſelfe, ſhould end in a tumor, or ſwelling; as for the moſt part this diſeaſe doth. 2 Pride. 1 Chro. 21. 14.

Thirdly, Zenacheribs plague (it is plaine) came from Rabſhakehs blaſphemie: Blaſphemie able to infect the aire, it was ſo foule. In which regard, Aarons act might be juſtified, in putting odours into his Ceuſer, to purifie the Aire from ſuch corruption. 3 Blaſphemie Eſay 37. 36. Nu. 16. 46.

And laſt, the Apoſtle ſets downe the Cauſe of the plague at Corinth: For this Cauſe (ſaith he) that is, for neglect of the Sacrament: Either in not caring to come to it; or in comming to it, wee care not how: For this cauſe, is there a mortalitie among you; and many are ſicke, and many are weake, and many are fallen aſleepe. And this is no new thing. Moſes Himſelfe, his neglect of the Sacrament, made him be ſtriken of GOD, that it was like to have coſt him his life. And he ſaith plainly to Pharao: If they neglected their ſacrifice, GOD would fall upon them with the Peſtilence: which appeareth by this, that the Sacrament of the paſſeover, and the bloud of it, was the meanes to ſave them from the plague of the deſtroying Angell in Egypt. 4 Neglect of the Sacrament. 1 Cor. 11. 30. Exod. 4. 24. Exod. 5. 3.

A little now of the Phraſe; that their ſins are here called by the name of their inventions. And ſo (ſure) they are: as no waies taught us by GOD, but of our owne imagining or finding out. For indeed, our inventions are the cauſe of all ſins. And if we look wel into it we ſhal find our inventions are ſo. By GODS injunction we ſhould all live, and His injunction is: You ſhall not do every man what ſeems good in his own eyes (or finds out in his owne braines) but, whatſoever I command you, that onely ſhall you doe. But wee, ſetting light by that charge of his, out of the old diſeaſe of our Father Adam (Eritis ſicut Dii, ſcientes bonum & malum) thinke it a goodly matter to be wittie, and to find out things our ſelves to make to our ſelves, to be Authors, and inven- The phraſe for ſin, Their inventions. In matters of Religion. Deut. 12. 8.

tors of ſomewhat, that ſo we may ſeeme to be as wiſe as God, if not wiſer: and to know what is for our turnes, as well as he, if not better. It was Sauls fault: God bade deſtroy Amaleck all; and he, would invent a better way, to ſave ſome (forſooth) for ſacrifice, which God could not thinke of Matt. 16.22. And it was S. Peters fault, when he perſwaded CHRIST from His paſsion, and found out a better way (as he thought) than Chriſt could deviſe.

This is the proud invention, which will not be kept in, but makes men even not to forbeare in things pertaining to Gods Worſhip; but there, to be Deut. 32.17. ſtill deviſing new tricks, opinions and faſhions, freſh and newly taken up, which their Fathers never knew of. And this is that, which makes men, that 2 Tim. 4.3. have itching eares, to heape to themſelves Teachers, according to their owne luſts, which may fill their heads full, with new inventions.

In the common life. And this is that, that even out of Religion, in the common life, ſpoiles all. The wanton invention, in finding out new meats in diet, in inventing new faſhions in apparell, which men ſo dote on (as the Pſalme ſaith at the 39th Verſe) as they even goe a whooring with them, with their owne inventions, and care not what they ſpend on them. And know no end of them: but as faſt as they are wearie of one, a new invention is found out; which whatſoever it coſt, how much ſoever it take from our Almes, or good deeds, muſt be had, till all come to nought. That the Pſalmiſt hath choſen a very fit word, that for our inventions, the plague breakes in among us: for them, as ~~for the primarie, or firſt~~ moving cauſe of all. Indeed for them, as much, and more than for any thing elſe.

We ſee then, 1 Firſt, that a Cauſe there is. 2 That that cauſe is not only naturall, but that God Himſelfe hath a hand in it. 3 God as being provoked to anger. 4 To anger for our ſinnes in generall (and for what ſinnes in ſpeciall) For our ſinnes proceeding from nothing, but our inventions. Which cauſe if it continue, and yet we turne not to the Lord (as Amos the 4.) then will not His anger be turned away, but his hand will be ſtretched out ſtill (as, Eſay the 9.) And no way to avoyd the one, but by appeaſing the other.

II. Of the Cure. For the cure now. One contrary is ever cured by another. If then it bee anger, which is the cauſe in God; anger would be appeaſed. If it be Inventions, which is the cauſe in us, of the anger of God, they would be puniſhed and removed. That ſo, the Cauſe being taken away, the effect may ceaſe. Take away our inventions, Gods anger will ceaſe. Take away Gods anger, the plague will ceaſe.

Two Readings (we ſaid) there were: 1 Phinees prayed, or 2 Phinees executed judgement. Palal, the Hebrew word will beare both. And both are good: And ſo we will take them both in.

A gainſt Gods Anger. 1 Prayer. Prayer is good againſt the plague, as appeareth: Not onely in this plague in the Text, wherein all the Congregation [a] were weeping, and praying before the doore of the Tabernacle: But in King [b] Davids plague alſo; where we ſee, what his prayer was, and the very words of it.

[a] Num. 25.6.
[b] 2 Sam. 24. 17.

And

And in [c] Ezekias's plague, who turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto GOD (and his prayer is ſet downe:) GOD heard his prayer, and healed him. And (for a generall rule) [d] If there be in the Land any peſtilent diſeaſe; Whatſoever plague, whatſoever ſickneſſe it be, the prayer and ſupplication in the Temple made by the people, every man knowing the plague of his owne heart, GOD in heaven will heare it, and remove His Hand from afflicting them any further.

[d] 1 King. 8. 37. 38. 39.

And it ſtandeth with good reaſon. For, as the Aire is infected with noiſome ſents or ſmells, ſo the infection is removed by ſweet odours, or incenſe: which Aaron did in the Plague (put ſweet odours in his Cenſer, and went betweene the living and the dead.) Now there is a fit reſemblance betweene Incenſe and Prayers: [f] Let my Prayer come before thy preſence, as the Incenſe. And when the Prieſt was within, burning Incenſe, [g] the people were without at their prayers. And it is expreſly ſaid, [h] that the ſweet odors were nothing elſe, but the prayers of the Saints.

Prayer is good, and that Phinees prayer. Phinees was a Prieſt, the ſonnes of Eleazar, the Nephew of Aaron. So as, there is Vertue, as in the prayer, ſo in the perſon that did pray: in Phinees himſelfe.

2 Phinees Prayer, as a Prieſt.

As (wee know) the Office of a Sergeant being to arreſt; the Office of a Notarie to make acts; the act that is done by one of them, is much more authenticall, than that which is done by any common perſon. So every Prieſt being taken from among men, and ordained for men, in things pertaining to GOD, that he may offer prayers: the prayers hee offereth, hee offereth out of his Office, and ſo even in that reſpect there is (cæteris paribus) a more force, and energie in them, as comming from Him, whoſe Calling it is to offer them; than in thoſe, that come from another, whoſe Calling it is not ſo to doe.

Heb. 5. 1.

To this end, GOD ſaith to Abimelech: Abraham is a Prophet, and hee ſhall pray for thee and thou ſhalt live. So that, the prayer of a Prophet, in that he is a Prophet, is more effectuall.

Gen. 20. 7.

And in the Law, you ſhall find it all along: When men come to bring their ſacrifice for their ſinnes, it is ſaid, the Prieſt ſhall make an atonement for them before the Lord, and their ſinnes ſhall be forgiven them.

And in the Prophets, wee ſee plainly, in time of diſtreſſe, Ezekia ſent unto the Prophet Eſay, to entreat him to lift up his prayer for the remnant that were left: and ſo he did, and was heard by GOD.

And in the New Teſtament, Saint Iames advice is, In time of ſickneſſe to call for the Prieſts, and they to pray over the partie, and that Prayer ſhall worke his health; and if he have committed ſinnes, they ſhall be forgiven him. For, where the Grace of prayer is, and the Calling both, they cannot but availe more, than where no Calling is, but the Grace alone.

The prayer of Phinees, and of Phinees ſtanding. What need there be any mention of Phinees ſtanding? Was it not enough to ſay Phinees praied? It skills not whether he ſate or ſtood; for praying it ſelfe was enough.

No: we muſt not thinke, the Holy Ghoſt ſets downe any thing that is ſuperfluous. Somewhat there is, in that he ſtood. Of Moſes it is ſaid before Ier.18.20. in this Pſalme, that he ſtood in the gap to turne away the wrath of God. In Ieremie it is ſaid, though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me: So there is mention made of ſtanding alſo. And the Prophet himſelfe puts GOD in mind, that he ſtood before Him, to ſpeake good for the people, and to turne away His wrath from them (that is) put GOD in minde of the very ſite of His body.

Ioh.4.24. For, though GOD be a Spirit, and ſo in Spirit to be worſhipped; yet inaſmuch as He hath given us a body, with that alſo are we to worſhip Him, and 1 Cor. 6.20. Rom.12.1. to glorifie him in our body and ſpirit, which both are Gods; and to preſent (or offer) our bodies to GOD, as a holy and acceptable ſacrifice, in the reaſonable ſervice of Him.

1 Cor.14. 40. And to preſent them decently. For that alſo is required in the ſervice of GOD. Now judge in your ſelves, Is it comely to ſpeake unto our betters,
1 Cor.11. 13. ſitting? Sedentem orare, extra diſciplinam eſt (ſaith Tertullian) to pray ſitting or ſit praying, is againſt the order of the Church. The Church of GOD never had, nor hath any ſuch faſhion.

All tendeth to this, as Cyprians advice is, Etiam habitu corporis placere Deo, even by our very geſture, and the carriage of our boby, to behave our ſelves ſo, as with it we may pleaſe GOD. Vnreverent, careleſſe, undevout behaviour pleaſeth Him not.

It is noted of the very Angels, Iob. 1. 6. Eſay 6. 2. *Dan.*7.10. that they were ſtanding before GOD. If them it becomes; if Phinees, if Moſes, if Samuel, and Ieremie, it may well become us to learne our geſture of them.

Againſt their inventions. 1 Execution of judgement. Prayer is available to appeaſe Gods wrath, and ſo conſequently to remove the Plague: But not prayer alone. For though it abate the anger of God (which is the firſt) yet it goeth not high enough, takes not away the ſecond cauſe (that is) our inventions, which are the cauſe of Gods anger. We ſee it plain, in Num. 25.6. they were all at prayers, and Phinees among them, he Num.25.7. 8. and the reſt. But yet the plague ceaſed not for all that: till (in the Verſe following) Phinees tooke his javelin, wherewith in the very act of fornication, he thruſt them both through, Zamri and his woman, and then the plague was ſtaied from the children of Iſraël. For, as praier referreth properly to anger: ſo doth executing judgement to ſin, or to our inventions, the cauſe of it.

Prayer then doth well: but prayer and doing juſtice, both theſe together (jointly) will doe it indeed. And if you disjoyne or ſeparate them, nothing will be done. If we draw neere to GOD with our mouthes, and honour Him with our lipps, it will not availe us, if judgement be turned backe, or juſtice ſtand afarre off.
Eſay 29. 14.

2 By Phinees, as a Prince in his Tribe, and a Magiſtrate. There are two perſons. Both of them were in Phinees. For, as hee was a Prieſt; ſo hee was a Prince of his Tribe. So then, both theſe muſt joyne together, as well the devotion of the Prieſt in praier, which is his Office: as the zeale of the Magiſtrate in executing Iudgement, which is His. For, Phinees the Prieſt, muſt not onely ſtand up, and pray: but Moſes the Magiſtrate Magiſtrate alſo) muſt ſtand in the gap, to turne away the wrath of God, that he deſtroy not the people. No leſſe he, than Aaron with his golden Cenſer, to run into the middſt of the Congregation, to make atonement for them when the plague is begunne.

Moſes, he gave in charge for the executing of them, that were joyned to Baal-Peor, Num.25.4. Phinees, he executed the charge: Moſes ſtood in the gap, when he gave the ſentence: Phinees ſtood up, when he did the execution. And theſe two are a bleſſed conjunction. One of them without the other, may miſſe; but both together never faile. For when Zamri was ſlaine; and ſo when Rabſhakeh periſhed; and ſo when the inceſtuous Corinthian was excommunicated; in all three, the plague ceaſed.

But what if Moſes give no charge: what if Phinees doe no execution, as oft it falleth out? How then? In that caſe, every private man is to be Phinees to himſelfe; is not only to pray to God, but to be wreaked, do judgement, chaſten his own body; and ſo judge himſelf, that he may not be judged of the Lord. For every on, for his part, is a cauſe of the judgements of God ſent down; & ſo may be, and is to be, a cauſe of the removing them. Somewhile the King, as David by the pride of his heart. Otherwhile the people, by their murmuring againſt Moſes, and Aaron. So that, King & people both, muſt judge themſelves; every private offender, himſelfe. Zamri, if he had judged himſelfe, Phinees ſhould not have judged him. The inceſtuous Corinthian, if he had judged himſelfe, S. Paul had not judged him. For, either by our ſelves, or by the Magiſtrate; or if by neither of both, by GOD Himſelfe. For, one way or other ſin muſt be judged. Zamri, by his repentance; Phinees, by his Prayer or doing juſtice; or GOD, by the plague ſent among them.

3 By every man upon himſelfe.

1 Chr. 21.1. 8.
Num. 16.. 3

Now then, theſe two; 1 Phinees ſtood up and prayed, 2 and Phinees ſtood up and executed judgment, if they might be coupled together I durſt undertake, the concluſion would be, and the plague ceaſed. But either of them wanting I dare promiſe nothing.

To conclude then. 1. The plague comes not by chance, but hath a Cauſe. 2. That Cauſe is not altogither naturall, and pertaines to Phyſicke; but hath ſomething ſupernaturall in it, and pertaines to Divinitie. 3. That ſupernaturall Cauſe is the wrath of God. 4. Which yet is not the firſt cauſe. For, the wrath of God, would not riſe, but that he is provoked by our ſins (and the certaine ſins, that provoke it, have been ſet down.) 5. And the cauſe of them, our owne inventions. So, our inventions beget ſinne; ſinne provokes the Wrath of God: the Wrath of God ſends the Plague among us. To ſtay the plague, Gods Wrath muſt be ſtayed: To ſtay it, there muſt be a ceaſing from ſinne: That ſinne may ceaſe, we muſt be out of love with our owne inventions and not goe a whoring after them. Prayer, that aſſwageth anger: To execute juſtice, that abateth ſinne: To execute juſtice, either publikely, as doth the Magiſtrate; or privately, as every man doth, or may doe upon himſelfe. which joyned with prayer and prayer with it, will ſoone rid us of that we complaine: and otherwiſe, his anger will not be turned away, but his hand ſtretched out ſtill.

A SERMON PREACHED AT THE FV-NERAL OF THE R. R. FA-THER in GOD, LANCELOT late Lord Biſhop of WINCHESTER.

HEB. Chap. XIII. Ver. XVI.

To doe good, and to diſtribute forget not: for with ſuch ſacrifices GOD is well pleaſed.

IN the tenth Verſe the Apoſtle ſaith; We have an Altar, of which they have no right to eate, that ſerve the Tabernacle. Habemus Altare, Wee have, that is, Chriſtians: So it is proprium Chriſtianorum, proper to Chriſtians: not common to the Iewes together with Chriſtians; they have no right to communicate, and eate there, that ſerve the Tabernacle. And yet it is commune Altare, a common Altar to all Chriſtians, they have all right to eate there. And ſo it is externum Altare, not onely a ſpirituall Altar in the heart of every Chriſtian; then Saint Paul ſhould have ſaid habeo, or habet unuſquiſque, I have, and every Chriſtian hath in private to himſelfe: but We have an Altar, that is, all Chriſtians have; and it muſt be Externall, elſe all Chriſtians cannot have it.

Our Head CHRIST offered His Sacrifice of Himſelfe upon the Croſſe; Crux Altare CHRISTI; and the Croſſe of CHRIST was the Altar of our Head, where he offered the unicum, verum, & proprium Sacrificium, the only, true, proper ſacrifice, propitiatorie for the ſinnes of mankind; in which all other ſacrifices are accepted, and applicatorie of this propitiation.

1 The Only Sacrifice, one in it ſelfe, and once only offered, that purchaſed eternall redemption: and if the redemption be eternall, what need is there, that it ſhould be offered more than once, when once is all-ſufficient?

2 And the True Sacrifice: All other are but Types and Repreſentations of this ſacrifice; this only hath power to appeaſe GODS wrath, and make all other Sacrificers, and ſacrifices acceptable.

3. And the Proper Sacrifice: As the Pſalme ſaith, Corpus aptaſti mihi, thou haſt fitted me with a Body; the Deitie aſſumed the Humanity, that it might accipere à nobis quod offerret pro nobis; being the Deitie could not offer, nor be offered to it ſelfe, He tooke fleſh of ours, that he might offer for us.

Now as CHRISTS Croſſe was His Altar, where He offered Himſelfe for us; ſo the Church hath an Altar alſo, where it offereth it ſelfe: not CHRISTVM in capite, but CHRISTVM in membris, not CHRIST the Head properly (but only by commemoration) but CHRIST the Members. For, CHRIST cannot be offered truly, and properly, no more but once upon the Croſſe: For He cannot be offered againe, no more than Hee can be dead againe: and dying, and ſhedding bloud, as Hee did upon the Croſſe; and not dying, and not ſhedding bloud, as in the Euchariſt, cannot be one Action of CHRIST offered on the Croſſe, and of CHRIST offered in the Church at the Altar by the Prieſt, by Repreſentation only, no more than CHRIST and the Prieſt are one perſon: and therefore though in the Croſſe and the Euchariſt there bee Idem ſacrificatum, the ſame ſacrificed thing, that is the Body and Bloud of CHRIST, offered by CHRIST to His Father on the Croſſe, and received and participated by the Communicants in the Sacrifice of the Altar; yet Idem ſacrificium quoad actionem ſacrificii, or ſacrificandi, it is impoſſible there ſhould be the ſame ſacrifice, underſtanding by ſacrifice the action of ſacrifice. For then, the Action of CHRISTS ſacrifice, which is long ſince paſt, ſhould continue as long as the Euchariſt ſhall endure, even unto the worlds end; and his Conſummatum eſt is not yet finiſhed: And dying and not dying, ſhedding of bloud and not ſhedding of bloud, and ſuffering and not ſuffering cannot poſſibly be one action: and the Repreſentation of an Action cannot be the Action it ſelfe.

And this conceipt was unknowne to Antiquitie. All the Fathers held it a ſacrifice, onely becauſe it is a Repreſentation or Commemoration of the True ſacrifice of CHRIST upon the Croſſe; even as our Saviour commanded, Do this in remembrance of me. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Hujus Sacrificii caro & ſanguis, ante adventum Chriſti, per victimas ſimilitudinum promittebatur: in paſſione Chriſti, per ipſam Veritatem reddebatur: poſt aſcenſum Chriſti, per Sacramentum memoriæ celebratur, &c. And Saint Chryſoſtome, Hoc eſt exemplar illius, &c. And Thomas Aquinas giving the reaſon of the diverſe Names given to this Sacrament ſaith, that it hath a triple ſignification. 1 Reſpectu præteriti, one in reſpect of the Time paſt, inaſmuch as it is commemorative of the LORDS Paſſion, which is called a true ſacrifice; and according to this; it is called a ſacrifice. 2. Reſpectu preſentis, in reſpect of the preſent, that is, of the Vnitie of the Church, unto which, men are gathered by this Sacrament, and according to this it is named a Communion, or Synaxis, becauſe by it wee communicate with CHRIST, and are partakers of His Fleſh and Deity. 3. Reſpectu futuri, in reſpect of that which is to come, inaſmuch as this Sacrament is prefigurative of the fruition of GOD, which ſhall bee in heaven; and accordingly it is called viaticum, becauſe it heere furniſheth us in the way, that leads us thither. Againe it is called the Euchariſt; that is, bona gratia, the good grace, becauſe eternall life is the grace of God, Rom. VI. or elſe, becauſe it really containes CHRIST, who is full of grace. It is alſo called Metalepſis, or Aſſumptio, becauſe by it we aſſume the Deitie of the Sonne. All this, Part. III. Q. LXXIII. Artic. IIII. In corpore. And in his Anſwer ad III^m. he addeth, That this Sacrament is called a Sacrifice, inaſmuch as it doth repreſent the Paſſion of Chriſt; it is likewiſe called Hoſtia an Hoſt, inaſmuch as it containeth Chriſt Himſelfe, who is Hoſtia ſalutaris, Epheſ. V.

Here is a Repreſentative, or Commemorative, and Participated Sacrifice of the Paſſion of Chriſt, the True ſacrifice, that is paſt; and here is an Euchariſticall ſacrifice: but for any Externall Proper ſacrifice, eſpecially as ſacrifice doth ſignifie the Action of ſacrificing, here is not one word. And therefore this is a new conceipt of latter men, ſince Thomas his time, unknowne to him, and a meere Novelliſme. And the Cure is as bad as the Diſeaſe: Though Thomas gives no other reaſons, why it is called a ſacrifice, yet (ſay they) Thomas denieth it not. For, that is plainly to confeſſe that this is but a patch patch added to Antiquitie. And yet when he ſaith, it is a Repreſentative or Commemorative Sacrifice reſpectu præteriti, in reſpect of that which is paſt, that is, the Paſſion of Chriſt, which was the true Sacrifice, he doth deny by conſequent, that it is the true ſacrifice it ſelfe which is paſt. And if Chriſt be ſacrificed daily in the Euchariſt, according to the Action of ſacrifice, and it be one and the ſame ſacrifice offered by Chriſt on the Croſſe, and the Prieſt at the Altar, then can it not be a Repreſentation of that ſacrifice which is paſt, becauſe it is one and the ſame ſacrifice and action preſent.

Contra Faustum, lib. 20. 21.

Ad Hebr. Hom.

Therefore Saint Paul proceeds in the XV. Verſe: By him therfore let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to GOD continually, that is, the fruit of our lipps giving thankes to His Name. Let us offer up to GOD; Chriſtians then have an offering: and let us offer up to GOD continually; this is the ground of the daily Sacrifice of Chriſtians, that anſwereth to the daily ſacrifice of the Iewes. And this Sacrifice of praiſe and thanks may well be underſtood the Euchariſt, in which we chiefly praiſe and thank GOD for this his chief and great bleſſing of our Redemption. And this and all other Sacrifices of the Church externall or ſpirituall muſt be offered up and accepted per Ipſum, in, by, and through Chriſt. S. Paul ſaith not, Ipſum offeramus, Let us offer him (that is) Chriſt; but let us offer and ſacrifice per Ipſum by him, in whom only we and our ſacrifices are accepted. And Rom. XII. I. Offerte corpora, Offer your bodies living ſacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, which is your reaſonable ſervice: It is not Corpora ſine Animis, not bodies without ſoules; For in them without ſoules, there is no life, no holineſſe, no accepting: and this is mans reaſonable ſervice; all elſe is without reaſon. And Saint Peter (the firſt Pope, as they reckon him, who I am aſſured had infallibility) ſaith I Pe. II. V. Ye alſo as lively ſtones are built up a ſpirituall houſe, an holy Prieſthood, to offer up ſpirituall Sacrifices acceptable to GOD, Per Ieſum Chriſtum, by Ieſus Chriſt. And S. Iames (Chap. I. Ver. XVIII.) tels us, that to this end GOD begat us by his word of truth, that we might be primitiæ creaturarum: not offer to GOD the firſt fruits of our fields or cattle, but that we might offer up our ſelves as firſt fruits to GOD. So all the Offerings of the Church are the Church it ſelfe; and Chriſt the Head offered corpus naturale, his naturall Body, his ſoule and fleſh for a ſacrifice, for the ranſome and price of our ſinne, thereby purchaſing eternall redemption, Heb. X. XI. and by this one offering He perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, Verſe XIII. Neither doth Chriſt there (that is) in heaven, where he now appeares in the preſence of GOD, offer often, or any more for us, but this once; there is appearing, but no offering. And the Apoſtle gives the reaſon of it. For then he muſt have often ſuffered ſince the foundation of the world, Heb. IX. 24, 25, 26. He appeares in heaven as our High Prieſt, and makes interceſſion for us; but He offers his naturall body no more but once, becauſe he ſuffers but once. No offering of Chriſt (by S. Pauls rule) without the ſuffering of Chriſt: the Prieſt cannot offer Chriſts naturall bodie without the ſuffering of Chriſts naturall body.

So likewiſe the Church, which is Chriſts myſticall body, offers not Chriſts naturall body: it hath no power to offer the naturall body, which is proper to Chriſt onely, Pono animam & nemo tollit; not the Church, nor they that are not the Church. And there is no ſuch thing in Scripture, nor I preſume can eaſily be ſhewed out of any of the probable and undoubted Fathers, but the Church offers corpus myſticum, Chriſts myſticall body (that is, it ſelfe) to GOD in her daily Sacrifice.

First, all ſacrifice is proper and due only to God. Be men never ſo venerable, never ſo worſhipfull, yea adorandi, to be adored alſo, yet no man ever offered ſacrifice to any, unleſſe he knew him, or thought him or feigned him to be God. True Angels would never accept Sacrifice: and wicked Angels only ſought it, becauſe they alſo affected to be deified. Saint Aug. de Civ. Dei, l. 10. c. 4. Et cont. Fauſt. l. 20. 21.

In which reſpect, never any Prieſt at the Altar, even ſuper corpus Martyris, over the body or ſepulcher of any Martyr, prayed thus, Offero tibi Sacrificium, Petre, Paule, Cypriane, I offer ſacrifice to Thee, ô S. Peter, S. Paul, or S. Cyprian. All celebrities towards them, whether praiſes to GOD for their victories, or Exhortations to their imitation, are only Ornamenta memoriarum, the Ornaments of their memories, not Sacra, nor Sacrificia mortuorum, tanquam Deorum, not the ſacred things or Sacrifices of the dead, as if they were GODS, Lib. VIII C. XXVII.

And therefore Saint Auguſtine often denies Temples, Altars, and Sacrifices inward and outward, viſible and inviſible to all Martyrs and Saints, as being proper and peculiar to GOD only. And I truſt, Prayers and Invocation be in this number. For as Orantes & Laudantes, praying and praiſing, we direct our ſignifying words to him, to whom we offer the things ſignified in our hearts: ſo ſacrificing, we know, the viſible ſacrifice is to be offered to no other but to him, whoſe inviſible ſacrifice in our hearts we our ſelves ought to be, Nos eſſe debemus, Lib. X. Cap. XIX. And then it followeth in the XX. Chapter: The true Mediator inaſmuch as taking upon Him the forme of a ſervant, the Man IESVS CHRIST became a Mediator of God and Man; whereas in the forme of GOD He takes ſacrifice with His Father, yet in the forme of a ſervant, Maluit eſſe, quam ſumere, He choſe rather to be a Sacrifice, than to receive Sacrifice; leſt even by this occaſion any man might thinke he might ſacrifice to a Creature, by this (Nature) He is a Prieſt, the ſame the offerer, and the ſame the thing offered: Cujus rei Sacramentum, of which things he would have the daily Sacrifice of the Church to be a Sacrament, quæ cum ipſius capitis corpus ſit, ſeipſam per ipſum diſcit offerre: which Church being the bodie of our Head himſelfe, doth learne to offer it ſelfe (that is, the Church) by Him, that is, by Chriſt. Here the Body of the Head, is the myſticall body of Chriſt: and therefore the daily Sacrifice of the Church is not the Naturall Body of Chriſt, but the Myſticall Body that offers it ſelfe to GOD by Chriſt. This made Saint Auguſtine to ſay of Angels, and Elect and Glorious Saints, Nec illis ſacrificemus, ſed cum illis ſacrificium Deo ſimus, Let us not ſacrifice to them, but let us be a ſacrifice to GOD together with them, Cap. XXV.

But a ſingular and full place we have in the ſame Xth. Book, and VI. Ch. Where having ſhewed what Sacrifice is, that is, every worke which is performed, that we may cleave to GOD in an holy Societie, being referred to that end of good, by which we may be truly bleſſed: (as a man conſecrated to the name of GOD, and dying to the world, that he may live to GOD, is a Sacrifice; as the body chaſtened by temperance, is a Sacrifice, ſuch as the Apoſtle cals for, Offer up your Bodies to be a Living Sacrifice, Rom. XII. 1. And if the body, the ſervant and inſtrument of the ſoule, much more the ſoule it ſelfe is a ſacrifice; As likewiſe workes of mercie and the like:) Hence (ſaith he) it commeth to paſſe, Vt tota ipſa, redempta Civitas ſocietasq; ſanctorum univerſale ſacrificium offeratur DEO, &c. [That the whole redeemed Citie and ſocietie of the Saints is offered up an univerſall ſacrifice to GOD, by our great Prieſt; who alſo offered himſelfe in His paſſion for us, that we might be the bodie of ſo great an Head, in the forme of a ſervant. For this he offered: in this he was offered, becauſe according to this he is our Mediator, in this our Prieſt, in this our Sacrifice.] And then urging againe the Apoſtles words, Rom. XII 1. of offering our bodies a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to GOD, which is our reaſonable ſervice of Him, he adds, Quod totum ſacrificium ipſi nos ſumus [All which whole ſacrifice we are:] We the Members are this whole ſacrifice, not Chriſt the Head. For as in the body there are many members, and many offices of thoſe members; ſo wee being many, are one Body in Chriſt, and every one members one of another, having diverſe gifts according to the grace given us. Hoc eſt ſacrificium Chriſtianorum, multi unum Corpus ſumus in Chriſto, [this is the ſacrifice of Chriſtians, many are one body in Chriſt.] This muſt neceſſarily be the myſticall body of Chriſt; the naturall body it cannot be: Quod etiam Sacramento Altaris Fidelibus noto frequentat Eccleſia; ubi ei demonſtratur, quod in illâ oblatione quam offert, ipſa offeratur: [Which Sacrifice the Church alſo frequents in the Sacrament of the Altar, well knowne to the faithfull; in which it is demonſtrated to the Church, that in that oblation which the Church offers, the Church it ſelfe is offered.] I hope, the Church is the myſticall body of Chriſt, not the naturall. Lib. XX, cap. X Ipſum verò ſacrificium Corpus eſt Chriſti, quod non offertur ipſis, quia hoc ſunt et ipſi; denying Temples, Altars, and Sacrifices to Martyrs and Saints, he ſaith [The ſacrifice it ſelfe is the Body of Chriſt, which is not offered to them, becauſe they are alſo this ſacrifice.] This may ſuffice to ſatisfie any reaſonable man of the ſacrifice of the Church, in Saint Auguſtines judgement, Yet give me leave to adde one place more, becauſe it may ſtand for many, and that is Lib. X.

*cap.*31. Nec jubent, &c. [Neither do they command, that we ſhould Sacrifice to them, but only to Him, whoſe Sacrifice we together with them ought to be a Sacrifice, Vt, ſæpe dixi, & ſæpe dicendum eſt, as I have often ſaid, and muſt often ſay.]

This then is the daily Sacrifice of the Church in Saint Auguſtine's reſolute judgement, even the Church it ſelfe, the Vniverſall bodie of CHRIST, not the Naturall Bodie; whereof the Sacrament is an Exemplar, and a Memoriall only, as hath been ſhewed. And when they ſhall prove the Churches Sacrifice to be the Naturall Bodie of CHRIST, and the ſame Sacrifice with the Sacrifice of the Croſſe, as it denoteth the Action of Sacrificing, becauſe the Fathers often uſe the word Corpus CHRISTI, The Bodie of CHRIST; they ſhall be further anſwered.

In the meane time the Church of England in her reformed Liturgie [offering our ſelves, our ſoules, and bodies to be a living Sacrifice, holy and acceptable to GOD, which is our reaſonable ſervice of him] may truly and boldly ſay, that in this ſhe hath far exceeded their Canon of their Maſſe, in which there is not one ſyllable, that mentions the Sacrifice of our ſelves and ſoules and bodies, which is the onely thing that GOD lookes and cals for at our hands, and in CHRIST our Head is moſt pleaſing; nay more; only pleaſing to Him, and in our power to offer property.

We denie not then the dayly Sacrifice of the Church (that is, the Church it ſelfe) warranted by Scriptures and Fathers. We take not upon us to Sacrifice the naturall Body of CHRIST otherwiſe than by commemoration, as CHRIST Himſelfe, and Saint Paul doth preſcribe. They rather, that take a power never given them over the naturall bodie of CHRIST, which once offered by Himſelfe purchaſed eternall redemption all-ſufficient for ſinne, to offer it againe and often, never thinking of the offering of CHRISTS myſticall body, the Church, that is, our ſelves, our ſoules and bodies, they (I ſay) do deſtroy the daily Sacrifice of Chriſtians, which is moſt acceptable to GOD.

Now then that which went before in the Head CHRIST on the Croſſe, is daily performed in the numbers, in the Church. CHRIST there offered Himſelfe once for us; we daily offer our ſelves by CHRIST, that ſo the whole myſticall body of CHRIST in due time may be offered to GOD.

This was begun in the Apoſtles, in their Liturgie, of whom it is ſaid (Acts 13.) Miniſtrantibus illis, while they miniſtred and prayed, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid unto them, &c. Eraſmus reads it, Sacrificantibus illis, while they Sacrificed and prayed. If they had offered CHRISTS Naturall body, the Apoſtles would ſurely have made ſome mention of it in their writings, as well as they do of the Commemorative Sacrifice. The word is λειτουργούντων ſo it is a Liturgicall Sacrifice; or a Sacrifice performed or offered in our Liturgie or forme of GODS Worſhip: ſo the offering of our ſelves, our ſoules, and bodies, is a part of Divine worſhip.

Now as it is not enough to feed our owne ſoules, unleſſe we alſo feed both the ſoules and bodies of the poore; And there is no true Faſt, unleſſe we diſtribute that to the poore, which we denie to our owne bellies and ſtomachs; And there cannot bee a perfect and compleate adoration to GOD in our devotions, unleſſe there be alſo doing good and diſtributing to our neighbours; therefore to the Sacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving in the Euchariſt, in the Church, mentioned in the fifteenth Verſe, we muſt alſo adde beneficence and communication in this Text: For, Devotio debetur Capiti; Beneficentia membris, the ſacrifice of devotion is due to our Head CHRIST, and pietie and charitie is due to the Members. So then, offer the Sacrifice of praiſe to GOD daily in the Church, as in the fifteenth Verſe; and diſtribute and communicate the Sacrifice of compaſſion and Almes to the poore out of the Church, as in this Text.

Shall I ſay extra Eccleſiam, out of the Church? I do not ſay amiſſe, if I do ſay ſo: yet I muſt ſay alſo, intra Eccleſiam; this ſhould be a Sacrifice in the Church, the Apoſtles kept it ſo in their time; Primo Die, the firſt day of the weeke, when they came together to pray and to breake bread, Saint Pauls rule was, Separet unuſquiſque, Let every one ſet apart; or lay by in ſtore, as GOD hath proſpered him, that there be no gatherings,

gatherings, when I come. And our Liturgie in the Offertorie tenders her Prayers and Almes on the Lords day or Sunday, as a part of the Sacrifice or Service of that day, and of GODS Worſhip; which I wiſh were more carefully obſerved among us. For this alſo is a Liturgie or Office, ſo called by the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 9.12. ἡ διακονία τῆς λειτουργίας, the Adminiſtration of this Service, or Office, or Liturgie: there is the word Liturgie and Office. For, the daily Service and Sacrifice not onely ſupplieth the want of the Saints, but is abundant alſo by many thankſgivings unto GOD. So the Lords day or Sunday is then beſt kept and obſerved, when to our Prayers and Prayſes and Sacrifices of our ſelves, our ſoules and Bodies, we alſo adde the Sacrifice of our Goods and Almes, and other workes of mercie to make it up perfect and compleate, that there may be Opus diei in die ſuo, the worke of the day in the proper day thereof, and theſe two Sacrifices of praiſe and Almes joyned here by GOD and His Apoſtle, may never be parted by us in our lives and practice.

First then we ſee, that as our SAVIOVR firſt preached in the Mount, and then healed in the Cities and townes; ſo when we have offered our ſelves, our ſoules, and bodies, to be living and ſpirituall ſacrifices in the Church unto GOD, by our High Prieſt CHRIST, we muſt not reſt there, but muſt alſo offer our goods and almes, whether in the Church or out of the Church, to the reliefe of the poore members of CHRIST, that are in want. And that theſe two, 1 the ſacrifice of Praiſe, 2 and the ſacrifice of Almes may appeare to be indiviſible and ſeparable, inſomuch that he that will give himſelfe, his ſoule, and body to GOD, will never ſpare alſo to give his goods to thoſe that ſuffer hunger, and thirſt, and nakedneſſe; See how our Apoſtle joynes theſe two. 1 Firſt, Per Ipſum offeramus; By CHRIST our High Prieſt, Let us offer our ſelves: 2 and leſt that ſhould be thought, to be all the whole ſacrifice, that man is to tender to His GOD, He adds this ſecond, with a Nolite oblivi ſci, by a kind of Negative, which is many times more forcible than an ordinary Affirmative: to doe good, and to diſtribute, forget not: fearing as it were, leſt when man had done his homage and fealty to GOD, of whom he holds in chiefe, he might thinke, that were enough to ſacrifice to GOD in the Church on the Lords day, and then forget his Brother all the weeke after, and never to take compaſſion on him: whereas the truth is, Vnus amor, but duplex objectum; the love is but one, wherewith we love GOD for Himſelfe, and our brother who is GODS image for His ſake, as there be two eyes, yet but one viſuall facultie. For as it is to no purpoſe, to learne our duty at the mouth of GODS Preachers, on the Lords day, and never to put it in practice all our weeke, or life following, as if it were a matter only for the braine and underſtanding; whereas in truth, firſt it ſhould edifie our faith, and then fructifie in our lives: So it is a very ſhort love to profeſſe to love GOD, whom we have not ſeene, and ſtarve our poore brethren, who lye at our gates in ſuch ſort, that we cannot chooſe but ſee them.

The Diviſion

1 So then the words containe, firſt an Act, Beneficentiæ & communionis; to do good, and to diſtribute: and that muſt needs be a great worke, for it is to doe good, and nothing is truly great, but that which is good. 2. A Caveat, Nolite oblivi ſci, it is a worke of great conſequence, very important to our ſalvation, it may not be forgotten. 3. How ſmall or vile it may ſeeme in it ſelfe, yet it is of a high rate and great eſteeme: Sacrificia ſunt, & talia ſunt; they are ſacrifices, and ſacrifices of much price, though they be but Crummes of bread, or drops of water: And ſo much the more precious, becauſe they are gratefull to GOD; Delectatur, or placatur Deus, God is pacified, or God is well pleaſed: and all the world is well given to appeaſe and pacifie His wrath, and gaine His favour.

Now the worke is compriſed in two words, Beneficentia & communicatio: beneficence and diſtribution. Beneficence or bounty, that is, Affectio cordis; the affection and compaſſion of the heart: And Communication and diſtribution, that is Opus manuum; the worke of the hand. And theſe two may be no more divided, than the two other ſacrifices, of devotion in the ſacrifice of our ſelves, and Charity in the Releefe of the poore: For Beneficence is ut Fons, as the fountaine and ſpring or ciſterne, whence all workes of Compaſſion doe ariſe; and Diſtribution is ut Rivuli, as the Rivers or chan-channels or pipes, by which the waters of comfort and goodneſſe are carried to hungry ſoules.

Beneficence is as the Sunne, diſtribution is as the light that proceeds from the Sunne: At the beneficence of the heart there we muſt begin, and by the diſtribution and communication of the hand, there is the progreſſe. And is it not enough that our heart is charitable, and full of compaſſion, if we be cluſter-fiſted, and cloſe-handed, and give nothing: Goe and be warme, and goe and be fedde, and goe and be clothed, they be verba compaſſionis, words of compaſſion: but if we doe not as well feed and clothe, as our tongue bleſſeth, we may have gentle hearts like Iacobs voice, but our hands will be cruell and hayry like Eſaus, that vowed to kill his Brother.

And true Religion is no way a gargaliſme onely, to waſh the tongue and mouth, to ſpeake good words: it muſt root in the heart, and then fructifie in the hand; elſe it will not cleanſe the whole man.

Now, God only is good, and the univerſall good of all things, and goodneſſe it ſelfe: If there be any good in man, it is particular, not univerſall, and it is participatum: Man is not good in himſelfe, but onely by participation: Goodneſſe in God is Eſſentia, eſſence and being: and He is ſo goodneſſe, that He cannot be but goodneſſe, good in Himſelfe, and good of Himſelfe.

In man goodneſſe is Accidens, an Accident; and ſuch an accident, as moſt commonly he is devoid of it, but onely by the grace and likeneſſe of GOD: So that man is good ſolâ ſimilitudine bonitatis divinæ, onely by the ſimilitude and imitation of the divine good: the neerer to God, the neerer to goodneſſe; and the further from God the more removed from all goodneſſe. So that as in every good, the greateſt good is moſt deſired: ſo in doing good, that is ever beſt, that joynes us moſt to our greateſt good.

All Creatures are ſaid to be good, by the goodneſſe of God, Vt principio, as the principle, and efficient cauſe of all good. 2. Vt Exemplari, as the patterne and exemplar, and Idea, according to which all good things are fashioned. 3. Vt fine, as the end and finall cauſe for which all things were made.

And the like is in this beneficence and doing of good. For firſt, it muſt be good à cauſa, in regard of the firſt and efficient cauſe, which is God: as the good fruit proceeds from the good tree, and the tree owes his goodneſſe to God that tranſplants and waters it. 2. It muſt be good in fundamento, in reſpect of the foundation: as the houſe, and the living ſtones and ſpirituall buildings are therefore good, becauſe they are built upon the immoveable foundation, the Rock Chriſt. And 3. it muſt be good à fine, from the end to which it is referred: it takes beginning from the Holy Ghoſt, and the riches of grace, and it muſt be directed onely to the ſupreme and grand end of all things, Gods glory, and the reliefe of the poore members of Chriſt.

And theſe two, Beneficence and Communication, the eminent and imperated Acts of true Religion, the mother of all vertues they are alſo the acts of many other particular vertues. For firſt, they are the Acts of Charity, becauſe they proceed from the love of GOD: 2. They are the acts of Iuſtice, becauſe Releefe and ſuſtentation is the due debt, that is owing to the poore: 3. They are the acts of Liberality and Bounty, becauſe the free gift of men, not the merit of the needy: 4. They are the acts of Mercy, becauſe they participate with the wants and miſeries of the afflicted.

So that as impendere, is Bonitatis: to doe good, and diſtribute, and beſtow is the act of goodneſſe; ſo likewiſe rependere, to pay them, where we owe them, is Iuſtitiæ, the worke of Iuſtice. And therefore our goods, they are not properly ours, in ſuch ſort that we can carry them with us, when we go hence: but they are bona pauperum; ſo our goods, that they are alſo the goods of the poore, whereof we are rather Stewards, than Proprietaries and Lords: and he that ſo keepes and hoords them, that he doth not expend them, to buy the kingdome of heaven with them, at the hands of the poore (Ipſorum eſt Regnum) he doth indeed detinere alienum; he defrauds the poore, and detaines that which is anothers. And therefore the Pſalme ſaith, Diſperſit, dedit pauperibus; Iuſtitia Ejus manet in æternum (Pſalme 112.9.) He hath diſperſed and given to the

poore: his righteouſneſſe endures for ever; not his mercy onely, but his Iuſtice alſo.

Where, by the way obſerve, that there it is firſt, Diſperſit, dedit; he diſperſed and gave to the poore: here, in the Text that lyes before me this day, it is Dedit, diſperſit; He gave it, and then He diſperſed it, to the poore, in ſuch ſort, that He did as it were ſtudy how to diſperſe it to all ſorts of poore, even as many kinds of poore, as Hee could deviſe and find fit to receive it, learned, old men, widowes, children and priſoners, and the like.

And this goodneſſe whether we underſtand it plainly, as the Intention of the heart, that doth the good, and the works of the hand, that diſtributes and divides it: or whether we underſtand it, as ſome doe, that there is Beneficentia in iis quæ dantur; beneficence in thoſe things that are given: and Communicatio in iis quæ ſervantur; Communication in thoſe things that we give not, becauſe in theſe times, Omnia erant communia, All things were in common, and ſo they did communicate even thoſe things which they did not communicate and diſtribute: This goodneſſe I ſay, hath two properties of true goodneſſe: Firſt, it is diffuſivum ſui; diffuſive of it ſelfe, it imparts it ſelfe to as many as it can, it heapes not all upon one, as thoſe doe that rob all others, that they may enrich their heire: Secondly, it is unitivum Deo, & proximo; it is unitive, and unites us to God, for whoſe ſake we doe it, and to our Neighbour, to whom we doe it.

And ſurely as in the civill States, Quid leges ſine moribus vanæ proficiunt? what will the beſt lawes profit us, if there be no obedience, no manners? are they not altogether vaine, of leſſe force than Spiders webs? and in Chriſtianitie, Quid fides ſine operibus? what will faith and knowledge profit us, if it fructifie not in life and works? what can Devotion and Iuſtice profit, if Almes follow not? He that will ſend an Embaſſage to GOD, that ſhall ſurely ſpeed, he muſt ſend ſighes from his heart, teares from his eyes, prayers from his mouth, and alſo almes from his hands, and they will prove of that force, that GOD cannot denie them.

And if we will take with us the reſolution of the learned, out of the forme of the laſt Iudgement, it will amount to thus much; that not onely Peccata commiſſionis, ſinnes of commiſſion, or ſinnes commited will condemne us, but alſo Peccata omiſſionis, ſinnes of omiſſion, or omiſſion of doing good, as not feeding and clothing the poore, will caſt us into hell: and auferre aliena & non dare ſua, to take other mens goods from them, either by force or fraud; and not to give our owne to the poore, both are damnable, though not in the ſame degree. And therefore our Saviours counſell is well worth the learning (Luke XVI.) Make you friends of unrighteous Mammon, that when you ſhall faile, they may receive you into everlaſting Tabernacles. And theſe externall gifts they are the viaticum, or viands to carry us to heaven: for though Non hic Cælum, heaven be not here in this life; yet Hîc quæritur Cælum, here in this life heaven is to be ſought, and here it is either found or loſt: So then, ſhall wee faſt from meat, and not from ſinne? ſhall we pray, and rob the poore? ſhall our tongue praiſe charitie, and our hands ſpoyle thoſe that need our charitie? GOD forbid.

And now, moſt glorious Bounty, and Communication, and Diſtribution, what ſhal I ſay of thee? but that thou art Vita Sanctorum; the very life, and joy, and delight of all Saints: and when Saints muſt leave this life, and all things els leave them, and they leave all things; yet thou leaveſt them not, but art Comes defunctorum, the unſeparable companion of the dying. For of all that a man hath, there is nothing that ſhall accompany him to the Tribunall of the great Iudge of the quick & the dead, but Peccata & bona opera, Sins and good works: and then it will appeare, that the voice of a few good works, done for Chriſts ſake, will ſpeake lowder and plead harder, and more effectually for us, than all our glorious words and profeſſions.

And this doing good and diſtributing, is not only profitable, but admirable alſo. For why? by evils and wants of others, it ſelfe is bettered; and it becomes beautifull, by the uncleaneſſe and naſtineſſe of the wretched; it is enriched by others poverty, by others infirmities it growes ſtrong; the bearing of burdens attols and lifts it up: and therein therein of all other it is happie, de ſpinis colligit uvas; it does that, which CHRIST denyes to be feiſable, it gathers grapes of thornes, and ſweeteſt conſolation out of greateſt miſeries; and that which is contrary to all Nature, and Naturall reaſon, ex agro ſteriliſſimo paupertatis, meſſem copioſiſſimam colligit, out of the moſt barren fields of povertie, it reapes the moſt plentifull harveſt. And herein are theſe two Vertues moſt to be admired: Miſericordia miſeriam aliorum facit noſtram, Mercy makes other mens miſeries and calamities to be our owne: and Charitas facit bona noſtra proximorum, Charitie makes our goods to be our Neighbours.

If a travelling man were heavie loaden, were it not a great and happie eaſe for him, if his fellow-traveller would beare part of his burden? And Divitiæ, onus: Riches is a heavie load, it preſſes downe many ſo much, that they are never able to climbe up to heaven. What is then to be done? Da partem comiti: give thy companion (the poore man) a part with thee, thou ſhalt refreſh him that is weary of his wants, and thy ſelfe ſhall runne moſt lightly and nimbly to heaven gates.

And now if thou wilt doe as my Text teacheth (that is, to doe good, and diſtribute) yet take theſe few rules in the way, they will make thee to make the more and better ſpeed. Firſt, doe it Voluntary, willingly: not by compulſion, as if it were a grievous tax or ſeaze: for GOD more regards thy affection, than thy gift; the widowes two mites, more than great heapes of treaſure: and why? GOD is Ponderator ſpirituum, non panis aut monetæ: GOD is a weigher of ſpirits, rather than of bread and money. 1

2. Doe it hilariter, cheerefully: for thou well knoweſt what GOD loves moſt, that is, a cheerefull giver. He doth not reſpect Quid, what it is that thou giveſt; but Ex Quanto, the cheerefull heart it comes from. 2

3. Doe it Affabiliter, with kinde words and faire language: Not of a wearineſſe to be rid of a beggar, as the unjuſt Iudge righted the importunate widow; but out of compaſſion to releeve him. And certainly, when there is Pietas in re, Compaſſion and piety in the deed, non ſit in verbis contumelia: though thou give him good counſell, yet load him not with reproaches and contumelies; upbraid him not with his wants or diſeaſes; for GOD might have turned the tables, and made him as rich as Abraham, and thee as poore and infirme as Iob or Lazarus. 3

4. Doe it Feſtinanter, ſpeedily: for Bleſſed is he that conſiders the poore and needy, and prevents his petition: For, this is indeed to give twice, to give quickly; to have his money or his bread prepared and ready at his hand, as more ready to give than they to aske: And this is indeed Quærere pauperes, quibus benefacias, to ſeeke and ſearch for poore, to whom thou maiſt doe good: and know withall that Abraham's ſpeed to entertaine CHRIST and His Angels, made ſinum Abrahæ receptaculum Lazari: Abraham's boſome to be the receptacle and place of Reſt to Luzarus, as well as Lazarus's patience advanced him to Abraham's boſome. 4

5. And Doe it Humiliter, in all humilitie: Vt eluas peccatum, non ut corrumpas Iudicem: to Redeeme thine owne ſinnes by thine Almes, as Daniel ſaid to Nebuchodonozor; but not to corrupt thy Iudge, that thou mayſt ſinne more freely, more ſecurely. For, GOD is like to heare the loudeſt crie: and it may be the crie of thy ſinne, may decry or crie downe thine Almes; and the ſcale of ſinne may make thine Almes to be found too light. 5

Againe, take I beſeech you theſe things into your conſideration. Firſt, Quis petit? Who it is, that askes an Almes of thee. Thou takeſt it to be the poore man, but thou miſtakeſt it: It is Deus in paupere, & CHRISTVS in paupere: GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer in the poore man: and doeſt thou hoord up for thy wife, or thy childe, or thy ſervant, that will ſpend it in ryot; Et negas Creatori, vel Redemptori, and doeſt thou deny to GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer, that bought thee with His owne bloud and life? 1

Secondly, Quid petit? what it is that he doth aske: in ſhort, Suum non tuum: He askes not thine, thou haſt onely the uſe, and diſpoſe of it, but He askes His owne, and what haſt thou, that thou haſt not received, even to thy ſelfe, thy ſoule, and thy body, all the gifts of Nature, and all the gifts of grace? And when all is ſaid, this is indeed all, Da quod dedi: give me that I firſt gave thee, a fruit of mine owne tree; I beſtowed it on thee: Da & reddam, give me but ſome crummes, ſome drops out of thy heape, out 2 of thy fountaine, I will repay it: Nay, da & debitor ero; give me any part, I will become a debtour to thee upon my word and promiſe, to repay it in heaven.

3 Thirdly, Ad quid, To what purpoſe doth GOD aske thee by the poore man? to gaine it to himſelfe? No: ad mutuandum, only to borrow of thee; and be aſſured, he is the beſt pay-maſter, he will reſtore to thee an hundred fold. And wilt thou lend to a Iew, or a Turke for ten or eight in the hundred; Et Deo non accommodas, and wilt thou not lend to thy Creator and Redeemer, who will give an everlaſting weight of glory for thy crummes and drops.

4 And fourthly, Quid daturus, qui petit; what will He give thee, that now begs of thee? For thy broken bread and meat, He will make thee partaker of the Feaſt of the Lambe; and for a few drops of water, He will crowne thee in the Kingdome of glorie: pro poculo aquæ frigidæ, torrens voluptatis; for a cup of cold water (water the common element, and cold water, that coſt thee not the charge of a fire to warme it) there is a torrent, nay, a very ſea of all pleaſures provided for thee for all eternitie.

Doe good then and diſtribute: but doe it Manibus propriis with thine owne hands, if thou canſt ſpare it: not by other mens hands, which may die ſoone after thee, or elſe deceive thy truſt. Lucerna in manibus, non à tergo; hang not thy light at thy back, to ſhine after thy death, but carry it in thy hand; be Executor of thine owne will. And doe it Secretò; in ſecret; without a Trumpet: The ſeed muſt be buried or harrowed under the earth, elſe it neither roots nor multiplies: which though perdi videtur, it ſeeme to be loſt, yet unleſſe it be thus ſowed and buried, reverà perditur, it will be loſt indeed: And the more thou ſoweſt, the more thou ſhalt reape, for hee that ſowes ſparingly, ſhall reape ſparingly.

Pars II. And now in the ſecond place, marke the Caution; Nolite obliviſci: To doe good, and to diſtribute forget not. Offer the ſacrifice of praiſe daily: and if daily, it is likely enough to be remembred, becauſe it is never forgotten, never omitted in the Church, whither thou art put, as to the Schoole of Memory. This is but a lip-labour, or at the moſt, but an heart-labour, it coſts nothing but breath: but to give Almes, to doe good, and to diſtribute, that coſts more; it will put thee to the charge of bread, and water, and clothes, and the like, which is chargeable and burdenſome. Any thing but our purſes: No, that muſt not be left out neither: To doe good, and to diſtribute, to rob thine owne backe and thy belly, to feed the hungry and cloath the naked, Nolite obliviſci; forget not to adde this Sacrifice of Almes, to that other of devotion and praiſe.

And ſurely, I may call this the Chapter of Remembrances, or the Remembrancers Chapter. In the ſecond Verſe: Memento hoſpitalitatis, forget not to be hoſpitable: Abraham entertained Angels, yea, the Sonne of GOD, the LORD of Angels by his hoſpitalitie. In the third Verſe: Memento vinctorum, & afflictorum laborantium; Remember thoſe that are in bonds, and afflicted, being your ſelves in bonds and adverſity together with them: for, as CHRISTVS paſcitur in iis, ſo incarceratur; as CHRIST is fed in the poore, ſo He is impriſoned with them that are in bonds, and exiled with His exiled members, and condemned to the Mines, with thoſe that are chained in the Mines: and it is an impoſſibilitie to baniſh the Head from His members, in whom He lives, and they in Him. In the eighth Verſe: Memento Præpoſitorum, Remember your Governours, that have the Rule over you: you owe much to them that have ſowen in you the Word of GOD, whoſe faith is a light or example to you. So here, To doe good, and to diſtribute forget not. The reſt are particulars, Hoſpitalitie to ſtrangers, Viſitation to priſoners, Comfort to the perſecuted, and Suſtentation to our ſpirituall Governours: but this is generall, and extends to all; ſtrangers, priſoners, perſecuted, Governours, and all other men in need, in generall; though with a præcipuè, chiefly to the houſhold of faith. For, every man is our neighbour, to whom charity is to be extended; but they are more neerely our neighbours, to whom we ſtand bound by a double obligation and fraternitie, of Nature, and Grace.

Why

Why then is our Apoſtle ſo ſolicitous, that we forget not this doing good and diſtributing? A man would thinke, the precept need not be ſo ſtrictly urged and inculcated, and that in the negative which binds Semper & ad ſemper, and therefore never to be forgotten. The Moraliſt gives a good Rule, Homo in homine calamitoſo miſericors, meminit ſui: That man that is merciſull to a man in miſerie and calamitie, remembers himſelfe: he might have beene in miſerie and need, as well as his afflicted neighbour, if God had ſo diſpoſed. Is it ſuch a matter, to be ſo much and ſo often inculcated? Can a man forget himſelfe? or can any man thinke that, that which falls to another man, might not fall upon him? Equall in Nature and grace, may alſo be equall in miſerie, if God will: Yes ſurely there is need; for, he that beheld his face in the glaſſe, Iames 1. 24. he went away, & ſtatim oblitus eſt; ſtraightway he forgetteth his owne ſhape, his owne ſpots and deformities, a mends none of them, never thinks on them more, till he comes to the glaſſe againe: be the glaſſe never ſo true, never ſo pure, even as pure as the word of God it ſelfe, yet ſo often as he comes, ſo often he forgets, therefore nothing is more needfull than this not forgetting.

And the truth is, moſt men are like to the young man, that ſaid to our SAVIOVR CHRIST: All theſe things, the commandements of God, cuſtodivi ab adoleſcentia, have I kept from my youth: but yet he had not ſo ſtrictly kept Gods commandements, but that withall, cuſtodivit bona omnia à pauperibus; he had more ſtrictly kept all his goods from the poore: and becauſe he had great ſubſtance, and loved it greatly, he had need to be remembred with Nolite obliviſci, Forget not to doe good, and diſtribute: for he was Cuſtos pecuniæ, potius quàm præcepti; he was a keeper, but a keeper of money; and no keeper, but a breaker of the commandements. Mat. 13. 20.

The Rich man, and all his fellowes, Luke 16. have need of this, Forget not: He ſaw Lazarus full of ſores, from the crowne of the head to the ſole of the foot, and the very ſight of him, was conflatorium pietatis; the very bellowes and Anvile of compaſſion: and he lay at his gate, he could neither goe in, ~~nor out~~, but he muſt looke upon him, yet obliviſcitur quod vidit; ~~he~~ forgot him that he ſaw, and could not chooſe but ſee him: Nay he ſaw the dogs more mercifull in licking his ſores than himſelfe was, in curing or feeding him: and therefore non accipit guttam aquæ, he received not one droppe of water to coole his tongue. (He was a great, but a moſt miſerable profeſſor, and therefore his tongue was moſt tormented, becauſe therein conſiſted all his Religion.) And the reaſon is, becauſe Non dedit micam panis, he would not give him ſo much as he gave his dogges, not one crumme of bread.

There be ſome that ſay, Mat. 25. 37, 44. Quando Te vidimus eſurientem, nudum, &c? When did we ſee thee hungry or naked? peradventure they never ſaw Him, in His owne perſon, in capite, as a particular man, the Head; but they could not but ſee Him, in membris; in His members, the poore: Vident pauperem, but CHRISTVM in paupere non vident; they ſaw the poore man, but CHRIST they ſaw not in the poore man: Here is great need of this Nolite obliviſci, Forget not to put them in mind, that they flatter not themſelves with this ambiguitie. Te & Te totum: they ſee not the man IESVS, the Head alone, but they cannot chooſe but ſee whole CHRIST, that is, CHRIST the Head, and the poore His members.

There is one, and I would there were but one, that received a talent and hid it in a napkin under the earth: he was worthy to heare Serve nequam, Evill ſervant: For he knew his Maſters will, that gave his talents to receive them with increaſe; his memorie failed and had need to be rubbed with oblitus tradere uſurariis; he forgot that which he did not forget; he forgot not to take uſury for his money, and uſe upon uſe, but he forgot the true and lawfull uſury to give it to the poore, and ſo to lend it to the Lord, who would ſurely have paid both principall and intereſt alſo; both the ſubſtantiall reward of eternall life, and alſo the accidentall degree and meaſure of glory. Mat. 25. 7 18. 27.

How many are there that forget the Preachers precept, Caſt thy bread upon the waters? How many are there that ſay, My barnes are too little, I will pull them downe and build bigger? who have beene at the Schoole of forgetfulneſſe, and doe not remember, Quod ventres pauperum capiunt, quod horrea non capiunt; that the bellies of the poore are Eccles. 11. 1. Luke 12. 3 greater than the greateſt barnes, and will receive and conſume all that which the greateſt barnes cannot hold; yea the poore doe ſo multiplie, that the rich are not able to feed them. The fooliſh Rich man ſaid in the Goſpell, Soule thou haſt much goods laid up in ſtore for many yeares: but when he ſaid ſo, he had not many houres to reckon, to eate and drinke and take his pleaſure. Malè recondita, melius erogata; they were ill layed up, they had beene much better diſtributed and ſcattered abroad. It may be they may paſſe all the degrees of compaſſion. Malè parta; ill gotten by oppreſſion, and fraud, and Rapine: And Pejùs detenta, worſe kept and detained; that which is ill gotten may be worſe kept; and ſo that is, that is ſcraped and extorted from all others, is denied to all others, and moſt of all to himſelfe, and God, and CHRIST: And Peſſimè erogata expended worſt of all, in ryot and exceſſe, in pride and vanitie, in crueltie and rebellion, in denying maintenance to the King and Country, or to the poore.

Luke 12. 18.19.

But howſoever ill gotten, worſe impriſoned and debarred the light of the Sunne: and worſt of all ſo ſpent, that with them, the ſoule, and life, and heaven it ſelfe is ſpent and loſt: yet the truth is, they are then beſt kept, when they are well expended, and never better, than on the poore afflicted members of CHRIST, than in buying of heaven. But if you will make a true conjunction indeed, they are then bene recondita, when bene erogata; well ſtored and layd up, when they are well laid out. Reconde in ſinu pauperum; The beſt houſe to lay them up, is to put them into the box and boſome of the poore: for, that indeed is the ſafeſt and ſureſt Treaſurie, ſafer than the Temple it ſelfe, the living Temples of God: A Treaſurie Sine fure, Sine verme; without thiefe, without worme; whatſoever is put there, defertur Deo; the poore man will carrie it to God, out of whoſe hands it can never be taken.

And this is indeed the Art of Arts. Not the gold-making Iuggling art, which under the name of gold-making, is the conſumer of gold: but the Art of turning earth into heaven, and earthly almes into celeſtiall riches; dando, cœleſtes fiunt, theſe tranſitorie earthly things procure us the unſpeakeable riches and treaſures of heaven. And now conſider, Cornelius's Almes and prayers aſcended as a memoriall to God, and procured the great grace of the knowledge of CHRIST, and the gift of the Holy Ghoſt: And Dorcas's almes obtained her Reſurrection to life: God remembred them both, and ſhall we forget to doe good and diſtribute our almes, which have that force, that God will never forget them?

Acts 11.

Part III.

GOD cannot forget them, if wee doe remember and performe them: Nay God holds them at a great rate, He accepts them as ſacrifices, and ſuch ſacrifices as both pacifie and pleaſe Him. Talibus ſacrificiis, with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed; talibus, with theſe of Praiſe and Almes; and with all thoſe that are like, or of the ſame nature with theſe. Not with the ſacrifices of Nature and Moſes's Law: ſuch are both Mortua, and mortifera; dead in themſelves, and mortiferous and deadly to all that ſhall uſe them: Theſe had their time, and were accepted as types and figures, of the true ſacrifice of CHRIST upon the Croſſe, in whom all ſacrifices were accepted; In which they were partakers of CHRIST, and did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, that we now eat and drinke by faith, and the Rock that followed them was CHRIST.

No more then to doe with the ſacrifice pecoris trucidati, of the ſlaine beaſts; that is paſt: but cordis contriti, with the ſacrifice of a broken and contrite heart; that was from the beginning, and ſo ſhall continue acceptable to God even to the end; the ſpirituall ſacrifice, or the ſacrifice of the ſoule and ſpirit, that is it, which God ever accepted in the ſacrifice of His Sonne CHRIST, even from the firſt Adam, to the laſt Sonne of Adam, the laſt man that ſhall live at the laſt day. And God hath beene and is weary of carnall and externall ſacrifice, and neglected, yea rejected it, for default and want of the inward ſacrifice, but of this inward and ſpirituall ſacrifice God will never be wearied with it.

In vocall prayer and faſting, and outward Almes, and the like, there may be Nimium, too much; but of inward prayer and faſting from ſin, and compaſſion and mercy, there can can never be nimium, too much; nay not satis, not enough; for GOD calls for all, and all we are not able to performe which we owe. So then, the sacrificia must be talia: such sacrifices, that is, spirituall.

And they be sacrificia, in the plurall number, sacrifices: the sacrifice representative, or memoriall of CHRISTS sacrifice, the Eucharist, which is truly the sacrifice of praise; and the daily sacrifice, of our selves, our soules and bodies in devotion and adoration to GOD. And the sacrifice of Mercy and Almes (both here recorded) these be the sacrifices here mentioned that please God: and all others not here mentioned, that are included in the talibus: in such like sacrifices, God is pleased.

And be the number of them as great as any man please to make them, yet because they are all reducible to three, I will comprise them in the number of three. First, 1
Sacrificium cordis contriti, the sacrifice of the contrite and broken heart, as before, which we tender to God in our Repentance, and sighs and teares for our sinnes. The second, 2
Sacrificium cordis grati, the sacrifice of the thankefull heart; in praise and thanksgiving to God, called here, the sacrifice of praise. The third, Sacrificium cordis pii, the sacrifice 3 of a pious and mercifull heart, in compassion and workes of Mercy, and Almes-deeds, called here, doing good and distributing.

All these, and every one of these, which are indeed but the variations, or diverse affections of one and the same heart, they are the talia sacrificia: such sacrifices which God accepts. S. Bernard was a skilfull confectioner, he made three rare and most odoriferous Ointments of them, most pleasing unto God Himselfe: The first, Vnguentum 1 contritionis, the ointment of Contrition, made of the sighs of the heart, and the teares of the eyes, the confession and prayers of the tongue, the revenge, the judgement, and execution done upon our owne soules, for our sinnes: And this compunction of heart, though it be all made of bitter and sharpe poynant ingredients, yet the more sower it is, the sweeter and more welcome it is to GOD. The second is Vnguentum pietatis: 2 the ointment of Piety and compassion, made up of the miseries and the wants of the poore; wherein the greater is the misery, the greater is the mercy; and the more fellow-feeling and compassion of the pressures of the poore, the more odoriferous is this sacrifice to pacifie GODS wrath. The third is Vnguentum devotionis, the oyntment of 3
Devotion, which spends it selfe in praise and thanksgiving, by the remembrance of His manifold blessings and graces; which cannot but be acceptable unto GOD, because though praise and glory be nothing unto GOD, who cannot be encreased by the breath of a mortall man; yet because it is all the Rent and tribute that man can render to his God, whereof to robbe God is the greatest sacriledge, it is an oyntment most welcome to God; the rather, because man ever did himselfe the most hurt, when he kept glory backe from God and ascribed it to himselfe. In the LI Psalme, The Oyntment of Contrition is accepted of God, with a Non despicies: the sacrifice of the broken and contrite heart, God will not despise. The Oyntment of compassion in this place, is accepted of God, with delectatur Deus: with such sacrifices God is pleased. The Oyntment of Praise goes somewhat higher with an Honorificat me: he that offers me praise he honoureth me, Psal. L. So the contrite heart, the mercifull heart, and the thankefull heart; Talibus sacrificiis, with such sacrifices God is pleased: all of these together, and every one of these severally, and all others like unto these, they doe pacifie, and please, and delight God Himselfe.

Placatur or conciliatur, God is pacified or reconciled, as some read: Delectatur, God is pleased or delighted. Hilarescit, or pulchrescit, God is cheered or lookes upon us with a serene or pleasant countenance: But the Vulgar will have it Promeretur Deus, God is promerited, in favour of merits. I will not much stand upon the word; be it promeretur, in the Fathers sense, in which, merit is via obtinendi, the way and meanes of obtaining, the matter is not great.

But the word in the proper sense, signifies no more but this, that God is pleased, or at most pacified with such sacrifices: and this is remarkable, that the same word,

Heb. XI. VI. ſignifies onely, God is well pleaſed, when it is ſpoken of faith. For, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, εὐαρεστῆσαι: but here, ἀρεστῆσαι, muſt be Promeriti, as if works were more meritorious than faith: when all the merits of workes proceed from grace and faith, as the goodneſſe of the fruit is from the root, and the ſappe thereof. And ſo, God may be both pacified and pleaſed, and yet no merit in us, but acceptation in God: for the beſt works and ſacrifices and righteouſneſſe in man, are ſo farre from true merit, out of any dignity, or condignity of the worke, that they cannot ſtand before God without mercy and grace. The beſt and moſt laudable life of the beſt man, hath a Væ, or Woe, lying upon it, Si ſine miſericordiâ diſcutiatur, if it come to be diſcuſſed without mercy: and in the diſtrict judgement of GOD, no man, no not the man after Gods owne heart dares enter, but prayes againſt it, Ne intres in judicium cum ſervo tuo, Enter not into judgement with thy ſervant O Lord (Pſalme CXLIV. III.) and why? For, no fleſh is righteous in thy ſight: no fleſh, no man righteous or juſtified, then ſurely no true merit.

Braſſe or copper money may be made currant by the Kings Proclamation, but ſtill it is but braſſe and copper, and wants of the true value of gold and ſilver: and good works, and to doe good and diſtribute, may goe for currant, by Gods promiſe, and receive a reward out of juſtice, but Iuſtice with mercy: for, there is Iuſtitia in reddendo, Iuſtice in giving the Crowne according to his promiſe: but there is Miſericordia in promittendo; Mercy that triumpheth over juſtice, in promiſing to give an infinite reward, to a finite worke, as heaven for a Cup of cold water, or bread, or drinke, or clothes and the like: and betweene the kingdome of heaven, and the crowne of glory, and eternall life, which is infinite, and a few crummes, or drops, or rags, which are ſcant ſo much as finite, there is no equality. Inter finitum & infinitum nulla eſt proportio: there is no proportion betweene that which is finite, and that which is infinite. So that as much as infinite doth exceed that which is finite, ſo much doe Gods infinite rewards, exceed the beſt finite workes, of the beſt man. And the Rule of the Schoole in this is true: God puniſhes citra condignum, leſſe than we deſerve; ſo there is mercy in Gods Iuſtice and puniſhments: and God rewards ultra meritum, beyond our merit or deſert; and ſo eternall life is the grace and free gift of God.

1 Inſomuch that we may thus reſolve: Firſt, Non tenetur Deus: God is not bound
2 to give us any reward for any dignitie or worthineſſe of our works. Secondly, Non Meremur nos, we deſerve nothing, but are unprofitable ſervants, and our beſt workes are unperfect, and fall ſhort of that perfection that Law and Iuſtice doe require. And 3 thirdly, Non deerit tamen Deus: though God be not bound, and man merits not, yet God never failed any man, that did doe any good worke, but he was ſure of his reward. For, though we be bound to good works ex debito, of duty: God commands them and requires an account of them: yet God is not bound to reward them ex debito, out of any debt owing to us for them; but onely ex pacto, out of His promiſe, and agreement. For, eternall life is not a reward which man may exact and require in Iuſtice at Gods hands, for his labour and hire; but it is His free gift: and therefore He calleth it not tuum, thine, but Meum, mine owne, May I not doe what I liſt with mine owne?

What is the reaſon the Prophet ſaith (Pſal. LXXI. XVI.) O Lord, Memorabor Iuſtitiæ tuæ ſolius, I will remember thy righteouſneſſe onely, but becauſe there is no other righteouſneſſe worth the remembring, but onely thy righteouſneſſe onely: that righ-Eſay 64.6. teouſneſſe that is à Domino, inherent in us by ſanctification of the gifts and graces of the Lord, is not worth the remembrance, for it is a defiled cloth, and dung in it ſelfe; and were it never ſo good, God hath no need of it; nay being offered to God, He is nothing increaſed by it. If thou doe all good works, Deus meus eſt, & bonorum meorum non indiges: Thou art my God (ſaith David Pſal. XVII. II.) my goods, and therein are his good workes alſo, are nothing to thee: God is not increaſed or inriched by them. If thou doe commit all manner of ſins with all manner of greedineſſe, thou canſt not defile God, nor take any thing from him; thy evill cannot decreaſe or diminiſh him. But it is Iuſtitia in Domino, Righteouſneſſe in the Lord (that is) Chriſts righteouſneſſe communicated municated, or imputed to us; for Christ is made to us wisedome from God, and Iustice, or righteousnesse and sanctification and redemption, and He doth not say, fecit nos, He made us righteous in the concrete; but factus est nobis, He was made righteousnesse to us in the abstract, because He communicates His righteousnesse to us, and thereby covers our nakednesse, as Iacob clothed in his elder Brothers garments received the blessing. And therefore the name of the Sonne of GOD is Iehovah Iustitia nostra, The LORD our righteousnesse. 1 Cor. 1.

Besides, no man is accepted or well pleasing to GOD for his workes sake, but rather the worke is accepted for the workemans sake: as GOD first Respexit Abelem, He respected or accepted of Abels person; and then followes & sacrificium ejus, and then his sacrifice: For, God cares not for Abels lambe, but because Abel the lambe offered it; his heart and willing readinesse to offer a lambe, was pleasing and He accepted the sacrifice. As in the Father of the Faithfull, GOD could not accept the sacrifice of Isaac, because he was not sacrificed facto, sed voto or voluntate; not in deed, but onely in vow, and will and purpose: in him, Voluntas reputatur pro facto, his will was accepted for the sacrifice. Ier. 23. 6.

And in Cains sacrifice, God made no difference betweene the lambe and the sheafe of corne, both which were after commanded equally in the Law, and the Panes propositionis were ever joyned with a lambe. The difference was, he offered his eares of corne, but not himselfe: and therfore the words be, Ad Cain vero, & ad munera ejus non respexit, But to Cain, and to his offering God had not respect: He accepted not his person, and therefore He regarded not his sacrifice. And therefore the Ancient say: That either of them offered parem cultu & religione hostiam, an equall sacrifice in respect of Religion, and the worship of God: Sed non rectè uterq; divisit: Cain made an ill division, he offered the fruits of the earth to God; Cor retinuit sibi, seipsum non obtulit; he reserved his heart to himselfe, and he offered not himselfe to God: but Abel first offered himselfe to God, and then his lambe. Rupert. in Gen Lib. 4. C. 2.

And so Saint Pauls words are true; Abel offered a greater sacrifice to God than Cain. Greater first, Quia hostia copiosior; because he offered a double sacrifice, himselfe and his lambe: but Cain onely offered his corne. Secondly, Quia excellenior: he offered a more excellent sacrifice, better chosen, because de adipibus, of the fattest, and best of the flocke: Cain carelesly tooke that came first to hand; de fructibus, of the fruit, and no more. Thirdly, Quia ex fide: by faith he offered it; and that faith justified him and his sacrifice, because he beleeved in the Seed of the Woman, that should bruise the serpents head. And so it is true, Dignitas operantis, the faith and piety of the sacrificer, and worker, dignitatem confert operi, confers all the worth to the worke. For if an Heathen or Turke doe the same worke of Almes or mercy that the faithfull Christian doth, it shall passe without all regard; whereas the faithfull heart and person makes the worke of the hand acceptable to the LORD.

So then, sacrifices of goodnesse and Almes or distribution there must be, they are necessary to Salvation in them that have time and opportunity, and meanes: and therefore sufficit ad pœnam meritis carere, It is sufficient to punish us, if we want good workes. But there can be no trust or confidence placed in them; for, they are unperfect and defective, and therefore merit nothing at Gods hands out of justice, but onely are accepted out of Gods mercy, and the infinite Merit of CHRIST, which is equall to His Person that is infinite, as He is the eternall Sonne of GOD: and therefore, Sufficit ad præmium, de meritis non præsumere; the greatest part of the dignity of the best workes, of the best men, is to renounce all trust and confidence in our selves, and our best workes, and to repose all our hope in the mercy and merits of CHRIST.

Now to returne to the use of the word [Promeretur:] in Antiquity, I remember Saint Cyprian useth it not for the dignity and merit of the best worke, but onely for the way or meanes of obtaining. For, reading that place of Saint Paul, 1 Tim. 1. XIII. [But I obtained mercy because I did it ignorantly in unbeleefe:] he reads it thus: Sed Misericordiam merui: But I merited Mercy: what was Merui, in Epiſt. 73. N. 11. Saint Cyprians ſenſe, but I obtained mercy, and ſo the Vulgar reads that place.

Againe, ſpeaking of thoſe that were baptized, and ſigned in the fore-head with the ſigne of the Croſſe, he ſaith of Ozias the leper, that he was maculated with leproſie, in that part of his body in which they are ſigned, qui Dominum promerentur, which promerit the Lord; ſo would our Rhemiſts read it: But the true underſtanding is, they that promerited the Lord, that is, they that enter covenant with the Lord in Baptiſme (De unitate Eccleſiæ, Num. 16.) And I preſume, rather the keeping the Covenant, than the entring ſhould be meritorious, if there be any merit at all.

And Saint Auguſtine (De gratiâ, & libero arbitrio, Cap. 5. & 6.) ſpeaking of Saint Paul, ſaith, Meritum fuit in Paulo, ſed malum; In Paul, there was merit, but evill merit, when he perſecuted the Church, and received good for it. And after; Let us returne to the Apoſtle, whom we finde without any good merits (Sine ullis bonis meritis, imo cum multis malis meritis) yea with many evill merits, to have obtained the grace of GOD: and then he addes, Vt poſt bona merita conſequatur coronam, qui poſt mala merita conſecutus eſt gratiam; that after his good merits obtained the crowne, who after his evill merits had obtained grace. 1. Here, firſt it is plaine, merit is joyned in both, with obtaining. 2. Againe, Merits are good, and Merits are bad: the word is common to both. 3. Merit ſignifies in Saint Auguſtines ſenſe, no dignity of worke, but onely a meanes of obtaining. For, it is impoſſible, that evill merit (that is, ſinne) out of the dignity of the worke ſhould merit grace; and by the ſame proportion and forme of ſpeech, it is as impoſſible, that the dignity of the worke ſhould merit a crowne; ſince Saint Auguſtine in the ſame place doth ſay, There would be none unto whom GOD the juſt Iudge, redderet coronam; ſhould render a crowne, unleſſe firſt, as a mercifull Father, donâſſet gratiam, He had given His grace: And then He addes Dona ſua coronat Deus, non merita tua; GOD crownes not thy merit, but His owne gifts: His reaſon is, for, if they be ſuch (that is, thine) they are evill, and if they be evill, GOD crownes them not; if they be good, they are GODS gifts, and He crownes them not as thy merits, but as His owne gifts, Cap. 7.

But I have troubled you too long with this Schoole-doctrine and pulpit-divinitie of magnifying mans merits, before men, ſince their death-bed-divinity recants it all; and then, they are all forced, learned and ignorant, utterly to renounce it, and put all their truſt in CHRISTS mercy and merits, as their ſure Anchor-head: Of which I have only this to ſay; that merit may have ſome place in their ſcience, but their owne conſciences, unleſſe they be ſeared, tell them, there is no true merit, but CHRISTS onely.

Application. I have now done with my Text: and now I apply my ſelfe and my Text to the preſent Text, that lies before us: Vir nec ſilendus, nec dicendus ſine curâ, A man whoſe worth may not be paſſed over in ſilence, whom all ages with us may celebrate and admire; nor to be ſpoken of without great care and ſtudy: Of whom I can ſay nothing, but his worth and vertues will farre exceed all mens words. Here I deſire neither the tongue of man, nor Angells: if it were lawfull, I ſhould wiſh no other but his owne tongue and pen, Ipſe, Ipſe quem loquar, loquatur: let him ſpeake of himſelfe, none ſo fit as himſelfe was, of whom I am to ſpeake this day. Et jam loquitur, And hee now ſpeakes: He ſpeakes in his learned Workes and Sermons, and he ſpeakes in his life and workes of mercy, and he ſpeakes in his death: And what he taught in his life and workes, he taught and expreſſed in his death. He is the great Actor and performer, I but the poore cryer, Vox clamantis, He was the Vox clamans: he was the loud and great crying Voice, I am but the poore Eccho: and it is well with me, if as an Eccho, of his large and learned bookes and workes, I onely repeate a few of the laſt words.

No man can blame me, if I commend him at his death, whoſe whole life was every way commendable: Iuſtus ſine mendacio candor, apud bonos crimini non eſt; Iuſt com- commendation without flattery, is no fault in the opinion of the beſt men: And the ancient cuſtome of the Church, did celebrate the memories of holy men, to the praiſe of GOD that gave ſuch eminent graces to them, and to ſtirre up others by their example to the Imitation of their vertues.

I ſpeake my knowledge of him in many things: I loved, and honored him for above thirtie yeares ſpace. I loved him I confeſſe, but yet Iudicio meo non obſtat Amor, qui ex Iudicio natus eſt; My love doth not blind or outſway my Iudgement, becauſe it proceeded from Iudgement. Of whom what can I ſay leſſe, than that he was vitâ innocentiſsimus, ingenio florentiſsimus, & propoſito ſanctiſsimus: In his life moſt innocent, in his knowledge and learning moſt floriſhing and eminent, and in his purpoſe and life moſt holy and devout: whoſe carriage was ſo happy, Quem nemo vituperat, niſi etiam laudet; no man could ever diſcommend him, but will he nill he, he muſt withall commend him. And no mans words were ever able to diſgrace him: Vera, neceſſe eſt, benedicat; falſam vita moréſque ſuperant: They that ſpake truth of him, could not but ſpeake well of him; and if they ſpake falſely of him, his life and manners did confute them.

And if this Text were ever fully applied in any, I preſume it was in him; for, he was totus in his ſacrificius; he wholy ſpent himſelfe, and his ſtudies, and eſtate in theſe ſacrifices, in prayer and the praiſe of GOD, and compaſsion and workes of charitie, as if he had minded nothing elſe, all his life long, but this, to offer himſelfe, his ſoule and body, a contrite and a broken heart, a pitifull and compaſsionate heart, and a thankefull and gratefull heart, a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, by IESVS CHRIST, which is our reaſonable ſervice of Him.

He was borne in this Citie of LONDON, of honeſt and godly parents; who beſides his breeding in learning, left him a ſufficient patrimony and inheritance, which is deſcended to his heire, at Rawreth in Eſſex. It is true: Senum vita compoſita, the lives of old men, many times are orderly and well compoſed, and diſpoſed, and ſtayed; whereas in youth, many things that are in true judgement not all together decent, are not ſo indecent in them, but that they well enough become their younger yeares: In this, he was happy, Hujus vita compoſita à pueritiâ. His life was well compoſed and ordered even from his child-hood. I may well ſay of him, as the Prophet doth; Bonum eſt portare Iugum Domini ab Adoleſcentiâ: herein was his happineſſe, that he tooke up, and did ſtoutly beare the yoke of the Lord even from his youth.

In his tendereſt yeeres, he ſhewed ſuch readineſſe and ſharpeneſſe of wit and capacitie, that his teachers and Maſters fore-ſaw in him, that he would prove Lumen literarum & literatorum: The burning and ſhining Candle of al learning and learned men. And therefore, thoſe two firſt Maſters, that had the care of the firſt elements of his learning (Maſter Ward of Ratcliffe, and Maſter Mulcaſter of the Merchant-Taylors Schoole) contended for him, who ſhould have the honour of his breeding, that after became the honour of their Schooles, and all learning. Maſter Ward firſt obtained of his parents, that he ſhould not be a prentiſe: and at length Maſter Mulcaſter got him to his ſchoole: and from this time, perit omne tempus, quod ſtudiis non impenditur, he accounted all that time loſt, that he ſpent not in his ſtudies, wherein in learning he outſtript all his equalls; and his indefatigable induſtrie, had almoſt outſtript himſelfe: He ſtudied ſo hard when others played, that if his Parents and Maſters had not forced him to play with them alſo, all the play had beene marred. His late ſtudying by candle, and early riſing at foure in the morning, procured him envie among his equalls, yea with the Vſhers alſo, becauſe he called them up too ſoone: Not like to our moderne ſcholars, qui nondum heſternam edormiverunt crapulam; who at ſeven and eight of the clocke, have their heads and ſtomachs aking, becauſe they have not yet ſlept out their laſt nights ſurfets and fullneſſe.

Their paines and care, he ſo carefully remembred all his life long, that he ſtudied alwaies how to doe good to them and theirs. In which gratefulneſſe he promoted Doctor Ward to the Parſonage of Waltham: and ever loved and honoured his Maſter Mulcaſter during his life, and was a continuall helper to him, and his Sonne Peter Mulcaſter, to whom hee gave a legacy of twenty pound by his Will: And as if he had made Maſter Mulcaſter his Tutor or ſuperviſer, he placed his picture over the doore of his Studie: whereas in all the reſt of the houſe, you could ſcantly ſee a picture.

From Maſter Mulcaſter he went to Cambridge, to Pembroke-Hall, and was there admitted one of Doctor Wats Scholars: a notable Grammarian, well entered in the Latine, Greeke, and Hebrew tongues, and likewiſe in the Geometry, and ſome of the Mathematicks: and after a Fellow there, in which he paſſed over all Degrees and Places in ſuch ſort, Vt majoribus ſemper dignus haberetur; he ever ſeemed worthy of higher and greater Places, and would in the end attaine the higheſt: Virtutes enim ejus maturæ erant; For his abilities and vertues were mature, and ripe for greater imployments.

And in this he owed little to his Tutors, but moſt to his owne paines and ſtudie. In which, give me leave to remember one thing which he hath often lamented himſelfe to me and others, that he never could find a fit opportunitie to ſhew his thankefullneſſe to Doctor Wats, his Patron, nor to any of his poſterity: Yet he did not utterly forget him in his Will, having ordered that the two Fellowſhips to be founded by him in Pembroke-hall, ſhould alwaies be choſen and filled, out of the Scholars of Doctor Wats foundation, if they were found fit, of which himſelfe had beene one.

Being in holy Orders, he attended the Noble and zealous Henry Earle of Huntingdon, Preſident of Yorke, and was imployed by him in often preaching, and conference with Recuſants, both of the Clergy, and Laitie; In which, GOD ſo bleſt his endeavours, that he converted ſome of the Prieſts, and many of the Laitie; with great ſucceſſe; bringing many to the Church, and ſeldome loſing his labour; none ever converting ſo many as he did.

After this Maſter Secretarie Walſingham takes notice of him, and obtained him of the Earle, intending his preferment, in which he would never permit him to take any Countrey-benefice, leſt he and his great learning ſhould be buried in a Countrey-Church. His intent was to make him Reader of Controverſies in Cambridge, and for his maintenance he aſſigned to him (as I am informed) the Leaſe of the Parſonage of Alton in Hampſhire, which after his death he returned to his Lady, which ſhe never knew, or thought of.

After this, he obtained the Vicaridge of Saint Giles without Creeple-gate, London, and a Prebend Reſidentiaries place in Pauls, and was choſen Maſter of Pembroke-Hall; and afterward was advanced to the Deanrie of Weſtminſter: and all this without all ambition or ſuite of his owne: GOD turning the hearts of his friends to promote him for his great worth.

When he tooke the degree of D. D. in Cambridge, one of his queſtions was, that Decimæ debentur jure divino: which he betrayed not, as ſome have done, but made it good by Scriptures, and divine and naturall reaſon, as will appeare to the Reader, when that, among other of his Workes, ſhall enrich the Engliſh Church, with a happy treaſure of learning.

He was, as all our Engliſh world well knowes, a ſingular Preacher, and a moſt famous Writer. He was ſo ſingular a Preacher and ſo profound a Writer, that you will doubt in which he did excell: whoſe weapons in the mouthes of the adverſarie proved as ſtones in the teeth of dogs; while they thought to withſtand or anſwer them, they bit the ſtones and brake their owne teeth: and ſo it is true of him, Reſponſa ejus ſine reſponſionibus, His anſwers were anſwereleſſe: Never durſt any Romaniſt anſwer him; as their common uſe is, that which they cannot anſwere and confute, they ſlight it, and let it paſſe without any anſwer at all.

His admirable knowledge in the learned tongues, Latine, Greeke, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack, Arabick, beſides other moderne Tongues to the number of fifteene (as I am informed) was ſuch and ſo rare, that he may well be ranked in the firſt place, to be one of the rareſt Linguiſts in Chriſtendome; In which, he was ſo perfect and abſolute, both for Grammar and profound knowledge therein, that he was ſo perfect in the Grammar and Criticiſmes of them, as if he had utterly neglected the matter it ſelfe; and yet he was ſo exquiſite and ſound in the matter and learning of theſe Tongues, as if he had never regarded the Grammar.

Scientia magna, Memoria major, Iudicium maximum: his Knowledge was great and rare, his Memorie greater, and his Iudgement profoundeſt and greateſt of all; and over and above all theſe, Induſtria infinita, his paines and induſtry was infinite: For in the things, the world hath ſeene, he uſed no man to read for him; as thoſe great Clerks, Bellarmine, and other's faſhion is, to imploy whole Colledges and Societies to ſtudy and read for them, and ſo furniſh them; he onely uſed an Amanuenſis, to tranſcribe that, which himſelfe had firſt written with his owne hand.

So that now I may propoſe him, Vt exemplum ſine exemplo maximum, as a great Example example-leſſe: Nec ante eum, quem ille imitaretur; nec poſt eum, qui eum imitari & aſſequi poſſit, inventus eſt: There was none before him: whom he did imitate, nor none will come, after him, that will eaſily overtake him: Inſomuch that his great gifts may well be taken, a little to cloud and over-ſhadow and obſcure all men of his Age and Order: and ſurely the fame of this ſingular Biſhop will become ſuch a light to all poſterity, Vt nec bona eorum, nec mala latere patietur, it will not ſuffer neither their good, nor, their evill to lye hid.

Was his fame great? Major inventus eſt, He was ever found to be greater than fame made him. In which as he was a wonderfull Mirror of learning and learned men ſo he was a ſingular Lover and encourager of learning and learned men: which appeared in his liberality and bounty to Maſter Cauſabon, Maſter Cluverius, Maſter Voſſius, Maſter Grotius, Maſter Erpenius, whom he attempted with the offer of a very large ſtipend, out of his owne purſe, to draw into England, to have read and taught the Orientall tongues here: even as one well ſaid, Omnes quod in ſe amant, in aliis venerantur: thoſe gifts and knowledges, which hee loved in himſelfe, hee honoured and rewarded in others.

When the Biſhopricks of Ely and Salisbury were void, and ſome things were to be pared from them, ſome overture being made to him to take them, he refuſed them utterly: If it pleaſe you to give me leave, I will make his anſwer for him; Nolo Epiſcopari, quia nolo alienare, I will not be made a Biſhop, becauſe I will not alienate Biſhops lands.

After this, by ſome perſwaſion he accepted of Chicheſter; yet with ſome feare of the burden: and after that, of Ely; and laſt of this of Wincheſter; whence GOD hath tranſlated him to heaven: in which he freed himſelfe and his Succeſſor of a penſion of foure hundred pound Per annum, which many of his Predeceſſors had paid. He was Almoner, Deane of the Chappell, and a Privy Counſellor to King IAMES, and King CHARLES: In which he ſpake and medled little in Civill and temporall affaires, being out of his profeſſion and element: but in cauſes that any way concerned the Church and his Calling, he ſpake fully and home to the purpoſe; that he made all know, that he underſtood and could ſpeake, when it concerned him, as by thoſe few ſpeeches which are preſerved, you may judge, ex ungue leonem, a wiſe man by his words and deeds.

And herein he was like the Arke of GOD: all places where it reſted were bleſſed by the preſence of GOD in it; ſo, wherſoever he came and lived, they all taſted and were bettered by his providence and goodneſſe. Saint Giles was reduced to him by a Rate toward the better maintenance of the place, and the houſe repayred. He found nothing in the Treaſury in Pembroke Hall; he left in it, in ready mony a thouſand pound. Being Prebend Reſidentiary in Pauls, he built the Houſe in Creed-lane, belonging to his Prebend, and recovered it to the Church. He repayred the Deanes lodging in Weſtminſter. When he came to Chicheſter, he repayred the Palace there and the houſe in Aldingbourne. At Ely, he ſpent in Reparation of Ely-houſe in Holborne, of Ely-palace, at Downham, and Wiſbich Caſtle two thouſand pound. At Wincheſter-houſe, at Farneham, at Waltham, and Wolveſey, likewiſe two thouſand pound.

It

It ſeemes plainely, he loved the Churches in which he was promoted and lived, better than he did his money, or his owne gaine. For, if we conſider theſe expences in his Epiſcopall Houſes, and his moſt magnificent entertainement of his moſt gracious Soveraigne King IAMES at Farneham, where in three daies he ſpent three thouſand pound; as great and bountifull entertainment as ever King IAMES received at a Subjects hand: beſides he refuſed to make ſome Leaſes in his laſt yeares, which might have beene very beneficiall to him, for the good of his Succeſſor; his reaſon was, Many are too ready to ſpoile Biſhopricks, and few enough to uphold them: Adde to theſe the many Almes he gave in his life, and now at his death, and we ſhall ſee, he was free from all avarice and love of money. In him, is true that word of Saint Iohn, Nolite diligere mundum: he doth not ſay, Nolite habere, but Nolite diligere, Love not the world: he doth not ſay, have not, poſſeſſe not the world, or goods of the world; but love them not: He had them, but he loved them not: Vt diſpenſator, ut Erogator; he had them but as a Steward to diſpoſe and expend them, to procure an everlaſting Tabernacle in the higheſt heavens.

He medled little with them, but left the taking of his accounts from His Officers to his Brothers: and when he began his Will at Waltham a yeare before his death, he underſtood not his owne eſtate; nay till about ſix weekes before his death, when his Accounts were delivered up and perfected, he did not fully know his owne eſtate: and therefore in his firſt draught of his Will, he gave but little to his kindred, doubting he might give away more than he had, and therefore in a Codicill annexed to his Will, he doubled all his legacies to them, and made every hundred to be two hundred, and every two hundred to be foure hundred: And yet notwithſtanding this encreaſe, he gave more to the maintenance of learning, and the poore, than to his kindred: His charitie and love of GOD and the poore, was greater in him, than Naturall affection; and yet he forgot not his naturall affection to them.

It was ſaid of him, that in his time was held to be Deliciæ hominum (Titus,) Abſtinuit alieno, ut ſi quis unquam: If ever any man abſtained from that which was not his owne, he was the man. This is as true of this moſt Reverend Prelate: he never tooke any mans goods, or right from him. Give me leave to adde a little more of him: Diſtribuit ſua, ut ſi quis unquam; If ever any ſtudied to diſperſe and diſtribute his owne, either to kindred or to the poore, ſurely this is the Man.

Neither did he ſtay to doe good and diſtribute till his death, that is, then gave his goods to the poore, when he could keepe them no longer: The firſt place he lived on, was Saint Giles; there, I ſpeake my knowledge, I doe not ſay, he began; ſure I am, he continued his charity: his certaine Almes there, was ten pound per annum; which was paied quarterly by equall portions, and twelve pence every Sunday he came to Church, and five ſhillings at every Communion: and for many yeares, ſince he left that Cure, he ſent five pound about Chriſtmaſſe, beſides the number of gownes given to the poore of that Pariſh when he was Almoner. And I have reaſon to preſume the like of thoſe other pariſhes mentioned in his Will, to which he alſo gave Legacies: to Saint Giles an hundred pound, where he had beene Vicar. To Alhallowes Barkin, where he was borne, twentie pound. To Saint Martins Ludgate, where he dwelt, five pound. To Saint Andrewes in Holborne where Ely houſe ſtands ten pound. And to this Pariſh, of Saint Saviours in Southwarke where he died, twentie pound: which pariſhes he hath remembred, for his Almes to the poore, when the land ſhall be purchaſed for the reliefe and uſe of the poore.

When he came to Oxford, atttending King IAMES in the end of his progreſſe, his cuſtome was to ſend fiftie pound to be diſtributed among poore Scholars. And the like he did at Cambridge, in his Iourney to Ely. And leſt his left hand ſhould know what his right hand did, he ſent great Almes to many poore places, under other mens names; and he ſtayed not till the poore ſought him, for he firſt ſought them (as his ſervants imployed in that ſervice can witneſſe) as appeared at Farneham, at Waltham and Wincheſter: And in the laſt yeare of great Sickneſſe, he gave in this Pariſh of Saint Saviours, an hundred Marks. Beſides, ſince the yeare one thouſand ſix hundred and twentie, twentie, as I have my information from him, that kept his bookes of Accounts, and delivered him the money, he gave in private Almes to the ſumme of one thouſand three hundred and fortie pound.

The totall of his pious and charitable workes mentioned in his Will, amounts to the Summe of ſix thouſand three hundred twentie ſix pounds. Of which, to Pembroke-Hall, for the erection of two Fellowſhips, and other uſes mentioned in the Codicill, a thouſand pound, to buy fiftie pound land per Annum, to that purpoſe. Beſides a Baſon and Ewer, like that of their Foundreſſe, and ſome Bookes.

To buy two hundred pound per Annum, foure thouſand pound: Viz. for aged poore men, fiftie pound per Annum: for poore widowes, the wives of one husband fiftie pound: for the putting of poore Orphanes to prentiſe, fiftie pound: to priſoners, fiftie pound.

He was alwaies a diligent and painefull Preacher: moſt of his Solemne Sermons he was moſt carefull of, and exact; I dare ſay, few of them, but they paſſed his hand, and were thrice reviſed, before they were preached: and he ever miſliked often and looſe preaching, without ſtudie of Antiquitie: and he would be bold with himſelfe, and ſay, when he preached twice a day at Saint Giles, he prated once: And when his weakeneſſe grew on him, and that by infirmitie of his body he grew unable to preach, he began to goe little to the Court, not ſo much for weakeneſſe, as for inabilitie to preach.

After he came to have an Epiſcopall houſe with a Chappell, he kept monethly Communions inviolably; yea though himſelfe had received at the Court, the ſame moneth. In which, his carriage was not onely decent and Religious but alſo exemplarily: he ever offered twice at the Altar, and ſo did every one of his Servants, to which purpoſe he gave them money, leſt it ſhould be burthenſome to them.

Now before I come to his laſt end, give me leave to tell you, that privately he did much find fault and reprove three ſins, too common, and reigning in this latter age. 1
1. Vſury was one, from which, what by his Sermons, what by private conference, he withdrew many. 1
2. Another was Simony, for which he endured many troubles by Quare Impedit, and Duplex querela: as for himſelfe, he ſeldome gave a Benefice or preferment to him that petitioned or made ſuit for it: he rather ſent for men of note, that he thought wanted preferment, and gave them Prebends, and Benefices, under Seale, before they knew of it; as to Maſter Boys, and Maſter Fuller. 2
The 3. and greateſt was Sacriledge, which he did abhorre, as one principall cauſe among many, of the forraine and Civill warres in Chriſtendome, and invaſion of the Turke. Wherein even the reformed, and other wiſe the true profeſſors and ſervants of CHRIST, becauſe they tooke Gods portion, and turned it to publike prophane uſes, or to private advancements, did ſuffer juſt chaſtiſement and correction at Gods hand: And at home it had beene obſerved, and he wiſhed ſome man would take the paines to collect, how many Families, that were raiſed by the ſpoiles of the Church, were now vaniſhed, and the place thereof knowes them no more. 3

And now I draw to an end. GODS Houſe is truly called, and is indeed, Domus Orationis, the Houſe of prayer, it accompanies all acts done in GODS Houſe: of this Reverent Prelate, I may ſay, vita ejus vita orationis, his life was a life of prayer: A great part of five houres every day, did he ſpend in prayer and devotion to GOD. After the death of his Brother Maſter Thomas Andrewes, in the ſickneſſe time, whom he loved deerely, he began to foretell his owne death, before the end of ſummer, or before the beginning of winter. And when his Brother Maſter Nicolas Andrewes died, he tooke that as a certaine ſigne and prognoſticke, and warning of his owne death, and from that time till the houre of his diſſolution, he ſpent all his time in prayer; and his praier booke, when he was private was ſeldome ſeene out of his hands: and in the time of his feaver and laſt ſickneſſe, beſides the often prayers which were read to him, in which he repeated all the parts of the confeſſion and other petitions, with an audible voice, as long as his ſtrength endured, he did (as was well obſerved by certaine tokens in him) continually pray to himſelfe, though he ſeemed otherwiſe to reſt or ſlumber:

ſlumber: And when he could pray no longer voce, with his voice, yet oculis & manibus, by lifting up his eyes and hands he prayed ſtill: and when nec manus, nec vox officium faciunt; both voice, and eyes, and hands failed in their office; then Corde, with his heart, he ſtill prayed, untill it pleaſed GOD to receive his bleſſed ſoule to himſelfe.

And ſo, hujus mortalitas magis finita, quam vita; his Mortality had an end, and he died peaceably and quietly in the Lord, but his life ſhall have no end: yea, then his life did begin, when his Mortalitie made an end; that was Natalis, his birth-day, September XXV. being Munday about foure of the clocke in the morning. So died he aliorum majore damno, quàm ſuo; with greater dammage to others, even to all this Engliſh Church and all Chriſtendome, than to himſelfe: And God grant that many Ages may be ſo happy to bring forth and enjoy ſuch a Prelate, ſo furniſhed with all endowments of learning and knowledge, with innocencie and holineſſe of life, and with ſuch pietie and charitie, as he ſhewed in his life and death.

My concluſion is ſhort. I have ſpoken ſomewhat of this moſt reverent Prelate, but much ſhort of his graces and worth. In ſumme thus much: In his life he was Concionator & Scriptor potentiſſimus; a moſt powerfull Preacher, and Writer: in his deeds and actions he was potentior & diuturnior, more powerfull and laſting. Death hath bereaved us of him; but his life, and his workes of learning, and his workes of piety and charity, I doubt not but GOD in His goodneſſe will make them Monumentum ære perennius; a Monument more laſting than braſſe, and ſtone, even to the comming of our LORD CHRIST.

For no doubt, while he lived, he ſowed the ſincere Word of life in the ſoules of men; and in his life and death, poſuit eleemoſynam in ſinu pauperis; he put his Almes into the boſome of the poore: and ſhall I ſay, Oravit pro eo; it prayed for him, and by it he procured himſelfe a ſtrong Army, and bellatores fortes, valiant ſoldiers, whoſe many prayers and bleſſings GOD could not reſiſt, the rather becauſe they knew him not: that is too ſhort, and the Text goes further, Exoravit; it ſhall pray and prevaile too: and he and they have prevailed, and he is now at reſt and peace in heaven, and followes the Lambe whereſoever He goes.

And after him let us all ſend this bleſſing which the voice from heaven uttered, Apoc. 14. 13. Write, Bleſſed are the dead, which die in the Lord. For the Lord, there was no cauſe he ſhould die; but he died in the Lord, becauſe he alwaies lived to the Lord, and a happy death muſt needs accompanie and crowne ſuch a life. From henceforth, ſaith the Spirit, they reſt from their labours, all teares are wiped from their eyes, and all ſighes from 2 Tim. 2. their hearts, and their workes follow them; Opera ſequuntur, & opera præcedunt; their workes goe before them: ſo no doubt, but his workes have done, as the prayer and Almes, and faſting of Cornelius did; they have procured a place for him in heaven, and his workes ſhall follow him, and the fame of them ſhall ſtirre up many to follow his example.

And ſo I end, beſeeching God, to give to us all, as He gave to him, our parts in the firſt Reſurrection, from ſinne to grace: And to grant to him, and all the faithfull, and Saints departed, and us all with him, a joyfull Reſurrection to everlaſting life and glory in IESVS CHRIST, AMEN.
